2. Having shown that severity, however great, will, so far from preventing revolt, rather make men desperate in resistance, after having revolted, the speaker proceeds to show, by contrast, the advantages of a lenient system, like the present, over one of extreme terror, on the ground of its affording a far greater security—at least under any tolerable vigilance of a government exercised rather to anticipate than to punish—than any system of terror could effect. Καὶ ἀποστᾶσα, 'even after revolting.' Γνῷ μὴ περιεσομένη, 'should find that it could not succeed [in its attempt].' Ἔλθοι ἂν ἐς ξύμβασιν δυνατὴ οὖσα, &c., 'would come to terms while yet able to pay back the expenses incurred in quelling the revolt;' as was done in the case of the Samians, Thasians, and others. Ὑποτελεῖν, scil. φόρον, for ὑποτελῆ εἶναι, as in Dio Cass. 114. Ἐκείνως δὲ, 'but in the way [now proposed],' namely, that of leaving no room for repentance and reparation for the offence. See Schaefer on Demosth. Orat. de Cherson. § 64. Of παρατενεῖσθαι ἐς τοὔσχατον the sense is, 'to hold out in siege to the last extremity.' Παρατείνεσθαι is properly used of things, and especially such as involve a notion of time. But sometimes, though very rarely, as here, (and in Plut. Fab. δύναμιν παρατεινομένην ἀεί: and thrice in Dio Cass.) it is used of persons, when an idea of time is implied, as when spoken of age, or life, as in Synes. and Lucian ap. Steph. Thes. On this force of the passive see note on iii. 52, init.

3. διὰ τὸ ἀξύμβατον] Schol. τὸ ἀσυγχώρητον, 'the not capitulating.' Of this word, which is rare, an example occurs in Polyb. xv. 9, 1; and the phrase ἀσυμβάτως ἔχειν is found in Plut. Cat. 16, and Camill. 17. The words καὶ ἦν ἔλωμεν—τῷδε are said by way of opposition to those of Cleon, ch. 39. By ἐφθαρμένην is meant, utterly ruined, a mere heap of ruins, or an utter solitude.

4. ὥστε οὐ δικαστὰς—βλάπτεσθαι] 'So, then, we must not be rigid judges of the delinquents, to our own injury, but rather see to it, that for the time to come we may, by moderation in punishment, have the states in a condition of ability to pay any pecuniary fine.' At βλάπτ. supply ὥστε; unless, with Arnold, we take δικαστὰς ὄντας βλάπτ. as equivalent to 'not to hurt ourselves by being judges,' as i. 71, ἀμυνόμενοι μὴ βλάπτεσθαι. And this latter view is confirmed by ch. 44, fin. ὥστε οὐ δικαζόμεθα πρὸς αὐτοὺς ὥστε τῶν δικαίων δεῖν. Of ἐς χρημάτων λόγον ἰσχυούσαις the sense is, 'of ability (i. e. solvent) in respect to the payment of money.' So in a passage of Lysias, cited by Abresch, we have, οὐ μόνον εἰς δόξαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ εἰς χρημάτων λόγον λυσιτελεῖ. Pollux, iii.

τὴν ἁμαρτίαν καταλῦσαι. 2. *σκέψασθε γάρ, ὅτι νῦν μέν, ἤν τις καὶ ἀποστᾶσα πόλις γνῷ μὴ περιεσομένη, ἔλθοι ἂν ἐς ξύμβασιν δυνατὴ οὖσα ἔτι τὴν δαπάνην ἀποδοῦναι, καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν ὑποτελεῖν· ἐκείνως δὲ, τίνα οἴεσθε ἥντινα οὐκ ἄμεινον μὲν ἢ νῦν παρασκευάσασθαι, πολιορκίᾳ τε παρατενεῖσθαι ἐς τοὔσχατον, εἰ τὸ αὐτὸ δύναται σχολῇ καὶ ταχὺ ξυμβῆναι; 3. ἡμῖν τε πῶς οὐ βλάβη δαπανᾷν καθημένοις διὰ τὸ ἀξύμβατον, καὶ ἢν ἕλωμεν πόλιν, ἐφθαρμένην παραλαβεῖν καὶ τῆς προσόδου τὸ λοιπὸν ἀπ' αὐτῆς στέρεσθαι; ἰσχύομεν δὲ πρὸς τοὺς πολεμίους τῷδε. 4. ὥστε οὐ δικαστὰς ὄντας δεῖ ἡμᾶς μᾶλλον τῶν ἐξαμαρτανόντων ἀκριβεῖς βλάπτεσθαι, ἢ ὁρᾶν ὅπως ἐς τὸν ἔπειτα χρόνον μετρίως κολάζοντες, ταῖς πόλεσιν ἔξομεν ἐς χρημάτων λόγον ἰσχυούσαις χρῆσθαι· καὶ τὴν φυλακὴν μὴ ἀπὸ τῶν νόμων τῆς δεινότητος ἀξιοῦν ποιεῖσθαι, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων τῆς ἐπιμελείας. 5. οὗ νῦν τἀναντία δρῶντες, ἤν τινα ἐλεύθερον καὶ βίᾳ ἀρχόμενον, εἰκότως πρὸς αὐτονομίαν ἀποστάντα, χειρωσώμεθα, χαλεπῶς οἰώμεθα χρῆναι τιμωρεῖσθαι. 6. χρὴ δὲ τοὺς ἐλευθέρους οὐκ, ἀφισταμένους, σφόδρα κολάζειν, ἀλλά, πρὶν ἀποστῆναι, σφόδρα φυλάσσειν, καὶ προκαταλαμβάνειν, ὅπως μηδ' ἐς ἐπίνοιαν τούτου ἴωσι, κρατήσαντάς τε, ὅτι ἐπ' ἐλάχιστον τὴν αἰτίαν ἐπιφέρειν. XLVII. Ὑμεῖς δὲ σκέψασθε ὅσον ἂν καὶ τοῦτο ἁμαρτάνοιτε, 109, εἰς χρημάτων λόγον εὖ πράττων. Synes. 300, b. ἐκεῖνο μεῖζον εἰς λόγον χρημάτων. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 699, 8, Sylb. εἰς χρημάτων λόγον ἅπαντα ληψόμεθα, and xi. 17, ὅσα ἡμᾶς ἐβλάψατε κατὰ τὰς ἐμβολὰς (incursiones) εἰς χρημάτων λόγον ἅπαντα διαλύσετε. Diod. Sic. t. i. 148, ὃ συγκεφαλαιούμενον εἰς ἀργυρίου λόγον, 'as to the tale or reckoning of money.' The Schol. well explains the term λόγον by ἀπαρίθμησιν. And such is the use of our tale, or reckoning, from the verb tellan, to count or reckon. In short, the word λόγος (from λέγω, to tell, or number, or reckon) exactly answers, in its natural sense, to our tale, and, in its figurative as well as natural one, to our score, a reckoning.

τὴν φυλακὴν — ἀξιοῦν ποιεῖσθαι] 'to seek our security.' Δεινότητος, 'terror.' Ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων τῆς ἐπιμελείας, 'but by having care over [our] actions,' i. e. by carefully abstaining from all such conduct as might occasion revolt; using all means to prevent it before it has broken out (§ 6), and to suppress it after it has arisen.

5. οὗ νῦν τἀναντία — τιμωρεῖσθαι] Construe: οὗ τὰ ἐναντία [ἡμεῖς] δρῶντες, οἰόμεθα [ἡμᾶς] χρῆναι χαλεπῶς τιμωρεῖσθαι, ἢν χειρωσώμεθά τινα ἐλεύθερον καὶ βίᾳ ἀρχόμενον, εἰκότως πρὸς αὐτ. ἀπ. Ἤν τινα is for ὄντινα. Βίᾳ is for ἀκουσίως. There may seem a contradiction between ἐλεύθερον and βίᾳ ἀρχ., but, in fact, the freedom of the Mitylenæans was, as they themselves say, iii. 11, little more than nominal.

It is to be observed, that the language is, properly speaking, general, but is meant to be applied to the case of the Lesbians in particular; since it exactly corresponds to the circumstances in which they really stood with respect to Athens. I say really, for though they had a sort of independence, yet that was little more than nominal. Thus at iii. 11, they describe themselves as αὐτόνομοι δὴ (forsooth) ὄντες καὶ ἐλεύθεροι τῷ ὀνόματι. And this will serve to explain the import of the words ἐλεύθερον καὶ (and yet) βίᾳ ἀρχόμενον. Or we may, with Poppo, suppose that by a free state here is meant one free according to covenants, and consequently obeying unwillingly.

6. The speaker now points out the course of policy to be observed towards such states, comprehending it, for greater force, into one brief politicaI maxim, rendered still more pointed by the iteration of the word σφόδρα, vehementer, here used in two senses somewhat differing,—first, to signify excessively; and secondly, extremely, very much; so producing, as Poppo says, a neat parisosis.

χρὴ δὲ τοὺς ἐλευθέρους, &c.] Render: 'Whereas free states, we ought not, when they have revolted, to excessively punish, but, before they revolt, to extremely well watch them, and anticipate their attempts; so that such a thought may never enter their minds; and, after having quelled revolt, to impute the fault to as few as possible.' On ἐς ἐπίνοιαν—ἰέναι, see note at iv. 92. Of the phrase τὴν αἰτίαν ἐπιφέρειν, another example occurs at ch. 81. With this form of expression, ὅτι ἐπ' ἐλάχιστον, 'to as few as possible,' comp. ch. 39. Almost transcribed from the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 787, 57.

Ch. XLVII. 1, 2. The speaker now proceeds further to set forth the inexpediency of following Cleon's counsel, by the following reasoning, as expressed in the words of Bp. Thirlwall: 'But if it was impolitic for Athens thus to deprive herself of the advantages which she would reap from the timely submission of her refractory allies, it would be the height of folly, as well as of injustice, to involve the commonalty of Mitylene, which had brought about the surrender, in the same sentence of extermination with the authors of the rebellion, and thus to estrange the affections of the only class (namely, the popular party) which she could any where call her friends.' Καὶ [κατὰ] τοῦτο, 'on the following account.' By τοῖς

Κλέωνι πειθόμενοι. 2. νῦν μὲν γὰρ ὑμῖν ὁ δῆμος ἐν πάσαις ταῖς πόλεσιν εὔνους ἐστὶ, καὶ ἢ οὐ ξυναφίσταται τοῖς ὀλίγοις, ἢ, ἐὰν βιασθῇ, ὑπάρχει τοῖς ἀποστήσασι πολέμιος εὐθύς, καὶ τῆς ἀντικαθισταμένης πόλεως τὸ πλῆθος ξύμμαχον ἔχοντες ἐς πόλεμον ἐπέρχεσθε. 3. εἰ δὲ διαφθερεῖτε τὸν δῆμον τὸν Μυτιληναίων,—ὃς οὔτε μετέσχε τῆς ἀποστάσεως, ἐπειδή τε ὅπλων ἐκράτησεν, ἐκὼν παρέδωκε τὴν πόλιν,—πρῶτον μὲν ἀδικήσετε, τοὺς εὐεργέτας κτείνοντες, ἔπειτα καταστήσετε τοῖς δυνατοῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων ὃ βούλονται μάλιστα· ἀφιστάντες γὰρ τὰς πόλεις, τὸν δῆμον εὐθὺς ξύμμαχον ἕξουσι, προδειξάντων ὑμῶν τὴν αὐτὴν ζημίαν τοῖς τε ἀδικοῦσιν ὁμοίως κεῖσθαι καὶ τοῖς μή. 4. δεῖ δὲ, καὶ εἰ ἠδίκησαν, μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι, ὅπως ὃ μόνον ἡμῖν ἔτι ξύμμαχόν ἐστι μὴ πολέμιον γένηται. 5. καὶ τοῦτο πολλῷ ξυμφορώτερον ἡγοῦμαι ἐς τὴν κάθεξιν τῆς ἀρχῆς, ἑκόντας ἡμᾶς ἀδικηθῆναι, ἢ δικαίως, οὓς μὴ δεῖ, διαφθεῖραι· καὶ τὸ Κλέωνος τὸ αὐτὸ δίκαιον καὶ ξύμφορον τῆς τιμωρίας οὐχ εὑρίσκεται ἐν αὐτῷ δυνατὸν ὂν ἅμα γίγνεσθαι. XLVIII. Ὑμεῖς δὲ, γνόντες ἀμείνω τάδε εἶναι, καὶ μήτε οἴκτῳ πλέον νείμαντες μήτ' ἐπιεικείᾳ,—οἷς οὐδὲ ἐγὼ ἐῶ προσάγεσθαι,— ὀλίγοις are meant 'the few,' as opposed to 'the many,' or the people at large; namely, the party which supported aristocracy. In τῆς ἀντικαθισταμένης πόλεως, 'the city ranged against you,' 'adverse to you,' we have a military metaphor, as at i. 71, ἀντικαθεστηκυίας πόλεως. See also vii. 39. The construction here is, ἐπέρχεσθε ἐς πόλεμον ἔχοντες ('ita ut habeatis') τὸ πλῆθος τῆς ἀντικαθ. πόλ. ξύμμαχον. In ἐπέρχεσθε there is not, as Duker endeavours to show, the use of present for fut.; but the present is here employed to denote what is customary, having the sense fieri solet.

3. καταστήσετε — μάλιστα] 'you will bring about for the higher classes what they most of all wish for;' οἱ δυνατοὶ here, as at viii. 21, and elsewhere, signifying optimates. Κεῖσθαι, 'is denounced.' The term is used properly of laws which are enacted; though also, as here, not only of penal laws, but of the penalty of law.

4. καὶ εἰ ἠδίκησαν] 'had they even been criminal.' So in old English, 'but and if they,' &c. Μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι, dissimulare, 'to dissemble it,' 'to do as though we noticed it not.' So Diog. Laërt. ix. 29, ἐὰν λοιδορούμενος μὴ προσποιῶμαι· in which idiom προσποιεῖσθαι signifies præ se ferre, 'to take to oneself,' and also 'to make as though,' as in a passage of St. Luke, xxiv. 28, προσεποιεῖτο πορεύεσθαι πορρώτερω. That, however, is not the force of ποιεῖσθαι in the present instance, but the word has simply what is its original sense, 'to make a thing one's own, to take it to oneself,' and, by implication, 'to notice it;' as Theophr. Char. Eth. 1, περὶ εἰρωνείας· ἀκούσας τι δόξει μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι scil. ἀκοῦσαι. In later Greek οὐ is mostly used; as Hdian. i. 9, 13, πιστεύειν οὐ προσεποιοῦντο. Ælian, V. H. ix. 4, ὁ δὲ οὐ προσεποιήσατο, αἰτιᾶσθαι τὸν Π. (for so I would point.) Dio Cass. 642, 22, οὐ μέντοι προσεποιεῖτο.

5. ἑκόντας ἡμᾶς ἀδικηθῆναι] 'that we be willing to put up with injury.' So ἀδικεῖσθαι at i. 120, 4, 'to bear to be wronged,' and 1 Cor. vi. 7, διατί οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀδικεῖσθε; By τὸ Κλέωνος understand, 'what Cleon had said,' ch. 40, namely, πειθόμενοι μὲν ἐμοὶ, τά τε δίκαια ἐς Μυτιληναίους καὶ τὰ ξύμφορα ἅμα ποιήσετε. At ἐν αὐτῷ supply, with Goeller, ἐν τῷ τιμωρεῖσθαι.

Ch. XLVIII. We have now the ἐπίλογοι, couched in the form of a brief counsel as to what should be done in the matter. Ὑμεῖς δὲ, γνόντες ἀμείνω τάδε εἶναι, &c. 'Do you, then, being decidedly of opinion that this is the best course of policy to be taken, and not as too much swayed by feelings of pity or lenity,—to which neither would I myself [any more than Cleon] suffer you to be actuated,' &c. On πλέον νέμειν in this figurative sense, ἀπ' αὐτῶν δὲ τῶν παραινουμένων, πείθεσθέ μοι Μυτιληναίων οὓς μὲν Πάχης ἀπέπεμψεν ὡς ἀδικοῦντας, κρῖναι καθ' ἡσυχίαν, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους ἐᾷν οἰκεῖν. 2. τάδε γὰρ ἔς τε τὸ μέλλον ἀγαθὰ, καὶ τοῖς πολεμίοις ἤδη φοβερά· ὅστις γὰρ εὖ βουλεύεται, πρὸς τοὺς ἐναντίους κρείσσων ἐστὶν, ἢ μετ' ἔργων ἰσχύος ἀνοίᾳ ἐπιών."

XLIX. Τοιαῦτα δὲ ὁ Διόδοτος εἶπε. ῥηθεισῶν δὲ τῶν γνωμῶν τούτων μάλιστα ἀντιπάλων πρὸς ἀλλήλας, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἦλθον μὲν ἐς ἀγῶνα ὅμως τῆς δόξης, καὶ ἐγένοντο ἐν τῇ χειροτονίᾳ ἀγχώμαλοι· ἐκράτησε δὲ ἡ τοῦ Διοδότου. 2. καὶ τριήρη εὐθὺς ἄλλην ἀπέστελλον κατὰ σπουδὴν, ὅπως μὴ, φθασάσης τῆς ‡ προτέρας, εὕρωσι see note supra ch. 3, and vi. 88. Of κρῖναι καθ' ἡσυχίαν the sense is, as Mitford and Arnold express it, 'to judge with dispassionate deliberation.' Ἐᾷν οἰκεῖν signifies, 'to have them in possession of their country,'—not to drive them from it, as was often done in this, to make way for other inhabitants.

2. The speaker now, in order to leave the stronger impression on the minds of his hearers, as to the expediency of the course he is recommending, concludes with a pithy gnome, (like that in Herodot. iii. 127, ἔνθα σοφίης δέει, βίης ἔργον οὐδέν,) that 'he who employs wise counsel [as to what is to be done] is stronger (i. e. more strongly armed) against his enemies than he who rushes on, devoid of counsel, with deeds of [mere] strength or brute force.' Ἀνοίᾳ stands for ἀβούλως. By ἰσχύος is meant, 'strength alone, unaccompanied by counsel,' as in 1 Sam. ii. 9, 'for by strength shall no man prevail,' οὐκ ἰσχύει ἀνὴρ δυνατὸς, scil. ἐστι.

Ch. XLIX. 1. μάλιστα ἀντιπάλων πρὸς ἀλλήλας] By this Arnold says he understands our author to mean, that 'the real contest was between the motion of Cleon and that of Diodotus;' and that whatever modifications of opinion there might have been between those two extremes, were merged in one or the other when the question came to the vote. Poppo, however, not without reason, apprehends that thus the pronoun τούτων will be required to make up the sense. As to the sense propounded by Arnold, all that can truly be said is, that such a sense may be contained, by implication, in the words of our author, if at least μάλιστα ἀντιπάλων be rendered, as it best may, maximè contrariæ. As to the next words, ἦλθον ἐς ἀγῶνα ὅμως τῆς δόξης, the learned commentators have stumbled at ὅμως, insomuch that some have proposed to read ὁμῶς, others ὁμοίως. This, however, is one of those cases (adverted to by Popp. Proleg. i. 1, p. 289, l.) in which the sentiment to which that particle is opposed, is suppressed, and left to be supplied from the context. Thus here the word ὅμως (nevertheless or notwithstanding) has allusion, as Goeller, Poppo, and Arnold observe, to what had been said before, ch. 36, that the people altered their minds as to the former decree, and the majority wished to reconsider the question; q. d. 'Nevertheless, when it came to the point, the repeal of the decree was not carried without a struggle:' a view, this, in which I entirely acquiesce, though I would observe, that the allusion will be more direct if we suppose—as I have already suggested in my Translation—that the word ἀντιπ. in this instance bears a double sense,—namely, contrary, and equally matched, of equal strength or power; by which we are to understand that the γνῶμαι were considered of equal match: for had they been really such, it may be supposed that no decision would have been made: or rather, in that case, the cause of mercy might be carried; since in a criminal cause, when the votes for and against the prisoner were equal, the prisoner was acquitted. To which purpose compare Eurip. Iph. T. 966, and 1470-2, Καὶ πρίν γ' Ἀρείοις ἐν πάγοις ψήφους ἴσας Κρίνασ', Ὀρέστα, καὶ νόμισμ' ἐς ταὐτό γε, Νικᾷν, ἰσήρεις ὅστις ἂν ψήφους λάβῃ, and Aristoph. Ran. 603, κελαδεῖ δ' ἐπίκλαυτον ἀηδόνιον Νόμον ὡς ἀπολεῖται, Κἂν ἴσαι γένωνται, scil. αἱ ψῆφοι. At any rate the party of Diodotus were emboldened to bring the question to vote with some confidence.

At ἐκράτησε supply γνώμη from the preceding; which word is expressed in a passage of Philostr. Vit. Ap. ii. 39, ἐκράτησεν οὖν ἡ τοῦ Α. γνώμη.

2. φθασάσης τῆς προτέρας] The reading here is doubtful; the common reading and that of the great body of the MSS.

διεφθαρμένην τὴν πόλιν· προεῖχε δὲ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ νυκτὶ μάλιστα. 3. παρασκευασάντων δὲ τῶν Μυτιληναίων πρέσβεων τῇ νηῒ οἶνον καὶ ἄλφιτα, καὶ μεγάλα ὑποσχομένων εἰ φθάσαιεν, ἐγένετο σπουδὴ being δευτέρας; while three have ἑτέρας, and four have προτέρας. Of the editors, Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker (in his first edition) retain δευτέρας; while Bekker in his second edition, and Arnold in his second edition, προτέρας. Arnold in his first edition adopted ἑτέρας, and this I formerly myself edited. I entirely agree with Goeller and Arnold, that every attempt to explain the passage, while δευτέρας is retained and taken in its only possible sense, is fruitless. Hence I propose to read either ἑτέρας or προτέρας: and indeed internal evidence is rather in favour of ἑτέρας, considering that that word may easily have been changed to δευτέρας. And such is the case in a passage of Theoph. Sim. p. 124, d. (Paris) ἐν ᾗ τὸ νικᾶν ὑπερένδοξον, καὶ τὸ τῆς δευτέρας τύχης βαρὺ καὶ λεγόμενον, where for δευτέρας τύχης read ἑτέρας τύχης (meaning νικᾶσθαι), and at τὸ supply ὄνομα. The preceding ς might, as in the present instance, be taken for a δ. However, I have now followed Bekker in editing προτέρας, because external authority is rather in its favour, since it is found not only in three MSS. besides Valla's Codex, but was, as I discovered on close examination, originally the reading of the Cod. Clarend., though afterwards altered to δευτέρας. Nor is this unsupported by internal evidence; for although δευτέρας and προτέρας are too dissimilar to be confounded with each other by careless copyists, yet I have occasionally observed one word to take place of the other; as, for instance, in a passage of Euseb. Hist. Eccles. iv. 17, where for προτέρᾳ some MSS. have δευτέρᾳ, others ἑτέρᾳ. In such a case the error, whichever way it lies, is to be imputed, not to the error of scribes, but to the misconception of half-learned critics; who, stumbling at something in the context or construction, cannot understand the word, and consequently alter one word to the other. Thus, for instance, here the common reading δευτέρας arose, we may suppose, from those who did not understand μὴ φθασάσης τῆς προτέρας, and thought the difficulty would be removed by reading δευτέρας, especially since they doubtless construed μὴ with φθ., and thought it might be taken also with ὅπως, as did Arnold in his first edition: a view, however, as Goeller observes, quite inadmissible. I will only add, that the verb προεῖχε in the next clause, which must be referred for its subject to whatever word is here read, while it is quite at variance with δευτέρας, may admit either προτέρας or ἑτέρας. The same remark I find made by Goeller in his second edition, evidently derived from what had already been observed by myself in Transl. and smaller edition. Poppo, in his Appendix, accedes to the opinion of Goeller, that either ἑτέρας or προτέρας should be read. I prefer προτ. for the foregoing reasons, and because ἑτέρας seems to have arisen from those who, partly dissatisfied with δευτέρας, as forbidden by προεῖχε, and, having no other copy to refer to, altered δευτέρας to ἑτέρας, simply on conjecture.

Thus reading, then, we may render: 'they immediately despatched another trireme with all speed, in order that they [meaning the persons sent on board] might not, by the former vessel having come up first, find the city destroyed.'

προεῖχε δὲ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ νυκτὶ μάλιστα] 'had preceded it by a day and a night,' meaning 24 hours. This, however, does not quite determine the precise time when each of the galleys started; though that must have been at the same time. Goeller and Poppo are of opinion that the first galley sailed on the evening of the day when the decree for the destruction of the Mitylenæans had passed, and the second on the evening of the next day, after the decree for its rescindment had passed. But little probable is it that the galley could be got ready to sail before the next morning: and as there is little doubt but that the second assembly was held on the day after, yet as, from what is said at ch. 36, it appears that it was not till the day after the decree was passed that the people repented of it, and since, when they had, means had to be taken to bring about the convoking of another and second assembly, consequently that assembly must have been held unusually late on that day; hence we cannot suppose that the second galley could set out sooner than the next morning; which would be just a day and a night after the first, in exact accordance with the words of our author, ἡμέρᾳ καὶ νυκτὶ, for which, however, the mode of explanation propounded by Goeller and Poppo would rather require νυκτὶ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ, and involve, in two ways, a great improbability.

τοῦ πλοῦ τοιαύτη, ὥστε ἥσθιόν τε, ἅμα ἐλαύνοντες, οἴνῳ καὶ ἐλαίῳ ἄλφιτα πεφυραμένα, καὶ οἱ μὲν ὕπνον ᾑροῦντο κατὰ μέρος, οἱ δὲ ἤλαυνον. 4. κατὰ τύχην δὲ πνεύματος οὐδενὸς ἐναντιωθέντος, καὶ τῆς μὲν προτέρας νεὼς οὐ σπουδῇ πλεούσης ἐπὶ πρᾶγμα ἀλλόκοτον, ταύτης δὲ τοιούτῳ τρόπῳ ἐπειγομένης, ἡ μὲν ἔφθασε τοσοῦτον ὅσον Πάχητα ἀνεγνωκέναι τὸ ψήφισμα, καὶ μέλλειν δρᾶσειν τὰ δεδογμένα, ἡ δ' ὑστέρα αὐτῆς ἐπικατάγεται, καὶ διεκώλυσε μὴ διαφθεῖραι. 5. παρὰ τοσοῦτον μὲν ἡ Μυτιλήνη ἦλθε κινδύνου. L. Τοὺς δ'

3. ἥσθιόν τε, ἅμα ἐλαύνοντες, &c.] 'ate while rowing;' for in the ordinary way rowing was suspended during meal times. The words following, οἴνῳ καὶ ἐλαίῳ ἄλφιτα πεφυραμένα, are not well explained 'cakes dipped in wine and oil;' rather, 'kneaded up with wine and oil.' Indeed the exact sense of ἄλφιτα is not cakes, nor that of πεφυραμένα, dipped. Ἄλφ. simply denotes meal, which, in being made up into cakes (μάζαι), was usually wetted (δεδευμένα) with water, sometimes with milk, (so Hesiod, Opp. 587, μάζα ἀμολγαίη,) and sometimes (as appears from Erotian and Hesych. in φύραμα) with oil. (See 1 Kings xviii. 12.) And this, I conceive, is what is called in Aristoph. Vesp. 610, φύστη μάζα, or the spiced, in contradistinction to the plain μάζα, which was the usual food of sailors. Now this word Suid. explains by στρυφνὸν, which (considering that the cakes were made of barley-meal) it might very well be called, as being husky and dry; so corresponding to our old word rusk, a sort of mean biscuit. When kneaded with wine as well as oil, the cakes were considered as food fitted for extraordinary services, such as the present. So Joseph. Ant. xiv. 15, 3, mentions, among the provisions supplied by Herod to the Roman army, σῖτον καὶ οἶνον καὶ ἔλαιον, such forming materials for these cakes, which, as appears from Hesych., were called wine-cakes, (his words are these: Οἰνοῦσσα· μάζα οἴνῳ πεφυραμένη. And so in Aristoph. Plut. 1121.) otherwise called health-cakes, as appears from another gloss of Hesych. and Phot.: Ὑγιείαν· καλοῦσιν Ἀττικοὶ τὰ πεφυραμένα οἴνῳ καὶ ἐλαίῳ ἄλφιτα.

Here I have, with the recent editors, for vulg. πεφυρμένα, preferred to adopt, from the best MSS., πεφυραμένα; the latter being more agreeable to the usus linguæ. So Pollux, viii. 6, 5, in his section on bakers, says, τὰ δὲ ἔργα δεῦσαι, φυράσαι, 'to knead, mix together.' And Dioscor. ap. Steph. Thes. in v. φυράω, says, φύρασον οἴνῳ..

καὶ οἱ μὲν ὕπνον—ἤλαυνον] Comparing this passage with ii. 75, and bearing in mind that the present service was, like the provisions, extraordinary, we may infer that the crews of Grecian triremes did not row by night. Hence, too, we may better account for the second vessel overtaking the first, though the latter had so long a start.

4. ἀλλόκοτον] 'horrible,' lit. 'monstrous,' as said of a fœtus out of the ordinary course of nature. So Appian, i. 433, 39, μὴ εὐθὺς ἐπιχειρεῖν εἰς ἔργον ἀλλόκοτον, and Plut. Coriol. ἀφελεῖν τῆς τιμωρίας τὸ ἀλλόκοτον καὶ βαρύ, and viii. 190, ἔργον ἀλλ. Soph. Phil. 1191, γνώμῃ ἀλλ. Plato, 436, ἀ. πατέρα, sævum. Our author, we may observe, has used the strongest term that the language supplies, by way of intimating his abhorrence of the atrocious fury of the Athenians; which nevertheless, I agree with Thirlwall, is less hateful than the cold-blooded cruelty of the Spartans.

ἐπικατάγεται] lit. 'is brought into port after:' a nautical term of somewhat rare occurrence, but found in Dio Cass. 310, 8. Polyæn. iv. 76, and Jos. Ant. xviii. 7, 2, ὁ δὲ ἐπαναχθεὶς καὶ δεξιῷ χρησάμενος τῷ πλῷ, τοσόνδε ἀπελείπετο τοῦ Ἡρώδου, ὥστε τὸν μὲν ἐντυχεῖν Γαΐῳ, ὁ δὲ ἐπικατάγεται καὶ τὰς ἐπιστολὰς ἀπεδίδου.

5. παρὰ τοσοῦτον—ἦλθε κινδύνου] A phrase, this, occurring also infra vii. 2, fin., and which is also found in Appian, i. 136 & 144. ii. 166. The Schol. explains παρὰ τοσοῦτον as standing for εἰς τοσ., 'into such imminent danger came Mitylene.' But the word παρὰ cannot denote this: and the instances of παρὰ τοσοῦτον, παρ' ὀλίγον, and παρὰ μικρὸν, laboriously brought together and minutely discussed by Irmisch on Hdian. v. 4, 24, are of another kind to the present. See note on iv. 106, and viii. 133. Hence it is better to suppose a confusion of two modes of expression, ἐς τοσοῦτον κίνδυνον and παρὰ τοσοῦτον ὀλέθρου οὐκ ἀπώλετο: a view which I have also propounded in my former edition of this author, and in which Dr. Arnold ἄλλους ἄνδρας, οὓς ὁ Πάχης ἀπέπεμψεν ὡς αἰτιωτάτους ὄντας τῆς ἀποστάσεως, Κλέωνος γνώμῃ διέφθειραν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι·—ἦσαν δὲ ὀλίγῳ πλείους χιλίων·—καὶ Μυτιληναίων τείχη καθεῖλον, καὶ ναῦς παρέλαβον. 2. ὕστερον δὲ φόρον μὲν οὐκ ἔταξαν Λεσβίοις, κλήρους δὲ ποιήσαντες τῆς γῆς, πλὴν τῆς Μηθυμναίων, τρισχιλίους, τριακοσίους μὲν τοῖς θεοῖς ἱεροὺς ἐξεῖλον, ἐπὶ δὲ τοὺς ἄλλους σφῶν αὐτῶν κληρούχους τοὺς λαχόντας ἀπέπεμψαν· οἷς ἀργύριον Λέσβιοι professes to coincide, though he just after starts a doubt. 'Unless,' says he, 'κινδύνου be taken in a wider sense for the evil of which there is danger, here ὀλέθρου;' in which case the meaning would be, 'came within so little of destruction,' lit. 'escaped, by so little, from destruction.' But it may be doubted whether even our word danger has ever (what Arnold supposes) this sense: certainly the Greek κίνδυνος never has, as indeed he himself acknowledges; and consequently his criticism is a baseless imagination, contributing nothing towards the solution of a real difficulty.

Ch. L. 1. γνώμῃ] sententiâ, consilio. In παρέλαβον we have a sensus prægnans for 'received at their hand, and took possession of.'

2. φόρον οὐκ ἔταξαν] Smith renders, 'imposed no tribute for the future.' But the Lesbians, it may be observed, never had yet paid any. They had enjoyed a sort of independence, (see iii. 1.) and were only bound to furnish a naval quota. Now on being subdued it might have been expected that, as in the case of Samos, (see i. 117.) they would have been put on a footing with the other tributary allies. But, instead of this, another expedient was adopted, by which they were compelled to pay a sort of private tribute, i. e. to private persons; a politic measure, as it seems, to appease some troublesome democrats.

By κλήρους is, as the Schol. saw, meant μερίδας, shares into which any territory assigned was divided, and probably distributed by lot. (See more in my note in Transl.) Of these shares there were, we find, three thousand: and Clinton, Fast. Hellen., thinks we may collect that each share contained ninety-six acres. Of these, it is added, τριακοσίους τοῖς θεοῖς ἱεροὺς ἐξεῖλον, 'they set apart three hundred [to be regarded as] consecrated to the gods,' i. e. devoted to religious uses, as the building and keeping in repair of temples on the τέμενος or glebe, providing victims for the sacrifices, and maintaining the priests and inferior ministers of the temples. See Aristot. Polit. vii. 10. Isocr. Areop. p. 196. Xen. Vectig. iv. 19, and other passages referred to by Arnold, as also Boeckh, Pub. Œcon. of Athens, iii. 2.

κληρούχους τοὺς λαχόντας ἀπέπεμψαν] Meaning, 'such of the citizens at Athens (probably the poorer ones only) as obtained, in a kind of lottery, the prizes entitling each to one of the shares.' From the term ἀπέπεμψαν it is plain that the shareholders went to Lesbos; but there is no reason to think that they remained there, and, in point of fact, that they did not, is, as Arnold observes, clear from all the subsequent story of the revolts in Lesbos, viii. 22, 23, and Xen. Hist. i. 6. ii. 2. He thinks 'they were sent out only to ascertain the size and situation of their shares, and to arrange matters with their tenants.' But the circumstance that two minæ formed the fixed rent for each share, and that the former proprietors were left in possession of the land, seems to exclude the idea of arrangement. The only reason one can well imagine for their going is this, that there was probably a second casting of lots, by which the allotment was regulated, and the situation of each lot determined ultimately by the choice of the individual who obtained that power by lot. Moreover, though it may be evident, as Arnold says, that the shareholders did not remain in the island, yet that can only be understood as a body. There might be not a few who did remain, probably the poorest and most destitute, to whom the banishment from all the enjoyments of Athens, of which he speaks, could not apply, and whom the fixed rent, small as it was, might maintain more comfortably than in a dear metropolis like Athens. It was clearly for the advantage of Athens thus to get rid of a considerable number of the most destitute and troublesome of her citizens. As to the objection, which may seem to lie from the fact, adverted to by him, that 'there was no population of Athenian citizens resident at Lesbos,' it is of no great weight; since the time he speaks of was fifteen years after the period when the persons in question were sent out, and ταξάμενοι τοῦ κλήρου ἑκάστου τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ δύο μνᾶς φέρειν, αὐτοὶ εἰργάζοντο τὴν γῆν. 3. παρέλαβον δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ πολίσματα οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ὅσων Μυτιληναῖοι ἐκράτουν, καὶ ὑπήκουον ὕστερον Ἀθηναίων. τὰ μὲν κατὰ Λέσβον οὕτως ἐγένετο.

LI. Ἐν δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει μετὰ τὴν Λέσβου ἅλωσιν Ἀθηναῖοι, Νικίου τοῦ Νικηράτου στρατηγοῦντος, ἐστράτευσαν ἐπὶ Μινώαν τὴν νῆσον, ἣ κεῖται πρὸ Μεγάρων· ἐχρῶντο δὲ αὐτῇ, πύργον ἐνοικοδομήσαντες, οἱ Μεγαρῆς φρουρίῳ. 2. ἐβούλετο δὲ Νικίας τὴν φυλακὴν αὐτόθεν δι' ἐλάσσονος τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ Βουδόρου καὶ τῆς Σαλαμῖνος εἶναι, τούς τε Πελοποννησίους, ὅπως μὴ ποιῶνται ἔκπλους αὐτόθεν λανθάνοντες, τριήρων τε, (οἷον καὶ τὸ πρὶν γενόμενον,) καὶ λῃστῶν ἐκπομπαῖς, τοῖς τε Μεγαρεῦσιν ἅμα μηδὲν ἐσπλεῖν. 3. ἑλὼν οὖν ἀπὸ τῆς Νισαίας πρῶτον δύο πύργω προέχοντε μηχαναῖς ἐκ θαλάσσης, καὶ τὸν ἔσπλουν ἐς τὸ μεταξὺ τῆς νήσου ἐλευθερώσας, ἀπετείχιζε καὶ τὸ ἐκ τῆς ἠπείρου, ᾗ κατὰ γέφυ-during that time a considerable part of the κληροῦχοι would, in the course of nature, have died off; so that there would then be nothing that could be called an Athenian population. Again, it was greatly for the interest of Athens that a considerable number of the κληροῦχοι should remain, since they would be a check on the Lesbians; one great reason, in ancient times, for sending out these κληροῦχοι, who were generally disbanded soldiers, or retired veterans. See Boeckh, Pub. Œcon. of Athens, book iii. 18.

ταξάμενοι] 'engaging to pay,' as i. 99, where see note.

3. τὰ ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ πολίσματα] Meaning, doubtless, those termed infra iv. 52, Ἀκταῖαι πόλεις, so called as being on the coast-line of the continent opposite to Lesbos, as Colonæ Troades, (i. 131.) Hamaxitos, Larissa, Lectum, Antandrus, and others. It was, indeed, not unusual for powerful and opulent islands to hold territories on an adjoining continent. Thus Chios, Samos, Rhodes, and Thasus, all had such appendages. And in the time of Strabo, the Mitylenæans retained some towns on the continent, as Coryphantia and Heraclia.

Ch. LI. 2. ἐβούλετο δὲ — εἶναι] The construction is, ἐβούλετο δὲ N. τὴν φυλακὴν εἶναι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις αὐτόθεν (scil. ἀπὸ τῆς Μινώας) δι' ἐλάσσονος [ἐσομένην] καὶ μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ B. καὶ τῆς Σ., where by τὴν φυλακὴν understand, the station for the guard-ships which blockaded Nisæa. At τούς τε Πελ., ὅπως μὴ, &c., the Scholiast and Duker repeat, from the preceding clause, ἐβούλετο; by which the accus. will be taken as standing for a nomin., thus: ἐβούλετο ὅπως οἱ Πελ. μή. To this, however, Goeller objects on the score of grammatical propriety as concerns ὅπως μή; and, after Krueg., would supply φυλάσσεσθαι, taken from the preceding φυλακὴν εἶναι. Yet thus an intolerable harshness is involved: and as ἐβούλετο must be supplied in the third clause of the sentence (τοῖς τε—ἐσπλεῖν), there can be no doubt that it ought to be repeated here. In this view, I find, Poppo acquiesces, illustrating the construction thus: 'ut complura verba infinitivum requirentia nonnunquam ὅπως post se habent, ita post βούλεσθαι hic in secundo membro mutata structura eo facilius hæc conjunctio admittitur, quo commodius pro ipso ἐβούλετο verbum similis notionis, ut προὐθυμεῖτο, cogitatione repetitur.' Λῃστῶν, 'privateers,' as iv. 9, where see note. Μηδὲν ἐσπλεῖν, 'that nothing should be imported.' Neut. for pass., as not unfrequently in this verb, especially in Thucydides, Xenophon, and other Attic writers.

3. ἑλὼν οὖν—θαλάσσης] Constr. ἑλὼν οὖν πρῶτον μηχαναῖς ἐκ θαλάσσης δύο πύργω προέχοντε ἀπὸ τῆς Νισαίας. Προέχοντε, 'jutting out;' as vii. 4, πρ. τοῦ λιμένος, and viii. 35.

ἀπετείχιζε—ἠπείρου] The sense is, 'he drew a wall on the side which faced the continent; where, by a bridge through a morass, succours had been sent to the island.'

ραν διὰ τενάγους ἐπιβοήθεια ἦν τῇ νήσῳ, οὐ πολὺ διεχούσῃ τῆς ἠπείρου. 4. ὡς δὲ τοῦτο ἐξειργάσαντο ἐν ἡμέραις ὀλίγαις, ὕστερον δὴ καὶ ἐν τῇ νήσῳ τεῖχος ἐγκαταλιπὼν καὶ φρουρὰν, ἀνεχώρησε τῷ στρατῷ.

LII. Ὑπὸ δὲ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους τοῦ θέρους τούτου καὶ οἱ Πλαταιῆς, οὐκέτι ἔχοντες σῖτον, οὐδὲ δυνάμενοι πολιορκεῖσθαι, ξυνέβησαν τοῖς Πελοποννησίοις τοιῷδε τρόπῳ. 2. προσέβαλον αὐτῶν τῷ τείχει, οἱ δὲ οὐκ ἐδύναντο ἀμύνεσθαι. γνοὺς δὲ ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος ἄρχων τὴν ἀσθένειαν αὐτῶν, βίᾳ μὲν οὐκ ἐβούλετο ἑλεῖν· (εἰρημένον γὰρ ἦν αὐτῷ ἐκ Λακεδαίμονος, ὅπως, εἰ σπονδαί γίγνοιντό ποτε πρὸς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ ξυγχωροῖεν ὅσα πολέμῳ χωρία ἔχουσιν ἑκάτεροι ἀποδίδοσθαι, μὴ ἀνάδοτος εἴη ἡ Πλάταια, ὡς αὐτῶν ἑκόντων προσχωρησάντων·) προσπέμπει δὲ αὐτοῖς κήρυκα λέγοντα, "εἰ βούλονται παραδοῦναι τὴν πόλιν ἑκόντες τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, καὶ δικασταῖς ἐκείνοις χρήσασθαι, τούς τε ἀδίκους κολάζειν, παρὰ δίκην δὲ οὐδένα." 3. τοσαῦτα μὲν ὁ κήρυξ εἶπεν· οἱ δὲ (ἦσαν γὰρ ἤδη ἐν τῷ ἀσθενεστάτῳ) παρέδοσαν τὴν πόλιν. 4. καὶ τοὺς Πλαταιέας ἔτρεφον οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι ἡμέρας τινάς, ἐν ὅσῳ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος δικασταὶ πέντε ἄνδρες ἀφίκοντο. 5. ἐλθόντων δὲ αὐτῶν, κατηγορία μὲν οὐδεμία προετέθη, ἠρώτων δὲ αὐτούς, ἐπικαλεσάμενοι, τοσοῦτον μόνον, "εἴ τι Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ τῷ καθεστῶτι ἀγαθόν τι εἰργασμένοι εἰσίν." 6. οἱ δ'

Ch. LII. 1. οὐδὲ δυνάμενοι πολιορκεῖσθαι] The full sense is, 'and not being able to bear being besieged,' as again ch. 109. See also note on i. 120. Indeed the passive of the Greek and Latin sometimes signifies, 'to suffer any thing to be done to oneself.'

2. At εἰρημένον γὰρ ἦν αὐτῷ ἐκ Λακ. Poppo would cancel the ἦν. But thus the γὰρ can have no place; and the δὲ after προσπέμπει will have also to be cancelled: though for either omission as little necessity is there as authority; for at εἰρημένον ἦν may very well be supplied οὕτω, i. e. μὴ βίᾳ ἑλεῖν: οὕτω being often so used with verbs of commanding, in the passive.

λέγοντα, εἰ — οὐδένα] These words I have marked with inverted commas, because they are the herald's question, which is, 'Are they willing to surrender their city to the Lacedæmonians, and regard them as their judges, to punish the guilty, but, contrary to justice, no one?' This use of χρήσασθαι, 'to take to oneself for use, to receive,' is Attic. The τε answers to the subsequent δὲ, and must be taken, not with ἀδίκους, but, as Poppo suggests, 'is to be considered as connecting the inf. κολάζειν depending on βλέπονται, with χρήσασθαι.' See Herm. on Viger, p. 836, 317.

3. ἦσαν ἐν τῷ ἀσθενεστάτῳ] 'were at the last stage of weakness.' So Dio Cass. 1253, 52, ἐν τῷ ἀσθ. ἐγένοντο. Pausan. ix. 7, 4, ἐς τὸ ἀσθενέστατον προήχθησαν.

4. δικασταὶ πέντε ἄνδρες] So the Romans used their Quinqueviri. See Mueller's Dorians.

5. προετέθη] proposita est, 'was brought against them.' Ἐπικαλεσάμενοι, 'after summoning them [to trial].' For ἐπικαλ. is a forensic term, like arcessere in Latin, to signify in judicium vocare, 'to summon to a court of justice.' And so in Cic. Off. ii. 14, we have, 'arcessere innocentem judicio capitis.' The more usual term is προσκαλ. (so Demosthenes has προσκαλέσασθαι τοὺς ἄρχοντας); and this is used, in narrating the story, by Diod. Sic.; but ἐπικαλ. is a more significant term, denoting, 'to summon any one to trial, calling him by his name.'

εἴ τι—ἀγαθόν τι] At this repetition of the τι the commentators stumble; and some would cancel one of them. But Goell. defends the repetition from a similar ἔλεγον, αἰτησάμενοι μακρότερα εἰπεῖν, καὶ προτάξαντες σφῶν αὐτῶν Ἀστύμαχόν τε τὸν Ἀσωπολάου καὶ Λάκωνα τὸν Ἀειμνήστου, πρόξενον ὄντα Λακεδαιμονίων. καὶ ἐπελθόντες ἔλεγον τοιάδε.

LIII. "Τὴν μὲν παράδοσιν τῆς πόλεως, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, πιστεύσαντες ὑμῖν ἐποιησάμεθα,—οὐ τοιάνδε δίκην οἰόμενοι ὑφέξειν, νομιμωτέραν δέ τινα ἔσεσθαι,—καὶ ἐν δικασταῖς οὐκ ἐν ἄλλοις δεξάμενοι, one in Plaut. As. iv. 1, 40, and refers to Pors. Addenda to Eurip. Hec., and Herm. on Soph. Tr. 940. Arnold follows Bredow in thinking that here and in ch. 68 the τι should be repeated, but not at ch. 54. The Lacedæmonians, he says, meant to put the question as strongly as possible, whether they had in any point done any service. This may serve to account, though somewhat artificially, for the omission of the τι at ch. 54; but it will not prove that the word should be repeated at ch. 68; for the question having once, in the present passage, been brought forward with the minuteness and particularity customary in law proceedings, it was unnecessary to again use such a repetition, by which very little real strength is communicated to the words. Thus it has no place, the second time, in all the MSS., and in the first is found in scarcely any.

6. ἔλεγον αἰτησάμενοι] 'they spoke, after requesting,' &c.: for αἰτησάμενοι does not, as some commentators suppose, depend on ἔλεγον; that word having no reference to the request that they might be heard more at large and by a spokesman, but, as Dukas observes, to the subsequent speech itself, the intermediate matter being in some degree parenthetical. Hence there is at καὶ ἐπελθόντες ἔλεγον τοιάδε a resumption, per epanorthosin, of the foregoing expression. Μακρότερα, 'more at large,' namely, than the question allowed; which could only be answered by a simple yes or no. Προτάξαντες σφῶν αὐτῶν Ἀ., 'having appointed as spokesmen for them, as pleaders in their behalf.' Similar is the use of procurator in Latin for orator. Προστ. is, indeed, the more usual term, on which and other cognate terms see my note on Acts xix. 33.

Λάκωνα—πρόξενον ὄντα Λακεδ.] This public host of the Lacedæmonians seems to have derived his name from the respect which his family bore the Lacedæmonians, between which and some powerful Lacedæmonians there was probably a close intimacy. For the same reason Cimon called one of his sons Lacedæmonius: see i. 45. On the other hand, at iv. 119, we find among the Lacedæmonians who signed the treaty of peace, one Athenæus, who had, doubtless, received his name from a similar cause.

Ch. LIII. We have now another pair of speeches, which are among the ablest in Thucydides; especially that of the Platæans, for, in the opinion of all competent judges, from Dionys. Hal. downwards, it has ever been regarded as one of the most consummate compositions, not only in our author, but in all writers, Greek or Latin. Thus Dionysius (Jud. de Thucyd. p. 921.) admires it beyond all the other speeches in Thucydides, praising it more particularly on the ground τὸ μὴ βεβασανίσθαι (of not being tortured by art), μηδὲ κατεπιτηδεῦσθαι (being covered over with studied ornaments), ἀληθεῖ δέ τινι καὶ φυσικῷ κεκοσμῆσθαι χρώματι. So, too, the eminent critic Heilman speaks of it in the following just terms: 'Hæc oratio, me judice, generis dicendi ad commovendos animos compositi præstantissimorum exemplorum unum est, ex quo facile universa illius repetatur ars atque ratio. Meherculè Demosthenes merito novies Thucydidis scripta perlegit et edidicit.'

This chapter contains the proem, which adverts, in order to move compassion, to the destitute condition they are in, and the necessity of saying something, however fruitless it may be, to avert their fate, which seems already decreed.

1. οὐ τοιάνδε δίκην—ἔσεσθαι] 'not supposing we should have to encounter such a kind of trial,' or such sort of justice as this, but one of a more legal kind, i. e. one agreeable to the common laws of justice prevalent in all countries: for the term δίκην, justice, used by the Lacedæmonians, implied that the trial should be a legal one; whereas the whole procedure was a mere mockery of justice. At ἐν δικασταῖς οὐκ ἐν ἄλλοις δεξάμενοι the construction is, as Goeller observes, καὶ ἐν δικασταῖς δεξάμενοι γενέσθαι οὐκ ἐν ἄλλοις ἢ ἡμῖν. And he adds, 'Ordo participiorum hic est, ἐποιησάμεθα — οἰόμενοι καὶ — (δεξάμενοι) ἡγούμενοι. Nexus participiorum δεξάμενοι et ἡγούμενοι talis est, ut δεξάμενοι causam contineat, cur ἡγοῦνται. Idem ὥσπερ καὶ ἐσμὲν, γενέσθαι ἢ ὑμῖν, ἡγούμενοι τὸ ἴσον μάλιστ' ἂν φέρεσθαι. 2. νῦν δὲ φοβούμεθα μὴ ἀμφοτέρων ἅμα ἡμαρτήκαμεν· τόν τε γὰρ ἀγῶνα περὶ τῶν δεινοτάτων εἶναι εἰκότως ὑποπτεύομεν, καὶ ὑμᾶς, μὴ οὐ κοινοὶ ἀποβῆτε, τεκμαιρόμενοι προκατηγορίας τε igitur est ac si scripsisset, καὶ, ἐπεὶ ἐδεξάμεθα οὐκ ἐν ἄλλοις δικασταῖς γενέσθαι ἢ ὑμῖν, ἡγούμενοι,' &c. Of δεξάμενοι the sense is uncertain. Poppo explains it to mean, 'having wished to be under,' &c., observing that δέχεσθαι, followed by an inf., often signifies velle, eligere. But it may signify probare, admittere, accipere, with allusion to some previous engagement or covenant. So Herodot. ii. 143, οὐ δεχόμενοι παρ' αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, γενέσθαι ἄνθρωπον. If the former mode of explanation be preferred, the οὐκ should be closely connected with the term δέχ., as we should say, 'not caring,' in the sense 'being disinclined;' a view favoured by the context. The reasons why they delivered up the city to the Lacedæmonians were,—first, that they entirely relied on their good faith; secondly, that they were not disposed to be, or did not expect to be, judged by any others than by them,—and why? as thinking that thereby they should especially obtain right and justice.

The words οὐ τοιάνδε δίκην—ἔσεσθαι contain a reflection incidentally thrown in, and in which may be recognised the first stroke to awaken pathos: and to the same effect tend the words ὥσπερ καὶ ἐσμέν. The repetition of the ἐν is harsh; but Poppo observes that the word is sometimes found, as here, even before an apposition; referring, for proof, to Voigtl. on Lucian, D. M. xiv. 5. Here at least (and perhaps wherever the same idiom occurs) there is, properly speaking, no pleonasm, but rather a strengthening of the sense of the preposition, which is here penes aliquem, in alicujus potestate, constituì. For ἐν, παρὰ would, indeed, have been the more usual word in such a case (so in Herodot. iii. 160, we have, παρὰ Δ. κριτῇ); but ἐν is more forcible, meaning, 'in the power of any person to do with one as he pleases.'

Of τὸ ἴσον μάλιστ' ἂν φέρεσθαι the sense is, 'to obtain what is right and just.' So τὸ ἴσον supra ii. 37, and δόξαν φέρεσθαι, ii. 11. The phrase literally signifies, (the force of the middle verb being manifest,) 'to carry off any thing [as one's right] for one's use and behoof, to obtain.'

Such is, I conceive, the true import of § 1, of which the construction is very anomalous, and the sense but imperfectly developed; an incoherence, this, admirably adapted to represent the extreme perturbation which the Platæans would naturally feel, at being thus suddenly dragged, not to trial, but to condemnation and a speedy execution.

2. νῦν δὲ φοβούμεθα μὴ ἀμφοτέρων ἅμα ἡμαρτήκαμεν] 'but as things now are, we fear lest we have missed of both our just expectations.' On this use of the indic. after μὴ, to express, as Arnold says, the conviction of the speaker, rather than his doubtful apprehension that the Platæans had really missed of both, (or, as Goeller expresses it, the persuasion of the Platæans, 'se jure timere, eosque rem futuram propemodum certò prævidisse,') see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 520, 8.

The words following, τὸν ἀγῶνα περὶ τῶν δεινοτάτων εἶναι εἰκότως ὑποπτεύομεν, depict in lively colours the horrible suspicion they felt, that they were brought here rather for condemnation than trial, and consequently that their present address was not what such generally was, an ἀγὼν or forensic pleading to obtain justice, but an ἀγὼν περὶ τῶν δεινοτάτων, a contest about matters of the most fearful and terrific nature,—even life or death: to which purpose comp. the words of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 601, 27, εἰς ἀγῶνας ὑπὲρ τῶν αἰσχίστων ἀγώνων καθιστάντες, οὓς, &c., where, as a means of removing the acknowledged corruption there existing, I propose to cancel ἀγώνων, and for αἰσχίστων to read ἐσχάτων, which is the term used in kindred passages at p. 625, 25, and 634, 41. Also, for ἀγῶνας, I suspect that Dion. (who undoubtedly had there this passage of our author in mind) wrote ἀγῶνα. Such expressions as περὶ τῶν δεινοτάτων and περὶ τῶν ἐσχάτων being no other than euphemisms for death; as we say, 'to fear the worst.' The term here, δειν., may bring to mind the expression of Cicero, 'Horribile est causam capitis dicere.'

καὶ ὑμᾶς μὴ οὐ κοινοὶ ἀποβῆτε] By grammatical attraction for μὴ ὑμεῖς ἀποβ.: a mode of expression adopted, from its being promotive of force and energy. See note on ch. 57, fin. By κοινοὶ is meant, æqui, 'impartial,' what is otherwise expressed by δίκαιοι: and so in Demosth. p. 524, λόγος δίκαιος καὶ κοινός. Such, too, is sometimes the use of communis in Latin, as Livy, xlii. 14, 'Martem esse communem.' The term then signifies, 'alike well disposed to both parties that are at ἡμῶν οὐ προγεγενημένης, ᾗ χρὴ ἀντειπεῖν, (ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ λόγον ᾐτησάμεθα,) τό τε ἐπερώτημα βραχὺ ὂν, ᾧ τὰ μὲν ἀληθῆ ἀποκρίνασθαι ἐναντία γίγνεται, τὰ δὲ ψευδῆ, ἔλεγχον ἔχει. 3. πανταχόθεν δὲ ἄποροι καθεστῶτες, ἀναγκαζόμεθα, καὶ ἀσφαλέστερον δοκεῖ εἶναι, εἰπόντας τι κινδυνεύειν· καὶ γὰρ ὁ μὴ ῥηθεὶς λόγος τοῖς ὧδ' ἔχουσιν αἰτίαν ἂν παράσχοι, ὡς, εἰ ἐλέχθη, σωτήριος ἂν ἦν. 4. χαλεπῶς δὲ ἔχει ἡμῖν, πρὸς τοῖς ἄλλοις, καὶ ἡ πειθώ· ἀγνῶτες μὲν γὰρ ὄντες ἀλλήλων, ἐπεισενεγκάμενοι μαρτύρια ὧν ἄπειροι ἦτε ὠφελούμεθ' ἄν, νῦν δὲ πρὸς εἰδότας πάντα λελέξεται· καὶ δέδιμεν οὐχί, μὴ, προ-

issue on any matter.' Here there is an allusion to the Thebans as the other party. We may also remark the use, somewhat rare, of ἀποβαίνειν for the Latin evadere, fieri, 'to turn out [to be],' 'to become,' as in Xen. Mem. iv. 8, 8, δυσμαθέστερον ἀποβαίνειν. Lucian, ii. 898, ἀποβαίνουσιν ἄριστοι ἄνδρες, and i. 270, ὅμοιος ἀπέβης τράγῳ. Plato, 878, C, ἂν τὸ τραῦμα ἰάσιμον ἀποβῇ.

At τεκμαιρόμενοι (scil. ἡμεῖς) προκατηγορίας, &c., we may remark, with Goeller, that 'the verb τεκμαίρ. is construed as well with the case absolute, (here both genitive and nominative absolute,) as also with an ὅτι following, (as i. 1.) and followed by ἀπὸ and ἐκ, and sometimes a dative.' Compare Matth. Gr. Gr. § 396, 2. So we say, 'to conclude from,' and 'to judge by any thing,' by a metaphorical sense formed on the physical, 'to take any thing as a mark or indication, whence to judge of something else.' So in Pind. Olymp. viii. 3, we have, ἵνα μάντιες ἄνδρες, Ἐμπύροις τεκμαιρόμενοι, &c. Of προκατηγορίας ἡμῶν οὐ προγεγενημένης the sense is, 'there being no fore-accusation against us;' for the Platæans were obliged to speak first, contrary to the general rule in such a case, which is, that the accuser should first speak: to which purpose are the words of Liban. Epist. 277, εἰκότως ἀφῆκας ἐμοὶ τῷ προτέρῳ γράψαι. τῷ μὲν κατηγόρῳ τοῦτο δέδοται, κατηγορῶ δὲ ἐγώ. Δεῖ δέ σε τὰς αἰτίας πειρᾶσθαι λύειν, διόπερ ἀνέμεινας, οὐκ οἰηθεὶς δεῖν Πλαταιεῦσιν ἀκολουθῆσαι μᾶλλον ἢ κοινῷ νόμῳ, where, had the learned Wolfius been aware of the evident allusion there to this passage of our author, he would not have puzzled himself and his readers to no purpose.

At ἐναντία γίγνεται, 'is adverse to our cause,' the subject of the verb, as Haack explains, is τὰ ἀληθῆ ἀποκρίνασθαι. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 443, 1, and Popp. Proleg. i. 1, p. 94.

3. πανταχόθεν ἄποροι καθεστῶτες] See note on ii. 59, 3. εἰπόντας τι κινδυνεύειν, i. e. as Stephens, Gail, Poppo, and Arnold explain, 'non prius periclitari quam aliquid dixerimus.' So supra i. 20, we have, βουλόμενοι δράσαντές τι καὶ κινδυνεῦσαι. Ὁ μὴ ῥηθεὶς λόγος is, as Bauer observes, for τὸ μὴ ῥηθῆναι λόγον, 'the not having said any thing:' an elegance, this, imitated by Jos. Ant. ii. 6, 9, παύσομαι περαιτέρω λέγειν· ἵν', εἰ μὲν κατακρίνειας ἡμῶν, τὰ μὴ λεχθέντα δόξῃ βεβλαφέναι ἡμᾶς—εἰ δ' ἀπολύσειας, &c. Of αἰτίαν παράσχοι the sense is, 'might occasion reproach,' or the being blamed, on the score of self-injury. In the next words, ὡς, εἰ ἐλέχθη, &c., there is a further development of the sense; literally, 'as how, that if spoken, it might have been the means of saving them;' since, as Solomon says, Prov. xv. 23, 'A word spoken in due season, how good (i. e. salutary) is it!' The expression σωτήριος λόγος is one indeed not unfrequent in the Tragedians. On this whole section it may be observed, with Poppo, that no little light is thrown by the conference between Orestes and Pylades, in Eurip. Orest. 765—771.

4. χαλεπῶς ἔχει ἡμῖν—ἡ πειθώ] 'hard to us is the task of persuasion, besides the other [difficulties of the case].' Ἀγνῶτες ὄντες ἀλλήλων, 'had we been unknown to each other,' lit. 'unknowing of;' the partic. ἀγνὼς having here an active signification, as occasionally in the best early Attic writers, but only with a genitive of thing (as in our adj. unknowing); insomuch that I should be inclined to adopt the reading of the Cod. Vat., ἀλλήλοις, but that the very same phrase, ὄντες ἀλλήλων ἀγνῶτες, occurs in Plato de Legg. vi. p. 751, d.

ἐπεισενεγκάμενοι μαρτύρια ὧν, &c.] 'we might, by bringing in testimonies respecting things which ye know, have been benefited.' In other words, 'such is the knowledge we mutually have of each other, that what we can say or urge, you know all as well as we do.'

καὶ δέδιμεν οὐχί, μὴ, &c.] Between καταγνόντες ἡμῶν τὰς ἀρετὰς ἧσσους εἶναι τῶν ὑμετέρων, ἔγκλημα αὐτὸ ποιῆτε, ἀλλὰ μὴ, ἄλλοις χάριν φέροντες, ἐπὶ διεγνωσμένην κρίσιν καθιστώμεθα. LIV. Παρεχόμενοι δὲ ὅμως ἃ ἔχομεν δίκαια

λελέξεται and these words καὶ δέδιμεν, &c., I have, as the context requires, placed a colon. The full sense of this briefly worded sentence is, 'and our fear is, not that precondemning us, because ye judge our merits and services towards you to have been less than they should have been, ye make this accusation; but lest ye have, in order to confer a favour on others, brought us to a predetermined trial,' one where the event has been predetermined. So Jos. Ant. xvii. 5, 3, ἱκετεύοντος μὴ προδιεγνωσμένην καταστῆναι δίκην, (where, for μὴ προδ., I conjecture μὴ εἰς προδ.) Dionys. Hal. Ant. 587, 32, εἰ μὲν ἐπὶ δίκην με κεκλήκατε—εἰ δὲ ἐπὶ τιμωρίαν κατεγνωσμένην. Of the term προκαταγινώσκω, which is rare, examples are found in Dio Cass. 437, 41. 785, 86, προκατέγνωσαν σφῶν, and other passages cited in my Transl. Ἀρετὰς, merits, as at ii. 40. Ἄλλοις χάριν φέροντες stands, as Poppo observes, for ἄλλοις χαριζόμενοι, aliis gratificantes, 'conferring a favour on others.' So in Acts xxiv. 27, we have, θέλων χάριτας καταθέσθαι τοῖς Ἰ.

Of the clause ἀλλὰ (scil. δέδιμεν) μὴ—καθιστώμεθα, the sense is well expressed by Arnold as follows: 'but what we really fear is, that our conduct, whatever we can show it to have been, will not affect your sentence; that your minds are made up already, and that we are to be sacrificed to gratify the Thebans, not on account of our demerits towards you.' In μὴ προκαταγνόντες—ὑμετέρων may be recognised a well-judged and delicate προθεραπεία or captatio benevolentiæ, similar to that of St. Paul, Acts xxvi. 2, and xxvii. 22; also to another passage of our author, i. 68. But what is most worthy of attention in this clause, is what Arnold calls 'a strange grammatical confusion;' for, as Goeller observes, strict propriety would require either ἀλλὰ μὴ ἄλλοις χάριν φέροντες—ἡμᾶς καθιστῆτε, or ὑμῶν χάριν φερόντων—καθιστώμεθα. Compare ii. 3, and viii. 102. In the same light, of a grammatical confounding of two modes of expression, the wording is also regarded by Poppo; a view which would suppose a negligence of expression on the part of our author, unprecedented elsewhere in his history, and least of all to be expected or excused in a composition so consummate as the present oration. Hence I am of the same opinion as formerly, that καθιστώμεθα was written, and not καθιστῆτε, from delicacy, and to avoid giving umbrage to the Lacedæmonians, by bringing home to them the deed that was done through them; though the speaker, with no little address, hints at the other sense, by adapting to it the words preceding, ἄλλοις χάριν φέροντες. In short, the term καθιστώμεθα is brought forward by that kind of play upon words, called by the rhetoricians τὸ παρὰ προσδοκίαν, (on which see Demetr. Phal. de fig. Sent.) by which, instead of the word itself that might be expected, is given another that bears more or less of affinity to it,—generally by a sort of paronomasia, but sometimes by any change whatever, not only of the word, but of its mood, tense, and person, that is unexpected. Such changes, or παραπροσδοκίαι, abound in Aristophanes, and are well explained by Mr. Mitchell, whom see in his Introduction to The Knights, sub fin. These are, indeed, in that author, usually little better than, to use Mr. Mitchell's term, 'word-traps, well adapted to enchain the attention and delight an Athenian audience.' But the figure, so to call it, is capable of effecting a much higher purpose, and in the hands of a Demosthenes or an Æschines has been made a powerful engine of true eloquence. Here it is admirably introduced, as quite suitable to the occasion.

CH. LIV. The proem thus concluded, now comes the didactic part of the speech, ch. 54 — 56, comprehending a general justification of their preceding conduct; and that consisting, first, of a defence of their own proceedings, ch. 54, 55; and, secondly, in ch. 56, a crimination of that of their foes and accusers, the Thebans. In ch. 54 there is a defence of their own conduct, by entering into a justification of themselves as to their disputes with the Thebans: in doing which, they go back to events which had long preceded those hostilities; which enable them to bring forward such merits of their own towards Greece at large, as should entitle them to far other treatment than that which they are now experiencing.

1. παρεχόμενοι — πειρασόμεθα] This forms a sort of proem to the defence; the sense being, 'alleging, however, such justifications of our cause, as we are able, both as to our disputes with the Thebans, and our differences with you and the other

πρός τε τὰ Θηβαίων διάφορα καὶ ἐς ὑμᾶς καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους Ἕλληνας, τῶν εὖ δεδρασμένων ὑπόμνησιν ποιησόμεθα, καὶ πείθειν πειρασόμεθα. 2. φαμὲν γὰρ πρὸς τὸ ἐρώτημα τὸ βραχὺ 'εἴ τι Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ τῷδε ἀγαθὸν πεποιήκαμεν,' εἰ μὲν ὡς πολεμίους ἐρωτᾶτε, οὐκ ἀδικεῖσθαι ὑμᾶς μὴ εὖ παθόντας, φίλους δὲ νομίζοντας, αὐτοὺς ἁμαρτάνειν μᾶλλον τοὺς ἡμῖν ἐπιστρατεύσαντας. 3. τὰ δ' ἐν τῇ εἰρήνῃ καὶ πρὸς τὸν Μῆδον ἀγαθοὶ γεγενήμεθα, τὴν μὲν οὐ λύσαντες νῦν πρότεροι, τῷ δὲ ξυνεπιθέμενοί τότε ἐς ἐλευθερίαν τῆς Ἑλλάδος μόνοι Βοιωτῶν. 4. καὶ γὰρ ἠπειρῶταί τε ὄντες ἐναυμαχήσαμεν ἐπ' Ἀρτεμισίῳ, μάχῃ τε τῇ ἐν τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ γῇ γενομένῃ παρεγενόμεθα ὑμῖν τε καὶ Παυσανίᾳ· εἴ τέ τι ἄλλο κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον ἐγένετο ἐπικίνδυνον τοῖς Ἕλλησι, πάντων παρὰ δύναμιν μετέσχομεν. 5. καὶ ὑμῖν, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἰδίᾳ, ὅτεπερ δὴ μέγιστος φόβος περιέστη τὴν Σπάρτην μετὰ τὸν σεισμὸν τῶν ἐς Ἰθώμην Εἱλώτων ἀποστάντων, τὸ τρίτον μέρος

Greeks:' a version which, however free, well represents the meaning, and is required by the difference between the two prepositions πρὸς and εἰς, of which the former implies hostility; the latter, a suspension of friendship. After all, however, it may be doubted, whether the πρὸς has not rather the sense quod attinet ad, 'as to;' for as τὰ Θηβαίων διάφορα must mean 'our disputes with the Thebans,' (thus at iv. 70, we have, τὰ παλαιὰ διάφορα τῶν Ἀθηναίων,) so the sense adversus would here be out of place. Then at ἐς ὑμᾶς repeat τὰ διάφορα· the sense being, 'our differences as to you,'—a milder sense than πρὸς would supply.

τῶν εὖ δεδρασμένων ὑπόμνησιν ποιησόμεθα] Meaning, that 'the course they purpose to take is this: after explaining and justifying themselves as to their disputes with the Thebans and the other Greeks, they will remind the Lacedæmonians of their good deeds to Greece, and endeavour to prevail upon them to spare them.'

2. φαμὲν γὰρ—ἐπιστρατ.] Render, 'we say, then, as to the brief interrogation, "Whether we have done the Lacedæmonians and their allies any good during the war?" that if ye ask us as enemies, ye have suffered no wrong in not having received good at our hands; but if, regarding us as friends, we say that those are the more to blame who warred against us.' At φίλους δὲ νομίζοντας there is, as Arnold observes, again a variation of construction; φαμὲν γὰρ—εἰ μὲν ἐρωτᾶτε—νομίζοντας δὲ φίλους, instead of εἰ δὲ φίλους νομίζετε. We have here an argumentum ex absurdo,—namely, 'what good could they expect from persons either their avowed enemies, or at least not their friends? and as to the blame cast on them as enemies, it might be retorted with more force on the aggressors, the Thebans and Lacedæmonians.' And here the speakers turn the view from the lamented present to the honoured past,—as a period when the Platæans did Greece such good service at its greatest need, as might well entitle them to its merciful consideration; so that former merits might be held to far outweigh their present demerits.

3. ἀγαθοὶ γεγενήμεθα] 'acquitted ourselves well.' Τῷ δὲ ξυνεπιθέμενοι, 'attacking him (i. e. the Mede) conjointly with you.' Compare Acts xxiv. 9, συνεπέθεντο δὲ (scil. αὐτῷ) οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι, where see my note.

5. φόβος περιέστη τὴν Σπάρτην] This use of περιΐστημι is well illustrated by Æschin. p. 73, 17, διὰ τὸν φόβον τὸν περιστάντα αὐτούς. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 535, περιειστήκει τε πάντοθεν Οὐολούσκοις τὸ δεινόν. Polyb. i. 35, 6, τοῦ δεινοῦ παντα-χόθεν αὐτοῖς περιστάντος: and especially Eurip. Sisyph. frag. i. 37, τοίους δὲ περιέστησεν ἀνθρώποις φόβου Στοίχους· where, for φόβου, I conjecture ought to be read φόβων. So in a passage of our author infra vii. 80, we have, φόβοι καὶ δείματα.

Εἱλώτων ἀποστάντων] These are not to be considered as genitives absolute, but here Εἱλ. depends on φόβος preceding; the sense being, 'fear of or from the Helots.' In ἀποστάντων we have a sense ἡμῶν αὐτῶν ἐξεπέμψαμεν ἐς ἐπικουρίαν· ὧν οὐκ εἰκὸς ἀμνημονεῖν.

LV. Καὶ τὰ μὲν παλαιὰ καὶ μέγιστα τοιοῦτοι ἠξιώσαμεν εἶναι· πολέμιοι δὲ ἐγενόμεθα ὕστερον. ὑμεῖς δὲ αἴτιοι· δεομένων γὰρ ξυμμαχίας, ὅτε Θηβαῖοι ἡμᾶς ἐβιάσαντο, ὑμεῖς ἀπεώσασθε, καὶ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους ἐκελεύετε τραπέσθαι, ὡς ἐγγὺς ὄντας, ὑμῶν δὲ μακρὰν ἀποικούντων. 2. ἐν μέντοι τῷ πολέμῳ οὐδὲν ἐκπρεπέστερον ὑπὸ ἡμῶν οὔτε ἐπάθετε, οὔτε ἐμελλήσατε. 3. εἰ δ' ἀποστῆναι Ἀθηναίων οὐκ ἠθελήσαμεν, ὑμῶν κελευσάντων, οὐκ ἠδικοῦμεν· καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι ἐβοήθουν ἡμῖν ἐναντία Θηβαίοις, ὅτε ὑμεῖς ἀπωκνεῖτε· καὶ προδοῦναι αὐτοὺς οὐκέτι ἦν καλόν,—ἄλλως τε καὶ οὓς εὖ παθών τις καὶ αὐτὸς δεόμενος προσηγάγετο ξυμμάχους, καὶ πολιτείας μετέλαβεν,—ἰέναι δὲ ἐς τὰ παραγγελλόμενα εἰκὸς ἦν προθύμως. 4. ἃ δὲ ἑκάτεροι ἐξηγεῖσθε τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, οὐχ οἱ ἑπόμενοι αἴτιοι, εἴ τι μὴ καλῶς ‡ ἑδρᾶτε, ἀλλ' οἱ ἄγοντες ἐπὶ τὰ μὴ ὀρθῶς ἔχοντα.

prægnans for, 'who revolted and fixed themselves at Ithome.' On the thing itself, see my note on i. 101.

CH. LV. They now proceed to show, that they were not the first to break this friendship, but the Lacedæmonians. And they urge that their alliance had been at first formed with Athens by the advice of the Lacedæmonians themselves, to whom they had applied for aid against the aggressions of the Thebans; and that justice and honour alike forbade them subsequently to renounce a connexion self-sought and highly advantageous.

1. At τὰ παλαιὰ καὶ μέγιστα supply κατὰ and πράγματα. Of τοιοῦτοι ἠξιώσαμεν εἶναι the sense is, 'such we thought proper to be,' 'such we approved ourselves,' (compare i. 132, 2.) namely, faithful and attached friends. For δεομένων Poppo and Goeller think ought to have been written δεομένους, comparing another passage of our author, iv. 20, ἡμῶν γὰρ καὶ ὑμῶν ταὐτὰ λεγόντων, τό γε ἄλλο Ἑλληνικὸν ἴστε ὅτι ὑποδεέστερον ὂν τὰ μέγιστα τιμήσει. Here, however, there is rather an ellipsis of ἡμῶν, to be supplied from ἡμᾶς. In short, this idiom comes under that rule laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 563, of the genit. particip. standing alone without any subject, as i. 116, ἐσαγγελθέντων, i. 74, δηλωθέντος, and viii. 6, ἀπαγγείλαντος αὐτοῖς· where supply Φρύνιος from Φρῦνιν preceding. Compare also vii. 68. The sense, then, is, 'when we entreated [you] for alliance.' See supra i. 32, ἐπικουρίας δεησομένους. At μακρὰν ἀποικούντων supply ἡμῶν, 'far off from us.' The word is expressed in Aristot. Pol. ii. ἀποικεῖν πόρρω τῶν διαφθειρόντων.

2. μέντοι] 'however,' i. e. though enemies. Οὐδὲν ἐκπρεπέστερον, 'no very remarkable injury,' 'no such mighty injury.' At οὔτε ἐμελλήσατε supply παθεῖν from ἐπάθετε. See note on vii. 69. From certain verbal coincidences, it is plain that our author had here before him a passage of Herodot. vi. 108.

3. ἐναντία Θηβαίοις] On this adverbial use of ἐναντία, see note at i. 29. Ἄλλως—οὓς stands for ἄλλως τε καὶ ὅτι αὐτούς. The words ἄλλως—μετέλαβεν are hypoparenthetical, and consequently I have placed lines to indicate this. On the phrase ἰέναι ἐς τὰ παραγγελλόμενα, see note on i. 121.

4. ἃ δὲ ἑκάτεροι ἐξηγεῖσθε τοῖς ξυμμάχοις] 'as to what [injunctions] either of you enjoin on your allies [to do].' On the construction here, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 409, 6. Ἐξηγεῖσθαι is a conventional term, commonly applied to the giving orders to subject states. For ἑδρᾶτε, Poppo, on the authority of a Schol. in Bekker's Anecd., would read ἑδρᾶτο. No alteration, however, is necessary, since the same sense is, in effect, contained in the common reading, though less distinctly brought out. What the Platæans mean to do is, to excuse themselves for a line of conduct, wrong though it might be, which they had adopted under the orders of the Athenians. In doing this, they make the proposition common to both parties, by saying ἑκάτεροι ἐξηγεῖσθε, and consequently ἑδρᾶτε is more suitable than ἑδρᾶτο. If, indeed, any alteration were necessary, I should prefer to read, with Reiske, δρᾶται. With τὰ μὴ ὀρθῶς ἔχοντα compare the expression of Eurip. Archel. frag. 32, τὰ οὐκ ὀρθῶς πρασσόμενα.

LVI. Θηβαῖοι δὲ πολλὰ μὲν καὶ ἄλλα ἡμᾶς ἠδίκησαν, τὸ δὲ τελευταῖον αὐτοὶ ξύνιστε· δι' ἅπερ καὶ τάδε πάσχομεν. 2. πόλιν γὰρ αὐτοὺς τὴν ἡμετέραν καταλαμβάνοντας ἐν σπονδαῖς, καὶ προσέτι ἱερομηνίᾳ, ὀρθῶς ἐτιμωρησάμεθα, κατὰ τὸν πᾶσι νόμον καθεστῶτα, τὸν ἐπιόντα πολέμιον ὅσιον εἶναι ἀμύνεσθαι· καὶ νῦν οὐκ ἂν εἰκότως

Ch. LVI. The speakers now resort to recrimination, showing, that as to their disputes with the Thebans, they can turn the accusation on them. They themselves had not broken the peace, but the Thebans, who had treacherously surprised them, and seized their city, while, as they thought, secure in the faith of treaties.

1. τὸ δὲ τελευταῖον—πάσχομεν] Meaning, 'but this last [injury at their hands], through which, too, [as a necessary consequence,] we are suffering these ills, ye yourselves know [what it was].' That such must be the sense, is plain from the context: and in this (which is that assigned in the several Translations of Acacius, Hobbes, and myself) Poppo, though formerly adopting another view, now at length coincides, as does also Goell. The only scruple they make is at the plural in δι' ἅπερ, for which Poppo would either read δι' ὅπερ, or suppose such a kind of license involved as that supra ch. 38, fin. in ἄλλο τι ἢ ἐν οἷς ζῶμεν· though that, on account of the added word τί, he thinks less unusual. Yet of these two modes of removing the difficulty, the former only cuts the knot, and the latter can scarcely be said to untie it. Hence I would rather suppose the plural ἅπερ to refer to the plural in ἄλλα and τὸ δὲ τελευταῖον, the sense, when more fully developed, being, 'Now the Thebans have done us many other injuries, but especially this last; through which injuries we are suffering these things.' Thus the plural in ἅπερ was adopted by way of correspondence with τάδε: and it cannot be denied that the preceding injuries, as well as the last, had been the cause of what the Platæans were then suffering; for the preceding injuries had embittered their minds against the Thebans, and then when the last was added, they could no longer refrain from avenging themselves by however atrocious an act. The preceding injuries had tended as much as the last to bring about this catastrophe. A long series of injuries had at length provoked an inoffensive and long-suffering people beyond all endurance, and the last injury was only the immediate, but not the real, cause of the outbreak. I am not aware that this mode of removing a formidable difficulty is open to any serious objection: as to the brevity of expression in τὸ δὲ τελευταῖον αὐτοὶ ξύνιστε, for τὸ δὲ τελευταῖον τόδε ὃ αὐτοὶ ξύνιστε, is such as no attentive reader of Thucydides can stumble at as unprecedented. In short, I doubt not that in writing these words a thought passed through the mind of our author, such at that at Prov. xvii. 14, 'The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water,' &c.

2. ἱερομηνίᾳ] On the exact sense of this word commentators are not agreed; and for want of more complete knowledge of the subject, the force of the term is involved in no little obscurity. It were out of place here to enter into a full discussion of the term in its various uses, primary and secondary. Suffice it to say, that as the word properly signifies 'a holy time of the month,' so it might denote any festal period of the month whatever, consisting of one day, or of more, or, as it sometimes does, of the whole month: to which purpose are the words of the Schol. on Pind. Nem. iii. 2, cited by Goeller, ἱερομηνίαι λέγονται αἱ ἐν τῷ μηνὶ ἱεραὶ ἡμέραι οἷαι δήποτε θεοῖς ἀνειμέναι. Now the sense here may be, what Haack, Poppo, and others suppose, simply a feast-day; the word being derived, they think, not from μὴν and ἱερ., but from μήνη, luna, dies. But, besides that the above etymology is questionable, considering that the capture took place early in the morning of the νουμηνία, so I am of opinion that ἱερομ. here denotes, κατ' ἐξοχήν, the holy-day of the month, meaning the first day of the month, which, we know, was always regarded as sacred to Apollo. Thus (I would observe) the Etym. Mag. defines ἱερομηνία by ἡ ἐν τῷ μηνὶ ἱερὰ ἡμέρα, and the Greek and Latin Glossaries have ἱερομηνία, kalendæ. And so, again, Hemsterh. on Hesych. t. ii. p. 26, quotes the Schol. on Nazianz. Stelit. ii. p. 106, as saying that the Greeks applied the term ἱερομηνία properly to νουμηνία, the new-moon holyday, but catachrestice to any other holyday. The earlier writers, however, almost invariably observe the distinction.

τὸν ἐπιόντα πολέμιον ὅσιον εἶναι ἀμύνεσθαι] 'that it is just and right to repel an invading foe.' This (probably an adage) is just before called ὁ πᾶσι νόμος καθεστὼς, δι' αὐτοὺς βλαπτοίμεθα. 3. εἰ γὰρ τῷ αὐτίκα χρησίμῳ ὑμῶν τε καὶ ἐκείνων πολεμίῳ τὸ δίκαιον λήψεσθε, τοῦ μὲν ὀρθοῦ φανεῖσθε οὐκ ἀληθεῖς κριταὶ ὄντες, τὸ δὲ ξυμφέρον μᾶλλον θεραπεύοντες. 4. καίτοι εἰ νῦν ὑμῖν ὠφέλιμοι δοκοῦσιν εἶναι, πολὺ καὶ ἡμεῖς καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι Ἕλληνες μᾶλλον τότε, ὅτε ἐν μείζονι κινδύνῳ ἦτε. νῦν μὲν γὰρ ἑτέροις ὑμεῖς ἐπέρχεσθε δεινοί· ἐν ἐκείνῳ δὲ τῷ καιρῷ, ὅτε πᾶσι δουλείαν ἐπέφερεν ὁ βάρβαρος, οἵδε μετ' αὐτοῦ ἦσαν. 5. καὶ δίκαιον ἡμῶν τῆς νῦν ἁμαρτίας, εἰ ἄρα ἡμάρτηται, ἀντιθεῖναι τὴν meaning, 'a rule of action established among all nations.' The same statement, expressed far more strongly, occurs in vii. 68.

καὶ νῦν—βλαπτοίμεθα] 'and [accordingly] we should not justly be ill-used on account of them,' meaning, from our quarrel with them.

3. εἰ γὰρ—θεραπεύοντες] This is meant to further develop the sense obscurely implied in οὐκ εἰκότως, as to the injustice of the treatment they are experiencing. Render, 'For if you take (i. e. measure, interpret) justice by your own immediate advantage and their enmity, (meaning, the enmity they bear us,) you will appear to be no true judges of right and justice, but rather seem studious of your own interest.' There is here, as Poppo observes, a transposition of τε, as in another passage i. 49, and elsewhere. At πολεμίῳ must be supplied τῷ from the preceding; τῷ πολεμ. thus standing, like τῷ χρησίμῳ, in the place of a noun. Of the words εἰ—τὸ δίκαιον λήψεσθε, the sense is usually explained, 'si judicium faciatis,' 'si decernatis;' which might also imply the carrying it into execution: but proof is wanting of this signification; and hence I am now inclined to think that we have here a peculiar idiom,—peculiar in the same way as λαμβάνειν πρόσωπον in Hellenistic Greek, but differing in sense. And as λαμβάνειν, like our verb to take, means to take into the mind, (so in Herodot. iii. 41, we have, νόῳ λαμβάνειν,) i. e. to comprehend, understand, so it may mean, like accipere in Latin, (as in the phrase in bonam partem accipere,) 'to put a meaning upon,' to interpret: and thus it is used in Plut. Cicer. 13, τοῦτο πρὸς ἀτιμίαν ὁ δῆμος ἔλαβε, 'interpreted this into a disgrace.' Thus here the sense is, 'if ye understand or interpret justice according to your immediate advantage;' a sense quite suitable, since, as judges, they were expected to interpret law and justice as well as to administer it; but they were called upon to interpret it impartially, not according to considerations of gain or loss to themselves, or as actuated by friendship or enmity. Accordingly they are said not to be true judges, but represented as τὸ ξυμφέρον θεραπεύοντες, ('studying their own advantage,') rather than θεραπεύοντες τὸ δίκαιον, which latter phrase occurs also at vi. 79. Θεραπεύειν here signifies inservire, 'to subserve.' So Xen. Cyr. v. 5, 13, τὴν ἐμὴν ἡδονὴν θεραπεύω. Demosth. 662, 8, θερ. ἐλπίδα πλεονεξίας.

4. There is now a transition to another line of argument: the mention of the τὸ χρήσιμον causes the speakers to anticipate the objection to taking the just course, that 'it would be contrary to their interest to alienate friends so useful to them as the Thebans:' to which the answer is, 'And yet if they seem serviceable to you now, much more were we then, when you were in greater danger [than you now are].' The next words, νῦν μὲν — ἦσαν, are meant to set in a stronger light their former situation, by contrasting it with their present. Here, however, some obscurity exists, arising from extreme brevity; the sense meant to be expressed being, 'For at that time ye were in the greatest danger of subjugation, when the barbarian was bringing the yoke of slavery on all; whereas now ye are the formidable assailants of others;' intimating that they are then doing what the barbarians purposed to do. In order, however, to avoid offence, the contrast is made only indirect, and especially as thereby a circumstance, which would otherwise have been thrown in by-the-by, is made more prominent, and a circumstance of some moment, as tending to lower their enemies the Thebans, and exalt them,—'at that time those [fellows] were on his side;' in other words, 'when you were in danger, they were ranged against you.'

5. The speakers proceed to put in a plea for mercy and forbearance, on the ground that their former merits and services should be held as a sufficient set-off against any later offence that might be imputed: on which sense of ἀντιθεῖναι see note on ii. 85, and compare Dio Cass.

τότε προθυμίαν· καὶ μείζω τε πρὸς ἐλάσσω εὑρήσετε, καὶ ἐν καιροῖς οἷς σπάνιον ἦν τῶν Ἑλλήνων τινὰ ἀρετὴν τῇ Ξέρξου δυνάμει ἀντιτάξασθαι,—ἐπῃνοῦντό τε μᾶλλον οἱ μὴ τὰ ξύμφορα, πρὸς τὴν ἔφοδον, αὐτοῖς ἀσφαλείᾳ πράσσοντες, ἐθέλοντες δὲ τολμᾶν μετὰ κινδύνων τὰ βέλτιστα. 6. ὧν ἡμεῖς γενόμενοι, καὶ τιμηθέντες ἐς τὰ πρῶτα, νῦν ἐπὶ τοῖς αὐτοῖς δέδιμεν μὴ διαφθαρῶμεν, Ἀθηναίους ἑλόμενοι δικαίως μᾶλλον ἢ ὑμᾶς κερδαλέως. 7. καίτοι χρὴ ταὐτὰ περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ὁμοίως φαίνεσθαι γιγνώσκοντας, καὶ τὸ ξυμφέρον μὴ 249, 21, τῆς γὰρ φιλίας τὴν ἀντ. ἀντιθεὶς, and 617, 86—9, where there is an evident imitation of the present passage. The speakers then proceed to set these former merits in the strongest light, by balancing μείζω προθυμίαν πρὸς ἐλάσσω ἁμαρτίαν, i. e. as more than sufficient to outweigh their present demerits, and as being evinced at a period when such was rarely found.

σπάνιον ἦν τῶν Ἑλλήνων — δυνάμει ἀντιτάξασθαι] 'rare was it to oppose valour to the mighty force of Xerxes:' an expression, this, of poetic boldness. The next words are meant to place their own merits in the strongest point of view, and at the same time intimate, by an indirect contrast, the demerits of their foes. These, it is added, 'were evinced at a time when those rather claimed commendation who were not contriving [solely] what would most promote their own interest or security, but were disposed to dare, amidst dangers, the noblest deeds.' To advert to the phraseology, one cannot but notice the antithetical cast which prevails throughout; the terms, as Goeller and Poppo remark, being severally opposed one to another—τὰ ξύμφορα to τὰ βέλτιστα, and ἀσφαλείᾳ (which stands for ἐν ἀσφ. or δι' ἀσφαλείας, i. 17) to μετὰ κινδύνων. By πρὸς τὴν ἔφοδον understand, 'at the invasion [of the Persians].' For vulg. αὐτοῖς, I would read, with Bekker, (in his second edition,) αὐτοῖς· the construction being, πράσσοντες, ἐν ἀσφαλείᾳ, τὰ ξύμφορα αὐτοῖς (where πράσσ. bears the sense transigere, 'to mind,' 'attend to,' as i. 141, τὰ οἰκεῖα πράσσουσι, and Synes. ap. Steph. Thes. 7920, πράσσειν τὰ ἑαυτοῦ). At μᾶλλον οἱ μὴ there is an evident allusion to the Thebans, who certainly did so; and in ἀσφαλείᾳ a bitter sarcasm is conveyed; they being, it is meant, rather willing to sleep in a whole skin than ἀντιτάξασθαι ἀρετὴν τῇ Ξέρξου δυνάμει, or τολμᾶν τὰ βέλτιστα, in which latter expression note the somewhat rare use of τολμᾶν for σὺν τόλμῃ πράττειν, as in Xen. Hier. v. 1, and often in Plut. Such, too, is the use of the Latin audeo and our dare.

6. ὧν ἡμεῖς γενόμενοι] The speakers now appropriate to themselves a share of that general meed of praise to the deserving. Render, 'of which number although we were, and honoured with the highest rewards, (meaning, that they were most eminently distinguished by merit,) [yet] now we fear that we should, for the very same conduct, come to destruction.' That they had high honours conferred on them, is certain; and that they declined yet higher, is testified by Plutarch, Aristid. 20, 21, besides being highly probable in itself, since true merit is usually accompanied with modesty. Of ἐπὶ τοῖς αὐτοῖς the sense is best expressed in the words of Haack, 'propter eandem agendi rationem, quâ honestum utili præferebamus,' Angl. 'on the same principles of action.' The words following are explanatory of the preceding, meaning, 'by having chosen the side of the Athenians out of regard to justice, rather than yours, for our interest.'

7. καίτοι χρὴ ταὐτὰ περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ὁμοίως φαίνεσθαι γιγνώσκοντας] The speakers now proceed to make a remark, which contains no other than the gist of the whole question, in an appeal to the equitable feelings of the Spartans, as serving to show them that the Platæans were, so far from being deserving of blame, now as entitled to praise as before, as having acted on the same principles. Render, 'And yet it is proper to be found holding alike the same sentiments concerning the same actions,' i. e. forming the same estimate of the same conduct, however circumstances not affecting the principles may vary; in other words, 'the same magnanimous preference of honour to interest, which you admired when it was exercised for you, should now call forth your respect, when it has operated against you.' Such is certainly the meaning intended; though, to avoid giving offence, couched under a gnome generalis. Φαίνεσθαι

ἄλλο τι νομίσαι, ἢ τῶν ξυμμάχων τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ὅταν ἀεὶ βέβαιον τὴν χάριν τῆς ἀρετῆς † ἔχωσι καὶ τὸ παραυτίκα που ἡμῖν ὠφέλιμον καθιστῆται. LVII. Προσκέψασθέ τε ὅτι νῦν μὲν παράδειγμα τοῖς πολλοῖς τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἀνδραγαθίας νομίζεσθε· εἰ δὲ περὶ ἡμῶν

here signifies, 'to be apparent;' though when joined, as here, with a participle, (as supra ii. 11, φαίνεσθαι χρωμένους, and Xen. Mem. iii. 3, 9, φαίνομαι εἰδώς,) it may be expressed by the adverb, clearly, manifestly. So we say, 'it is clearly our duty to do so or so.' In the words following, καὶ τὸ ξυμφέρον, &c., no little difficulty and obscurity exist, and that partly from extreme brevity, and partly from the meaning being, owing to the above cause, (the endeavour to avoid giving offence,) rather hinted at than directly expressed; and no wonder, since the words contain that which, bluntly and openly brought forward, would reflect so little credit on the Spartans, that it could not but have given umbrage to them. To investigate the exact scope of the words,—as the preceding clause contained an appeal to the better feelings of the Spartans, (their equity and candour,) so this contains one addressed to the coarser and more ordinary motives of human action, namely, considerations of interest and advantage,—but then an interest on the long run, not that immediate one, by grasping at which men sacrifice their true and lasting interest. These utilitarians, the Spartans, were, as usual, thinking of the utile, to the neglect of the honestum: that the Platæan orators well knew, and accordingly saw that all they could do would be to turn that feeling into a better channel, by suggesting that if interest be made all in all, there is the more reason why it should be such an interest as is true and lasting. The general sense, then, is, I am persuaded, what Dr. Arnold expresses freely as follows: 'that whereas the Lacedæmonians were sacrificing every thing to their present interest, they ought to admit other considerations; and while they took care of their present advantage, they should not neglect those eternal principles of honour and gratitude which were in the long run the true interest of every body.' The question, however, is, What is the exact sense of the words? Arnold makes it to be as follows: 'And we should hold it as our real interest to retain an ever enduring sense of the services of brave and faithful allies, while we take care of whatever our immediate advantage may seem to call for.' This, however, is surely too paraphrastic a rendering, and, as Poppo observes, would require the Greek to stand thus: καὶ τὸ ξυμφέρον μὴ ἄλλο τι νομίσαι, ἢ τῶν ξυμμάχων τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἀεὶ βέβαιον τὴν χάριν τῆς ἀρετῆς ἔχειν, ὅτ' ἂν τὸ παρ. που ἡμῖν ὠφέλιμον καθιστῆται. I agree with Poppo, that there are only two ways by which we can meet the difficulty,—namely, first, with Heilm., to read ἔχουσι, dat. plur. partic., for verb ἔχωσι, in the following sense: 'Oportet utilitatem nihil aliud esse existimare, quam si a nobis firmam gratiam virtutis bonis sociis habentibus etiam præsentia ex usu nostro constituantur,' i. e. quam si præsentia ita ex usu nostro constituantur, ut simul bonis sociis gratiam habeamus. If this be not admitted, we must suppose, with Portus and Dukas, that there is here a negligence of phrase and confusion of persons, and withal the omission of some particle after the second καί. The sense will then stand thus: 'quam quum sociis, qui strenuè se gesserunt, semper certam fortitudinis gratiam rependimus, et simul [ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ] præsentia negotia ex usu nostro constituimus.' No good reason, however, can be given why ἔχωμεν should not have been written; and, upon the whole, this involves a harshness greater than the former. No necessity is there to supply any preposition (as ἡμᾶς or ὑμᾶς) at χρὴ, and the ἡμῖν suffices for the whole of the second clause. As to ὑμῖν, for ἡμῖν, found in many of the best MSS., and received into the text by Bekker in his last edition, it cannot, on any mode of interpretation, be defended, since it would at once destroy the delicacy by which here a general sentiment stands for a particular one. To read ὑμῖν would confound the general sentiment with its particular application, in the present case a κοίνωσις.

CH. LVII. There is in this chapter another appeal to the motives of interest, and that by the consideration 'how much they must suffer in their credit by abandoning to the enmity of the Thebans ancient and faithful allies, who once showed a zeal, even beyond their power, in their cause and the cause of Greece.'

1. προσκέψασθέ τε] 'mind, too, that,' lit. 'consider beforehand,' namely, before it be too late. Τοῖς πολλοῖς τῶν Ἑλ-

γνώσεσθε μὴ τὰ εἰκότα, (οὐ γὰρ ἀφανῆ κρινεῖτε τὴν δίκην τήνδε, ἐπαινούμενοι δὲ περὶ οὐδ' ἡμῶν μεμπτῶν,) ὁρᾶτε ὅπως μὴ οὐκ ἀποδέξωνται ἀνδρῶν ἀγαθῶν πέρι, αὐτοὺς ἀμείνους ὄντας, ἀπρεπές τι ἐπιγνῶναι, οὐδὲ πρὸς ἱεροῖς τοῖς κοινοῖς σκῦλα ἀπὸ ἡμῶν τῶν εὐεργετῶν τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἀνατεθῆναι. 2. δεινὸν δὲ δόξει εἶναι Πλάταιαν Λακεδαιμονίους πορθῆσαι· καὶ τοὺς μὲν πατέρας ἀναγράψαι ἐς τὸν τρίποδα τὸν ἐν Δελφοῖς δι' ἀρετὴν τὴν πόλιν, ὑμᾶς δὲ καὶ ἐκ παντὸς τοῦ Ἑλληνικοῦ πανοικησίᾳ διὰ Θηβαίους ἐξαλεῖψαι. 3. ἐς τοῦτο γὰρ δὴ ξυμφορᾶς προκεχωρήκαμεν, οἵτινες Μήδων τε κρατησάντων

λήνων, 'by most of the Greeks,' meaning, the Lacedæmonian confederacy. This compliment (paid to conciliate favour) was, however cautiously guarded in its expressions, in effect little merited, since it does not appear that the Lacedæmonians ever cared for justice and probity, when they crossed their own interest: and so it is truly said of them, v. 105, ἐπιφανέστατα ὧν ἴσμεν — τὰ ξυμφέροντα δίκαια. In μὴ τὰ εἰκότα we have a cautious expression for τὰ ἀπεικότα. In ἐπαινούμενοι—μεμπτῶν there is a brief form of expression for ὡς ἐπαιν. δὲ ὑμεῖς περὶ ἡμῶν οὐδὲ μεμπτῶν, where οὐδὲ stands for οὐ, or rather may be considered as a stronger expression, though properly only suitable to nominatives, thus: ὑμεῖς μέν ἐστε ἐπαινούμενοι, οὐδὲ δὲ ἡμεῖς μεμπτ. At αὐτοὺς ἀμείνους ὄντας there is another captatio benevolentiæ. At οὐδὲ repeat ἀποδέξωνται, neve improbent. By ἱεροῖς τοῖς κοινοῖς is meant, Dukas thinks, the temple at Delphi. See v. 18.

2. δεινὸν δὲ—ἐξαλεῖψαι] Render, 'atrocious will it seem for Lacedæmonians to destroy Platæa: yea, that, on the one hand, your fathers should have inscribed the city, for its valour, on the tripod at Delphi; while, on the other, you should have expunged it, root and branch, from the general family of Greece.' In ἐξαλεῖψαι there is a metaphor taken from effacing characters traced on a writing-board or parchment; the proper sense being, to wipe out characters traced on a waxen tablet. So Xen. Hist. ii. 3, 20, Θηραμένην ἐξαλείψω ἐκ τοῦ καταλόγου. Aristoph. Pax, 1181, τοὺς μὲν ἐγγράφοντες ἡμῶν, τοὺς δ' ἐξαλείφοντες: a similar antithesis, this, to the present; ἐξαλεῖψαι here corresponding to ἀναγράψαι just before. So Revel. iii. 5, ἐξαλείφειν τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ ἐκ τῆς βίβλου τῆς ζωῆς. Eurip. Pel. frag. 4, ὃν γ' ἐξαλείφει ῥᾷον, ἢ γράφει, Θεός. See also Æschyl. Choëph. 500. Imitated from the present is a similar elegance in Aristid. ii. 857, ἐξαλεῖψαι Λακεδαιμονίους ἐκ τῆς Ἑλλάδος. And so we say, 'to expunge a nation from the map of Europe.'

Nothing, indeed, is more remarkable than the extremely antithetic character of this sentence, in which the chief point turns on τοὺς πατέρας—ὑμᾶς, ἀναγράψαι, and ἐξαλεῖψαι: though there is another also, turning on Λακεδαιμονίους and Θηβαίους, where, however, the principal point to be attended to is not so much Λακεδαιμονίους and Θηβαίους as the sense which would commonly be supposed there contained; q. d. 'what an enormity this, that Lacedæmonians, the perpetual assertors of the liberty of Greece, should sacrifice that city whose glory it was to have supported that liberty, at its greatest need, in order to gratify Thebans, whose eternal disgrace it would be to have betrayed Greece at its utmost need!' Arnold here very properly notices the emphasis which exists; referring, for examples, to i. 69. iv. 85, 86. But when he confines this idiom to names of nations without the art., and yet explains Λακεδαιμονίους to mean, 'you who are Lacedæmonians,' he says what would rather involve the contrary: but, in truth, the art. were here out of place, since there is here an ellipsis of ὄντας. The term πανοικησία is adapted, not to the metaphor in ἐξαλ., but to the thing signified in τοῦ Ἑλληνικοῦ, scil. ἔθνους, the nation at large being considered as all one family. And so in Ephes. iii. 15, we have, πᾶσα πατριὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς.

3. ἐς τοῦτο—ἠσσώμεθα] From argument the speakers now make a transition to pathos, appealing to the feelings of the auditors by a representation of the wrongs suffered by persons who, having been well nigh ruined in the cause of Grecian freedom, are now brought to the very verge of destruction, and are held as base in comparison with the Thebans, the betrayers of its liberties. Ἐς τοῦτο ξυμφορᾶς προκεχωρήκαμεν, 'for to this pitch of misfortune have we advanced.' See note at i. 49, and iv. 69. For vulg. ἀπολλύμεθα, I have, with Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, edited ἀπωλλ., from the Cod. Cass. Aug. 2 man., and Clarend., because a past time is here absolutely required by the antithesis, and consequently the supposition of a present tense in a past sense cannot here be admitted. The sense intended is not, what Arnold and Bernhardy assign, 'who were going to be ruined, had the Medes been victorious;' for, as Poppo observes, this omission of ἂν cannot be supposed there, where a great ambiguity would thus be occasioned; and moreover this sense is forbidden by history itself. Again, the sense assigned by Portus, Hobbes, Smith, and Heilm., 'qui periissemus, si Medi vicissent,' would require a double ἄν, and is by no means suitable; for surely any other city would have been destroyed, had the Medes conquered. Hence best is it to render, with Poppo, 'qui, quum Medi vicissent, periimus,' or, with Dukas and Goeller, 'qui, quum Medi terrâ nostrâ potiti essent, periimus.' Yet not sufficiently authorised is this addition of τῆς χώρας. All that the term κρατησάντων can signify is, 'when they were victorious,' 'had the upper-hand,' as in Hom. Il. xxi. 315, ὃς δὴ νῦν κρατέει, and often elsewhere. Whether, indeed, periimus be a right rendering, may be questioned. That sense would rather require ἀπωλόμεθα, which is, indeed, the word used in a certain saying of Themist. recorded in Plut. Them. 29, ἀπωλόμεθ' ἂν, εἰ μὴ ἀπωλόμεθα. But surely such an hyperbole, however suitable to a witty bon mot, would here be any thing but in place. Moreover, sufficiently good is the sense yielded by the imperf., 'we were being ruined,' i. e. were on the point of being ruined: a sense also justified by facts; for it is well known, that after their city had been destroyed, and they had been compelled to take refuge in Peloponnesus, the Platæans were on the brink of ruin, from which they were alone rescued by the event of the battle of Platæa. If this be not admitted as a satisfactory statement, we may render ἀπωλλ. 'were ruined,' taking the term as a popular hyperbole to denote great distress, as in Exod. x. 7, ἢ εἰδέναι βούλει ὅτι ἀπόλωλεν Αἴγυπτος;

Of ἐν ὑμῖν—Θηβαίων ἠσσώμεθα the sense is, as Poppo expresses it, 'vobis judicibus (ἐν ὑμῖν δικασταῖς, ch. 53) a Thebanis superamur,' i. e. Thebanis viliores sumus, postponimur.

δύο ἀγῶνας τοὺς μεγίστους ὑπέστημεν] 'we have undergone two trials the greatest:' by ἀγ. being meant, such difficulties and distresses as are in the highest degree trying to bear, such as starvation, on the one hand, or to be tried for one's life, on the other. I have here followed Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, in ejecting δίκῃ, which, according to the common reading, has place after θανάτου. It is true that the examples of the phrase κρίνεσθαι θανάτου, adduced by Dukas and Stephens, are all from the later writers; and hence we might suppose θανάτου δίκῃ κρίνεσθαι to be the complete, for this the elliptical, phrase, and accordingly the more likely to have been used by the early, as θανάτου κρίν. is by the later writers. Yet since I find κρίνεσθαι θανάτου occurring in Xen. Cyr. i. 2, 14, and employed by Demosth., I think there is sufficient reason to suppose its use to have existed in the time of our author. Certain it is that internal evidence (which, in a case like this, overbalances external testimony) is quite in favour of θανάτου κρίνεσθαι, the word δίκῃ being more likely to have been foisted in from the Scholiasts, than omitted by the copyists.

4. καὶ περιεώσμεθα — ἀτιμώρητοι] A most touching appeal to the feelings. Render, 'Yea, we are spurned by all,—we Platæans who evinced a zeal beyond our strength towards the Greeks,—deserted [are we] and unaided.' The term περιωθεῖσθαι signifies literally 'to be shoved and pushed about,' as mean insignificant persons who stand in the way of others: and such is its use in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 437, and Appian, ii. 65 & 68. Most frequently, however, as in Demosth. 570, 17, it bears the figurative sense 'to be spurned, or contemned,' to suffer repulse, as persons deserving of no attention, and whose requests it is not worth while to grant. So Aristot. Pol. v. 6, γίνονται αἱ στάσεις ἐκ τοῦ περιωθεῖσθαι ἑτέρους ὑφ' ἑτέρων κατὰ γάμους ἢ δίκας. In this sense, too, the word occurs infra ch. 67, μὴ περιωσθῶμεν ἐν ὑμῖν, i. e. 'suffer repulse apud vos, at your hands.' Here it might ἀπωλλύμεθα, καὶ νῦν ἐν ὑμῖν, τοῖς πρὶν φιλτάτοις, Θηβαίων ἠσσώμεθα· καὶ δύο ἀγῶνας τοὺς μεγίστους ὑπέστημεν, τότε μέν, τὴν πόλιν εἰ μὴ παρέδομεν, λιμῷ διαφθαρῆναι, νῦν δέ, θανάτου κρίνεσθαι. 4. καὶ περιεώσμεθα ἐκ πάντων Πλαταιῆς οἱ παρὰ δύναμιν πρόθυμοι

ἐς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, ἔρημοι καὶ ἀτιμώρητοι· καὶ οὔτε τῶν τότε ξυμμάχων ὠφελεῖ οὐδείς, ὑμεῖς τε, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἡ μόνη ἐλπίς, ἐδείμεν μὴ οὐ βέβαιοι ἦτε. LVIII. Καίτοι ἀξιοῦμέν γε, καὶ θεῶν ἕνεκα τῶν ξυμμαχικῶν ποτε γενομένων, καὶ τῆς ἀρετῆς τῆς ἐς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, † καμφθῆναι ὑμᾶς, καὶ μεταγνῶναι εἴ τι ὑπὸ Θηβαίων ἐπείσθητε· τήν τε δωρεὰν ἀνταπαιτῆσαι αὐτούς, μὴ κτείνειν οὓς μὴ mean 'to be spurned or contemned,' if it stood by itself; but as taken with ἔρημοι and ἀτιμώρητοι, with which it is closely connected in construction, it must bear the sense, 'we suffer repulse at the hands of all,' which may involve, by implication, the sense 'spreti et auxilii fraudati,' (and so, it may be observed, Budæus explains in the passage at ch. 67 by 'ne repulsam feramus, a vobis spreti et auxilii fraudati,') but this it is not necessary to suppose, since the idea in question is, in effect, expressed by the words ἔρημοι καὶ ἀτιμώρητοι, 'deserted and unaided,' or rather 'unavenged,' inulti. And so Steph. in Thes. explains by 'nemine injuriam nobis factam ulciscente,' which, as being the stronger sense, is therefore to be preferred.

ὠφελεῖ] opem fert, scil. ἡμῖν. So at v. 23, we have ὠφ. Ἀθηναίοις. Most affecting are the words which follow, ὑμεῖς τε, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι—ἦτε, and that from the increased agitation they discover. Render, 'And ye Lacedæmonians, our only hope—we fear that ye should prove not to be relied on;' similar to what is said infra v. 43, οὐ βεβαίους φάσκων εἶναι. Here we see the opposite passions of hope and despair most feelingly depicted, as each contending for the mastery, and striving which should prevail.

Ch. LVIII. 1, 2. In this passage the pathos increases; the speakers now having recourse to earnest entreaties, urged by all those considerations which have any power over the human mind, as religion, humanity, and a remembrance of the vicissitudes of human affairs.

1. καίτοι] for καὶ μήν, atqui. Render, 'But yet we, at least, entreat, for the sake of the gods who were once invoked by us in common alliance, and of the valour we evinced for the Greeks,—that you would be dissuaded and change your purpose as to any thing you may have been persuaded to by the Thebans.' With καμφθῆναι here compare Æschyl. Prom. 1031, Γνάμψει γὰρ οὐδὲν τῶνδέ μ', ὥστε καὶ φράσαι, where the Schol. explains by ἐπικλάσει, 'prevail upon.' And so infra ch. 59, we have, ἐπικλασθῆναι τῇ γνώμῃ. Very properly have Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller here recalled καμφθ. instead of γναμφ., which had been brought into the text by Wasse and Dukas on very insufficient authority; for it is not clear that any one MS. has γναμφ. Yet three good MSS. have κναμφ., which was probably the original spelling of the word, afterwards softened to γναμφ., and then to καμφθ. Γνάμπτω is a word not unfrequent in the early poets, chiefly the heroic ones; though it is occasionally also found in the prose writers, (yet only of a later date than our author,) and as the three MSS. above mentioned have κναμφ., it is difficult to imagine what could have induced the scribes to substitute for a common an uncommon form; and especially taking into consideration the partiality of our author for the old and harsh forms of words, (some of which have been altered into the ordinary ones,) not improbable is it that he here wrote κναμφθῆναι. I have here followed Bekk. and Goell. in removing the comma after μεταγνῶναι, because εἴ τι here, as often, stands for ὅτι. Of this syntax with the accus. examples are found supra ch. 42, μεταγνῶναι τὰ δεδογμένα, infra vi. 17, μ. τὸν πλοῦν, and Eurip. Med. 64, μεταγνὼν καὶ τὰ πρόσθ' εἰρημένα, and Iph. Aul. 1425, μετ. τάδε.

In the next words, τήν τε δωρεὰν—πρέπει, there is a refined turn of expression, which has been but imperfectly comprehended by interpreters. Render, 'And to ask back of them [in return for benefits received] this favour, not to destroy (i. e. that you should not put to death) those whom it would be unbecoming in you [to destroy].' At ἀνταπαιτῆσαι Haack very properly supplies ὑμᾶς from the preceding. The word is one somewhat rare; though ἀνταποδίδωμι is frequent. Of δωρεὰ in this sense, to denote favour, examples occur in Demosth. c. Mid. ἐν χάριτος μέρει καὶ δωρεᾶς παρεῖχον, and 1381, ἵνα σώζηται ἡ δωρεὰ τοῖς ἐπιγιγνομένοις. And so Hom. Il. iii. 54, δῶρ' Ἀφροδίτης. Pind. Ol. i. 120, δῶρα Κύπριδος. Æschyl. P. V. 346, αὐχῶ τήνδε δωρεὰν ἐμοὶ Δώσειν Δί', ὥστε τῶνδέ σ' ἐκλῦσαι πόνων. Moreover, Hesych. explains δωρεὰς by χάριτας, and Suid. δωρεὰ by δόσις ἀναπόδοτος, where, for ἀναπόδοτος, read ἀνταπ. Indeed by the term δωρεὰ it is usually implied, that the favour is one in return for some benefit conferred: and thus Plato, p. 414, defines δωρεὰ by ἀλλαγὴ χάριτος, what in Aristot. Eth. iv. 2, is called ἀντιδωρεά: the opposite to which is, ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι, 'the gift by grace, or gift of grace, gratuitous gift,' spoken of by St. Paul, Rom. v. 14, where, for ἐν χάριτι, the idiom of classical Greek would have required χάριτος, as in Plato, p. 844, διττὰς ἡμῖν δωρεὰς ἡ Θεὸς ἔχει (for παρέχει) χάριτος αὖτη. Such is the use of our word boon in a passage of Shakspeare: 'Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look; A smaller boon I cannot beg.' Commentators are not agreed whether at κτείνειν we should understand αὐτούς, or ὑμᾶς. The former mode is adopted by Portus, Dukas, Goeller, and Arnold: the latter view, first propounded by myself in my smaller edition, has been since adopted by Poppo; and thus the sense that would seem required by the ὑμῖν following is, 'that you should not be compelled to kill those whom it may be unbecoming in you to destroy:' a sense, this, sufficiently good, but perhaps not weighty enough for the occasion. Moreover, as κομίσασθαι, just after, must be referred to the Thebans, so it would be harsh to suppose any other subject to the verb κτείνειν. The sense will thus be, 'that they kill not (be the means of killing) those whom it would be unbecoming in you to destroy.'

σώφρονά τε ἀντὶ αἰσχρᾶς κομίσασθαι χάριν] 'and to receive (i. e. be content to receive) an honourable, not a base, return of kindness.' Of this rare use of σώφρων as applied to things, two examples are found, in Aristoph. Av. 1433, ἔργα σώφρονα, and Plato, p. 728, σωφρονέστατα, scil. ἔργα. Thus it is equivalent to Lat. honestum, as opposed to turpe, (so in Nepos, Præf. we have, 'honesta atque turpia,') in which case there is an implied notion of what is just and equitable, sometimes expressed, as in Cic. pro Rosc. 2, 'si vobis æqua et honesta postulatio;' and in Plato, p. 936, χρείαν μὴ σώφρονα. Finally, in Demosth. and Dionys. Hal. we have the phrase δικαίαν χάριν ἀποδιδόναι, and that the ideas of honestum and δίκαιον are common, is certain. So in a passage of St. Paul, Phil. iv. 8, we have, ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ, ὅσα σεμνὰ (honesta), ὅσα δίκαια.

The next words, καὶ μὴ ἡδονὴν δόντας—ἀντιλαβεῖν, have no connexion with those immediately preceding, but depend on ἀξιοῦμεν ὑμᾶς, the sense being, 'we beg of you not, by giving pleasure to others, yourselves to receive disgrace in return.' The same construction is found ch. 44, οὐκ ἀξιῶ ὑμᾶς—ἀπώσασθαι. By κακίαν is to be understood vitiosam famam; this latter idea being implied in ἀντιλαβεῖν, in which there is a forensic allusion, well traced by Schoemann, who renders, 'malitiæ famam vicissim accipere hominum judicio:' though I would observe, that the term κακία has here rather the general sense vice, or criminality, as opposed to virtue; a sense of frequent occurrence in Aristotle and other of the philosophical writers. Thus what the Platæans earnestly entreat of the Lacedæmonians is, that they would not be made tools in the hands of the Thebans; so that, while gratifying the desires of others, they should not themselves suffer the evils at the price at which they must be purchased.

The next words, βραχὺ γὰρ—ἀφανίσαι, are not to be referred to those immediately preceding, but the γὰρ has reference to what went before, and is meant to suggest why they should relent, and not be hurried into that which, though it might be a temporary gratification to the Thebans and themselves, would entail a lasting misery in the disgrace of such a deed; q. d. 'For to destroy our bodies, is a thing soon done; but to make away with the disgrace of the deed, will be a work of labour and time.'

The words following, οὐκ ἐχθροὺς γὰρ—πολεμήσαντας, are suspended on the word δύσκλειαν: q. d. 'Ay, disgrace,—for you will, unjustly, take vengeance on those who are not enemies, but well-wishers; and who were at war with you only by constraint.'

2. Now commences what Poppo calls the μέρος παραινετικὸν καὶ ἐντρεπτικὸν of the speech, extending to the end of the second section of ch. 59. The μέρος παραινετικὸν extends to the end of this chapter; but the first portion is hortatory only by implication: in short, it is chiefly occupied in urging these strong claims on the ὑμῖν πρέπει, σώφρονά τε ἀντὶ αἰσχρᾶς κομίσασθαι χάριν· καὶ μὴ, ἡδονὴν δόντας ἄλλοις, κακίαν αὐτοὺς ἀντιλαβεῖν· βραχὺ γὰρ τὸ τὰ ἡμέτερα σώματα διαφθεῖραι, ἐπίπονον δὲ τὴν δύσκλειαν αὐτοῦ ἀφανίσαι· οὐκ ἐχθροὺς γὰρ ἡμᾶς εἰκότως τιμωρήσεσθε, ἀλλ' εὔνους, κατ' ἀνάγκην πολεμήσαντας. 2. ὥστε καὶ τῶν σωμάτων ἄδειαν ποιοῦντες

ὅσια ἂν δικάζοιτε καὶ προνοοῦντες, ὅτι ἑκόντας τε ἐλάβετε καὶ χεῖρας προϊσχομένους, (ὁ δὲ νόμος τοῖς Ἕλλησι μὴ κτείνειν τούτους,) ἔτι δὲ καὶ εὐεργέτας γεγενημένους διὰ παντός. 3. ἀποβλέψατε γὰρ ἐς πατέρων τῶν ὑμετέρων θήκας, οὓς, ἀποθανόντας ὑπὸ Μήδων καὶ ταφέντας ἐν τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ, ἐτιμῶμεν κατὰ ἔτος ἕκαστον δημοσίᾳ ἐσθήμασί τε καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις νομίμοις, ὅσα τε ἡ γῆ ἡμῶν ἀνεδίδου clemency of their foes, inasmuch as they had been enemies by constraint, and had heretofore all along deserved well of them, that they had been bound in friendship by the closest ties: in touching on which last point, there is conveyed a strong appeal to the feelings of the Lacedæmonians, on the score of their ancestors; a topic which, to the ancients, from their warm attachment to the memory of their forefathers, was usually very effective.

ὥστε καὶ—δικάζοιτε] This has reference to the expression used in the preceding section, κατ' ἀνάγκην, the sense being, 'so that you would alone judge rightly and justly, by granting a freedom from all bodily harm.' In the phrase ἄδειαν ποιεῖν, 'to grant security from punishment,' we have a forensic form, answering to ἄδειαν παρέχειν, δοῦναι, &c., which are found in the orators, and sometimes in the historians. See Boeckh, Staatsh. ii. p. 174. Thus the term is conjoined with ἀμνηστίᾳ in Hdian. v. 4, 18: and at vi. 60, 3, we have the expression ἄδειαν ποιήσασθαι. In the phrase following, ὅσια δικάζειν, (with which compare ὅσια ποιεῖν supra i. 71, 7.) the term ὅσιος bears the united sense of jus and fas.

καὶ προνοοῦντες] This is rendered, 'especially considering:' but, besides that καὶ can scarcely here bear the sense præsertim, no good authority exists for προνοεῖν in the sense cogitare, considerare. As to the doubt here expressed by Poppo, 'nescio an, suppleto ἡμῶν, rectius convertamus, et nobis prospicientes propterea quod,'—that is quite ungrounded; the words καὶ προνοοῦντες being meant to further unfold and complete the idea in ἄδειαν ποιοῦντες. Render, 'providing for our own safety [against the attacks of the Thebans];' where ἡμῶν may very well be supplied, from its being implied in τῶν σωμάτων, which stands for ἡμῶν. This sense of προνοέω, as used with a gen. of person, is of frequent occurrence in Xen., and is sometimes found in other of the best writers. The ὅτι after προνοοῦντες bears the sense because. I have pointed accordingly. Of ἑκόντας the sense is, 'voluntarily surrendering ourselves.' The words following, καὶ χεῖρας προϊσχομένους, 'holding out our hands,' serve to complete the idea, and are highly graphic. Of this phrase another example occurs at ch. 66, and χεῖρας προέχεσθαι is found in Dionys. Hal. i. 58, and προΐσχ. frequently in Dio Cass. So also in Cæs. de Bello Gall. vii. 50, we have, 'dextris exsertis.' The hands thus held out were of course without arms: and so in Livy, xxviii. 3, we have, 'dextras nudas ostentantes.' That the custom of the Greeks was to spare an enemy who surrendered himself, and by asking quarter became a suppliant, is well known.

3. What is said in this section is brought forward suspended on a γὰρ, serving to supply a reason why they should προνοεῖν αὐτῶν, i. e. act with especial reference to them as εὐεργέτας, § 2. That they had been such, was attested by the very tombs of their forefathers, who had fallen and were buried in the territory of the Platæans, their companions in arms, and coadjutors in conquering the liberties of Greece: an argument, this, strengthened by adducing the fact, that, as a proof of the close friendship of the two nations, the tombs of their Spartan ancestors were regularly honoured with all due honour. Hence it is argued, that consistency requires from Spartans a very different course to that which they are now adopting: in handling which argument, the speakers make the appeal almost graphic; and the tombs are in a manner represented as present, by the simple words ἀποβλέψατε γὰρ ἐς πατέρων τῶν ὑμετέρων θήκας· q. d. 'You will not judge rightly, if you do not shield us from danger and secure our personal safety; for cast your eyes [there] upon the sepulchres of,' &c.: with which highly pathetic appeal compare a similar one in Isocr. Platæic. p. 534. From Strabo, p. 598, it appears that the tombs in question still remained in his time.

ἐτιμῶμεν κατὰ ἔτος—νομίμοις] Of the whole mode of this annual parentatio, a full description is given in Plut. Aristid. 21, and Justin, ix. 7, 11. See also Wachsm. Ant. Gr. ii. 2, p. 126. With respect to the ἐσθήμασι, neither Plutarch makes any mention of them, but only of the ἐναγίσματα, (libations of wine, milk, &c.) nor is there any distinct mention of it in any of the several authorities adduced by the commentators. It is not clear what use the ointments were put to. It is hardly to be supposed that they were burnt; that being a custom rather in use at the funeral, and not at the annual commemoration. Arnold supposes 'the clothing in question to have been offered in the same superstitious feeling which prompted offerings of meat and drink; as though the dead were cold in their disembodied state, and still required those reliefs to the necessities of human nature which they had needed when alive.' Yet thus we must suppose the clothing to have been burnt; for, as Arnold shows from Herodot. v. 92, 'the clothing so offered was not thought to be serviceable to the departed unless it were burnt.' No proof, however, exists that they were offered as if serviceable to the dead. It is sufficient to suppose that they were, together with the meats and drinks, offered, like the στεφανώματα, honoris causâ, as a mark of respect; similarly as in the case of Electra offering up her zone at her father's grave, Soph. El. 455.

ὡραῖα, πάντων ἀπαρχὰς ἐπιφέροντες, εὔνοι μὲν ἐκ φιλίας χώρας, ξύμμαχοι δὲ ὁμαίχμοις ποτὲ γενομένοις· ὧν ὑμεῖς τοὐναντίον ἂν δράσαιτε, μὴ ὀρθῶς γνόντες. 4. σκέψασθε δέ· Παυσανίας μὲν γὰρ ἔθαπτεν αὐτοὺς νομίζων ἐν γῇ τε φιλίᾳ τιθέναι καὶ παρ' ἀνδράσι τοιούτοις· ὑμεῖς δὲ, εἰ κτενεῖτε ἡμᾶς καὶ χώραν τὴν Πλαταϊδα Θηβαΐδα ποιήσετε, τί ἄλλο ἢ ἐν πολεμίᾳ τε καὶ παρὰ τοῖς αὐθένταις πατέρας τοὺς ὑμετέρους καὶ ξυγγενεῖς, ἀτίμους γερῶν ὧν νῦν ἴσχουσι, καταλείψετε; πρὸς δὲ, καὶ γῆν ἐν ᾗ ἠλευθερώθησαν οἱ Ἕλληνες δουλώσετε; ἱερά τε θεῶν, οἷς εὐξάμενοι Μήδων ἐκράτησαν, ἐρημοῦτε; καὶ θυσίας τὰς πατρίους τῶν ‡ ἐσαμένων καὶ κτισάντων

Among the νόμιμα was probably that mentioned by Plutarch, of sacrificing a bull, and inviting the dead to the feast.

ὅσα τε ἡ γῆ—ἐπιφέροντες] By the ὡραῖα understand, 'the fruit that came to maturity' ἐν τῇ ὥρᾳ τοῦ ἔτους: on which Dukas refers to Græv. on Hesiod, Op. 31, and Meibom. on Diog. Laërt. 1152. Of the thing itself, illustrations exist in Stob. Serm. p. 290, 48, χρὴ δὲ καὶ τῶν τελευτώντων ἕκαστον τιμᾶν τῇ τῶν κατ' ἔτος ὡραίων ἐπιφορᾷ. Ælian, V. H. i. 31, τυρὸν προσφέρουσα, καὶ τρωκτὰ ὡραῖα, καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀπαρχὰς τῶν ὡραίων. Liban. Or. 508, A, οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἄλλοι τοῖς ἀποθανοῦσιν ἀπαρχὰς τῶν ὡραίων ἐπιφέρουσιν.

εὔνοι—γενομένοις] Meaning, 'as well-wishers [offering first-fruits] from a friendly country, and allies to those who were our companions in arms.' Μὴ ὀρθῶς γνόντες, 'by not making a right decision.' So δικάζοιτε, a little before.

4. What is said in this section is meant to show the inconsistency in every way which would result from the conduct they deprecate,—they would undo what their fathers had done. With the passage Poppo compares Isocr. Paneg. § 60, 61. Ἔθαπτεν αὐτοὺς, 'buried them [here].' By τοιούτοις understand φιλίοις. Τοῖς αὐθένταις, 'their murderers;' for the Thebans were on the side of the Persians. In this sense the word occurs not unfrequently in the Tragedians. On the idiom in ἀτίμους γερῶν see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 339. They would be deprived of these honorary observances, because there would be none left to make the offerings; for the Thebans could not participate in that feeling.

θυσίας τὰς πατρίους] Meaning, as Goell. points out, 'sacra quæ instituerant patres eorum, qui loquuntur, et Spartanorum, ad quos loquuntur. Quæ si cum terra Platæensium in Thebanos conferent, primis conditionibus eripient.' For vulg. ἐσσαμένων, retained by Bekker, Poppo and Goeller edit εἰσαμ., while Haack and Arnold prefer ἐσαμ. The common reading cannot be defended, as being quite a poetical form. As to εἰσαμ., it is Ionic, and for it there is only the authority of one MS.; while ἐσαμ. has that of three of the best, and is preferable from its pure Attic prose form, which comes from the original future ἔσω, whence the participle ἔσας, used several times in Homer; whence ἐσάμην and ἐσάμενος. Finally, it remains to determine what the term is to be referred to. The translators and Abresch refer it to ἱερά, while Gottleb. and Poppo refer it also to θυσίας, but wrongly. Ἕω is never used in such a figurative sense. Strange is it that the commentators should ἀφαιρήσεσθε; LIX. Οὐ πρὸς τῆς ὑμετέρας δόξης, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, τάδε, οὔτε ἐς τὰ κοινὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων νόμιμα καὶ ἐς τοὺς προγόνους ἁμαρτάνειν, οὔτε ἡμᾶς τοὺς εὐεργέτας, ἀλλοτρίας ἕνεκα ἔχθρας, μὴ αὐτοὺς ἀδικηθέντας, διαφθεῖραι· φείσασθαι δὲ καὶ ἐπικλασθῆναι τῇ γνώμῃ, οἵκτῳ σώφρονι λαβόντας, μὴ ὧν πεισόμεθα μόνον δεινότητα κατανοοῦντας, ἀλλ' οἷοί τε ἂν ὄντες πάθοιμεν, καὶ ὡς ἀστάθμητον not have seen that the two participles ἐσαμένων and κτισάντων are meant to be applied to the two nouns just before occurring, and to each in the same order,—ἐσαμ. to ἱερὰ, (accordingly the term is mostly used of erecting a building; as, for instance, in Herodot. i. 66, ἱερὸν εἰσάμενος. Plut. Them. p. 22. Ap. Rhod. i. 967.) and κτισάντων to θυσίας: for κτίζειν sometimes, though ἕω never, bears the figurative sense instituere, as said of establishing any observance. So Pind. Pyth. v. 119, κτίσῃ ἑορτὴν, 'establish a festivity,' and Ol. vii. 75, ἑκτίσατο ἀγῶνα. Phalar. Epist. κτίζειν τέχνην. Cic. condere jura. And so Hesych. explains κτίσαι by ἄρξασθαι. The same sense, withdrawing the figure, is expressed in Plato, 642, θυσίας τελετῶς συμμίκτους κατεστήσαντο: while at p. 113 we have the figurative sense conveyed, though by the use of another word; ἱερὰ θυσίας τε αὐτοῖς κατασκευάζοντες: where the verb is to be taken both in the proper and the metaphorical sense,—namely, 'founding temples and establishing sacrifices.' And so Xen. Anab. v. 3, 9, θυσίαν ἐποίει τῷ θεῷ. Of the term πατρίους the sense is well expressed by our word ancestral.

Ch. LIX. In sections 1 and 2 of this chapter the matter is first ἐντρεπτικὸν, and then ἐπικλαστικὸν and ἐπισκηπτικόν.

1. οὐ πρὸς τῆς ὑμετέρας, &c.] Meaning, that they ought to be ashamed to think of such a course as that which they now meditate. Render, 'Not for your glory, Lacedæmonians, are these things.' This phrase πρός τινος εἶναι, like the Lat. esse pro aliquo, signifies 'to be for the advantage of any one:' and examples of it may be seen in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 590. One may remark here the meiosis, which serves to soften the censure conveyed, as in a passage of St. Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 17, οὐκ ἐπαινῶ.

ἐς τὰ κοινὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων — ἁμαρτάνειν] 'to violate the common institutions of Greece.' This use of ἁμαρτ. with an accus. of person, is not unfrequent; while as used with an accus. of thing, it is so rare, that I know of no other example. Here, as ἁμαρτάνειν is used with an accus. both of thing and of person, it must be accommodated in sense to each. By ἀλλοτρίας ἔχθρας understand, 'the enmity borne by the Thebans to the Platæans.' At φείσασθαι δὲ repeat, from the preceding, πρὸς δὲ τῆς ὑμετέρας δόξης ἐστὶ or ἔσται, 'that will be honourable to you.' According to the maxim of antiquity so well expressed in Virg. Æn. vi. 854, 'Parcere subjectis, et debellare superbos.'

In οἵκτῳ σώφρονι λαβόντας, (for so I have thought proper to edit, with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, from almost all the best MSS., confirmed by internal evidence in the peculiarity of the expression, instead of vulg. οἶκτον σώφρονα λαβ.) we have, as Poppo and Goeller are agreed, a brief form of expression; the full construction being, φείσασθαι οἴκτῳ λαβόντας, scil. αὐτὸν [τὸν οἶκτον], 'to spare [us] in pity, having taken it upon you.' Goeller compares another passage infra v. 15, ἐπιθυμίᾳ τῶν ἀνδρῶν κομίσασθαι, scil. αὐτούς. And Arnold compares Soph. Œd. Col. 475. Of σώφρονι the sense is here, 'regulated by the dictates of a sober mind,' alive to the frailty of human nature, as opposed to a mind actuated by the impulses of passion either way. So in Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 23, we have, μετὰ σώφρονος λογισμοῦ.

κατανοοῦντας] 'bearing in mind. Highly significant are the words which follow, οἷοί τε ἂν ὄντες πάθοιμεν, 'and who [answering to quales in Latin] we are who would suffer it.' Compare supra ii. 41, ὑφ' οἵων κακοπαθεῖ. Herodot. i. 31, οἵων τέκνων ἐκύρησε, in which case οἷος stands for ὅτι τοιοῦτος. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 480, obs. 3.

καὶ ὡς ἀστάθμητον τὸ τῆς ξυμφορᾶς] 'bearing in mind, too, the uncertainty of fortune.' So iv. 62, we have, τὸ ἀστάθ. τοῦ μέλλοντος. The term ἀστάθμητος signifies properly, 'what has no standing or foundation;' also, as here, metaph. what is never at a stay, to use our old English phrase: a term, this, highly applicable to fortune, which may well be said never to continue at one stay. Thus Phocyl. 25, ὁ βίος τροχός· ἄστατος ὅλβος. And so says Terence, 'Nihil diu in eodem τὸ τῆς ξυμφορᾶς, ᾧτινί ποτ' ἂν καὶ ἀναξίῳ ξυμπέσοι. 2. ἡμεῖς τε,—ὡς πρέπον ἡμῖν καὶ ὡς ἡ χρεία προάγει,—αἰτούμεθα ὑμᾶς, θεοὺς τοὺς ὁμοβωμίους καὶ κοινοὺς τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἐπιβοώμενοι, statu manet.' Arnold thinks that τὸ τῆς ξυμφορᾶς here is not, as the commentators regard it, equiv. to ἡ ξυμφορὰ, but means 'the nature of misfortune,' or every thing about it. But it rather signifies literally, 'the matter of fortune,' what constitutes fortune, i. e. fortune considered as a subject whereon to think or speak. Goeller and Poppo suppose here a sort of grammatical attraction, for καὶ ὡς ἀστάθμητον, ᾧ τινί ποτ' ἂν καὶ ἀναξίῳ ξυμπέσοι. This, however, is a view too much tending to pare down the sense; it being the evident purpose of the speakers here to advert to the case as well of the Lacedæmonians as of themselves. They mean to warn them of the instability of fortune, which might desert them all at once (as it afterwards did) from the very Thebans whom they were now seeking to bind to them by a base compliance with their wishes. The term ξυμφορὰ is one of middle signification, importing simply quod fors fert, as at i. 140, and consequently may be synonymous with τύχη. The words following, ᾧτινι—ξυμπέσοι, were added by way of further developing the sense of the foregoing, and also applying the maxim, (where ἀστάθ. must be repeated, as also the term ξυμφορὰ, though as understood in the sense misfortune,) q. d. 'Since fortune is so unstable a thing, it must be uncertain on whom it (meaning ill fortune) may at any time fall or happen, however unworthy [to suffer it], however undeserving of it.' By the words καὶ ἀναξίῳ it is meant to be intimated, that they themselves ought not to be thought worse of because they are in misfortune; and a warning is conveyed to the Lacedæmonians not to trust blindly to fortune, since no virtue, or merit, not even as great as theirs, will secure men from misfortune. Hence it is abundantly clear, that the reading ἀναξίῳ, instead of vulg. ἀναξίως, received by Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, is alone the true one: and strongly confirmatory of it is an evident imitation of the present passage found in Hdian. v. 1, 11, τὰ τῆς τύχης δῶρα καὶ ἀναξίοις περιπίπτει, where though the writer is speaking of the converse to what is here expressed,—namely, of persons coming into possession of the gifts of fortune, who are undeserving,—yet here it is evident he took the term ξυμφορὰ as standing for τύχη: as does also, I find, Dukas. Finally, the above reading is not a little supported by a passage of Menand. ap. Stob. Frag. xvi. p. 153, Gesn. αὐτὴ γὰρ (scil. τύχη) ἄλλῳ, τυχὸν, ἀναξίῳ τινὶ, παρελομένη σου πάντα προσθήσει πάλιν.

2. The speakers now resort to entreaty and adjuration. Ἡμεῖς τε, &c. 'We, then, as is becoming or fit for us to do, and as necessity compels us,—we, loudly invoking the gods who are worshipped at the same altar and are common to the Greeks, require of you that we may prevail as to these things; (i. e. to obtain our request,) and bringing forward [as topics of argument] the oaths which you sware, we adjure you to be not unmindful of them: we are suppliants at your fathers' tombs, and we invoke the aid of the departed, not to be under the Thebans, nor that those who were the dearest [to them] should be delivered up to those who were the most hated by them.' Such is, I apprehend, the general sense; but here the construction and phraseology demand no little attention, and each in their order. With respect to the former, it is best laid down by Goell. (nearly as I had long ago done in my Transl.) as follows: 'αἰτούμεθα ὑμᾶς πεῖσαι τάδε—αἰτούμεθα ὑμᾶς μὴ ἀμνημονεῖν—ἱκέται γιγνόμεθα καὶ ἐπικαλούμεθα μὴ γενέσθαι, μηδὲ—παραδοθῆναι. Cum priori αἰτούμεθα ὑμᾶς juncta est per participium sententia ἐπιβοώμενοι θεοὺς τοὺς ὁμοβωμίους καὶ κοινοὺς τῶν Ἑλλήνων, cum altero αἰτούμεθα ὑμᾶς item per participium juncta hæc sunt: προφερόμενοι ὅρκους, οὓς οἱ πατέρες ὑμῶν ὤμοσαν. Verba autem ἱκέται γιγνόμεθα ὑμῶν τῶν πατρῴων τάφων καὶ ἐπικαλούμεθα τοὺς κεκμηῶτας jungenda sunt cum μὴ γενέσθαι ὑπὸ Θηβαίοις et sequentibus.' But to advert to the phraseology in detail, προάγει signifies literally, 'draws us on;' in which sense the word occurs also at ch. 45, and in Appian, ii. 412, εἰς ἣν ἡ λύπη με προάγει. Plut. 22, a, and 666, c. Xen. Hist. ii. 3, 17. Mem. i. 4, 1. By θεοὶ ὁμοβώμιοι are meant, those deities who were (as was not unusual among the Greeks, and also the Persians) worshipped together at one and the same altar; and that either, as Arnold observes, 'from some congeniality in their nature,' or rather from a relationship subsisting between them; in which case they were called ὁμοβώμιοι or κοινοβώμιοι, or, if only two, συμβώμιοι.

In the words καὶ κοινοὺς τῶν Ἑλλήνων, is added another circumstance, namely, πεῖσαι τάδε,—προφερόμενοι ὅρκους οὓς οἱ πατέρες ὑμῶν ὤμοσαν, μὴ ἀμνημονεῖν,—ἱκέται γιγνόμεθα ὑμῶν τῶν πατρῴων τάφων,—καὶ ἐπικαλούμεθα τοὺς κεκμηῶτας,—μὴ γενέσθαι ὑπὸ Θηβαίοις, μηδὲ τοῖς ἐχθίστοις φίλτατοι ὄντες παραδοθῆναι· ἡμέρας τε ἀναμιμνήσκομεν ἐκείνης, ᾗ τὰ λαμπρότατα μετ' αὐτῶν πράξαντες, νῦν ἐν τῇδε τὰ δεινότατα κινδυνεύομεν παθεῖν. 3. ὅπερ δὲ ἀναγκαῖόν τε καὶ χαλε-

that the gods in question were not only, from some affinity, worshipped at one and the same altar, but were worshipped in common by the Greeks, and at whose altar all Greece might jointly sacrifice, as the Olympian Jupiter and the Pythian Apollo. Of ἐπιβοώμενοι the sense is, not acclamantes, (which would rather require ἐπιβοῶντες, as infra iv. 108.) but magnâ voce invocantes ad auxilium, where the force of the middle voice is to be noted in this word: and so it was understood by Zonaras, who in his Lexicon explains it by ἐπικαλούμενοι. Such, too, is the sense it not unfrequently bears in Dio Cass. Πεῖσαι τάδε stands for ὥστε πεῖσαι ἡμᾶς κατὰ τάδε: and προφερόμενοι signifies allegantes, 'bringing forward;' in which sense the term also occurs infra vii. 69, and, in the act., at v. 29. At μὴ ἀμνημονεῖν supply αὐτῶν, 'that you would not be unmindful of those oaths.' Of ἱκέται ὑμῶν τῶν πατρῴων τάφων the full meaning is, 'your suppliants at your ancestors' tombs,' entreating you as you respect them, &c. Μὴ γενέσθαι [ἡμᾶς] ὑπὸ Θηβαίοις, 'that we may not be under the Thebans.' The appeal is further strengthened by the inserted words, καὶ ἐπικαλούμεθα τοὺς κεκμηῶτας, 'nay, we invoke the departed;' a certain mysterious power being ascribed to the deceased, such as that of the ἐπιχώριοι ἡρῶες. The next words, μηδὲ—παραδοθῆναι, have reference to the inserted words above mentioned, and serve to add another touch to the picture. Then is thrown in a further circumstance by which to prevail on them,—namely, the memory of that glorious day when their mutual ancestors fought for and conquered the liberties of Greece. After which, for the sake of pathos, a contrast is drawn between that period, so glorious to their ancestors, and this, so dreadful to themselves.

For μετ' αὐτῶν the best MSS. have μεθ' αὐτῶν or μεθ' ἑαυτῶν, understood as standing for μετ' ἀλλήλων: but Poppo has shown that such cannot here be admitted, as leading to an absurdity. Goeller thinks that the words are either to be cancelled, or altered to κατ' αὐτῶν, scil. Θηβαίων: of which two methods of removing the difficulty the latter is preferable;—but wholly opposed to this is the evidence of facts, since the Thebans were not in the field of Platæa. After all, there is nothing reasonably to stumble at in the words. The αὐτῶν must, of course, be referred to πατέρες ὑμῶν which went before: nor is there any thing justly to object to on the ground that the persons now in peril were not the same as those who fought at the battle of Platæa; for this, though true, would be here nothing to the purpose; by we being meant, we Platæans, the Platæan people. Had our author written ἐπράξαμεν, no one would have stumbled: but what he has written amounts to the same thing; since by the use of the participle πράξαντες two clauses are thus blended into one: a harshness, indeed, but quite Thucydidean. The sense, fully developed, would stand thus: 'We remind you, too, of that day on which, in conjunction with them, we achieved the most glorious exploits; whereas now, on this, we are in danger of suffering the worst inflictions.' Poppo notices the omission of the article before ἡμέρας, but does not seem aware of the reason why it was omitted; which is, that a sentence cannot with propriety commence with an article. It rarely commences with a substantive in any of the oblique cases, and only when, as here, the thing represented is meant to be made as prominent as possible.

3. Here commences the ἐπίλογοι, or conclusion of the oration, in which we have first a strong protestation against the deed which the Spartans meditate, as contrary to every principle of justice, and a demand of right, that they should not be placed in a worse condition by their not having held out to the last; but if they were to gain nothing by the capitulation, to be restored to the state in which they were when they made it. They conclude by a last earnest appeal to the justice of the Spartans, by the most earnest entreaty and adjuration.

In the phraseology here, the first point worthy of attention is the commencement of the sentence with a relative, which is πώτατον τοῖς ὧδε ἔχουσι, λόγου τελευτᾶν, διότι καὶ τοῦ βίου ὁ κίνδυνος ἐγγὺς μετ' αὐτοῦ, παυόμενοι λέγομεν ἤδη ὅτι οὐ Θηβαίοις παρέδομεν τὴν πόλιν, (εἰλόμεθα γὰρ ἂν πρό γε τούτου τῷ αἰσχίστῳ ὀλέθρῳ, λιμῷ, τελευτῆσαι,) ὑμῖν δὲ πιστεύσαντες προσήλθομεν. 4. καὶ δίκαιον, εἰ μὴ πείθομεν, ἐς τὰ αὐτὰ καταστήσαντας, τὸν ξυντυχόντα κίνδυνον ἐᾶσαι ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ἑλέσθαι. 5. ἐπισκήπτομέν τε ἅμα μὴ, Πλαταιῆς ὄντες, οἱ προθυμότατοι περὶ τοὺς Ἕλληνας γενόμενοι, Θηβαίοις, τοῖς ἡμῖν ἐχθίστοις, ἐκ τῶν ὑμετέρων χειρῶν καὶ τῆς ὑμετέρας πίστεως, ἱκέται ὄντες, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, παρα-

then, further on, explained by the exegetical apposition λόγου τελευτᾶν, with which the commentators compare infra iv. 125, ὅπερ φιλεῖ μεγάλα στρατόπεδα, and another similar passage infra vii. 20. Here, then, we have an example of the idiom treated on by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 476: and the words as they stand are equivalent to παυόμενοι δὲ, ὅπερ ἀναγκαῖόν τε καὶ χαλεπώτατον τοῖς ὧδε ἔχουσι, τὸ λόγου τελευτᾶν δηλονότι, λέγομεν: where the verb τελευτᾶν, as Poppo remarks, carries after it the genit., as having the sense of λήγειν and παύεσθαι, (which regularly take the genit.) of which he adduces examples from Xen., Dionys., and Plut., and refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 355.

In ἐγγὺς μετ' αὐτοῦ we have a combination of two forms of expression, ἐγγὺς αὐτοῦ and μετ' αὐτοῦ. Αἰσχίστῳ ὀλέθρῳ Hobbes, strangely enough, renders 'base perdition;' and the version of Smith, miserable, is far from well representing the sense. For although Homer and other authors apply the epithet οἰκτιστος to death by famine, yet that does not forbid the idea that other epithets may be applied according to the view taken of such a death. All violent kinds of death may be miserable, or wretched and pitiable; but to be pined to death was, according to the ideas of the ancients, a death, as compared with that of dying with arms in one's hands, especially ignominious, as suggesting the idea of a snared brute beast: to which purpose compare the words of Ammianus Marc. xvii. 9, 'Nunc, proh nefas! cum ultimis hostium fatis instamus, fame, ignavissimo mortis genere, tabescentes.' Now answering to ignavissimus there is evidently αἰσχ. here, of which term so employed I know no other example except one in Polyæn. i. 38, 1, περιτειχισθέντες αἴσχιστα λιμῷ ἁλώσοιντο. Something, indeed, very nearly approaching to it occurs in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1238, τῷ κακίστῳ τῶν μόρων ἀναλωθείη, λιμῷ, 'the most ignoble of deaths.' Both the above passages were doubtless written with a view to this of our author.

5. ἐπισκήπτομέν τε ἅμα—ἡμᾶς διολέσαι] In this concluding portion, (forming the most eloquent and pathetic part of the whole speech,) highly significant is the term ἐπισκήπτομεν, which comprehends the two senses of enjoining and entreating: and so supra ii. 73, 4, and Herodot. iii. 65. vii. 158, there is a similar blending of injunction and adjuration, as in Herodot. iii. 73, there is a blending of injunction and imprecation or commination.

Not a little calculated to impart force and energy, is the constant succession here observable of antithetical clauses, which Heilm. disposes in more regular order as follows: μὴ, 1. Πλαταιῆς ὄντες, οἱ προθυμότατοι περὶ τοὺς Ἕλληνας γενόμενοι. 2. Θηβαίοις. 3. τοῖς ἡμῖν ἐχθίστοις. 4. ἐκ τῶν ὑμετέρων χειρῶν καὶ τῆς ὑμετέρας πίστεως. 5. ἱκέται ὄντες, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, παραδοθῆναι, γενέσθαι δὲ σωτῆρας ἡμῶν, καὶ μὴ, τοὺς ἄλλους Ἕλληνας ἐλευθεροῦντας, ἡμᾶς διολέσαι· adding with not more truth than taste, 'ubi insolens collocatio vocativi ὦ Λακεδ., omissio accusativi ὑμᾶς in γενέσθαι δὲ σωτῆρας ἡμῶν, quanquam subjectum diversum, quod proximè antecedit, tale additamentum postulabat, geminatum ἐκ τῶν ὑμετέρων χειρῶν καὶ τῆς ὑμετέρας πίστεως, angorem et consilii inopiam dicentis eximie depingunt.'

The words ἐκ τῆς ὑμετέρας πίστεως are by Mueller and Levêsque (as they were formerly by myself) joined with the words following, ἱκέται ὄντες; by which the sense will be, 'suppliants relying on your faith.' Yet this would suppose an unprecedented, not to say anomalous, expression, and that quite unnecessarily, — since, construing these words with the preceding ones, with which they seem naturally connected, the sense thus arising is not only apt, but highly forcible and touching,—namely, 'We entreat not to be delivered over out of your hands, and out of your faith and trust.' In ἐκ τῆς πίστεως there is an δοθῆναι, γενέσθαι δὲ σωτῆρας ἡμῶν, καὶ μὴ τοὺς ἄλλους Ἕλληνας ἐλευθεροῦντας, ἡμᾶς διολέσαι."

LX. Τοιαῦτα μὲν οἱ Πλαταιῆς εἶπον· οἱ δὲ Θηβαῖοι, δείσαντες πρὸς τὸν λόγον αὐτῶν μὴ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τι ἐνδῶσι, παρελθόντες ἔφασαν καὶ αὐτοὶ βούλεσθαι εἰπεῖν, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἐκείνοις παρὰ γνώμην τὴν αὐτῶν μακρότερος λόγος ἐδόθη τῆς πρὸς τὸ ἐρώτημα ἀποκρίσεως. ὡς δ' ἐκέλευσαν, ἔλεγον τοιάδε.

LXI. "Τοὺς μὲν λόγους οὐκ ἂν ἠτησάμεθα εἰπεῖν, εἰ καὶ αὐτοὶ βραχέως τὸ ἐρωτηθὲν ἀπεκρίναντο, καὶ μὴ ἐπὶ ἡμᾶς τραπόμενοι κατηγορίαν ἐποιήσαντο, καὶ περὶ αὐτῶν ἔξω τῶν προκειμένων,—καὶ ἅμα οὐδὲ ἠτιαμένων,—πολλὴν τὴν ἀπολογίαν, καὶ ἔπαινον ὧν οὐδεὶς ἐμέμψατο· νῦν δὲ, πρὸς μὲν τὰ ἀντειπεῖν δεῖ, τῶν δὲ ἔλεγχον ποιήallusion to what was just before said, ὑμῖν πιστεύσαντες προσήλθομεν. In διολέσαι the δια is intensive, as at iii. 41, the sense being, 'to utterly destroy.'

Ch. LX. μακρότερος — ἀποκρίσεως] 'longior oratio quam quæ [simpliciter et paucis] responderet ad interrogationem.' (Bauer.) Πρὸς τὸν λόγον, just before, must be construed with δείσαντες. Render, 'being apprehensive at their speech.'

Ch. LXI. This speech of the Thebans is marked by that bitter hostility they had long borne to the Platæans, but which had now increased to exasperation the most rancorous, by the violence lately done to their friends and relations, and the difficulties and sufferings they had themselves undergone to attain what they thought their just revenge. The reasonings are, as might be expected, one-sided and fallacious, and the representations either false or exaggerated; little decency being thought necessary to be employed to those who were so utterly helpless and destitute as the Platæans. As to the speech itself, viewed as a composition, it is as fine a specimen of the invective, as the preceding one is of pathetic eloquence. The first section of this chapter is occupied with a brief proem, containing, 1. the reason why they had asked permission to speak on the present occasion,—namely, that they might refute the misrepresentations of the prisoners, both as to their own merits and their adversaries' (the Thebans) demerits. 2. A defence of themselves as to their long-standing enmity against the Platæans, of which they open out the origin.

1. καὶ αὐτοὶ] 'they too [in like manner],' i. e. acquiescing in what was the wish of the confederates, that there should be no speechifying. On the construction in τὸ ἐρωτηθὲν ἀπεκρίναντο see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 409, 6. In ἐπὶ ἡμᾶς τραπόμενοι κατηγορίαν ἐποιήσαντο there is not, what the Schol. and other commentators have supposed, an antiptosis, for καθ' ἡμῶν, but a condensed form of expression comprehending two in one, for ἐπὶ ἡμᾶς τραπ., καθ' ἡμῶν κατηγορίαν ἐποιήσαντο. Ἐπὶ ἡμᾶς τραπόμενοι may be paralleled by our idiom 'turning the tables upon one.' Of the next words, καὶ περὶ αὐτῶν — ἐμέμψατο, the general sense is clear; but the construction is disputed. Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold are agreed that ᾐτιαμένων cannot be referred, as it is usually done, to αὐτῶν, being, they say, in the neuter gender, as is evident, they urge, from this, 'quod ipsi quidem Platæenses accusati esse negari non possunt, at a Thebanis dicuntur se defendisse propter res non exprobratas.' Accordingly Poppo would render thus: 'et [nisi] quod ad ipsos attinet, extra propositum, simul etiam ea, quæ ne accusata quidem sunt, multum defendissent.' Yet thus the sense is weakened in the words περὶ αὐτῶν, and dis-spirited in the rest of the clause. Moreover, the words καὶ ἅμα οὐκ are so evidently parenthetical, that to construe ᾐτιαμ. with ἀπολογίαν does great violence to the construction. And the very passage adduced by Goeller in illustration of the words (namely, i. 2, καὶ ἀτειχίστων ἅμα ὄντων, where the words are themselves parenthetical,) puts the negative on his mode of tracing the construction. Finally, thus ἔξω τῶν προκειμένων would stand, most harshly, for an adjective. Such being the case, I would, with Arnold, connect περὶ αὐτῶν with πολλὴν τὴν ἀπολογίαν ἐποιήσαντο, considering the words ἔξω τῶν προκειμένων as qualifying ἀπολογίαν ἐποιήσαντο, and καὶ ἅμα οὐδὲ ᾐτιαμένων, scil. αὐτῶν, as a parenthetical remark serving to strengthen the sense of ἔξω τῶν προκειμένων, and which may be rendered literally, 'and withal they being not even accused [of any offence].' So supra ch. 53, 2, προκατηγορίας τε ἡμῶν οὐ προγεγενημένης. Against any possible objection to this construction on the ground that ἀπολογίαν ποιεῖσθαι and ἀπολογεῖσθαι carry after them either a genit. of person or thing, or a genit. with ὑπὲρ, I am enabled to adduce the following passages, proving that περὶ is sometimes so used: Demosth. 407, ὑπὲρ ὧν ἀγωνίζεται, περὶ τούτων καὶ ἀπολογεῖσθαι, and 979, 23, περὶ ὧν ἐμοὶ δικάζεται, τὰς αὐτὰς ἀπολογίας εὑρήσετε. Isocr. Encom. Hel. 7, ἀπολογεῖσθαι περὶ τῶν ἀδικεῖν αἰτίαν ἐχόντων. Acts xxiv. 10, περὶ ἐμαυτοῦ ἀπολογεῖσθαι. I have pointed accordingly, as Bekker did long ago, and have followed that editor and Goeller in retaining the vulg. αὐτῶν, for which Haack and Poppo have needlessly, not to say erroneously, edited αὐτῶν, resting on the authority of MSS. in a case where they have little or no weight.

On the anomalous πρὸς μὲν τὰ, for πρὸς τὰ μὲν, (with which Goeller compares something similar in the apodosis at iii. 82, ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ ἀγάλλονται, and vi. 60, παρὰ δὲ τὸ κρημνοί,) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 287, note 3, who shows (after Reiz. de Accent. p. 13) that the article thus used for a pronoun generally follows, not precedes, the particles μὲν and δέ· but that it sometimes precedes, chiefly when, as in the above three passages of our author, the particles come immediately after a preposition governing ὁ μὲν and ὁ δὲ, e. g. Plato, 167, ὅταν ἐν μὲν τῷ—ἐν δὲ τῷ, and 263, b, ἐν μὲν τοῖς συμφωνοῦμεν, ἐν δὲ τοῖς οὔ. As to the passage at iii. 82, in the protasis, the article comes first. In short, that passage is the exact counterpart to the present; the former having the anomaly (or rather idiom) in the apodosis; the latter in the protasis.

Finally, in ἀντειπεῖν πρὸς τὰ, the term ἀντειπεῖν often signifies, (as in Plut. p. 19, c, σὺ πρὸς αὐτὰ ἀντεῖπες ὡς, &c.) 'to make answer, reply to any charge,' so as to show it to be either entirely or partially false. So at i. 86; and answering to this is the use of contradico in Latin.

ἔλεγχον ποιήσασθαι] 'to make confutation, to confute, refute, their boastful claims.' So, at least, the commentators understand the phrase. Its import, however, is rather explorationem facere, 'to enter into an examination, or inquiry into, the things in question.' So Plato, 278, c, εἰς ἔλεγχον ἰὼν περὶ ὧν ἔγραψα. Isocr. Ægin. εἰς ἔλεγχον καταστήσειν ὁποῖός τις ἡμῶν ἕκαστος. And so in a passage of our author supra i. 131, 3, καθίστησιν ἑαυτὸν ἐς κρίσιν τοῖς βουλομένοις περὶ αὐτὸν ἐλέγχειν. Thus the phrase ποιήσασθαι ἔλεγχον may be compared with λαβεῖν or διδόναι ἔλεγχον.

In the next words, ἵνα μήτε ἡ ἡμετέρα αὐτοὺς κακία ὠφελῇ μήτε ἡ τούτων δόξα, (which serve to show the purpose of this reply and scrutiny,) there is much of point and significancy; and accordingly the terms κακία and δόξα must be taken with a certain accommodation of sense, as meant of what they are said to be, rather what they are; q. d. 'what you call κακία,' improbitas, as in Xen. Laced. ix. 2, and Cyneg. xii. 12. In like manner by δόξα is to be understood 'what they call glory,' or arrogate to themselves as such.

2. They now proceed (treating the question at issue as one which lay entirely between the Platæans and themselves) to trace the origin of the enmity which had so long subsisted with them.

ξυμμίκτους ἀνθρώπους] Otherwise called μιγάδες, meaning, a heterogeneous population, composed of persons of different races or nations; namely, the earlier inhabitants of those parts, whom Arnold supposes to be the Hyantians, Thracians, Pelasgians, and others spoken of by Strabo, ix. 2, 3. Of ὥσπερ ἐτάχθη τὸ πρ. the sense is not, 'as had been first ordained,' or ordered, but rather, 'as had been first arranged or settled;' implying an agreement: in which view we may compare the use of constitui and constitutum in Latin to signify pactus; also our phrase, 'to arrange or settle by mutual agreement.' These Bœotian colonisers had, it seems, agreed to hold the Platæan territory on the con-

σασθαι, ἵνα μήτε ἡ ἡμετέρα αὐτοὺς κακία ὠφελῇ μήτε ἡ τούτων δόξα, τὸ δ' ἀληθὲς περὶ ἀμφοτέρων ἀκούσαντες, κρίνητε. 2. ἡμεῖς δὲ αὐτοῖς διάφοροι ἐγενόμεθα πρῶτον, ὅτι, ἡμῶν κτισάντων Πλάταιαν ὕστερον τῆς ἄλλης Βοιωτίας, καὶ ἄλλα χωρία μετ' αὐτῆς, ἃ ξυμμίκτους ἀνθρώπους ἐξελάσαντες ἔσχομεν, οὐκ ἠξίουν οὗτοι, ὥσπερ ἐτάχθη τὸ πρῶτον, ἡγεμονεύεσθαι ὑφ' ἡμῶν, ἔξω δὲ τῶν ἄλλων Βοιωτῶν παραβαίνοντες τὰ πάτρια, ἐπειδὴ προσηναγκάζοντο, προσεχώρησαν πρὸς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ μετ' αὐτῶν πολλὰ ἡμᾶς ἔβλαπτον, ἀνθ' ὧν καὶ ἀντέπασχον. LXII. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ [καὶ] ὁ βάρβαρος ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τὴν Ἑλλάδα, φασὶ μόνοι Βοιωτῶν οὐ μηδίσαι· καὶ τούτῳ μάλιστα αὐτοί τε ἀγάλλονται καὶ ἡμᾶς λοιδοροῦσιν. 2. ἡμεῖς δὲ μηδίσαι μὲν αὐτοὺς οὐ φαμὲν διότι οὐδ' Ἀθηναίους· τῇ μέντοι αὐτῇ ἰδέᾳ ὕστερον ἰόντων Ἀθηναίων ἐπὶ τοὺς Ἕλληνας, μόνους αὖ Βοιωτῶν ἀττικίσαι. 3. καίτοι σκέψασθε ἐν οἵῳ εἴδει ἑκάτεροι ἡμῶν τοῦτο ἔπραξαν· ἡμῖν μὲν γὰρ ἡ πόλις τότε ἐτύγχανεν οὔτε κατ' ὀλιγαρχίαν ἰσόνομον πολιτεύουσα, οὔτε κατὰ δημοκρατίαν·

dition of rendering obedience to the general Bœotian congress, (consisting of the four councils who exercised sovereign power,) and following their directions, ἡγεμονεύεσθαι ὑπ' αὐτῶν. So Isocrates in his Plat. § 8, makes the Platæans say, συντελεῖν αὐτοῖς (Θηβαίοις) οὐκ ἠθέλομεν, which tends to countenance the idea,—probable in itself,—that Platæa had never been a sovereign state of the confederacy; but one of the smaller called ξύμμοροι or ξυντελεῖς, which were so far subject to the larger ones as to be obliged to furnish to them a contingent of troops and a payment in money. Nay, it is probable that Platæa had been originally a colony from, and a dependency on, Thebes; which may serve to account for the peculiar enmity borne them by the Thebans, as their revolted subjects. The Platæans are here represented as παραβαίνοντες τὰ πάτρια, because the settlers of a colony were (according to the νόμοι πάτριοι which prevailed in Greece) held to have a right to exercise rule and authority over it.

προσηναγκάζοντο] 'were being compelled,' viz. ἐμμένειν τοῖς πατρίοις, by an ellipsis also found at iv. 87, and for which we have the complete expression, vi. 72.

Ch. LXII. The speakers now proceed to give a counter-representation of their own conduct in the Persian war, and enter into an examination of that of the Platæans.

1. τούτῳ ἀγάλλονται] 'in this they take pride,' or glory; as iii. 82, and vi. 41, where the same syntax has place. Τούτῳ must be referred also to λοιδοροῦσιν, ἐπὶ being understood, which is expressed in Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 9.

2. The οὐ here is to be referred to μηδίσαι just before. For Ἀθηναίους, Poppo observes, we might have expected Ἀθηναῖοι; but there is here that kind of attraction frequent in comparisons. See note on v. 44, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 448. Thus they allow no merit to the Platæans for the patriotic exertions in the cause of Grecian freedom, ascribing it solely to their attachment to Athens. The words τῇ μέντοι—ἀττικίσαι are meant to form a set-off against the foregoing admission. Render, 'when, however, the Athenians afterwards, on the same principle of action, went against the Greeks, they alone of the Bœotians atticized.' Here we have another example of ἰδέᾳ in this sense, which is also found at iv. 76. The term is explained by Dukas σκόπῳ, and by the Schol. ἀποθέσει; q. d. 'the ground of action was the same in both cases,—namely, their devotedness to Athens, by which they were afterwards as ready to help her in enslaving Greece, as they had before been in defending her against the Persians.'

3. The speakers now, by way of further depreciating the merits of the Platæans, and lessening their own demerits, point to the different circumstances under which each acted. Now the circumstances and condition adverted to in the case of the Platæans, was their close connexion with, and devotedness to, Athens, which deprived them of all merit in what they did. This the speakers advert to in the second place, and in the next chapter. First they advert to their own case.

ἐν οἵῳ εἴδει] 'in what situation,' state, or condition,—meaning, political circumstance; as Polyb. vi. 10, 2, πᾶν εἶδος πολιτείας. So at viii. 89, 3, we have in the Cod. Clar. τῷ τοιούτῳ εἴδει, by which, as appears from the preceding context, is to be understood σχήματι πολιτικῷ.

κατ' ὀλιγαρχίαν ἰσόνομον πολιτεύουσα] Poppo is of opinion that ὀλιγαρχίαν ἰσόνομον here designates τὴν ἀπὸ γένους ὀλιγαρχίαν, or ἀριστοκρατικὴν ὀλιγαρχίαν, inasmuch as in that all the nobles were ὁμότιμοι or ὅμοιοι. But preferable to this,—a somewhat far-fetched view,—is that by which the term ἰσόνομος is under-ὅπερ δέ ἐστι νόμοις μὲν καὶ τῷ σωφρονεστάτῳ ἐναντιώτατον, ἐγγυτάτω δὲ τυράννου, δυναστεία ὀλίγων ἀνδρῶν εἶχε τὰ πράγματα. 4. καὶ οὗτοι ἰδίας δυνάμεις ἐλπίσαντες ἔτι μᾶλλον σχήσειν, εἰ τὰ τοῦ Μήδου κρατήσειε, κατέχοντες ἰσχύϊ τὸ πλῆθος, ἐπηγάγοντο αὐτόν· καὶ ἡ ξύμπασα πόλις οὐκ αὐτοκράτωρ οὖσα ἑαυτῆς τοῦτ' ἔπραξεν, οὐδ' ἄξιον αὐτῇ ὀνειδίσαι ὧν μὴ μετὰ νόμων ἥμαρτεν. 5. ἐπειδὴ γοῦν ὅ τε Μῆδος ἀπῆλθε, καὶ τοὺς νόμους ἔλαβε, σκέψασθαι χρή,—Ἀθηναίων ὕστερον ἐπιόντων, τήν τε ἄλλην Ἑλλάδα stood to signify, 'apportioning an equality of civil rights,' implying, as Arnold explains, 'the equality of all the citizens one to another, as far as related to their private disputes and private injuries.' Compare ii. 37, μέτεστι δὲ κατὰ τοὺς νόμους πρὸς τὰ ἴδια διάφορα πᾶσι τὸ ἴσον. See also further remarks in my note in Transl.

ὅπερ] Supply εἶδος from the preceding. Of τῷ σωφρονεστάτῳ ἐναντιώτατον the sense is, 'opposed to the most moderate and well-ordered class of society;' τῷ σωφ. being here used as ὅστις σωφρονεῖν ἐπίσταται in Soph. Œd. R. 589. To this it would then be quite opposed; because the wish of such would be, that no one should be above the law. Ἐγγυτάτω τυράννου, 'nearest to a tyranny;' τύραννος here bearing the sense tyranny, as δῆμος often does that of a democracy. Poppo aptly compares the words of Tacit. Annal. vi. 42, 'Paucorum dominatio regiæ libidini propior est.' Somewhat peculiar is the phrase following, δυναστεία ὀλίγων ἀνδρῶν, which is best understood by adverting to the various uses of the term δυναστεία. Now this properly signifies, 1. the office of δυνάστης or potentate of any kind, whether that of the domini or reguli, or kings, but almost always those who exercise sovereign authority. 2. The authority and power, dominion or rule, belonging to such office, what we understand by government generally. So in Isocr. ap. Steph. Thes. in v. we have, τοὺς δυναστείας ἔχοντας. Pol. iii. 18, 3, τὰς δυναστείας τῶν πόλεων τοῖς αὐτοῦ φίλοις ἐνεχείρισε. Also, sway, as in Dem. 1467, 16; but chiefly despotic sway, as Dem. 117, 4. 316, 18, in which sense it answers to the Latin dominatio, or despotic rule: and so it is used in Dio Cass. 37, 67, and 661, 2, ἐν δυναστείᾳ ἀλλ' οὐ δημοκρατίᾳ, and that whether as understood of one man, or of more. So in Plut. 492, b, we have, ἀρχήν τινα, ἢ τυραννίδα ἢ δυναστείαν, where by δυν. seems meant, despotic rule exercised by more than one, by a few (what we should call a cabal); an idea, at 291, more fully expressed by τὴν ὑπὸ τῶν ὀλίγων δυναστείαν, 'an oligarchy.' And so Plutarch, on the subject of Monarchy and Democracy, ix. 287, speaks of δυναστεῖαι, or dominationes, as arising ὅταν ἐντέκῃ ὀλιγαρχία ὑπερφροσύνην, where by ὑπερφ. is meant what St. Paul, Rom. xii. 3, expresses by ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν, 'to look arrogantly above law and justice.' In the present instance, however, the term must denote several persons, or at least more than one, exercising despotic power, a knot or cabal of persons exercising despotic rule. Of this peculiar form of expression I know not any other example; but something very nearly approaching to it occurs in Xen. Hist. v. 4, 46, ἐν πάσαις ταῖς πόλεσιν δυναστεῖαι καθειστήκεσαν, meaning, (as established by the Lacedæmonians,) despotic magistracies, (what we should call corporations,) of a few persons. So Tacit. Ann. iii. 26, 'At, postquam exui æqualitas, provenere dominationes.'

4. κατέχοντες ἰσχύϊ τὸ πλῆθος] 'forcibly coercing the people.' So iv. 92, τὸ πλῆθος – ὀλιγαρχούμενον ἀχθῆναι ὑπὸ τῶν— δυνατωτάτων. Αὐτοκράτωρ ἑαυτῆς, 'master of its own actions.' So in Aristid. we have, ἐπειδὴ Ἑλλὰς ἑαυτῆς αὐτοκράτωρ ἐγένετο. At μὴ μετὰ νόμων supply οὖσα, understanding the expression as equiv. to νόμοις οὐ χρωμένη. A similar form of expression occurs in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1620, 13.

5. τοὺς νόμους ἔλαβε] for τοὺς αὐτῶν νόμους ἀνέλαβε, 'recovered their laws,' i. e. the legitimate constitution, which had been overturned by the oligarchs. In this section the speakers show by example that the wishes of the people were not for Medish tyranny, nor any tyranny. 'Thus, for instance, (for such is the force of the γοῦν,) they recovered their freedom on the departure of the Mede, and thus both maintained their own freedom, and are now zealously furthering the freedom of Greece.'

The words following, σκέψασθαι χρή, καὶ τὴν ἡμετέραν χώραν πειρωμένων ὑφ' αὐτοῖς ποιεῖσθαι, καὶ κατὰ στάσιν ἤδη ἐχόντων αὐτῆς τὰ πολλά,—εἰ μαχόμενοι ἐν Κορωνείᾳ καὶ νικήσαντες αὐτοὺς, ἠλευθερώσαμεν τὴν Βοιωτίαν, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους νῦν προθύμως ξυνελευθεροῦμεν, ἵππους τε παρέχοντες καὶ παρασκενὴν ὅσην οὐκ ἄλλοι τῶν ξυμμάχων. καὶ τὰ μὲν ἐς τὸν μηδισμὸν τοσαῦτα ἀπολογούμεθα. LXIII. Ὡς δὲ ὑμεῖς μᾶλλόν τε ἠδικήκατε τοὺς Ἕλληνας, καὶ ἀξιώτεροί ἐστε πάσης ζημίας, πειρασόμεθα ἀποφαίνειν. 2. ἐγένεσθε ἐπὶ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ τιμωρίᾳ, ὡς φατὲ, Ἀθηναίων must be construed with εἰ μαχόμενοι—ἠλευθερώσαμεν—καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους νῦν ξυνελευθεροῦμεν, the sense being, 'consider whether we have fought and freed ourselves, and are assisting towards freeing others,' i. e. consider whether or not: a refined, and, at the same time, strong mode of asserting that they had: and on this ground, — their long-continued exertions in the cause of liberty,—they rest their defence against the charge of upholding Medism, or slavery.

ἵππους, a little after, stands for ἱππέας, as appears from ii. 9, ἱππέας δὲ Βοιωτοί, αἱ δὲ ἄλλαι πόλεις πεζὸν παρεῖχον. Thus it is plain that the Bœotians furnished no infantry. By παρασκευὴν understand all sorts of military stores, including provisions and other necessaries, which had probably been provided by the Thebans at the late siege of Platæa.

CH. LXIII. Having now despatched the counter-representation, in justification of their own conduct, (ἃ ἀντειπεῖν δεῖ,) they now proceed to an ἔλεγχος or investigation of the conduct of the Platæans, to see whether the glory they claimed was justly due, or whether it had not been far outweighed by later offences. Now this ἔλεγχος occupies the present and the next chapter. In pursuance of this, the speakers commence by, as we say, turning the tables on the Platæans; and they undertake to show that they are rather the persons who have injured Greece, and consequently have become amenable to every penalty. They then show that by following the banners of Athens in all her attacks on the liberties of Greece, when they might have aided Lacedæmon in resisting them, they were far worse traitors to Greece than themselves, and have by such conduct forfeited every claim to consideration on the score of their services against the Mede; which, as appeared by their subsequent conduct, were performed rather to gratify Athens.

1. ἀξιώτεροί ἐστε πάσης ζημίας] Of these words (with which compare similar expressions in Jos. 763, 21, πάσης ἄξιοι τιμωρίας. Eurip. Hipp. 3, πάσης κατα-γνώσεως [ἄξιος]) the sense would seem, à primâ facie, to be, as Arnold renders, 'ye are more worthy of all punishment [than we whom you affect to call traitors to Greece].' The Thebans, he observes by way of explanation, 'were still reproached with their conduct during the Persian invasion, and were said to be still liable to the penalty of forfeiture denounced against those who should join the barbarian.' But the Thebans did not themselves recognise this censure or liability as just, which the above version makes them do; and consequently we might, as Bauer, Goeller, and Poppo suggest, resolve the comparat. into μᾶλλον and the positive ἄξιοι, as αἴσχιον stands for αἰσχρὸν μᾶλλον at ii. 42. Thus, they add, the word μᾶλλον will not belong to ἄξιοι, but to the whole sentence, as follows: 'digni estis pœnâ potius quam veniâ.' Yet in this view there is something not a little forced and frigid, and indeed objectionable on the ground of taking for granted, what cannot be proved to exist, a strong emphasis on ζημίας. Moreover, it has the effect of quite dis-spiriting the passage, by removing from it the pointed character of recrimination which otherwise there prevails. Render, 'it is ye rather than ourselves who are worthy of every penalty [ye may suffer].' In short, the word ἀξιώτεροι was, we may suppose, employed by way of avoiding the tautology involved in μᾶλλον ἄξιοι.

2. ἐγένεσθε ἐπὶ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ τιμωρίᾳ] These words state the purpose of the action: and of these Poppo and Goeller assign as the sense, 'ut nos ulciscereminí,' considering them as equiv. to ἐπὶ τῷ ἡμᾶς τιμωρεῖσθαι, 'that we might be punished.' Yet opposed to this view is the evidence of facts; for from what the Platæans themselves say, supra ch. 55, it appears that they sought, and obtained, only aid to repel aggression, not means of punishing former violence. On that ground the version of Arnold, 'vengeance against ξύμμαχοι καὶ πολῖται. 3. οὐκοῦν χρὴν τὰ πρὸς ἡμᾶς μόνον ὑμᾶς ἐπάγεσθαι αὐτοὺς, καὶ μὴ ξυνεπιέναι μετ' αὐτῶν ἄλλοις, ὑπάρχον γε ὑμῖν, εἴ τι καὶ ἄκοντες προσήγεσθε ὑπ' Ἀθηναίων, τῆς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων τῶνδε ἤδη ἐπὶ τῷ Μήδῳ ξυμμαχίας γεγενημένης, ἣν αὐτοὶ μάλιστα προβάλλεσθε· ἱκανή γε ἦν ἡμᾶς τε ὑμῶν ἀποτρέπειν καὶ, τὸ μέγιστον, ἀδεῶς παρέχειν βουλεύεσθαι. 4. ἀλλ' ἑκόντες, καὶ οὐ βιαζόμενοι ἔτι, εἵλεσθε μᾶλλον τὰ Ἀθηναίων. 5. καὶ λέγετε ὡς αἰσχρὸν ἦν προδοῦναι τοὺς εὐεργέτας· πολὺ δέ γε αἴσχιον καὶ ἀδικώτερον τοὺς πάντας Ἕλληνας καταπροδοῦναι, οἷς ξυνωμόσατε, ἢ Ἀθηναίους μόνους, τοὺς μὲν καταδουλουμένους τὴν Ἑλλάδα, τοὺς δὲ ἐλευθεροῦντας. 6. καὶ οὐκ ἴσην αὐτοῖς τὴν χάριν ἀνταπέδοτε, οὐδὲ αἰσχύνης ἀπηλλαγμένην· ὑμεῖς μὲν γὰρ ἀδικούμενοι αὐτοὺς, ὡς us,' must be rejected: though that commentator has, I find, adopted the view propounded in my note, by which ἡμετέρᾳ is regarded as standing for καθ' ἡμῶν; comparing a similar use i. 69, αἱ ὑμέτεραι ἐλπίδες, and i. 77, τὸ ὑμέτερον δέος. In his former edition he adopted the version offered in my Transl., 'to procure assistance against us;' which, after all, is the only correct one, as appears from ch. 55, whence it is plain that they asked only for alliance, and received no more than βοήθειαν. Poppo, indeed, demurs to this, on the ground that 'non constat τιμωρίαν τινὸς unquam objectivè significare auxilium contra aliquem ferendum;' though he admits that ἐπικούρημα and ἐπικούρησις are so used, as appears from Matth. Gr. Gr. § 354. The anomaly he alludes to may, however, be got rid of by taking τιμωρία as standing for ἐκδίκησις, avengement, the being righted, importing (according to the definition of the word by Johnson) 'the being delivered from wrong, established in one's just possessions.' Thus the term ἐκδίκησις has a sort of double sense, like that of vindicatio in Latin. So Cicero de Invent. ii. 22, fin. defining the word vindicatio, says, 'Est per quam vis et injuria, et omnino omne quod obfuturum est, defendendo aut ulciscendo propulsatur.'

3. τὰ πρὸς ἡμᾶς] 'as far as regarded us.' At ὑπάρχον γε ὑμῖν repeat τὸ μὴ ξυνεπιέναι, &c.; the sense being, 'especially as it was in your power [so to have done].'

εἴ τι καὶ ἄκοντες προσήγεσθε] 'if ye had been in any respect unwillingly compelled by the Athenians,' literally, 'if ye were being compelled [to go with them against others].' See note on viii. 106. The words following, τῆς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων—γεγενημένης, serve to show how it was in their power not ξυνεπιέναι ἄλλοις, namely, from the confederacy of these Lacedæmonians against the Medes having already subsisted. Of the words ἣν αὐτοὶ μάλιστα προβάλλεσθε the sense is, 'which ye especially bring forward [as a boast].' See supra i. 73, and infra vi. 92. Τὸ μέγιστον stands for ὅπερ μέγιστόν ἐστι, quod maximum est, 'what makes most for the argument.' Of ἀδεῶς παρέχειν βουλεύεσθαι the sense is, 'to afford you the power of taking your measures fearlessly.'

4. ἀλλ' ἑκόντες, &c.] The ἀλλὰ here has the elliptical force adverted to by Hoogev. de Part. 9, by which certain things which might have been said are suppressed, and the conclusion is drawn without them, q. d. 'But [to omit more that might be said, be that as it may],' &c. So in Virg. Æn. i. 135, we have, 'Quos ego. Sed motos præstat componere fluctus.' By τὰ Ἀθηναίων understand 'the part or side of the Athenians.'

5. καταπροδοῦναι] The word has here (what, indeed, the antithesis demands) such an intensity of force, as is observable also supra i. 86; the sense being literally, 'to betray down,' viz. to ruin. And so καταδουλουμένους just after.

6. καὶ οὐκ ἴσην αὐτοῖς τὴν χάριν—ἀπηλλαγμένην] Render, 'Nay, what is more, ye returned them a favour not equal (not a just equivalent), nor [one] devoid of shame:' on which sense of ἀπηλλαγμένην see note on i. 138, 3. This phrase (which occurs also in a passage of Joseph. Ant. xix. i. 5.) is well illustrated by the words of Cicero, Epist. ad Fam. vii. 3, who says, 'haud vacare culpâ,' is not free or clear from blame.

φατὲ, ἐπηγάγεσθε, τοῖς δὲ ἀδικοῦσιν ἄλλους ξυνεργοὶ κατέστητε. 7. καίτοι τὰς ὁμοίας χάριτας μὴ ἀντιδιδόναι αἰσχρὸν μᾶλλον ἢ τὰς μετὰ δικαιοσύνης μὲν ὀφειληθείσας, ἐς ἀδικίαν δὲ ἀποδιδομένας. LXIV. Δῆλόν τε ἐποιήσατε οὐδὲ τότε τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἕνεκα μόνοι οὐ μηδίσαντες, ἀλλ' ὅτι οὐδ' Ἀθηναῖοι, ὑμεῖς δὲ τοῖς μὲν ταὐτὰ βουλόμενοι ποιεῖν, τοῖς δὲ τἀναντία. 2. καὶ νῦν ἀξιοῦτε, ἀφ' ὧν δι' ἑτέρους ἐγένεσθε ἀγαθοὶ, ἀπὸ τούτων ὠφελεῖσθαι. ἀλλ' οὐκ εἰκός· ὥσπερ δὲ Ἀθηναίους εἵλεσθε, τούτοις ξυναγωνίζεσθε. 3. καὶ μὴ προφέρετε τὴν τότε γενομένην ξυνωμοσίαν, ὡς χρὴ ἀπ' αὐτῆς νῦν σώζεσθαι· ἀπελίπετε γὰρ αὐτὴν, καὶ παραβάντες ξυγκατεδουλοῦσθε μᾶλλον Αἰγινήτας καὶ ἄλλους τινὰς τῶν ξυνομοσάντων, ἢ διεκωλύετε· καὶ ταῦτα οὔτε ἄκοντες, ἔχοντές τε τοὺς νόμους οὕσπερ μέχρι τοῦ δεῦρο, καὶ οὐδενὸς ὑμᾶς βιασαμένου, ὥσπερ ἡμᾶς· τὴν τελευταίαν τε, πρὶν περιτειχίζεσθαι, πρόκλησιν ἐς ἡσυχίαν ὑμῶν, ὥστε μηδετέροις ἀμύνειν, οὐκ ἐδέχεσθε. 4. τίνες ἂν [οὖν] ὑμῶν τοῖς δὲ ἀδικοῦσιν ἄλλους ξυνεργοὶ κατέστητε] These words serve to supply a proof that the favour returned was not a just equivalent, but more; for they ought to have been content with aiding Athens against foreign invasion.

7. The reasoning is here further strengthened by a pithy apophthegm, meant to be especially applicable to the case under consideration, καίτοι τὰς ὁμοίας — ἀποδιδομένας, which words may be rendered, 'And yet this rather is base, to not return proportionable favours, than not to return those which were contracted, indeed, with justice, but are to be paid back with injustice.' With respect to the phraseology, the words μὴ ἀντιδιδόναι are to be repeated in both clauses of the sentence, and αἰσχρὸν μᾶλλον is equivalent to αἴσχιον at ii. 40, the sense being, 'this rather is disgraceful, and not.' The construction and general sense have been well laid down by Poppo, and, after him, by Haack, Goeller, and Arnold. Much to the present purpose is a passage cited by the last-mentioned commentator from Cic. de Off. i. 15, 'Non reddere beneficium (answering to μὴ ἀντιδιδόναι χάριν here) viro bono non licet (αἰσχρὸν), modo id facere possit sine injuria' (answering to τὰς ὁμοίας χάριτας); by which it is implied that if, however, it can only be returned 'cum injuria' (ἐς ἀδικίαν ἀποδιδομένας), then the not returning it (μὴ ἀντιδιδόναι) is allowable in a good man (οὐκ αἰσχρόν). The present passage is, I would observe, evidently imitated by Joseph. Ant. xv. 2, 2, τάς τε χάριτας οὐχ ὁμοίως (for which read ὁμοίας) ἀποδίδοσθαι. Something similar, too, occurs in Æschin. p. 66, 2, τηλικαῦθ' ὑφ' ἡμῶν εὖ πεπονθότες, οὐ τὰς ὁμοίας ὑμῖν ἀπέδοσαν.

CH. LXIV. 1. Δῆλόν τε—οὐ μηδίσαντες] To the phrase δῆλον ἐποιήσατε is subjoined a particip. (μηδίσαντες) instead of a verb, similarly as in Lycurg. c. Leocr. ch. 12, φανερὸν ἐποίησαν οὐκ ἰδίᾳ πολεμοῦντες. See also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 549, 5, and compare supra ch. 49, fin. (Poppo.) At οὐδ' Ἀθην. supply ἐμήδισαν; and at ὑμεῖς δὲ supply ἐμηδίσατε. (Goeller.) By τοῖς μὲν understand the Greeks at large; by τοῖς δὲ, the Athenians.

3. ὑμῶν] Eleven MSS. (besides the Clar. 1 manu, and Cant.) have ἡμῶν, fortasse rectè, Poppo says; but I should rather say haud dubiè pravè; since internal evidence (which in a case like this is alone of any weight) is all in favour of ὑμῶν, this being the more difficult reading, though the transposition is one common in our author. Moreover, while ἡμῶν might be easily dispensed with, not so ὑμῶν, from its being requisite to afford a subject (ὑμᾶς) to the two verbs περιτειχίζεσθαι and ἀμύνειν.

4. οὖν] This is not found in ten of the best MSS., and is cancelled by Bekker and Goeller, though retained by Poppo; and very properly, from its being so necessary to the inference here drawn, that it cannot be dispensed with. Moreover, its omission in the MSS. may very well be attributed to the circumstance of the particles ἂν οὖν coming together; which would cause one to be absorbed by the δικαιότερον πᾶσι τοῖς Ἕλλησι μισοῖντο, οἵτινες ἐπὶ τῷ ἐκείνων κακῷ ἀνὸραγαθίαν προὔθεσθε; καὶ, ἃ μέν ποτε χρηστοὶ ἐγένεσθε, ὡς φατὲ, οὐ προσήκοντα νῦν ἐπεδείξατε· ἃ δὲ ἡ φύσις ἀεὶ ἐβούλετο, ἐξηλέγχθη ἐς τὸ ἀληθές· μετὰ γὰρ Ἀθηναίων ἄδικον ὁδὸν ἰόντων ἐχωρήσατε. 5. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἐς τὸν ἡμέτερόν τε ἀκούσιον μηδισμὸν καὶ τὸν ὑμέτερον ἑκούσιον ἀττικισμὸν τοιαῦτα ἀποφαίνομεν. LXV. Ἃ δὲ τελευταῖά φατε ἀδικηθῆναι, (παρανόμως γὰρ ἐλθεῖν ἡμᾶς ἐν σπονδαῖς καὶ †ἱερομηνίαις ἐπὶ τὴν ὑμετέραν πόλιν,) other, or, at least, one or other word to be omitted.

The words following, οἵτινες ἐπὶ—προὔθεσθε, serve to show why they merit this hatred; the sense being, 'who have displayed bravery, to their injury, as they had done in the defending of their city to the last extremity.' Portus and Hobbes, indeed, render προθέσθαι by prætexere; and Arnold by pretend; and that, he says, 'because the merit in question was not real, but assumed.' But, in truth, the bravery itself was, as facts attested it to be, real and undeniable; though the motives and purpose for its exercise would, in the view of the Bœotians, seem evil; which is no other than what is meant by the words ἐπὶ τῷ ἐκείνων κακῷ, 'to their injury.'

οὐ προσήκοντα νῦν ἐπεδείξατε] Of these words the meaning may be, what I formerly (with Heilm. and others) explained it to be, 'ye have now evinced what is not correspondent thereto,' non congruentia. Some deeper sense, however, seems here intended, namely, what the Schol. assigns, 'ye have now shown that the actions in question were not consistent with, were contrary to your nature, were abhorrent from your nature, or innate disposition;' so answering to οὐκ ἐκ προσηκόντων, ch. 67. Dukas paraphrases the words thus: ἐδείξατε γὰρ οἷς ἐδρᾶτε μετὰ ταῦτα ὡς δι' ἄλλους (scil. τοὺς Ἀθηναίους) ἠνδραγαθεῖτε. But the sense is rather, 'Ye showed by what ye since did, that to be χρηστοὶ or serviceable [to Greece], was wholly repugnant to your disposition.' The next words, ἃ δὲ—ἀληθὲς, are meant to further develop the idea, and explain the preceding; the full sense being, 'But what your native disposition always wished, has been of a truth detected,' (literally, found out,) namely, what is no other than the opposite to χρηστοὶ γενέσθαι, i. e. ἄδικοι γενέσθαι. A person is said ἐξελέγχεσθαι, when he is by ἔλεγχος found out to be not what he pretends; and an action is said ἐξελέγχεσθαι when it is shown, on being tested, to be not what it had been esteemed. Answering to ἐς τὸ ἀληθὲς here, is the Latin phrase in verum, and our of a truth, or, for a truth. Yet so rare is the expression, that I know of no other example but one in Isaiah xlii. 3, Sept. (in the Complut., Ald., and other copies,) where we have εἰς ἀληθῆ, standing for ἀληθές. Hence, I would observe, may be derived the elliptical form τὸ ἀληθὲς, to signify reverà; on which see note at viii. 92, 9.

In ἄδικον ὁδὸν ἰόντων we have a very strong form of expression; and on this it is not sufficient, with Matth. Gr. Gr. § 409, 6, to remark, that the way in which any one goes is (as he shows by certain examples) put in the accusative. It is proper rather to advert to the idea of custom, or habitual action, conveyed by the phrase here and in similar passages which I have in my Translation adduced from Dionysius, Josephus, and Pind.; besides which, I have since noted another strikingly similar one in Dexipp. ap. Corp. Byz. Hist. i. p. 11, D, Ἰουθούγγων δὲ ἄδικον ὁδὸν ἰόντων.

CH. LXV. This chapter is occupied with a defence of their conduct at Platæa; being meant to show that they committed no injustice at all, having been called in by the best and noblest citizens, and for purposes beneficial to all classes of the community.

1. For ἱερομηνίαις the Marg. Steph. has ἱερομηνίᾳ, which, indeed, seems required by ch. 56; and so easily might the ς arise from the ε following, that not improbable is it that our author wrote ἱερομηνίᾳ, which, as Wasse truly says, 'tam sententia quam constructionis varietas suadet. Since, however, every MS. seems to have ἱερομηνίαις, we are bound to retain it, and may sufficiently well account for the plural form by supposing, with Arnold, that the festival in question was one of several days' duration. Of this plural use of the word, and so applied, I have noted the following examples in Dio Cass. 550, 82, ἱερομηνίαι ἐγένοντο, and 369, 57. 478, 32, ἱερομηνίαι

οὐ νομίζομεν οὐδ' ἐν τούτοις ὑμῶν μᾶλλον ἁμαρτεῖν. 2. εἰ. μὲν γὰρ ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ πρός τε τὴν πόλιν ἐλθόντες ἐμαχόμεθα, καὶ τὴν γῆν ἐδῃοῦμεν ὡς πολέμιοι, ἀδικοῦμεν· εἰ δὲ ἄνδρες ὑμῶν οἱ πρῶτοι καὶ χρήμασι καὶ γένει, βουλόμενοι τῆς μὲν ἔξω ξυμμαχίας ὑμᾶς παῦσαι, ἐς δὲ τὰ κοινὰ τῶν πάντων Βοιωτῶν πάτρια καταστῆσαι, ἐπεκαλέσαντο ἐκόντες, τί ἀδικοῦμεν; οἱ γὰρ ἄγοντες παρανομοῦσι μᾶλλον τῶν ἑπομένων. 3. ἀλλ' οὔτ' ἐκεῖνοι, ὡς ἡμεῖς κρίνομεν, οὔθ' ἡμεῖς· πολῖται δὲ ὄντες, ὥσπερ ὑμεῖς, καὶ πλείω παραβαλλόμενοι, τὸ ἑαυτῶν τεῖχος ἀνοίξαντες, καὶ ἐς τὴν αὐτῶν πόλιν φιλίως, οὐ πολεμίως, κομίσαντες, ἐβούλοντο τούς τε ὑμῶν χείρους ἤχθησαν. 218, 34. 529, 57. 650, 32, ἱερομηνίας ἄγειν.

ὑμῶν μᾶλλον ἁμαρτεῖν] 'we were more in fault than you,' for οὐ μᾶλλον ἢ ὑμεῖς, non tam—quam, as in Appian, i. 212, 91, οὐ δοκιμάζων — μᾶλλον ἤ, and Eurip. Phœn. 518, τοῦτο—οὐχὶ βούλομαι Ἄλλῳ παρεῖναι μᾶλλον ἢ σώζειν ἐμοί.

2. εἰ ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ — ἐμαχόμεθα] Here αὐτὸς stands for αὐτόματος, nostrâ sponte (as ipse in Latin for suâ sponte): an idiom almost confined to the poets. So Hom. Il. xvii. 254, ἀλλά τις αὐτὸς ἴτω, where the Schol. explains by ὑπὸ τῆς ἰδίας γνώμης παραγενέσθω. On ἀδικοῦμεν, just after, Poppo notices the remarkable sequence of tenses, 'si nos agrum hostili modo vastassemus, sontes sumus:' to remove which difficulty, Krueger would take ἀδ. as a perfect tense; but that is by no means satisfactory. Better is it to suppose the present tense here used according to a popular idiom common to most languages, where propriety would seem to require a past tense: though, indeed, there is no violation of propriety at all; since there is, in effect, no sequence of tenses, and, in fact, the action is not considered with reference to time at all, but only as regards the agents, and that hypothetically; nor has the second verb any reference to time (as is very often the case in the present tense). Of the thing so hypothetically put, the assertion is, '[if that were the case, then,] we are guilty, are in the wrong.' Instances in abundance of this idiom might be adduced from the earliest writers, as the Scriptures of the Old Testament and the writings of Herodotus. The following must suffice—namely, Levit. v. 17, 'If a soul shall sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the Lord; though he wist it not, yet is he guilty, and shall bear his iniquity.' James ii. 10, 'Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.' Now in each of these cases there is no sequence of tenses, but an action being spoken of hypothetically, judgment is passed upon it, with which time has nothing to do, and the verb only serves to affirm that judgment. So in Aristid. Lept. § 64, (cited by Poppo,) εἰ μὲν ἀτέλειαν ὁ νόμος ἐκέλευεν εἶναι—μαρτυρίαν καθ' ἑαυτοῦ καταλείπει ὅτι παρανομεῖ, where a similar inartificial mode of speaking exists. In the same manner are to be explained the words τί ἀδικοῦμεν just after.

In οἱ γὰρ ἄγοντες παρανομοῦσι μᾶλλον τῶν ἑπομένων there is, as Haack says, an insulting play on the words used by the Platæans, ch. 55, οὐχ οἱ ἑπόμενοι αἴτιοι, ἀλλ' οἱ ἄγοντες.

3. πλείω παραβαλλόμενοι] 'having a greater stake in the country.' In this sense παραβάλλεσθαι also occurs at ii. 44, and iii. 14. That those who hold the greatest stake in the welfare of a country should have the most to do with its government, is one of the most certain principles of political science, (see i. 91, fin.) and forms a prominent feature in the British Constitution.

τοὺς ὑμῶν χείρους μηκέτι μᾶλλον γενέσθαι] By τοὺς χείρους I now think, with the Scholiast, Poppo, and Arnold, we are to understand (as the words following require us to do) τοὺς κακούς, (on which see Poppo on iii. 9.) not, however, limiting it, with Arnold, to mean 'persons of bad principles,' but rather taking χείρους in a sense which it occasionally bears in Xenophon, to denote minùs boni, as said of persons inferior in talent, virtue, or whatever else fits a person to hold any office of dignity: opposed to whom are οἱ ἀμείνους, i. e. persons who are above par in both respects. Compare Xen. Cyr. viii. 1, 30, τῶν χειρόνων ὑπεικότων τοῖς ἀμείνοσι· also Athen. Rep. iii. 10, where to οἱ χείριστοι are opposed οἱ βέλτιστοι, though there probably by οἱ χείρ. are to be understood the worst sort of persons, the plebeians, and by οἱ βέλτ. the better sort of persons, the optimates; a view confirmed by the words of our author supra ch. 47, νῦν μὲν γὰρ ὑμῖν ὁ δῆμος ἐν πάσαις ταῖς πόλεσιν εὔνους ἐστί, καὶ ἢ οὐ ξυναφίσταται τοῖς ὀλίγοις, ἢ, ἐὰν βιασθῇ, ὑπάρχει τοῖς ἀποστήσασι πολέμιος εὐθύς, καὶ τῆς ἀντικαθισταμένης πόλεως τὸ πλῆθος ξύμμαχον ἔχοντες ἐς πόλεμον ἐπέρχεσθε.

μηκέτι μᾶλλον γενέσθαι τούς τε ἀμείνους τὰ ἄξια ἔχειν, σωφρονισταὶ ὄντες τῆς γνώμης, καὶ τῶν σωμάτων τὴν πόλιν οὐκ ἀλλοτριοῦντες, ἀλλ' ἐς τὴν ξυγγένειαν οἰκειοῦντες, ἐχθροὺς οὐδενὶ καθιστάντες,

At μᾶλλον Poppo would supply χείρους, and Arnold χείρους ἢ ἀγαθούς. Yet so forced and frigid a sense arises from these supplementa, that better is it to suppose (as I did in my note in Translation) that μᾶλλον, though properly an adverb, here assumes the nature of an adjective; and thus μᾶλλον γενέσθαι will mean 'to be uppermost,' to have the upper hand,—lit. 'to be [in power] rather than others.' This adjectival sense the word has also at ch. 82, 2, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἡσυχαίτερα, where repeat γιγνόμενα. Greater, indeed, is the harshness involved in the present passage: but the sense for which I contend is absolutely required by the antithetical words τούς τε ἀμείνους τὰ ἄξια ἔχειν, 'should obtain their deserts.'

The next words, σωφρονισταὶ ὄντες τῆς γνώμης, &c., serve to note purpose; and here ὄντες stands for εἶναι. Render, '[they wished] to be moderators or reformers, correctors of your mind [and sentiments].' (See infra viii. 48, 6.) Alluding, as Huds. thinks, to those magistrates at Athens called σωφρονισταί, who were the censores morum of the young men; whence the word came to mean figuratively, 'those who endeavour to bring such as are in error to a right mind.' Compare infra vi. 87, μή θ', ὡς σωφρονισταί, ἀποτρέπειν πειρᾶσθε.

The next words, καὶ τῶν σωμάτων τὴν πόλιν—οἰκειοῦντες, are meant to further develop the preceding statement as to their purpose in seizing Platæa. The sense, however, is so obscurely expressed, as not a little to have perplexed expositors. The explanation of them most entitled to preference is that proposed by Goeller, who (seizing on the clue held out by Abresch) makes the word σωμάτων (on which the chief difficulty turns) depend on ἀλλοτριοῦντες, and, in support of the sense he assigns to it, adduces another passage supra i. 41, where by the term σώματα are denoted the citizens performing military service, who serve the state by their bodies, (or, as we should say, their persons,) as others by their wealth. And he follows Abresch in taking τῶν σωμάτων τὴν πόλιν οὐκ ἀλλοτριοῦντες in the sense ab urbe cives non abalienantes, 'not taking away from the city the services of its citizens,' not depriving it of their services by death and banishment, as was the case in such seizures. The reason why our author wrote σώματα was (as Goeller observes) this, that he sought for an antitheton to the word γνώμης, as at i. 70, where to τοῖς σώμασιν, meaning their persons, is opposed τῇ γνώμῃ, their mind. Here, then, the obscurity which exists has been in a great measure occasioned by the sacrifice of perspicuity to rhetorical point: and this obscurity being removed, nothing remains at all perplexing; for we have only to suppose ἀλλοτρ. used instead of ἀποστεροῦντες, (as ἀπαλλοτρίωσις stands for στέρησις at i. 35.) and that we have here a not unusual hypallage or permutation of construction, as in a similar passage at i. 40, μὴ ἄλλου αὐτὸν ἀποστερῶν, for καὶ ἄλλων ἑαυτοῦ οὐκ ἀποστ. And so in a passage of Ecclesiasticus, xi. 35, we find, ἀπαλλοτριώσει σε τῶν ἰδίων σου, where ἀπαλλ. stands for ἀποστερήσει, 'will deprive thee of thine own.' So, too, Livy, xxii. 60, 'Sero nunc desideratis [patriam] diminuti capite, abalienati jure civium,' where the term abalienati is explained severed, separated. Thus in the present case the literal sense may be, 'separating your persons from the state.' Yet in all such cases, where ἀλλοτρ. or ἀπαλλ. seems to bear the sense to separate from or deprive of, there is also an implied notion of transfer of persons or property, so as to make them another's. Accordingly here the sense is, 'not making away with persons so that they may become citizens of another state, but making them especially their own,' (see vi. 23.) i. e. by bringing them unto their kindred the Bœotians, where in οἰκειοῦντες there is a sensus prægnans, by a blending of two constructions, as in Diod. Sic. t. ii. 381, χώρα πρὸς ἀμπέλου φυτείαν ἀπηλλοτριωμένη. The Bœotians are styled ἡ ξυγγένεια, 'their kindred,' as being of the same race. This mode of speaking, by which the inhabitants of any nation are considered as fellow-kinsmen, is of the most remote antiquity. So in a passage of the Old ἅπασι δ' ὁμοίως ἐνσπόνδους. LXVI. Τεκμήριον δὲ ὡς οὐ πολεμίως ἐπράσσομεν· οὔτε γὰρ ἠδικήσαμεν οὐδένα, προείπομέν τε τὸν βουλόμενον κατὰ τὰ πάντων Βοιωτῶν πάτρια πολιτεύειν, ἰέναι πρὸς ἡμᾶς. 2. καὶ ὑμεῖς ἄσμενοι χωρήσαντες καὶ ξύμβασιν ποιησάμενοι, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἡσυχάζετε· ὕστερον δὲ, κατανοήσαντες ἡμᾶς ὀλίγους ὄντας,—εἰ ἄρα καὶ ἐδοκοῦμέν τι ἀνεπιεικέστερον πρᾶξαι οὐ μετὰ τοῦ πλήθους ὑμῶν ἐσελθόντες,—τὰ μὲν ὁμοῖα οὐκ ἀνταπέδοτε ἡμῖν, μήτε νεωτερίσαι ἔργῳ, λόγοις τε †πείσειν ὥστε ἐξελθεῖν· ἐπιθέμενοι δὲ παρὰ τὴν ξύμβασιν οὓς μὲν ἐν χερσὶν ἀπεκτείνατε, οὐχ ὁμοίως ἀλγοῦμεν· (κατὰ νόμον γὰρ δή τινα ἔπασχον·) οὓς δὲ χεῖρας προϊσχομένους, καὶ ζωγρήσαντες, ὑποσχόμενοί τε ἡμῖν ὕστερον μὴ κτενεῖν, παρανόμως διεφθείρατε, πῶς οὐ δεινὰ εἴργασθε; καὶ ταῦτα τρεῖς ἀδικίας ἐν ὀλίγῳ πράξαντες, τήν τε λυθεῖσαν ὁμολογίαν, καὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν Testament, Numb. x. 30, it is said, 'I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.' And again, 2 Sam. xix. 12, 'Ye are my brethren, ye are my bones and my flesh.' See also Acts vii. 19. On the term ἐνσπόνδους see note at ch. 68.

Ch. LXVI. 1. Having justified their own intentions in the attempt to occupy the city, as one of an amicable nature, they proceed to recriminate on the Platæans; q. d. 'We came in amity, but you treated us in a manner unjustifiable to the most inveterate hostility; you entrapped us, and then, breaking your solemn engagements, treacherously murdered us.' Πολιτεύειν here signifies simply to live in a city, to demean oneself as a citizen there; a sense which it also bears supra ch. 34, 1, and Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 16. Hist. iii. 1, 18. So also πολιτεύειν κατὰ in Xen. Hist. ii. 3, 2, καθ' οὓς [νόμους] πολιτεύειν.

2. χωρήσαντες] Supply πρὸς ἡμᾶς from the preceding. The words a little after, εἰ ἄρα καὶ ἐδοκοῦμεν — ἐσελθόντες, are parenthetical, and may be rendered, 'even though [granting that] we had even seemed to have done something rather harsh, by making an entry without the consent of the people at large.' Τὶ ἀνεπιεικέστερον is not well rendered aliquid iniquius. It means rather, 'a somewhat harsh or violent procedure:' a sense rare, indeed, yet found in Arrian, E. A. iv. 21, 16, ἀνεπιεικές τι ἐς τὸν Χορ. ἔργον ἀποδείξασθαι· also iii. 22, 3. Dio Cass. 183, 13, καί τοι τί ἄδικον ἢ ἀνεπιεικὲς—ἐποίησα; At οὐ μετὰ τοῦ πλήθους ὑμῶν there is a sort of Atticism; of which the meaning is, 'without the consent of the common people;' the persons who called them being, as we find, ἄνδρες οἱ πρῶτοι.

τὰ ὁμοῖα οὐκ ἀνταπέδοτε] Compare ch. 63, 6, οὐκ ἴσην αὐτοῖς τὴν χάριν ἀνταπέδοτε, and the expression ὅμοιαι χάριτες, pares gratiæ. At μήτε νεωτερίσαι supply ὥστε, and see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 532. Of νεωτερίζειν the sense is here to commit violence, as at ii. 3, ἐς οὐδένα οὐδὲν ἐνεωτέριζον. Vain is it that Haack, Herm., and Arnold attempt to account for and justify the reading πείσειν. It is plain that the true reading is πεῖσαι, which was conjectured by Poppo, and has been supported by the authority of one good MS., and will, I suspect, be found in others. Certain it is that the terminations αι and ειν are in manuscript characters so similar as scarcely to be distinguished.

In the next words, ἐπιθέμενοι, &c., the construction is well indicated by Poppo as follows: ''Επιθέμενοι proximo ἀπεκτείνατε accommodatum est, et verba ἐπιθέμενοι δὲ παρὰ τὴν ξύμβασιν relativo anteposita sunt, quod et ad ambo membra relativa οὓς μὲν — οὓς δὲ pertinent, et superioribus τὰ μὲν ὅμοια οὐκ ἀνταπέδοτε ἡμῖν contraria sunt.' Of ἐν χερσὶν the sense is, 'in actual contest,' literally, 'hand to hand;' as often in the historians. On the expression, a little after, χεῖρας προϊσχομένους, see note supra ch. 58, 3.

πῶς οὐ δεινὰ εἴργασθε;] Here the interrogation partakes of the nature of exclamation, as in Isæus, p. 27, πῶς οὐκ ἂν δεινὸν τὸ πρᾶγμα εἶναι δοκοίη; And here the negative thus put in interrogation implies a strong affirmative, as supra ii. 60, πῶς οὐ χρὴ—ἀμύνειν αὐτῇ; and Xen. Mem. iv. 3, 8, πῶς οὐχ ὑπὲρ λόγον; ἀνέκφραστον. Demosth. Epist. iii. πῶς οὐκ ἀτυχής εἰμι;

The accusatives τὴν λυθεῖσαν ὁμολογίαν, and those which follow, are in τὸν ὕστερον θάνατον, καὶ τὴν περὶ αὐτῶν ἡμῖν μὴ κτείνειν ψευσθεῖσαν ὑπόσχεσιν, ἣν τὰ ἐν τοῖς ἀγροῖς ὑμῖν μὴ ἀδικῶμεν, ὅμως φατὲ ἡμᾶς παρανομῆσαι, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀξιοῦτε μὴ ἀντιδοῦναι δίκην. οὐκ, ἤν γε οὗτοι τὰ ὀρθὰ γιγνώσκωσι· πάντων δὲ αὐτῶν ἕνεκα κολασθήσεσθε. LXVII. Καὶ ταῦτα, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, τούτου ἕνεκα ἐπεξήλθομεν, καὶ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν καὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα ὑμεῖς μὲν εἰδῆτε δικαίως αὐτῶν κατα-γνωσόμενοι, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἔτι ὁσιώτερον τετιμωρημένοι. 2. καὶ μὴ παλαιὰς apposition with ἀδικίας, serving to explain what these were, and so form an appositio explicativa. Καὶ ταῦτα bears the sense idque, et quidem. Evidently imitated from these are the words of Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 77, 10, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τρία τὰ μέγιστα παρενομήσατε, τὸ, &c. καὶ — καὶ, &c. In this use of the participles λυθεῖσαν and ψευσθεῖσαν, we have, as Bauer remarks, what is equivalent to the substantives with gen. and an inf., namely, τὸ λυθῆναι τὴν ὁμολογίαν and τὸ ψευσθῆναι τὴν ὑπόσχεσιν. Of which phrases one occurs in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 617, and the other in another passage of the same writer, p. 367, ult. See more in note at v. 83.

I have here thought proper, with Poppo, to recal the vulg. ὑπόσχεσιν, for which ὑπόθεσιν was edited, from a few ancient MSS., by Bekker and Goeller. But so little suitable is the sense yielded by the latter, that no authority of MSS. would avail to establish it: and indeed the former is absolutely called for by the facts of the case, as narrated at ii. 5, ὑποσχόμενοι, &c. In short, it may be supposed that ὑπόθ. was a mere error of the scribes, to whom the common word ὑπόθεσις was better known than the less usual one ὑπόσχεσις.

After ἀδικῶμεν I have, with Bekker and Poppo, placed a comma, because, as Bauer saw, had ὅμως commenced a new sentence, καὶ or δὲ would have been added.

οὐκ] 'no! not if.' This use of οὐκ is frequent in the best Attic writers, and so employed the word is generally followed by ἤν or εἰ and a verb dependent thereon; sometimes by ἀλλὰ, in which case it should be pointed thus: οὐκ· 'no indeed!'

Ch. LXVII. 1. Having despatched the justificatory and recriminatory part of the oration, the speakers now, after a brief but earnest admonition to them against being worked upon by false compassion, proceed to the hortatory part as regarded the Lacedæmonians; in the course of which a strong appeal is made to the passions, to induce the Spartans to avenge the wrong done to themselves, by punishing the guilty as they merit. This most powerful part of the oration is, however, brought forward not abruptly, but is ushered in by a brief introductory remark in justification of the vehemence of these invectives, in which justice forsooth is pleaded as warranting, nay demanding, every extremity. This prefatory section may, then, be rendered, 'We have, Lacedæmonians, entered thus at large into the matter as well for our own sakes as for yours; namely, in order that you, on the one hand, may know, that you are going to condemn them justly, (i. e. that they will be justly condemned by you,) and we [may know] that we even more justly and equitably have avenged ourselves of them.'

Of ἐπεξήλθομεν ταῦτα the sense is, not, 'we have enlarged on these things,' but, 'we have gone over, (for such is the force of the ἐπι) have treated on these matters,' oratione persecuti sumus, as at i. 22, ἐπεξελθών, scil. ταῦτα, and Pseudo-Herodot. Vit. Hom. 1, ζητήσας ἐπεξελθεῖν (περὶ Ὁμήρου γενέσιος καὶ βιοτῆς). The words following, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἔτι ὁσιώτερον τετιμωρημένοι, cannot be otherwise rendered than as above, at least with any due regard to propriety of language. Poppo, who has well seen their sense, points out that τετιμ. is of the middle, not the passive, voice. It may be observed, too, that the use of the preterite tense has here no little force, as taking for granted that the deed is already done: and by so considering it, there is no occasion, with Heilm., to render the preterite as if it were a future. The only real difficulty rests on the εἰδῶμεν requiring to be supplied, in the second clause, from εἰδῆτε in the first; which, however, cannot well bear the sense that the term does in the first: for surely explanations were not needed to convince themselves of the lawfulness of their revenge. Accordingly, in supplying εἰδῶμεν, it is proper to understand the term with a certain modification of sense suitable to the context,—namely, as follows: 'that we may know and feel,' i. e. have a full assurance, be fully persuaded: the kind of knowledge here meant being that knowledge of a ἀρετὰς,—εἴ τις ἄρα καὶ ἐγένετο,—ἀκούοντες ἐπικλασθῆτε, ἃς χρὴ τοῖς μὲν ἀδικουμένοις ἐπικούρους εἶναι, τοῖς δὲ αἰσχρόν τι δρῶσι διπλασίας ζημίας, ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ προσηκόντων ἁμαρτάνουσι. 3. μηδὲ ὀλοφυρμῷ καὶ οἴκτῳ ὠφελείσθωσαν, πατέρων τε τάφους τῶν ὑμετέρων ἐπιβοώμενοι καὶ τὴν σφετέραν ἐρημίαν. 4. καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἀνταποφαίνομεν πολλῷ δεινότερα παθοῦσαν τὴν ὑπὸ τούτων ἡλικίαν ἡμῶν διεφθαρμένην, ὧν πατέρες οἱ μὲν πρὸς ὑμᾶς τὴν Βοιωτίαν ἄγοντες ἀπέθανον ἐν Κορωνείᾳ, οἱ δὲ, πρεσβῦται λελειμμένοι, καὶ οἰκίαι ἔρημοι, πολλῷ δικαιοτέραν ὑμῶν ἱκετείαν ποιοῦνται τούσδε τιμωρήσασθαι. 5. οἴκτου τε ἀξιώτεροι τυγχάνειν οἱ ἀπρεπές τι πάσχοντες τῶν ἀνθρώπων· οἱ δὲ δικαίως, ὥσπερ οἵδε, τὰ ἐναντία ἐπίχαρτοι εἶναι. 6. καὶ τὴν νῦν ἐρημίαν δι' ἑαυτοὺς ἔχουσι· τοὺς γὰρ ἀμείνους ξυμμάχους ἑκόντες ἀπεώσαντο· παρηνόμησάν τε οὐ thing which is derived from the testimony or information of others. This is a sense not unfrequently found in verbs of knowing, in all languages. One example will suffice: 1 Tim. iv. 3, τοῖς ἐπεγνωκόσι τὴν ἀλήθειαν, 'have fully,' &c.

2. Now commences the hortatory portion. Of ἐπικούρους εἶναι τοῖς the literal sense is, 'to be helpful to the,' &c.: a use of ἐπικ. found in the best writers. Διπλασίας ζημίας, scil. εἶναι, 'ought to cause doubled penalties to them.' For εἶναι Arnold thinks that ἐπιφέρειν is required; but Poppo well defends the former, from the phrase ἔστι τί μοι ζημία, 'mihi aliquid pœna est;' and aptly illustrates the sentiment from i. 86, 1. Οὐκ ἐκ προσηκόντων stands for ἐξ οὐ προσηκ. (as in Plato, p. 70, οὐ περὶ τῶν προσηκόντων λόγους ποιοῦμαι) and may be regarded as a phrase for an adverb, οὐ προσηκόντως, like ἐκ τῶν δικαίων for δικαίως in Aristoph. Nub. 1116: though, as manner is denoted by the ἐκ, we may more exactly render 'in a manner abhorrent from, contrary to their native character and disposition.' So supra ch. 64, οὐ προσήκοντα. Arnold quite mistakes the force of the expression by explaining 'contrary to what we have a right to expect of them:' and as to the passage which he adduces in proof of this sense from Aristot. Rhet. i. 9, where it is called acting κατὰ τὸ προσῆκον, if a man's actions are ἄξια τῶν προγόνων καὶ προϋπηργμένων, that rather serves to establish the view I have above adopted; the sense there being, 'agreeable to his nature,' as in the parallel passage supra ch. 64, ἃ μέν ποτε χρηστοὶ ἐγένεσθε — οὐ προσήκοντα νῦν ἐπεδείξατε, where Arnold himself renders, 'not agreeable to your nature.'

3. ἐπιβοώμενοι] 'invoking,' as supra ch. 59, 2, where see note. Τὴν σφετέραν ἐρημίαν, as the Schol. observes, alludes to the words of the Platæans, ch. 57, περιεώσμεθα ἐκ πάντων ἔρημοι.

4. ἡλικίαν] So juventus, in Latin, for juvenes; and youth, in English, for young men. Πρὸς ὑμᾶς τὴν Βοιωτίαν ἄγοντες, 'in bringing over Bœotia to [your alliance].' At καὶ οἰκίαι ἔρημοι repeat ὧν from the preceding, 'whose bereaved and orphan families.'

5. οἱ—τῶν ἀνθρώπων] 'those men,' literally, 'those of men.' At δικαίως repeat πάσχοντές τι. In τὰ ἐναντία, 'on the contrary,' we have an adverbial phrase. Ἐπίχαρτοι, 'objects of rejoicing,' meaning, as the Scholiast explains, 'those over whose sufferings all men should rejoice,' or rather 'do rejoice,' since, as says Solomon, Prov. xi. 3, ἐπίχαρτος ἀσεβῶν ἀπώλεια. The term is one used both of things that are matter of rejoicing, (as Soph. Trach. 1263, ἐπίχαρτον — ἔργον, and Æschyl. Prom. 164, ἐχθροῖς ἐπίχαρτα πέπονθα,) and also, nay indeed chiefly, of persons, as Æschyl. Ag. 700, ἄμερον, εὐφιλόπαιδα, καὶ γεραιοῖς ἐπίχαρτον, 'an object of delight to the aged.' Evidently imitated from which is the expression in Alciphr. ii. 4, p. 246, διαλάμπεις ἐπίχαρτον καὶ εὐκταῖον. The expression in Æschyl. was, I apprehend, parodied by Aristoph. in a fragment of his Centaur preserved in Pollux, Onomast. ix. 36, ἐν κωμήτισι καπηλοῖς τ' ἐπίχαρτον, 'an object of merriment,' i. e. fit only to be laughed at. So Demosth. 1127, 11, μὴ περιΐδητε τὰς ἐμαυτοῦ θυγατέρας τοῖς ἐμαυτοῦ δούλοις ἐπιχάρτους γενομένας. Plato, Epist. 6, βαρβάροις ἐπίχαρτος γενόμενος, ludibrium. Plut. de Garrul. 19, παντάπασιν ἐπίχαρτος γίνεται καὶ καταγέλαστος.

προπαθόντες ὑφ' ἡμῶν, μίσει δὲ πλέον ἢ δίκῃ κρίναντες, καὶ οὐκ ἀνταποδόντες νῦν τὴν ἴσην τιμωρίαν. ἔννομα γὰρ πείσονται, καὶ οὐχὶ ἐκ μάχης χεῖρας προϊσχόμενοι, ὥσπερ φασὶν, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ ξυμβάσεως ἐς δίκην σφᾶς αὐτοὺς παραδόντες. 7. ἀμύνατε οὖν, ὦ Λακε-

At οὐκ ἀνταποδόντες the editors, with some reason, stumble, from πείσονται following in the same sentence. Accordingly, regarding the word ἀντ. as corrupt, they would read ἀνταποδιδόντες or ἂν ἀνταποδόντες, or, again, ἀνταποδώσοντες: of which several conjectures the third recedes too far from the letters to be with any propriety admitted; and as to the second, it may be doubted whether it would be good Greek, or indeed whether it would remove the difficulty. The first is preferable. But the present reading may very well be tolerated, if at least it be regarded, not,—as it is by the Translators,—in the light of a future tense. The present reading may, I repeat, be tolerated, nay regarded as having both propriety and force,—if, taking the aorist, in its usual sense, of time past, we suppose the Thebans here, as at § 1, in the term τετιμωρημένοι, speaking of the punishment, by anticipation, as already suffered,—and that by way of strongly intimating, and so tending to bring about the actual events, § 6: on which use of the aorist (also found in the preterite) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 506, where mention is made of the idiom of past used of what is future, in order to intimate the completion of the action; examples of which occur in St. John, xv. 6, ἐὰν μή τις μένῃ ἐν ἐμοὶ, ἐβλήθη ἔξω, meaning 'he will be speedily cast out;' and v. 24, εἰς κρίσιν οὐκ ἔρχεται, ἀλλὰ μεταβέβηκεν ἐκ τοῦ θανάτου εἰς τὴν ζωήν. The idiom in question bears a strong affinity to the use of the prophetic aorist, found in Rev. xviii. 2, ἔπεσεν, ἔπεσε Βαβυλών. It is scarcely necessary to say, that punishment is by the Greek philosophers always considered as the penalty paid for crime,—by which the offender makes a return (ἀντὶ) to society for the injury he has thereby done it. It may indeed be said, that if death be not an ἴση τιμωρία, what can? since surely no worse can be inflicted. See ch. 45. This, however, will be only like that sort of overstrained language, by which, in common parlance, it is said of criminals of the worst description, that death is too good for them. Nothing is there to negative the above view in the next words, ἔννομα γὰρ πείσονται, because they have nothing to do with the sentence: and, accordingly, in all the editions down to Bauer's, a full stop was placed at τιμωρίαν, which Poppo altered to a colon; while Bekker threw the words ἔννομα γὰρ πείσονται into a parenthesis; a procedure undoubtedly ill-judged; for, by thus joining the words with παρηνόμησαν, a sense arises any thing but apt. The participles προϊσχόμενοι and παραδόντες must, as all the other editors and translators have seen, depend upon πείσονται: yet they can have no connexion with καὶ οὐκ ἀνταποδόντες τ. τιμ., since it would be out of place to follow up the assertion, that 'they suffered lawfully.' Hence I conclude that the former editors were right in placing a period, and that a new sentence commences at ἔννομα, in which the γὰρ has that frequent elliptical use treated of by Hoogeveen, Buttm., Herm., and Matth.; by which it has reference to some assertion which is omitted, and left to be understood, and for which it gives the reason. One example must suffice; and that shall be the one first adduced by Hoogeveen, namely, Aristoph. Plut. 245, where to Plutus complaining that at every house, whether of miser or of prodigal, to which he has approached, he has been repulsed, Chremylus replies, Μετρίου γὰρ ἀνδρὸς οὐκ ἐπέτυχες πώποτε· where Hoogeveen supplies οὐδὲν δεινὸν πάσχεις. And here οὐδὲν δεινὸν ποιεῖτε, or such like, might be supplied. But, in fact, the words are meant to anticipate the objection, that their punishment, however severe, though richly deserved, would not be legal. To which the answer (to be supplied) is, '[Not so;] for they will suffer legally, namely, not, as they say, men with uplifted hands, from battle suppliants, (with allusion to the words of the Platæans, ch. 58, 2, ἑκόντας τε ἐλάβετε καὶ χεῖρας προϊσχομένους, ὃ δὲ νόμος τοῖς Ἕλλησι μὴ κτείνειν τούτους,) but those on capitulation who delivered themselves up for trial.'

7. Now comes the ἐπίλογος, which deals in grave exhortation and earnest entreaty, followed up by strong representation of the good that will ensue from the wholesome severity thus exercised; the latter at length couched, for greater effect, in a weighty maxim of policy.

ἀμύνατε — τῷ τῶν Ἑλλήνων νόμῳ] This form of expression, by which a law

δαιμόνιοι, καὶ τῷ τῶν Ἑλλήνων νόμῳ ὑπὸ τῶνδε παραβαθέντι, καὶ ἡμῖν ἄνομα παθοῦσιν ἀνταπόδοτε χάριν δικαίαν ὧν πρόθυμοι γεγενήμεθα· καὶ μὴ τοῖς τῶνδε λόγοις περιωσθῶμεν ἐν ὑμῖν, ποιήσατε δὲ τοῖς Ἕλλησι παράδειγμα οὐ λόγων τοὺς ἀγῶνας προθήσοντες ἀλλ' ἔργων· ὧν ἀγαθῶν μὲν ὄντων, βραχεῖα ἡ ἀπαγγελία ἀρκεῖ, ἁμαρτανομένων δὲ, λόγοι ἔπεσι κοσμηθέντες προκαλύμματα γίγνονται. 8. ἀλλ' ἦν οἱ ἡγεμόνες, ὥσπερ νῦν ὑμεῖς, κεφαλαιώσαντες πρὸς τοὺς is said to be aided when the breach of it is punished by condign punishment, is so rare, that I have not met with any other example except in Eurip. Orest. 516, Ἀμυνῶ δ'—τῷ νόμῳ. The law here meant is that which enjoined παρὰ τὰς σπονδὰς μηδὲν ἀναιρεῖν, and that the Platæans had violated. So supra ch. 66, οὓς παρανόμως διεφθείρατε. Here ἄνομα παθοῦσιν is meant to correspond to ἔννομα πείσονται a little before. And in ἀνταπόδοτε χάριν δικαίαν (where χάριν stands for ἀντίχαριν) there is a hit on the words of the Platæans, ch. 58, σώφρονα—κομίσασθαι χάριν, q. d. 'They wish you to receive of us an honest return of gratitude for services rendered; and we ask of you a just return for our zeal in your cause.' In πρόθυμοι γεγενήμεθα the speakers glance at the words of the Platæans, ch. 59, οἱ προθυμότατοι—γενόμενοι, q. d. 'We, too, have a zeal in your service to allege, which may well overbalance the zeal in the service of Greece to which they lay claim.' So again, in the words μὴ—περιωσθῶμεν ἐν ὑμῖν, there is a hit on the words of the Platæans at ch. 57, περιεώσμεθα ἐκ πάντων Πλαταιῆς, q. d. 'They complain of being spurned and repulsed by all, and we say, Let not us be spurned and meet with a repulse of our request from you.' In ποιήσατε παράδειγμα προθήσοντες we have a condensed form of expression for π. παρ. ᾧ δειχθήσεται ὅτι προθήσετε. Of προτιθέναι ἀγῶνας the sense is certamina proponere, 'to set forth publicly:' a rare form of expression; though ἆθλα προτιθέναι is not unfrequent. The phrase λόγων ἀγῶνας has reference to that sort of oratorical gymnastics then prevalent, to which Cleon alludes at ch. 37, in the words ξυνέσεως ἀγῶνι, and again in those further on, ἐκ τῶν τοιῶνδε ἀγώνων—ἀγωνοθετοῦντες. The τοὺς before ἀγῶνας is not, as might seem—and as the Schol. says it is—pleonastic; the full sense being, as Poppo points out, 'the contests which ye will set forth, ye will set forth not of words, but of deeds.'

λόγοι ἔπεσι κοσμηθέντες προκαλύμματα γίγνονται] Of these words the meaning is, 'speeches adorned with fine words and rhetorical ornaments.' So Soph. Aj. 1072, τοιαῦθ' ἁμαρτάνουσιν ἐν λόγοις ἔπη, where, as Erfurdt remarks, by λόγοι are denoted the whole; by ἔπη, the parts. And so Damm, in his Lex. Hom. in v. ἔπος, says, 'λόγοι constant ἔπεσι, orationes verbis.' After all, however, by ἔπεσι may rather be denoted those pithy dicta, or political maxims, which the ancients used to be fond of introducing into their speeches; and in which, we may suppose, the hearers took some delight. Though, when we consider how much more delighted the Athenians were with those word-traps, (consisting in all sorts of rhetorical turns and ornaments of a refined composition,) such I am inclined to think is what is here meant by ἔπεσι, understanding it to mean not simply words, as opposed to actions, but sentences turned with all the refinements of an elaborate composition, and set off with all the arts of rhetoric. Now such might as properly be termed ἔπη as a verse in poetry was styled ἔπος, and especially as says the above lexicographer on this word, 'quia poësis heroica κατ' ἐξοχὴν aptam verborum collocationem et electionem quærit.' And the same sense should perhaps be assigned at ii. 41, οὔτε ὅστις ἔπεσι μὲν τὸ αὐτίκα τέρψει, τῶν δ' ἔργων τὴν ὑπόνοιαν ἡ ἀλήθεια βλάψει, and not verses. By προκαλύμματα understand velamenta, 'a cloak to cover their baseness.' So Lucian, i. 659, πρ. τῆς βδελυρίας, and iii. 188. Jos. 1219, 7, πρ. τῆς ἐπιβουλῆς. Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 77, πρ. τῆς ἀπάτης, and 1 Pet. ii. 16, ἐπικάλυμμα τῆς κακίας. With the general sentiment here, Poppo aptly compares the similar one in Sallust, Jug. 85, 'Ipsa se virtus satis ostendit: illis artificio opus est, ut turpia facta oratione tegant.'

8. The whole is now summed up in a pithy political maxim, ἦν οἱ ἡγεμόνες, &c., of which the meaning is well expressed by Arnold as follows: 'If all persons in authority were to punish criminals without ξύμπαντας διαγνώμας ποιήσησθε, ἧσσόν τις ἐπ' ἀδίκοις ἔργοις λόγους καλοὺς ζητήσει."

LXVIII. Τοιαῦτα δὲ οἱ Θηβαῖοι εἶπον. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι δικασταὶ, νομίζοντες τὸ ἐπερώτημα σφίσιν ὀρθῶς ἔξειν, "εἴ τι ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ ὑπ' αὐτῶν ἀγαθὸν πεπόνθασι," διότι τόν τε ἄλλον χρόνον ἠξίουν δῆθεν αὐτοὺς κατὰ τὰς παλαιὰς Παυσανίου μετὰ τὸν Μῆδον σπονδὰς ἡσυχάζειν, καὶ ὅτε ὕστερον, ἃ πρὸ τοῦ περιτειχίζεσθαι προletting themselves be misled by sophistry and eloquence, in the manner that you will do now, if you sum up the case in brief, and decide upon all these criminals together, then men will be less tempted to trust to fair words as a screen for ill actions.' In his note, Arnold remarks on the 'strange confusion which exists in the composition of this sentence, from the verb ποιήσησθε being made to agree with ὑμεῖς, and κεφαλ. πρὸς τοὺς ξύμπαντας being put as if it were the general principle recommended, instead of being an exemplification of it in this particular case.' Yet the confusion in question is not to be ascribed to negligence, but rather to the peculiar brevity of expression so characteristic of our author, and which is especially found on occasions like the present, when vigour and point would be thus alike promoted. Of κεφαλαιώσαντες the full sense is, 'after having summed up the cause in brief;' the term being used, Poppo observes, 'de brevi agendi et cognoscendi ratione, quæ non fallitur verborum cultu.' So infra viii. 53, κεφαλαιοῦντες ἐκ πολλῶν, for ξυντετιμημένως λέγοντες, summatim perstringentes; and Dio Cass. 616, 53, κεφαλαιώσας ἐρῶ τοῦτο, and 801, 49. Ecclus. xxxii. 9, κεφαλαίωσον—ἐν ὀλίγοις πολλά.

Ch. LXVIII. 1. σφίσιν ὀρθῶς ἔξειν] literally, 'would be right,' i. e. advantageous, 'for them;' ὀρθῶς here standing for καλῶς: a very rare idiom, of which I know no other examples than the following: Xen. Hipp. viii. 10, ὀρθῶς ἔχειν τῷ ἐλκομένῳ ἐπελαύνειν τὸν ἵππον, and Hist. v. 2, 39, ὀρθῶς ἔχειν τὰ δένδρα μεταβάλλειν. So in our language the word right sometimes bears the sense favourable, (see Johnson's Dict.) and such is occasionally the use of rectè in Latin for utiliter, as in Hor. Sat. ii. 7, 112, 'non otia rectè ponere.' Of νομίζοντες τὸ ἐπερώτημα σφίσιν ὀρθῶς ἔξειν, Arnold explains the meaning to be, 'thinking their question might fairly be put.' But this sense the words themselves will by no means admit; σφίσι belonging to ἔξειν, not to ἐπερώτημα. And moreover, supposing such were the sense, how could we account for the verb being in the future tense, where the past or present would thus be indispensable? And yet, to take ἔξειν, with Bauer, as standing for ἔχειν, is forbidden by every principle of propriety; and, with Poppo, to read ἔχειν, for ἔξειν, on mere conjecture, is forbidden by the unanimous testimony of the MSS. in favour of ἔξειν: though, from the words following seeming to demand the sense in question, we may suppose that a double sense is contained in the words ὀρθῶς ἔξειν, namely, 1. as in common parlance we say, 'would do very well,' 'be all right for them;' and 2. as referred to the words following, διότι, &c., 'would be right,' i. e. would be thought right and proper to be done. The words from διότι forwards have the appearance of being parenthetical, and so they are regarded by Portus and Dukas; though these commentators are not agreed whether the parenthesis terminates at πεπονθέναι, or at ἐδέξαντο. That, however, will best appear from an examination of the passage in detail. Of the portion διότι—ἡσυχάζειν, the sense is, 'for they had, forsooth, both during the rest of the time requested them to remain quiet, agreeably to the ancient covenant of Pausanias after the Median war, and,' &c. By τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον understand the whole period which intervened between the battle of Platæa and the late invasion of Platæa by the Lacedæmonians under Archidamus. Δῆθεν merely serves to intimate, that what is said in this parenthetical and explanatory portion contains rather what the party in question alleged, than what was strictly true: a use of the word not unfrequent in Thucyd. and the best writers. So ch. 111, 1, ἅμα ξυλλέγοντες ἐφ' ἃ ἐξῆλθον δῆθεν, 'for which they pretended they had gone forth.' Ἡσυχάζειν answers exactly to our phrase 'to be quiet,' which often means to not mix up oneself in the quarrels of others,—of course, implying neutrality, which is the very sense here intended, as appears from ii. 72, where Archidamus says to them, εἴχοντο αὐτοῖς, κοινοὺς εἶναι κατ' ἐκεῖνα ὡς οὐκ ἐδέξαντο,—ἡγούμενοι τῇ ἑαυτῶν δικαίᾳ βουλήσει ἔκσπονδοι ἤδη ὑπ' αὐτῶν κακῶς πεπονθέναι—αὖθις τὸ αὐτὸ ἕνα ἕκαστον παραγαγόντες καὶ ἐρωτῶντες, ἡσυχίαν ἄγετε, νεμόμενοι τὰ ὑμέτερα αὐτῶν, καὶ ἔστε μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων. And so I would understand the word in a disputed passage of Æschyl. Prom. 352, ἀλλ' ἡσύχαζε, σαυτὸν ἐκποδὼν ἔχων, q. d. 'Be quiet, keep yourself out of this dispute between me and Jupiter.' Some affinity to this exists in the expression of St. Paul, 1 Thess. iv. 11, παρακαλοῦμεν ὑμᾶς—ἡσυχάζειν καὶ πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια, where is forbidden that disposition which excites persons to a restless intermeddling with their neighbours' concerns, to the neglect of their own affairs.

καὶ ὅτε ὕστερον—κακῶς πεπονθέναι] Of this awkwardly-worded portion all attempts to make out any grammatical construction have been fruitless; nor are any of the conjectures proposed, or the interpretations founded thereon, such as to be confidently acquiesced in. As to Goeller's conjectures, they amount to little less than re-writing the passage; and not without reason is it that Poppo advances objections to these and all the conjectures and modes of construction and interpretation hitherto propounded. Of the various alterations that have been proposed, the least violent would be to change ὅτε into ὅτι, and cancel the ὡς, or, retaining the ὡς, to strike out the ὅτε. Yet there is nothing in the MSS. to countenance either of these changes: and so difficult were it to account for the introduction of ὅτι either by the scribes or critics, that I cannot but feel a strong impression that the passage runs exactly as it was written by the author, though not as it ought to have been written, with any regard either to good composition or perspicuity of sense. Yet there is, after all, nothing so inextricable in the construction as the commentators represent. The difficulty in this part of the sentence is, I apprehend, occasioned by the author, as often, for brevity's sake, and to prevent the repetition of the same phrase οὐκ ἐδέξαντο (for expressed at length the words would have stood thus: εἶναι κατ' ἐκεῖνα οὐκ ἐδέξαντο) having written ὡς οὐκ ἐδέξαντο; though by doing this he broke up the parenthesis, and let it run into the portion extra parenthesin. If this be thought to take too much for granted, we must, with Portus, suppose the construction to be as follows: καὶ ὡς οὐκ ἐδέξαντο ἃ προείχοντο αὐτοῖς, ὅτε ὕστερον [προείχοντο] προτειχίζεσθαι. κοινοὺς εἶναι κατ' ἐκεῖνα. This, however, supposes so very harsh a transposition, that the former mode seems preferable. Certainly the ὡς cannot be dispensed with, because it serves to note one of the two reasons on which the Lacedæmonians grounded the defence of their present conduct. At any rate we must take προείχοντο twice, thus: ὅτε ὕστερον προείχοντο ἃ προείχοντο, as at viii. 27, (where ἀγωνίσασθαι must be taken twice,) and not unfrequently in Thucydides, Herodotus, and other of the best writers. Finally, the ὅτε will not admit of being altered to ὅτι, because καὶ ὅτε ὕστερον corresponds to τόν τε ἄλλον χρόνον. Render, 'And when afterwards they proffered to them the offer which they made before they were besieged, to be neutral (lit. common to both parties), agreeable to those same terms, they received it not.' Κατ' ἐκεῖνα, of course, has reference to the words preceding, τὰς παλαιὰς Παυσανίου σπονδάς. The two portions, διότι τόν τε—οὐκ ἐδέξαντο, and ὡς οὐκ ἐδέξαντο, contain the two reasons which the Lacedæmonians alleged in justification of the course they were pursuing, and by which to prove that the putting of this brief interrogatory was a right course for them to take,—namely, because that interrogatory, as it only admitted of the answer 'none at all,' implied that the prisoners were their enemies, and hence that they might rightfully put them to death.

In the words ἡγούμενοι—πεπονθέναι, there is, as in the foregoing, a blending of two clauses into one: but the sense arising will depend on the acceptation in which βουλήσει is taken. Now almost all the commentators from Portus to Arnold assign to it the sense postulato or postulatione, 'request.' Arnold, following Portus, renders, 'thinking that in consequence of their just request or proposal [being refused], they were released,' &c. But there is surely an intolerable harshness in supposing so much sense left to be mentally supplied: and the novel, not to say ill-grounded, sense assigned, ought to have led Arnold, not, indeed, to 'suspect the words τῇ ἑαυτῶν δικαίᾳ βουλ. to be insititious,' but to reject a sense requiring such an unauthorized ellipsis, and to suppose that some other must be intended. Now that, I apprehend, is consilio, intention; a signification of the word not unfrequent in the best writers from Plato and Xenophon downwards, perhaps including Thucyd. iii. 39, ἐλπίσαντας μακρότερα μὲν τῆς δυνάμεως, ἐλάσσω δὲ τῆς βουλήσεως, &c. Render, 'accounting that with perfectly just intentions of their own, they had now become out of covenant with them, and had received injury at their hands.' The construction is, ἡγούμενοι ὄντες ἤδη ὑπ' αὐτῶν κακῶς πεπονθέναι.

"εἴ τι Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἀγαθὸν ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ δεδρακότες εἰσὶν," ὁπότε μὴ φαῖεν, ἀπάγοντες ἀπέκτεινον, καὶ ἐξαίρετον ἐποιήσαντο οὐδένα. 2. διέφθειραν δὲ Πλαταιῶν μὲν αὐτῶν οὐκ ἐλάσσους διακοσίων, Ἀθηναίων δὲ πέντε καὶ εἴκοσιν, οἳ ξυνεπολιορκοῦντο· γυναῖκας δὲ ἠνδραπόδισαν. 3. τὴν δὲ πόλιν ἐνιαυτὸν μέν τινα Θηβαῖοι Μεγαρέων ἀνδράσι κατὰ στάσιν ἐκπεπτωκόσι, καὶ ὅσοι τὰ σφέτερα φρονοῦντες Πλαταιῶν περιῆσαν, ἔδοσαν ἐνοικεῖν· ὕστε-

It may be supposed, then, that the difficulty and obscurity in this passage was occasioned by our author not having kept the discussion of the two reasons on which the Lacedæmonians grounded the defence of their present conduct, as he at first intended, within a parenthesis, but allowed the latter part of it to run out of the parenthesis. Had he kept them within the parenthesis, the words ἡγούμενοι, &c. would have been simply a resumption of the construction and sense at νομίζοντες τὸ ἐπερώτημα σφίσιν ὀρθῶς ἔξειν. But as the case now stands, the words ὡς οὐκ ἐδέξαντο belong rather to the words following than the preceding; or perhaps to both: and this view (which was first propounded by me in my Translation) has, I find, been since adopted by Poppo. Finally, what is wanting to the sense at βουλήσει, may be best supplied from οὐκ ἐδέξαντο, thus: 'accounting accordingly, (i. e. as they had not accepted their offer,) they were already out of covenant with, and had received injury at their hands,' i. e. had become not merely ἔκσπονδοι, but enemies: where the term ἔκσπ. is to be understood of the Lacedæmonians. They considered themselves now ἔκσπονδοι as to the Platæans; implying that they were such to them, out of the pale of civil compact with them, and therefore might do what they would with them, and, as they were become enemies, would be fully justified in putting them to death. So far, indeed, from the words τῇ ἑαυτῶν δικαίᾳ βουλήσει being, what Arnold supposes them, a corruption of some lost reading, or a mere scholium, they contain the very gist of the whole question. The Lacedæmonians wished to show themselves to be free of blame in the matter, and as the intention constitutes an action to be either good or bad, so they allege that, with the best intentions on their part, they had come into the position of ἔκσπονδοι, and consequently enemies.

The words following, τὸ αὐτὸ ἕνα ἕκαστον, are, as Poppo and Goeller observe, to be taken as put for ἕνα ἕκαστον παραγαγόντες, ('having brought up each individual,') καὶ αὖθις τὸ αὐτὸ [ἐπερώτημα] ἐρωτῶντες. And they adduce examples of the same peculiarity of idiom elsewhere; referring to Pflugk on Eurip. Hec. 605, and other critics. With respect to ἀπάγοντες, a little after, it is a sort of conventional term, like abducere in Latin, to signify taking away to execution. Παραγαγόντες, a little before, is rendered by Poppo præterducentes, 'having led them along.' I would, however, rather render, 'having brought each up,' namely, for interrogation, nearly equiv. to proferentes, 'bringing forward.' And so in this sense 'to bring forward' for judgment or condemnation, the word is used in Demosth. 285 and 805. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 445, 37.

Of ὁπότε μὴ φαῖεν the sense is not, what Hobbes assigns, 'when they had answered not,' but, 'when they had answered no.' The reason why μὴ is used, and not οὐ or οὐκ, is that the negative is used in a dependent proposition suspended on a condition; on which idiom see Matth. Gr. § 608, b. Ἐξαίρετον, just after, stands for ἐκκεκριμένον, or ἀφειμένον, it being meant that they made a reserve of no one, not even, it seems, of Lacon, though πρόξενος τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων.

3. ἐνιαυτὸν μέν τινα] 'about a year.' This use of τις, answering to that of our some, is indeed almost confined to numbers, as we say 'some two,' 'three,' &c. But here ἕνα may be understood, which is expressed at vi. 61, καί τινα μίαν νύκτα. In such cases we do not use the word some, but about, answering to the Latin circiter.

ρον δὲ, καθελόντες αὐτὴν ἐς ἔδαφος πᾶσαν ἐκ τῶν θεμελίων, ᾠκοδόμησαν πρὸς τῷ Ἡραίῳ καταγώγιον διακοσίων ποδῶν, πανταχῇ κύκλῳ οἰκήματα ἔχον κάτωθεν καὶ ἄνωθεν, καὶ ὀροφαῖς καὶ θυρώμασι τοῖς τῶν Πλαταιῶν ἐχρήσαντο· καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἃ ἦν ἐν τῷ τείχει ἔπιπλα, χαλκὸς καὶ σίδηρος, κλίνας κατασκευάσαντες ἀνέθεσαν τῇ Ἥρᾳ, καὶ νεὼν ἑκατόμποδον λίθινον ᾠκοδόμησαν αὐτῇ. 4. τὴν δὲ γῆν δημοσιώσαντες ἀπεμίσθωσαν ἐπὶ δέκα ἔτη, καὶ ἐνέμοντο

Of τὰ σφέτερα φρονοῦντες, the sense is, 'who had favoured their party;' a frequent Atticism, on which see Mitchell on Aristoph. Eq. 1179. At καθελόντες — θεμελίων, there is not, what Goeller supposes, a pleonasm, but a highly significant form of expression, to denote utter demolition, as in Jos. 174, 29, ἐξ αὐτῶν ἀνασπᾶν θεμελίων, καὶ μηδὲ ἔδαφος—καταλιπεῖν. Dionys. Hal. 167, 18. Goeller might have been more justified in tracing somewhat of hyperbole, such as exists in a similar passage in Hdot. ix. 13. By καταγώγιον is meant πανδοχεῖον,'an inn,' very much like the caravanseries of the East, and intended, no doubt, to accommodate those who came to worship at the temple. Διακ. ποδῶν, 'of 200 feet,' i. e. square, as appears from the expression πανταχῇ κύκλῳ, 'all around.' By κάτωθεν καὶ ἄνωθεν understand, 'both on the ground-floor and the upper story.' By the οἰκήματα are meant apartments, as at i. 134; of which the lower were the rooms for meals, and the upper, the sleeping-rooms. The persons are with reason supposed by Thirlwall to have been the pilgrims who might come to the quinqennial festival and on other solemn occasions. The term θυρώμασι includes both doors and door-posts; and ὀροφαῖς, all the wood-work of the roofs. Instead of ἔπιπλα, χαλκὸς, καὶ σίδηρος, we should have expected ἐπίπλοις, χαλκῷ, καὶ σιδήρῳ; but, as Goeller observes, 'cœpta in sententiâ interjecta constructio continuatur.' Ἐν τῷ τείχει is explained by Heilm., Haack, and Poppo, 'in the city;' but that is a sense not to be admitted except in passages like the one adduced by Poppo, (ἐς τὸ τεῖχος κατέφυγεν,) where it is suggested by the context. I must still adhere to the opinion which I have before professed, (and in which, I find, Goeller coincides,) that τῷ τείχει means the city-wall, and that there is reference to the metal cramps (spoken of at i. 93.) by which the huge coping-stones at the top of the wall were fastened. Now these might be called ἔπιπλα, as constituting the moveable materials of the wall; and so Hemsterh. on Pollux, x. 10, says, 'illa nimirum erant mobilia, non βέβαια.' Poppo, indeed, objects that the metal cramps in a small city-wall could have supplied sufficient materials for the κλῖναι. But it is not said that they furnished all the materials, but only that the Thebans formed κλῖναι out of them. Nor is there any thing, as Poppo alleges, to hinder this in the word ἄλλοις; for that is not governed of ἐχρήσαντο, but is a dative of instrument to κατασκευάσαντες. The wood-work of the roofs and doors (called ξύλωσις τῶν οἴκων in ii. 14.) might be termed materials for other edifices, and so might the brass and iron work of the walls. As to the κλῖναι, it is not clear whether they were beds for the votaries of the goddess to sleep in at the inn, as I have before said, (and in this view Goeller, I find, coincides,) or, as Arnold and Poppo suppose, couches, like the lecta ærata, or triclinia, of the Romans, for the guests to recline on at the sacrificial feasts. To the latter view, however, it may be objected, that no proof exists of there being any such sacrificial feasts; and, as Goeller observes, the materials, brass or iron, would be of too rough a nature to form triclinia fit for the temple: moreover, the circumstance of their being dedicated to Juno, proves that they must have been beds for the inn; and the being dedicated to Juno would secure them from being abstracted in war times: whereas had they been triclinia for the temple use, they would have required no such dedication, being sacred property. This νεὼν was, as I have pointed out in my Translation, a chapel or fane to the larger one called the Ἡραῖον, (doubtless that spoken of in Herodot. ix. 52.) and probably formed of the coping and casing stones from the city-walls.

4. δημοσιώσαντες] 'having made it public property.' In ἀπεμίσθωσαν ἐπὶ δέκα ἔτη is contained, I believe, the first mention on record of leasing out land. Of ἐνέμοντο, the sense is not, 'cultivated it,' as Portus renders it, but rather 'occupied it as leasehold tenants.'

Θηβαῖοι. 5. σχεδὸν δέ τι καὶ τὸ ξύμπαν περὶ Πλαταιῶν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὕτως ἀποτετραμμένοι ἐγένοντο Θηβαίων ἕνεκα, νομίζοντες ἐς τὸν πόλεμον αὐτοὺς ἄρτι τότε καθιστάμενον ὠφελίμους εἶναι. 6. καὶ τὰ μὲν κατὰ Πλάταιαν ἔτει τρίτῳ καὶ ἐνενηκοστῷ ἐπειδὴ Ἀθηναίων ξύμμαχοι ἐγένοντο οὕτως ἐτελεύτησεν.

LXIX. Αἱ δὲ τεσσαράκοντα νῆες τῶν Πελοποννησίων, αἱ Λεσβίοις βοηθοὶ ἐλθοῦσαι, ὡς τότε φεύγουσαι διὰ τοῦ πελάγους, ἔκ τε τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπιδιωχθεῖσαι, καὶ πρὸς τῇ Κρήτῃ χειμασθεῖσαι, καὶ ἀπ' αὐτῆς σποράδες, πρὸς τὴν Πελοπόννησον κατηνέχθησαν, καταλαμβάνουσιν ἐν τῇ Κυλλήνῃ τρεισκαίδεκα τριήρεις Λευκαδίων καὶ Ἀμπρακιωτῶν, καὶ Βρασίδαν τὸν Τέλλιδος ξύμβουλον Ἀλκίδᾳ ἐπεληλυθότα. 2. ἐβούλοντο γὰρ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ὡς τῆς Λέσβου ἡμαρτήκεσαν, πλέον τὸ ναυτικὸν ποιήσαντες ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν πλεῦσαι στασιάζουσαν, δώδεκα μὲν ναυσὶ μόναις παρόντων Ἀθηναίων περὶ Ναύπακτον, πρὶν δὲ πλέον τι ἐπιβοηθῆσαι ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ναυτικὸν, ὅπως προφθάσωσι· καὶ παρεσκευάζοντο ὅ τε Βρασίδας καὶ ὁ Ἀλκίδας πρὸς ταῦτα. LXX. Οἱ γὰρ Κερκυραῖοι ἐστασίαζον, ἐπειδὴ οἱ αἰχμάλωτοι ἦλθον αὐτοῖς οἱ ἐκ τῶν περὶ Ἐπίδαμνον ναυ-

5. σχεδὸν δέ τι καὶ τὸ ξύμπαν] This is well rendered by Kist., 'fere autem omnino;' and of σχεδὸν (which again occurs infra v. 66, and vii. 35.) the sense is well expressed by Arnold, pretty nearly. See Matth. Gr. § 487, 4. Καὶ τὸ ξύμπαν means adeo omnino. In περὶ Πλαταιῶν οὕτως ἀποτετραμμένοι, 'were so averse to the Platæans,' (literally, 'were so averse respecting the Platæans,') we have a very unusual construction, but one the less harsh, because the participle here differs little from an adjective, and might very well be represented by the Latin aversi, meaning alienated, hostile. So Hor. Sat. i. 5, 29, 'aversos componere amicos.'

Ch. LXIX. 1. Our historian now resumes the thread of the narrative he was relating at ch. 33: for τότε here, as often, signifies, 'at the period above mentioned.' The construction is, ὡς — κατηνέχθησαν, καταλαμβάνουσιν, and the successive participles, φεύγουσαι, ἐπιδιωχθεῖσαι, χειμασθεῖσαι, and σποράδες, which is equivalent to σποράδες γενόμεναι, describe the successive adventures of the fleet before it reached Peloponnesus. (Arnold.) Of χειμασθεῖσαι, the sense is tempestate jactatæ. Comp. Acts xxvii. 18.

2. In this section the sense is clear, but the construction perplexed. It is best adjusted by Goeller, as follows: ἐβούλοντο οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν πλεῦσαι (ἐβούλοντο μὲν), δώδεκα ναυσὶ μόναις παρόντων Ἀθηναίων (ἐβούλοντο δὲ), ὅπως προφθάσωσι, i. e. ἐβούλ. προφθάσαι, πρὶν πλέον τι ἐπιβοηθῆσαι ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ναυτικόν; and he remarks, 'Quum posterioribus locis ἐβούλοντο repeti necesse non esset, μὲν et δὲ alio loco (illo, quo nunc sunt) poni opus fuit. Sin ὅπως post βούλεσθαι sequi nolis, pro infinitivo utrimque post ἐβούλοντο cogita πλεῦσαι.'

Ch. LXX. Thucydides now proceeds to record one of the most soul-harrowing narratives ever penned; though at the same time calculated to supply invaluable instruction, as a lesson for every age. The story is ushered in by some information as to the state of affairs at Corcyra, which had occasioned the plan of operations to be formed.

1. ἐκ τῶν περὶ Ἐπίδαμνον—ἀφεθέντες] Meaning, 'who had been set at liberty by the Corinthians, after the sea-fights which took place about Epidamnus.' Strange is it that any, as Port., Bauer, Hobbes, and Smith, should have rendered, 'around, or in, or at Epidamnus;' since the battles in question took place at a considerable distance from thence (about 150 miles). It is plain that περὶ with an accusative is here, like circiter in Latin with an accusative, used in the sense super, about, respecting. And so Tacit. Hist. i. 13: 'circa consilium eligendi successoris in duas factiones scindebantur.' And certain it is that the sea-fights in question, which occasioned

μαχιῶν ὑπὸ Κορινθίων ἀφεθέντες, τῷ μὲν λόγῳ † ὀκτακοσίων ταλάντων τοῖς προξένοις διηγγυημένοι, ἔργῳ δὲ πεπεισμένοι Κορινθίοις

the war, were solely about the matter of Epidamnus.

τῷ μὲν λόγῳ] 'as was professed or pretended.' This policy of treating prisoners of war with great indulgence, and then setting them at liberty without ransom, in order to bring them over (and, through their means, their countrymen,) to the interests of the state which had liberated them, was practised on other occasions. See Polyæn. ii. 132. Plut. Arat. 24. Jos. Bell. i. 12, 2.

ὀκτακοσίων ταλάντων τοῖς προξένοις διηγγυημένοι] i. e. 'pledged by their bondsmen (literally, procuratores,) for the payment of 800 talents [to the Corinthian state]'. The genitive of thing is elsewhere found, though sometimes the dative. The passive form is rare, yet I have noted it in Demosth. 1358, διεγγυηθεῖσα ὑπὸ Στεφάνου; and 713, ἐξεγγυηθέντα; 394, 9, ἐξηγγυημένοι. There, however, the sense intended is 'bailed through' or 'out' (and set at liberty); but not here, though Port. and H. Steph. assign that sense. But this the addition of the τοῖς προξένοις will by no means permit, which requires the view of the meaning that I have adopted, with Dukas and Poppo. By τοῖς προξένοις are meant 'their friendly hosts,' those between whom and themselves an intimacy, cemented by mutual hospitality, had subsisted before the war, and now a friendly feeling. This sense of the term is found in Eurip. And. 1104, and Ion, 55. Teleph. frag. 24. Soph. El. 1451. Æschyl. Suppl. 414, 486.

With respect to the words ὀκτακοσίων ταλάντων, since we find from Herodot. v. 77, and vi. 79, that two minæ formed among the Peloponnesians the ransom of a heavy-armed soldier, when made prisoner in battle, 800 talents for 250 persons may justly be thought incredible. Goeller, indeed, supposes that the rate of ransom had by this time increased. But so great an increase cannot surely be supposed. More force is there in Arnold's defence of the common reading, as follows: 'In the time of Demosthenes the orator, when the ordinary ransom of a heavy-armed soldier did not exceed three or five minæ, a talent is spoken of as the ransom of a particular individual. Thus 250 of the richest men in Corcyra, that is to say, of some of the richest merchants in Greece, might well pay a ransom of somewhat above three talents each, even though a poor Peloponnesian heavy-armed soldier, with no other property than a small portion of land, might be commonly ransomed for two minæ.' But surely the age of Demosthenes and Æschines is no rule for that of Thucydides; and the sum paid as the ransom of King Philip's ambassadors is no rule for the generality; nor is the case of the particular individual mentioned by Æschines as paying a talent for his ransom, to the purpose, especially since, as Poppo remarks, Æschines purposely exaggerated the thing, by way of a scoff at Demosthenes. And as to the passage of Demosthenes, the sums there mentioned, three minæ and five minæ, represent, we may imagine, the highest and the lowest sums given for the ransom of the persons in question, as is plain from the words, which are, ἐδανείζοντο, ὁ μὲν τρεῖς μνᾶς, ὁ δὲ πέντε, ὁ δὲ ὅπως συνέβαινεν ἑκάστῳ τὰ λύτρα, meaning some intermediate sum between three and five minæ. And yet we have no reason to think the price of ransom had risen between the time of Herodotus and that of Demosthenes. Again, although the greater part of the Corcyrean prisoners were δυνάμει οἱ πρῶτοι, it is not said they were the richest, or merchants at all; and certainly the rest were not; so that even then the sum may be thought incredibly high. Upon the whole, I am still of opinion, with Poppo, in his critical notes, that we should read, with Valla, ὀγδοήκοντα. The authority of MSS. is here of little weight, since the difference between the numbers ϖ′ (80) and ω′ (800) is very slight; and when the top of the ϖ had faded away, it would become ω. Poppo, indeed, is now inclined to think 80 talents as much too low, as 800 are too high a sum. I should be inclined to agree with him, did I not think it more probable that the ransom would be fixed at a moderate rate, than that it should be fixed at an extravagantly high rate. As to the passage of our author infra vii. 83, from which Poppo says, 'justo minorem numerum esse constat'—I should rather say, minimè constat, since the persons there mentioned are not ransomed prisoners of war, but hostages to insure the payment of a large sum of money; and as, in such a case, none would be accepted as hostages but persons of the greatest consideration, the sum of a talent a-piece is not exorbitant. There is no reason in itself why 80 talents should be thought too small a sum. If we suppose the persons of rank forming οἱ πλείους, 130, and the rest 120, and rate the ransom of the latter at two minæ each, there will remain 74 talents as the ransom of the first-mentioned persons, not much less than three-quarters of a talent for each person; and, at any rate, twenty-times as much as that paid for the inferior persons. To have rated the ransom higher than that, would only have excited a suspicion that it was never meant to be paid.

Κέρκυραν προσποιῆσαι. 2. καὶ ἔπρασσον οὗτοι, ἕκαστον τῶν πολιτῶν μετιόντες, ὅπως ἀποστήσωσιν Ἀθηναίων τὴν πόλιν. 3. καὶ, ἀφικομένης Ἀττικῆς τε νεὼς καὶ Κορινθίας πρέσβεις ἀγουσῶν, καὶ ἐς λόγους καταστάντων, ἐψηφίσαντο Κερκυραῖοι Ἀθηναίοις μὲν ξύμμαχοι εἶναι κατὰ τὰ ξυγκείμενα, Πελοποννησίοις δὲ φίλοι ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερον. 4. καὶ—ἦν γὰρ Πειθίας ἐθελοπρόξενός τε τῶν Ἀθη-

πεπεισμένοι Κορινθίοις Κέρκυραν προσποιῆσαι] To this they would, we may suppose, be easily brought, by the strong motives of a change from captivity to freedom and competence, if not affluence, together with a good chance of political power; since, as Thirlwall observes, they belonged to that class (the aristocratical) for which such a revolution would open the way to power.

2. ἔπρασσον οὗτοι—πόλιν] 'these persons did their best, by going about among the citizens individually, to withdraw the state from the Athenians,' i. e. the alliance with Athens. Μέτειμι signifies properly 'to go after,' and metaphorically, like ambio and sollicito in Latin, to prevail on, gain over, as infra viii. 15, and Aristoph. Eq. 605. In this sense πράσσειν ὅπως has already occurred at i. 56. iii. 4.

3. In this section is shown the effect of those exertions, which was, that, through the intrigues of those persons, parties ran high, and the country was thrown into commotion; insomuch that a state galley was sent with an embassy from Athens and from Corinth respectively, each to support their country's interests; and upon a public assembly being called, in which each should address the people, the revolutionary party proved strong enough to procure a decree which should revive the old system of the neutrality of Corcyra towards belligerent powers, like Athens and Corinth. See i. 32. The phrase ἐς λόγους καταστῆναι occurs again at iv. 58; and, like ἐς λόγους ἐλθεῖν τινι, is frequent in the Attic writers. By ξύμμαχοι is here meant, as appears from i. 44, ξύμμαχοι καὶ ἐπίμαχοι, defensive allies.

ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερον] They had ever been on good terms with all the Peloponnesians except the Corinthians; and had given respectful attention to the other Peloponnesian states, when attempting to mediate between them.

4. καὶ ἦν γὰρ—καταδουλοῦν] The construction here (with which Arnold compares a similar one in Herodot. i. 8.) is well stated by Goeller, as follows: καὶ Πειθίαν ὑπάγουσιν οὗτοι οἱ ἄνδρες ἐς δίκην, ἦν γὰρ ἐθελοπρόξενός τε τῶν Ἀθηναίων καὶ τοῦ δήμου προεστήκει. With respect to the term ἐθελοπρόξενος, in order to understand its exact force, we must first determine that of the simple πρόξενος, from which the other is formed, like ἐθελόδουλος, ἐθέλεχθρος, ἐθελόπορνος. Now the force of this word has been well pointed out by Pollux iii. 59, 60, where he states the duties of the πρόξενος as consisting in receiving ambassadors, and all persons coming in a public character, from the state for which he acted, as also looking after such other matters as fall under the care of our present political residents at foreign courts, and also of our consuls. He then adds that those duties are also discharged by the ἐθελοπρόξενος, ὁ ἀνάγραπτον τὴν προξενίαν ἔχων, where the sense is thought to require the insertion of a negative; and Kuhn would read ὁ μή; others, ὁ οὐκ. But I should prefer to simply read for ὁ, οὐκ. Thus the sole difference, it seems, was in his being registered and recognised as such, or not. Critics, however, are not agreed whether this appointment, and consequent registration, has reference to the state for which the πρόξενος is acting, or his own country. Kuhn, Wasse, and Valckn. are of the former opinion; while Jungermann and Boeckh (Inscrip. vol. i. 731.) are of the latter; which, it may be observed, is supported by the Schol. on the present passage, who defines the term ἐθελοπρόξενος by ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ γενόμενος καὶ μὴ κελευσθεὶς ἐκ τῆς πόλεως· οἱ γὰρ πρόξενοι κελευόμενοι ἐκ τῆς ἑαυτῶν πόλεως ἐγένοντο· also by a passage of Ulpian on Demosth. Mid. p. 374, (cited by Goeller,) πρόξενος ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως χειροτονούμενος ἐπὶ τῷ τοὺς πρεσβεύοντας ὑπο- ναίων, καὶ τοῦ δήμου προειστήκει—ὑπάγουσιν αὐτὸν οὗτοι οἱ ἄνδρες ἐς δίκην, λέγοντες Ἀθηναίοις τὴν Κέρκυραν καταδουλοῦν. 5. ὁ δὲ, δέχεσθαι. No easy matter is it to determine which of the above opinions is entitled to the preference. Perhaps the latter; but each may be, in some respects, well founded; for the πρόξενος required to be constituted and appointed to his office by his own country, though he had been previously desired to take upon him the office by the foreign state for which he was to act; and after being regularly appointed as such by his own country, he was then recognised as such by the foreign state, and registered (ἀνάγραπτος) as such, by the appointment being engraven on stone or brass, and put up in some public place; which last particular is attested by an important inscription found in Corcyra, and published by Boeckh. From that and other inscriptions brought forward by him, it appears that ample funds, in landed property, were appropriated by the Corcyrean state to those who discharged the office of πρόξενος, to watch over its interests in foreign countries. These πρόξενοι, however, properly so called, were, Boeckh says, rare; most of those who bear that title, either in ancient writers or in inscriptions, being ἐθελοπρόξενοι. See Inscrip. vol. i. p. 731, 732. That was probably from the circumstance that the two states would seldom agree on the same person, and hence persons were, by connivance, permitted to exercise that office, though not regularly appointed by their own country. Yet such an ἐθελοπρόξενος would still have to be recognised and registered by the country for which he acted. And hence, in the above passage of Pollux, the critics seem all wrong in supposing a negative to be wanting. So far from such being necessary, it would destroy the sense; it being the purpose of the lexicographer to intimate that such an ἐθελοπρόξενος required to be recognised and registered as such by the state for which he acted. I would, therefore, in the above passage, read and point as follows: ποιεῖ δὲ ταῦτα καὶ ὁ ἐθελοπρόξενος ὁ ἀνάγραπτον τὴν προξενίαν ἔχων, 'These duties also discharges the ethelo-proxenus who has his προξενία registered.' I have here, on the authority of MSS., received the ὁ; and have, moreover removed the comma after ἐθελ., because the words following are meant to qualify the foregoing assertion by a condition. And although Hesych. explains ἐθελοπρόξενος by ἐκὼν πρόξενος, yet that constitutes no sufficient reason why the negative should be required in the passage of Pollux; for there the term ἐκὼν is, as often elsewhere, used, like the Latin suâ sponte, to denote proprio motu. The register on record of the person being recognised as πρόξενος was, we find from one of the inscriptions in Boeckh, ordered to be engraven on brass, and put up in such public places as the magistrate might choose. Now these were sometimes the door-posts and vestibules of temples, as appears from a passage of Polyb. xii. 12, 2, καὶ μὴν ὁ τὰς ὀπισθοδόμους στήλας, καὶ τὰς ἐν ταῖς φλιαῖς τῶν νεῶν προξενίας (meaning the inscriptions recording such προξενίαι) ἐξευρηκώς. And from a passage of Antigon. Caryst. xv. p. 25, we learn that these inscriptions had affixed to them the insignia (as it were, armorial bearings) of the city: διὸ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν προξενιῶν (for so rightly reads Locella, for vulg. προξένων) τῶν ἀναγραφομένων τὸ παράσημον τῆς πόλεως (καθάπερ ἐστὶν ἔθιμον πᾶσι προσπαρατιθέναι) ὑπογράφονται δύο κόρακες ἐφ' ἁμαξίου χαλκοῦ. Thus it appears that either Peithias was discharging the office of πρόξενος towards the Athenian state, though without any previous appointment by his own country, (the aristocratical party having, it seems, prevented this,) and, as such, is only called ἐθελοπρόξενος; or, as Thirlwall thinks, though not formally appointed by the state, or recognised by the Athenians as such, assumed the character of their proxenus, and thus was a sort of volunteer proxenus, the very view taken by Hesychius; and indeed, considering the then state of things in Corcyra, such a step, however irregular, would be tolerated by the Athenians and their party in Corcyra, and is therefore not beyond the bounds of probability.

τοῦ δήμου προειστήκει] Meaning either (as I formerly explained the sense to be) 'was leader of the democratical party;' or, as Poppo regards it, a term equivalent to προστάτης τοῦ δήμου, 'the leading person among the people.' So princeps populi in Liv. xxiv. 2. Similarly at ch. 75 and iv. 46, we have τοῦ δήμου προστάται τῶν Κερκυραίων. See more in Wachsmuth, Antiq., and note on vi. 35, 2. Of ὑπάγουσιν ἐς δίκην, the sense is, 'they bring him to trial,' 'impeach him;' a forensic phrase, on which see Valckn. on Herodot. vi. 57.

ἀποφυγὼν, ἀνθυπάγει αὐτῶν τοὺς πλουσιωτάτους πέντε ἄνδρας, φάσκων τέμνειν χάρακας ἐκ τοῦ τε Διὸς τεμένους καὶ τοῦ Ἀλκίνου· ζημία δὲ καθ' ἑκάστην χάρακα ἐπέκειτο στατήρ. 6. ὀφλόντων δὲ αὐτῶν, καὶ πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ ἱκετῶν καθεζομένων, διὰ πλῆθος τῆς ζημίας,

5. ἀποφυγὼν] scil. τὴν αἰτίαν, 'being acquitted:' another forensic term, on which see Valckn. on Hdot. vi. 82. This absolute use is rather rare, but I have noted it in Arr. E. A. iii. 27, 4. Xen. Hist. i. 3, 18, ὑπαγόμενος θανάτου, ἀπέφυγεν, and ii. 3, 50. Ælian, V. H. xiii. 38, οὐχ ὑπήκουσεν εἰπὼν, εὖηθες τὸν ἔχοντα δίκην ('for him who is impleaded') ζητεῖν μὴ (I would read δὴ, 'forsooth') ἀποφεύγειν.

χάρακας] Meaning, not, as the word is generally explained, poles, but stakes, like our hop-poles, to which the vines were trained, called in Latin statumina vitium, a sense recognised by almost all the ancient lexicographers, and which is borne out by probability; for it is difficult to imagine how rich men should need so considerable a number of poles; whereas such stakes would be very much wanted for the vineyards, which, from the inscriptions adduced by Boeckh, we know abounded in the neighbourhood of Corcyra. So Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 6, Corcyra is spoken of as being παγκαλῶς πεφυτευμένη; also as μεγαλοπρεπεῖς δὲ οἰκήσεις καὶ οἰνῶνας κατεσκευασμένους ἔχουσα ἐπὶ τῶν ἀγρῶν. Now of these the rich vine-growers would require a great many for their vineyards; and consequently in the course of several years the number might be so great, that, if paid for at four staters a stake, the sum being estimated by the average number used in a year, it might amount to a sum such as to ruin the richest persons. These persons had, it seems, been induced to cut the stakes from these sacred glebes, since they abounded in what would be well fitted for the purpose,—namely, oak or other solid wood; and these stakes were formed from the loppings of large trees, or from trees decayed or blown down, also from the rich underwood. Strange is it that Goeller should, even in his second edition, maintain that the persons in question did not get the stakes from the sacred inclosures, but only the materials; expressing disapprobation that I should, in my note, have maintained the contrary. I answer, that the operation of forming the stakes would (as in all such cases) be carried on in the wood itself. It has indeed been thought difficult to imagine what could induce men of wealth and consequence to risk so heavy a penalty as was incurred in cutting the stakes; but the law in question had probably been long done away, and by connivance become obsolete; in which case it would be the rich and powerful alone who would chiefly venture. In order, however, to fully comprehend what is said by Thucydides, we must suppose either that these sacred groves were immediately adjoining, perhaps surrounded by the landed property (in vineyards) of these five very rich persons; or, as Arnold conjectures, that these persons were the hereditary tenants of the sacred grounds, and that, as such, they had been in the habit of treating it as their own, by cutting down the trees. But it is not said that they cut down the trees, nor indeed is such likely, since that would be a violation of the worst sort, and, moreover, unnecessary to the purpose in view. By not cutting down the trees, but only lopping some of the branches, and cutting the underwood, they, no doubt, thought that the law was sufficiently well observed; and though that had, it seems, been forbidden under a severe penalty by some ebullition of superstitious feeling, yet that being found an enactment too severe to be carried into effect, (for 'quid leges sine moribus?') it had, we may suppose, grown obsolete; though, as being unrepealed, it was convenient to be made (as in many other cases) a handle of to ruin the persons in question.

After Διὸς, Haack and Poppo insert, from many of the best MSS., τοῦ. I have thought proper, with Bekker and Goeller, not to receive it; because, while it is easy to account for its insertion, it is very difficult to imagine any reason for its omission; and yet it is better away, since the sense intended must be, 'a sacred inclosure consecrated to Jupiter,' for we cannot suppose it was the only inclosure sacred to Jupiter in the island.

In ἐπικεῖσθαι we have a conventional term, commonly appropriated, like imposita in the Latin, to the subject of denouncing a penalty on any offence, and especially used with ζημία. By στατὴρ must be meant the silver stater of four drachmas, not the golden one of twenty drachmas; which indeed was so little in use, that, when meant, it always, I believe, has the epithet χρύσεος subjoined.

6. ὀφλόντων αὐτῶν] scil. τὴν ζημίαν, 'being condemned [to pay] the fine.' In ὅπως ταξάμενοι ἀποδῶσιν, ὁ Πειθίας (ετύγχανε γὰρ καὶ βουλῆς ὢν) πείθει ὥστε τῷ νόμῳ χρήσασθαι. 7. οἱ δ', ἐπειδὴ τῷ τε νόμῳ ἐξείργοντο, καὶ ἅμα ἐπυνθάνοντο τὸν Πειθίαν, ἕως ἔτι βουλῆς ἐστι, μέλλειν τὸ πλῆθος ἀναπείσειν τοὺς αὐτοὺς Ἀθηναίοις φίλους τε καὶ ἐχθροὺς νομίζειν, ξυνίσταντό τε, καὶ λαβόντες ἐγχειρίδια ἐξαπιναίως ἐς τὴν βουλὴν ἐσελθόντες, τόν τε Πειθίαν κτείνουσι, καὶ ἄλλους τῶν τε βουλευτῶν καὶ ἰδιωτῶν ἐς ἑξήκοντα. 8. οἱ δέ τινες τῆς αὐτῆς γνώμης τῷ Πειθίᾳ ὀλίγοι ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν τριήρη κατέφυγον ἔτι παροῦσαν. LXXI. Δράσαντες δὲ τοῦτο, καὶ ξυγκαλέσαντες Κερκυραίους, εἶπον ὅτι ταῦτα καὶ βέλτιστα εἴη, καὶ ἥκιστ' ἂν δουλωθεῖεν ὑπ' Ἀθηναίων· τό τε λοιπὸν μηδετέρους δέχεσθαι ἀλλ' ἢ μιᾷ νηΐ, the next words the construction is, καὶ διὰ [τὸ] πλῆθος τῆς ζημίας, καθεζομένων πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ ἱκετῶν, ὅπως, &c. Render, 'sitting as suppliants, supplicating that they might pay the money by instalments,' lit. τεταγμέναις ταῖς καταβολαῖς. In this sense τάσσεσθαι occurs also at i. 99, 101, 117, and iii. 50. With the expression a little after, βουλῆς ὤν, 'was of the council,' Poppo compares Dio Cass. xxxvi. 11, βουλῆς γεγονώς, and refers to Matth. Gr. § 322 πείθει ὥστε τῷ νόμῳ χρήσασθαι] 'prevails that they should put the law in force.'

7. τῷ νόμῳ ἐξείργοντο] Something is here evidently to be supplied from the context; though what that is, commentators are not agreed. Portus, Hobbes, Bred., Dukas, and Haack supply, from the preceding, τῆς βουλῆς; and of ἐξείργεσθαι thus followed by similar words, as βήματος, τῆς ἀγορᾶς, συνεδρίου, I have before adduced several examples; also showing that those who failed to pay any fine enjoined by the law, were excluded from holding any public office, and indeed from giving suffrage as citizens. Yet the sense in question may perhaps, not without reason, be thought too limited a one here. Still more so is that assigned by Poppo, 'they were hindered by the law [from paying the sum by instalments],' a sense not a little forced and frigid. Again, that assigned by the Schol. and Goeller, 'were hindered of their wish or purpose,' is not sufficiently definite, and is, moreover, quite deficient in force. Upon the whole, I am now persuaded that the term should be taken (as its absolute use requires) in the most extensive sense that the case admits. Render, 'and since they were by the law (its severity and the impossibility of fulfilling its requisitions) excluded from any other course than that which they took;' in other words, were compelled to do as they did. So the phrase in Herodot. vii. 96, and 139, ἀναγκαίῃ ἐξέργεσθαι, 'to be compelled by necessity [to do so],' lit. (as Schweigh. there explains) 'to be excluded or prohibited from the power of doing otherwise;' and ix. 111, ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου ἐξεργόμενος, 'compelled by the law [to do so],' lit. excluded from any other course; where ἐξείργεσθαι is put absolutely, also in Isocr. p. 131, ἂν παντα-χόθεν ἐξειργώμεθα. The reason for this peculiar use will appear when we consider that εἴργειν signifies properly to fix a hedge; and as fixing a hedge in a person's path hinders him from going that way, and compels him to take another, so ἐξείργειν signifies lit. 'to hedge up any one's way [by fixing a hedge on all sides];' and hence, 'to hinder him from pursuing any course.' So in a passage of Hos. ii. 6, we have, 'I will hedge up thy way with thorns,' meaning, as here, to exclude from any way but one, and so compel the person to take that way.

τοὺς αὐτοὺς — νομίζειν] lit. 'to regard the same persons as friends or foes with the Athenians,' meaning, as the Athenians did; in other words, to form an alliance offensive and defensive with them. Comp. i. 44, and ch. 74. Ξυνίσταντο stands for σύστασιν ἐποιοῦντο, which phrase occurs at ii. 21.

8. τῆς αὐτῆς γνώμης] Supply ὄντες, and see notes on i. 122. iv. 85. v. 8.

CH. LXXI. 1. ὅτι ταῦτα—δουλωθεῖεν] Render, 'that the measures they had taken were the best, and such whereby they would least be in danger of being enslaved by the Athenians.' At ἥκιστ' ἂν δουλ. repeat ταῦτα, with κατὰ understood.

At δέχεσθαι must, as Arnold very properly points out, be repeated εἶπον, though in a more technical sense; not simply, 'they said,' but 'they moved' or proposed.

ἡσυχάζοντας, τὸ δὲ πλέον πολέμιον ἡγεῖσθαι. ὡς δὲ εἶπον, καὶ ἐπικυρῶσαι ἠνάγκασαν τὴν γνώμην. 2. πέμπουσι δὲ καὶ ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας εὐθὺς πρέσβεις, περί τε τῶν πεπραγμένων διδάξοντας, ὡς ξυνέφερε, καὶ τοὺς ἐκεῖ καταπεφευγότας πείσοντας μηδὲν ἀνεπιτήδειον πράσσειν, ὅπως μή τις ἐπιστροφὴ γένηται. LXXII. Ἐλθόντων δὲ, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τούς τε πρέσβεις ὡς νεωτερίζοντας ξυλλαβόντες, καὶ ὅσους ἔπεισαν, κατέθεντο ἐς Αἴγιναν. 2. ἐν δὲ τούτῳ τῶν Κερκυραίων οἱ ἔχοντες τὰ πράγματα, ἐλθούσης τριήρους Κορινθίας καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων πρέσβεων, ἐπιτίθενται τῷ δήμῳ, καὶ μαχόμενοι ἐνίκησαν. 3. ἀφικομένης δὲ νυκτὸς, ὁ μὲν δῆμος ἐς τὴν ἀκρόπολιν καὶ τὰ μετέωρα τῆς πόλεως καταφεύγει, καὶ αὐτοῦ ξυλλεγεὶς ἱδρύθη, καὶ τὸν Ὑλλαϊκὸν λιμένα εἶχον· οἱ δὲ τήν τε ἀγορὰν κατέλαβον,—οὗπερ οἱ μηδετέρους δέχεσθαι ἀλλ' ἢ μιᾷ νηὶ ἡσυχάζοντας] 'to receive neither party otherwise than [coming] with a single ship, conducting themselves peacefully.' Ἡσυχάζοντας stands for ἡσυχίαν ἄγοντας, the meaning being 'not conducting themselves hostilely towards each other.' Such, too, is the present law as regards the conduct of belligerents coming into neutral ports. Poppo and Goeller, however, refer the accus. ἡσυχ. to τοὺς δεχομένους (the Corcyræans), not to τοὺς δεχθέντας; comparing the similar words, supra ii. 7, τά τ' ἄλλα ἡσυχάζοντας καὶ Ἀθηναίους δεχομένους μιᾷ νηΐ.

Comp. ii. 24, ἢν δέ τις εἴπῃ, ἢ ἐπιψηφίσῃ κινεῖν τὰ χρήματα.

2. ὡς ξυνέφερε] Poppo very properly takes the ὡς as standing for ὅπως, used in the sense of our old English how, or as how. With respect to the term, a little after, ἐπιστροφή, this I before explained, with Poppo, to mean revolution; Arnold, however, I find, assigns to it the sense counter-revolution, or re-action: so understood, it will be equiv. to μετάστασις.

CH. LXXII. 1. ἐλθόντων] This word is put in the genitive, and not in the accusative, because, as Poppo says, 'ad τοὺς πρέσβεις mox accesserunt verba καὶ ὅσους.'

τοὺς πρέσβεις ὡς νεωτερίζοντας ξυλλαβόντες] Thus treating Corcyra as a subject dependency of Athens, in which case all secession was accounted rebellion. The persons so circumstanced as these Corcyræans were, had, it seems, permission to be at large in the island, the Athenian navy being considered a sufficient guard over them.

2. οἱ ἔχοντες τὰ πράγματα] So Herod. vi. 80, οἱ δοῦλοι ἔσχον τὰ πράγματα.

3. τὸν Ὑλλαϊκὸν λιμένα] There has been no little difference of opinion as to the situation of this port, which Manso places to the north of the peninsula containing the present city, and its two strong forts on two separate eminences to the seaward, (which evidently correspond to the aërias Phæacum arces of Virg. Æn. iii. 291.) at the present Porto Govino; while Goeller places it at the mouth of the river Santa Barbara; and geographers in general, at the south of the above peninsula, at what is now called the Old Port. The Porto Govino is undoubtedly too far off to have ever been one of the three ports of the city; and as to the second, I cannot by consulting the best authorities, and applying for information on the point to one most competent to give it, Col. Leake, ascertain that there is, or ever has been, any port there at all. That very learned scholar, and consummate geographer, has, at my request, been induced to give this perplexed point of ancient geography his mature consideration; and, in illustration thereof, he has favoured me with the following communication, (accompanied by the subjoined plan,) which I will first give in his own words, and then add a few remarks corroborative or illustrative.

"I suppose the Temple of Juno to have stood on the esplanade which lies between the modern city and its citadel, nearly opposite to the entrance of the latter, which appears to me to be 'the island in front of the Heræum,' intended by Thucydides; for he appears to make a distinction between that island and the island named Ptychia. The city and its two harbours, as described by Homer, seem perfectly to accord with the evidence as to the ancient site, preserved in the modern name Paleópoli, which is attached to the isthmus, including a part of the peninsula, and the πολλοὶ ᾤκουν αὐτῶν,—καὶ τὸν λιμένα τὸν πρὸς αὐτῇ καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἤπειρον. LXXIII. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἠκροβολίσαντό τε ὀλίγα, καὶ ἐς τοὺς ἀγροὺς περιέπεμπον ἀμφότεροι, τοὺς δούλους παρακαλοῦντές τε καὶ ἐλευθερίαν ὑπισχνούμενοι· καὶ τῷ μὲν δήμῳ τῶν οἰκετῶν τὸ πλῆθος παρεγένετο ξύμμαχον, τοῖς δ' ἑτέροις ἐκ τῆς ἠπείρου ἐπίκουροι ὀκτακόσιοι. LXXIV. Διαλιπούσης δ' ἡμέρας, μάχη αὖθις ground adjacent to the head of port Kalikiópulo. This harbour, now unserviceable on account of the shallowness of its long entrance, I take to have been the Portus Hyllaicus of Thucydides and Apollonius. That of the present Kastradhes answers exactly—and is the only harbour at Corfu that does answer—to that ancient port, which Thucydides says, 'faced towards Epirus.' If the peninsula was the acropolis, the shore of that harbour was a convenient position for the agora. The rock at the entrance of port Kalikiópulo corresponds to the fabled 'ship of Ulysses,' being, as the words of Homer require, in view from the greater part of the ancient site. The third port of Scylax I conceive to have been the modern harbour at the northern end of the citadel, where a ledge of rocks projects from it, and embraces the harbour, which is protected on the opposite side by the ramparts of the town, and the rocks on which they stand. It seems very likely, that in ancient times a mole projected from these rocks, towards the natural χηλὴ on the opposite side, rendering the basin within what the Greeks called a closed port (κλειστὸς λιμὴν), as having been occasionally closed by a chain across the entrance. I submit, therefore, to your better judgment, whether we may not propose to change the κάλλιστος of Scylax, which is rather unmeaning, into κλειστός!"

The above view nearly corresponds with that which I had myself, by previous and separate investigation, been induced to form. I had been, indeed, somewhat doubtful as to the situation of the Hyllaic Port, which is so much the more difficult to fix, because there is, I believe, no other mention of the name, except in Apoll. Rhod. Argon. iv. 1125, Ὑλλικῷ ἐν λιμένι σχεδὸν ἄστεος, which description excludes the Porto Govino; and that the present Kastradhes cannot be the Hyllaic port, is certain, because then the port of the agora must be placed either at the Old Port, or at the harbour ὁ Κάλλιστος (or, as Col. Leake conjectures, ὁ Κλειστὸς) of Scylax, neither of them opposite to the continent, as it is described to be by Thucydides; nor would the petty harbour, in the latter case, have been sufficiently large for the business of this grand emporium of western Greece; whereas if the Hyllaic port be supposed to be the present Old Port, it will exactly answer to the description of Apollonius; especially if we suppose, as we have great reason to do, that the ancient city occupied, according to the view of Col. Leake, the isthmus of the peninsula.

There can be no doubt that the peninsula, which Thucydides says was circumnavigated by the Corcyræan galleys, previous to the massacre of the aristocrats by the democrats, was this peninsula; and then, as the port of the agora could not have been the Old Port, (because that was not fronting the continent,) it could be no other than this, the present Kastradhes. The port thus graphically mentioned in Hom. Od. vi. 263, Αὐτὰρ ἐπὴν πόλεος ἐπιβήσομεν, ἣν πέρι πύργος Ὑψηλός· καλὸς δὲ λιμὴν ἑκάτερθε πόληος, Λεπτὴ δ' εἰσίθμη, must, I think, have been the Old Port. Certainly the expression λεπτὴ εἰσίθμη, in the above passage, is suitable to no other port; and each of the ports would deserve the epithet καλὸς, though in different ways. Finally, by the πύργος ὑψηλὸς is designated the fortress, which seems from the earliest times to have existed in the island to the east of the present city, occupying the double-headed promontory called, from this circumstance, Κορύφω, (whence the modern name,) in which were situated the 'aërias Phæacum arces' of Virgil, now called the Old Forts; and this situation will very well correspond to the description in Homer, περὶ πόλιν.

Ch. LXXIII. τῷ δήμῳ — ξύμμαχον] That the slaves should, as the Americans say, be sympathizers with the common people, was natural. Ἐπίκουροι I would now simply interpret auxiliaries; since παρεγένοντο is here to be supplied from παρεγένετο, the term παραγίγνεσθαι being used with ἐπίκουρος and other words of a similar sense.

Ch. LXXIV. 1. διαλιπούσης δ' ἡμέρας] 'after a day had intervened.' So i. 112, διαλιπόντων τριῶν ἐτῶν.

γίγνεται, καὶ νικᾷ ὁ δῆμος, χωρίων τε ἰσχύϊ καὶ πλήθει πρυέχων· αἵ τε γυναῖκες αὐτοῖς τολμηρῶς ξυνεπελάβοντο, βάλλουσαι ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκιῶν τῷ κεράμῳ, καὶ παρὰ φύσιν ὑπομένουσαι τὸν θόρυβον. 2. γενομένης δὲ τῆς τροπῆς περὶ δείλην ὀψίαν, δείσαντες οἱ ὀλίγοι μὴ αὐτοβοεὶ ὁ δῆμος τοῦ τε νεωρίου κρατήσειεν, ἐπελθὼν καὶ σφᾶς διαφθείρειεν, ἐμπιπρᾶσι τὰς οἰκίας τὰς ἐν κύκλῳ τῆς ἀγορᾶς καὶ τὰς ξυνοικίας, ὅπως μὴ ᾖ ἔφοδος, φειδόμενοι οὔτε οἰκείας οὔτε ἀλλοτρίας· ὥστε καὶ χρήματα πολλὰ ἐμπόρων κατεκαύθη, καὶ ἡ πόλις ἐκινδύνευσε πᾶσα διαφθαρῆναι, εἰ ἄνεμος ἐπεγένετο τῇ φλογὶ ἐπίφορος ἐς αὐτήν. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν παυσάμενοι τῆς μάχης, ὡς ἑκάτεροι ἡσυχάσαντες, τὴν νύκτα ἐν φυλακῇ ἦσαν· καὶ ἡ Κορινθία ναῦς τοῦ δήμου

2. περὶ δείλην ὀψίαν] 'about the dusk of the evening,' literally, the late dusk, as distinguished from the early dusk, that of the morning; for there was the δείλη πρωΐα, mentioned in Herodot. viii. 6, and the δείλη ὀψία, spoken of here and in Herodot. viii. 9, and elsewhere. Of these expressions, the former is somewhat rare; insomuch that where there is no addition, the late dusk may be generally understood, as in Xen. Anab. iii. 3, 11, and 4, 34. vii. 2, 16; though sometimes the early, as in i. 8, 8. ii. 2, 14. vii. 3, 10. Ὀψία is properly an adj. (as in Pind. Isthm. iv. 59.) and the word ὥρα is to be supplied. By οἱ ὀλίγοι understand 'the party of the few' (the optimates), as distinguished from that of the people at large. By νεώριον is usually denoted a dock, a place where ships are built or repaired; but also, in a more general sense, (what gave rise to the name, and so may be called the proper signification,) a place where ships were taken care of and laid up ready for service, sometimes including νεώσοικος, a dock, and also naval storehouses forming an arsenal. See more in note infra vii. 22, 1. In Hom. Od. vi. 265, mention is made of the place as both νεώριον and νεώσοικος, and the ἀγορὰ is there spoken of as immediately adjacent: ἔνθα δέ τε σφ' ἀγορὴ, καλὸν Ποσειδήϊον ἀμφίς. Probably this temple formed one side of the square of the agora, that fronting the sea, and on the highest ground to be seen at a distance; for temples of Neptune usually occupied such situations.

τὰς ξυνοικίας] The older commentators and the English translators, Hobbes and Smith, take this to mean 'the houses adjacent.' But the context rather requires the sense assigned by Duker, 'houses let out to several occupants,' like our lodging-houses, or perhaps sometimes what we call hotels. Of the two words οἰκία and συνοικία placed together, Duker adduces an example from Harpocr. in v. ναύκληρος. And of the word συνοικία, as used in this little known sense, I have noted examples in Lucian, iii. 375. Ælian, V. H. xiii. 12. Jambl. Vit. Pyth. ch. 3. Xen. de Rep. Ath. i. 17. Aristoph. Eq. 1001. So also Æschines, cont. Tim. p. 137, explains the difference between οἰκία and συνοικία thus: ὅπου πολλοὶ μισθωσάμενοι μίαν οἴκησιν, διελόμενοι, ἔχουσι (I conj. οἰκοῦσι), συνοικίαν καλοῦμεν· ὅπου δ' εἷς ἐνοικεῖ, οἰκίαν. Now these συνοικίαι, in the present case, were partly lodging-houses, let out, in what are called in Edinburgh flats, to the poorer persons, and partly as hotels, for the temporary accommodation of the multitude of persons, whom commercial pursuits would bring to a crowded emporium like Corcyra. And so Æneas, Tact. 30, seems to regard συνοικίαι as synonymous with καπηλεῖα.

By the words following, ὅπως μὴ ᾖ ἔφοδος, it is meant, as Poppo explains, that this was done to cut off all further approach on the part of the enemy. Οἰκείας and ἀλλοτρίας are to be regarded as genitive cases, with the ellipsis of οἰκίας. Render, 'sparing neither any house of their own nor that of another's.' By χρήματα, just after, understand, not money, but merchandise: of which sense of the word examples occur in Aristoph. Lys. 895. Polyæn. iv. 9. vi. 11. Procop. p. 39. Jos. Bell. i. 18, 5. Dionys. Hal. Ant. xviii. 16, 2. The term may be most closely rendered by our word goods, meaning articles good for use. On the phrase, a little after, ἄνεμος ἐπεγένετο ἐπίφορος, see note at ii. 77.

κεκρατηκότος, ὑπεξανήγετο, καὶ τῶν ἐπικούρων οἱ πολλοὶ ἐς τὴν ἤπειρον λαθόντες διεκομίσθησαν. LXXV. Τῇ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένῃ ἡμέρᾳ Νικόστρατος ὁ Διτρέφους, Ἀθηναίων στρατηγὸς, παραγίγνεται βοηθῶν ἐκ Ναυπάκτου δώδεκα ναυσὶ καὶ Μεσσηνίων πεντακοσίοις ὁπλίταις· ξύμβασίν τε ἔπρασσε, καὶ πείθει ὥστε ξυγχωρῆσαι ἀλλήλοις, δέκα μὲν ἄνδρας τοὺς αἰτιωτάτους κρῖναι,—οἳ οὐκέτι ἔμειναν,—τοὺς δ' ἄλλους οἰκεῖν, σπονδὰς πρὸς ἀλλήλους ποιησαμένους καὶ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους ὥστε τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἐχθροὺς καὶ φίλους νομίζειν. 2. καὶ ὁ μὲν, ταῦτα πράξας, ἔμελλεν ἀποπλεύσεσθαι· οἱ δὲ τοῦ δήμου προστάται πείθουσιν αὐτὸν πέντε μὲν ναῦς τῶν αὐτοῦ σφίσι καταλιπεῖν, ὅπως ἧσσόν τι ἐν κινήσει ὦσιν οἱ ἐναντίοι, ἴσας δὲ αὐτοὶ πληρώσαντες ἐκ σφῶν αὐτῶν ξυμπέμψειν. 3. καὶ ὁ μὲν ξυνεχώρησεν, οἱ δὲ τοὺς ἐχθροὺς κατέλεγον ἐς τὰς ναῦς. 4. δείσαντες δὲ ἐκεῖνοι μὴ ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας ἀποπεμφθῶσι, καθίζουσιν ἐς τὸ τῶν ‡ Διοσκόρων ἱερόν. 5. Νικόστρατος δὲ αὐτοὺς ἀνίστη τε καὶ παρεμυθεῖτο· ὡς δ' οὐκ ἔπειθεν, ὁ δῆμος ὁπλισθεὶς ἐπὶ τῇ προφάσει ταύτῃ,—ὡς οὐδὲν αὐτῶν ὑγιὲς διανοουμένων τῇ τοῦ μὴ ξυμπλεῖν ἀπιστίᾳ,—τά τε ὅπλα αὐτῶν ἐκ τῶν οἰκιῶν ἔλαβε, καὶ αὐτῶν τινὰς οἷς ἐπέτυχον, εἰ μὴ Νικόστρατος ἐκώλυσε, διέφθειραν ἄν. 6. ὁρῶντες δ' οἱ ἄλλοι τὰ γιγνόμενα καθίζουσιν ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον ἱκέται, καὶ γίγνονται οὐκ ἐλάσσους τετρακοσίων. 7. ὁ δὲ δῆμος,

Ch. LXXV. 1. ξύμβασιν ἔπρασσε] The verb πράσσω is here, as often, especially in the imperf. tense, to be understood of endeavour, q. d. 'he tried to effect a treaty of pacification.'

2. δήμου προστάται] On this expression see note supra ch. 70. Of the words a little after, ὅπως ἧσσόν τι ἐν κινήσει, the sense is, 'that the opposite party might be less in motion [for mischief].' So Cicero has esse in motu.

3. κατέλεγον] 'they were enrolling or enlisting,' i. e. putting on the list for service; as infra vii. 31. Xen. Ages. i. 24, and Hist. iii. 4, 16. Aristoph. Acharn. 1029. The force of the imperf. is to note action either commenced or essayed: and so ἀνίστη and παρεμυθεῖτο, just after.

5. ὡς οὐδὲν αὐτῶν — ἀπιστίᾳ] 'as if they intended no good by this distrust [and refusal] to sail with them,' literally, 'this their distrust in not sailing;' the genit. here being explanatory of the noun it is connected with, as in ἡ ἀπορία τοῦ μὴ ἡσυχάζειν at ii. 49. Οὐδὲν ὑγιὲς διαν. is said per meiosin, intimating (like our phrase to mean no good) that they meditated evil designs, by wishing to remain as if they intended again to attack the commonalty. Of the expression οὐδὲν ὑγιὲς (which signifies literally nihil integrum ac sincerum) examples occur also at iv. 22, and also in Aristoph. and Demosth.

6. καθίζουσιν ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον] Concerning the exact situation of this temple we have, I apprehend, no certain means of information: but that it was very near the city, is highly probable; since the persons here mentioned would, we may imagine, seek a near refuge: and hence I am not of opinion that it was (as is generally supposed) on the right of the Hyllaic port, but somewhere on the sea-shore, just out of the city, and fronting the present island of Vido, the Ptychia mentioned at iv. 46. Now this is the only island that fronts the situation of the Ἡραῖον; for as to Condilores, the present isle of Lazaretto, thought by Goeller and Poppo to be the island here meant, that certainly does not. Indeed we may suppose that the ruined temple situated on the peninsula described by Dodwell, vol. i. p. 33, as the remains of the cella of an ancient temple, was no other than the remains of the Heræum. But see note supra ch. 72, 3.

δείσας μή τι νεωτερίσωσιν, ἀνίστησί τε αὐτοὺς, πείσας, καὶ διακομίζει ἐς τὴν πρὸ τοῦ Ἡραίου νῆσον, καὶ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια ἐκεῖσε αὐτοῖς διεπέμπετο.

LXXVI. Τῆς δὲ στάσεως ἐν τούτῳ οὔσης, τετάρτῃ ἢ πέμπτῃ ἡμέρᾳ μετὰ τὴν τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἐς τὴν νῆσον διακομιδὴν, αἱ ἐκ τῆς Κυλλήνης Πελοποννησίων νῆες, μετὰ τὸν ἐκ τῆς Ἰωνίας πλοῦν ἔφορμοι οὖσαι, παραγίγνονται τρεῖς καὶ πεντήκοντα· ἦρχε δὲ αὐτῶν Ἀλκίδας, ‡ ὅσπερ καὶ πρότερον, καὶ Βρασίδας αὐτῷ ξύμβουλος ἐπέπλει. 2. ὁρμισάμενοι δὲ ἐς Σύβοτα, λιμένα τῆς ἠπείρου, ἅμα ἕῳ ἐπέπλει. LXXVII. Οἱ δὲ πολλῷ θορύβῳ, καὶ πεφοβημένοι τά τ' ἐν τῇ πόλει καὶ τὸν ἐπίπλουν, παρεσκευάζοντό τε ἅμα ἑξήκοντα ναῦς, καὶ τὰς ἀεὶ πληρουμένας ἐξέπεμπον πρὸς τοὺς ἐναντίους, παραινούντων Ἀθηναίων σφᾶς τε ἐᾶσαι πρῶτον ἐκπλεῦσαι, καὶ ὕστερον πάσαις ἅμα ἐκείνους ἐπιγενέσθαι. 2. ὡς δὲ αὐτοῖς πρὸς τοῖς πολεμίοις ἦσαν σποράδες αἱ νῆες, δύο μὲν εὐθὺς ηὐτομόλησαν, ἐν ἑτέραις δὲ ἀλλήλοις οἱ ἐμπλέοντες ἐμάχοντο· ἦν δὲ οὐδεὶς κόσμος τῶν ποιουμένων. 3. ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι τὴν ταραχὴν, εἴκοσι μὲν ναυσὶ πρὸς τοὺς Κερκυραίους ἐτάξαντο, ταῖς δὲ λοιπαῖς πρὸς τὰς δώδεκα ναῦς τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ὧν ἦσαν αἱ δύο, Σαλαμινία καὶ Πάραλος. LXXVIII. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Κερκυραῖοι κακῶς τε καὶ κατ' ὀλίγας προσπίπτοντες, ἐταλαιπωροῦντο καθ' αὑτούς· οἱ δ'

Ch. LXXVI. 1. ἔφορμοι οὖσαι] This is, as Poppo says, for ἐφ' ὅρμῳ οὖσαι, ἐν Κυλλήνῃ ὁρμοῦσαι. For vulg. ὥσπερ, which is retained by Poppo and Goeller, I have, with Bekker in his second edition, substituted ὅσπερ, not only from its being found in many of the best MSS. and the early editions, but from its being the more Attic and Thucydidean form of expression.

Ch. LXXVII. 1. τὰ ἐν τῇ πόλει] 'the state of things in the city.' Τὸν ἐπίπλουν. Meaning the fleet coming against them. Τὰς ἀεὶ πληρουμένας. Meaning, each in succession as they were manned or equipped: for πληρόω has here probably the sense which it certainly bears at vii. 19, and vi. 50, namely, such as to include equipment of every kind. See note at vii. 19. Of ἀεὶ as thus used to signify 'in succession,' examples occur also at i. 2, and iv. 68. The particle is most commonly placed between the art. and the particip.; though not always, as, for instance, at ch. 23, ὁ διακομιζόμενος ἀεὶ ἵστατο.

For τε after σφᾶς I suspect should be read γε; for the formula τε—καὶ has, I apprehend, no place where the καὶ bears the sense it here does, and then; in which case, too, a comma should always be placed before the preceding word.

πάσαις ἅμα] Meaning 'all together,' for ἀθρόαις ταῖς ναυσί.

3. ὧν ἦσαν αἱ δύο] I agree with Blume, Poppo, and Goeller, that the art. is here used to express notoriety; the sense being, 'of which [number] were the two well-known vessels, the Salaminia and Paralus:' on which vessels see note supra ch. 33.

Ch. LXXVIII. 1. κακῶς] for ἀτάκτως, 'in a disorderly manner.' Κατ' ὀλίγας: meaning literally, 'at a few,' i. e. a few at a time. So κατ' ὀλίγον, iv. 10. v. 9. vi. 34. Of ἐταλαιπωροῦντο καθ' αὑτοὺς the sense is, 'they were hard-pressed, sorely distressed and worsted, of themselves,' i. e. by their own proceedings, by their own fault, namely, by their own disorderly mode of attack. This sense of ταλαιπωρεῖσθαι (peculiarly appropriate to military affairs) is one frequent in the historians, and occurs also infra vii. 27 & 28, ἐταλαιπωροῦντο. Corresponding to this is the use of laborare in Latin, as applied to those who are hard-pressed and worsted; e. g. Cæs. Bell. Gall. iv. 26, 'Si quâ laborabant, gravius premi videbantur.'

Ἀθηναῖοι, φοβούμενοι τὸ πλῆθος καὶ τὴν περικύκλωσιν, ἀθρόαις μὲν οὐ προσέπιπτον, οὐδὲ κατὰ μέσον ταῖς ἐφ' ἑαυτοὺς τεταγμέναις· προσβαλόντες δὲ κατὰ κέρας, καταδύουσι μίαν ναῦν. καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα κύκλον ταξαμένων αὐτῶν, περιέπλεον καὶ ἐπειρῶντο θορυβεῖν. 2. γνόντες δὲ οἱ πρὸς τοῖς Κερκυραίοις, καὶ δείσαντες μὴ, ὅπερ ἐν Ναυπάκτῳ, γένοιτο, ἐπιβοηθοῦσι· καὶ γενόμεναι ἀθρόαι αἱ νῆες, ἅμα τὸν ἐπίπλουν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐποιοῦντο. 3. οἱ δ' ὑπεχώρουν ἤδη, πρύμναν κρουόμενοι· καὶ ἅμα τὰς τῶν Κερκυραίων ἐβούλοντο προκαταφυγεῖν, ὅτι μάλιστα ἑαυτῶν σχολῇ τε ὑποχωρούντων, καὶ πρὸς σφᾶς τεταγμένων τῶν ἐναντίων. 4. ἡ μὲν οὖν ναυμαχία, τοιαύτη γενομένη, ἐτελεύτα ἐς ἡλίου δύσιν. LXXIX. Καὶ οἱ Κερκυραῖοι, δείσαντες μὴ σφίσιν ἐπιπλεύσαντες ἐπὶ τὴν πόλιν, ὡς κρατοῦντες, οἱ πολέμιοι, ἢ τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου ἀναλάβωσιν, ἢ καὶ ἄλλο τι νεωτερίσωσι, τούς τε ἐκ τῆς νήσου πάλιν ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον διεκόμισαν, καὶ τὴν πόλιν ἐφύλασσον. 2. οἱ δ' ἐπὶ μὲν τὴν πόλιν οὐκ ἐτόλμησαν πλεῦσαι, κρατοῦντες τῇ ναυμαχίᾳ, τρεῖς δὲ καὶ δέκα ναῦς ἔχοντες τῶν Κερκυραίων ἀπέπλευσαν ἐς τὴν ἤπειρον, ὅθενπερ ἀνηγάγοντο. 3. τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἐπὶ μὲν τὴν πόλιν οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ἐπέπλεον, καίπερ ἐν πολλῇ ταραχῇ καὶ φόβῳ ὄντας, καὶ Βρασίδου παραινοῦντος, ὡς λέγεται, Ἀλκίδᾳ, ἰσοψήφου δὲ οὐκ ὄντος· ἐπὶ δὲ τὴν Λευκίμνην τὸ ἀκρωτήριον ἀποβάντες, ἐπόρθουν τοὺς ἀγρούς. LXXX. Ὁ δὲ δῆμος τῶν Κερκυραίων ἐν τούτῳ, περιδεὴς γενό-

In τὴν περικύκλωσιν we have verbal for verb in infin. τὸ περικυκλοῦσθαι, 'the being surrounded.' Ἀθρόαις is to be referred, not, as it is by some, to their own ships, but to that quarter where the enemy's ships were most en masse, namely, as it is just after said, by way of explanation, κατὰ μέσον, 'at the centre,' as opposed to κατὰ κέρας, 'at the wings, either way.' By κύκλον ταξαμένων — θορυβεῖν it is meant, that they used the same manœuvre as that practised by Phormio in the Corinthian gulf, as described at ii. 84.

3. πρύμναν κρουόμενοι] See note at i. 50. Ἑαυτῶν stands for σφῶν.

Ch. LXXIX. 1. δείσαντες μὴ — οἱ πολέμιοι] 'ne contra suam urbem hostes, ut victores, navigantes (infesta classe).' (Poppo.)

2. κρατοῦντες τῇ ναυμαχίᾳ] 'though victors in the sea-fight.' I have removed the comma after Κερκυραίων, because ἔχοντες is closely connected with ἀπέπλευσαν; the sense being, 'sailed away in possession of thirteen ships.'

3. τὴν πόλιν—ὄντας] On this idiom, by which the syntax is adjusted not to the word itself, but to the thing signified, (which here implies plurality, and therefore admits of ὄντας being used for οὖσαν,) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 434, 2, a, and § 556, note 2.

ἰσοψήφου οὐκ ὄντος] Meaning, not, as the translators understand the words, that 'Brasidas had not an equal number of votes,' or was, as we should say, in a minority at the council board; for he was, as is plain from ch. 76, the only councillor (σύμβουλος). Indeed the term ἰσόψηφος is here to be taken in a metaphorical sense, as standing for ἰσότιμος, literally, 'one whose suffrage is of equal weight with that of another, or others.' Similarly in Livy, iv. 44, we have, 'nec potestas nec suffragatio horum valuit.' In this sense the word occurs also at i. 141, and iii. 11. And so Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 111, 14, βασιλέας μὲν εἶναι Ῥωμαίων, Ῥωμύλον καὶ Τάτιον, ἰσοψήφους ὄντας, καὶ τιμὰς καρπουμένους τὰς ἴσας. Eurip. Suppl. 353, ἐλευθερώσας τήνδ' ἰσόψηφον πόλιν. Æschin. p. 43, 24. Plut. Lycurg. ch. 5. Dionys. Hal. p. 224. And so ὁμόψηφος in Herodot. vi. 109. vii. 149.

μενος μὴ ἐπιπλεύσωσιν αἱ νῆες, τοῖς τε ἱκέταις ἦσαν ἐς λόγους καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις, ὅπως σωθήσεται ἡ πόλις. καί τινας αὐτῶν ἔπεισαν ἐς τὰς ναῦς ἐσβῆναι· ἐπλήρωσαν γὰρ ὅμως τριάκοντα. 2. οἱ δὲ Πελοποννήσιοι μέχρι μέσου ἡμέρας δηώσαντες τὴν γῆν, ἀπέπλευσαν· καὶ ὑπὸ νύκτα αὐτοῖς ἐφρυκτωρήθησαν ἑξήκοντα νῆες Ἀθηναίων προσπλέουσαι ἀπὸ Λευκάδος· ἃς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, πυνθανόμενοι τὴν στάσιν καὶ τὰς μετ' Ἀλκίδου ναῦς ἐπὶ Κέρκυραν μελλούσας πλεῖν, ἀπέστειλαν, καὶ Εὐρυμέδοντα τὸν Θουκλέους στρατηγόν. LXXXI. Οἱ μὲν οὖν Πελοποννήσιοι τῆς νυκτὸς εὐθὺς κατὰ τάχος ἐκομίζοντο ἐπ' οἴκου παρὰ τὴν γῆν· καὶ ὑπερενεγκόντες τὸν Λευκαδίων ἰσθμὸν τὰς ναῦς, ὅπως μὴ περιπλέοντες ὀφθῶσιν, ἀποκομίζονται. 2. Κερκυραῖοι δὲ, αἰσθόμενοι τάς τε Ἀττικὰς ναῦς προσπλεούσας, τάς τε τῶν πολεμίων οἰχομένας, λαβόντες τούς τε Μεσσηνίους ἐς τὴν πόλιν ἤγαγον, πρότερον ἔξω ὄντας· καὶ τὰς ναῦς περιπλεῦσαι κελεύσαντες, ἃς ἐπλήρωσαν, ἐς τὸν Ὑλλαϊκὸν λιμένα, ἐν ὅσῳ περιεκομίζοντο, τῶν ἐχθρῶν εἴ τινα λάβοιεν, ἀπέκτεινον·

Ch. LXXX. 1. τοῖς ἄλλοις] Not 'others,' but 'the rest,' namely, of the aristocratical party, who had not been selected to man the fleet, and consequently not of the four hundred above mentioned. The ὅμως has reference to a clause omitted, which has been variously supplied, though best as follows: 'notwithstanding past disasters and present difficulties.' I have, as before, followed Poppo in cancelling the words προσδεχόμενοι τὸν ἐπίπλουν after τριάκοντα, 1. because they are not found in several of the best MSS.; 2. because they contain nothing that has not been before said; and 3. because it is difficult to account for their omission, though easy for their insertion,—namely, from a marginal scholium formed on the words at ch. 79, δείσαντες μὴ σφίσιν ἐπιπλεύσαντες, &c. Indeed something might with reason be thought wanting; and this the Scholiast set himself to supply, though not rightly.

2. ἐφρυκτωρήθησαν ἑξήκοντα — Λευκάδος] lit. 'sixty galleys of the Athenians were signalled from Leucas as making sail towards Corcyra, or bound for Corcyra;' in other words, he received intelligence, conveyed by fire-signals from Leucas, of the approach of an Athenian fleet. Bredow, with reason, infers from what is here said, that the state of φρυκτωρία was not so poor in signs, or so little useful, as Polyb. x. 40, describes it, since the words show that something more was communicated than the appearance of any enemy,—namely, also, we see here, his force, and moreover the quarter from whence it is coming; for, as Did. and Goeller are agreed, ἀπὸ Λευκάδος must be construed, not with προσπ., (for had the Athenian fleet been already standing over from Leucas, they would have been at Corcyra before the Peloponnesian fleet could have been well on its way home,) but with ἐφρυκτ. See, on this subject, Valckn. on Herodot. vii. 182, med. Wachsmuth, Antiq. Gr. ii. 1, p. 422, and note on iii. 22.

Ch. LXXXI. 1. ὑπερενεγκόντες τὸν Λευκαδίων ἰσθμὸν] Compare viii. 7, and iv. 8, and note supra iii. 15.

2. λαβόντες—ἤγαγον] On this use of the partic. λαβών, see Vig. p. 352, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 552, note 2. The idiom ought not (as it is by the latter) to be confined to the poets; for it is found also in prose-writers of every age, nay, even in the Greek Testament, as Acts xvi. 3, λαβὼν περιέτεμεν αὐτόν. The meaning becomes thus more completely developed; and when, instead of the partic., the verb is used, the sense expressed is stronger, as in a passage of St. John, xix. 6, λάβετε αὐτὸν ὑμεῖς καὶ σταυρώσατε.

ναῦς περιπλεῦσαι — ἐς τὸν Ὑλλαϊκὸν λιμένα] For there the democratical interest was the strongest.

τῶν ἐχθρῶν—ἀπέκτεινον] The persons here meant I formerly supposed to be such of the aristocratical party as were endeavouring to effect their escape by sea; and that not a few in the end did effect it, appears from ch. 85, 2: but little probable

καὶ ἐκ τῶν νεῶν ὅσους ἔπεισαν ἐσβῆναι ἐκβιβάζοντες ‡ ἀπεχρῶντο, ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖόν τε ἐλθόντες τῶν ἱκετῶν ὡς πεντήκοντα ἄνδρας δίκην

is it that they would then have ventured to cross, when they would be almost sure to be captured by the many ships of war moving in various directions. Moreover, as the Corcyræans, in general, οἱ ἐν τῇ πόλει, form the subject of the partic. and the verbs in the sentence, so it would be natural to understand the same subject here: for to suppose any transition made, by reason of the interposed words ἐν ὅσῳ περιεκομίζοντο, to the οἱ περικομιζόμενοι, would involve a harshness intolerable. Hence, dismissing that view, I am now induced to understand the words, with Haack and Poppo, of a massacre commencing in the city while the fleet was sailing round to the Hyllaic harbour. Thus we may consider the present as a brief prelude to the more bloody scenes which soon occurred in the city. The multitude, it seems, put to death all the aristocrats whom they met with; yet did not stay to seek them out in their lurking-places, (where they were waiting for an opportunity of crossing over by night to the opposite coast,) but went forward to meet the fleet at the Hyllaic port, in order that they might continue the work of butchery; for I doubt not but that (as Dr. Arnold thinks possible) 'the people had sent round the ships to the Hyllaic harbour, to have their enemies on board those ships wholly in their power when they should come to land.' Of course the subject of the verbs following, ἀπεχρῶντο and ἔπεισαν, must be the same, namely, the οἱ ἐν τῇ πόλει, not the οἱ περικομιζόμενοι, as is plain from the words preceding, ὅσους ἔπεισαν ἐσβῆναι: for that the subject there must be the democrats, is certain from ch. 85, 1, ὁ δὲ δῆμος—τινὰς αὐτῶν ἔπεισαν ἐς τὰς ναῦς ἐσβῆναι. And what other subject can be supposed to the foregoing verb λάβοιεν?

In the next words, the sense will depend on the somewhat uncertain reading of the verb which notes the action done. Now here almost all the MSS. have ἀπεχώρησαν; while one of the best MSS., and four others in the margin, have ἀπεχρῶντο; another in the margin, ἀνεχρῶντο; and Dionys. Hal. ἀνεχώρησαν. The common reading is retained by Haack and Bekker; while Poppo and Goeller edit ἀπεχρῶντο, and Arnold ἀνεχρήσαντο. To the common reading there exists, I would observe, an insurmountable objection in the circumstance, that thus we should not be told what was done with the men; and little probable is it that they would coolly put them apart, when they sought to put to death all the other aristocrats. Moreover, as Poppo and Goeller point out, propriety of language, as to the sequence of tenses, would require ἐκβιβάσαντες ἀπεχώρησαν: whereas ἐκβιβάζοντες will well consort with ἀπεχρῶντο: and the sense thus arising is excellent,—namely, 'they murdered (literally, made away with) the men as they (i. e. the sailors) were disembarking them.' At least so Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold explain. Yet so much of harshness would it involve to suppose the subject of the partic. different from that of the verb, that I would prefer to render, 'they disembarked (i. e. caused to be disembarked) and put to death.' The multitude had probably waited for them on shore, and butchered them as soon as they reached it. Utterly inconclusive appear to me the reasons assigned by Arnold for preferring either of the two readings ἀπεχρήσαντο and ἀνεχρ. to ἀπεχρῶντο. Of the reading of Dionysius, ἀνεχώρησαν, I would say, that it is an evident corruption for ἀπεχώρησαν, and merely serves to show how ancient was the error. Again, as for certain ancient lexicographers quoting ἀνεχρήσαντο as a Thucydidean term, there are (as Poppo observes) others, not fewer, (as Suidas and Zonaras, Bekker, Anecd. p. 423.) who quote ἀπεχρῶντο for ἀνῄρουν as occurring in Thucydides, which is found no where else in that author, nor can be restored except here. Nor is it true that ἀπεχρήσαντο or ἀνεχρ. would be more easily corrupted into ἀπεχώρησαν than ἀπεχρῶντο would. The corruption is not easily to be accounted for, but probably arose from some abbreviation in writing, which was mistaken by the scribes because the word ἀπεχρῶντο was probably unknown to them. As to the lexicographers who adduce ἀνεχρήσαντο for διέφθειραν as from Thucydides, I suspect that they had no regard to this passage, but rather to that at i. 126, ἐν τῇ παρόδῳ διεχρήσαντο; where I doubt not that ἀπεχρ.—found in two MSS.—is the true reading, from which ἀνεχρήσαντο, as preserved in those lexicographers, is a mere slip of the pen for ἀπεχρ., or else a gloss on ἀπεχρ. as the present διεχρ. is a manifest gloss. That Dio Cass. read ἀπεχρ. here, is the more probable, as he uses the form ἀποχρήσασθαι at 288, 76. 527, 3. 535, 54. 849, 21, evidently with a view to that passage of our author, i. 126.

The words ὅσους ἔπεισαν ἐσβῆναι have ὑποσχεῖν ἔπεισαν, καὶ κατέγνωσαν πάντων θάνατον. 3. οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ τῶν ἱκετῶν, ὅσοι οὐκ ἐπείσθησαν, ὡς ἑώρων τὰ γιγνόμενα, διέφθειραν αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ ἀλλήλους· καὶ ἐκ τῶν δένδρων τινὲς ἀπήγχοντο, οἱ δ', ὡς ἕκαστοι ἐδύναντο, ἀνηλοῦντο. 4. ἡμέρας τε ἑπτὰ, ἃς ἀφικόμενος ὁ Εὐρυμέδων ταῖς ἑξήκοντα ναυσὶ παρέμεινε, Κερκυραῖοι σφῶν αὐτῶν τοὺς ἐχθροὺς δοκοῦντας εἶναι ἐφόνευον, τὴν μὲν αἰτίαν ἐπιφέροντες τοῖς τὸν δῆμον καταλύουσιν· ἀπέθανον δέ τινες καὶ ἰδίας ἔχθρας ἕνεκα, καὶ ἄλλοι, χρημάτων σφίσιν ὀφειλοin them something highly significant, being meant to intimate the treachery as well as cruelty of the action, q. d. 'the very persons whom they had persuaded to go on board in reliance on their good faith.'

3. αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ] Here we have a strong mode of expression to represent the abominable nature of the thing. A similarly significant form of expression is found in Herodot. iv. 133, 4, αὐτοῦ ταύτῃ ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ. The words just after, ἐκ τῶν δένδρων, will not prove, what Levêque and Mitford aver, that this was not the temple itself, but rather the sacred grove belonging to the temple; for it may surely be supposed that the suppliants would seek the place of greatest security, the temple itself; and the trees might be a row around the principal court.

In διέφθειραν—ἀλλήλους, the Scholiast wrongly regards ἀλλήλους as standing for ἑαυτούς: the meaning being, as Poppo points out, that 'every suppliant killed himself; some, it seems, by hanging themselves on the branches of the trees; others, in any other way that they were able;' for all would not be provided with ropes, neither would the trees suffice. Plutarch, Mar., in relating a similar transaction, says, τοὺς δὲ ἄνδρας, ἀπορίᾳ δένδρων, τοῖς κέρασι τῶν βοῶν, τοὺς δὲ τοῖς σκέλεσι (shin-bones), προσδεῖν τοὺς ἑαυτῶν τραχήλους.

In ἀνηλοῦντο, 'made away with themselves,' 'killed themselves,' we have the use of pass. for mid. in a reciprocal sense, as in Acts xvii. 4, προσεκληρώθησαν τῷ Παύλῳ, 'joined their lot with,' 'joined themselves to.' In Dio Cass. 120, 40, the term employed is ἀναλίσκετο, though, for perspicuity sake, is subjoined δι' ἑαυτοῦ.

4. τὴν μὲν αἰτίαν ἐπιφέροντες, &c.] The τοῖς is neither (as Portus supposes it) put for αὐτοῖς, nor, as Duker regards it, does it stand for ὡς, since in that case αὐτοῖς will likewise have to be supplied. The difficulty which here exists has been occasioned by an imperfect development of the sense; something more requiring to be expressed in the correspondent clause πολλοὶ δὲ, which, as the case now stands, must be supplied, in thought, from the protasis. The full sense intended is as follows: 'attaching criminality to (i. e. prosecuting) indeed those [only] who went about to abolish democracy; but putting some to death without any imputation of crime at all, and merely from private enmity.' Such, at least, would have been the regular mode of expressing the thought. As it is, though the δὲ is retained, the correspondence is abandoned, and accordingly the δὲ might best be rendered although. In αἰτίαν ἐπιφέρειν τινὶ we have a forensic phrase, signifying crimen alicui intendere, and which is found also at ch. 46, fin. The force of the article can only appear by imagining in the apodosis some other noun, as τὴν τιμωρίαν.

In τὸν δῆμον καταλύειν we have a phrase equivalent to καταλύειν τὴν δημοκρατίαν, on which see the critics cited by Dukas and Goeller. At λαβόντων, a little after, supply, as the Schol. directs, τὰ χρήματα. Arnold remarks, that ὁ λαβὼν is the term used to express one who owes another money, just as the money lent by bankers is called τὰ ληφθέντα. See Demosth. c. Timoth. p. 1186. Yet ὁ λαβὼν cannot properly bear that sense of itself, but only where τὸ ἀργύριον, or such like, is expressed. Thus τὸ ἀργύριον is actually expressed in the passage of Demosth. In this of our author, τὰ χρήματα must be supplied from the parenthetic words χρημάτων σφ. ὀφειλ.: and ὁ λαβὼν does not mean 'one who owes another money,' but 'he who has received money on loan.' So Xen. Mem. ii. 7, 2, οὐδὲ δανείσασθαί ἐστιν ἀργύριον· ἀλλὰ πρότερον ἄν τις μοι δοκεῖ ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ ζητῶν εὑρεῖν, ἢ δανειζόμενος λαβεῖν. The Scholiast well explains by τῶν δανεισαμένων; though he would not deny that τὰ χρήματα must be supplied. And yet, in a few passages of the later writers, δανείσασθαι is used without any addition; insomuch that, in the Alex-

μένων, ὑπὸ τῶν λαβόντων· πᾶσά τε ἰδέα κατέστη θανάτου, καὶ οἷον φιλεῖ ἐν τῷ τοιούτῳ γίγνεσθαι οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὐ ξυνέβη, καὶ ἔτι περαιτέρω! καὶ γὰρ πατὴρ παῖδα ἀπέκτεινε, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἱερῶν

andrian writers, ὁ δαν. is used as a mere subst. to denote 'the borrower.' So Is. xxiv. 2, ἔσται ὁ δανείζων ὡς ὁ δανειζόμενος, καὶ ὁ ὀφείλων ὡς ᾧ ὀφείλει. In illustration of the subject itself, of debtors getting rid of their creditors in the way here mentioned, I would add that it was by no means unusual in ancient times. Thus, in a passage of Ælian, V. H. xiv. 24, it is said that debtors μὴ ἀφεθέντες ἐπιθέμενοι τοῖς δανείσασι (their creditors) προβαλόμενοι τῆς ὀργῆς τὰ ὅπλα, καὶ εὐλογωτάτην χρείαν, τὴν ἄμαχον καὶ τὴν ἐκ τῶν ἐπειγόντων ἀνάγκην, ἀπέκτειναν τοὺς δανειστάς, where προβαλόμενοι τῆς ὀργῆς τὰ ὅπλα signifies 'wielding such arms as passion might dictate.' The sentiment here is well illustrated by the words of our author, ch. 45, (which probably suggested those of Ælian above cited,) ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν πενία ἀνάγκη τὴν τόλμαν παρέχουσα—ὀργῇ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, &c.

πᾶσα ἰδέα κατέστη θανάτου] Not meaning, as Smith renders, 'that every kind of death was seen:' but the expression is a forcible one, (rendered still more pathetic by a certain mixture of the graphic therein implied,) of which the import is, that 'death appeared in every form and image which it could put on.' So Socrat. Eccl. Hist. ii. 2, διὰ πάσης ἰδέας θανάτου, and Appian, ii. 548, 78, ἰδέα πᾶσα κακῶν ἦν, both passages these evidently imitated from the present, as also one of Virg. Æn. ii. 36, (cited by Wasse,) 'plurima mortis imago.' So also Tacit. Hist. iii. 28, 'variâ pereuntium formâ, et omni imagine mortium.'

In the next words, καὶ οἷον φιλεῖ—περαιτέρω, we have a fuller development of the idea in the preceding πᾶσα ἰδέα, &c.: and though there is an appearance of exaggeration, or over-colouring, yet it does not in effect overstep reality. It is true that the words, according to the sense assigned to them by Portus and Hobbes, contain what would involve no less than an absurdity; but that is occasioned by their mode of placing the words οἷον φιλεῖ ἐν τῷ τοιούτῳ γίγνεσθαι, by which what the historian intended to represent as peculiar and sui generis, is thus represented as what is usual in such cases. But by Valla, Heilm., Poppo, and Goeller, the words are, very properly, taken out of their natural order, and the sense expressed as follows: 'nihil non contigit eorum quæ in hujusmodi casu fieri solunt.' And, regarding οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὐ as equiv. to πᾶν, Poppo and Goeller understand the words as standing for καὶ πᾶν οἷον φιλεῖ ἐν τῷ τοιούτῳ γενέσθαι, καὶ ἔτι περαιτέρω τούτων ξυνέβη. In short, the words καὶ ἔτι περαιτέρω are meant to represent the scene as rising beyond the accustomed order of things, even in such excesses as amounted to the extraordinary and monstrous.

Of this phrase οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὐκ, as used for πᾶν, I have noted one, and only one, example elsewhere, in Agath. p. 138, ἁρπαγὰς ἐποιοῦντο, καὶ οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὖν (for which read οὐκ) ἐφρόνουν ἀλλοιώτερον τῶν διαφανῶς πολεμίων.

Of this passage of our author I have noted the following evident imitation in Jos. Ant. xviii. 1, 1, κακὸν δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν, οὗ μὴ, φύεντος ἐκ τῶνδε τῶν ἀνδρῶν, καὶ περαιτέρω τοῦ εἰπεῖν, ἀνεπλήσθη τὸ ἔθνος. Comp. Eurip. El. 1186, ἄλαστα, μέλεα, καὶ πέρα γε. Aristoph. Thesm. 705, δεινὰ πράγματ' ἐστι, καὶ περαιτέρω.

καὶ γὰρ πατὴρ παῖδα ἀπέκτεινε] 'for even father slew son,' meaning, that such things as fathers slaying their sons did actually take place: a sense so evidently the one here intended, that I should not have thought it necessary to thus expressly advert to it, had it not been mistaken by Bp. Thirlwall, who renders, 'a father was known to have slain his son,' stumbling, I imagine, at their being no article. But the truth is, that this idiom, by which the singular is put generically for the plural, does not admit of the article. The same idiom has place in a passage of St. Matth. x. 21, παραδώσει δὲ ἀδελφὸς ἀδελφὸν εἰς θάνατον, καὶ πατὴρ τέκνον· καὶ ἐπαναστήσονται τέκνα ἐπὶ γονεῖς, where Wakefield renders 'a brother;' though, of course, he could not understand the words as meant of one single or particular instance.

This and other passages which I have adduced in my note on 2 Tim. iii. 2, will sufficiently tend to prove the justice of the charge made by St. Paul against the heathens, of want of natural affection.

καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἱερῶν ἀπεσπῶντο] 'and [persons] were torn from the sanctuaries,' i. e. altars, or other places thought inviolable.

ἀπεσπῶντο, καὶ πρὸς αὐτοῖς ἐκτείνοντο· οἱ δέ τινες καὶ περιοικοδομηθέντες ἐν τοῦ Διονύσου τῷ ἱερῷ ἀπέθανον. LXXXII. Οὕτως ὠμὴ στάσις προὐχώρησε, καὶ ἔδοξε μᾶλλον, διότι ἐν τοῖς πρώτη ἐγένετο· ἐπεὶ ὕστερόν γε καὶ πᾶν, ὡς εἰπεῖν, τὸ Ἑλληνικὸν ἐκινήθη, διαφορῶν οὐσῶν ἑκασταχοῦ τοῖς τε τῶν δήμων προστάταις περιοικοδομηθέντες ἐν τοῦ Διονύσου τῷ ἱερῷ] 'having been walled in, or up,' i. e. by muring up the entrances. In περιοικ. we have a very rare word; yet I find it in Ezek. xxxix. 11, περιοικοδομήσουσί τι περιστόμιον τῆς φάραγγος. Of this περιοικοδόμησις another instance had already occurred in the case of Pausanias.

CH. LXXXII. 1. I have, as in my Transl., thought proper to make ch. 81 terminate at ἀπέθανον, and ch. 82 commence at οὕτως: the propriety of which Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold seem to acknowledge, by placing no more than a comma after ἐγένετο. Why they did not, as in a few other such cases, alter the commencement of the chapter, it is not easy to say: certainly consistency required it.

Krueger, Dobree, and Arnold are agreed that ἡ has been lost after ὠμὴ (atrox). The article, they think, cannot well be dispensed with. But strange were it that it should have been lost in all the MSS. Certain it is that Cantacuz. iii. 28, p. 177, (cited by Poppo,) who closely imitates this passage of our author, had it not in his copy. And I think the article may be dispensed with; and its non-use accounted for by bearing in mind that there is here a commixture of two forms of expression, οὕτως ὠμὴ στάσις ἐγένετο, and ἐς οὕτως (standing for τοσαύτην) ὠμὴν στάσιν προὐχώρησεν ἡ στάσις. Our author uses elsewhere the expression ἐς μέγα προχωρεῖν, and in Herodot. vii. 50, we have, ἐς ὃ δυνάμιος προκεχώρηκε. Compare also a passage at i. 23, 1, τούτου δὲ τοῦ πολέμου μῆκος μέγα προὔβη, where there is a similar blending of two forms of expression, τούτου δὲ τοῦ πολέμου τὸ μῆκος μέγα ἐγένετο, and οὗτος ὁ πόλεμος ἐς or ἐπὶ μέγα προὔβη. At μᾶλλον repeat ὠμή. So in Cantacuzen we have, ἔδοξε δὴ καὶ μᾶλλον χαλεπωτέρα ἐκ τοῦ πρώτη παρ' αὐτοῖς γενέσθαι, where for δὴ, read δέ: also cancel the word χαλεπωτέρα, which is evidently from the margin, where the Scholiast meant to intimate that μᾶλλον, scil. χαλεπὴ, stood for χαλεπωτέρα. The idiom at ἐν τοῖς πρώτη has been already explained at i. 6, and iii. 17.

ἐπεὶ ὕστερόν γε καὶ πᾶν, &c.] After recording the facts and circumstances of this horrible drama, Thucydides proceeds to open out, with a masterly pen, the moral effects thereof to Greece at large. To advert to the style and composition of this portion, it is singularly harsh and perplexed, and has been, not without reason, censured by Dionysius. The grammatical construction is even more than usually anomalous; insomuch that it has sometimes baffled the ablest philologists to bring the phraseology within the rules of correct writing; though this fault is more than redeemed by a certain grandeur and sublimity of thought. Thucydides commences by saying, that 'after these tragical occurrences in Corcyra, nearly the whole of Greece was thrown into commotion, and the examples of atrocity there set, were afterwards elsewhere but too faithfully copied, nay, were even outdone.' But he commences by especially pointing to the great moving cause of these commotions every where, in the conflict of the aristocratical and democratical interests; which, though it had long subsisted, had of late been identified with the cause of Athens or of Lacedæmon respectively, and had been aggravated to the utmost bitterness by the war now subsisting between those powers, which had drawn in gradually almost all the other states of Greece, on the side of one or of the other; and thus a general war was produced, which had its usual effect in disorganizing the whole of the frame-work of civil society, to the overturning of all law, divine and human, and the tearing up of all the seeds of goodness, and the disruption of the strongest ties of natural affection; all the principles of justice and the motions of benevolence being swallowed up in a blind and uncompromising party-spirit.

In the very commencement of this portion a difficulty, real or fancied, presents itself. According to the opinion of Arnold, the inf. ἐπάγεσθαι has no proper government; and so thought Heilm. and Goeller, who, to remedy this, would interpret διαφορῶν οὐσῶν — ἐπάγεσθαι, 'it being the interest of the popular leaders;'

τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐπάγεσθαι, καὶ τοῖς ὀλίγοις τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους· καὶ ἐν μὲν εἰρήνῃ οὐκ ἂν ἐχόντων πρόφασιν, οὐδ' ἑτοίμων παρακαλεῖν αὐτούς, πολεμουμένων δὲ, καὶ ξυμμαχίας ἅμα ἑκατέροις τῇ τῶν ἐναντίων κακώσει, καὶ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ προσποιήσει, ῥᾳδίως αἱ ἐπαγωγαὶ τοῖς νεωτερίζειν τι βουλομένοις ἐπορίζοντο. 2. καὶ ἐπέπεσε πολλὰ καὶ χαλεπὰ κατὰ στάσιν ταῖς πόλεσι, γιγνό-but such a sense is at once forced and frigid; and we may urge that it was no more the interest of the leaders than of the led to call in the Athenians: moreover, as Arnold observes, such a sense in the subst. is no where else found in our author, but always (in no less than twenty-two different passages) 'in the differences or quarrels,' a sense which it is best here to adopt, at ἐπάγεσθαι supplying, as often, ὥστε; not that I would understand, with Arnold and Goeller, the consequences of these political dissensions, but the respective aim of the two parties—the one to bring in the governing influence of the Athenians; the other, of the Lacedæmonians.

καὶ ἐν μὲν εἰρήνῃ—πολεμουμένων, &c.] The difficulty of construction here has been occasioned by the use of the participles ἐχόντων and πολεμουμένων, where a perspicuous writer would rather have employed verbs, and commenced a new sentence. I have pointed accordingly; for in such a case to place a comma, though demanded by strict grammatical propriety, would only increase the difficulty, by making it needlessly prominent to the eye. A worse defect, and one more embarrassing to the reader, is that into which the writer next falls, who, though he begins the sentence with a participle, and continues it with the same, yet ends it with a verb, ἐπορίζοντο; whereas propriety would rather have required one or the other throughout. The genitives here are, as Goeller observes, put for the case which the subsequent verb requires, namely, the dative, which would depend on ἐπορίζοντο. The reason why the genit. was used seems to have been this, that such was requisite to denote cause, as here required by the context. Thus the best rendering of the words would be, 'for in peace, indeed, they, i. e. the democratical party, would have had no pretext, nor would have been ready, to call in their aid.' Of πολεμουμένων δὲ (scil. αὐτῶν) the sense is literally, 'when they were pressed with war.' So Athen. p. 442, διὸ δὲ πολεμουμένων τότε αὐτῶν. The construction Poppo lays down as follows: πολεμουμένων δὲ (αὐτῶν, for αὐτοῖς) ῥᾳδίως αἱ ἐπαγωγαὶ ἑκατέροις τοῖς νεωτερίζειν τι βουλομένοις ἐπορίζοντο, καὶ τῇ τῶν ἐναντίων ξυμμαχίας κακώσει καὶ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἅμα ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ξυμμαχίας προσποιήσει. But, to advert to the phraseology in detail, ἑκατέροις is, as Goeller remarks, for ἑκατέρων; and the datives κακώσει and προσποιήσει are either for accusatives with ἐς, or rather are to be regarded as datives of cause, by the subaudition of ἐπὶ, (see Matth. Gr. § 398, b.) the sense being, 'for the annoyance of their adversaries, and their own advantage [therefrom].' Here, however, the chief difficulty is to fix the construction and sense of ξυμμαχίας. Now this word may, as it is supposed by Kistem., Bredow, and Arnold, depend on ὑπαρχούσης, to be derived from πολεμουμένων; πολεμουμένων καὶ ξυμμ. ἅμα ἐκ. being equiv. to πολέμου ὑπάρχοντος καὶ ξυμμαχίας ἅμα ἑκατέροις; yet so harsh is this sort of ellipsis, that it is better, with Bauer, Gail, and Poppo, to join ξυμμαχίας ἐπαγωγαὶ, so rendering, 'the opportunities of bringing in alliance were easily furnished.'

2. The historian now proceeds to advert to the cause of these atrocities, and to indicate how it came to pass that they in this instance assumed so deep a dye. The cause, he shows, was political faction, though aggravated in its character by peculiar circumstances connected with the war (see sect. 3); which characteristic signs of the times he then proceeds, in the remainder of the chapter, to depict. In doing this (to use the words of Bp. Thirlwall) he lays open the deep and spreading root which had yielded these bitter fruits, proceeding to describe with searching minuteness the character and progress of that spirit of party, which, though it had long prevailed in Greece, and manifested itself in many terrible deeds, had never before assumed a form quite so hideous as in the massacre of Coreyra; which Thucydides regards as the opening of a new period in the history of the Greek factions.

In ἐπέπεσε we have a highly-significant term used, like our befall, of things that happen adverse, as diseases, earthquakes, deluges, and such like. The next words are meant to disclose how it came to pass, that there was nothing of evil that had ever occurred in war or faction, worse than what took place now; and this is introduced in a profoundly philosophic spirit of thought and inquiry. Our author intimates that as the same causes, faction and ambition, which had heretofore wrought such dire effects on Greece, continued to operate with increasing force, the effects were proportionably worse. He does not, however, bring a sweeping accusation, involving all the subsequent events in the same condemnation. Those events were, he shows, such as would never cease to occur so long as human nature remained the same; (intimating that the picture he draws belongs to all ages and nations, and was therefore suited to a κτῆμα ἐς ἀεὶ for the instruction of those ὅσοι βουλήσονται τῶν τε γενομένων τὸ σαφὲς σκοπεῖν καὶ τῶν μελλόντων ποτὲ αὖθις κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπειον, τοιούτων καὶ παραπλησίων ἔσεσθαι) but, nevertheless, they would be diversified in their forms, and varied in their degrees of evil, according as the causes which produced them should operate with greater or less of intensity.

μενα μὲν καὶ ἀεὶ ἐσόμενα, ἕως ἂν ἡ αὐτὴ φύσις ἀνθρώπων ᾖ, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἡσυχαίτερα, καὶ τοῖς εἴδεσι διηλλαγμένα, ὡς ἂν ἕκασται

The words following γιγνόμενα—ἀνθρώπων have been imitated by Dio Cass. 88, 52. Procop. 132, 23. Agath. i. p. 6, and Soph. Antig. 332, 369. The μᾶλλον, just after, does not, as some suppose, stand for potius, but, as the Scholiast, Bauer, Goeller, and Poppo are agreed, must be referred to the words a little before, γιγνόμενα καὶ ἀεὶ ἐσόμενα, equiv. to μείζω or χαλεπώτερα: and of the use of γίγνεσθαι with an adverb combined with an adjective, Poppo adduces an example from Xen. Anab. iv. 7, 23, ἐπειδὴ δὲ βοὴ πλείων τε ἐγίγνετο καὶ ἐγγύτερον. In a passage, imitated from the present, of Dionys. Hal. Ant. x. 1985, both words are adverbs, ἧττόν τε καὶ μᾶλλον, where γεγονότα is to be repeated; and so the Schol. here explains by μᾶλλόν τε καὶ ἧσσον. Ἡσυχ. has here the rare sense meliora, as opposed to gravius or sævius; and so in Plato, p. 24, we have ἡσυχαίτερον opposed to σφοδρότερον. Of τοῖς εἴδεσι διηλλαγμένα the sense is, 'diversified in their forms,' i. e. one instance differing in its phenomena from another. This passive form is so rare, that I do not remember any other instance elsewhere, except in Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 29, p. 77, καὶ μάλιστα ταῖς φωναῖς αὐτῶν διηλλαγμέναις, 'their languages discrepant.' But in Herodot. vii. 70, we have the use of the active form in a neuter sense, and also with εἶδος, thus: διαλλάσσοντες εἶδος μὲν οὐδὲν τοῖς ἑτέροισι. The Schol. explains εἴδεσι by τρόποις: and so Portus renders by genera, and Hobbes, by kinds. But that is to fall into the very same error as that adverted to supra ch. 81, 5, (on the words πᾶσα ἰδέα κατέστη θανάτου) namely, to lower the conception of a great mind to the level of ordinary comprehension. In the present, as in the foregoing instance, I doubt not but that the graphic was intended, and that our author had here in mind those physical convulsions of nature, earthquakes, &c. which, like the moral convulsions of revolutions, are more or less terrible, and vary in their forms or phenomena, according to the variations in the state of things which may occur; and as the term εἶδος not unfrequently, in Aristotle and other philosophical writers, denotes 'the external form, or figure' of any thing, so it may very well serve to designate the various phenomena of nature. Upon the whole, I doubt not but that our author in his own mind felt the striking analogy existing between physical earthquakes and these moral earthquakes of revolution, which shake the very foundations of civil society. Such is evidently the scope of a fine passage of Pind. Pyth. iv. 484, containing in it a deeply important sentiment: ῥᾴδιον μὲν γὰρ πόλιν σεῖσαι| καὶ ἀφανροτέροις· ἀλλ' ἐπὶ χώ|ρας αὖθις ἔσσαι δυσπαλὲς | Δὴ γίνεται, ἐξαπίνας Εἰ μὴ Θεὸς ἀγεμόνεσσι κυβερ|νατὴρ γένηται.

ὡς ἂν ἕκασται—ἐφιστῶνται] Render, 'as the several changes of circumstances may be appointed to men by fortune.' Ἐφίστασθαι is a term used of things which 'a fortunâ immittuntur et hominibus accedere adeoque accidere solent.' So Eurip. Hipp. 819, ὦ τύχα, Ὡς μοι βαρεῖα καὶ δόμοις ἐπεστάθης: where had Valckn. and Bred. been aware of this idiom, they would not have proposed to read ἐπεστάθη. All the editors have there failed to see that ἐπεστ. is used per dilogiam, in a double sense; namely, 'to come upon, befall,' as regards μοι, and simply to come to, as regards δόμοις; similarly as in a passage of Soph. frag. incert. i. 5, ταχὺς δὲ βαθμοῖς νυμφικοῖς ἐπεστάθη. Of the term as thus used in the passive, I αἱ μεταβολαὶ τῶν ξυντυχιῶν ἐφιστῶνται. 3. ἐν μὲν γὰρ εἰρήνῃ καὶ ἀγαθοῖς πράγμασιν αἵ τε πόλεις καὶ οἱ ἰδιῶται ἀμείνους τὰς γνώμας ἔχουσι διὰ τὸ μὴ ἐς ἀκουσίους ἀνάγκας πίπτειν· ὁ δὲ πόλεμος, ὑφελὼν τὴν εὐπορίαν τοῦ καθ' ἡμέραν, βίαιος διδάσκαλος, καὶ πρὸς τὰ παρόντα τὰς ὀργὰς τῶν πολλῶν ὁμοιοῖ. 4. ἐστασίαζέ τε οὖν τὰ τῶν πόλεων, καὶ τὰ ἐφυστερίζοντά που, πύστει τῶν προknow no other example; but in the active, taken in a neuter or passive sense, the term occurs in Demosth. 287, 5, τὸν ἐφεστηκότα τῇ πόλει κίνδυνον. Polyb. ii. 20, 7, ἡ τύχη—ἐπέστησε πᾶσι Γαλάταις. Soph. Œd. R. 777, πρίν μοι τύχη Τοίαδ' ἐπέστη.

3. Our author now proceeds to trace the various causes tending to produce these results, which he does by contrasting the state of things in peace and in war.

ἐν εἰρήνῃ καὶ ἀγαθοῖς πράγμασιν] A phrase not unfrequently borrowed from our author by Procop. In ἐν ἀγαθοῖς πράγμασιν we have a certain inartificial form of expression, exactly parallel to one in the first epistle of St. Pet. iii. 10, and Ps. xxxiii. 13, ἰδεῖν ἡμέρας ἀγαθὰς, &c.

ἀκουσίους ἀνάγκας] A phrase often occurring in the later historians, and meaning such necessitous circumstances as compel men to do what they would not wish. The general import of this reflection is, that not only men's principles give way under temptations, but their judgments are warped by passion and prejudice; they take no solid views, and are entangled in the web of their own selfish sophistry.

ὁ δὲ πόλεμος—βίαιος διδάσκαλος] The expression διδάσκ. βίαιος is here to be taken figuratively, by a metaphor taken from a stern master, who compels his scholars to do what they have no mind to do. A similar allusion is found in Xen. An. ii. 6, 7, διέκειντο πρὸς αὐτὸν ὡς παῖδες πρὸς διδάσκαλον: as also in a passage of Mal. i. 6, 'If I be a master, where is my fear?' Compare, too, in Xen. Cyr. ii. 35, διδάσκαλος τούτων οὐδεὶς κρείσσων τῆς ἀνάγκης.

πρὸς τὰ παρόντα τὰς ὀργὰς τῶν πολλῶν ὁμοιοῖ] 'assimilates, conforms the dispositions of the multitude to things present,' i. e. the present situation and circumstances. This sense of ὀργαὶ is also found at i. 130. ii. 24, and in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 434, 11, ἐπιεικέστεραι πρὸς τοὺς εὐπόρους αἱ τῶν πενήτων ὀργαί, and vii. 14, χείρους ταῖς ὀργαῖς ἦσαν. Here, then, ὀργαὶ corresponds to the Latin ingenia, mores, indoles: on which see Ruhnken, Epist. Crit. p. 83. Hymn. in Cer. p. 169, seqq. In short, as the term ὀργὴ (from the verb ὀρέγω) signifies, primarily, the native bent, impulse, or temper of mind, so it here denotes, as used in the plural, the dispositions and inclinations which impel men to act. By the words a little before, ὑφελὼν τὴν εὐπορίαν τοῦ καθ' ἡμέραν, is intimated another way in which the war tended to throw all things into confusion; namely, by ruining private fortunes, and draining the sources of public prosperity; at any rate by diverting the attention of all classes from the pursuits of peaceful industry to those of violence and rapine.

4. ἐστασίαζέ τε οὖν τὰ τῶν πόλεων] 'accordingly the cities fell into factions;' namely, into that miserable state which our historian now proceeds minutely to describe. The commentators are in general agreed that τὰ τῶν πόλεων here stands for πόλεις, by an idiom elsewhere occurring in Thucyd., as ii. 6. iv. 54. v. 86. vi. 6. vii. 49. viii. 77, and which is frequent in the best early Attic writers. Τὰ ἐφυστερίζοντα is by Dionys. and, of modern critics, Goeller, supposed to stand for αἱ ἐφυστερίζουσαι, scil. πόλεις, and that for οἱ ἐφυστερίζοντες; and the sense is accordingly expressed by the former as follows: οἱ δὲ ὑστερίζοντες, ἐπιπνθανόμενοι (I would read, ἐπὶ πύστει πυνθανόμενοι) τὰ γεγενημένα παρ' ἑτέρων, ἐλάμβανον ὑπερβολὴν ἐπὶ τὸ διανοεῖσθαί τι καινότερον. Goeller observes, that in such a circumlocution as this, (namely, τὰ τῶν πόλεων) the construction of the sentence is indeed usually accommodated to the thing which is thus periphrastically expressed (τῶν πόλεων); but sometimes, to the circumlocution (τά). Poppo, however, much doubts whether ὑπερβολὴν ἐπιφέρειν can signify the same as ὑπερβολὴν ποιεῖσθαι or ὑπερβάλλειν; and he prefers, with another Schol. and Kistem., to understand the neuter to denote, 'the things which happened afterwards.' The term following, ἐφυστ., may be understood, as it is by Kistem., of things, and especially if τὰ τῶν πόλεων preceding be taken as standing not for αἱ πόλεις, but for τὰ τῶν γενομένων, πολὺ ἐπέφερε τὴν ὑπερβολὴν τοῦ καινοῦσθαι τὰς διανοίας τῶν τ' ἐπιχειρήσεων περιτεχνήσει καὶ τῶν τιμωριῶν ἀτοπίᾳ. 5. καὶ τὴν εἰωθυῖαν ἀξίωσιν τῶν ὀνομάτων ἐς τὰ ἔργα ἀντήλ-

πόλεων πράγματα: yet to understand it of seditions, is, I apprehend, not allowable; and the mode of interpreting ἐπέφερε τὴν ὑπερβολὴν τοῦ καινοῦσθαι τὰς διανοίας, proposed by Poppo, is at least as harsh as that to which he so much, though with so little reason, objects. Moreover, it is to be borne in mind, that this sentence contains throughout expressions which represent persons as the agents of certain actions, as πύστει, ἐπέφερε, ὑπερβολὴν, διανοίας, περιτεχνήσει, and τιμωριῶν ἀτοπίᾳ; and in the next sentence, persons form the subjects of the verbs. Now it were surely harsh in the extreme, to suppose a transition from persons to things put for persons, and then again to persons. Hence I do not hesitate to prefer the interpretation of the Schol., Dionys., and Goeller. There is nothing to which one can reasonably object in the grammatical principle by which this seeming irregularity is accounted for, especially as an exactly parallel form of expression presents itself at i. 110, 1, οὕτω μὲν τὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων πράγματα διεφθάρη, ἓξ ἔτη πολεμήσαντα. Indeed it falls under the general head of the πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον. Of course, αἱ πόλεις stands for οἱ πολῖται, as it does in all cases where personal actions are ascribed; and no wonder, since, as Shakspeare says, 'What is the city but the people?—True, the people are the city.' It is only necessary further to observe, that πύστει stands for ἐπὶ πύστει, 'at, or on, hearing;' and the τοῦ, for ἐς or ἐπὶ τό, 'ita ut excogitarent.' Πολὺ belongs to ὑπερβολὴν, and though propriety would seem to require πολλὴν, yet if πολὺ be for κατὰ πολύ, 'by far,' no great harshness is thus involved; for it is only the verbal taking the construction of the verb; since we might say πολὺ ὑπερβάλλειν as πολὺ νικᾶν elsewhere in our author. Nay, in Herodot. ii. 175, we have πολλὸν (for πολὺ) πάντας ὑπερβαλλόμενος τῷ τε ὕψεϊ καὶ τῷ μεγάθεϊ, the very same construction as in the present passage. That Cantacuzen so understood the words, is plain from his almost transcript of the passage at iii. 28, ἐστασίαζον οὖν αἱ πόλεις· καὶ οἱ ὑστερίζοντές που πύστει τῶν προγεγενημένων πολλὴν ἐπεδείκνυντο ὑπερβολήν, &c.; and so certainly did Josephus, who in Bell. vii. 8, 1, has, ἐγένετο πῶς ὁ χρόνος ἐκεῖνος παντοδαπὴς ἐν τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις πονηρίας πολυφόρος, ὡς μηδὲν κακίας ἔργον ἄπρακτον καταλιπεῖν· μηδ' εἴ τις ἐπινοίᾳ διαπλάττειν ἐθελήσειεν, ἔχειν (read ἔχοι) ἄν τι καινότερον ἐξευρεῖν. Οὕτως ἰδίᾳ τε καὶ κοινῇ πάντες ἐνόσησαν· καὶ πρὸς ὑπερβαλεῖν ἀλλήλους, ἔν τε ταῖς πρὸς τὸν θεὸν ἀσεβείαις καὶ ταῖς εἰς τοὺς πλησίον ἀδικίαις, ἐφιλονείκησαν. See also a passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Dio Cass. p. 493, 77—85.

Of περιτεχνήσει ἐπιχειρησέων the sense is, 'by the crafty contriving of means of attacking their enemy by some subtle machination.' So the verb περιτεχνᾶσθαι is explained in Suidas by δολιεύεσθαι; and the noun is not ill explained by one of the Scholiasts περινοίᾳ, that word being said by Hesych. to be equiv. to μηχανῇ or τέχνῃ.

Ἀτοπίᾳ here corresponds to καινοῦσθαι τὰς διανοίας before, denoting, by a blending of two senses, novel atrocity of avengements. So Lucian, i. 648, τὸ τῶν κολάσεων πρὸς ὠμότητα καινουργόν. In such wretched circumstances, alas, evil example is too surely followed, and even exceeded; for to use the words of Eurip. Hipp. 944, ὁ δ' ὕστερος τοῦ πρόσθεν εἰς ὑπερβολὴν Πανοῦργος ἔσται. And so Jos. Bell. iv. 3, 9, ζηλώσαντες τὰ κάκιστα τῶν ἔργων, καὶ ὑπερβαλόμενοι. Similarly Bp. Burnet, cited by Smedley, in his Hist. of the Reformation in France, iii. 277, says, with reference to the horrible atrocities which succeeded the massacre at Paris on St. Bartholomew's day, 'that all men set their thoughts to work, to invent new methods of cruelty.' Such, it may be further observed, was almost universally made good in the various stages of the French revolution.

5. τὴν εἰωθυῖαν ἀξίωσιν — δικαιώσει] These words are meant to set in a strong point of view the frightful height to which the evil of this demoralization had reached. Render, 'Nay, they changed at their pleasure the accustomed acceptation of words (as applied) to actions.' The construction is well laid down by Goeller, as follows: ἀντηλλ. καὶ τὴν ἀξίωσιν τῶν ὀνομάτων, [τὴν] εἰωθυῖαν [εἶναι or λέγεσθαι] ἐς τὰ ἔργα. Τῇ δικαιώσει Steph. explains, 'suo arbitratu;' the Schol. better, τῇ δικαίᾳ κρίσει, which signifies proprio judicio. The use here of ἀξίωσις in the sense σημασία, acceptation, is so rare, that I have met with only two examples else-λαξαν τῇ δικαιώσει. 6. τόλμα μὲν γὰρ ἀλόγιστος ἀνδρεία φιλέταιρος ἐνομίσθη, μέλλησις δὲ προμηθὴς δειλία εὐπρεπὴς, τὸ δὲ σῶφρον, τοῦ ἀνάνδρου πρόσχημα, καὶ τὸ πρὸς ἅπαν ξυνετὸν, ἐπὶ πᾶν ἀργόν· where: Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 73, συγχέοντες τὴν τῆς ἀληθείας φύσιν, καὶ τὴν ἀξίωσιν τῶν δικαίων ἀναστρέφοντες. Heliod. Æth. viii. 4, εἰρήνην καὶ πόλεμον οὐχ ἡ τῶν ὀνομάτων ἀξίωσις, ἀλλ' ἡ τῶν χρωμένων διάταξις γνωρίζειν πέφυκε. Of ἀντήλλαξαν the meaning is, 'interchanged one with another,' affixing good names to bad actions, and vice versâ. This practice of calling bad things by good names has prevailed in all ages, especially in times of more than ordinary corruption of morals, arising from wars, (especially civil ones,) revolutions, &c. An allusion to this may be recognised in a passage of Isaiah, v. 20, 'Wo unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness!'

6. The foregoing assertion is now exemplified by some prominent instances; namely, of vices coloured by the name of virtues, and of virtues misrepresented as vices. The first sentence, consisting of two strongly marked antitheses, may be rendered, 'Thus, for instance, on the one hand, a reckless daring was accounted friend-loving bravery, but forethoughtful hesitation, specious cowardice; whilst, on the other, prudence was a cloak for cowardice; and the use of discretion in any thing, was to be inactive in every thing.' The structure of the sentence is very peculiar, from there being a μὲν answering to δὲ with an interposed δὲ, though not corresponding to the μέν; and the apodotic δὲ (at τὸ δὲ σῶφρον) being followed by another δὲ not apodotic, but merely continuative, serving to introduce another pair of opposites, where the second is adversative and apodotic, as though there had been a μέν. As the first pair of opposites consists of vices coloured by the name of virtues, so the second consists of a pair of virtues represented as vices. In the next words, τὸ δ' ἐμπλήκτως—εὔλογος, are opposed together a vice coloured as a virtue, and a virtue represented as a vice. Such is the general plan of this portion, in the highest degree masterly, and rising far above the conceptions of the poor peddling criticism of Dionysius. A few illustrations of the phraseology will suffice. Of ἀλόγιστος the sense is lit. unreflecting, inconsiderate, reckless of consequences; and the term is not unfrequently joined with τόλμη by the best writers. Φιλέταιρος is thought a somewhat rare word, though it is found in Xenophon, Aristot., Lucian, and Arrian. The sense it always bears is that of friend-loving or friend-devoted. Dr. Arnold, with reason, supposes the term to have reference to those ἑταιρίαι, brotherhoods or political clubs, mentioned at l. viii., on which I would refer the reader to Mitford's Greece, iv. 219, and Mueller's Dorians, l. i. ch. 9. § 13, 14. Τὸ σῶφρον does not mean modestia, moderation, as Port. and Heilm. explain; but, as being the counterpart to the foregoing ἀλογιστία, is rather to be understood of that prudence without which valour nought avails, insomuch that Euripides, in his Suppl. 510, hazards the bold assertion, καὶ τοῦτό τοι τἀνδρεῖον, ἡ προμηθία. Krueger here aptly compares Plat. Polit. viii. p. 560, σωφροσύνην δὲ ἀνανδρίαν καλοῦντες.

In the next semi-clause, τὸ ξυνετὸν denotes that discretion which knows where to dare and where to be quiet, (mindful that, to use the words of Eurip. Suppl. 509, ἥσυχος καιρῷ σοφὸς) and which never lets daring be unaccompanied with forethought. So Æschyl. Prom. 389, ἐν τῷ προμηθεῖσθαι δὲ καὶ τυλμᾶν τινα Ὀρφῆς ἐνοῦσαν ζημίαν. To this is opposed τὸ ἀργὸν, the so-called inactivity, as opposed to the headlong impetuosity of the persons in question. This use of ξυνετὸς to signify discreet, prudent, or what is otherwise denoted by φρόνιμος, is indeed rare. The general acceptation of the word is 'prudent in judgment,' as at vi. 39. i. 138; though as prudens in Latin, and our discreet, is applied to denote one who shows his judgment in wariness and circumspection, so τὸ ξυνετὸν denotes that discretion which has been truly said to be the better part of valour, and might be termed the better part also of wisdom; meaning that practical wisdom by which the affairs of the world are managed. That prudens in Latin had at first solely the sense provident, wary, is plain from its etymology; and this it always retained in use, though generally accompanied with some other term directly expressing that sense. Something nearly approaching to this sense is found in the use of the word in a passage of Gen. xli. 33, σκέψαι ἄνδρα φρόνιμον καὶ συνετὸν, where I would render, 'look out for a prudent and τὸ δ' ἐμπλήκτως ὀξὺ ἀνδρὸς μοίρᾳ προσετέθη, ‡ ἀσφαλείᾳ δὲ τὸ ἐπιβουλεύσασθαι, ἀποτροπῆς πρόφασις εὔλογος· καὶ ὁ μὲν χαλεπαίνων πιστὸς ἀεί, ὁ δ' ἀντιλέγων αὐτῷ ὕποπτος. 7. ἐπιβουλεύσας discreet man;' the latter term adverting to the practical wisdom above spoken of, according to the view taken by Dean Swift, who calls discretion 'a species of lower prudence.' Of τὸ ἀργὸν the sense is 'inactive cowardice,' according to the use of the word elsewhere. So Plato, 903, ἀργὸν ἢ δειλόν τινα. Xen. Mem. ii. 30, ὡς μὴ ἀργὸς ἡ πόλις πρὸς τοὺς πολεμίους γένοιτο. See also Jos. Bell. iv. 2, 4. A similar opposition between τὸ συνετὸν and τὸ ἀργὸν, 'prudence' and 'cowardice,' is found in Eurip. Œdip. frag. vi. Πότερα γενέσθαι δῆτα χρησιμώτερον Συνετὸν ἄτολμον, ἢ θρασύν τε κἀμαθῆ. Τὸ μὲν γὰρ αὐτοῖν σκαιὸν, ἀλλ' ἀμύνεται. Τὸ δ' ἡσυχαῖον ἔργον· ἐν δ' ἀμφοῖν νόσος, where read and point, Τὸ δ' ἡσυχαῖον ἀργόν. ἐν γ' ἀμφοῖν νόσος.

τὸ δ' ἐμπλήκτως ὀξὺ—εὔλογος] Render, 'Moreover, the madly passionate (spirit) was asserted to be the part of a man,' i. e. was thought the part of manly courage. A very unusual phrase for ἐν ἀνδρείας μοίρᾳ τιθέναι, though found in Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 7, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐν ἀνδρὸς μοίρᾳ θείης ἂν ὅστις, &c. and p. 528, 5. Τὸ ἐμπλ. ὀξὺ properly denotes 'the frantic violence of madness,' there being here the same metaphor as in our idiom, 'touched in the head;' though it also, as here, signifies 'uncontrollable passionateness.' The passage is, as I have shown, closely imitated by Agathias, p. 10, and Malchus ap. Suid.

The next words contain the counterpart, i. e. of a virtue represented as a vice; whence it is evident that the reading of all the MSS., ἀσφαλεία, cannot be admitted, and that the reading of Dionys. and the Schol., ἀσφαλείᾳ, edited by Poppo, (though Bekker and Goeller retain the common one,) is alone the true one. Vain is it to attempt to elicit any tolerable sense from ἀσφαλεία, without violating the propriety of language; and authority of MSS. is next to nothing in the case of so minute a variation as this: moreover, though in the MSS. Clarend. and Cantab. I found ἀσφαλεία in the text, yet I found ἀσφαλείᾳ in the margin of the Clarend. and in the same handwriting. Such, too, must have been the reading of Josephus's copy, who at Antiq. xv. 6, 2, thus writes (with this passage evidently in mind): Μὴ ἀναμεῖναι τὴν Ἡρώδου παρανομίαν—ἀλλὰ προλαβεῖν ἀσφαλείᾳ τὰς αὖθις (I conj. ἐσαῦθις, in posterum, Thucyd. iv. 63.) ἐλπίδας· and xvi. 2, τὴν ὑπόνοιαν ἐπ' ἀσφαλείᾳ λαμβάνων.

Ἀσφαλεία has here not its usual sense, security, but, as at i. 69, 5, caution, a sense derived from that use of the adj. ἀσφαλὴς, by which (as in Xen. Mem. iii. 1, 6.) it denotes cautious or provident, (lit. 'safe and sure,') as opposed to enterprising; and thus it is applied to a general who hazards nothing, or a war unattended with risk. In this sense, and by a similar use of the dative as denoting manner, ἀσφαλεία occurs supra ch. 56, τὰ ξύμφορα ἀσφαλείᾳ πράσσοντες. The full meaning here is as follows: 'But to take counsel, by prudent caution, [against one's enemy] was [thought] a specious excuse for declining [the contest].'

The next clause (for this, I apprehend, forms no other than part of the same sentence,) is meant to further develop the thought contained in the preceding, and to show why the madly passionate person was thought a brave fellow, and esteemed far beyond the cautious partizan; namely, because he was regarded as always to be depended upon, from his having committed himself too deeply to retreat; while he who withstood his raging vehemence was looked upon as suspicious; as though, by this moderation, he was securing a retreat, should the enemy triumph. Here the expression ὁ χαλεπαίνων, 'he who raged,' or acted with impetuous fury, is equiv. to that a little before, τὸ ἐμπλήκτως ὀξύ. Of χαλεπὸς in this sense, 'furious from passion,' examples are frequent; and the verb χαλεπαίνειν, as used for χαλεπὸς εἶναι, occurs in Hom. Il. xviii. 108, καὶ χόλος, ὅς τ' ἐφέηκε πολύφρονά περ χαλεπῆναι, sævire, sævus esse. In illustration of the expression ὁ ἀντιλέγων, scil. αὐτῷ, which signifies 'he who withstood him,' namely, by opposing his rash violence, compare the altogether similar use of ἀντιλέγειν in a passage of St. John, xix. 12, ἀντιλέγει τῷ Καίσαρι.

7. In this section there is, if I mistake not, a sort of climax; q. d. 'And not only were discreet and cautious counsels scouted and held suspicious, but none were esteemed except those which enjoined vigilance only to strike the first blow, and that by δέ τις, τυχὼν, ξυνετὸς, καὶ ὑπονοήσας ἔτι δεινότερος· προβουλεύσας δὲ ὅπως μηδὲν αὐτῶν δεήσει, τῆς τε ‡ ἑταιρίας διαλυτὴς, καὶ τοὺς ἐναντίους ἐκπεπληγμένος. ἁπλῶς δὲ, ὁ φθάσας τὸν μέλλοντα κακόν τι δρᾶν ἐπῃνεῖτο, καὶ ὁ ἐπικελεύσας τὸν μὴ διανοούμενον. 8. καὶ μὴν καὶ τὸ ξυγγενὲς τοῦ ἑταιρικοῦ ἀλλοτριώτερον treachery.' Render, 'Any one who plotted an attack on others, was, if he proved successful, held clever; and he who suspected [the plot], yet shrewder.' The word τυχὼν here, by a somewhat uncommon use, stands in the place of a clause. Of ὑπονοεῖν here the meaning is, 'so to suspect as to be on one's guard;' and δεινὸς has the sense knowing or shrewd, as in Aristoph. Conc. 364, δεινὸς τὴν τέχνην. Plut. p. 11, δεινότερος τὴν τέχνην: 177, δεινοὶ καὶ πανοῦργοι: 409, C, δεινὸς καὶ κακύποπτος. Demosth. p. 10, 2, πανοῦργος καὶ δεινὸς ἄνθρωπος, lit. 'knowing,' as in the celebrated verse, δεινοὶ πλέκειν τοι μηχανὰς Αἰγύπτιοι. Thus the term is a stronger one than συνετὸς, and is generally used in a bad sense; whereas συνετὸς has almost invariably a good sense.

προβουλ. δὲ—ἐκπεπληγμένος] Here is the counterpart to the above, consisting of a virtue represented as a vice. Render, 'But he who fore-counselled, in order that he might be in want of neither the one nor the other, was [regarded as] a breaker up of brotherhood (or political clubbism), and one who was frightened at his foes.' By αὐτῶν is to be understood, as Dionys. points out, μητ' ἐπιβουλῆς μήτε φυλακῆς. Ἑταιρίας stands for ἑταιρείας, on which use see the critics referred to by Poppo. In the term as here employed, there is, as Arnold and Goeller observe, an allusion to those ἑταιρίαι or political fraternities, unions, or clubs, often mentioned or alluded to in book viii., and which probably first arose soon after the Coreyræan civil war. The phrase διαλυτὴς ἑτ. was borrowed by Procop. 143, 43, who there writes ἑταιρείας, which word is found in several MSS. here, and is, I doubt not, the true spelling, at least in this sense, though in the sense friendship ἑταιρία may be preferable: though even there Porson prefers the diphthong (see his note on Eurip. Orest. 1070). Ἑταιρεία occurs also in Dionys. Hal. vi. 46, and, what is more, in Herodot. v. 71, προσποιησάμενος δὲ ἑταιρηίην τῶν ἡλικιωτέων, a passage undoubtedly had in view by Dionys. ubi supra, and probably by our author.

In the words following, ἁπλῶς δὲ—διανοούμενον, we have the completion of what has been said in the course of the present section. From mad impetuosity and fury in attack, our author passes on to the astute watchfulness which studied to anticipate any meditated attack. Here the term ἐπῃνεῖτο is highly significant. He who could do this, it is said, was an object of high commendation, and not he only, but he who set another on [who did not himself intend it] so to do, i. e. to anticipate the doing of the mischief meditated. For at ἐπικελεύσας I would supply, with one of the Scholiasts, φθάσαι κακόν τι δρῶντα, not, with another Scholiast and the commentators, κακόν τι δρᾶν, which latter method would yield too feeble a sense. What Thucydides means is, that 'offensive and aggressive counsels were alone commended, or the plotting of mischief against others who might be suspected of meditating it.' Compare § 7, init. Similarly in Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 5, we have, καὶ γὰρ οἶδα ἀνθρώπους ἡδὴ, τοὺς μὲν ἐκ διαβολῆς, τοὺς δὲ [καὶ] ἐξ ὑποψίας, οἳ φοβηθέντες ἀλλήλους, φθάσαι βουλόμενοι, πρὶν παθεῖν, ἐποίησαν ἀνήκεστα κακὰ τοὺς οὔτε μέλλοντας οὔτε βουλομένους τοιοῦτον οὐδὲν, where, for ἀλλήλους, read ἄλλους. And comp. Aristoph. Ran. 958, ἐδίδαξα—τεχνάζειν, κάχ' ὑποτοπεῖσθαι, περινοεῖν ἅπαντα. Ἐπικελ. here does not signify simply to counsel or exhort, but to set on by apt incitement and necessary aid. So in Xen. Hist. iv. 7, 4, ἐπικελεύειν is opposed to κωλύειν. And Plato, p. 60, ὅπερ ἔπραττον, τοῦτο ἐπικελεύειν. Eurip. Bacch. 1041, ὁ δ' αὖθις ἐπεκέλευσεν· ὡς δ' ἐγνώρισαν Σαφῆ κέλευσμὸν Βακχίου, where there is an allusion to the halloo by which dogs are set on to the chase. So Xen. Cyneg. vi. 20, πρὸς τοῖς ἄλλοις κελεύσμασιν—ἐπικελεύειν τόδε. In Aristoph. Pax, 1317, χρὴ—πάντα λεὼν ξυγχαίρειν, κἀπικελεύειν, there is an allusion to the halloo or shout of applause as well as congratulation, which attended a bridal procession.

8. As another trait of this frightful evil, it is further said, that 'the ties which bound men to their political associations for evil to their adversaries, were found ἐγένετο, διὰ τὸ ἑτοιμότερον εἶναι ἀπροφασίστως τολμᾶν· οὐ γὰρ μετὰ τῶν κειμένων νόμων † ὠφελείας αἱ τοιαῦται ξύνοδοι, ἀλλὰ παρὰ τοὺς καθεστῶτας, πλεονεξίᾳ. καὶ τὰς ἐς σφᾶς αὐτοὺς πίστεις οὐ τῷ θείῳ νόμῳ μᾶλλον ἐκρατύνοντο ἢ τῷ κοινῇ τι παρανομῆσαι. 9. τά τε ἀπὸ τῶν ἐναντίων καλῶς λεγόμενα ἐνεδέχοντο ἔργων φυλακῇ, εἰ προὔχοιεν, καὶ οὐ γενναιότητι. ἀντιτιμωρήσασθαί τέ τινα περὶ stronger than those of either kindred or country.' Τὸ ξυγγ. stands for ξυγγενεῖς, and τοῦ ἑτ. (which occurs also in Dio Cass. 419, 19.) is for οἱ ἑταῖροι. See viii. 48. In ἀλλοτρ. ἐγένετο, 'was more foreign to,' we have a refined mode of expression for less near, not so near. Ἑτοιμότερον is to be referred to ἑταιρικόν. It is meant that such ἑταῖροι, such club-comrades, were more ready to dare any thing without scruple.

The next words, οὐ γὰρ μετὰ—πλεονεξίᾳ, are illustrative, being meant to show the nature of these associations or fraternities, and consequently to intimate why the members were so unscrupulous. The exact sense, however, will depend upon the construction, and especially as to what word the term ὠφελείας is to be construed with. Krueger, Haack, Goeller, and Arnold, would take it with μετὰ, so understanding 'the benefit connected with (i. e. resulting from) the established laws.' According to this view there will be, as Arnold supposes, a varied construction in οὐ μετὰ ὠφελείας opposed to ἀλλὰ πλεονεξίᾳ, resembling that at ii. 39, εἰ ῥᾳθυμίᾳ—καὶ μὴ μετὰ νόμων—ἀνδρίας. We are not, however, obliged to suppose a varied construction, especially as there is not there, as here, an opposition. Nay, the exact correspondence which subsists here, compels us to join μετὰ with τῶν κειμένων νόμων, to which the words παρὰ τοὺς νόμους are opposed. Consequently ὠφελείας must stand alone, and be taken in correspondence with πλεονεξίᾳ, and there would seem to be a certain variation of construction, which, however, here would be so harsh, that it is no wonder Dobree should propose to read either ὠφελείᾳ or πλεονεξίᾳ. But πλεονεξίᾳ is rarely used in the plural, and never in the sense here required, namely, the lust of gain. Hence the error, if any, must rest on ὠφ. A milder emendation than that of Dobree will be found by reading ὠφελίαις, which Dionys. must have had in his copy (and probably Valla), since he explains by ἐπὶ ταῖς ὠφελίαις. And the plural in this word is of frequent use. If this be not admitted, we must suppose ὠφελίας to be a genit. of cause or motive, in which case ἕνεκα is often expressed. (See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 368, 371.) That the Schol. so read, appears from his explaining the word by ὠφελεῖσθαι θέλοντες, and πλεονεξίᾳ by πλεονεξίαν. He also well explains σύνοδοι by συστάσεις.

The next words, καὶ τὰς ἐς σφᾶς—παρανομῆσαι, (which contain in them a severe sarcasm,) serve to show the nature of the evil. Render, 'And as for pledges of faith towards each other, those they confirmed, not so much by any divine law, as by participation in some common crime.'

9. In this section their base suspiciousness as well as perfidy is stigmatised. The sense here may be thus expressed: 'Any fair overtures on the part of their enemies, they received with a cautious watching of the actions, if they should be superior in power, and not with generous confidence.' Ἔργων φυλακῇ is by Goeller taken as standing for διὰ τὸ ἔργοις πεφυλαγμένοι εἶναι. But it is better to assign to it the sense, 'with a watchfulness of their actions,' implying, by the emphasis on ἔργων, a distrust of their words, as contrasted with γενναιότητι, ingenuous confidence. So γενν. is not ill explained by the Scholiast χρηστότητι καὶ ἁπλότητι: and so Plato, 361, b, ἄνδρα ἁπλοῦν καὶ γενναῖον. The best comment on this passage is supplied by the similar one at ch. 83, 1, καὶ τὸ εἴθισται (for τὸ ἁπλοῦν) οὗ τὸ γενναῖον πλεῖστον μετέχει, ἠφανίσθη, where the Schol. very properly explains the term γενναῖον of magnanimous confidence, as opposed to base distrust.

Here the commentators are not agreed as to the subject of προὔχοιεν. Goeller refers it to οἱ ἐνδεχόμενοι: but to this Arnold, not without reason, objects that 'it would be the weaker party, not the stronger, that would exercise this suspicious caution.' Hence it must be referred, not to the receivers, but the offerers of the conditions, οἱ ἐναντίοι. And he explains the sense to be, that 'they did not like to trust their enemy's words, if he was stronger than they, but looked πλείονος ἦν ἢ αὐτὸν μὴ προπαθεῖν. 10. καὶ ὅρκοι εἴ που ἄρα γένοιντο ξυναλλαγῆς ἐν τῷ αὐτίκα, πρὸς τὸ ἄπορον ἑκατέρῳ διδόμενοι, ἴσχυον οὐκ ἐχόντων ἄλλοθεν δύναμιν· ἐν δὲ τῷ παρατυχόντι ὁ φθάσας θαρσῆσαι, εἰ ἴδοι ἄφρακτον, ἥδιον διὰ τὴν πίστιν ἐτιμωρεῖτο, ἢ ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς· καὶ τό τε ἀσφαλὲς ἐλογίζετο, καὶ ὅτι, anxiously at his actions.' Yet such a sense would little comport with the general bearing of the context; since, in so proceeding, the persons in question could not be said to do what was contrary to this generous confidence, but rather to exercise what might be considered a justifiable caution; whereas the context requires here the charge of base distrust. The true sense of the words is (nearly as laid down by Levêque, Mueller, and Poppo) as follows: 'The fair proposals offered on the part of their adversaries, they hearkened to, but only by way of guarding against their attacks, should they prove the stronger party, and not in the spirit of generous confidence,' which they ought to have felt when fair proposals were made by the stronger party: whereas, as it was, they were received with suspicion, and regarded either as an indication of conscious weakness, or as covering some hostile design, against which it behoved them to guard.

ἀντιτιμωρήσασθαι—προπ.] 'to avenge oneself by retaliation on another, was more highly prized than not to have oneself first suffered the wrong:' a refined way of depicting their pitiless vindictiveness as well as faithlessness and treachery. Similarly in a passage of St. Paul, Rom. i. 31, we have, ἀσυνθέτους, ἀσπόνδους, ἀνελεήμονας. Revenge, it is meant, was sweeter than the satisfaction of being uninjured.

10. Having represented them as pitilessly vindictive, our author proceeds to set them forth as utterly devoid of faith or trust, ἀσπόνδους. The sense here intended is as follows: 'And oaths for reconciliation, if any were given, at the moment, by either party, on account of some difficulty [which enforced them], they continued in force [only] so long as the parties had no power from any other quarter,' i. e. to break them. Ξυναλλαγῆς, a genit. of cause, purpose, or motive, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 371; though there the substantives are those denoting some passion or feeling. Here we may compare a kindred expression in Heb. vi. 16, εἰς βεβαίωσιν ὁ ὅρκος, which stands for ὁ εἰς βεβ. ὅρκος. Βεβαιώσεως there would have been purer Greek; but εἰς βεβαίωσιν is plainer. Of ἐν τῷ αὐτίκα the sense is, 'for the present,' as we say for the nonce. With the expression here, πρὸς τὸ ἄπορον, compare κατὰ τὸ ἄπ. at i. 136. Ἑκατέρῳ stands for ὑφ' ἑκατέρου. Διδόμενοι signifies, not offered, but (by a sensus prægnans) 'given' and by implication 'received,' i. e. mutually taken, as in Eurip. Iph. T. 718. The plural is used at οὐκ ἐχόντων, because the preceding ἑκατέρῳ, by referring to either party, extends to both parties. In οὐκ ἐχόντων (sub. αὐτῶν) we have the use of genit. absol. with particip. serving to define time, (and answering to our while,) as in Hom. Il. i. 46, ἔκλαγξαν δ' ἀρ' ὀϊστοὶ ἐπ' ὤμων χωομένοιο, Αὐτοῦ κινηθέντος.

The words, a little after, ἐν δὲ τῷ παρατυχόντι, &c., serve to further develop the sense contained in the preceding ἐχόντων δύναμιν, by which understand the strength to do without them and attack his enemy as before. It is thus intimated, that oaths were viewed only as the means of gaining time for a future attack, and to blind and throw their enemy off his guard. Accordingly, our author subjoins, 'when either party, on an opportunity offering itself, first ventured on attacking his enemy, if he saw him off his guard, he avenged himself on him with the greater pleasure on account of the faith [reposed in him and violated], than [if it had been attained] in the open way.' Of ὁ φθάσας θαρσῆσαι the meaning is, 'he who first obtained the confidence of strength for attack.' Ἄφρακτος means not, as at iii. 39, and elsewhere, unarmed, but fig. off his guard, what is more usually expressed by ἀφύλακτος, as at vi. 33, ἄφρακτον ληφθήσεσθε. By διὰ τὴν πίστιν is meant, 'on account of the faith reposed in him.' Ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς is a frequent phrase in Thucydides.

The next words, καὶ τό τε ἀσφαλὲς—προσελάμβανε, advert to the double reason why he was so readily disposed to circumvent his enemy by this breach of faith, 'partly because he thought this the safer course, and partly because, by thus gaining the mastery through deceit, he reckoned that he had attained the additional glory of shrewdness.' Render, 'And because he thus also obtained a means of evincing (lit. a field whereon to evince) shrewdness.' In this sense ἀγώνισμα occurs also at i. 22, and vii. 86, καλὸν τὸ ἀγώνισμα ἐνόμιζεν οἱ εἶναι. The construction here is well traced by Goeller as follows: καὶ ἐλογίζετο τό τε ἀσφαλὲς, καὶ ἐλογίζετο ὅτι προσελάμβανε. The words following, ῥᾷον δ' οἱ πολλοί—ἀγαθοί, are subjoined by way of showing, as Arnold observes, the reason why successful perfidy was rather emulated than detested. Here, however, it remains to decide what the words in question actually import. By Reiske, Krueger, Heilm., Mueller, and Goeller, they are explained to mean, 'vulgus facilius se dici patiuntur callidos, dum improbi sunt, quam simplices, dum probi,' &c., 'are more ready to be called clever rogues than honest fools.' And such is the view of the sense adopted by me in my Transl. and smaller edition: according to which, ὄντες will have to be supplied after ἀμαθεῖς. To this view, however, it is objected by Poppo, that ῥᾷον will not bear the above sense, and that the sentiment itself thus arising is such as may be considered questionable—'Quasi id mirum sit, homines improbos pati se callidos dici, ceu infamiam rei leni nomine elevari.' But so arguing, the learned commentator takes what may be called quite a distorted view of the question. It is not said infamiam elevari; and, again, the objection proceeds upon what is no less than a straining of the expression ῥᾷον κέκληνται, which, I would observe, is meant for both kinds of persons, though with a certain modification of sense. Finally, if the above interpretation be thought open to objection, still more, I must maintain, is that adopted by Portus, Hobbes, and Smith, and followed by Poppo and Arnold, 'Vulgus quum nefarii sunt, facilius sollertes audiunt, quam, quum simplices, honesti audiunt;' 'Men, in general, when dishonest, more easily gain credit for ability, than when simple, they gain credit for honesty.' Here surely the sense when and that of gain credit cannot fairly be drawn from the words, and if they could, the sentiment thus arising would be most far-fetched, and moreover any thing but agreeable to the words following, καὶ τῷ μὲν αἰσχύνονται, ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ ἀγάλλονται: whereas with these well suits the sense above propounded, which really lies open to no serious objection; for as to the grammatical one urged by Poppo, that ῥᾷον cannot mean ἥδιον, it is quite frivolous; since, in effect, the word not unfrequently bears the sense more readily, or willingly. So Xen. Symp. iv. 14, πονοίην ἂν ῥᾷον ἐκείνῳ, ἢ ἀναπαυοίμην, καὶ κινδυνεύοιμ' ἂν πρὸ ἐκείνου ἥδιον, where the two words ῥᾷον and ἥδιον are evidently regarded as synonymous: and so Xen. Cyrop. i. 5, 7, ῥᾷον φέρετε. Æschin. 83, 29, κλαίει οὗτος ῥᾷον, ἢ ἄλλοι γελῶσι. Indeed that the word should have this force, will appear the less strange when we consider that in our own language the words ready and readily not unfrequently bear the sense willing and willingly. And that the interpretation which I am supporting is no novelty, is certain from the circumstance that such is found in a scholium which appears in the margin of one of the most ancient MSS., where we have the following paraphrase of these words: ἡδέως ἔχουσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι κακοῦργοι εἶναι καὶ δεξιοὶ καλεῖσθαι, ἢ ἀμαθεῖς καὶ ἀγαθοί. Having thus, I trust, satisfactorily established the interpretation in question, I would observe that the meaning here cannot be better represented than by the following words of our able divine, Dr. South, Serm. vol. i. 377 (evidently formed on these of our author, and, it may be added, plainly proceeding on the view of the sense for which I contend): 'The reputation of policy is so valued by most men, that they can much rather brook being reputed knaves, than for their honesty to be accounted fools; knave passing for a term of credit.'

ἀπάτῃ περιγενόμενος, ξυνέσεως ἀγώνισμα προσελάμβανε. ῥᾷον δ' οἱ πολλοί, κακοῦργοι ὄντες, δεξιοὶ κέκληνται, ἢ ἀμαθεῖς ἀγαθοί· καὶ τῷ μὲν αἰσχύνονται, ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ ἀγάλλονται. 11. πάντων δ' αὐτῶν

With the construction here, compare a similar one in Plut. de Garrul. 4, (where the writer may be supposed to have had in view the present passage,) ἥδιόν γε τοι πονηροῖς ὁμιλοῦσιν ἐπιδεξιοις, ἢ χρηστοῖς ἀδολέσχαις. (Point there ὁμιλοῦσιν, and χρηστοῖς, supposing also an ellipsis of ἡμῖν and ἐστι, which is supplied in Herodot. ii. 46, οὐ μοι ἥδιόν ἐστι λέγειν.) Evidently imitated from this passage of our author, is a very similar one in Procop. 293, ῥᾷον γὰρ οἱ θρασεῖς εὔτολμοι κέκληνται, ἢ οἱ προμηθεῖς ἀσφαλεῖς.

Δεξιὸς has here that bad sense sometimes with us assigned to the words dexterous and adroit. Such, too, is its use in Aristoph. Ran. 540, δεξιοῦ πρὸς ἀνδρός ἐστι, καὶ φύσει θηραμένους. Ælian, V. H. xiv. 48, ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος τὸ δεξιὸν ὑφωρᾶτο Πτολεμαίου. Aristoph. Ran. 762, τεχνῶν, αἴτιον ἀρχὴ ἡ διὰ πλεονεξίαν καὶ φιλοτιμίαν· ἐκ δ' αὐτῶν καὶ ἐς τὸ φιλονεικεῖν καθισταμένων τὸ πρόθυμον. 12. οἱ γὰρ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι προστάντες, μετ' ὀνόματος ἑκάτεροι εὐπρεποῦς, πλήθους τε ἰσονομίας πολιτικῆς καὶ ἀριστοκρατίας σώφρονος προτιμήσει, τὰ μὲν κοινὰ λόγῳ θεραπεύοντες, ἆθλα ἐποιοῦντο· παντὶ δὲ τρόπῳ ἀγωνιζόμενοι ἀλλήλων περιγίγνεσθαι, ἐτόλμησάν τε τὰ δεινότατα ἐπεξῆεσάν τε, πόσαι — δεξιαί. The term αἰσχύνεσθαι, used, as here, with a dat., signifies 'to be ashamed at,' i. e. of, any person or thing.

11. Our historian now ably traces the source and primary cause of this miserable state of things from faction,—namely, the lust of rule, for the sake of gratifying those two passions, avarice and ambition.

πάντων δ' αὐτῶν αἴτιον, &c.] These words we may, with Goeller, regard as standing for πάντων δ' αὐτῶν ἦν αἴτιον ἡ ἀρχὴ ἡ σὺν πλεονεξίᾳ καὶ φιλοτιμίᾳ· ἐκ δὲ πλεονεξίας καὶ φιλοτιμίας καὶ τὸ πρόθυμον ἐγένετο, ὅτε ἐς τὸ φιλονεικεῖν καθίσταντο. Or the sense may be explained as it is by the Schol. in the following paraphrase: πάντων δὲ τῶν εἰρημένων κακῶν αἴτιον ἦν ἡ ἐπιθυμία τοῦ βούλεσθαι ἄρχειν τῆς γῆς διὰ πλεονεξίαν καὶ φιλοτιμίαν· ἐκ τούτων δὲ ἡ στάσις ἀρχὴν λαμβάνουσα — ὕστερον λαμβάνει ἑτέραν τῶν κακῶν αἰτίαν, τὴν τῶν στασιαζόντων προθυμίαν, ὥσπερ εἰς ἕξιν (habitum, malam consuetudinem) ἐρχομένων αὐτῶν τοῦ περιγενέσθαι καὶ μὴ ἡττηθῆναι τῶν ἐναντίων. It is well remarked by Goeller, 'Præ πλεονεξίᾳ et φιλοτιμίᾳ prorsus obliviscebantur primi consilii, quo factionem adversus factionem constituere cœperant, suæ unorum utilitatis cupidi, et uno studio inimicitiæ exercendæ incensi.'

Of the words following, ἐκ δ' αὐτῶν — πρόθυμον, the construction and sense seem to be, ἐκ δ' αὐτῶν [ἦν] τὸ πρόθυμον [τῶν] καθισταμένων ἐς τὸ φιλονεικεῖν, 'from these moving passions arose the eagerness of those whose minds were set on contentious rivalry [and not from any desire to promote the public good].'

12. οἱ γὰρ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι, &c.] In this section a reason is meant to be given for the foregoing assertion, 'Quà (as says Goell.) indicatur quibus et quam speciosis sub nominibus factio orta, quibus studiis postea degeneraverit.' The passage may be rendered thus: 'For those who bore rule, or held the sway in the states,—each party with a specious name, whether formed on preference and support of political equality of rights in the people, or of a moderate aristocracy,—these, though in words they professed to serve the commonwealth, yet made it but the prize of their keen contention; and striving, by whatever means, to get the better of each other, they both dared (or perpetrated) the greatest atrocities, and in avenging them went beyond all bounds, imposing penalties greater and greater, not so far as justice and the advantage of the state required, but determining them according to what might be at any time the pleasure of either party, and ready to satiate the passionate resentment of the moment, either by an unjust decree of condemnation, or by the hand of violence, when they had gained the ascendancy.'

By ἰσονομίας πολιτικῆς understand, as Goeller explains, 'æquabilitatis juris inter cives,' (i. e. political equality of rights, or, as Arnold defines, 'that equal law befitting what justly deserves to be called political society,') as opposed to δύναμις δεσποτικὴ or τυραννική: on which subject see more in Niebuhr's History of Rome, vol. i. 315, referred to by Poppo. For the dat. προτιμήσει, Goeller observes, we should rather have expected the genit. προτιμήσεως, which would depend on ὀνόματος; or, by a variation of expression, our author might have added δῆθεν, q. d. 'anteponentes scilicet vel civilem populi æquabilitatem, vel moderatam optimatum dominationem.' With the words τὰ κοινὰ λόγῳ θεραπεύοντες, ἆθλα ἐποιοῦντο, compare similar expressions. Appian, ii. 77, 70, στασίαρχοι — συνεπλέκοντο ἀλλήλοις, καὶ ἡ πατρὶς ἆθλον ἔκειτο ἐν μέσῳ. On the expression ἀριστοκρατίας σώφρονος, see note on viii. 64.

In the words following, ἐτόλμησάν τε τὰ δεινότατα — προτιθέντες, I have thought proper to follow the punctuation of Poppo rather than of Bekker and Goeller; the sense being, 'they both dared the most horrible atrocities, and revenged them [when committed by others] in the most horrible manner, by a like retaliation.' What follows serves to explain the preceding; the meaning being, 'nay, imposing penalties yet greater [than their adversaries had done]:' where for προτιθέντες Arnold would read προστ., and that from Dionysius remarking that our author does not here speak of any increase of severity by law, but arising from the abuse of law: to which Goeller answers, that it is implied. For my own part I should say, that even in a doubtful matter the authority of all the MSS. cannot be opposed; but here very little doubt exists. Internal evidence is all in favour of προτ., as being the less obvious term, though yielding a more weighty sense, since enactment implies infliction, but not vice versâ. That they deliberately enacted such penalties against treason as were bounded not by any principle of justice or the good of the state, but only by their own lust of revenge, was far more criminal than in the other case, where the enormity might be the result of a sudden ebullition of passion. Of κτώμενοι τὸ κρατεῖν, a little after, the sense is, 'when possessed of the power [so to do].'

τὰς τιμωρίας ἔτι μείζους οὐ μέχρι τοῦ δικαίου καὶ τῇ πόλει ξυμφόρου προτιθέντες, ἐς δὲ τὸ ἑκατέροις που αἰεὶ ἡδονὴν ἔχον ὁρίζοντες· καὶ ἢ μετὰ ψήφου ἀδίκου καταγνώσεως, ἢ χειρὶ,—κτώμενοι τὸ κρατεῖν,—ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν τὴν αὐτίκα φιλονεικίαν ἐκπιμπλάναι. 13. ὥστε εὐσεβείᾳ μὲν οὐδέτεροι ἐνόμιζον, εὐπρεπείᾳ δὲ λόγου, οἷς ξυμβαίη ἐπιφθόνως τι διαπράξασθαι, ἄμεινον ἤκουον. τὰ δὲ μέσα τῶν πολιτῶν ὑπ' ἀμφοτέρων, ἢ ὅτι οὐ ξυνηγωνίζοντο, ἢ φθόνῳ τοῦ περι-

For vulg. ἐμπιμπλάναι, I have thought proper, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, to edit ἐκπιμπ., both on account of the latter being supported by nearly all the best MSS., and also from its being the stronger term, (differing from the other as explere in Latin from implere,) and accordingly to be preferred in a passage like the present. The word is, moreover, used not only by the purest Attic writers, as Eurip. and Xen., but by those writers who have imitated our author, as Dio Cass., Jos., Liban., and Aristides. On the other hand, ἐμπ. is of frequent occurrence in the later writers and such as did not emulate Attic elegance; and prevailed so generally in the common dialect, that it has occasionally crept into the text of the Attic writers; and in Xenoph. and certain others accustomed to employ the forms of common life, as Aristoph., we find the use of ἐμπ.

By φιλονεικίαν understand the lust of revenge excited by contentious rivalry.

13. ὥστε εὐσεβείᾳ — ἤκουον] This is brought in quasi κατ' ἐπίμετρον, to denote the general result of all this breach of faith, —namely, that all the moral foundations of civil society, piety, justice, and mercy, were undermined by this practical non-observance of its principles by both parties. Render, 'Insomuch that neither party used to evince any regard to religion.' The term νομίζω properly takes the accus.; but when, as here, (and at ii. 38, θυσίας νομίζοντες,) it is used for χρῆσθαι, it takes the construction of that verb. Finally, in this respect it is a somewhat stronger term than χρῆσθαι, from its involving an implied idea of custom.

In the next words, εὐπρεπείᾳ — ἤκουον, we have what is antithetical to the preceding. Render, 'On the contrary, those who chanced to accomplish any thing through nefarious means, by plausibility of words, they were held in greater esteem.' The term ἐπιφθόνως admits both of a good and a bad sense; and of the commentators, some prefer the former, and some the latter: and of those who adopt either, some render as though ἐπίφθονον had been written. Had such been the word employed, the former view of the sense would, I apprehend, have been entitled to the preference: but the latter is that, I conceive, alone admitted by the word actually employed, ἐπιφθόνως; and may also be pronounced the more suitable. Of this use, however rare, an example is found in Eurip. Andr. 181, where ἐπίφθονον is rightly explained by the Schol. μεμπτόν.

Of ἄμεινον ἤκουον the meaning is not merely, as the Schol. explains it, ἐπῃνοῦντο, but 'they were in higher repute,' 'more likely to attain eminence.' So Juv. Sat. i. 74, 'Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris et carcere dignum, Si vis esse aliquid.' It seems also to be implied, that such persons were liked the better, namely, by those who did, or were willing to do, such things: a trait, this, presenting the very acme of depravity; and which is alluded to by St. Paul, Rom. i. 32, where he says, οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι.

τὰ μέσα τῶν πολ.] Meaning those who joined neither political party, keeping εἶναι, διεφθείροντο. LXXXIII. Οὕτω πᾶσα ἰδέα κατέστη κακοτροπίας διὰ τὰς στάσεις τῷ Ἑλληνικῷ, καὶ τὸ εὐήθες,—οὗ τὸ γενναῖον πλεῖστον μετέχει,—καταγελασθὲν ἠφανίσθη, τὸ δὲ ἀντιτετάχθαι ἀλλήclear of both, and standing neutral. Of this extremely rare expression I have met with only one example elsewhere, in Dio Cass. 400, 90, καὶ οὕτω τὰ μέσα τῶν πολιτῶν στασιάζειν προάγεται. Something, indeed, very nearly approaching to it occurs in Plato, 485, φεύγοντι τὰ μέσα τῆς πόλεως καὶ τῆς ἀγορᾶς. i. e. those who steered a middle course in politics; a bolder expression than this of our author, for which in Aristot. Pol. iv. 11, (cited by Arnold,) we have the plainer phrase τοὺς μέσους τῶν πολιτῶν: and so the Scholiast here. Xenophon in his Hist. v. 4, 25, steers a middle course by the use of the expression τοὺς διὰ μέσου ὄντας, neutrius factionis. Dionys. Hal., too, uses the same phrase in his Ant. p. 218, 2, and elsewhere; though only to express what our author denotes by μέσοι πολῖται at vi. 54. A difference is to be noted between the phrases οἱ μέσοι τῶν πολιτῶν and οἱ μέσοι πολῖται, 'persons mediocris conditionis.' And though the enallage of plur. for sing. must be admitted, (as in Æschyl. Eum. 486, ἀστῶν τὰ βέλτατα. Eurip. Orest. 1244, τὰ πρῶτα —Ἀργείων, ridiculed by Aristoph. Ran. 419, τὰ πρῶτα τῆς ἐκεῖ μοχθηρίας,) yet that does not supply a reason why the neuter should be used for the masc. Perhaps it was because μέρη is to be understood; the middle being, in such a case, one of the three parts into which the state is divided, two of which are parties, the other simply a part. In this light, I would observe, Sallust seems to have viewed the expression; since in a passage evidently imitated from the present, (Jug. ch. 45.) he says, 'Ita omnia (for omnes) in duas partes abstracta sunt: Respublica (τὸ κοινὸν) quæ media fuit (διὰ μέσου ἦν) dilacerata.'

CH. LXXXIII. In this chapter are presented the last touches of the above frightful delineation, by a masterly sketch of the results of the foregoing wretched state of things, in the almost total corruption of morals in Greece, in which the historian places in the foreground the moving cause of all evils, the spirit of faction and party (διὰ τὰς στάσεις); and with reason; for as all long-continued wars cannot but tend greatly to deprave morals, so civil wars in the highest degree conduce to this effect. So a great modern writer, Schiller, (probably with this portion of our author in mind,) affirms, 'that in the long confusion of the thirty years' war in Germany, all bonds of order were dissolved; all regard for human right, or fear of the laws, all purity of morals, was lost. Truth and faith sunk powerless, while force alone ruled with an iron sceptre. Vices of all kinds grew with a rank luxuriance under the shelter of anarchy and impunity; and men fell into the same wildness as the rapined countries they inhabited. No condition was too venerable for insult, no property sacred against want and rapine.' So also in the account given of the campaign of Napoleon in Russia, it is remarked, as one among the many evils it carried in its train, 'that it quite brutalized the character of the soldiery, and introduced among them vices to which they had before been strangers. Even those who once were honest, humane, and generous, becoming thereby selfish, avaricious, dishonest, and cruel.'

1. κακοτροπίας] Of this very rare word I have only met with examples elsewhere in Dio Cass. 750, 73, καὶ ἐς τοσοῦτόν γε κακοτροπίας ἐχώρησαν, ὥστε, &c. and Jos. Ant. xix. 2, 5, καὶ κακοτροπίας (for so should certainly be read, from MSS., for vulg. κακοπραγίας) εἰς τὸ ἄκρον ἀφιγμένος. Constant. Manass. Chron. p. 53, 68. The term is a very strong one, and is well explained by Ammonius to signify ποικίλη καὶ παντοδαπὴς πανουργία, as opposed to κακία κεκρυμμένη, or κακοήθεια, and denoting, like nequitia in Latin, immorality that scruples at nothing; an explanation, it may be observed, confirmed by a passage of Artemid. ii. 12, πανουργοὺς καὶ κακοτρόπους. By τὸ εὐήθες, a little after, is denoted that honest simplicity which suspects no evil; on which see Hesych., and also Wessel. on Diod. v. 66, and on Hdot. iii. 140; also Blomf. on Æschyl. Prom. 391.

οὗ τὸ γενναῖον πλεῖστον μετέχει] 'of which [simplicity] generosity of disposition is mainly composed,' or mainly consists, as its chief ingredient; meaning the bonhommie of him who, in the words of Martial, Epig. i. 96, is verâ simplicitate bonus. Plato, p. 361, ἁνδρα ἁπλοῦν καὶ γενναῖον. Of this use of τὸ γενναῖον for ἡ γενναιότης, other examples occur in Soph. Œd. Col. 8 and 1042. On this use of οὗ μετέχει, compare i. 84, and λοις τῇ γνώμῃ ἀπίστως ἐπὶ πολὺ διήνεγκεν· οὐ γὰρ ἦν ὁ διαλύσων οὔτε λόγος ἐχυρὸς οὔτε ὅρκος φοβερός· κρείσσους δὲ ὄντες ἅπαντες λογισμῷ ἐς τὸ ἀνέλπιστον τοῦ βεβαίου, μὴ παθεῖν μᾶλλον προεσκόπουν ἢ πιστεῦσαι ἐδύναντο. 2. καὶ οἱ φαυλότεροι γνώμην ὡς

Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 388, 29, ἀφροσύνης, ἧς πλεῖστον ὄχλος μετέχει μέρος. Isocr. Panath. 96, ὑπεροψίαν σεμνότητος μετέχειν. Lesbonax, p. 171, δικαιότητος τόδε τὸ ἔργον πλεῖστον μετέχει. With this sense of τὸ γενναῖον compare Plato, 585, γενναίαν εὐήθειαν. Of καταγελασθὲν ἠφανίσθη the meaning is, 'was laughed at and made away with,' or, as we say, scouted; a natural result; for besides that virtue is seldom strong enough to bear being the object of popular derision, every new breach of faith (as Bp. Thirlwall observes) weakened the impulses of generosity, and shook the confidence of honest unsuspecting natures.

The next words describe the disposition the very reverse to the above, and into which not unfrequently abused confidence would naturally terminate. Render, 'But to be in mind and thought distrustfully ranged one against the other, was thought by far the best course.' The bold figure in ἀντιτετάχθαι rises almost to the lyric, while expressing the sentiment in a most striking manner. Διήνεγκε stands for κρεῖσσον ἐγένετο.

οὐ γὰρ, &c.] In this sentence is expressed the reason why they were so totally distrustful. The γὰρ has reference to certain words omitted, q. d. '[And no wonder;] for there was neither secure word of promise, nor fearful oath or pledge of faith, wherewith to reconcile differences.' The word λόγος, as opposed to ὅρκος, always implies a promise. In the next words, κρείσσους δὲ ὄντες—ἐδύναντο, is contained a further developement of the preceding sentiment; and these serve to convey, in the strongest manner, the deep-rooted distrust in which every generous feeling was well-nigh absorbed. What, indeed, is the exact sense here intended to be expressed, is a matter of some difficulty to determine. The Schol. explains it to be as follows: ῥέποντες δὲ οἱ ἄνθρωποι τοῖς λογισμοῖς πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐλπίζειν τινὰ πίστιν καὶ βεβαιότητα, προενοοῦντο μᾶλλον, ἵνα μὴ παθῶσιν αὐτοὶ κακῶς, πιστεῦσαι δὲ οὐκ ἐδύναντο. And so Portus renders, 'Sed quum omnes animis essent propensiores ad desperandum de alterius fide,' &c. a sense, I admit, sufficiently apt; yet how it is to be drawn from the words as they stand, I know not. Surely κρείσσους ἐς cannot be said to signify the being inclined to. Of the commentators, Duker, Gottleb., Bauer, and Poppo, have not even exerted themselves to overcome the formidable difficulty here existing; and Goeller makes for this effect only, as Poppo shows, an unsuccessful attempt. On a careful reconsideration of the question, I am inclined to think that the meaning of the words is, 'but being all, on calculation, superior [to every such method of reconciling differences], i. e. proof as to the hopelessness of any firm reliance, they rather forecasted not to suffer, than were disposed to repose confidence.' The true force of κρείσσων was acutely discerned by Dobree, who aptly compares a similar expression at ch. 84, κρείσσων τοῦ δικαίου, 'proof to all justice,' impenetrable to it. Similarly in a passage of Shakspeare, cited by Johnson in his Dict., we have, 'and fight with hearts more proof than shields;' and in one of Dryden, 'speaks of a love proof to disdain, and not to be removed;' where the same construction is observable as here in κρείσσους—ἐς. The same sort of construction, too, is found in our expression, 'to be steeled to prayer or entreaties.' The term λογισμῷ has here much force and significancy; serving to intimate that they did not so act from impulse, but on a cool calculation of consequences. So perpetual were the breaches of faith, in persons of both parties, as to make men on calculation abandon all trust. To which purpose we may compare the words a little before, τῇ γνώμῃ ἀπίστως ἀντιτετάχθαι ἀλλήλοις. In the concluding words the term προεσκόπουν suits well with λογισμῷ before, denoting that long-sighted forecast that descries danger afar off, and provides for it. Thus it is a stronger term than προὐνόουν would be, signifying to take thought for any thing. Of ἐδύναντο the sense is 'were disposed,' or could bring themselves to, as in a passage of St. Matt. ix. 15, μὴ δύνανται οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος πενθεῖν; a signification which the term not unfrequently bears when thus carrying with it an οὐ. Without the negative, it has not so often this sense.

2. Our author concludes the description with a remark worthy of deep reflection, and especially to such men of talent as in every age engage in revolutionary proτὰ πλείω περιεγίγνοντο· τῷ γὰρ δεδιέναι τό τε αὑτῶν ἐνδεὲς καὶ τὸ τῶν ἐναντίων ξυνετὸν,—μὴ λόγοις τε ἥσσους ὦσι, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ πολυτρόπου αὐτῶν τῆς γνώμης φθάσωσι προεπιβουλευόμενοι,—τολμηρῶς πρὸς τὰ ἔργα ἐχώρουν. οἱ δὲ καταφρονοῦντες κἂν προjects. Its connexion here, at first sight by no means obvious, may be traced as follows: 'Amidst the perilous insecurity of such a state of unusual apprehension and total distrust, no talents availed to secure the safety of the possessors; nay, the most consummate sagacity and deepest craft occasionally overreached itself, (being, to use the words of Scripture, Job v. 13, "taken in its own craftiness,") or was entrapped by a lower cunning; nay,] persons of meaner intellects for the most part got the upper hand.' The phrase, ὁ φαυλότερος γνώμην has before occurred, and, as I have shown, is found in the best Attic writers.

The next words serve to show why and how this happened, and may be rendered, 'for through apprehension of their own [mental] inferiority, and fear of the talent of their adversaries—lest they should be worsted in words, and be foreplotted by the versatile astuteness of subtle wits, they went boldly to work [in deeds].' In πολύτροπος the idea of versatility (or aptitude to find expedients) implies that of versutia, astutia. That men of talent should under such circumstances be foiled, may easily be imagined. 'Though in ordinary times,' says Arnold, 'in civilized countries, intellect has the superiority over physical strength and energy; yet revolutions, if they once proceed to bloodshed, for the time being, place men in the condition of barbarians, amongst whom physical strength and courage are more than a match for mere intellect.' What, however, our author here chiefly means to say is, (to use the words of Thirlwall,) 'that those who were conscious of their own inferiority in artifice, were the more likely to forestall the machinations of their adversaries, by the blind impatience of their fears.' It is also to be borne in mind, that those who feel most weakness from want of talent, usually endeavour to make it up by scrupling at nothing, and so, in the end, outstrip their adversaries. Thus Aristophanes describes Cleon as outstripped by the even more unscrupulous sausage-seller. In short, to use the words of Mr. D'Israeli, 'those men of ability who had flattered the vanity and prejudices of the multitude, and thereby attained an unworthy pre-eminence, were soon pulled down by others who were ready to go greater lengths to obtain the same objects; and who, conscious of their inferiority to those whom they sought to destroy, in wisdom and talents, endeavoured to make amends for that deficiency by low cunning, with which they contrived to work the ruin of those otherwise so greatly their superiors.'

οἱ δὲ καταφρονοῦντες — διεφθείροντο] In these words we have the counterpart to the above; the sense being, 'whereas those who despised them, as thinking they should perceive beforehand [any attempts against them], and imagining there was no need for them to seek that by force, which they could obtain by contrivance, were so much the more easily destroyed when off their guard!' A remarkable brevity of expression presents itself in the words καταφρονοῦντες κἂν προαισθέσθαι, by which οἰόμενοι or νομίζοντες is to be supplied; which, as says Poppo, is involved (latet) in καταφρον., as in similar instances at v. 40 and vi. 11. Or we may regard it, with Heilm. and Goeller, as standing for διὰ καταφρόνησιν πεποιθότες κἂν προ., 'thinking in their arrogance that they should even perceive it in time [for defence].' Of this brief form of expression an example has been adduced from Hdot. i. 66, and I have noted another in Xen. Hist. iv. 5, 12, κατεφρόνουν δὲ μηδένα ἂν ἐπιχειρῆσαι. A third also is adduced by Poppo from Abydemus ap. Syncell. i. p. 81. Ἄφρακτος seems here to bear the united sense of our two terms unguarded, i. e. unfortified, or undefended, and off one's guard, unwary, incautus; and so at vi. 33 we have, μήτε, καταφρονήσαντες, ἄφρακτοι ληφθήσεσθε, q. d. off their guard, and therefore unprepared for defence. According to the proverb, 'Fore-warned—fore-armed.' It is proper to observe, that ἄφρακτοι must not be construed with διεφθ., but is to be kept separate, there being here an ellipsis of ὄντες. Render, 'they perished, the rather from being off their guard.' Such persons, then, as our author intimates, perish by too great contempt of their adversaries, and also from that disposition to which great talents, when united with virtue and magnanimity, naturally induce men, who thus fall either by being, from over-delicacy, ashamed to suspect others of committing what they could not bring themselves to commit. See Plut. de Vitioso Pudore, ch. 3, fin.

αισθέσθαι, καὶ ἔργῳ οὐδὲν σφᾶς δεῖν λαμβάνειν ἃ γνώμῃ ἔξεστιν, ἄφρακτοι μᾶλλον διεφθείροντο.

LXXXIV. Ἐν δ' οὖν τῇ Κερκύρᾳ τὰ πολλὰ αὐτῶν προετολμήθη· καὶ ὁπόσα, ὕβρει μὲν ἀρχόμενοι τὸ πλέον ἢ σωφροσύνῃ ὑπὸ τῶν τὴν τιμωρίαν παρασχόντων, οἱ ἀνταμυνόμενοι δράσειαν, πενίας δὲ τῆς εἰωθυίας ἀπαλλαξείοντές τινες, μάλιστα δ' ἂν διὰ

Ch. LXXXIV. On the much-disputed question of the authenticity of this chapter, see the Appendix at the end of this volume.

1. Ἐν δ' οὖν—προετολμήθη] 'In Corcyra, however, were these things for the most part first committed.' After having in chapters 82 and 83 spoken of Greece at large, (as, for instance, in the words at ch. 82, ὕστερον καὶ πᾶν, ὡς εἰπεῖν, τὸ Ἑλληνικὸν ἐκινήθη: and ch. 83, init., οὕτω πᾶσα ἰδέα κατέστη—τῷ Ἑλληνικῷ,) our author now returns to Corcyra. Hence these words are to be regarded as joining with the concluding ones at ch. 81, διότι ἐν τοῖς πρώτη ἐγένετο. (Poppo.) The οὖν, then, is here continuative, serving to resume the thread of the narrative, dropped by a digression. See Hoogev. de Part. p. 510.

τὰ πολλὰ αὐτῶν προετολμήθη] Here αὐτῶν refers to τὰ ἔργα in the preceding lines, τολμηρῶς πρὸς τὰ ἔργα ἐχώρουν. Then follows a statement of the three principal causes of the crimes committed in these civil disturbances: 1. the desire of vengeance for oppression and insolence in the ruling party; 2. the thirst of plunder, which urges the needy to covet the property of the rich; 3. the mere bitterness of party-spirit, which men contract by being habitually opposed to one another. The construction is, προετολμήθη—ὁπόσα — δράσειαν — γιγνώσκοιεν — ἐπέλθοιεν. (Arnold.) By αὐτῶν understand the horrible deeds above narrated, as committed by each of the dominant parties in succession. Though so harsh is it to refer the word to τὰ ἔργα in the preceding chapter, (since ἐς τὰ ἔργα ἐχώρουν can only mean, 'they went to work with them'—in opposition to words, meaning the work of attack, as in ii. 3, ἔργου ἔχεσθαι: and so in Jos. Ant. xvii. 5, 6, we have ἐπὶ τὰ ἔργα χωρεῖν,) that I should prefer to suppose the reference to be to something in the mind of the writer, such as τὰ εἰργασμένα. Of the exceedingly rare term προτολμάω, I know no other examples, except in Hdot. vi. 7, ἐπὶ τοῖς προτετολμημένοις: and in Dio Cass., p. 493, 78, (a passage evidently formed on this of our author,) τότε δὲ πάντα μὲν τὰ προτολμηθέντα, &c.

The words a little after, ὑπὸ τῶν παρασχόντων, belong to ἀρχόμενοι: but of ὑπὸ τῶν παρασχόντων τὴν τιμωρίαν the sense cannot be, as Arnold explains, 'by that very party which they now had in their power.' We have here a very anomalous form of expression, of which the sense, though doubtful, is probably, 'by those who now afforded them [the opportunity of] revenge,' namely, by being in their power. Οἱ ἀνταμυνόμενοι may be rendered, 'those who are retaliating injuries;' and the words just before, ὕβρει μὲν ἀρχόμενοι—παρασχόντων, are thrown in by way of explaining the grounds of this retaliation, and are meant to show how naturally it would be felt and given way to, as being the desire of vengeance for injury,—but that injury inflicted with insolent contumely, and in violation of the justice they had a right to expect from governors;—on the same principle as that adverted to at i. 77, ἀδικούμενοι οἱ ἄνθρωποι μᾶλλον ὀργιζόμενοι, ἢ βιαζόμενοι. The construction here is not a little harsh; for, as Poppo remarks, 'after beginning with καὶ ὁπόσα ὕβρει, the writer ought properly to have gone on with καὶ ὁπόσα πενίας: but by the interposition of μὲν, he has slightly varied the expression.' I would render as follows: 'Such as persons who had been ruled with insolence rather than with moderation by those who [now] afforded them the opportunity of revenging themselves, would, as retaliating the injuries they had suffered, be likely to perpetrate.'

πενίας δὲ τῆς εἰωθυίας ἀπαλλαξείοντές τινες] 'desiring, or through desire, to be rid of their accustomed poverty,' as of some troublesome companion ever dogging one's steps. By the τινες it is suggested that some did so from the compulsion of pinching poverty; while the greater part (as implied in μάλιστα δὲ) were actuated by the auri sacra fames; a vice by no means confined to those whose means are small. Of διὰ πάθους ἐπιθυμοῦντες τὰ τῶν πέλας ἔχειν the sense is, 'actuated by a passionate desire to possess their πάθους ἐπιθυμοῦντες τὰ τῶν πέλας ἔχειν, παρὰ δίκην γιγνώσκοιεν, οἵ τε μὴ ἐπὶ πλεονεξίᾳ, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου δὲ μάλιστα ἐπιόντες, ἀπαιδευσίᾳ ὀργῆς πλεῖστον ἐκφερόμενοι ὡμῶς καὶ ἀπαραιτήτως ἐπέλθοιεν. 2. ξυνταραχθέντος τε τοῦ βίου ἐς τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον τῇ πόλει, καὶ τῶν νόμων κρατήσασα ἡ ἀνθρωπεία φύσις, εἰωθυῖα καὶ neighbours' property.' Γιγνώσκοιεν, a little after, has reference to the decree of the ἐκκλησία, by which the property of persons obnoxious to the ruling party was confiscated.

οἵ τε μὴ ἐπὶ πλεονεξίᾳ — ἐπέλθοιεν] Render, 'Or such as men not for covetousness, but attacking each other on a footing of equal justice, carried away with the unruliness of their angry feelings, would cruelly and inexorably wreak on them.' By οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ἐπιόντες are meant, as Arnold points out, 'those who enter into revolutions on an equality with their adversaries—not as oppressed men thirsting for vengeance, nor as needy men desiring plunder—and whose cruelties are owing merely to the fury of party-spirit which they acquire in the course of the contest.'

Before ἴσου I have thought proper, with Poppo, to insert τοῦ, which is found in several MSS. and many parallel passages of our author. Indeed I am far from certain that ἀπὸ ἴσου ever occurs in any good writer. See note on i. 77, 4.

In ἀπαιδευσίᾳ ὀργῆς we have a highly forcible and suitable expression, which may be literally rendered, 'by the undisciplinedness of anger' that cannot be disciplined or ruled. Comp. Eurip. Archel. ap. Stob. Serm. 171, 52, πολλ' ἐστιν ὀργῆς ἐξ ἀπαιδεύτου κακά. Jos. Ant. xvii. 11, 3, ἀπαιδευσίᾳ τοῦ πείθεσθαι τοῖς νόμοις, a passage, this, evidently formed on the present; as is also another of the same writer, still more closely imitated from thence, Ant. xix. 2, 2, ἀπαίδευτον τὴν ὀργὴν ἐπαφιείς. In ἐκφερόμενοι there is a metaphor taken from a ship carried out of her course by the force of tempestuous winds; as in an anonymous author cited in Steph. Thes. on the phrase ἐκφέρομαι ὀργῇ, and especially in Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 34, ἐξενεχθῆναι ἐδοκεῖτο πρὸς τὸ ἄγριοι πολῖται γενέσθαι. In this manner ἐκφέρεσθαι is also used by Plutarch; and so Soph. El. 628, ἐκφέρομαι πρὸς ὀργήν, on which phrase see Segaar on Daniel, p. 79.

2. From particulars our author now proceeds to generals. In ξυνταραχθέντος τοῦ βίου—τῇ πόλει the βίον is not well rendered by Portus vitæ disciplina. It rather means vitæ ratione, viz. quoad mores, the common course of things as carried forward in the life of man or in human society; what Aristotle expresses by ὁ βίος ἅπας. By ξυνταραχθέντος it is denoted that all the institutions of human society were thrown into confusion, or that the foundations of society, or what holds it together, (consisting, as Judge Blackstone says, in the wants and fears of individuals,) were well-nigh subverted. Similarly in Psalm lxxxii. it is declared, 'all the foundations of the earth are out of course,' σαλεύονται, as the Sept. renders. Compare also Wisd. Sol. xiv. 25. And so Demosth. p. 777, 9, ὁ βίος συγκέχυται. Aristoph. Lysist. 488, τἄλλα γε πάντα ἐκυκήθη, and Thesm. 137, τίς ἡ τάραξις τοῦ βίου; Hence may be emended and explained a corrupt and obscure passage of Theognetus ap. Athen. 104, where an ignorant person thus addresses a philosoper: Ἐπαρίστερ' ἔμαθες, ὦ πονηρέ, γράμματα. Ἀντέστροφέν σου τὸν βίον τὰ βιβλία, where, for ἀντέστροφεν, read ἀνέστρ., and regard the σου as belonging not to τὸν βίον, but to τὰ βιβλία, the sense being, 'These books of yours have turned life topsy-turvy.'

τῶν νόμων κρατήσασα ἡ ἀνθρωπεία φύσις] By ἀνθρ. φύσις Bauer and Poppo understand to be denoted, by periphrasis, homines; adducing, as an example of this use, a passage of Cic. de Nat. D. ii., where pecudum natura stands for pecudes: though they might more aptly have cited the following of St. James, iii. 7, δεδάμασται τῇ φύσει τῇ ἀνθρωπίνῃ, an expression standing in opposition to φύσις θηρίων. So explaining, however, the above commentators very inadequately represent the full sense of the expression, which appears to be 'the nature of man,' i. e. with reference to his natural constitution, innate dispositions, affections, passions, &c., which impel him to certain actions. And such is not unfrequently the import of φύσει in Xen.; though he sometimes uses the verb, as does our author supra ch. 45, πεφύκασιν ἅπαντες—ἁμαρτάνειν. That Dio Cass. so took φύσις in the present passage, is plain from his words, evidently imitated from these of our author, at book lii. 34, ἡ φύσις καὶ παρὰ τὸν νόμον πολλοὺς ἁμαρτάνειν ἐξάγει, and just after, ὁ νόμος οὐ δύναται τῆς φύσεως ἀεὶ κρατεῖν: for notwithstanding Göll. maintains, and Arn. admits, that the words are formed not on the present passage, but on the language and substance of iii. 45, yet the former must have been principally had in view; though from the expression ἐξάγει it is evident that the latter was also present to the mind of the writer.

παρὰ τοὺς νόμους ἀδικεῖν, ἀσμένη ἐδήλωσεν ἀκρατης μὲν ὀργης ουσα, κρείσσων δὲ τοῦ δικαίου, πολεμία δὲ τοῦ προὔχοντος· οὐ γὰρ ἂν

The best comment on the words following, εἰωθυῖα καὶ παρὰ τοὺς νόμους ἀδικεῖν, (of which the sense is, 'accustomed even against the laws [provided for its coercion] to commit injury,') may be found in the words supra ch. 45, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι νόμος ὅστις ἀπείρξει τούτου, ἐπεὶ διεξεληλύθασί γε διὰ πασῶν τῶν ζημιῶν οἱ ἄνθρωποι προστιθέντες, εἴ πως ἧσσον ἀδικοῖντο ὑπὸ τῶν κακούργων. With respect to the construction here, by which we have genitives absolute followed by a participle in the nominative, related to the subject and introduced by a καὶ, this, though somewhat anomalous, is not unprecedented, examples of the same occurring in other passages infra iv. 29, 68, 10, and v. 116. vi. 50. vii. 67. viii. 106, and in Herodot. ii. 25, τῶν ὄμβρων ἐπιλειπόντων, καὶ ὑπὸ τοῦ ἡλίου ἑλκόμενοι.

ἀσμένη] for ἀσμένως, (as at i. 26. vi. 34.) and, like lubenter in Latin, denoting that what is done is done spontaneously. The term ἀσμένη, here hypercritically censured by Goeller, is very properly defended by Arnold, who vindicates it, from the words of Shakspeare, 'O my poor country—what wilt thou do, now riot is thy care?' Though he might have more aptly adduced the following passage of St. Peter, 2nd Epist. iii. 5, λανθάνει αὐτοὺς τοῦτο θέλοντας, and another of Andoc. p. 12, 40, οὗτος ὁ πάντων πονηρότατος, καὶ βουλόμενος. With respect to the succeeding words, ἐδήλωσεν ἀκρατὴς μὲν ὀργῆς—προὔχοντος, of these Goeller is pleased to say, that 'they could not have proceeded from any writer of sound mind, having in them what is quite against common sense.' I will only observe, that what to him appears thus contrary to reason and common sense, is no other than what we read in holy writ; for in a passage of Job, xi. 12, we find the following weighty sentiment, that 'man is born (i. e. is in his nature) like the wild ass's colt,' meaning, that he as fiercely scorns all confinement and subjection, and is fond of independence; but chiefly prizes the liberty of indulging his appetites, at whatever injury to others: a melancholy truth, to which the records of all history bear too certain testimony. And such is the view evidently adopted by our author, as appears from the words supra ch. 45, ἁπλῶς ἀδύνατον — ὅστις οἴεται, τῆς ἀνθρωπείας φύσεως ὁρμωμένης προθύμως τι πρᾶξαι, ἀποτροπήν τινα ἔχειν ἢ νόμων ἰσχύϊ, ἢ ἄλλῳ τῳ δεινῷ. With the sentiment contained in τῶν νόμων κρατήσασα ἡ ἀνθρ. φ. (which may be rendered, 'having the upper hand of all law,') compare Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1093, ἃ δ' ἀρετὰ κατόπισθεν Θνατοῖς ἀμελεῖται, ἀνομία δὲ νόμων κρατεῖ.

The words ἀκρατὴς ὀργῆς κρείσσων δὲ τοῦ δικαίου may be rendered, 'too weak, indeed, for the impulses of passion, but too strong for law to have its force.' Compare ch. 45, ὀργῇ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς ἑκάστη ξυντυχία κατέχεται ὑπ' ἀνηκέστου τινὸς κρείττονος. Almost transcribed from the present is a passage of Jos. Ant. xvii. 8, 1, (said of Herod) ἀνὴρ ὠμὸς μὲν εἰς πάντας ὁμοίως, καὶ ὀργῆς μὲν ἥσσων, κρείσσων δὲ τοῦ δικαίου γενόμενος, ἥσσων δὲ τοῦ κατ' ἰδίαν ἡδονήν: and again xviii. 8, 8, ἀνὴρ ἥσσων μὲν τοῦ αἰσχροῦ, κρείσσων δὲ τοῦ βελτίστου, καὶ ἐφ' οἷς τισι κρίνειν ὀργῇ χρῆσθαι παρ' ὀντινοῦν ἐπειγόμενος, παίδευσιν αὐτῇ οὐδ' ἡντινοῦν προστιθείς, which last words are evidently formed on those of our author a little before, ἀπαιδευσίᾳ ὀργῆς πλεῖστον ἐκφερόμενοι. And the expression there, ἐπειγόμενος, was evidently suggested by that of our author here, ἐκφερόμενοι.

In πολεμία τοῦ προὔχοντος the word πολ. is a subst., as in Xen. Hist. iii. 1, 3: and so in Aristid. ap. Steph. Thes. we have πολ. τοῦ δήμου. See also Luc. ii. 924. Τοῦ προὔχ. is to be regarded as in the neuter gender, corresponding to τοῦ δικαίου just before, though comprehending persons as well as things; in short, all supereminence and superiority. In illustration of this sentiment, (too fully borne out by experience,) that human nature sets itself against and is hostile to all superiority, Arnold aptly cites the words of Herodot. vii. 236, (applied to the Greeks, though true of all nations in all ages,) τοῦ τε εὐτυχέειν φθονέουσι, καὶ τὸ κρεῖσσον στυγέουσι. Similar to which are the words of our author himself, supra ii. 45, φθόνος γὰρ τοῖς ζῶσι πρὸς τὸν ἀντίπαλον: and ii. 35, τῷ ὑπερβάλλοντι αὐτῶν φθονοῦντες, ἤδη καὶ ἀπιστοῦσιν. Of this moral truth full confirmation is found in the passage of the Apostle, (St. James, iv. 5.) where it is said, πρὸς φθόνον ἐπιποθεῖ τὸ πνεῦμα ὃ κατῴκησεν ἐν ἡμῖν, where by τὸ πνεῦμα, which is equivalent to ἡ φύσις here, is meant the disposition inherent in man.

τοῦ τε ὑσίου τὸ τιμωρεῖσθαι προυτίθεσαν τοῦ τε μὴ ἀδικεῖν τὸ κερδαίνειν, ἐν ᾧ μὴ βλάπτουσαν ἰσχὺν εἶχε τὸ φθονεῖν. 3. ἀξιοῦσί τε τοὺς κοινοὺς περὶ τῶν τοιούτων οἱ ἄνθρωποι νόμους,—ἀφ' ὧν ἅπασιν

The words following, οὐ γὰρ ἂν—κερδαίνειν, are meant to justify the foregoing assertion, that the nature of man is κρεῖσσων τοῦ δικαίου, 'too strong for the dictates of justice.' Render, 'For [had that not been the case,] they (meaning the persons before mentioned) would not have preferred vengeance to what was right and just [in the sight of God].' On this ellipsis of ἄλλως after γὰρ, see notes supra i. 68 & 102. iv. 54 & 126. Here ὅσιος so far differs from δίκαιος, that the former has reference to God, the latter to man: a distinction plainly observable in a passage of Chariton, i. 10, πρὸς ἀνθρώπους δίκαια καὶ πρὸς θεοὺς ὅσια: and in another of Polyb. xxiii. 10, 8, τὰ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους δίκαια καὶ τὰ πρὸς τοὺς θεοὺς ὅσια. So in the present passage, τοῦ ἀδικεῖν corresponds to τοῦ ὁσίου. The two terms τὸ τιμωρεῖσθαι and τὸ κερδαίνειν refer to the two descriptions of persons above adverted to,—namely, those whose aim was revenge or the gratification of political enmity, and those whose aim was mere gain. Great force is there in the term προυτίθεσαν, with which compare Eurip. Hipp. 384, ἡδονὴν προθέντες ἀντὶ τοῦ καλοῦ, and Ion, 451. Soph. Œd. Col. 418, τοῦ 'μοῦ πόθου προὔθεντο τὴν τυραννίδα. Athen. 260.

On the next words, ἐν ᾧ μὴ βλάπτουσαν—φθονεῖν, considerable difference of opinion exists both as to the construction and the sense. Of the various senses assigned by commentators, it may be truly said that they are all either such as cannot be extracted from the words without great violence, or are such as would be unworthy of our author. First, as to that of Smith and Arnold, 'they would not have preferred gain to that secure innocence in which envy would not have had (in other words, would have lost) its power of hurting them'—surely the very tenour of the present narrative shows how slender a security was innocence, and proves that envy of even honestly acquired wealth became the ruin of its possessor. Poppo, I find, abandons all hope of making out any sense, and takes refuge in the opinion that 'the words did not come from our author;' but that is cutting the knot: though the case is surely not so desperate. Referring ἐν ᾧ, as it is most natural to do, to τὸ κερδαίνειν, why should we not suppose the words meant to qualify that term, and to denote 'such a gain wherein envy had no hurtful power, had no power to do them harm,' meaning a sort of gain the possession of which would not be invidious, and therefore prove the occasion of ruin? That, it seems, they could bring themselves to forego. Τὸ φθονεῖν stands for ὁ φθόνος, as does also τὸ κερδαίνειν for τὸ κέρδος, and τοῦ μὴ ἀδικεῖν for τοῦ δικαίου or τῆς δίκης. Ἐν ᾧ, standing for ἐν τῷ πράγματι ᾧ, signifies 'in any matter where.' The only word open to objection is the μὴ before βλάπτουσαν, for which Poppo, who supposes it must be construed with the verb, says that οὐ is required. But the μὴ is quite justifiable, if taken with the participle, with which, by its position, it is grammatically connected, and thus yields an excellent sense; as much as to say, 'power indeed, but not such as to inflict serious injury.' With this we may compare the frequent expression τὸ μὴ καλὸν, as in Herodot. i. 163, and elsewhere.

3. The chapter concludes with a weighty sentiment of universal truth and applicability in every age; which is accordingly expressed in the present tense, to denote not only what men did then, but what they usually do in such cases.

ἀξιοῦσί τε τοὺς, &c.] The import of these words is well represented by Poppo, as follows: 'Et volunt homines communes de talibus leges, quibus spes omnibus est, si in calamitates inciderint, fore, ut et ipsi conserventur, in vindicandis aliis priores subvertere.' Of ἀξιοῦσι, however, the sense is not volunt, 'they desire,' as Poppo and Hobbes render it (for here desire were out of the question); but rather, 'they think good:' and so the word is elsewhere used by our author, in a sense nearly approaching to audere in Latin, and our venture; as iv. 66, ἠξίουν τοῦ λόγου ἔχεσθαι: and vii. 63, ὧν οὐδ' ἀντιστῆναι οὐδεὶς ἠξίωσεν, 'did not think good' or choose: and iv. 22, ἀξιοῦσι σφῶν ἀφίστασθαι. Herodot. iii. 160, Κύρῳ οὐδεὶς ἠξίωσέ κω ἑωϋτὸν συμβαλέειν. Xen. Hist. vi. 1, 4, and often in Plato: in which cases the term is not unfrequently rendered (though too freely) by audeo. In cases like the present, where the action spoken of is bad, the term does indeed bear the sense to think good, choose, but it is in that acceptation by which with us it means to bring oneself to do, sustinere, as 'the best pro hac vice.' So Xen. Ages. i. 34, τοὺς ἀξιοῦντας καὶ τὰς τῶν θεῶν τιμὰς καρποῦσθαι. At ὑπολείπεσθαι is to be repeated ἀξιοῦσι, though in a somewhat modified sense, as follows: 'they chose (i. e. acted as if they chose) not to leave them (αὐτοὺς being here supplied) standing [as a safeguard]; if ever, indeed, any one emperilled should have need of them:' where note the transitive use of the middle form ὑπολείπεσθαι, 'to leave for themselves.' Of this unusual construction of ἀξιόω followed by μὴ, an example elsewhere occurs in Acts xv. 38, ἠξίουν—μὴ συμπαραλαβεῖν τοῦτον.

By τῶν τοιούτων understand, as Arnold rightly explains, 'the laws which relate to such party quarrels;—laws consisting principally in these several particulars, to set bounds to enmity, and spare a fallen foe, to remember the vicissitudes of fortune, and not abuse prosperity.' Now these are called κοινοί, as being common to both parties, and for the common good of each. Much of elegance is there in the words following, ἀφ' ὧν ἅπασιν—διασώζεσθαι, in which ὑπόκειται may be regarded as standing for the more usual ἀπόκειται; as in a passage of St. Paul, Coloss. i. 5, διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα τὴν ἀποκειμένην ὑμῖν, where, as here, the idea conveyed is that of something laid up as in a treasury, for future use: or, as ὑπόκ., not ἀπόκ., is here used, we may take ὑπόκ. in the sense proposita; a sense which the word bears in Demosth. p. 348, τῶν ὑποκειμένων ἐλπίδων. Of κἂν αὐτοὺς διασώζεσθαι the meaning is, 'that they may even themselves be saved.' In προκαταλύειν, just after, the force of the προ is not to express that they are the first to break them (as Arnold explains, comparing Virg. Æn. x. 532, 'belli commercia Turnus Sustulit ista prior, jam tum Pallante perempto'); for our author is here speaking of both parties, and both could not be the first to break them. The προ has simply the sense beforehand; meaning, so that afterwards they should not be in being to help them.

ἐλπὶς ὑπόκειται σφαλεῖσι κἂν αὐτοὺς διασώζεσθαι,—ἐν ἄλλων τιμωρίαις προκαταλύειν, καὶ μὴ ὑπολείπεσθαι, εἴ ποτε ἄρα τις κινδυνεύσας τινὸς δεήσεται αὐτῶν.

LXXXV. Οἱ μὲν οὖν κατὰ τὴν πόλιν Κερκυραῖοι τοιαύταις ὀργαῖς ταῖς πρώταις ἐς ἀλλήλους ἐχρήσαντο, καὶ ὁ Εὐρυμέδων καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀπέπλευσαν ταῖς ναυσίν· ὕστερον δὲ οἱ φεύγοντες τῶν Κερκυραίων, (διεσώθησαν γὰρ αὐτῶν ἐς πεντακοσίους,) τείχη τε λαβόντες ἃ ἦν ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ, ἐκράτουν τῆς πέραν οἰκείας γῆς, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῆς ὁρμώμενοι ἐληΐζοντο τοὺς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, καὶ πολλὰ ἔβλαπ-

By ὀργαῖς] Meaning 'passionate tempers, infuriate rages;' in which sense the word occurs in Jos. Bell. iv. 4, 7. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1344, χείρους ταῖς ὀργαῖς ἦσαν, and 2186, πραΰνουσι τὰς ὀργὰς τῶν ἠδικωμένων. Plato, 102, E, ὀργαὶ καὶ θυμοί, and 867. Ταῖς πρώταις is subjoined, because what has been recorded formed but as it were the first act of the tragedy. The second commences in the present chapter, and is continued in chapters 46, 47, and 48 of book iv.

διεσώθησαν] 'there had been saved,' namely, by transporting themselves in boats across (διὰ) the strait which separates Corcyra from the continent. By τῆς πέραν οἰκείας γῆς understand the territory possessed by the Corcyræans on the mainland opposite, such as few of the more powerful insular states of Greece were without, as Lesbos, Samos, Chios, Thasus, and Rhodes. In the present instance we know not the extent of territory; but it probably was a mere strip of land opposite to their coast, and consisting chiefly in a few τείχη, or petty fortresses on peninsulas, and the circumjacent territory. These τείχη had probably been at first mere commercial factories, afterwards fortified and converted into castles, and gradually obtaining jurisdiction and sovereignty over the neighbouring districts. For ἐληΐζοντο Poppo edits ἐλῄζοντο, from several of the best MSS., confirmed, he thinks, from iv. 41, ἐλῄζόν τε τὴν Λακ.

τον· καὶ λιμὸς ἰσχυρὸς ἐγένετο ἐν τῇ πόλει. 2. ἐπρεσβεύοντο δὲ καὶ ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα καὶ Κόρινθον περὶ καθόδου· καὶ ὡς οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς ἐπράσσετο, ὕστερον χρόνῳ πλοῖα καὶ ἐπικούρους παρασκευασάμενοι διέβησαν ἐς τὴν νῆσον ἑξακόσιοι μάλιστα οἱ πάντες· καὶ τὰ πλοῖα ἐμπρήσαντες, ὅπως ἀπόγνοια ᾖ τοῦ ἄλλο τι ἢ κρατεῖν τῆς γῆς, ἀναβάντες ἐς τὸ ὄρος τὴν Ἰστώνην, τεῖχος ἐνοικοδομησάμενοι, ἔφθειρον τοὺς ἐν τῇ πόλει, καὶ τῆς γῆς ἐκράτουν.

LXXXVI. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους τελευτῶντος Ἀθηναῖοι εἴκοσι ναῦς ἔστειλαν ἐς Σικελίαν, καὶ Λάχητα τὸν Μελανώπου στρατηγὸν

But the reading there is far from certain; some MSS. having ἐληΐζοντό τε, which is probably the true reading, (for which ἐληΐζον might very well be an error of the scribes,) especially since the active form is never, I believe, found in the early writers from Homer downwards, and indeed is of doubtful authority. Hence I have thought proper, with Haack, Bekker, and Goeller, to retain the vulg. ἐληΐζοντο, especially as external evidence is quite in favour of that reading, and internal evidence not against it, since the critical rule of preferring the rarer and less usual word or form does not apply in cases where there is good reason to think the word or form was not in use in the age when the author wrote. Evidence for the active form λῃΐζω, in the age of our author, is, I believe, wanting. Nay, there is scarcely reason to think that the active form ever existed, were it not for the passive form being found, though chiefly in the participle. Passive forms are, however, in such a case, occasionally found where there is no reason to think any active ever existed.

ἐξ αὐτῆς ὁρμώμενοι] 'and making it their head-quarters to sally from,' as at iii. 31, and elsewhere. Πολλὰ, multum, much. Hence may be emended a passage (evidently written in imitation of the present) in Athen. 265, τῶν Χίων οἱ δοῦλοι ἀποδιδράσκουσιν αὐτοὺς, καὶ εἰς τὰ ὄρη (read ἐκ τῶν ὀρῶν) ὁρμώμενοι, τὰς ἀγροικίας αὐτῶν κακοποιοῦσι πολλοὶ συναθροισθέντες, where read, for πολλοὶ, πολλά. Similarly at p. 267 of the same author we have, οἱ ἀποστάντες—κακὰ πολλὰ ἐποίουν τοὺς Σ.

2. περὶ καθόδου] 'respecting [their] return from exile,' as iii. 114, and v. 16. Herodot. i. 60 & 61. At ὅπως, further on, there is the not unusual ellipsis of πρᾶξαι, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 488.

ἀπόγνοια] An old Attic term for ἀπόγνωσις, though, I believe, peculiar to our author.

τὴν Ἰστώνην] Meaning either, as is generally supposed, the mountain now called Monte St. Angelo, at about five miles from the city, or a lofty eminence situated at the head of the rivulet Santa Barbara, (laid down in Captain Smyth's Chart of Corfu,) directly in view of the Old Port, not more than two miles from the situation which Col. Leake supposes to be that occupied by the ancient city. This would, too, seem to be the very hill mentioned by Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 7, as a strong post for blockading the city and interrupting its communication with the country: ἔπειτα δὲ κατεστρατοπεδεύσατο τῷ μὲν πεζῷ ἐπὶ λόφῳ ἀπέχοντι τῆς πόλεως ὡς πέντε στάδια, πρὸ τῆς χώρας ὄντι, ὅπως ἀποτέμνοιτο ἐντεῦθεν, εἴ τις [ἐπὶ] τὴν χώραν τῶν Κερκυραίων ἐσίοι: where, for εἴ τις τὴν χώραν, I propose to read εἴ τι ἐκ τῆς χώρας τ. Κ. ἐ., 'if any thing should be imported from the Corcyræan territory;' in which sense εἰσελθεῖν occurs also in Xen. Laced. vi. 5, and Vectig. v. 12. The same writer then adds, τὸ δὲ ναυτικὸν εἰς τἀπὶ θάτερα τῆς πόλεως κατεστρατοπέδευσεν ἔνθεν ᾧετ' ἂν τὰ προσπλέοντα καὶ προαισθέσθαι καὶ διακωλύειν, meaning the situation to the S. E., occupying the part of the peninsula not occupied by the city and along the shore where was the port of the Agora. In the words following, πρὸς δὲ τούτοις ἐπὶ τῷ λιμένι, ὅποτε μὴ χειμὼν κωλύοι, ἐφώρμει, by the port Xenophon means the Old Port, called by Thucydides the Hyllaic port, and which the narrowness of its entrance easily admitted of being blockaded.

CH. LXXXVI. The scene now changes from Corcyra to Sicily; and an account is given of the first interference of Athens in the affairs of that country, under pretence of supporting the Ionian colonists in that island against the Dorian.

1. εἴκοσι ναῦς ἔστειλαν] 'sent a fleet of 20 sail.' In Diod. xii. 54, it is said 100 sail—a number incredibly large: and although 20 may seem too small, yet it is αὐτῶν, καὶ Χαροιάδην τὸν Εὐφιλήτου. 2. οἱ γὰρ Συρακόσιοι καὶ Λεοντῖνοι ἐς πόλεμον ἀλλήλοις καθέστασαν. ξύμμαχοι δὲ τοῖς μὲν Συρακοσίοις ἦσαν, πλὴν Καμαριναίων, αἱ ἄλλαι Δωρίδες πόλεις, αἵπερ καὶ πρὸς τὴν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων τὸ πρῶτον, ἀρχομένου τοῦ πολέμου, ξυμμαχίαν ἐτάχθησαν, οὐ μέντοι ξυνεπολέμησάν γε· τοῖς δὲ Λεοντίνοις αἱ Χαλκιδικαὶ πόλεις καὶ Καμάρινα· τῆς δὲ Ἰταλίας Λοκροὶ μὲν Συρακοσίων ἦσαν, Ῥηγῖνοι δὲ, κατὰ τὸ ξυγγενὲς, Λεοντίνων. 3. ἐς οὖν τὰς Ἀθήνας πέμψαντες οἱ τῶν Λεοντίνων ξύμμαχοι, κατά τε παλαιὰν ξυμμαχίαν καὶ ὅτι Ἴωνες ἦσαν, πείθουσι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους πέμψαι σφίσι ναῦς· ὑπὸ γὰρ τῶν Συρακοσίων τῆς τε γῆς εἴργοντο καὶ τῆς θαλάσσης. 4. καὶ ἔπεμψαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, τῆς μὲν οἰκειότητος προφάσει, βουλόμενοι δὲ μήτε σῖτον ἐς τὴν Πελοπόννησον ἄγεσθαι αὐτόθεν, πρόπειράν τε ποιούμενοι εἰ σφίσι δυνατὰ εἴη τὰ ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ πράγματα ὑποχείρια γενέσθαι· 5. καταστάντες οὖν ἐς Ῥήγιον τῆς Ἰταλίας τὸν πόλεμον ἐποιοῦντο μετὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

LXXXVII. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος ἡ νόσος τὸ δεύτερον ἐπέπεσε τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, ἐκλιποῦσα μὲν οὐδένα χρόνον τὸ παντάπασιν, ἐγένετο δέ τις ὅμως διακωχή. 2. παρέμεινε δὲ τὸ μὲν to be remembered that this was only an expedition of observation and experiment, as our author expresses by the words further on, πρόπειραν ποιούμενοι. Moreover, from ch. 88 it is plain that the number of ships could not have much exceeded 20, since the united ships of Athens and of Rhegium amounted only to 30. The expedition in question is mentioned by the Schol. on Aristoph. Vesp. 240, where Laches is satirized for certain vices, though his merit as a brave officer is fully admitted. He was, we may suppose, not unlike Marshal Blucher, at least as he is described by M. Bourrienne.

2. οὐ μέντοι ξυνεπολέμησαν] See ii. 7, and note.

3. οἱ τῶν Λεοντίνων ξύμμαχοι] By this, as I have noted in my Transl., is to be understood the confederation of Leontini, including both the Leontines and their allies: an explanation which Arnold approving adds, that 'our author says the allies of the Leontines, rather than the Leontines and their allies, because the argument of an old alliance already subsisting could only, as far as we know, be used by the Rhegians, and not by the Leontines themselves.' Poppo says chiefly, and adds that this alliance with the Rhegians, entered into sevne years before this embassy with the Leontines, (of whom Gorgias was the chief,) is attested by the very stone recording it, of which a fragment is preserved, and has been given in Boeckh's Inscrip. vol. i. p. 111.

4. βουλόμενοι δὲ μήτε] 'Ita orditur, quasi postea sit dicturus πρόπειράν τε ποιεῖσθαι, sed perinde pergit, ac si scripserit τὸ δ' ἀληθὲς οὔτε βουλόμενοι.' (Poppo.)

πρόπειραν ποιούμενοι] 'making a foretrial, or previous experiment.' Of this very rare phrase I have met with only one example elsewhere, in Herodot. ix. 48. With πράγματα ὑποχείρια γενέσθαι compare Xen. Cyr. iv. 3, 3, νομίζουσι ταῦτα πάντα ὑποχείρια γιγνόμενα.

5. καταστάντες—ἐς Ῥήγιον] Not meaning, as Portus and others render, 'having arrived at Rhegium,' but, 'having established themselves at Rhegium,' namely, as their head-quarters. In this sense καθιστ. occurs at i. 59, and iii. 92.

CH. LXXXVII. The scene now changes to Attica.

1. διακωχὴ] 'an intermission,' namely, like that of a temporary truce in war: a use of the word noticed by the ancient lexicographers from this passage (though it is, I believe, no where else found): and from Hesych. it plainly appears that our ὕστερον οὐκ ἔλασσον ἐνιαυτοῦ, τὸ δὲ πρότερον καὶ δύο ἔτη· ὥστε Ἀθηναίων γε μὴ εἶναι ὅ τι μᾶλλον [τούτου] ἐκάκωσε τὴν δύναμιν. 3. τετρακοσίων γὰρ ὁπλιτῶν καὶ τετρακισχιλίων οὐκ ἐλάσσους ἀπέθανον ἐκ τῶν τάξεων, καὶ τριακοσίων ἱππέων, τοῦ δὲ ἄλλου ὄχλου ἀνεξεύρετος ἀριθμός. 4. ἐγένοντο δὲ καὶ οἱ πολλοὶ τότε σεισμοὶ τῆς γῆς ἔν τε Ἀθήναις καὶ ἐν Εὐβοίᾳ καὶ ἐν Βοιωτοῖς καὶ μάλιστα ἐν Ὀρχομενῷ τῷ Βοιωτίῳ.

LXXXVIII. Καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐν Σικελίᾳ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ Ῥηγῖνοι τοῦ αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος τριάκοντα ναυσὶ στρατεύουσιν ἐπὶ τὰς Αἰόλου νήσους καλουμένας· θέρους γὰρ διʼ ἀνυδρίαν ἀδύνατα ἦν ἐπιστρατεύειν. 2. νέμονται δὲ Λιπαραῖοι αὐτάς, Κνιδίων ἄποικοι ὄντες. οἰκοῦσι δʼ ἐν μιᾷ τῶν νήσων οὐ μεγάλῃ, καλεῖται δὲ Λιπάρα· τὰς δὲ ἄλλας ἐκ ταύτης ὁρμώμενοι γεωργοῦσι, Διδύμην καὶ Στρογγύλην καὶ Ἱεράν. 3. νομίζουσι δὲ οἱ ἐκείνῃ ἄνθρωποι ἐν τῇ Ἱερᾷ ὡς ὁ Ἥφαιστος χαλκεύει, ὅτι τὴν νύκτα φαίνεται πῦρ ἀναδιδοῦσα πολύ, καὶ τὴν author wrote, not διακωχή, but διοκωχή. And so the Schol. Bas. must have read, as appears from his gloss, γράφεται καὶ διακοπή, where read διακωχή. I have thought proper to follow Bekker in bracketing τούτου, rather than Poppo and Goeller in cancelling it. The word may, not without reason, be thought to savour of a gloss: but in this passage it cannot well be dispensed with. The omission arose, I suspect, from the τούτου having been (as we find in three of the best MSS.) changed to τούτους, and, seeming useless to those who read Ἀθηναίους, it was accordingly cancelled. The τούτους may be supposed to have proceeded from those who read Ἀθηναίων, and so thought an accus. of person to be wanted: and indeed I am not aware that it is elsewhere found with any other.

3. ἐκ τῶν τάξεων] 'those on the lists of heavy-armed;' meaning those called at vi. 43, οἱ ἐκ καταλόγου, those in the roll taken from the class Zeugitæ. See Boeckh, Staatsh. vol. ii. p. 266.

4. οἱ πολλοὶ τότε σεισμοὶ] Meaning, as Arnold explains, 'those frequent earthquakes so well known.' These earthquakes were not violent, but extended to various places; the bed of the Ægean sea being, it seems, extensively convulsed.

CH. LXXXVIII. 1. διʼ ἀνυδρίαν] This is confirmed by what Capt. Smyth says in his Memoir of Sicily, who, at p. 249, states that there is a general scarcity of spring-water in the Lipari islands, and that the inhabitants are consequently obliged to depend on rain-water, which they preserve in capacious cisterns.

2. Λιπάρα] So called, we may imagine, from its extreme fertility. Thus to Thasos was applied the term λιπαρά.

3. νομίζουσι δὲ, &c.] These words νομίζουσι—καπνὸν, Valckn. on Herodot. vii. 198, suspects to be not genuine, as being 'historicorum principe minus digna.' It may, however, be observed, that Thucyd. does sometimes advert to mythological fictions. See ii. 29, and iii. 96. Besides, there is nothing unworthy of the philosophical historian, in mentioning a popular story in connexion with certain natural phenomena which account for it: and that all the Lipari islands are of volcanic origin is certain. See Dr. Daubeny on Volcanoes.

τὴν νύκτα φαίνεται πῦρ ἀναδιδοῦσα πολύ] The accuracy of this account is attested and illustrated by the following remarks of an observant eye-witness: 'When we discovered the burning summit of Stromboli, night was beginning to fall; it was a favourable hour for contemplating the volcano with its crown of fire. That which we first saw was a luminous point, which showed itself every moment; then it was a mountain which kindled into a blaze; and at length the whole horizon reflected the flames which escaped from the crater, and appeared like a white Alpine forest on a blaze.' The words of Virg. Æn. viii. 417, 'Erigitur Liparea, fumantibus ardua saxis,' have reference to the appearance by day. And in the 'erigitur ardua' allusion is had to the mountain of pumice mentioned by Dr. Daubeny, and doubtless formed by the volcano, which has been for ages extinct, though that of Stromboli has continued to burn with few intermissions from the earliest periods of history down to the present day.

ἡμέραν καπνόν. κεῖνται δὲ αἱ νῆσοι αὗται κατὰ τὴν Σικελῶν καὶ Μεσσηνίων γῆν· ξύμμαχοι δʼ ἦσαν Συρακοσίων. 4. τεμόντες δʼ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὴν γῆν, ὡς οὐ προσεχώρουν, ἀπέπλευσαν ἐς τὸ Ῥήγιον. 5. καὶ ὁ χειμὼν ἐτελεύτα καὶ πέμπτον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα τῷδε ὃν Θουκυδίδης ξυνέγραψεν.

LXXXIX. Τοῦ δʼ ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους Πελοποννήσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι μέχρι μὲν τοῦ ἰσθμοῦ ἦλθον, ὡς ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβαλοῦντες, Ἄγιδος τοῦ Ἀρχιδάμου ἡγουμένου, Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλέως· σεισμῶν δὲ γενομένων πολλῶν, ἀπετράποντο πάλιν, καὶ οὐκ ἐγένετο ἐσβολή. 2. καὶ περὶ τούτους τοὺς χρόνους τῶν σεισμῶν κατεχόντων, τῆς Εὐβοίας ἐν Ὀροβίαις ἡ θάλασσα †ἐπελθοῦσα ἀπὸ τῆς τότε οὔσης γῆς, καὶ κυματωθεῖσα, ἐπῆλθε τῆς πόλεως μέρος τι, (καὶ τὸ μὲν κατέκλυσε, τὸ δʼ ὑπενόστησε, καὶ θάλασσα νῦν ἐστι πρότερον οὖσα γῆ) καὶ ἀνθρώπους διέφθειρεν, ὅσοι μὴ ἐδύναντο φθῆναι πρὸς τὰ μετέωρα ἀναδραμόντες. 3. καὶ περὶ Ἀταλάντην τὴν ἐπὶ Λοκροῖς τοῖς Ὀπουντίοις νῆσον παραπλησία γίγνεται ἐπίκλυσις, καὶ τοῦ τε φρουρίου τῶν Ἀθηναίων παρεῖλε, καὶ δύο νεῶν ἀνειλκυσμένων τὴν ἑτέραν κατέαξεν. 4. ἐγένετο δὲ καὶ ἐν Πεπαρήθῳ κύματος

CH. LXXXIX. 1. σεισμῶν δὲ γενομένων, &c.] Earthquakes, and indeed all extraordinary natural phenomena, were by the superstition of the ancients accounted — at least by the uninformed multitude — as preternatural, portentous, and ominous of evil; and accordingly any undertaking then commencing was abandoned as unlucky. See Spanheim on Julian, p. 167.

2. κατεχόντων] 'while they were prevalent:' a sense of the term found in Dionys. Hal., Josephus, Appian, and other writers. I have here thought proper to insert a comma after κατεχόντων, because such is required by the article τῶν before σεισμῶν; the sense being, that 'during the period when those earthquakes were prevalent, which frequently occurred in that part of Greece, there happened at Orobiæ, in Eubœa, a preternatural inundation of the sea.' For ἐπελθοῦσα, which cannot be right, there is little doubt that ἐπανελθοῦσα, found in the Scholiast, and adopted by Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Dobree, is the true reading. Render, 'having retreated from what was then the land (or sea-coast), and having risen up in a surge, it came upon a portion of it, and one part of it formed an inundation, while the other returned back, and what was formerly land is now sea.' I have, I apprehend, lessened the harshness and obscurity of this sentence, by placing the words καὶ τὸ—γῆ in a parenthesis. Perspicuity would, indeed, have been promoted by the words καὶ θάλασσα — γῆ coming after κατέκλυσε, to which they alone can be referred. In κυματόω we have a rare word, the only example of which I have elsewhere found is in Lucian, ii. 127, 64, ἐκυμάτουτο ὥσπερ θάλαττα. The term κατέκλυσε has the very unusual sense, 'formed a κατάκλυσις, or pool, inundation:' and so ἐπέκλυσε just afterwards. Evidently imitated from this is the expression in Philo de Mundo, φαίνεται γὰρ ὧν μὲν ἐξαναχωροῦντα, τὰ δὲ ἐπικλύσουσα. In ὑπονοστέω we have a sort of conventional term, found both in Herodotus and the later writers. It is fully attested by the naturalists, that in earthquakes near the sea-coast the sea often retreats to a considerable distance, and then rising to a great height, inundates the land; and sometimes the water of rivers being thus beaten backward, overflows the banks, and causes an inundation. Hence, I would observe, may be illustrated a passage of Hor. Od. i. 2, 14, 'Vidimus flavum Tiberim, retortis Litore Etrusco violenter undis, Ire dejectum monumenta regis.'

ἐπαναχώρησίς τις, οὐ μέντοι ἐπέκλυσέ γε· καὶ σεισμὸς τοῦ τείχους τι κατέβαλε, καὶ τὸ πρυτανεῖον, καὶ ἄλλας οἰκίας ὀλίγας. 5. αἴτιον δ' ἔγωγε νομίζω τοῦ τοιούτου, ᾧ ἰσχυρότατος ὁ σεισμὸς ἐγένετο, κατὰ τοῦτο ἀποστέλλειν τε τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ ἐξαπίνης πάλιν ἐπισπωμένην βιαιότερον τὴν ἐπίκλυσιν ποιεῖν· ἄνευ δὲ σεισμοῦ οὐκ ἄν μοι δοκεῖ τὸ τοιοῦτο ξυμβῆναι γενέσθαι.

XC. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους ἐπολέμουν μὲν καὶ ἄλλοι, ὡς ἑκάστοις ξυνέβαινεν, ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ, καὶ αὐτοὶ οἱ Σικελιῶται ἐπ' ἀλλήλους στρατεύοντες, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ξὺν τοῖς σφετέροις ξυμμάχοις· ἃ δὲ λόγου μάλιστα ἄξια ἢ μετὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἔπραξαν, ἢ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους οἱ ἀντιπολέμιοι, τούτων μνησθήσομαι. 2. Χαροιάδου γὰρ ἤδη τοῦ Ἀθηναίων στρατηγοῦ τεθνηκότος ὑπὸ Συρακοσίων πολέμῳ, Λάχης ἅπασαν ἔχων τῶν νεῶν τὴν ἀρχὴν, ἐστράτευσε μετὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων ἐπὶ Μυλὰς τὰς τῶν Μεσσηνίων. 3. ἔτυχον δὲ δύο φυλαὶ ἐν ταῖς Μυλαῖς τῶν Μεσσηνίων φρουροῦσαι, καί τινα καὶ ἐνέδραν πεποιημέναι τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν. 4. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι τούς τε ἐκ τῆς ἐνέδρας τρέπουσι καὶ διαφθείρουσι πολλοὺς, καὶ τῷ ἐρύματι προσβαλόντες ἠνάγκασαν ὁμολογίᾳ τήν τε ἀκρόπολιν παραδοῦναι καὶ ἐπὶ Μεσσήνην ξυστρατεῦσαι. 5. καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο, ἐπελθόντων οἱ Μεσσήνιοι τῶν τε Ἀθηναίων καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων προσεχώρησαν καὶ αὐτοὶ, ὁμήρους τε δόντες καὶ τἆλλα πιστὰ παρασχόμενοι.

XCI. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τριάκοντα μὲν ναῦς ἔστειλαν περὶ Πελοπόννησον, ὧν ἐστρατήγει Δημοσθένης τε ὁ Ἀλκισθένους καὶ Προκλῆς ὁ Θεοδώρου, ἑξήκοντα δὲ ἐς Μῆλον καὶ δισχιλίους ὁπλίτας· ἐστρατήγει δὲ αὐτῶν Νικίας ὁ Νικηράτου. 2. τοὺς γὰρ Μηλίους, ὄντας νησιώτας, καὶ οὐκ ἐθέλοντας ὑπακούειν οὐδὲ ἐς τὸ αὐτῶν ξυμμαχικὸν ἰέναι, ἐβούλοντο προσαγαγέσθαι.

4. ἐπαναχώρησις] 'a retiring back of the sea.' Of οὐ—ἐπέκλυσε the sense is, 'there was no inundation.' See the passage of Philo above cited.

5. καὶ ἐξαπίνης—ποιεῖν] 'and that this, being suddenly drawn back to [its channel], makes the inundation the more violent.' Compare Pind. Ol. ix. 75, λέγοντι μὰν Χθόνα μὲν κατακλύσαι μέλαιναν Ὕδατος σθένος· ἀλλὰ Ζηνὸς Τέχναις ἀνάπωσιν ἐξαίφνας, Ἄντλον ἐλεῖν, where ἄντλον denotes the ἐπίκλυσις or pool of inundation, and ἀνάπωσιν ἐλεῖν signifies refluxisse.

Ch. XC. 1. καὶ ἄλλοι—καὶ αὐτοὶ οἱ Σικελιῶται] Render, 'Etiam alii—quum ipsi Sicel.' Σικελιῶται should be rendered, not Sicilians, bnt Siceliots, meaning the Greek colonists in Sicily.

3. φυλαὶ] cohortes, 'regiments.' See note on vi. 98, 4. Πεποιημέναι, 'had made.' On this middle sense of the passive form, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 493.

5. καὶ τἆλλα πιστὰ παρασχόμενοι] 'and affording (or presenting) all other securities or pledges for their good behaviour.'

Ch. XCI. 2. ὄντας νησιώτας—ἰέναι] These words are meant to state the cause why the Athenians resolved to subjugate the Melians: and the sense is, 'being islanders, and yet not disposed to obey them, nor to enter into their confederation.' The circumstance of their being islanders, and yet (καὶ) not disposed to submit, aggravated their guilt and the anger of the Athenians. Compare iii. 39, init., where Cleon represents the Lesbians as especially guilty, because they were islanders, and therefore under no compulsion to side with the Peloponnesians—νῆσον δὲ οἴτινες ἔχοντες—τοιαῦτα εἰργάσαντο!

3. ὡς δὲ αὐτοῖς, δῃουμένης τῆς γῆς, οὐ προσεχώρουν, ἄραντες ἐκ τῆς Μήλου αὐτοὶ μὲν ἔπλευσαν ἐς Ὠρωπὸν τῆς † πέραν † γῆς· ὑπὸ νύκτα δὲ σχόντες, εὐθὺς ἐπορεύοντο οἱ ὁπλῖται ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν πεζῇ ἐς Τάναγραν τῆς Βοιωτίας. 4. οἱ δ' ἐκ τῆς πόλεως πανδημεὶ Ἀθηναῖοι, Ἱππονίκου τε τοῦ Καλλίου στρατηγοῦντος καὶ Εὐρυμέδοντος τοῦ Θουκλέους, ἀπὸ σημείου ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ κατὰ γῆν ἀπήντων. 5. καὶ στρατοπεδευσάμενοι ταύτην τὴν ἡμέραν ἐν τῇ Τανάγρᾳ, ἐδῄουν καὶ ἐνηυλίσαντο· καὶ τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ μάχῃ κρατήσαντες τοὺς ἐπεξελθόντας τῶν Ταναγραίων, καὶ Θηβαίων τινὰς προσβεβοηθηκότας, καὶ ὅπλα λαβόντες καὶ τροπαῖον στήσαντες, ἀνεχώρησαν οἱ μὲν ἐς τὴν πόλιν, οἱ δὲ ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς. 6. καὶ παραπλεύσας ὁ Νικίας ταῖς ἑξήκοντα νανσὶ, τῆς Λοκρίδος τὰ ἐπιθαλάσσια ἔτεμε, καὶ ἀνεχώρησεν ἐπ' οἴκου.

XCII. Ὑπὸ δὲ τὸν χρόνον τοῦτον Λακεδαιμόνιοι Ἡράκλειαν τὴν ἐν † Τραχινίᾳ ἀποικίαν καθίσταντο ἀπὸ τοιᾶσδε γνώμης.

3. πέραν γῆς] Peyron, Cramer, and Arnold, with reason, suspect that the true reading is Πειραϊκῆς. See note on ii. 24. But Πειραϊκῆς would be still nearer the letter. However, the emendation is not indispensably necessary, since, as Goeller observes, ἡ πέραν γῆ is tantamount to ἡ περαϊκὴ, for which in Herodot. viii. 44, we have ἡ περαίη. It is, indeed, urged by Poppo, that as our author no where uses the adjective περαία, so he might choose to here call the territory τὴν πέραν γῆν. But as he elsewhere employs the expression τὴν Περαϊκὴν, little likely is it that he should have here chosen the loose and indefinite appellation τῆς πέραν γῆς, which, in the present instance, would necessarily suggest a notion of reference to Melos, which certainly (notwithstanding the opinion of Goeller) is not here alluded to; for the position of Bœotia is not πέραν with respect to Melos.

5. ὅπλα λαβόντες] Meaning the arms of the slain or prisoners, as likewise of the runaways.

Ch. XCII. 1. For the vulg. Τραχινίαις, retained by Bekker, I have, with Poppo and Goeller in his 2nd edit., admitted the reading of several MSS., Τραχινίᾳ, which is strongly supported by propriety of language; for while it would be sufficiently correct to say either Ἡρ. ἡ ἐν Τραχινίᾳ, or ἡ ἐν Τραχῖνι, (since Τραχὶς was originally and properly the name of the territory, Τραχίνιος that of its possessor; but after the former was applied to the city, the latter to its territory, Τραχινία was then the more usual appellative to signify the territory,) little correct, on the other hand, were it to say ἡ ἐν Τραχινίαις. Moreover, Τραχινίᾳ is confirmed by Herodot. vii. 199, τὴν γῆν τὴν Τρηχινίην. Diod. Sic. xii. 3, 25, ἐπὶ τὴν Ἡράκλειαν τὴν ἐν Τραχινίᾳ. One MS., indeed, has—what is found elsewhere in our author and in Diod. Sic., Strabo, and Pausan.,—Τραχῖνι, but this, of course, cannot be received on such slender authority; though I have myself little doubt that our author so wrote, since the form is found in the three other passages of his history where Heracleia is mentioned, as iv. 58. v. 12 and 51, and that without any var. lect. And though the MSS. here almost all agree in Τραχινίᾳ, yet internal evidence is in favour of Τραχῖνι, since, from the form Τραχῖνις being so general in the later writers, the α would easily creep in from the α following. It may be questioned whether Τραχινία without the article was in use in the age of our author. In Hdot. viii. 31, we have, indeed, ἐκ τῆς Τρηχινίης ἐς τὴν Δωρίδα ἐσέβαλον, but there the article is used; and, after all, I suspect that Hdot. wrote γῆς Τρηχινίης (as in the above passage of Hdot. and just after, τὴν Δωρίδα γῆν). In the time of Hdot. and Thucyd. the territory was called either Τραχὶς or ἡ γῆ ἡ Τραχινία, but not Τραχινία. The expression found in Xen. Hist. i. 2, 18, ἐν Ἡρακλείᾳ τῇ Τραχινίᾳ, and Polyæn. ii. 21, 6, εἰς

2. Μηλιῆς οἱ ξύμπαντες εἰσὶ μὲν τρία μέρη, Παράλιοι, Ἱερῆς, Τραχίνιοι· τούτων δὲ οἱ Τραχίνιοι πολέμῳ ἐφθαρμένοι ὑπὸ Οἰταίων ὁμόρων ὄντων, τὸ πρῶτον μελλήσαντες Ἀθηναίοις προσθεῖναι σφᾶς αὐτούς, δείσαντες δὲ μὴ οὐ σφίσι πιστοὶ ὦσι, πέμπουσιν ἐς Λακεδαίμονα, ἑλόμενοι πρεσβευτὴν Τισαμενόν. 3. ξυνεπρεσβεύοντο δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ Δωριῆς, ἡ μητρόπολις τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, τῶν αὐτῶν δεόμενοι· ὑπὸ γὰρ τῶν Οἰταίων καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐφθείροντο. 4. ἀκούσαντες δὲ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, γνώμην εἶχον τὴν ἀποικίαν ἐκπέμπειν, τοῖς τε Τραχινίοις βουλόμενοι καὶ τοῖς Δωριεῦσι τιμωρεῖν. καὶ ἅμα τοῦ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους πολέμου καλῶς αὐτοῖς ἐδόκει ἡ πόλις καθίστασθαι· ἐπί τε γὰρ τῇ Εὐβοίᾳ ναυτικὸν παρασκευασθῆναι ἂν, ὥστ' ἐκ βραχέος τὴν διάβασιν γίγνεσθαι, τῆς τε ἐπὶ Θράκης παρόδου χρησίμως ἔξειν. τό τε ξύμπαν ὥρμηντο τὸ χωρίον κτίζειν. 5. πρῶτον μὲν οὖν ἐν Δελφοῖς τὸν θεὸν ἐπήροντο· κελεύοντος δὲ, ἐξέπεμψαν τοὺς οἰκήτορας αὐτῶν τε καὶ τῶν περι-

Ἡράκλειαν τὴν Τραχινίαν, will not prove any thing, because Τρ. is there merely meant to distinguish the place from the twenty-one others of the same name. That Τραχὶς was applied to designate the territory, as well as the city, is certain from Hdot. ii. 203, and viii. 66.

This appellation Τραχὶς was given to the city from its rocky situation. So Steph. Byz. says, Τραχὶς—ὀνομασθεῖσα διὰ τὴν τραχύτητα, which Berkley confirms from Seneca, in his Hercules Œteus: 'Ad Trachina vocor, saxa rigentia Et dumeta jugis horrida torridis.' Though that has reference to old Trachis, situated on the hills, and mentioned by Homer. Heraclea Trachinia was, as we learn from Strabo, situated six stadia from it, and though in a strong situation, on much lower ground. Thus it is graphically described in Liv. xxxvi. 22: 'ipsa in campo, arcem imminentem loco alto et undique præcipiti habet.' Of the remains of Heraclea with its citadel, as thus described, and the traces still existing of the city lower down the hill on the north bank of the Asopus, and four miles from Thermopylæ, corresponding with the account in Thucyd. and Livy, a good account may be seen in Dodwell, Class. Tour, vol. ii. p. 73.

2. Μηλιῆς—μέρη] Render, 'the Melians consist of three parts.' In the words a little after, Ἀθηναίοις προσθεῖναι σφᾶς αὐτούς, 'Atheniensibus se adjungere,' we have a somewhat rare phrase, of which examples are found at viii. 50, and Jos. Ant. xvii. 10, 3, Ῥωμαίοις προσετίθεσαν ἑαυτούς. It signifies 'to deliver themselves up as an appendage to the Athenian confederation.' Of πιστοὶ, just after, the sense is, 'true to their engagements.' They feared lest any portion of freedom, left them by the treaty of alliance, might afterwards be taken from them, as in the case of so many other subject allies.

4. γνώμην εἶχον τὴν ἀποικίαν ἐκπέμπειν] lit. 'had a mind (in animo habebant, 'took counsel,' as at ii. 6. iv. 125.) to send out the colony [asked for].'

τοῦ πολέμου καλῶς αὐτοῖς ἐδόκει ἡ πόλις καθίστασθαι] See note on i. 36, and Matth. Gr. § 338.

ἐπὶ τῇ Εὐβοίᾳ ναυτικὸν παρασκευασθῆναι ἂν] 'for a navy might [there] be prepared against Eubœa;' easily enough, for, though materials for ship-building were rare in Peloponnesus, they were plentiful in Thessaly, especially on the Trachinian mountains, as we know from the graphic description of the scenery given by Sophocles in his Trachiniæ, where he enumerates, among the trees there growing in great luxuriance, the oak and the pine. To the minute accuracy of which description Dr. Clarke, in his Travels, vol. iii. p. 234, bears decided testimony. From the plate there given of the scenery of Trachis, the mountains appear to have been quite clothed with oaks and pine-forests.

τῆς ἐπὶ Θράκης παρόδου] Thus they had, it seems, already formed those designs on that country, as respected the Athenian dependencies on its coast, which t ey were afterwards enabled, by the ability of Brasidas, to carry into execution.

οἰκων· καὶ τῶν ἄλλων Ἑλλήνων τὸν βουλόμενον ἐκέλευον ἕπεσθαι, πλὴν γ' Ἰώνων, καὶ Ἀχαιῶν, καὶ ἔστιν ὧν ἄλλων ἐθνῶν. οἰκισταὶ δὲ τρεῖς Λακεδαιμονίων ἡγήσαντο, Λέων καὶ Ἀλκίδας καὶ Δαμάγων. 6. καταστάντες δὲ ἐτείχισαν τὴν πόλιν ἐκ καινῆς, ἣ νῦν Ἡράκλεια καλεῖται, ἀπέχουσα Θερμοπυλῶν σταδίους μάλιστα τεσσαράκοντα, τῆς δὲ θαλάσσης εἴκοσι. 7. νεώριά τε παρεσκευάζοντο, καὶ ἤρξαντο κατὰ Θερμοπύλας κατ' αὐτὸ τὸ στενὸν, ὅπως εὐφύλακτα αὐτοῖς εἴη. XCIII. Οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, τῆς πόλεως ταύτης ξυνοικιζομένης, τὸ πρῶτον ἔδεισάν τε, καὶ ἐνόμισαν ἐπὶ τῇ Εὐβοίᾳ μάλιστα καθίστασθαι, ὅτι βραχύς ἐστιν ὁ διάπλους πρὸς τὸ Κήναιον τῆς Εὐβοίας. ἔπειτα μέντοι παρὰ δόξαν αὐτοῖς ἀπέβη· οὐ γὰρ ἐγένετο ἀπ' αυτῆς δεινὸν οὐδέν. 2. αἴτιον δὲ ἦν· οἵ τε Θεσσαλοὶ ἐν δυνάμει ὄντες τῶν ταύτῃ χωρίων, καὶ ὧν ἐπὶ τῇ γῇ ἐκτίζετο, φοβούμενοι μὴ σφίσι μεγάλῃ ἰσχύϊ παροικῶσιν, ἔφθειρον καὶ διὰ

6. καταστάντες δὲ] 'after having fixed themselves there.' By building the city ἐκ καινῆς, must here be meant building another city on the plan of the former city Trachis, though fixing it about three-quarters of a mile lower down the mountain ridge. Probably the arx mentioned by Livy was on the site of the old city, and formed its citadel.

7. νεώρια] The term here signifies not only docks for building, repairing, and laying-up ships, but a naval arsenal. See note on vii. 22, 1.

CH. XCIII. 1. τῆς πόλεως ταύτης ξυνοικιζομένης] 'when the city was being colonized,' or settled: of which rare sense of ξυνοικίζειν an example is found in Eurip. Hec. 1115, ἔδεισα μὴ — Τροίαν ἀθροίσῃ καὶ ξυνοικίσῃ πάλιν (where Τροίαν has a double sense, meaning, as referred to ἀθροίσῃ, the exiled and scattered Trojans; as referred to ξυνοικ., the city itself, though it may have the same reference). Thus the term is used of persons in Hdot. iv. 148, ἔστελλε λαὸν ἀπὸ τῶν φυλέων, συνοικίσων, (scil. αὐτὸν) τούτοισι, where Schweigh. rightly prefers συνοικίσων to συνοικήσων, remarking that 'the term is applied not only to the first founders of a colony, but also to those who afterwards are, as we should say, planted in together with them as joint settlers;' the very case here. Thus συνάγω and ἐπισυνάγω are used of recolonizing any demolished or decayed city. So in Is. xi. 12, (comp. with lvi. 8.) it is said, 'he shall assemble the outcasts of Israel' (in which is implied the bringing them back to their city). And so again in Ps. cxlvii. 2, where the Sept. renders by οἰκοδομῶν (Symm. οἰκοδομήσει) Ἰερουσαλὴμ ὁ Κύριος, καὶ τὰς διασπορὰς τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ ἐπισυνάξει: and where for ἐπισυνάξει the purer Greek term would be συνοικίσει, which is used in Is. lxii. 4, ἡ γῆ σου συνοικισθήσεται: and Ecclus. xvi. 4, συνοικισθήσεται πόλις.

2. αἴτιον δὲ ἦν· οἵ τε, &c.] On the construction here see Matth. Gr. § 309, b. Of the words following, ἐν δυνάμει ὄντες τῶν ταύτῃ χωρίων, the sense is, 'being in great power in those parts.' Comp. the phrase ἐν κράτει εἶναι at ii. 29.

ὧν ἐπὶ τῇ γῇ ἐκτίζετο] Poppo and Arnold explain this to mean, 'and against (i. e. to the detriment of) whose territory it was being founded.' Ἐπὶ, they say, is used as it has been twice just before, ἐπὶ Εὐβοίᾳ παρασκευάζεσθαι and καθίστασθαι. And this view of the sense is supported by the authority of the Schol., who explains ὧν ἐπὶ τῇ γῇ as equiv. to ὧν ἐπὶ κακῷ τῆς γῆς. But it must be observed that this sense of ἐπὶ, with dat. to signify 'to the injury or harm of,' is one that needs proof; and here the common interpretation, 'upon whose territory it was being founded,' presents the more obvious and simple sense. Nor does this lie open to any philological objection; for Poppo's remark, that ἐπὶ cannot be taken as standing for ἐν, does not here apply, since ἐπὶ has here the not unfrequent sense of upon, as in Hdot. v. 12, ἐπὶ χθονὶ, and iv. 86, ἐπὶ ποταμῷ. This is, indeed, one of those cases, adverted to by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 584, in which the dat. with ἐπὶ is used for the genit. in the sense in or upon.

φοβούμενοι μὴ σφίσι μεγάλῃ ἰσχύϊ παροικῶσιν] i. e. 'fearing lest they should be powerful neighbours.' In ἐξετρύχωσαν παντὸς ἐπολέμουν ἀνθρώποις νεοκαταστάτοις, ἕως ἐξετρύχωσαν, γενομένους τὸ πρῶτον καὶ πάνυ πολλούς· πᾶς γάρ τις, Λακεδαιμονίων οἰκιζόντων, θαρσαλέως ἦει, βέβαιον νομίζων τὴν πόλιν. 3. οὐ μέντοι ἥκιστα οἱ ἄρχοντες αὐτῶν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων οἱ ἀφικνούμενοι τά τε πράγματά τε ἔφθειρον, καὶ ἐς ὀλιγανθρωπίαν κατέστησαν, ἐκφοβήσαντες τοὺς πολλούς, χαλεπῶς τε, καὶ ἔστιν ἃ οὐ καλῶς, ἐξηγούμενοι· ὥστε ῥᾷον ἤδη αὐτῶν οἱ πρόσοικοι ἐπεκράτουν.

XCIV. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους, καὶ περὶ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον ὃν ἐν τῇ Μήλῳ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι κατείχοντο, καὶ οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν τριάκοντα νεῶν Ἀθηναῖοι, περὶ Πελοπόννησον ὄντες, πρῶτον ἐν Ἐλλομένῳ τῆς Λευκαδίας φρουρούς τινας λοχήσαντες διέφθειραν· ἔπειτα ὕστερον ἐπὶ Λευκάδα μείζονι στόλῳ ἦλθον, Ἀκαρνᾶσί τε πᾶσιν,—οἳ πανδημεί, πλὴν Οἰνιαδῶν, ξυνέσποντο,—καὶ Ζακυνθίοις καὶ Κεφαλλῆσι, καὶ Κερκυραίων πεντεκαίδεκα ναυσί. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν Λευκάδιοι, τῆς τε ἔξω γῆς δῃουμένης, καὶ τῆς ἐντὸς τοῦ ἰσθμοῦ, ἐν ᾗ καὶ ἡ Λευκάς a little after, which may be rendered wore out, we have a strong term often used by Dio Cass., Appian, and Arrian, denoting gradual, but utter, destruction. Πάνυ πολλούς: namely, as I find from Scylax, p. 596, 10,000 in number. At βέβαιον supply τι, in the sense 'something to be depended upon,' as we should say, a sure card. So at i. 141, 5, we have βέβαιον—ἔχοντες.

3. ἐς ὀλιγανθρωπίαν κατέστησαν] 'brought the population to a handful;' so making good the words of the Wise Man, Ecclus. xvi. 4, ἀπὸ ἑνὸς συνετοῦ συνοικισθήσεται πόλις ('a city will still be replenished with inhabitants'), φυλὴ δὲ ἀνόμων ('lawless') ἐρημωθήσεται· where, for φυλὴ, I would read φυλῇ, as the antithesis requires, and the preceding words, (Codd. Alex. ed. Compl. and Chrysost.) κρείσσων γὰρ εἷς δίκαιος, ἢ χίλιοι (scil. ἄδικοι): and answering to that of χίλιοι is the import of the expression there, φυλῇ, which signifies what we term a tribe of persons, to denote a mob; the sense of the words being, that 'by a mob of lawless persons it will be brought to desolation.'

χαλεπῶς τε, καὶ ἔστιν ἃ οὐ καλῶς, ἐξ.] The true character of Lacedæmonian rule every where. On the term ἐξηγ. see note on i. 71.

CH. XCIV. On that portion of the history which is narrated from the present chap. to ch. 118, comp. Diod. Sic. xii. 60.

1. οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν τριάκοντα νεῶν] Meaning the ἐπιβάται or, as we should say, marines of the thirty ships mentioned at ch. 91. It is strange that, instead of Λευκαδίας, almost all the MSS. should present Ἀρκαδίας, which cannot by any possibility be right; whereas Λευκαδίας probably may, (that island being in the very track that the Athenian squadron would take,) and such is found in some two or three MSS., and must have been in the MSS. which Valla used: moreover, its correctness is confirmed by the testimony of Dodwell, who, at page 49, makes mention of a place called by the name, (Llomeno, identical with Ἐλλομ. here,) on the east coast of Leucadia, and situated a little inland, on the lower part of an eminence. Were it not for this evidence, one might suppose that it was on the sea-coast; for the name seems to coincide with Ἔλλος, 'the sea-eel.' Doubtless, it was a fort erected for the security of the inhabitants of that part of Leucadia.

ἐν Ἐλλομένῳ] Meaning, 'in garrison at Ellomenus.'

Λευκάδα] Meaning Leucas, the capital of the island of Leucadia.

2. καὶ τῆς ἔξω γῆς δῃουμένης] It is plain that this must be some territory which the Leucadians occupied, out of the peninsula; namely, as I imagine, a territory of a wedge-like form, which is on the coast of the continent exactly opposite to Leucas, and with which—as appears from Captain Smyth's map—it was almost connected by two moles jutting out from the coast of Leucadia, and the continent about a mile below Leucas. By the temple of Apollo here spoken of, must, I think, be meant that celebrated one (as intimated by the τὸ) situated on the south of Leucadia, called Leucate.

ἐστι καὶ τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος, πλήθει βιαζόμενοι ἡσύχαζον· οἱ δὲ Ἀκαρνᾶνες ἠξίουν Δημοσθένην τὸν στρατηγὸν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀποτειχίζειν αὐτούς, νομίζοντες ῥᾳδίως τ' ἂν ἑκπολιορκῆσαι, πόλεώς τε ἀεὶ σφίσι πολεμίας ἀπαλλαγῆναι. 3. Δημοσθένης δ' ἀναπείθεται κατὰ τὸν χρόνον τοῦτον ὑπὸ Μεσσηνίων, ὡς καλὸν αὐτῷ, στρατιᾶς τοσαύτης ξυνειλεγμένης, Αἰτωλοῖς ἐπιθέσθαι, Ναυπάκτῳ † τε πολεμίοις οὖσι· καὶ, ἢν κρατήσῃ αὐτῶν, ῥᾳδίως καὶ τὸ ἄλλο ἠπειρωτικὸν τὸ ταύτῃ Ἀθηναίοις προσποιήσειν. 4. τὸ γὰρ ἔθνος μέγα μὲν εἶναι τὸ τῶν Αἰτωλῶν καὶ μάχιμον, οἰκοῦν δὲ κατὰ κώμας ἀτειχίστους, καὶ ταύτας διὰ πολλοῦ, καὶ σκευῇ ψιλῇ

3. ἀναπείθεται—ὡς καλὸν αὐτῷ, &c.] Render, 'he is persuaded (or induced) to think that it would be honourable to him, would be glorious, praiseworthy,' as infra viii. 1, and Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 38, (Thiem.) ὑμῖν κάλλιον ἂν γένοιτο: and so Hom. Od. xx. 294, οὐ γὰρ καλὸν ἀτεμβεῖν, οὐδὲ δίκαιον Ξείνους Τηλεμάχου, where Eustath. explains καλὸν by ἐπαίνου ἄξιον. Such, too, is the acceptation of the word in a passage of St. Paul, 1 Tim. ii. 3, τοῦτο γὰρ καλὸν καὶ ἀπόδεκτον, &c. By τὸ ἠπειρ. must be understood, as Haack and Poppo have shown, the inhabitants of that part of the continent. The only real difficulty that presents itself in the sentence, is that which respects construction rather than sense. Poppo (followed by Goeller) treats of it as follows: 'Quum antea Ναυπάκτῳ τε πολεμίοις οὖσι dictum esset, sequi debebat καὶ ἄδειαν (καιρὸν) δώσουσι προσποιεῖν. Sed mutata oratio, quasi τε non præcessisset, sicut aliquoties post genitivos absolutos, in infinitivum ad ἀναπείθεται referendum transit.' This, however, tends rather to increase than remove the difficulty in question; which, I am persuaded, must remain insuperable as long as the τε is retained; for which I would propose to read γε, saltem, thus supposing the particle to have that highly elliptical use treated of by Hoogev., who adduces, among other examples of it, Hom. Il. vii. 290, Νῦν μὲν παυσώμεσθα μάχης—ὕστερον αὖτε μαχησόμεθ', εἰσόκε δαίμων Ἄμμε διακρίνῃ, δώῃ δ' ἑτέροισί γε νίκην, where the meaning is, as Hoogev. explains, 'vel, si non dirimat, alterutris saltem victoriam concedat.' So in the present passage the full sense intended in Ναυπάκτῳ γε πολ. οὖσι is: 'who, if not enemies to the Acarnanians, or Athenians, are at any rate enemies to Naupactus;' which was very true, for, as Mitford observes, 'Ætolia was a much more formidable foe to Naupactus, than Leucas to Acarnania.' By the punctuation I have here adopted, οὖσι· καὶ, the sense is, I trust, not a little cleared. Ἀναπείθεται is, indeed, to be repeated, not at προσποιήσειν (which belongs to αὐτὸν understood) but after καί. Render, 'He is also induced to think that, if he should subdue them, he should bring over,' &c.

4. τὸ γὰρ ἔθνος—εἶναι] The infinitive here (as at iv. 3, βλάπτειν) is to be referred to some verb which was present to the mind of the writer, though not expressed; and as ἐνόμισε there is to be understood, so is here ἔλεγον, which, however, is not, as Dukas supposes, to be supplied from ἀναπείθεται, but from the tenour of the words following, in which is reported what the Messenians said. This, or some similar expression, is in our author not unfrequently left understood before infinitives, in cases where we are presented with the substance of what was said by any speakers. Here, indeed, the awkwardness is the greater, from the construction with the indicative, in direct assertion, being brought in before the conclusion of the sentence. This, however, might have been prevented, had Thucyd. written τὸ γὰρ ἔθνος μέγα μὲν εἶναι ἔλεγον—οὐ χαλεπὸν δὲ εἶναι ἀπέφαινον καταστραφῆναι.

κατὰ κώμας] Meaning in villages, as opposed to walled towns. See note on i. 5, 1, πόλεσι κατὰ κώμας οἰκουμέναις. Διὰ πολλοῦ, 'at a great distance [from each other].' Comp. διὰ πλείστου at ii. 97. By σκευῇ ψιλῇ understand such σκευή, or armour, as the light-armed wore, who are described at iv. 33, as κούφως ἐσκευασμένοι. Comp. the phrase σκευὴ τῶν ὅπλων χρώμενον, οὐ χαλεπὸν ἀπέφαινον, πρὶν ξυμβοηθῆσαι, καταστραφῆναι. 5. ἐπιχειρεῖν δ' ἐκέλευον πρῶτον μὲν Ἀποδώτοις, ἔπειτα δὲ Ὀφιονεῦσι, καὶ μετὰ τούτους Εὐρυτᾶσιν (ὅπερ μέγιστον μέρος ἐστὶ τῶν Αἰτωλῶν· ἀγνωστότατοι δὲ γλῶσσαν καὶ ὠμοφάγοι εἰσὶν, ὡς λέγονται) τούτων γὰρ ληφθέντων, ῥᾳδίως καὶ τἆλλα προσχωρήσειν. XCV. Ὁ δὲ, τῶν Μεσσηνίων χάριτι πεισθεὶς, καὶ μάλιστα νομίσας ἄνευ τῆς τῶν Ἀθηναίων δυνάμεως τοῖς ἠπειρώταις ξυμμάχοις μετὰ τῶν Αἰτωλῶν δύνασθαι ἂν κατὰ γῆν ἐλθεῖν ἐπὶ Βοιωτοὺς διὰ Λοκρῶν τῶν Ὀζολῶν ἐς Κυτίνιον τὸ Δωρικὸν, ἐν δεξιᾷ ἔχων τὸν Παρνασσὸν, ἕως καταβαίη ἐς Φωκέας, οὓς προθύμως ἐδόκουν, κατὰ τὴν Ἀθηναίων ἀεί ποτε φιλίαν, ξυστρατεύειν, ἢ κἂν βίᾳ προσαχθῆναι· καὶ Φωκεῦσιν ἤδη ὅμορος ἡ Βοιωτία ἐστὶν—ἆρας οὖν ξύμπαντι τῷ στρατεύματι ἀπὸ τῆς Λευκάδος ἀκόντων Ἀκαρνάνων παρέπλευσεν ἐς Σόλλιον. 2. κοινώσας δὲ τὴν ἐπίνοιαν τοῖς Ἀκαρνᾶσιν, ὡς οὐ προσεδέξαντο διὰ τῆς Λευκάδος τὴν οὐ-περιτείχισιν, αὐτὸς τῇ λοιπῇ στρατιᾷ, Κεφαλλῆσι, καὶ Μεσσηνίοις, καὶ Ζακυνθίοις, καὶ Ἀθηναίων τριακοσίοις τοῖς ἐπιβάταις τῶν σφετέρων νεῶν,—αἱ γὰρ πεντεκαίδεκα τῶν Κερκυραίων ἀπῆλθον νῆες,—ἐστράτευσεν ἐπ' Αἰτωλούς. 3. ὡρμᾶτο δὲ ἐξ Οἰνεῶνος τῆς Λοκρίδος. οἱ δὲ Ὀζόλαι οὗτοι Λοκροὶ ξύμμαχοι ἦσαν, καὶ ἔδει αὐτοὺς πανστρατιᾷ ἀπαντῆσαι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐς τὴν μεσόγειαν· ὄντες γὰρ ὅμοροι τοῖς Αἰτωλοῖς καὶ ὁμόσκευοι, μεγάλη ὠφέλεια ἐδόκουν εἶναι ξυστρατεύοντες μάχης τε ἐμπειρίᾳ τῆς ἐκείνων καὶ χωρίων. XCVI. Αὐλισάμενος δὲ τῷ στρατῷ ἐν τοῦ Διὸς τοῦ Νεμείου τῷ ἱερῷ, (ἐν ᾧ Ἡσίοδος ὁ ποιητὴς λέγεται ὑπὸ τῶν ταύτῃ ἀποθανεῖν, χρησθὲν αὐτῷ ἐν Νεμέᾳ τοῦτο παθεῖν,) ἅμα τῇ ἕῳ ἄρας ἐπορεύετο ἐς τὴν Αἰτωλίαν. 2. καὶ αἱρεῖ τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ Ποτιδανίαν, καὶ τῇ δευτέρᾳ Κροκύλειον, καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ Τείχιον· ἐμενέ τε αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὴν λείαν ἐς Εὐπάλιον τῆς Λοκρίδος ἀπέπεμψε. τὴν γὰρ γνώμην εἶχε, τἆλλα καταστρεψάμενος, οὕτως ἐπὶ Ὀφιονέας, εἰ μὴ βούλοιντο ξυγχωρεῖν, ἐς Ναύπακτον ἐπαναχωρήσας, στρατεῦσαι ὕστερον. 3. τοὺς δὲ Αἰτωλοὺς οὐκ ἐλάνθανεν αὐτῇ ἡ παρασκευὴ οὔτε ὅτε τὸ πρῶτον ἐπεβουλεύετο, ἐπειδή τε ὁ στρατὸς ἐσεβεβλήκει, πολλῇ χειρὶ ἐπεβοήθουν πάντες· ὥστε καὶ οἱ ἔσχατοι Ὀφιονέων, οἱ πρὸς τὸν Μηλιακὸν κόλπον at i. 8, and see note at ii. 14. At χαλεπὸν is to be understood ὄν: on which ellipsis see Matth. Gr. § 549, 3.

5. μέγιστον μέρος τῶν Αἰτ.] Comp. ii. 20, μέγα μέρος τῆς πόλεως. Of ἀγνωστότατοι γλῶσσαν the sense is, 'using a dialect the least intelligible of all the tribes;' lit. 'the least to be recognised as Greeks by their tongue.' Comp. Æschyl. Agam. 1018, ἀγνῶτα φωνὴν βάρβαρον κεκτημένη. Of this use of ἄγνωστος, as applied to persons, the only example that I have met with elsewhere is in Hom. Od. ii. 175 (said of Ulysses), ἄγνωστον πάντεσσιν—οἵκαδ' ἐλεύσεσθαι: and xiii. 397, σ' ἄγνωστον τεύξω πάντεσσι βροτοῖσι. Arrian, Ind. 34, 10, ὅτι οὐ γιγνώσκουσιν ἡμέας, οὐκ ἐν θωύματι ποιέομαι· οὕτω γάρ τοι ἔχομεν κακῶς, ὡς ἄγνωστοι εἶναι.

Ch. XCV. 1. Μεσσηνίων χάριτι πεισθεὶς] A condensed form of expression for, 'being prevailed upon [to comply] by his wish to oblige the Messenians,' lit. by his kindness or good-will towards them. Thus the genit. is one of object or reference, as in πόθος with a genit. of person, occurring in Hom. Od. xiv. 144, Ὀδυσσῆος πόθος—οἰχομένοιο.

ἐς Κυτίνιον τὸ Δωρικὸν] It may seem strange, that Demosthenes should have taken his course so far to the left as Cytinium, in order to proceed to Bœotia. But it must be remembered, that, as it was impossible for him to cross the extensive mountain range of Parnassus, so he must leave it either on the right or left: and the former was the safer course; for, in the other, he would have to encounter the hostility of the Delphians and others, who would stop his passage. As a proof of which, Delphi was the rendezvous of the troops afterwards sent out against the Athenians, ch. 101. At all times, indeed, the Delphians had been favourable to the Lacedæmonians. See i. 112 and 121.

ἄρας οὖν] The οὖν is, as the Schol. observes, resumptive, serving (by a use on which see Matth. Gr. § 625) to take up the thread of the narrative after a long portion parenthetical in effect, though not in form, and involving an anacoluthon, which I have, with Haack, indicated by a line, thus —.

2. τὴν οὐ-περιτείχισιν] On this idiom see note at i. 137.

τοῖς ἐπιβάταις τῶν σφ. νεῶν] A class of persons very much like our marines, of whom mention is made also at vi. 43. vii. 62. viii. 24, and on whom see Boeckh, Staatsh. Ath. i. 300, as also Goeller and Arnold on the present passage.

3. Οἰνεῶνος] On the situation of this place Col. Leake has best treated, North. Gr. vol. ii. 616. He is of opinion that the territory of Œneon bordered immediately on that of Naupactus; and that for several good reasons, which he alleges. The river Morno, he thinks, separated the territory of Œneon from the Naupactus. He would fix Œneon near Malamata, and thinks the paleo-castro near it is probably the fortified inclosure of the Nemeium, in which the Athenian army took up its quarters previous to its march.

Of ὡρμᾶτο, just before, the sense is not, as Hobbes renders, 'he made it his seat of war,' but 'he set out on his expedition;' and though it is said in the beginning of the next chapter, that ἐπορεύετο ἐς τὴν Αἰτωλίαν, αὐλισάμενος ἐν τοῦ Διὸς τοῦ Νεμ. τῷ ἱερῷ, yet the temple in question was, there is reason to think, in the immediate vicinity of Œneon, and in the direction of his route; and the τέμενος, or sacred close, would be a very convenient place to encamp in for the night, whereby the hurry and confusion of setting out from Naupactus would be avoided. The term ἱερῷ will apply to any part of the sacred precincts.

Ὀζόλαι is added to Λοκροὶ by way of distinction from the Locri Epicnemedii and Opuntii, who were in the Lacedæmonian alliance. Of ἔδει the full sense is, 'it was engaged [by them].' The term further on, ὁμόσκευοι, is well explained by the Schol., τῇ αὐτῇ σκευῇ χρώμενοι, the meaning being, 'using the same military accoutrement of arms and armour,' namely, that of the ψιλοὶ or light-armed. The word occurs also at ii. 96, and occasionally in the later historians.

Ch. XCVI. 1. αὐλισάμενος δὲ τῷ στρατῷ] The distance was so inconsiderable from Naupactus, or Œneon, that this was done rather for the convenience of bringing together and reviewing the forces, than any other reason.

2. Ποτιδανίαν—Κροκύλειον—Τείχιον] On the position of these towns little doubt or uncertainty exists; but that of Eupalium, just after spoken of, is disputed. Col. Leake, North. Greece, vol. ii. 618, fixes its situation a little inland from Erythra, which, he thinks, formed its harbour. The spoil was there deposited for safety, and for ease of transportation by sea.

ἐς Ναύπακτον ἐπαναχωρήσας] 'after having [first] retreated on Naupactus.'

3. οἱ πρὸς τὸν Μηλιακὸν κόλπον καθήκοντες] Of these words the sense must be, (as I have shown at large in my Translation,) 'those whose territory stretched towards the Mallian gulf,' those who bordered on it; which may imply, as Arnold supposes, that they occupied not only the very heads of the valleys on the Ætolian side of Œta, but extended over the ridge, and some way down the valleys of the streams running towards the Ægean. Indeed, we must distinguish the expression καθήκειν πρὸς from καθήκειν ἐς or ἐπὶ, of which, it may be observed, the former invariably signifies to reach down to, and the latter has generally that sense, though two exceptions are found, in Xen. Hist. iv. 5, 17, and Arrian, E. A. iv. 15, 16, where ἐπὶ signifies towards; but καθ.

καθήκοντες, Βωμιῆς καὶ Καλλιῆς, ἐβοήθησαν. XCVII. Τῷ δὲ Δημοσθένει τοιόνδε τι οἱ Μεσσήνιοι παρῄνουν, ὅπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον· ἀναδιδάσκοντες αὐτὸν τῶν Αἰτωλῶν ὡς εἴη ῥᾳδία ἡ αἵρεσις, ἰέναι ἐκέλευον ὅτι τάχιστα ἐπὶ τὰς κώμας, καὶ μὴ μένειν ἕως ἂν ξύμπαντες ἀθροισθέντες ἀντιτάξωνται, τὴν δ' ἐν ποσὶν αἰεὶ πειρᾶσθαι αἱρεῖν. 2. ὁ δὲ, τούτοις τε πεισθεὶς καὶ τῇ τύχῃ ἐλπίσας, ὅτι οὐδὲν αὐτῷ ἠναντιοῦτο, τοὺς Λοκροὺς οὐκ ἀναμείνας, οὓς αὐτῷ ἔδει προσβοηθῆσαι, (ψιλῶν γὰρ ἀκοντιστῶν ἐνδεὴς ἦν μάλιστα,) ἐχώρει ἐπὶ Αἰγιτίου, καὶ κατὰ κράτος αἱρεῖ ἐπιών· ὑπέφευγον γὰρ οἱ ἄνθρωποι, καὶ ἐκάθηντο ἐπὶ τῶν λόφων τῶν ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως· ἦν γὰρ ἐφ' ὑψηλῶν χωρίων, ἀπέχουσα τῆς θαλάσσης ὀγδοήκοντα σταδίους μάλιστα. 3. οἱ δὲ Αἰτωλοὶ (βεβοηθηκότες γὰρ ἤδη ἦσαν ἐπὶ τὸ Αἰγίτιον) προσέβαλλον τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, καταθέοντες ἀπὸ τῶν λόφων ἄλλοι ἄλλοθεν, καὶ ἐσηκόντιζον· καὶ ὅτε μὲν ἐπίοι τὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατόπεδον ὑπεχώρουν, ἀναχωροῦσι δὲ ἐπέκειντο· καὶ ἦν ἐπὶ πολὺ τοιαύτη ἡ μάχη, διώξεις τε καὶ ὑπαγωγαί, ἐν οἷς ἀμφοτέροις ἥσσους ἦσαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι. XCVIII. Μέχρι μὲν οὖν οἱ τοξόται εἶχόν τε τὰ βέλη αὐτοῖς, καὶ πρὸς can only mean, 'to be stretched or reach down to,' as here, and in Polyb. v. 44, 6, καθήκει πρὸς τὴν Μεσοποταμίαν, where the very same sense is intended as in the passage of our author. Of this use (somewhat rare) of καθ. as applied to persons, an example occurs in Hdot. iv. 171, 178. v. 49.

Ch. XCVII. 1. τὴν δ' ἐν ποσὶν ἀεὶ] 'that which should come in order as he went along.' So Hdot. iii. 79, ἕκτεινον πάντα τινὰ τῶν Μάγων τὸν ἐν ποσὶ γενόμενον, 'obvium quemque.' Lucian i. 386, τὰ ἐν ποσὶν ἀεὶ χειρούμενος. Dio Cass. 104, 64, τὴν ἐν ποσὶν (scil. γῆν) ἀεὶ ἔκειρε, and 107, 97.

2. τῇ τύχῃ ἐλπίσας] The dative here, as Matth. Gr. § 399 observes, expresses cause or occasion. Render, 'hoping [for success] on the ground of his fortune.' We may, however, compare the Hellenistic phrase, ἐλπίζειν τινί.

Αἰγιτίου] A town situated 80 stadia from the sea-coast. From what follows, it appears to have been somewhat below the hill, though itself standing on high ground, as is just after said.

3. καὶ ὅτε μὲν ἐπίοι—ἐπέκειντο] Comp. infra vii. 79, and ii. 79. Ὑπαγωγαί, 'retreats,' lit. drawings off. See note on iv. 127, 1. Here, it may be observed, apposition serves the purpose of explanation; or, in other words, has for its purpose to determine a general idea by means of the ideas of its component parts, as in Hom. Il. v. 122, Γυῖα δ' ἔθηκεν ἐλαφρὰ, πόδας, καὶ χεῖρας ὕπερθεν.

Ch. XCVIII. 1. εἶχόν τε τὰ βέλη αὐτοῖς] There is here a difficulty as regards αὐτοῖς, which cannot be taken, according to its usual acceptation, as standing for αὐτῶν, since, as Duker admits, the enallage, though not unusual, is here out of place; and to remove the difficulty by making αὐτοῖς and καὶ change places, would be but cutting the knot, which, after all, may perhaps be untied—not, indeed, by regarding αὐτοῖς, with Dr. Arnold, as 'a dative whose force cannot be rendered literally in English, though it may, in other words, by rendering they saw that,' (a principle too arbitrary and hypothetical to be safely admitted)—but by regarding the αὐτοῖς as a dativus commodi, 'so long as the archers had arrows for their use, and were able to use them.' This may, indeed, seem passing over the τὰ, but, in truth, the word is pleonastic, there being, I doubt not, a blending of two forms of expression: μέχρι—οἱ τοξόται εἶχον τὰ βέλη, and οἱ οὖν τοξόται. μέχρι μὲν τὰ βέλη ἦσαν αὐτοῖς. I have here thought proper, with Haack, Bekker, and Goeller, to edit, from eight of the best MSS., οἱ δὲ, instead of vulg. οἵδε, which is retained by Poppo, but, while forming what may be οἷοί τε ἦσαν χρῆσθαι, οἱ δὲ ἀντεῖχον· (τοξευόμενοι γὰρ οἱ Αἰτωλοὶ, ἄνθρωποι ψιλοὶ, ἀνεστέλλοντο·) ἐπειδὴ δὲ, τοῦ τε τοξάρχου ἀποθανόντος, οὗτοι διεσκεδάσθησαν, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐκεκμήκεσαν, καὶ ἐπὶ πολὺ τῷ αὐτῷ πόνῳ ξυνεχόμενοι, οἵ τε Αἰτωλοὶ ἐνέκειντο καὶ ἐσηκόντιζον, οὕτω δὴ τραπόμενοι, ἔφευγον· καὶ, ἐσπίπτοντες ἔς τε χαράδρας ἀνεκβάτους, καὶ χωρία ὧν οὐκ ἦσαν ἔμπειροι, διεφθείροντο· καὶ γὰρ ὁ ἡγεμὼν αὐτοῖς τῶν ὁδῶν Χρόμων ὁ Μεσσήνιος ἐτύγχανε τεθνηκώς. 2. οἱ δὲ Αἰτωλοὶ ἐσακοντίζοντες, πολλοὺς μὲν αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ τροπῇ κατὰ πόδας αἰροῦντες, ἄνθρωποι ποδώκεις καὶ ψιλοὶ, διέφθειρον· τοὺς δὲ πλείους, τῶν ὁδῶν ἁμαρτάνοντας, καὶ ἐς τὴν ὕλην ἐσφερομένους, ὅθεν διέξοδοι οὐκ ἦσαν, πῦρ κομισάμενοι περιεπίμcalled good Greek, is not sufficiently Attic for our author. On the force of οἱ δὲ here, Goeller and Arnold refer to i. 11. ii. 46 and 68. iv. 132. In either case, the words οἱ δὲ ἀντεῖχον must be referred to the Athenians, not to τοξόται; for that, as dependent on μέχρι εἶχον, is a subordinate and accessory subject.

ἀνεστέλλοντο] 'were repressed,' 'made to keep back.' So Dio Cass. 1011, 14, ὑπὸ τῶν τοξευμάτων—ἀνεστέλλοντο. Arrian, E. A. vi. 7, 7, ἐκ τῶν βελῶν ἀναστελλόμενοι: and ii. 27, 6, ἀνασταλέντες. Xen. Anab. v. 4, 12, τούτους ἀνέστελλον οἱ τοξόται. By οὗτοι, a little after, understand the archers, and by αὐτοὶ, the Athenians themselves, who wore heavy armour, and who are denoted by the οἱ δὲ just before. On the office of the Toxarch see Boeckh, Staatsh. vol. i. 223. ii. 207. The καὶ at καὶ ἐπὶ πολὺ is, as Krueg. observes, intensive, precisely as in καὶ μάλα, καὶ πάλαι, καὶ ἄγαν, καὶ πάνυ, and such like expressions. With the phrase here, πόνῳ ξυνεχ., compare similar ones elsewhere, ξυνέχεσθαι φόβῳ, νόσῳ, δίψῃ. and others. The sense it here bears, affligi, laborare, is one arising from its original and proper one, 'to hold fast or down,' whence it is applied to denote any kind of severe labour of body or mind, which distresses the one or afflicts the other, and holds down the spirit, like the fabled Titan under Ætna, (so Pind. Pyth. i. 38, κίων Δ' οὐρανία συνέχει, Νιφόεσσ' Αἴτνα) and makes it quail. Thus the expression is beautifully applied in Æschyl. Prom. 677, to denote the state of one suffering under such bad dreams as accompany the nightmare, in the following words: Τοιοῖσδε πάσας εὐφρόνας ὀνείρασι Ξυνειχόμην δύστηνος: so Xenoph. Œcon. i. 21, ἀμηχανίᾳ συνέχονται: and Plato, 250, σ. ἀπορίᾳ.

χαράδρας ἀνεκβάτους] 'Deep ravines,' which, like the Caudinæ furcæ, had no outlet. So Dionys. Hal. p. 53, 12, εἰς φάραγγας ἀνεξόδους ἐμπίπτοντες: and 194, 47, δυσχωρίαις ἐγκυρήσαντες ἀνεξόδους. The force of ἀνεκβάτους is illustrated by Procop. 318, 24, χαράδραι ἀνέκβατοι, καὶ σήραγγες ἀδιέξοδοι. Appian i. 792, 44, and Procop. 346, 30.

The words a little after, καὶ γὰρ ὁ ἡγεμὼν, &c. are to be referred to those which just preceded, οὐκ ἔμπειροι. For want of the guide, who was slain, they missed their way and perished, partly by tumbling down precipices and deep ravines, and partly by the hands of the Ætolians.

2. κατὰ πόδας αἰροῦντες] 'pedibus assecuti,' as Portus and Bredow render; while Hobbes, Haack, and Poppo, assign to κατὰ πόδας the sense illico, e vestigio,—the more usual signification, it is true, though the other seems required by the context. Τὴν ὕλην, meaning the wood, or woody part of the country; and that Ætolia was very woody is well known. Exactly answering to this is the expression in a passage of St. Matthew, v. 1, ἀναβαίνειν εἰς τὸ ὄρος, meaning 'the mountain-tract.'

ἐσφερομένους] For this Bekker would read ἐκφ. But hardly could they be said to be hurried out of course, (what in Latin is expressed by in transversum agi,) since it is plain that they had lost their way, and were pursuing no certain course. To ἐσφ. no reasonable objection can be made, since it is at once a significant and an appropriate term, our author here meaning to represent the fugitives as driving onwards pell-mell at random, urging and urged; for it is to be observed that the word ἐσφερομένους is not, as Bekker seems to have supposed it, in the passive, but the middle voice; and in this view ἐσφέρεσθαι here may be well πρασαν. 3. πᾶσά τε ἰδέα κατέστη τῆς φυγῆς καὶ τοῦ ὀλέθρου τῷ στρατοπέδῳ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, μόλις τε ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν καὶ τὸν Οἰνεῶνα τῆς Λοκρίδος, ὅθενπερ καὶ ὡρμήθησαν, οἱ περιγενόμενοι κατέφυγον. 4. ἀπέθανον δὲ τῶν τε ξυμμάχων πολλοὶ καὶ αὐτῶν Ἀθηναίων ὁπλῖται περὶ εἴκοσι μάλιστα καὶ ἑκατόν· τοσοῦτοι μὲν τὸ πλῆθος, καὶ ἡλικία ἡ αὐτή· οὗτοι βέλτιστοι δὴ ἄνδρες ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ τῷδε ἐκ τῆς Ἀθηναίων πόλεως διεφθάρησαν. ἀπέθανε δὲ καὶ ὁ ἕτερος στρατηγὸς Προκλῆς. 5. τοὺς δὲ νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους ἀνελόμενοι παρὰ τῶν Αἰτωλῶν, καὶ ἀναχωρήσαντες ἐς Ναύπακτον, ὕστερον ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας ταῖς ναυσὶν ἐκομίσθησαν. 6. Δημοσθένης δὲ περὶ Ναύπακτον καὶ τὰ χωρία ταῦτα ὑπελείφθη, τοῖς πεπραγμένοις φοβούμενος τοὺς Ἀθηναίους.

XCIX. Κατὰ δὲ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους καὶ οἱ περὶ Σικελίαν Ἀθηναῖοι, πλεύσαντες ἐς τὴν Λοκρίδα, ἐν ἀποβάσει τέ τινι τοὺς προσβοηθήσαντας Λοκρῶν ἐκράτησαν καὶ περιπόλιον αἱροῦσιν ὃ ἦν ἐπὶ τῷ Ἅλικι ποταμῷ.

C. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους Αἰτωλοί, προπέμψαντες πρότερον ἔς τε Κόρινθον καὶ ἐς Λακεδαίμονα πρέσβεις, Τόλοφόν τε τὸν Ὀφιονέα, καὶ Βοριάδην τὸν Εὐρυτᾶνα, καὶ Τίσανδρον τὸν Ἀπόδωτον, πείθουσιν ὥστε σφίσι πέμψαι στρατιὰν ἐπὶ Ναύπακτον διὰ τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπαγωγήν. 2. καὶ ἐξέπεμψαν Λακεδαιμόνιοι περὶ τὸ φθινόπωρον τρισχιλίους ὁπλίτας τῶν ξυμμάχων. τούτων ἦσαν πεντακόσιοι ἐξ Ἡρακλείας τῆς ἐν Τραχῖνι πόλεως, τότε νεοκτίστου οὔσης· Σπαρτιάτης δ' ἦρχεν Εὐρύλοχος τῆς στρατιᾶς, καὶ ξυνηκολούθουν rendered by the Latin inferri, or se inferre, and our expression to drive onward to any object, to push on; where, as also in φέρεσθαι and εἰσφέρεσθαι, the middle voice has its usual reflective sense, to urge or drive oneself on. The ἐς in this term has merely the sense onward, without any definite idea of the end of action, as in Hom. Il. xi. 494, πολλὰς δέ τε πεύκας Ἐσφέρεται, 'carries onward,' i. e. to seaward, (not 'secum rapit,' as Heyne wrongly renders,) or, as we should say, 'carries off.' Here, however, the ἐς is highly graphic, serving to represent the oaks and pines as on their way to the sea.

Ch. XCIX. 1. περιπόλιον] I have thought proper, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, to write this with a smaller π, because, as the Schol. saw, and, before him, Pollux, ix. 16, it is not a proper name, but a term denoting a guard-fort for the accommodation of the περίπολοι, or militia men, on garrison duty, who are mentioned at iv. 67. (where see note.) So infra ch. 115, it is said of this same place, τὸ Λοκρῶν φρούριον ὃ πρότερον Λάχης εἶλεν: and so Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1897, 10, τῶν περιπολίων τι τῶν Ῥωμαϊκῶν καταληφθὲν ἑκαίετο.

Ch. C. 1. προπέμψαντες πρότερον] i. e. as Arnold explains, 'before the Athenian expedition against Ætolia had taken place.' The words a little after, διὰ τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπαγωγήν, are rightly regarded by Haack, as equiv. to 'propterea quod [Naupactii contra ipsos] adduxerant Athenienses,' i. e. ad Ætoliam invadendam; and Poppo remarks, 'Ætoli enim jam antequam Demosthenis expeditio facta est, sive ultra, sive quod eam futuram esse acceperant, legatos Lacedæmonem miserant, qui, postquam Demosthenes in Ætoliam invasit, Lacedæmoniis persuaserunt, ut exercitum contra Naupactios, a quibus Athenienses ad illam rem illecti essent, mitterent.' Comp. Dio Cass. 393, 8, τὸν Ἀ. τιμωρήσασθαι τῆς τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἐπαγωγῆς.

αὐτῷ Μακάριος καὶ Μενεδαῖος οἱ Σπαρτιᾶται. CI. Ξυλλεγέντος δὲ τοῦ στρατεύματος ἐς Δελφοὺς, ἐπεκηρυκεύετο Εὐρύλοχος Λοκροῖς τοῖς Ὀζόλαις· διὰ τούτων γὰρ ἡ ὁδὸς ἦν ἐς Ναύπακτον, καὶ ἅμα τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐβούλετο ἀποστῆσαι αὐτούς. 2. ξυνέπρασσον δὲ μάλιστα αὐτῷ τῶν Λοκρῶν Ἀμφισσῆς, διὰ τὸ τῶν Φωκέων ἔχθος δεδιότες· καὶ αὐτοὶ πρῶτον δόντες ὁμήρους, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἔπεισαν δοῦναι, φοβουμένους τὸν ἐπιόντα στρατὸν, πρῶτον μὲν οὖν τοὺς ὁμόρους αὐτοῖς Μυονέας, (ταύτῃ γὰρ δυσεσβολώτατος ἡ Λοκρὶς,) ἔπειτα Ἱπνέας, καὶ Μεσσαπίους, καὶ Τριταιέας, καὶ Χαλαίους, καὶ Τολοφωνίους, καὶ Ἡσσίους, καὶ Οἰανθέας. οὗτοι καὶ ξυνεστράτευον πάντες. 3. Ὀλπαῖοι δὲ ὁμήρους μὲν ἔδοσαν, ἠκολούθουν δὲ οὔ· καὶ Ὑαῖοι οὐκ ἔδοσαν ὁμήρους, πρὶν αὐτῶν εἷλον κώμην Πόλιν ὄνομα ἔχουσαν. CII. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ παρεσκεύαστο πάντα, καὶ τοὺς ὁμήρους κατέθετο ἐς Κυτίνιον τὸ Δωρικὸν, ἐχώρει τῷ στρατῷ ἐπὶ τὴν Ναύπακτον διὰ τῶν Λοκρῶν, καὶ πορευόμενος Οἰνεῶνα αἱρεῖ αὐτῶν καὶ Εὐπάλιον· οὐ γὰρ προσεχώρησαν. 2. γενόμενοι δ' ἐν τῇ Ναυπακτίᾳ, καὶ οἱ Αἰτωλοὶ ἅμα ἤδη προσβεβοηθηκότες, ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν καὶ τὸ προάστειον, ἀτείχιστον ὄν, εἷλον· ἐπί τε Μολύκρειον ἐλθόντες, τὴν Κορινθίων Μενεδαῖος] For this many of the best MSS. have Μενέδατος, the reading of all the editions up to that of Hudson, who introduced Μενεδαῖος, which has been retained by all the succeeding ones; and very properly; for of such a name as Μενέδατος there is no vestige elsewhere, while Μενεδαῖος is of frequent occurrence. See Valcken. on Hdot. viii. 52. Nor is Μενέδατος, as Poppo seems to think, entitled to the preference for its uncommonness, since the well-known critical rule will not apply in the case of words which we have reason to think never existed; and the evidence of MSS. in a matter so minute as this, is of no weight. It is plain that the scribes took the circumflex accent above the ι as the top of a τ, and thus read Μενέδατος.

Ch. CI. An account is now given of the operations of the Peloponnesian expedition against Naupactus.

2. ξυνέπρασσον αὐτῷ] lit. 'worked with him,' aiding his endeavours. Τὸ τῶν Φωκέων ἔχθος, meaning the enmity borne to them by the Phocians, in the mutual hatred of themselves and the Phocians. It is well remarked by Poppo, 'Quum Phocenses apud hos propter constantem amicitiam (ch. 95) gratissimos esse scirent, ipsi invicem Lacedæmoniorum gratiam sibi conciliare cupiebant.' That the Locrians and Phocians had been from the time of the Persian war downwards at perpetual enmity, was supposed to be so well known, as not to require more than a bare intimation.

αὐτοὶ πρῶτον] Two of the best MSS. (Clar. and Venet.) have not the πρῶτον, a circumstance merely worthy of attention as showing, I apprehend, that their archetypes had αὐτοὶ πρῶτοι, which, I doubt not, is the true reading; πρῶτον not being Attic Greek.

δυσεσβολώτατος] 'the most difficult of approach,' or entrance. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 436, 4, b. Some MSS. here have δυσεμβολ. And so Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 21, δυσεμβολωτάτη ἡ Λακωνική: and passages in support of it might also be adduced from Polyb., Diod. Sic., Plutarch, and Josephus; but δυσέσβολ. seems of earlier Atticism. So Eurip. Cresph. frag. 12, Κοίλη γὰρ, ὄρεσι περίδρομος, τραχείά τε Δυσείσβολός τε πολεμίοις, where read δυσέσβ.

Ch. CII. 1. ἐπὶ τὴν Ναύπ.] I would render, 'against Naupactus.' Of καὶ πορευόμενος Οἰνεῶνα αἱρεῖ, &c. the sense is, 'and, as he was going, in his way thither,' &c. Of this peculiar use of πορ. I do not remember any other example, except in a passage of St. Matth. x. 7, πορευόμενοι κηρύσσετε, λέγοντες, &c. 'going, preach to this effect,' &c.

2. Μολύκρειον] Several of the best MSS. have Μολύκριον, which is edited by μὲν ἀποικίαν Ἀθηναίων δὲ ὑπήκοον, αἱροῦσι. 3. Δημοσθένης δὲ ὁ Ἀθηναῖος, (ἔτι γὰρ ἐτύγχανεν ὢν μετὰ τὰ ἐκ τῆς Αἰτωλίας περὶ Ναύπακτον,) προαισθόμενος τοῦ στρατοῦ, καὶ δείσας περὶ αὐτῆς, ἐλθὼν πείθει Ἀκαρνᾶνας, χαλεπῶς διὰ τὴν ἐκ τῆς Λευκάδος ἀναχώρησιν, βοηθῆσαι Ναυπάκτῳ. 4. καὶ πέμπουσι μετ' αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τῶν νεῶν χιλίους ὁπλίτας, οἳ ἐσελθόντες περιεποίησαν τὸ χωρίον· δεινὸν γὰρ ἦν μὴ, μεγάλου ὄντος τοῦ τείχους ὀλίγων δὲ τῶν ἀμυνομένων, οὐκ ἀντίσχωσιν. 5. Εὐρύλοχος δὲ καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὡς ἤσθοντο τὴν στρατιὰν ἐσεληλυθυῖαν, καὶ ἀδύνατον ὂν τὴν πόλιν βίᾳ ἑλεῖν, ἀνεχώρησαν, οὐκ ἐπὶ Πελοποννήσου, ἀλλ' ἐς τὴν Αἰολίδα, τὴν νῦν καλουμένην Καλυδῶνα, καὶ Πλευρῶνα, καὶ ἐς τὰ ταύτῃ χωρία, καὶ ἐς Πρόσχιον τῆς Αἰτωλίας. 6. οἱ γὰρ Ἀμπρακιῶται, ἐλθόντες πρὸς αὐτοὺς, πείθουσιν ὥστε μετὰ σφῶν Ἄργει τε τῷ Ἀμφιλοχικῷ καὶ Ἀμφιλοχίᾳ τῇ ἄλλῃ ἐπιχειρῆσαι, καὶ Ἀκαρνανίᾳ ἅμα, λέγοντες ὅτι ἢν τούτων κρατήσωσι, πᾶν τὸ ἠπειρωτικὸν Λακεδαιμονίοις ξύμμαχον καθεστήξει. 7. καὶ ὁ μὲν Εὐρύλοχος, πεισθεὶς, καὶ τοὺς Αἰτωλοὺς ἀφεὶς, ἡσύχαζε τῷ στρατῷ περὶ τοὺς

Poppo. I have thought proper, with Bekker and Goeller, to retain the common reading, since this form occurs without var. lect. at ii. 84, and is sanctioned by the authority of Steph. Byz., who affirms this to be the reading in our author. Indeed consistency itself would require this; but Μολύκρειον, I apprehend, in the time of Thucyd., merely designated a fort or castle, situated just above the cape of Antirrhium, where the castle of Rumeli now is. The Μολύκρεια or Μολυκρία of Scylax, Polyb., Pausan., and Pliny, was a town built at a later period, on the first rise of the hills behind the castle of Rumeli. See Leake's South. Greece, vol. ii. 150. The situation is that of Itezerli in Wyld's map of Greece.

3. μετὰ τὰ ἐκ τῆς Αἰτωλίας] Here we have, as Bauer observes, a condensed form of expression, consisting of two blended together, (as at v. 34, τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου: and viii. 2, πρὸς τὴν ἐκ τῆς Σικελίας τῶν Ἀθηναίων κακοπραγίαν,) of which the meaning is, 'after the events which took place,' namely, the defeat which he sustained from that quarter.

δείσας περὶ αὐτῆς] Since Thucydides, and other of the best Attic writers, almost invariably use the dative in this kind of expression, Bekker would read περὶ αὐτῇ, but on insufficient grounds; for although the genit. is less usual, yet several examples might be adduced from the best Attic writers, as Xen. and Plato. Nay, in a passage of our author, infra viii. 93, we have ἐφοβεῖτο περὶ τοῦ παντὸς πολιτικοῦ. Here, then, we may render, 'fearing about it.'

4. ἐπὶ τῶν νεῶν] Meaning the ships which composed the Athenian squadron then stationed on the coast of Western Greece, and which, as we learn from ch. 105, consisted of 20 sail.

περιεποίησαν] This is very properly edited by Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, from some of the best MSS., for vulg. περιεποιήσαντο: and such, I would observe, was evidently read by Dio Cass., who, at p. 396, 10, has τοὺς ἄλλους ἅκοντας περιποιήσομεν. Though he often uses περιποιήσασθαι, yet always, I believe, in the sense proper to the mid., 'to preserve for one's own use;' whereas the act. περιποιῆσαι signifies 'to preserve for another's use,' as here, and in Herodot. vi. 13 and 36. vii. 52. Xenoph. Cyr. iv. 4, 3.

5. τὴν νῦν καλουμένην Καλυδῶνα] Meaning the region which was once called Æolis, but afterwards took that of its chief towns, Calydon and Pleuron; though on the subjugation of Pleuron to the dominion of Calydon, the territory was then called ἡ Καλυδών. So Hesych. in v. Αἰολικὸν θέαμα, says, ἡ γὰρ Καλυδὼν Αἰολὶς ἐκαλεῖτο: and in Xen. Hist. iv. 6, 1, we have, Καλυδῶνα, ἢ τὸ παλαιὸν Αἰτωλίας (where read, with Poppo, for Αἰτ., Αἰολὶς) ἦν.

χώρους τούτους, ἕως τοῖς Ἀμπρακιώταις ἐκστρατευσαμένοις περὶ τὸ Ἄργος δέοι βοηθεῖν. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

CIII. Οἱ δ' ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ Ἀθηναῖοι, τοῦ ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος, ἐπελθόντες μετὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων ξυμμάχων, καὶ ὅσοι Σικελῶν κατὰ κράτος ἀρχόμενοι ὑπὸ Συρακοσίων, καὶ ξύμμαχοι ὄντες, ἀποστάντες αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ Συρακοσίων ξυνεπολέμουν, ἐπ' Ἴνησσαν τὸ Σικελικὸν πόλισμα, οὗ τὴν ἀκρόπολιν Συρακόσιοι εἶχον, προσέβαλον· καὶ ὡς οὐκ ἐδύναντο ἑλεῖν, ἀπῆσαν. 2. ἐν δὲ τῇ ἀναχωρήσει ὑστέροις Ἀθηναίων τοῖς ξυμμάχοις ἀναχωροῦσιν ἐπιτίθενται οἱ ἐκ τοῦ τειχίσματος Συρακόσιοι, καὶ προσπεσόντες τρέπουσί τε μέρος τι τοῦ στρατοῦ καὶ ἀπέκτειναν οὐκ ὀλίγους. 3. καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν ὁ Λάχης καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὴν Λοκρίδα ἀποβάσεις τινὰς ποιησάμενοι κατὰ τὸν Καικῖνον ποταμὸν, τοὺς προσβοηθοῦντας Λοκρῶν μετὰ Προξένου τοῦ Καπάτωνος, ὡς τριακοσίους, μάχῃ ἐκράτησαν, καὶ ὅπλα λαβόντες ἀπεχώρησαν.

CIV. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος καὶ Δῆλον ἐκάθηραν Ἀθηναῖοι κατὰ χρησμόν δή τινα. ἐκάθηρε μὲν γὰρ καὶ Πεισίστρατος ὁ τύραννος

CH. CIII. 1. κατὰ κράτος ἀρχόμενοι] 'governed with a hard and severe rule.' So Suid. explains it κατὰ πολλὴν ἐξουσίαν. See note on ii. 87 and iii. 97.

CH. CIV. Our historian now proceeds to recount the solemn purification of the island of Delos, from which he takes occasion to notice the great festivals anciently held there.

1. κατὰ χρησμὸν δή τινα] Meaning, 'agreeably, as they professed, to a certain oracle;' in other words, 'admonished so to do thereby.' On this sense of δὴ (found also at i. 24. iii. 10. vi. 54, and elsewhere) see Viger de Idiot. and Hoogev. de Partic. Its use, in the present case, may be supposed to show our historian's doubt whether the oracle was really given, or only pretended, and the whole affair of the oracle and the purification a mere piece of state craft, to quiet the minds of the Athenian people, which had been doubtless in a state of great agitation from the united affliction of war and pestilence, together with the evils which the former is sure to bring in its train. See ii. 82. Hence it was natural for religious persons to suppose that there must be some dire unexpected guilt which occasioned these scourges of pestilence, war, famine, &c.; and as the general opinion fixed on the impure state in which the island sacred to Apollo (Delos) was still permitted to remain, to quiet the public mind, this purification was thought of by the government. The question, however, as to the force of the δὴ will depend upon this, whether the oracle here spoken of was the oracle given in the time of Pisistratus, agreeably to which Delos was first purified, or one given at that time. I am inclined to think the former; for unnecessary was it to resort to the expedient of getting up an oracle, since the ancient oracle would suffice for the purpose. But if so, δὴ will not have the sense of pretence, but merely that of scilicet; though it may have an ironical import, to signify forsooth, implying a doubt whether such an oracle had ever been given. That the former purification of Delos was in consequence of an oracle, or rather reputed oracle, (ἐκ τῶν λογίων,) we have the direct testimony of Herodot. i. 64, which our author seems to have here had before him. What was now done, was done to completely fulfil the direction of the oracle, which in the time of Pisistratus had only been partially obeyed. The whole thing had for its purpose not, as some suppose, to procure relief from the pestilence; for although Apollo was thought both to send and to stay such disasters, the plague had already ceased for above a year; but rather in gratitude to the god for his mercy in staying it, and still more to counteract (as Thirlwall well says) an opinion which the Delphian oracle may have rendered prevalent among the Greeks, that Apollo sided with the Peloponnesians. Accordingly especial respect was shown to Apollo, both by completely fulfilling his former injunction, (removing all present, and effectually guarding against πρότερον αὐτὴν, οὐχ ἅπασαν, ἀλλ' ὅσον ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐφεωρᾶτο τῆς νήσου· τότε δὲ πᾶσα ἐκαθάρθη τοιῷδε τρόπῳ. 2. θῆκαι ὅσαι ἦσαν τῶν τεθνεώτων ἐν Δήλῳ πάσας ἀνεῖλον, καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν προεῖπον μήτε ἐναποθνήσκειν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ μήτε ἐντίκτειν, ἀλλ' ἐς τὴν Ῥήνειαν διακομίζεσθαι. (ἀπέχει δὲ ἡ Ῥήνεια τῆς Δήλου οὕτως ὀλίγον, ὥστε Πολυκράτης ὁ Σαμίων τύραννος, ἰσχύσας τινὰ χρόνον ναυτικῷ καὶ τῶν τε ἄλλων νήσων ἄρξας, καὶ τὴν Ῥήνειαν ἑλὼν, ἀνέθηκε τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι τῷ Δηλίῳ, ἀλύσει δήσας πρὸς τὴν Δῆλον.) καὶ τὴν πεντετηρίδα τότε πρῶτον μετὰ τὴν κάθαρσιν ἐποίησαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, τὰ Δήλια. 3. ἦν δέ ποτε καὶ τὸ πάλαι μεγάλη ξύνοδος ἐς τὴν Δῆλον τῶν Ἰώνων τε καὶ περικτιόνων νησιωτῶν· ξύν τε γὰρ γυναιξὶ καὶ παισὶν ἐθεώρουν, ὥσπερ νῦν ἐς τὰ Ἐφέσια Ἴωνες, καὶ ἀγὼν ἐποιεῖτο αὐτόθι καὶ γυμνικὸς καὶ μουσικὸς, χορούς τε ἀνῆγον αἱ πόλεις. 4. δηλοῖ δὲ μάλιστα Ὅμηρος ὅτι τοιαῦτα ἦν ἐν τοῖς ἔπεσι τοῖσδε, ἃ ἐστιν ἐκ προοιμίου Ἀπόλλωνος· all future pollution,) and by instituting such religious observances in his honour, as might propitiate his favour; in order to which, an ancient festival was now revived, being made quinquennial, and its festal solemnity somewhat increased.

ὅσον ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ] So Herodotus has ἐφ' ὅσον ἔποψις τοῦ ἱεροῦ εἶχεν.

2. μήτε ἐναποθνήσκειν — ἐντίκτειν] There is no occasion, with Gottlieb., to take ἐναποθν. in the sense 'to be sick unto death;' this being merely a popular mode of expressing that they ordered 'that no one should [be allowed] to die there, or bring forth there;' and the next words, ἀλλ' ἐς τὴν Ῥ. διακομίζεσθαι, are added by way of explanation. With respect to the latter particular, μήτε ἐντίκτειν, the island was supposed to be profaned by the birth as well as the death of any human being, since it was regarded as all sacred, and in some measure a temple; and that to bring forth in sacred places was forbidden, we know from Aristoph. Lys. 743, and Ran. 1080.

τὰ Δήλια] Besides the authorities referred to by Hudson and Duker, see Athen. p. 173, and Wachsm. Ant. i. 2, p. 256.

3. περικτιόνων νησιωτῶν] Meaning the inhabitants of the circumjacent Cyclades. In περικτ. we have a term chiefly found in the heroic poets. At ἐθεώρουν supply ἐς τὰ Δήλια, from the interposed clause ὥσπερ νῦν ἐς τὰ Ἐφέσια Ἴωνες; the sense being, that they attended at the solemn festivals at Delos as the Ionians, &c. The term θεωρεῖν signifies properly 'to behold any thing as a spectacle,' and when followed by ἐς implying motion to a place, it signifies, as here, and in Aristoph. Vesp. 1183, and Lucian, Tim. p. 152, (cited by Duker,) 'to go to see any person or thing;' and, as used of public festivals, 'to be present at and partake in the ceremonies.' On τὰ Ἐφέσια see Dionys. Hal. iv. 25. Locell. on Xen. Eph. p. 132, and Strabo, p. 948, referred to by the commentators.

By μουσικὸς is, I apprehend, denoted, in opposition to γυμνικὸς, or a contest of bodily powers, one of mind and intellect, nearly in the sense belonging to our epithet literary: for the term ἡ μουσικὴ (scil. τέχνη) denoted not only music properly so called, but music united with poetry, especially dramatic, and sometimes the liberal arts generally, especially eloquence.

χορὸς ἀνῆγον] instituebant saltatores, 'set forth dancing.' So ducere choros in Latin. Duker here refers to Callim. Hym. on Del. 279, πᾶσαι δὲ χορὸς ἀνάγουσι πολῆες. And I have noted the phrase also in Dionys. Perieg. 527, ῥύσια δ' Ἀπόλλωνι χορὸς ἀνάγουσιν ἅπασαι, scil. Κυκλάδες.

ἐκ προοιμίου] The Scholiast explains προοιμίου by ὕμνου, observing that the ancients so applied that term. And Duker remarks, that others as well as our author have done so, referring to Menage on Diog. Laërt. viii. 37, and Goell. to Anecd. Hemsterh. t. i. p. 111. Poppo, however, is of opinion, that the compositions called Homer's Hymns are not truly ὕμνοι, but were composed as proems to compositions of greater length and importance; referring to Wolf's Proleg. ad Hom. p. cv., and Matthiæ's Animadversiones in Hymn.

ἄλλοτε Δήλῳ, Φοῖβε, μάλιστά γε θυμὸν ἐτέρφθης, ἔνθα τοι ἑλκεχίτωνες Ἰάονες ἠγερέθονται
† σὺν σφοῖσιν τεκέεσσι γυναιξί τε σὴν ἐς ἀγυιάν·

Hom. p. 11, seq. It is not my intention to enter into the disputed question about the authenticity of the Hymns generally, which have come down to us as Homer's. We are here concerned merely with that on Apollo. It is clear that our author here takes for granted the genuineness of this composition; nay, he seems himself to have received it as genuine. But it will by no means follow, that he would have accounted all those which pass under the name of Homer's Hymns, or every part of the one in question, as the composition of the immortal bard. All we are here concerned with are the passages which Thucydides has cited from the proem, or Hymn on Apollo; and here a most remarkable circumstance meets us in the marvellous discrepancies between the passages as found in the most current editions of Homer's Hymns. Those discrepancies, indeed, almost entirely vanish in the common text, as found in the earlier editions of Thucydides. But there can be little doubt that, as Poppo is persuaded, the text of Thucydides was altered by the early editors, and made to correspond, as it does almost verbatim, with that of the Hymns. Be that as it may, it is the part of an editor of Thucydides to form the text of any part of his author in accordance with the most correct manuscript copies of his author. Accordingly Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller were right in presenting such a text as is found in those MSS., leaving it to the editors of the Hymns to act on the same principle; by which we obtain the text according to two recensions; one that which prevailed in the time of Thucydides, the other that which resulted from the labours of the Alexandrian critics. For my own part, I have thought proper to follow Bekker's text of the verses, as faithfully representing that found in all the best MSS. with the exception of ἀλλ' ὅτε in the first verse, since (as I have pointed out in my Translation) no number of MSS. would be sufficient to establish what only yields nonsense. Accordingly, ἄλλοτε has been very properly edited by Goeller in his second edition, and adopted by Poppo. Such is, indeed, found in at least one MS., and if it had place in none, that were little material, since the authority of MSS. in such cases is next to nothing, being far overbalanced by what the context requires. Render 'at other times.'

In the same line, the reading of almost every MS. is μάλιστά γε θυμὸν ἐτέρφθης, while the common reading is μάλιστ' ἐπιτέρπεαι ἦτορ, which is found in the editions of Homer, of which Herm. regards the Thucydidean reading as a gloss. But surely nothing of explanation was here required. It would rather seem that ἐπιτ. ἦτορ was an alteration of the Alexandrian critics, who wished thus to make the line more Homeric; since in Hom. Od. i. 310, we have τεταρπόμενος ἦτορ, and at Il. x. 701, τεταρπόμενοι ἦτορ. But it may be doubted whether Homer, or any correct writer, would have written ἐπιτέρπεαι ἦτορ. Ἐπιτέρπεσθαι requires after it a dat. of thing, as in the only passage where it is used by Homer, and the only one where it is used by Hesiod and by Pind.: whereas to θυμὸν τέρπεσθαι there is no possible objection; such being found in Hom. Il. xxi. 45, θυμὸν ἐτέρπετο οἷσι φίλοισιν.

With ἑλκεχίτωνες compare Hom. Il. xiii. 685, Ἰάονες ἑλκεχίτωνες. For σὺν σφοῖσιν τεκέεσσι, edited by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, the common reading is αὐτοῖς σὺν παίδεσσι: a reading far less poetical as regards παίδεσσι; and as regards αὐτοῖς, it may be doubted whether it be good Greek: though, indeed, so inharmonious is the reading of the MSS., σφοῖσιν, that it would seem to be as little genuine as the common one. The true reading I believe to be αὐτοὶ σὺν τεκέεσσι, which was, I doubt not, in the MS. from which was formed the reading in the Cod. Clarend. αὐτοῖς σὺν τεκέεσσι. The ς might easily arise from the ς following. This reading being adopted, I would point thus: ἠγερέθονται, αὐτοὶ σὺν τεκέεσσι γυναιξί τε, σὴν ἐς ἀγυιάν. Accordingly the words will form an apposition for explanation sake, as in a similar passage of the prophet Daniel, vi. 24, καὶ ἠγάγοσαν τοὺς ἄνδρας τοὺς διαβαλόντας τὸν Δανιὴλ, καὶ εἰς τὸν λάκκον τῶν λεόντων ἐνεβλήθησαν αὐτοὶ, καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ αὐτῶν καὶ αἱ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν. As to the reading σφῖσιν, it evidently proceeded from those who were justly dissatisfied with σφοῖσιν. Again, for γυναιξί τε σὴν ἐς ἀγυιάν, the common reading is καὶ αἰδοίῃς ἀλόχοισιν. But the former is adopted by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, from its being found in all the MSS.—all

ἔνθα σε πυγμαχίῃ τε καὶ ὀρχηστυῖ καὶ ἀοιδῇ μνησάμενοι τέρπουσιν, ὅταν καθέσωσιν ἀγῶνα.

5. ὅτι δὲ καὶ μουσικῆς ἀγὼν ἦν, καὶ ἀγωνιούμενοι ἐφοίτων, ἐν τοῖσδε αὖ δηλοῖ, ἃ ἐστιν ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ προοιμίου· τὸν γὰρ Δηλιακὸν χορὸν τῶν γυναικῶν ὑμνήσας ἐτελεύτα τοῦ ἐπαίνου ἐς τάδε τὰ ἔπη, ἐν οἷς καὶ ἑαυτοῦ ἐπεμνήσθη· ἀλλ' ἄγεθ', ἱλήκοι μὲν Ἀπόλλων Ἀρτέμιδι ξύν, χαίρετε δ' ὑμεῖς πᾶσαι· ἐμεῖο δὲ καὶ μετόπισθε μνήσασθ', ὁππότε κέν τις ἐπιχθονίων ἀνθρώπων ἐνθάδ' ἀνείρηται ταλαπείριος ἄλλος ἐπελθών·

without exception; for although the Cod. Clarend. is said to have γυναιξί τε αἰδοίγσιν, yet that, as I have ascertained, on close inspection of the MS., is nothing more than an altered reading, introduced by the same critic who has emended, or at least altered, above 1000 passages, either from the authority of MSS., or from mere conjecture. The original reading was, I doubt not, that found in the Cod. Venet. γυναιξί τε σὴν ἐς ἀγυιάν. It may be supposed that the critic in question here desired to unite both readings. He had, however, neither the skill to perceive that σὴν ἐς ἀγυιὰν is to be construed with ἠγερέθονται, nor the taste to see the force and beauty of the term ἀγυιάν. By ἀγυιὰν is denoted the principal street of Delos — probably that which led to the temple of Apollo, along which, doubtless, the religious processions were made by the assembled islanders to the temple. So Demosth. p. 530, χορεύειν ἱστάναι, καὶ κνισσᾶν ἀγυιὰς καὶ στεφανηφορεῖν, and Aristoph. Av. 1230, κνισσᾷν ἀγυιάς, where Kuster well explains 'in vicis ante fores ædium Diis sacrificare.' Finally, σὴν ἐς ἀγυιὰν is, I doubt not, nearly equivalent to σὴν ἐς αὐλὴν, meaning the front or vestibule of the temple of Apollo. And I would compare the following passages of Is. i. 12, (Sept.) πατεῖν ('to frequent') τὴν αὐλήν μου οὐ προσθήσεσθε (meaning the great outer court of the temple). Ps. xcvi. 8, (Sept.) ἄρατε θυσίας καὶ εἰσπορεύεσθε εἰς τὰς αὐλάς. After all, however, the common reading and that of the text of the hymn is more poetical and characteristic of Homer, as will appear by the following examples: Il. xxi. 460, σὺν παισὶ καὶ αἰδοίῃς ἀλόχοισι. Od. iii. 381, αὐτῷ καὶ παίδεσσι καὶ αἰδοίῃ παρακοίτι, which latter passage serves to defend the reading here παίδεσσι, as another in Il. iv. 162, σὺν σφῇσι κεφαλῇσι, γυναιξί τε καὶ τεκέεσσιν, does the text of the hymn presented in our author.

The next two lines advert to the observances of the festival, consisting of boxing with the cæstus, dancing, (as in the above passage of Demosthenes,) and singing,— doubtless, hymns to the praise of Apollo. For ἔνθα σε, found in all the MSS., the common reading is οἱ δέ σε, which has place in the present text of the hymn. But ἔνθα σε is surely far more poetical. Indeed the other word is far too prosaic to be received as genuine. In πυγμαχίῃ we have a term appropriate to pugilistic contentions, and which is used both by Homer and Pindar. For ὀρχησυνῖ, found in almost every MS., and which is edited by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, the common reading is ὀρκηθμῷ, which has place also in the text of the hymn itself. Both these two words are employed by Homer. But as ὀρκηστὸς is the less usual term, it is the more likely to be genuine, especially as it occurs in Homer conjoined, as here, with ἀοιδῇ; e. g. Od. xvii. 605, τοὶ δ' ὀρχηστῦϊ καὶ ἀοιδῇ Τέρποντ'. Moreover, highly probable is it that certain critics would stumble at the metre in νῖ, and so alter the word.

In μνησάμενοι we have an elegant term denoting religious celebration, with which compare Is. lxiii. 7, 'I will make mention of (Sept. ἐμνήσθην) the praises of the Lord' (Sept. τὰς ἀρετὰς Κυρίου). The last words, καθέσωσιν ἀγῶνα, advert in a general way to the contest carried on by the boxers and singers: where, for καθέσωσιν, found in all the best MSS., and received by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, the common reading and that which has place in the text of the hymn is στήσωνται, seemingly a gloss on καθ., and certainly a much later Greek phrase.

5. In v. 4 of the second quotation ἄλλος is rightly edited by Bekker, Poppo, and

"ὦ κοῦραι, τίς δ' ὔμμιν ἀνὴρ ἥδιστος ἀοιδῶν ἐνθάδε πωλεῖται, καὶ τέῳ τέρπεσθ' μάλιστα;"
ὑμεῖς δ' εὖ μάλα πᾶσαι ὑποκρίνασθ' εὐφήμως·
"τυφλὸς ἀνήρ,—οἰκεῖ δὲ Χίῳ ἐνὶ παιπαλοέσσῃ."

6. τοσαῦτα μὲν Ὅμηρος ἐτεκμηρίωσεν, ὅτι ἦν καὶ τὸ πάλαι μεγάλη ξύνοδος καὶ ἑορτὴ ἐν τῇ Δήλῳ· ὕστερον δὲ τοὺς μὲν χοροὺς οἱ νησιῶται καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι μεθ' ἱερῶν ἔπεμπον, τὰ δὲ περὶ τοὺς ἀγῶνας καὶ τὰ πλεῖστα κατελύθη ὑπὸ ξυμφορῶν, ὡς εἰκός, πρὶν δὴ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τότε τὸν ἀγῶνα ἐποίησαν, καὶ ἱπποδρομίας, ὃ πρότερον οὐκ ἦν.

CV. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος Ἀμπρακιῶται, ὥσπερ ὑποσχόμενοι Εὐρυλόχῳ, τὴν στρατιὰν κατέσχον, ἐκστρατεύονται ἐπὶ Ἄργος τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν τρισχιλίοις ὁπλίταις· καὶ ἐσβαλόντες ἐς τὴν Ἀργείαν, καταλαμβάνουσιν Ὄλπας, τεῖχος ἐπὶ λόφου ἰσχυρὸν πρὸς τῇ Goeller, from almost every known MS., instead of the common reading ξεῖνος, which would seem to be a gloss, but that ταλαπείριος ξεῖνος is often found in Homer. Yet ἄλλος is still less likely to be a gloss, for it is used in a very unusual sense for ἀλλόφυλος.

For τίς δ' I conjecture the true reading to be τίς γ'; for the δ' seems to have no place here; whereas γ', saltem, is very suitable. With ἐνθάδε πωλεῖται (huc assidue venit, 'is accustomed to come hither') compare Hom. Od. iv. 384, πωλεῖται τις δεῦρο γέρων. For vulg. ἀφήμως, found in the Homeric text, εὐφήμως is with reason edited, from all the best MSS.; no external authority being sufficient to tolerate so manifest an error of the scribes. The idea here required by the context is, as Valcken. observes, not that of silentium, but bona verba et laudes. The sense, then, is 'favourably,' laudatoriè; as in Æsch. Eum. 277, εὐφήμως καλῶ χώρας ἀνασσαν τῆσδε. So Hesych. and Suid. explain εὐφήμει by ἐπαινεῖ, 'celebrates any one's praises.'

6. τοὺς χορούς — μεθ' ἱερῶν ἔπεμπον] 'sent the choral bands of dancers with sacrifices,' meaning victims and all other requisites for the performance of sacrifice. Adopting this interpretation, (originally propounded by myself in my Translation,) Arnold cites, in confirmation of it, a passage of Plut. Nicol. ch. 3, who, speaking of Nicias going to Delos with one of the Athenian θεωρίαι, describes him as τὸν χορὸν ἔχων, καὶ τὰ ἱερεῖα, καὶ τὴν ἄλλην παρασκευήν, where, he observes, the τὰ ἱερεῖα καὶ τὴν ἄλλην παρασκευὴν appear to correspond to the ἱερὰ of our author.

CH. CV. We have now, from ch. cv. to cxiv., a narrative of the expedition of the Ambraciots and Peloponnesians against the Amphilochian Argos.

1. ὥσπερ ὑποσχόμενοι — κατέσχον] An awkwardly-worded sentence, of which the full sense is expressed by Steph., Acac., and Poppo, as follows: 'Eam expeditionem suscipiunt, quam se suscepturos pollicendo ab Eurylocho impetraverant, ut cum suo exercitu supersederet [immo remaneret].'

Ὄλπας] At ch. cx. and cxiii. the place is called Ὄλπην, in the singular: to account for which difference, Kruse conjectures that when Thucydides uses the plural, he means to include the whole, one part of which was occupied by the Acarnanian fort, and another by Metropolis; and that when he uses the singular, he means the fort only. It may rather be supposed that the plural and the singular were both in use, though the plural form was the more ancient form. The name was, I imagine, that which had been given to the hill before the fort was erected; and it is probable that after its erection the fort was called by the name which had been before given to the hill. So at iv. 113, a fort is mentioned called ἡ Λήκυθος. And of these two names, which are highly significant, the latter means an oil-flask; the former, an oil-cruet or oil-vase. So the present name was, I doubt not, given from some fancied resemblance to those objects; the hill of Olpæ bearing a rude resemblance to two oil-flasks set up side by side, and that, we may suppose, from its having two summits. So in Scotland there is a hill called the Paps of Jura.

θαλάσσῃ, ὅ ποτε Ἀκαρνᾶνες τειχισάμενοι, κοινῷ δικαστηρίῳ ἐχρῶντο· ἀπέχει δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀργείων πόλεως, ἐπιθαλασσίας οὔσης, πέντε καὶ εἴκοσι σταδίους μάλιστα. 2. οἱ δὲ Ἀκαρνᾶνες οἱ μὲν ἐς Ἄργος ξυνεβοήθουν, οἱ δὲ τῆς Ἀμφιλοχίας ἐν τούτῳ τῷ χωρίῳ ὃ Κρῆναι καλεῖται, φυλάσσοντες τοὺς μετὰ Εὐρυλόχου Πελοποννησίους, μὴ λάθωσι πρὸς τοὺς Ἀμπρακιώτας διελθόντες, ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο. 3. πέμπουσι δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ Δημοσθένην τὸν ἐς τὴν Αἰτωλίαν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγήσαντα, ὅπως σφίσιν ἡγεμὼν γίγνηται, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς εἴκοσι ναῦς Ἀθηναίων αἳ ἔτυχον περὶ Πελοπόννησον οὖσαι, ὧν ἦρχεν Ἀριστοτέλης τε ὁ Τιμοκράτους καὶ Ἱεροφῶν ὁ Ἀντιμνήστου. 4. ἀπέστειλαν δὲ καὶ ἄγγελον οἱ περὶ τὰς Ὄλπας Ἀμπρακιῶται ἐς τὴν πόλιν, κελεύοντες σφίσι βοηθεῖν πανδημεί, δεδιότες μὴ οἱ μετ' Εὐρυλόχου οὐ δύνωνται διελθεῖν τοὺς Ἀκαρνᾶνας, καὶ σφίσιν ἢ μονωθεῖσιν ἡ μάχη γένηται, ἢ ἀναχωρεῖν βουλομένοις οὐκ ἔτι ἀσφαλές. CVI. Οἱ μὲν οὖν μετ' Εὐρυλόχου Πελοποννήσιοι ὡς ἤσθοντο τοὺς ἐν Ὄλπαις Ἀμπρακιώτας ἥκοντας, ἄραντες ἐκ τοῦ Προσχίου, ἐβοήθουν κατὰ τάχος· καὶ, διαβάντες τὸν Ἀχελῷον,

On the situation of several of the places mentioned in the following narrative, no little diversity of opinion exists. The most successful attempt to fix the situation of the places is that of Col. Leake, in his Northern Greece, vol. iv. 242. In the positions there laid down I entirely accede, except as regards Metropolis, which must, I apprehend, have been much nearer Olpæ, and in a situation towards Argos. I agree with Kruse, Poppo, and Arnold, in thinking that Metropolis was very near to Olpæ, and probably formed part of it; for we may suppose, with Kruse, that when our author speaks of Olpæ in the plural, he means to include the whole hill, one part (or end) of which was occupied by the Acarnanian fort, the other by Metropolis; and that by Olpæ in the singular he means the fort only. I conceive Metropolis to have occupied the Southern peak of the hill now called Maurovuni, as Fort Olpe the Northern. Consequently Metropolis was on the height at the foot of which is situated the present village of Vlika. What was the nature of the place, and why it was so called, is involved in obscurity. That it was not then a town, but merely a stronghold, is plain; and that it never had been a regular town, is very probable. I believe it to have been called Μητρόπολις because it formed, in conjunction with Fort Olpæ, κοινὸν δικαστήριον, a common court-house, used both for holding the national assembly of the Acarnanians,—and as a place both for the administration and the execution of justice: and the situation was chosen for the same reason that, in the middle ages, strong castles were resorted to for the same purpose. Thus by the term κοινὸν it is denoted, that this was common to all the petty republics, of which, as we learn from vi. 106 and elsewhere, Acarnania was composed. It may, indeed, be said, that strange would it seem that a situation should be chosen for this purpose almost out of Acarnania, and remote from almost every part of it. Perhaps the place was selected both from its very convenient position, and still more because it was on the borders of Amphilochia, which there is reason to think then formed, if not a part of Acarnania, at least a territory federally connected with it. Moreover, Acarnania seems originally to have occupied only the northern part of that tract of country which afterwards went by this name, and consequently at that time the fortified hill of Olpæ would be a very convenient spot for a κοινὸν δικαστήριον, i. e. one common both to Acarnania and to Amphilochia. And indeed Steph. Byz. says, Ὄλπαι· φρούριον· κοινὸν Ἀκαρνάνων καὶ Ἀμφιλοχίων δικαστήριον.

CH. CVI. 1. τοὺς ἐν Ὄλπαις Ἀμπρακιώτας ἥκοντας] A condensed form of expression, εἰς Ὄλπας being repeated from ἐν Ὄλπαις, for 'quum Peloponnesii Ambraciotas, qui Olpis erant, eo pervenisse sensissent,' had come thither; that being the force of the preterite. See note on iv. 14, 1.

ἐχώρουν δι' Ἀκαρνανίας, οὔσης ἐρήμου διὰ τὴν ἐς Ἄργος βοήθειαν, ἐν δεξιᾷ μὲν ἔχοντες τὴν Στρατίων πόλιν καὶ τὴν φρουρὰν αὐτῶν, ἐν ἀριστερᾷ δὲ τὴν ἄλλην Ἀκαρνανίαν. 2. καὶ διελθόντες τὴν Στρατίων γῆν, ἐχώρουν διὰ τῆς † Φυτίας, καὶ αὖθις Μεδεῶνος παρ' ἔσχατα, ἔπειτα διὰ Λιμναίας· καὶ ἐπέβησαν τῆς Ἀγραίων, οὐκέτι Ἀκαρνανίας, φιλίας δὲ σφίσι. 3. λαβόμενοι δὲ τοῦ Θυάμου ὄρους, ὅ ἐστιν ἀγροῖκον, ἐχώρουν δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ κατέβησαν ἐς τὴν Ἀργείαν νυκτὸς ἤδη, καὶ διεξελθόντες μεταξὺ τῆς τε Ἀργείων πόλεως καὶ τῆς ἐπὶ Κρήναις Ἀκαρνάνων φυλακῆς ἔλαθον καὶ προσέμιξαν τοῖς ἐν Ὄλπαις Ἀμπρακιώταις. CVII. Γενόμενοι δὲ ἀθρόοι, ἅμα τῇ ἡμέρᾳ καθίζουσιν ἐπὶ τὴν Μητρόπολιν καλουμένην, καὶ στρατόπεδον ἐποιήσαντο. 2. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ ταῖς εἴκοσι ναυσὶν οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον παραγίγνονται ἐς τὸν Ἀμπρακικὸν κόλπον, βοηθοῦντες τοῖς Ἀργείοις, καὶ Δημοσθένης, Μεσσηνίων μὲν ἔχων διακοσίους ὁπλίτας, ἑξήκοντα δὲ τοξότας Ἀθηναίων. 3. καὶ αἱ μὲν νῆες περὶ τὰς Ὄλπας τὸν λόφον ἐκ θαλάσσης ἐφώρμουν· οἱ δὲ Ἀκαρνᾶνες καὶ Ἀμφιλόχων ὀλίγοι, (οἱ γὰρ πλείους ὑπὸ Ἀμπρακιωτῶν βίᾳ κατείχοντο,) ἐς τὸ Ἄργος ἤδη ξυνεληλυθότες παρεσκευάζοντο ὡς μαχούμενοι τοῖς ἐναντίοις· καὶ ἡγεμόνα τοῦ παντὸς ξυμμαχικοῦ αἱροῦνται Δημοσθένη μετὰ τῶν σφετέρων στρατηγῶν. 4. ὁ δὲ, προσαγαγὼν ἐγγὺς τῆς Ὄλπης, ἐστρατοπεδεύσατο· χαράδρα δ' αὐτοὺς μεγάλη διεῖργε. 5. καὶ ἡμέρας μὲν πέντε ἡσύχαζον, τῇ δὲ ἕκτῃ ἐτάσσοντο ἀμφότεροι ὡς ἐς μάχην· καὶ—μεῖζον γὰρ ἐγένετο, καὶ περιέσχε τὸ τῶν Πελοπον-

2. Φυτίας] Though the MSS. here present no variation of reading, there is little doubt that the true reading is Φοιτίας; that being supported by an inscription in Boeckh, vol. ii. p. 1, and Polyb. iv. 63, 7 & 10, where, however, the word has a plural form. I entirely coincide in the opinion of Col. Leake, that the town was on the site of the present Porta, on the crown of a hill; also that Μεδεὼν was at some ruins near the present Katuna; and, again, that Limnæa was at Kervasaur. Of course in each of these cases the territories of those towns are to be understood, especially in the case of Limnæa; for they probably only skirted its eastern boundaries, and then turned off to the right into Agræa, because, as Poppo and Arnold observe, their object was not Argos, but Olpæ.

3. Θυάμου ὄρους] The present Spartonoros; a continuation of Macrinoros, a little to the north. The meaning of the term applied to this mount, ἀγροῖκον, is wild, rough, uncultivated: a sense of the word, as used of things, so rare that I know of no other example. Something similar, however, is found at ii. 98, in διὰ Κερκίνης, ἐρήμου ὄρους.

δι' αὐτοῦ] Meaning, 'through the mountain,' i. e. from one end to the other. Their course would have been through or close by Κρῆναι, but they went away from it to the left, and took the middle course between Crene and Argos, and, no doubt, passed rapidly over the distance to Olpæ, which did not exceed three miles.

CH. CVII. 3. τὸν λόφον] This is added per appositionem, καθ' ἑξήγησιν, to distinguish the hill of Ὄλπαι from the fort of Ὄλπη.

4. χαράδρα] 'a ravine.'

5. περιέσχε] scil. αὐτούς. Not meaning, as Portus and others render, 'was superior to them' (for that sense was expressed by the preceding term μεῖζον ἐγένετο); but 'stretched beyond them,' 'outflanked them,' as at i. 108. v. 71, περιέσχον τῷ κέρᾳ. One of the Scholiasts here rightly explains by ὑπερέτεινε. In a similar passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. ix. 11, p. 1766, ἦν γὰρ ἡ Τ. φάλαγξ—ὑπερπετὴς, I conjecture the true reading to be ὑπερνησίων στρατόπεδον—ὁ δὲ Δημοσθένης δείσας μὴ κυκλωθῇ, λοχίζει ἐς ὀδόν τινα κοίλην καὶ λοχμώδη ὁπλίτας καὶ ψιλούς, ξυναμφοτέρους ἐς τετρακοσίους, ὅπως κατὰ τὸ ὑπερέχον τῶν ἐναντίων ἐν τῇ ξυνόδῳ αὐτῇ ἐξαναστάντες οὗτοι κατὰ νώτου γίγνωνται. 6. ἐπεὶ δὲ παρεσκεύαστο ἀμφοτέροις, ἦεσαν ἐς χεῖρας, Δημοσθένης μὲν τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας ἔχων μετὰ Μεσσηνίων καὶ Ἀθηναίων ὀλίγων· τὸ δὲ ἄλλο Ἀκαρνᾶνες, ὡς ἕκαστοι τεταγμένοι, ἐπεῖχον, καὶ Ἀμφιλόχων οἱ παρόντες ἀκοντισταί· Πελοποννήσιοι δὲ καὶ Ἀμπρακιῶται ἀναμὶξ τεταγμένοι, πλὴν Μαντινέων· οὗτοι δὲ ἐν τῷ εὐωνύμῳ μᾶλλον, καὶ οὐ τὸ κέρας ἄκρον ἔχοντες, ἀθρόοι ἦσαν· ἀλλ' Εὐρύλοχος ἔσχατον εἶχε τὸ εὐώνυμον καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ, κατὰ Μεσσηνίους καὶ Δημοσθένην.

CVIII. Ὡς δ', ἐν χερσὶν ἤδη ὄντες, περιέσχον τῷ κέρᾳ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι, καὶ ἐκυκλοῦντο τὸ δεξιὸν τῶν ἐναντίων, οἱ ἐκ τῆς ἐνέδρας Ἀκαρνᾶνες ἐπιγενόμενοι αὐτοῖς κατὰ νώτου, προσπίπτουσί τε καὶ τρέπουσιν, ὥστε μήτε ἐς ἀλκὴν ὑπομεῖναι, φοβηθέντας τε ἐς φυγὴν καὶ τὸ πλέον τοῦ στρατεύματος καταστῆσαι· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ εἶδον τὸ κατ' Εὐρύλοχον, καὶ ὃ κράτιστον ἦν, διαφθειρόμενον, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἐφοβοῦντο. 2. καὶ οἱ Μεσσήνιοι ὄντες ταύτῃ μετὰ τοῦ Δημοσθένους τὸ πολὺ τοῦ ἔργου ἐξῆλθον. 3. οἱ δὲ Ἀμπρακιῶται καὶ οἱ κατὰ τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας ἐνίκων τὸ καθ' ἑαυτούς, καὶ πρὸς τὸ Ἄργος ἀπεδίωξαν· καὶ γὰρ μαχιμώτατοι τῶν περὶ ἐκεῖνα τὰ χωρία τυγχάνουσιν τενής. So Polyæn. iii. 1, 2, where this very manœuvre is recorded, we have the term ὑπερφαλαγγίζειν.

λοχμώδη] 'overgrown with bushes and underwood.' Imitated from this is the expression of Dio Cass. 13, ἐν κοίλῳ τινὶ καὶ λοχμώδει τόπῳ, & 1279, 17; and Polyæn. iii. 1, 2. By τὸ ὑπερέχον understand 'that part in which the enemy was superior to and outflanked their line.' Of ἐν τῇ ξυνόδῳ αὐτῇ the sense is, 'at the very instant of the conflict commencing;' a sense which ξύνοδος also bears at v. 70. Ἐξαναστάντες, 'having started forth from ambush;' a customary term, of which examples are found in Polyb. v. 95, 9. viii. 16, 7. x. 31, 4. Xen. Hist. iv. 8, 37. In κατὰ νώτου γίγνωνται we have another military phrase frequently used by the historians in the sense 'to take a line in the rear.'

6. ὡς ἕκαστοι τεταγμένοι] i. e. 'ranged in separate corps,' each tribe, or town, by itself, in contradistinction to ἀναμὶξ, just after. Ἐπεῖχον. The word has this same sense at i. 48, and also in Hdot. ix. 31, signifying 'to occupy a place in a line of battle.'

Πελοποννήσιοι δὲ καὶ Ἀμπρακ. ἀναμὶξ τετ.] The Ambraciots were not unfit to be ranged with the Peloponnesians, since they were armed in the same manner, and were accounted the best troops in that part of the continent.

CH. CVIII. 2. For οἱ Μεσσήνιοι ὄντες I would read, with Dobree, οἱ M. οἱ ὄντες. Ἐξῆλθον, for ἐπεξ. (which word, indeed, has place in the common text, but is evidently a gloss,) accomplished, as at i. 70.

3. πρὸς τὸ Ἄργος ἀπεδίωξαν] 'chased them from or off the field to Argos;' a spirited expression, which occurs, in a more complete form, in Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 11, (Thiem.) τοὺς μὲν τρεψάμενος ἀπεδίωξε: and so at iv. 5, 15, in some MSS., as also Dio Cass., 344, Σκιπίωνα ἀπὸ τοῦ μετεώρου ἀπεδίωξε. Hdian. vii. 11, 17, and another passage of our author, vi. 102. The import of the expression is propiere, 'to push off from the field,' and drive before them, as it were, at the point of the lance. So in Aristoph. Nub. 1296, we have οὐκ ἀποδιώξεις σαυτὸν ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας; Φέρε μοι τὸ κέντρον, where, though the πρὸς might seem to require rather ἐπιδ., instead of ἀποδ., no alteration, however, is necessary.

ὄντες. 4. ἐπαναχωροῦντες δὲ, ὡς ἐώρων τὸ πλέον νενικημένον, καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι Ἀκαρνᾶνες σφίσι προσέκειντο, χαλεπῶς διεσώζοντο ἐς τὰς Ὄλπας· καὶ πολλοὶ ἀπέθανον αὐτῶν, ἀτάκτως καὶ οὐδενὶ κόσμῳ † προσπίπτοντες, πλὴν Μαντινέων· οὗτοι δὲ μάλιστα ξυντεταγμένοι παντὸς τοῦ στρατοῦ ἀνεχώρησαν. καὶ ἡ μὲν μάχη ἐτελεύτα ‡ ἐς ὀψέ.

CIX. Μενεδαῖος δὲ τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ, Εὐρυλόχου τεθνεῶτος, καὶ Μακαρίου, αὐτὸς παρειληφὼς τὴν ἀρχὴν, καὶ ἀπορῶν, μεγάλης ἥσσης γεγενημένης, ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἢ μένων πολιορκήσεται, ἔκ τε γῆς καὶ ἐκ θαλάσσης ταῖς Ἀττικαῖς ναυσὶν, ἀποκεκλημένος, ἢ καὶ ἀναχωρῶν διασωθήσεται, προσφέρει λόγον περὶ σπονδῶν καὶ ἀναχωρήσεως Δημοσθένει καὶ τοῖς Ἀκαρνάνων στρατηγοῖς, καὶ περὶ νεκρῶν ἅμα ἀναιρέσεως. 2. οἱ δὲ νεκροὺς μὲν ἀπέδοσαν, καὶ τροπαῖον αὐτοὶ ἔστησαν, καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν, τριακοσίους μάλιστα, ἀποθανόντας ἀνείλοντο· ἀναχώρησιν δὲ ἐκ μὲν τοῦ προφανοῦς οὐκ ἐσπείσαντο ἅπασι, κρύφα δὲ Δημοσθένης μετὰ τῶν ξυστρατηγῶν Ἀκαρνάνων σπένδονται Μαντινεῦσι, καὶ Μενεδαίῳ καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἄρχουσι τῶν Πελοποννησίων, καὶ ὅσοι αὐτῶν ἦσαν ἀξιολογώτατοι, ἀποχωρεῖν κατὰ τάχος, βουλόμενος ψιλῶσαι τοὺς Ἀμπρακιώτας τε καὶ τὸν μισθοφό- προσπίπτοντες] Not 'rushing on the enemy,' but rather 'rushing or hurrying on,' namely, towards their camp; though I suspect that our author wrote προπίπτοντες, 'irruentes,' in which sense the term is of frequent occurrence in Polyb. and other writers; e. gr. Diod. Sic. ix. 201, προέπιπτον εἰς κίνδυνον, 'rushed headlong into danger.' Marc. Ant. i. 17, προέπεσον πλημμελῆσαι.

4. τὰς Ὄλπας] Meaning the hill so called, (see ch. 107, 1.) namely, that end of it which lay the nearest to them, and where they had at first taken post.

ἐτελεύτα ἐς ὀψέ] Several MSS. have ἕως ὀψέ, which has been adopted by Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold, who, following Lobeck on Phryn. p. 47, explain it as a condensed form of expression for παρέτεινε ἕως ὀψὲ, καὶ ὀψὲ ἐτελεύτα. I have thought proper, with Duk., Poppo, and Dobree, to retain the common reading, from its being more Thucydidean; since of ἐς ὀψὲ we have another example infra viii. 23; and the verb with which it is associated is one very often joined with ἐς: e. gr. supra i. 51, ἡ ναυμαχία ἐτελεύτα ἐς νύκτα. iii. 78. It may be observed, too, that ἕως would suggest the idea of a longer continuance to the battle than facts warrant.

CH. CIX. 1. πολιορκήσεται] 'he shall stand a siege,' i. e bear being besieged, as supra ch. 52.

προσφέρει λόγον] lit. 'proffers a parley,' or conference; namely, as to terms of yielding. For λόγον, two good MSS. have λόγους: and such is found supra ii. 70, λόγους προσφέρουσι περὶ ξυμβάσεως: and in Herodot. v. 40. But the singular, in the sense 'a parley,' is equally proper, and has place in the similar phrase, διδόναι λόγον, and δέξασθαι τὸν λόγον at iv. 16, 1.

2. Join τοὺς ἑαυτῶν with ἀποθανόντας, by which the sense will be, 'those of our people who were dead.' Or we may at τοὺς ἑαυτῶν repeat νεκρούς, (as in another passage of our author, which I have noticed, though not able to distinctly specify it,) in which case ἀποθ. may be regarded as qualifying τριακ., q. d. 300 dead, without including the wounded. Οὐκ ἐσπείσαντο, 'did not grant under treaty;' or it may mean, as at iii. 24, 'to make a treaty for.'

βουλόμενος] This is put in the singular, (though the construction would rather require the plural, as before,) because in effect, as Goeller remarks, our author here had in mind Demosthenes alone. Ψιλῶσαι· for μονῶσαι, ψιλοὺς τῶν συμμάχων ποιῆσαι, as in Xen. Cyr. iv. 5, 6, ἔπεμπεν ἐπὶ τοὺς Μήδους, ὡς ψιλώσων αὐτόν. Hdot.

ρον ὄχλον τὸν ξενικόν, μάλιστα δὲ Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ Πελοποννησίους διαβαλεῖν ἐς τοὺς ἐκείνῃ χρήζων Ἕλληνας, ὡς, καταπροδόντες, τὸ ἑαυτῶν προὐργιαίτερον ἐποιήσαντο. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν τούς τε νεκροὺς ἀνείλοντο καὶ διὰ τάχους ἔθαπτον, ὥσπερ ὑπῆρχε, καὶ τὴν ἀποχώρησιν κρύφα, οἷς ἐδέδοτο, ἐπεβούλευον. CX. Τῷ δὲ Δημοσθένει καὶ τοῖς Ἀκαρνᾶσιν ἀγγέλλεται τοὺς Ἀμπρακιώτας τοὺς ἐκ τῆς πόλεως πανδημεὶ κατὰ τὴν πρώτην ἐκ τῶν Ὀλπῶν ἀγγελίαν ἐπιβοηθεῖν διὰ τῶν Ἀμφιλόχων, βουλομένους τοῖς ἐν Ὀλπαις ξυμμῖξαι, εἰδότας οὐδὲν τῶν γεγενημένων. 2. καὶ πέμπει εὐθὺς τοῦ στρατοῦ μέρος τι τὰς ὁδοὺς προλοχιοῦντας, καὶ τὰ καρτερὰ προκαταληψομένους· καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ στρατιᾷ ἅμα παρεσκευάζετο βοηθεῖν ἐπ' αὐτούς. CXI. Ἐν τούτῳ δ' οἱ Μαντινῆς, καὶ οἷς ἔσπειστο, πρόφασιν ἐπὶ λαχανισμὸν καὶ φρυγάνων ξυλλογὴν ἐξελθόντες, ii. 151, ψιλώσαντας τὰ πλεῖστα τῆς δυνάμιος. The term signifies lit. 'to lay bare,' by a metaphor taken from laying a tree bare by stripping off its branches, and exposing it to the storm. Corresponding to the present is the term at iii. 11, 4, τοῦ ἄλλου περιῳρημένου. So in Latin nudare bears the sense of nudare præsidio. From the very force of the term ψιλ. it is apparent that the agreement made with the principal persons of the Peloponnesians was meant to apply to the troops at large.

τὸν μισθοφόρον ὄχλον] This, for vulg. μισθοφόρων ὄχλον, is very properly introduced by the later editors, on strong evidence, both external and internal; for it may well be supposed that the other reading merely proceeded from certain critics, who did not bear in mind the adjectival use of μισθοφόρος, though the word is (as I have shown in note, Translation) far from rare in the best Attic writers. So in Xen. Hist. vi. 1, 4, we have μισθοφόρους ἔχω ξένους. Who are the persons here meant by foreign mercenaries is by no means clear; for of the 3000 brought by Eurylochus, 2500 were from the Lacedæmonian allies, and the other 500 from Heraclea; and thus there could be no foreigners among them. These must, therefore, have been certain Epirots whom the Ambraciots enlisted. That the Epirots were accustomed to hire themselves out in war, in much the same way as the Arcadians, we have had several proofs. In this view (I find) Poppo coincides, observing that, although these mercenaries are not mentioned at ch. 105, yet they must be meant at ch. 111, where, after the Peloponnesians had gone off under treaty, there is mention made, besides the Ambraciots, of οἱ ἄλλοι ὅσοι ἐτύγχανον ξυνελθόντες.

διαβαλεῖν ἐς τοὺς ἐκείνῃ χρήζων Ἕλλ.] Meaning, 'to bring into discredit and censure with the Greeks;' a phrase occurring infra viii. 83 & 109, and in Diog. Laërt. i. 37, μηδὲ διαβαλλέτω σε λόγος πρὸς τοὺς πίστεως κεκοινωνηκότας, 'let not report set thee against those to whom thou hast committed thy faith,' namely, by reposing to them thy secrets. Of καταπροδιδόντες the sense is, 'by betraying them.'

τὸ ἑαυτῶν προὐργιαίτερον ἐποιήσαντο] 'they made their own interest a matter of greater moment' than theirs; an elegant form of expression, of which examples are found in several passages of Polyb., Jos., Isæus, and Procop.

3. ὥσπερ ὑπῆρχε] 'as [well as] circumstances would permit.'

CH. CXI. 1. καὶ οἷς ἔσπειστο] 'and those with whom the covenant had been made.' At πρόφασιν I was formerly of opinion, with Matth. Gr. § 425, 5, that there is an ellipsis of κατὰ, but I am now induced to coincide in the view of Poppo, that there is no such ellipsis, and that the word κατὰ, though it might have been used, (as in several passages of Herodot. which I have adduced in my Translation,) may, however, very well be dispensed with, on the supposition that, as Poppo points out, the accus. is here employed adverbially, the reason of which use Matthiæ supposes to be, that, as in the several cases indicated by him, the accus. not unfrequently contains a definition which is usually expressed by an adverb, or a noun in the dative, an occasion was thus given for the use of the accus. as an adverb. Yet it may be questioned whether in such a case as the present, (and that at v. 80, 3, ἀγῶνά τινα πρόφασιν ποίησας,) the principle of apposition for explanation sake should not be chiefly adverted to.

ὑπαπήεσαν κατ' ὀλίγους, ἅμα ξυλλέγοντες ἐφ' ἃ ἐξῆλθον δῆθεν· προκεχωρηκότες δὲ ἤδη ἄποθεν τῆς Ὀλπης θᾶσσον ἀπεχώρουν. 2. οἱ δ' Ἀμπρακιῶται καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι, ὅσοι μὲν ἐτύγχανον οὕτως ἀθρόοι †ξυνελθόντες, ὡς ἔγνωσαν ἀπιόντας, ὥρμησαν καὶ αὐτοί, καὶ ἔθεον δρόμῳ, ἐπικαταλαβεῖν βουλόμενοι. 3. οἱ δὲ Ἀκαρνᾶνες τὸ μὲν πρῶτον καὶ πάντας ἐνόμισαν ἀπιέναι ἀσπόνδους ὁμοίως, καὶ τοὺς Πελοποννησίους ἐπεδίωκον· καί τινας αὐτῶν τῶν στρατηγῶν κωλύοντας, καὶ φάσκοντας ἐσπεῖσθαι αὐτοῖς, ἠκόντισέ τις, νομίσας καταἐπὶ λαχανισμὸν καὶ φρ. ξυλλ.] 'for the gathering of herbs and collecting of fuel.' So Jos. 1199, 39, ὅσοι λαχανείας ἕνεκα ἢ φρυγανισμοῦ προεληλύθεισαν. Pollux i. 162, ἐξῆλθον ἐπὶ λαχανισμόν, ἐπὶ φρυγανισμόν (of which latter term φρυγανισμὸς an example occurs in our author, infra vii. 4). By φρύγανα is denoted what we call brushwood for fuel; and so in Polyæn. iv. 18, 1, we have φρυγάνων φορτία. These λάχανα were doubtless what we read of in Aristoph. Thesm. 456, ἐν ἀγριοῖσι τοῖς (I conj. τοι) λαχάνοις αὐτὸς τραφείς. Gell, in his Morea, p. 191, calls these λάχανα the wild cabbage, and says they are yet used in Greece; and Col. Leake, North. Greece, vol. iv. p. 248, says that the custom of collecting φρύγανα and ἄγρια λάχανα, as well as the use of the words themselves, has continued among the Greeks to this day. It is, he adds, a common employment of the women in the spring and early summer to gather those edible herbs, which there abound in all the uncultivated grounds; and the fact mentioned by our author is exemplified in almost every halt of a body of Greek soldiers, who are to be seen dispersed about the halting-place, employed in foraging for their supper.

2. οἱ ἄλλοι] Meaning the mercenaries of whom mention was made at ch. 109. Of the next words, ὅσοι μὲν ἐτύγχανον οὕτως ἀθρόοι ξυνελθόντες, the sense is, 'as many as happened to have, in this manner, accompanied them in any numbers.' It is said in any numbers, because small parties could not venture forth. Of οὕτως the sense may very well be 'for this purpose,' namely, ἐπὶ λαχανισμὸν καὶ φρυγάνων ξυλλογήν. The word has occasionally much sense implied, which is thus left to be understood from the context; and such is its use in a passage of St. John iv. 6, ἦν δὲ πηγὴ τοῦ Ἰακώβ. Ὁ οὖν Ἰησοῦς κεκοπιακὼς ἐκ τῆς ὁδοιπορίας ἐκαθέζετο οὕτως ἐπὶ τῇ πηγῇ, where the sense may be supposed to be, 'so, in such a manner as a person so circumstanced would.' The only real difficulty here existing is that connected with the term ξυνελθόντες, of which, notwithstanding that Poppo denies it can bear this sense, not impossible is it that the meaning may be, 'had gone forth or out with them;' for surely the sense gone with them may, in such a context as the present, convey, by implication, that of 'gone forth with them.' Supposing, however, that ξυνέρχεσθαι cannot bear the sense 'to go with, or accompany, any one,' (and I am not enabled to prove that it does,) then it will be necessary to read, from certain MSS., ξυνεξελθόντες, which is probably the true reading, especially considering the not unfrequent circumstance, elsewhere observable, of a second preposition being lost after the first. Of ξυνεξέρχεσθαι and ξυνέξειμι examples in abundance occur. Finally, strong confirmation to the above reading may be derived from another passage further on, ch. 113, 1, ὅτε μετὰ τῶν Μαντινέων καὶ ὑποσπόνδων ξυνεξῄεσαν ἄσπονδοι.

ἔθεον δρόμῳ] Of this phrase examples occur also at v. 10. iv. 67. Xen. Anab. i. 8, 18. iv. 6, 25. And so χωρεῖν δρόμῳ at v. 3, and δρόμῳ ἰέναι at Herodot. vi. 112; cursu iri, in Liv. ii. 30. Poppo, on a passage further on, iv. 67, compares φεύγειν φυγῇ and the Latin curriculo currere; but those phrases are surely of a different kind. Of the phrases in question the sense is 'to go or run at full speed,' lit. as in a race. So 1 Cor. ix. 24, ἐν σταδίῳ τρέχοντες. In ἐπικαταλαβεῖν, 'to come up,' 'overtake them,' we have a somewhat rare term, though examples of it are found in Plato, p. 39. Jos. Ant. xviii. 9, 5. Pol. i. 66, 4.

3. ἠκόντισέ τις] The τις here answers to our some one, as used of repeated action, implying a plurality of persons; which circumstance is here implied in the force of the aorist ἠκόντισε, as used of custom, or repeated action. Render, 'and some προδίδοσθαι σφᾶς· ἔπειτα μέντοι τοὺς μὲν Μαντινέας καὶ τοὺς Πελοποννησίους ἀφίεσαν, τοὺς δ' Ἀμπρακιώτας ἔκτεινον. 4. καὶ ἦν πολλὴ ἔρις καὶ ἄγνοια εἴτε Ἀμπρακιώτης τίς ἐστιν εἴτε Πελοποννήσιος. 5. καὶ ἐς διακοσίους μέν τινας αὐτῶν ἀπέκτειναν· οἱ δ' ἄλλοι διέφυγον ἐς τὴν Ἀγραΐδα, ὅμορον οὖσαν· καὶ Σαλύνθιος αὐτούς, ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἀγραίων, φίλος ὢν ὑπεδέξατο. CXII. Οἱ δ' ἐκ τῆς πόλεως Ἀμπρακιῶται ἀφικνοῦνται ἐπ' Ἰδομένην. ἐστὸν δὲ δύο λόφω ἡ Ἰδομένη ὑψηλώ· τούτοιν τὸν μὲν μείζω, νυκτὸς one would shoot at them.' Such is the force of the aorist in Herodot. ix. 18, 3, καὶ δὴ διετείνοντο τὰ βέλεα ὡς ἀπήσοντες· καί κού τις καὶ ἀπῆκε, 'and there were cases when some would even let fly.' Goeller aptly embraces the Homeric ὧδε δέ τις εἶπεσκεν, (occurring in Il. ii. 271.) where the force of the τις is imparted by that of the Ionic iterative form σκω from the imperf. and aorists, and denoting the repetition of an action. As to the passage of Xen. An. i. 8, 20, cited by Arnold, where we have τοξευθῆναί τις ἐλέγετο, it may be doubted whether the above use really has place; and as to the other adduced by him from Herodot. iii. 140, ἀναβέβηκε δ' ἤ τις ἢ οὐδείς, that is any thing but to the purpose; the form there, ἤ τις ἢ οὐδείς, being, as Matth. observes, negative, though with the expression of doubt; as we should say, next to none.

5. διακοσίους τινάς] 'some 200.' Diod. says, with his usual inattention to accuracy, σχέδον πάντας. The reason why not more than about 200 fell, was that, having been colonists of Corinth, and hence resembling the Peloponnesians in arms and armour, customs and language, it was difficult for the enemy to distinguish one from the other; indeed the foregoing words were chiefly meant to suggest the reason why no more were slain.

Ἀγραΐδα, ὅμορον οὖσαν] i. e. bordering on Amphilochia. On Agræa and the Agræi, see Steph. Byz., Polyb. xvii. 5, 8, and Schweigh. on Liv. xxxii. 34; also Pop. Proleg. i. p. 148. Though indeed the exact situation and limits of Agræa are best traced by Col. Leake, in his North. Gr. vol. iv. p. 252, as follows: 'The country of the Agræi appears to have been separated from the district of Limnæa, in Acarnania, by Spartovúni, and further inland from the Medionia by a continuation of the same ridge, thus comprehending the vale of the Kekhriniátza, up to the ruined fortress of that name, which was probably on the frontier of the Agrais and Stratice. The Agræi comprehended therefore the modern villages of Varetádha, Serdhinianá, and Ariádha, and separating the Aperanti from the Amphilochi, touched the southern borders of the Oreitæ, and the north-western frontier of Ætolia. At Kerókambo and Cape Kastriótissa they extended to the shore of the gulf.' The learned writer just quoted endeavours to fix the position of the chief town of Agræa, namely, at Serdhinianá; but the Hellenic ruins seem to be of a later period. Very probable is it that Agræa at that time was inhabited merely in villages, with no town, since nearly 250 years after the Agræi are spoken of in Polyb. xvii. 5, 8, as utter barbarians: τὸ γὰρ Ἀγραῶν ἔθνος—οὐκ ἔστιν Ἑλλάς.

CH. CXII. 1. ἐστὸν δὲ δύο λόφω ἡ Ἰδομένη ὑψηλώ] On this Ἰδομένη much obscurity exists. In my Translation I have observed, that, from there being but one name, and that in the singular, to the two hills, it would seem that they formed only one hill, though with two tops, like Parnassus, and also Mount Sinai. This view, I find, has been adopted by Dr. Arnold, who regards Idomene as consisting of two high points (rather peaks) called by a common name, and probably seen together. Col. Leake, however, in his North. Gr. vol. iv. p. 250, speaks more definitely on the matter in question. He justly, I think, regards Ἰδομένη as the name of the mountain now called Macrinoros, (see the accompanying plan, formed on Col. Leake's,) of which the abrupt termination at the head of the Ambracian Gulf, in the great line of communication between the northern and southern provinces of Western Greece, causes the pass to be one of the most important in the whole country. The whole mountain was called Ἰδομένη, doubtless from its being so distinctly seen from the sea, above all the rest of the country; the name being derived from ἰδέσθαι—ἰδόμενος, seen; on which rare passive form of the aorist, see Dorville on Charit. p. 534. 4th edit. Thus, too, the name Ἴδη, given to a high mountain in Troia, and also in Crete, was formed from the verb ἰδεῖν, to see. The plural form, found in ch. 113, Ἰδομέναι, may be accounted for on the same principle as in Ὄλπη and Ὄλπαι, namely, by supposing, as Col. Leake seems to do, the two ends of this Macrinoros, or Long Mountain, to form each an ἰδομένη, whence the whole mountain came to be called Ἰδομέναι. Of these the northern was the Idomene Minor, the southern the Idomene Major (μείζων), doubtless from the comparative difference in size of the peaks. The former, Col. Leake thinks, was the position which the Ambraciots occupied when they were attacked and defeated (being the present Menidhi); the latter, that occupied by Demosthenes (just above Kataforno); a position, he shows, extremely well chosen, as being a post which protected the advance, and secured the retreat—in case of ill success—as well of the portion of his forces which went along the western side of Macrinoros, as of that which marched through the mountains on the right of that route, and whose course would probably be along a deep gorge between the eastern face of Macrinoros and the opposite mountain ridge, through which runs a rivulet down to the sea at Arapi.

ἐπιγενομένης, οἱ προαποσταλέντες ὑπὸ τοῦ Δημοσθένους ἀπὸ τοῦ στρατοπέδου ἔλαθόν τε καὶ ἔφθασαν προκαταλαβόντες· τὸν δ' ἐλάσσω ἔτυχον οἱ Ἀμπρακιῶται προαναβάντες, καὶ ηὐλίσαντο. 2. ὁ δὲ Δημοσθένης δειπνήσας ἐχώρει, καὶ τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα ἀπὸ ἑσπέρας εὐθύς, αὐτὸς μὲν τὸ ἥμισυ ἔχων ἐπὶ τῆς ἐσβολῆς, τὸ

2. δειπνήσας ἐχώρει] This period, as compared with that of ἀπὸ ἑσπέρας εὐθύς, would seem to be a little later. The division which had to take its course by the mountains, would have a more circuitous route, with a much worse road, and would consequently require more time. The point which Demosthenes sought to reach in this able manœuvre was, our historian says, ἐπὶ τῆς ἐσβολῆς, without any further addition; but from the foregoing context it is plain that he means by this the pass leading to the position occupied by the Ambracian forces, recently arrived, on the Idomene Minor. Though by the term ἐσβολή may be denoted a narrow way, either between two mountains, or up from a plain into a mountain, or vice versâ — either between two mountains, (as that spoken of in Herodot. vii. 172 and 173, where τὴν ἐσβολὴν τὴν Ὀλυμπικήν, the pass of Mount Olympus, at 172, is explained, at 173, to mean the pass between Mount Olympus and Mount Ossa,)—or, from a mountain into a plain (so Hdot. ii. 75, ἐσβολὴ ἐξ οὐρέων στεινεῶν ἐς τὸ πεδίον)—or, again, from a plain into a mountain; which must imply the reverse (so the Somo-Sierra in Spain);—also a pass across a mountain, as the pass of St. Gothard, and others, over the Alps; the pass from Cilicia into Syria, called the Pylæ Syriacæ;—also a narrow pass between a mountain and the sea, such as the pass of the Thermopylæ. What kind of a pass the one here spoken of is, we are not informed; but it seems to have been one not much differing from that in Thermopylæ, (which is the great medium of communication between the northern and southern provinces of Eastern Greece, as that is of Western,) and may be supposed to have consisted of a narrow tract at the foot of the western face of Macrinoros. See the annexed plan by Col. Leake. The termination of the ἐσβολή was, I conceive, at the upper end of Macrinoros, separated from Idomene by only a short distance; and consisting of a hollow across the mountain ridge. Of course Demosthenes could not know that the Ambraciots were at Idomene Minor; but he was well aware that they soon would be, and that their course must be by the pass, which accordingly he went forward with all haste to secure; while he sent the other half of his forces by a hill-road through the Amphilochian mountains, so as to come round to the opposite gorge of the pass, as compared with that by which he entered. The Ambraciots must have arrived in the evening of the day on which Demosthenes and his troops set out after supper; for had they arrived on the preceding evening, they would have secured the pass, and gone by it the next morning to the place of their destination. On reaching the pass, Demosthenes found, by his scouts, that the Ambraciots were already arrived, and encamped for the night on the adjacent hill, Idomene Minor, at a fortified post, of which the ruins yet remain, now called Palæopyrgo.

δ' ἄλλο διὰ τῶν Ἀμφιλοχικῶν ὁρῶν. 3. καὶ ἅμα ὄρθρῳ ἐπιπίπτει τοῖς Ἀμπρακιώταις ἔτι ἐν ταῖς εὐναῖς, καὶ οὐ προησθημένοις τὰ γεγενημένα, ἀλλὰ πολὺ μᾶλλον νομίσασι τοὺς ἑαυτῶν εἶναι. 4. καὶ γὰρ τοὺς Μεσσηνίους πρώτους ἐπίτηδες ὁ Δημοσθένης προὔταξε, καὶ προσαγορεύειν ‡ ἐκέλευε, Δωρίδα τε γλῶσσαν ἱέντας, καὶ τοῖς

3. ἅμα ὄρθρῳ] So in Hdot. vii. 188, ἅμα τῷ ὄρθρῳ. The period is just after described as one ἔτι νυκτός: and so iv. 110, νυκτὸς ἔτι καὶ περὶ ὄρθρον: and ii. 3, φυλάξαντες ἔτι νύκτα καὶ αὐτὸ τὸ περίορθρον. From which it plainly appears that ὄρθρος (as derived from ὄρω, to rise or arise) means that period when the daylight is beginning to arise or dawn forth, (see Job xxv. 5, and Ps. cxii. 4,) though it is as yet too dark to see to do any of the work of the day. As to the expressions, περὶ βαθὺν ὄρθρον, occurring in Plato, ὄρθρος βαθὺς in Aristoph. Vesp. 216, and Plato, p. 43, ὄρθρου βαθέος in a passage of St. Luke xxiv. 1, and ἔτι βαθέος ὄρθρου in Plato, p. 310, I cannot agree with Lennep (or rather Hemsterh. on Lennep Etym.) that it denotes the first of the sun's shining, βαθὺς being supposed here to bear the not unfrequent sense copiosus. I rather apprehend that βαθὺς in this use denotes, like our word deep, as applied to colours, dark-coloured; and that hence the proper import of the expression is that earliest period of the ὄρθ. which we call grey dawn; on which sense see Dorville on Chariton, p. 231. In this view, I find, I am supported by the opinion of the very erudite Valcken. Schol. on N. Test. i. 276, whose words are these: 'Sunt utique diversa ὄρθρος et ὄρθρος βαθύς. Primum tempus notat, quod solis ortum antecedit, τὴν πρὸ ἀνατολῆς ἡλίου ὥραν, ut interpretatur Ammonius. Hoc sensu sumitur in Platonis l. xii. de Legg. p. 951, D. Sed ὄρθρος βαθὺς notat ultimam partem noctis. Ita apud Heraclitum in Allegor. Hom. p. 492, fin. πρὸς βαθὺν ὄρθρον ἀπύροις ἡλίου ἀκτῖσιν ἀνιόντος, "primo diluculo sole necdum radios ignitos emittente." Ad illud usque tempus ludere Theocritus dixit παίσδειν ἐς βαθὺν ὄρθρον, Carm. xviii. 14.' So in the Vision of Pierce Ploughman, fol. 103, p. 2, it is said, 'Tyll the day dawn'd these damsels daunced.' But the fullest and most exact account of this matter is furnished by H. Steph. Thes. p. 6925, A. where, after explaining βαθὺς ὄρθρος to mean 'summo mane antequam diluxisset,' he adds, 'Dividitur enim crepusculum matutinum in multas partes: et ὄρθρον proprie vocant primum diluculi punctum; unde gallus dicitur ὀρθροβόας, quod lucem prænuntiet primo statim diluculo. Huic succedit τὸ λυκαυγές, cum dubia jam lux est: quam excipit aurora. Totum autem crepusculum matutinum vocatur δείλη πρωΐα, et interdum etiam ὄρθρος: quamobrem ut prima diluculi pars apertius declaretur, additur βαθέος; pro quo dicitur et πρωΐ λίαν.' This, it may be observed, is further confirmed by the words of Plato, p. 951, ἀπ' ὄρθρου μέχρι περ ἂν ἥλιος ἀνίσχῃ. Hence ὄρθρος βαθὺς answers to our grey dawn; ὄρθρος, to our peep of day; and λυκαυγές, to our twilight; and accordingly the expression used in a passage of St. Luke, ὄρθρου βαθέος, is very reconcilable with that employed in St. Mark xvi. 2, πρωΐ λίαν, and that of St. John xxi. 1, σκοτίας ἔτι οὔσης.

4. προὔταξε καὶ προσαγορεύειν ἐκέλευε] This passage is, by Poppo on i. 119, adduced in exemplification of the use of the imperf. put for an aorist; for other instances of which use he refers to i. 72 and 79, observing that the idiom in question is one almost confined to verbs of speaking, commanding, and exhorting. Upon the whole, his purpose is to assert (as he had before done in Proleg. i. 155, 275, and Matthiæ in his Gr. Gr. § 605.) that in this case the tenses are used indifferently: whereas Dr. Arnold is of opinion that there is a difference; the aorist simply stating the fact, the imperf. converting it into a picture, and representing it as still going on, and not become wholly past. This view, however, may be considered rather ingenious than solid or satisfactory, magis argutè quam verè dictum. In cases like the present, where the two tenses are so nearly the same to the eye as to differ only by a letter, and even that rendered almost imperceptible, by the use of abbreviation, it is almost impossible to fix the reading. Accordingly, far more likely is it that the aorist should be mistaken for the imperf. than vice versâ. Hence in these cases the MSS. constantly vary, fluctuating between one and the other. See i. 138. iv. 114. vii. 65. viii. 31. Under these circumstances the general excellence of MSS. is of no great weight, and internal evidence προφύλαξι πίστιν παρεχομένους, ἅμα δὲ καὶ οὐ καθορωμένους τῇ ὄψει, νυκτὸς ἔτι οὔσης. 5. ὡς οὖν ἐπέπεσε τῷ στρατεύματι αὐτῶν, τρέπουσι· καὶ τοὺς μὲν πολλοὺς αὐτοῦ διέφθειραν, οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ κατὰ τὰ ὄρη ἐς φυγὴν ὥρμησαν. 6. προκατειλημμένων δὲ τῶν ὁδῶν, καὶ ἅμα τῶν μὲν Ἀμφιλόχων ἐμπείρων ὄντων τῆς ἑαυτῶν γῆς καὶ ψιλῶν πρὸς ὁπλίτας, τῶν δὲ ἀπείρων καὶ ἀνεπιστημόνων ὅπη τράπωνται, ἐσπίπτοντες ἔς τε χαράδρας καὶ τὰς προλελοχισμένας ἐνέδρας, διεφθείροντο. 7. καὶ ἐς πᾶσαν ἰδέαν χωρήσαντες τῆς φυγῆς, ἐτράποντό τινες καὶ ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν, οὐ πολὺ ἀπέχουσαν· καὶ ὡς εἶδον τὰς Ἀττικὰς ναῦς παραπλεούσας ἅμα τοῦ ἔργου τῇ ξυντυχίᾳ, προσένευσαν, ἡγησάμενοι ἐν τῷ αὐτίκα φόβῳ κρεῖσσον must alone decide there where otherwise it were impossible to arrive at any certain determination; though that is necessarily somewhat precarious. Still less safe is it to attempt to decide the question by some such fanciful theory as this of Dr. Arnold's. When the reading in this case has been once fixed, we have to consider what difference the writer might intend to make between the two tenses; always, however, bearing in mind the negligence which occasionally prevails even in the best writers, in matters of far greater certainty than the distinction between the tenses in question.

Δωρίδα γλῶσσαν ἱέντας] 'addressing them in the Doric tongue, or dialect:' of which use of ἱέναι (almost unnoticed by commentators and philologists) I have observed not a few instances both in the ancient writers, and in those who took them for their model. I say ancient; for such is found in Hom. Il. iii. 221, ὅπα—ἐκ στήθεος ἵει. Hesiod, Theog. 10, 43, 65, and 830, ὅσσαν ἱεῖσαι. Æschyl. Choëph. 559, φωνὴν ἥσομεν, and Pers. 641. Eurip. Hec. 338, φθογγὰς ἱεῖσαι, and Elect. 592. Iph. Aul. 1101. Also in several passages of Plato, Theognis, and Arrian.

τοῖς προφύλαξι πίστιν παρεχομένους] Render, 'fiduciam procubitoribus præstantes,' or 'gignentes, præbentes,' occasioning or producing trust or confidence to the pickets, making them feel assured that all was right, namely, by their addressing them in the Doric dialect: a sense of παρέχεσθαι frequent in Xenophon, who also uses the term προφύλακες, An. vi. 4, 19. On the duties of these procustodes, or pickets bivouacing by night in front of an army, (of whom mention is made in Xen. An. ii. 3, 1, et al.) see Æneas Pol. ch. 22. The hardships to which they were exposed are alluded to in Aristoph. Ach. 1145, τῷ μὲν πίνειν στεφανωσαμένῳ, Σοὶ δὲ ῥιγοῦν καὶ προφυλάττειν.

In the words following, οὐ καθορωμένους τῇ ὄψει, there has been thought to be a pleonasm: but such is not really the case; the sense being literally, 'not surveyed or beheld by [a view of] the countenance.' So Hom. Il. xxiv. 632, εἰσορόων ὄψιν, and xx. 205, ὄψει—ἴδες. Thus ὄψει stands for κατ' ὄψιν, as in Hom. Od. xxiii. 94, ὄψει—μιν ἐνωπιδίως ἐσίδεσκεν, 'would survey him by a view of his countenance.'

7. ἐς πᾶσαν ἰδέαν χωρήσαντες] 'resorting to every mode of escaping [from their foes].' See note supra ch. 81. Ἅμα τοῦ ἔργου τῇ ξυντυχίᾳ, 'at the very occurrence of the affair,' in ipso articulo temporis. So ξυντυχία is also used in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 226, 16. Pind. Pyth. i. 69. Soph. Aj. 313. Jos. p. 827, τῇ ξυντυχίᾳ τοῦ ὀλέθρου. Lucian, iii. 478, οὔνομα δὲ οἱ τοῦ ἔργου ἡ ξυντυχίη, 'the occurrence of the affair was to him a name,' i. e. gave him a name or appellation.

προσένευσαν] 'swam to them.' For Duk. rightly traces the term from προσνεῖν, occurring, he adds, in Ælian, V. H. i. 1, though not found in the lexicographers. The word is also found in Plut. Mar. 37, and ought to be restored in a passage of Jos. Bell. iii. 10, 5, ἐκτείνοντο δὲ οἱ μὲν ἐπιβαίνοντες τῶν σκαφῶν, οἱ δὲ τοῖς ἀναχθεῖσι προσπίπτειν πειρώμενοι, where for προσπ. read προσνέειν, which word, I would observe, Ruffinus must have had in his copy, and it was certainly in the archetype from which the Cod. Bigot. was copied; though the scribe inadvertently wrote προσμένειν, doubtless from ignorance of this very rare word. It may be observed, (though Duk. has omitted to notice it,) that the word was spelt προσ- εἶναι σφίσιν ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν ταῖς ναυσὶν, εἰ δεῖ, διαφθαρῆναι, ἢ ὑπὸ τῶν βαρβάρων καὶ ἐχθίστων Ἀμφιλόχων. 8. οἱ μὲν οὖν Ἀμπρακιῶται, τοιούτῳ τρόπῳ κακωθέντες, ὀλίγοι ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐσώθησαν ἐς τὴν πόλιν· Ἀκαρνᾶνες δὲ, σκυλεύσαντες τοὺς νεκροὺς καὶ τροπαῖα στήσαντες, ἀπεχώρησαν ἐς Ἄργος. CXIII. Καὶ αὐτοῖς τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ ἦλθε κήρυξ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐς Ἀγραίους καταφυγόντων ἐκ τῆς Ὀλπης Ἀμπρακιωτῶν, ἀναίρεσιν αἰτήσων τῶν νεκρῶν, οὓς ἀπέκτειναν ὕστερον τῆς πρώτης μάχης, ὅτε μετὰ τῶν Μαντινέων καὶ τῶν ὑποσπόνδων ξυνεξῆσαν ἄσπονδοι. 2. ἰδὼν δ' ὁ κήρυξ τὰ ὅπλα τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως Ἀμπρακιωτῶν, ἐθαύμαζε τὸ πλῆθος· οὐ γὰρ ᾔδει τὸ πάθος, ἀλλ' ᾤετο τῶν μετὰ σφῶν εἶναι. 3. καί τις αὐτὸν ἤρετο "ὅ τι θαυμάζοι, καὶ ὁπόσοι αὐτῶν τεθνᾶσιν," οἰόμενος αὖ ὁ ἐρωτῶν εἶναι τὸν κήρυκα ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν Ἰδομέναις. 4. ὁ δ' ἔφη "διακοσίους μάλιστα." ὑπολαβὼν δ' ὁ ἐρωτῶν εἶπεν, "Οὔκουν τὰ ὅπλα ταυτὶ φαίνεται, ἀλλὰ πλέον ἢ χιλίων." 5. αὖθις δὲ εἶπεν ἐκεῖνος, "Οὐκ ἄρα τῶν μεθ' ἡμῶν μαχομένων ἐστίν." ὁ δ' ἀπεκρίνατο, "Εἴπερ γε ὑμεῖς ἐν Ἰδομένῃ χθὲς ἐμάχεσθε." "Ἀλλ' ἡμεῖς γε οὐδενὶ ἐμαχόμεθα χθὲς, ἀλλὰ πρῴην ἐν τῇ ἀποχωρήσει." "Καὶ † μὲν δὴ τούτοις γε ἡμεῖς χθὲς ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως βοηθήσασι τῆς Ἀμπρακιωτῶν ἐμαχόμεθα." 6. ὁ δὲ κήρυξ ὡς ἤκουσε, καὶ ἔγνω ὅτι ἡ ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως βοήθεια διέφθαρται, ἀνοιμώξας, καὶ ἐκπλαγεὶς τῷ μεγέθει τῶν παρόντων κακῶν, ἀπῆλθεν εὐθὺς ἄπρακτος, καὶ οὐκέτι ἀπῄτει τοὺς νεκρούς. 7. πάθος γὰρ νέειν, to distinguish it from προσνεῖν, to heap up.

The Athenian ships here spoken of were doubtless sailing along the head of the gulf, to take their station in the bay of Katafórno, just below Arpi, i. e. Olpi, of which the present name is an evident corruption.

κρεῖσσον—εἰ δεῖ, διαφθαρῆναι] 'thinking it better, if so it must be, to perish,' &c. Similarly in Demosth. c. Lept. t. ii. 148, we have, μᾶλλον εἵλοντο μεθ' ὑμῶν, εἴτι δέοι, πάσχειν. The words following, τῶν βαρβάρων καὶ ἐχθίστων Ἀμφιλόχων, should be rendered, 'by the barbarous and most hated Amphilochians.' The Ambraciots regarded them as barbarians, and with some reason; since (as we learn from ii. 68.) Argos was a colony planted among barbarians; and though Argos itself was somewhat civilized by its Argive planters and the neighbouring Ambraciots, yet the country population remained chiefly barbarian.

CH. CXIII. 2. τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως] scil. συνεξιόντων, which word is to be supplied from συνεξῆσαν preceding. By σφῶν understand those for whom he was acting as herald, the Ambracians.

4. οὔκουν — χιλίων] Meaning, 'these arms here, however, seem to be the arms not [of that number], but of more than a thousand.' In ταυτὶ we have an Atticism (frequent in Aristophanes, though for the most part confined to the language of common life) equivalent to 'these here.'

5. καὶ μὲν δὴ] The sense here intended would seem to be, 'atque sanè,' 'ay but truly:' and yet that, we may suppose, would rather require καὶ μήν δή. It is true that several passages are by Hoogev. de Part. p. 302, adduced from Plato, in which καὶ μὲν δὴ is found; but that is only in the sense 'quinetiam sane.' Accordingly one may suspect that our author here wrote καὶ μὴν δή.

6. ἀνοιμώξας — ἀπῆλθεν ἄπρακτος] From these words, and those at ii. 13, it would seem that heralds were not such apathetic characters as they are represented in the Greek dramatic writers, especially Aristophanes. In this case, that the herald should have been so overwhelmed by the magnitude of the evil, as to return without executing his commission, is not strange, it being the natural effect of overwhelming calamity to make men not only overlook petty evils, but forget to discharge common duties. Thus after their last fatal defeat in Sicily, we are told, vii. 72, that, from the greatness of their present evils, they no longer thought of asking permission to bury their dead.

τοῦτο μιᾷ πόλει Ἑλληνίδι ἐν ἴσαις ἡμέραις μέγιστον δὴ τῶν κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον τόνδε ἐγένετο. καὶ ἀριθμὸν οὐκ ἔγραψα τῶν ἀποθανόντων, διότι ἄπιστον τὸ πλῆθος λέγεται ἀπολέσθαι, ὡς πρὸς τὸ μέγεθος τῆς πόλεως. 8. Ἀμπρακίαν μέντοι οἶδα ὅτι, εἰ ἐβουλήθησαν Ἀκαρνᾶνες καὶ Ἀμφίλοχοι Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Δημοσθένει πειθόμενοι ἐξελεῖν, αὐτοβοεὶ ἂν εἷλον· νῦν δὲ, ἔδεισαν μὴ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἔχοντες αὐτὴν, χαλεπώτεροι σφίσι πάροικοι ὦσι. CXIV. Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα, τρίτον μέρος νείμαντες τῶν σκύλων τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, τὰ ἄλλα κατὰ τὰς πόλεις διείλοντο. 2. καὶ τὰ μὲν τῶν Ἀθηναίων πλέοντα ἑάλω, τὰ δὲ νῦν ἀνακείμενα ἐν τοῖς Ἀττικοῖς ἱεροῖς Δημοσθένει ἐξηρέθησαν, τριακόσιαι πανοπλίαι, καὶ ἄγων αὐτὰς κατέπλευσε· καὶ ἐγένετο ἅμα αὐτῷ μετὰ τὴν τῆς Αἰτωλίας ξυμφορὰν ἀπὸ ταύτης τῆς πράξεως ἀδεεστέρα ἡ κάθοδος. 3. ἀπῆλθον δὲ καὶ οἱ ἐν ταῖς εἴκοσι ναυσὶν Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς Ναύπακτον. 4. Ἀκαρνᾶνες δὲ καὶ Ἀμφίλοχοι, ἀπελθόντων Ἀθηναίων καὶ Δημοσθένους, τοῖς ὡς Σαλύνθιον καὶ Ἀγραίους καταφυγοῦσιν Ἀμπρακιώταις καὶ Πελοποννησίοις ἀναχώρησιν ἐσπείσαντο ἐξ Οἰνιαδῶν, οἵπερ καὶ μετανέστησαν παρὰ ‡ Σαλυνθίου. 5. καὶ ἐς τὸν ἔπειτα χρόνον σπονδὰς καὶ ξυμμαχίαν ἐποιήσαντο ἑκατὸν ἔτη Ἀκαρνᾶνες καὶ Ἀμφίλοχοι πρὸς Ἀμπρακιώτας ἐπὶ τοῖσδε, ὥστε μήτε Ἀμπρακιώτας μετὰ Ἀκαρνάνων στρατεύειν ἐπὶ Πελοποννησίους, μήτε Ἀκαρνᾶνας μετὰ Ἀμπρακιωτῶν ἐπ' Ἀθηναίους, βοηθεῖν δὲ τῇ especially Aristophanes. In this case, that the herald should have been so overwhelmed by the magnitude of the evil, as to return without executing his commission, is not strange, it being the natural effect of overwhelming calamity to make men not only overlook petty evils, but forget to discharge common duties. Thus after their last fatal defeat in Sicily, we are told, vii. 72, that, from the greatness of their present evils, they no longer thought of asking permission to bury their dead.

7. ὡς πρὸς] 'as compared to or with.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 591, γ.

8. χαλεπώτεροι σφίσι πάροικοι] 'more troublesome neighbours,' viz. than the Ambracians had been.

CH. CXIV. 2. πλέοντα ἑάλω] 'were captured on the voyage:' on which sense of πλέοντα see note supra ch. 51.

τὰ δὲ νῦν ἀνακείμενα — Δημοσθένει ἐξηρέθησαν] There had been, it seems, as usual, a certain portion selected by the general, previously to any division of the spoils (see Hom. Il. i. 278). On the nature of the spoils so dedicated in the temples, see Stanley on Æschyl. Theb. 280.

4. οἵπερ καὶ μετανέστησαν παρὰ Σαλυνθίου] So I have thought proper, with Goeller, to edit, from the conjecture of Hermann, instead of vulg. οἵπερ καὶ μετ. παρὰ Σαλυνθίους καὶ Ἀγραίους, for the following reasons: 1. Because all the best MSS. have not the words καὶ Ἀγραίους, which have evidently crept in from the preceding words, though here in effect useless. 2. Because, as Goeller has shown, no tolerable sense can be extracted from παρὰ Σαλύνθιον, though that is retained by Bekker and Poppo; of whom the latter, however, approves of Hermann's conjecture. It is true that no direct authority of MSS. exists for the reading Σαλυνθίου: but it may be observed, that so small a change scarcely requires it. And indeed it possesses the indirect support of four MSS., namely, the Codd. B. and H., and also (as I have ascertained) the Codd. Clarend. and Cantab., which have the word περί. For there it may very well be supposed the original reading was παρὰ Σαλύνθιον, which arose from the unfrequency in prose of παρὰ with the genitive. Render, 'whither they had gone, after leaving Salynthius.'

ἀλλήλων, καὶ ἀποδοῦναι Ἀμπρακιώτας ὁπόσα ἢ χωρία ἢ ὁμήρους Ἀμφιλόχων ἔχουσι, καὶ ἐπὶ Ἀνακτόριον μὴ βοηθεῖν, πολέμιον ὂν Ἀκαρνᾶσι. 6. ταῦτα ξυνθέμενοι, διέλυσαν τὸν πόλεμον. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα Κορίνθιοι φυλακὴν ἑαυτῶν ἐς τὴν Ἀμπρακίαν ἀπέστειλαν, ἐς τριακοσίους ὁπλίτας, καὶ Ξενοκλείδαν τὸν Εὐθυκλέους ἄρχοντα· οἳ κομιζόμενοι χαλεπῶς διὰ τῆς ἠπείρου ἀφίκοντο. τὰ μὲν κατ' Ἀμπρακίαν οὕτως ἐγένετο.

CXV. Οἱ δ' ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ Ἀθηναῖοι τοῦ αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος ἔς τε τὴν Ἱμεραίαν ἀπόβασιν ἐποιήσαντο ἐκ τῶν νεῶν μετὰ τῶν † Σικελιωτῶν ἄνωθεν ἐσβεβληκότων ἐς τὰ ἔσχατα τῆς Ἱμεραίας, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς Αἰόλου νήσους ἔπλευσαν. 2. ἀναχωρήσαντες δὲ ἐς Ῥήγιον, Πυθόδωρον τὸν Ἰσολόχου Ἀθηναίων στρατηγὸν καταλαμβάνουσιν ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς διάδοχον ὧν ὁ Λάχης ἦρχεν. 3. οἱ γὰρ ἐν Σικελίᾳ ξύμμαχοι πλεύσαντες ἔπεισαν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους βοηθεῖν σφίσι πλείοσι νανσί· τῆς μὲν γὰρ γῆς αὐτῶν οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐκράτουν, τῆς δὲ θαλάσσης ὀλίγαις ναυσὶν εἰργόμενοι, παρεσκευάζοντο ναυτικὸν ξυν-

5. ὁμήρους] So I read, for vulg. ὁμόρους, from the conjecture of Poppo, since borne out by the authority of the Turin MS. Of the confusion in MSS. of the two words in question, I could adduce numerous examples. The following must suffice: Appian, i. 757, (where, for ὁμήρους, Schweigh. has rightly restored ὁμόρους,) and Jos. Ant. xiv. 11, 1, where, for ὅμορον, several MSS. have ὅμηρον.

Ch. CXV. 1. Σικελιωτῶν] It is strange none of the editors should have seen that the common reading Σικελιωτῶν is evidently a false one, and that the true reading is Σικέλων. This, indeed, is not supported by any MS., but the words Σίκελοι and Σικελιῶται are continually confounded both in Thucydides and other writers. The common reading cannot be tolerated; for who were the Siceliots? The Athenians had no allies among those except the Leontines, and they inhabited the sea-coast; whereas the Siculi (or original inhabitants, as distinguished from the Siceliots, or new settlers) inhabited the central parts of the island, (see vi. 88.) (which will agree with what is just afterwards said of their making an invasion from the upper country,) and generally made common cause with the Athenians.

The above correction (which I had before suggested in my smaller edition of Thucydides) has, I find, since been adopted by Goeller and Arnold, of whom the latter truly observes, that the same mistake, (namely, of Σικελιωτῶν for Σικέλων,) though found in every MS. except two, in another passage infra vii. 57, has been, very properly, corrected by the recent editors.

2. διάδοχον ὧν ὁ Λάχης ἦρχεν] Laches seems to have been sent for home, and superseded by Pythodorus, from some crimination; as I am enabled to show from Aristoph. Vesp. 240, who says of him, ἀλλ' ἐγκονῶμεν, ἄνδρες, ὡς ἔσται Λάχητι νυνὶ, where must be supplied ἡ δίκη or τιμωρία, with the Scholiast, who subjoins, τοῦτο δέ φησιν ὡς τοῦ Κλέωνος εἰς δίκην ἐπαγαγόντος τὸν Λάχητα. Στρατηγῆσαι δὲ αὐτόν φησι Δημήτριος πρὸ τριῶν ἐτῶν εἰς Σικελίαν πεμφθέντα μετὰ νεῶν Λεοντίνοις βοηθήσοντα. Οἱ δὲ περὶ τὸν Φιλόχορον διαδέξασθαι αὐτόν φασι Σοφοκλέα καὶ Πυθόδωρον οὓς καὶ φυγῇ ζημιωθῆναι εἰκὸς γοῦν μετακληθῆναι αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὴν κρίσιν, ἧς νῦν ὁ κωμικὸς μνημονεύει. Undoubtedly Cleon was the accuser. The crimination seems to have been that of embezzlement. Thus Aristophanes, Vesp. 241, says of him, σίμβλον δέ φασι χρημάτων ἔχειν ἅπαντες αὐτόν. And he has another hit at him, Vesp. 968, οὗτος γὰρ ὁ Λάβης καὶ τραχήλι' ἐσθίει, καὶ τὰς ἀκάνθας (i. e. the heads and back-bones): κοὐδέποτ' ἐν ταὐτῷ μένει (i. e. he is wavering and inconsistent). On this Poppo remarks, that hence it may be seen how mistaken is Seidler, who in the Preface to Soph. Antig. p. 79, remarks, that it is not on record why Laches was removed from his office, nor does there appear any cause existing for such removal.

3. τῆς θαλάσσης — εἰργόμενοι] So at αγείροντες, ὡς οὐ περιοψόμενοι. 4. καὶ ἐπλήρουν ναῦς τεσσαράκοντα οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ὡς ἀποστελοῦντες αὐτοῖς, ἅμα μὲν ἡγούμενοι θᾶσσον τὸν ἐκεῖ πόλεμον καταλυθήσεσθαι, ἅμα δὲ βουλόμενοι μελέτην τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ποιεῖσθαι. 5. τὸν μὲν οὖν ἕνα τῶν στρατηγῶν ἀπέστειλαν Πυθόδωρον ὀλίγαις νανσί· Σοφοκλέα δὲ τὸν Σωστρατίδου καὶ Εὐρυμέδοντα τὸν Θουκλέους ἐπὶ τῶν πλειόνων νεῶν ἀποπέμψειν ἔμελλον. ὁ δὲ Πυθόδωρος ἤδη ἔχων τὴν τοῦ Λάχητος τῶν νεῶν ἀρχὴν, ἔπλευσε τελευτῶντος τοῦ χειμῶνος ἐπὶ τὸ Λοκρῶν φρούριον, ὃ πρότερον Λάχης εἶλε· καὶ νικηθεὶς μάχῃ ὑπὸ τῶν Λοκρῶν, ἀνεχώρησεν.

CXVI. Ἐῤῥύη δὲ περὶ αὐτὸ τὸ ἔαρ τοῦτο ὁ ῥύαξ τοῦ πυρὸς ἐκ τῆς Αἴτνης, ὥσπερ καὶ τὸ πρότερον. καὶ γῆν τινα ἔφθειρε τῶν Καταναίων, οἳ † ἐπὶ τῇ Αἴτνῃ τῷ ὄρει οἰκοῦσιν, ὅπερ μέγιστόν ἐστιν ὄρος ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ. 2. λέγεται δὲ πεντηκοστῷ ἔτει ῥυῆναι τοῦτο μετὰ τὸ πρότερον ῥεῦμα, τὸ δὲ ξύμπαν τρὶς γεγενῆσθαι τὸ ῥεῦμα ἀφ' οὗ Σικελία ὑπὸ Ἑλλήνων οἰκεῖται. 3. ταῦτα μὲν κατὰ τὸν χειμῶνα τοῦτον ἐγένετο. καὶ ἕκτον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα τῷδε ὃν Θουκυδίδης ξυνέγραψεν.

ii. 85, we have, καὶ μὴ ὑπ' ὀλίγων νεῶν ἐἴργεσθαι τῆς θαλάσσης.

4. μελέτην τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ποιεῖσθαι] 'as wishing to afford practice to their navy.' See i. 142, fin.

Ch. CXVI. 1. ἐῤῥύη — ὁ ῥύαξ τοῦ πυρὸς] 'there burst forth a stream of fire,' or 'the stream of fire;' the article referring, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, to one as well known,—namely, an outpouring of lava. The article might, however, have been dispensed with. Thus it does not occur in a kindred passage of Lycurg. c. Leocr. p. 159, 38, λέγεται ἐκ τῆς Αἴτνης ῥύακα πυρὸς γενέσθαι: yet it is found in a passage of Aristot. ap. Steph. Thes. The expression ῥύακα πυρὸς ἐπικλύσαι occurs in Appian, ii. 859. See also Pind. Pyth. i. 36.

APPENDIX.

BOOK I.

Ch. XXII. 2. τὰ δ' ἔργα—ἐπεξελθὼν] Here, Poppo observes, ἐπεξέρχεσθαι bears the sense pertractare, persequi [oratione] ; and the construction is οὐκ ἐκ τοῦ παρατυχόντος πυνθανόμενος, ἠξίωσα γράφειν, ἀλλ' [ἠξίωσα γράφειν] ἐπεξελθὼν [ταῦτα] οἷς τε αὐτὸς παρῆν καὶ παρὰ τῶν ἄλλων πυνθανόμενος. Of ἐπεξέρχεσθαι in this sense an example occurs also in Pseud. Herod. Vit. Hom. (a passage apparently written with a view to the present) ζητῆσαι ἐπεξελθεῖν (περὶ Ὁμήρου) εἰς τὸ ἀτρεκέστατον. I have supplied ταῦτα in the construction, as demanded by propriety, and confirmed by iii. 67, 1, ἐπεξῆλθομεν ταῦτα.

4. κτῆμα ἐς ἀεί] Meaning that it is common property, being for a common use, and intended for the common good of mankind—intimating that the work is a sort of bequest ; a thought evidently borrowed by A. Schlegel, who, in the following beautiful passage, similarly observes : 'The great legacy and inheritance of all the knowledge and ideas of the ancient world is, with justice, considered as a common good of mankind, which is committed to all ages and nations in their turn ; which ought to be sacred in their eyes, and for the preservation of which posterity is entitled to call them to an account.'

Ch. XXIII. 1. τούτου δὲ τοῦ πολέμου μῆκός τε μέγα προὔβη] A blending of two modes of expression, τούτου δὲ τοῦ πολέμου μῆκος μέγα ἦν, and οὗτος ὁ πόλεμος [ἐς] μέγα προὔβη. See more in note on the words infra iii. 82, 1, οὕτως ὠμὴ στάσις προὐχώρησε.

Ch. XXXIV. 3. μεταμελείας — λαμβάνων] Of μεταμέλεια in the plural (a use seldom occurring) I have noted an example in Isocr. Panath. 281, ποιεῖσθαι μεταμελείας πολλάς. And of the phrase itself μεταμέλειαν λαμβάνειν, an example occurs in Eurip. Frag. Inc. 76.

Ch. XXXVI. 1. This passage is, among others, adduced by Mitchell on Aristoph. Eq. 260, to prove and illustrate the fact, that the Greek language delights in accumulating participles, without a connecting particle.

Ch. XXXVII. 1. ἀλογίστως] 'without reflection or calculation as to,' &c.

Ch. XLII. 2. ὑποψίας] The genit. here is governed of τι (μέρος) understood, as in Plut. vi. 498, 3, ἡ θερμολουσία οὐ τοσοῦτον εὐτονίας ὑφαιρεῖ καὶ ῥώμης, ὅσον ὠφελεῖ πρὸς ὑγίειαν.

Ch. XLIII. 2. τὸ ἴσον ἀνταπόδοτε] Compare Hdot. i. 18, ἀνταποδιδόναι τὸ ὅμοιον.

Ch. LXX. 9. ξυμφορὰν — ἐπίπονον] Mitchell on Aristoph. Eq. 259, renders, 'to think ease with nothing to do a torment, not less than the most laborious occupation.'

Ch. LXXI. 7. ὅσια ἂν ποιοῖμεν] So ὅσια δικάζειν infra iii. 58.

Ch. LXXX. 3. πόλεμον ἄρασθαι] 'bellum suscipere' or 'movere,' as iii. 39, and Hdot. vii. 132. 156.

Ch. LXXXII. 2. ἄμεινον ἤδη, ἢν δοκῇ, πεφραγμένοι ἴμεν ἐπ' αὐτοὺς] This disposition to play a safe game was quite characteristic of Archidamus. So in the Laconica Apophthegmata of Plutarch he is reported to have said, on seeing his son rashly engaging with the Athenians without a sufficient force, ἢ τῇ δυνάμει πρόσθες, ἢ φρονήματος ὕφες.

Ch. LXXXIV. 3. εὔβουλοι δὲ ἀμαθέστερον τῶν νόμων τῆς ὑπεροψίας, &c.] 'too ignorant to disobey,—so wise as to obey them :' ἀμαθ. being here used sarcastically, as infra iii. 37, 3. So Plutarch, in his Laconica Apophthegmata, says of Archidamus, that when one asked him who governed in Sparta, he answered, οἱ νόμοι, καὶ τὰ ἀρχεῖα, καὶ τὸ νόμιμον.

Ch. CXIX. 1. Αὖθις δὲ] The writer reverts back to ch. 87.

ἐβούλοντο] 'they were pleased.' The metaphor in ψῆφον ἐβούλοντο is, as Hobbes well points out, one formed from the custom of setting near, or presenting a box or urn and a ball to him who gave his votes, that he might put his ball into the part of the vessel which was for yes or no, as he saw fit.

2. ἔλεγον] For this, Poppo observes, we should rather have expected the aorist, considering that the subject turns on something done once : but in verbs of speaking, exhorting, ordering, frequent is this use of the imperf., and that not only where, as here, much is said, and so imperfect continuance of action is signified, but also when some one speaks only a few words. That in these cases the imperf. and aor. are alike proper, appears from the circumstance of their being interchanged in use. So at ch. 72, before the oration of the Athenians we have, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἔλεγον τοιάδε : while at its conclusion, ch. 79, we have, τοιαῦτα δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι εἶπον.

Ch. CXXXI. 3. ἐλέγχειν] Such is the use of the verbal noun in Isocr. Æg. εἰς ἐλεγμὸν καταστήσειν ὁποῖός τις ἡμῶν ἕκαστος περὶ αὐτούς : and Plato, 278, C, εἰς ἐλεγμὸν ἰὼν περὶ ὧν ἔγραψε.

Ch. CXXXII. 2. ἠξίωσεν] 'he thought proper.' So Xen. Ages. i. 34, τοὺς ἀξιοῦντας καὶ τὰς τῶν θεῶν τιμὰς καρποῦσθαι, 'qui audent, sibi arrogant.'

Ch. CXXXVIII. 3. γίγνεται παρ' αὐτῷ μέγας] Compare Aristoph. Eq. 177, γίγνει μέγας, 'art become a great man :' where Mitchell adduces the present passage, and others from Aristoph. Eq. 946, and Vesp. 1023, and Athen. 380, b.

BOOK II.

Ch. VIII. 2. λόγια] On this term Mitchell, in his note on Aristoph. Eq. 118, remarks, that no distinction is by that writer made in its use, whether as denoting what proceeded from God or from Seer.

Ch. XI. 9. ἔπεσθε ὅπη ἂν τις ἡγῆται] So Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 24, ἂν οὖν σωφρονῆτε, τοῦ ἀκολουθεῖν, ὅποι ἄν τις παρακαλοῖ.

Ch. XIII. 2. διὰ χειρὸς ἔχειν] To the examples adduced, add Aristoph. Vesp. 609, ἀλλὰ φυλάττει διὰ χειρὸς ἔχων, where Mitchell quotes this passage of Thucyd. Aristot. Polit. v. 8, διὰ χειρῶν ἔχουσι τὴν πολιτείαν : and Plut. Pericl. 34, διὰ χειρὸς ἔχων τὴν πόλιν.

Ch. XV. 5. νομίζεται τῷ ὕδατι χρῆσθαι] To the examples add Aristoph. Nub. 480, γυμνοὺς εἰσιέναι νομίζεται. Acts xvi. 13, οὗ ἐνομίζετο προσευχὴ εἶναι.

Ch. XXXVII. 3. ἄγραφοι ὄντες] So Plut. vi. 620, ἄγραφος ἀδείας νόμος δελφῖσιν, meaning, that the dolphins are spared by the unwritten law of custom.

Ch. XL. 2. μόνοι γὰρ — νομίζομεν] Here ἀπράγμονα stands in opposition to ὁ ὁρᾷν βουλόμενος ii. 64, and ὁρατήριος at ii. 63. Mitchell on Aristoph. Eq. 259, thus renders : 'We are the only persons who consider the man who takes no part in politics, not to be a man, that meddles with nothing, but that is good for nothing.' Here, however, the term takes is far from giving a correct representation of the sense, as suggesting the idea of taking a side. The true import of μηδὲν μετέχοντα may be best expressed by 'having nothing to do with,' lit. 'having no part or lot in them,' meaning τῶν πολιτικῶν. So in Plato, 712, e, we have πολιτειῶν μετέχετε, where, as here, there is an ellipsis of μέρος, which word is expressed in a passage of Acts viii. 21. Mitchell adds, that 'persons of quiet unintermeddling disposition (namely, in politics) at Athens had but one of these two resources, either to consent to be despised and trampled on, (see Demosth. 979, 5, and Xen. Mem. ii. 9.) or to quit the place altogether, like the two fugitives in the Birds of Aristophanes, where it is said, ζητοῦντε τόπον ἀπράγμονα.'

Ch. XLI. 3. μόνη οὔτε τῷ πολεμίῳ — ἄρχεται] As the chagrin of defeat, and, indeed, injury of every kind, is aggravated not a little by the unworthiness of him from whom it proceeds ; so, on the other hand, defeat is consoled by the worthiness of the victor : to which purpose the words of Virg. Æn. x. 830, 'Hoc tamen infelix miseram solabere mortem ; Æneæ magni dextrà cadis.'

5. γενναίως — μαχόμενοι ἐτελεύτησαν] 'died nobly in battle.' So Athenæus, xii. γενναίως ἐτελεύτησε. Plato, p. 58, ἀδεῶς καὶ γενναίως ἐτελεύτα. Demosth. 258, 24, φέρει δ' ὅ τι ἂν ὁ Θεὸς διδῷ, γενναίως.

Ch. XLV. 1. ὁρῶ μέγαν τὸν ἀγῶνα] 'I foresee a wide field for emulation ;' or perhaps rather, 'a great trial or struggle.' So at iii. 57, 3, ἀγῶνας μεγίστους.

2. φθόνος γὰρ τοῖς ζῶσι, &c.] Of this evil disposition truly says Herodotus, iii. 72, that it is one innate in the human breast.

Ch. LX. 4. πῶς οὐ] 'It was (says a great living scholar) the genius of the Greek language to ask questions.' Of πῶς οὐκ the general sense is quidni? Here, however, it is used in a less frequent acceptation, as a mere indication of what must and will be done; as infra iii. 66, πῶς οὐ δεινὰ εἴργασθε; and Rom. viii. 32, πῶς οὐχὶ καὶ σὺν αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα ἡμῖν χαρίσεται;

Ch. LXV. 12. ἄλλα πολλὰ — ἡμαρτήθη] So Xen. Mem. i. 2, 9, τὰ περὶ τὴν πόλιν ἁμαρτανόμενα.

Ch. LXXVI. 2. ἰζάνοντος ἀεὶ ἐπὶ τὸ κενούμενον] Similarly Xen. Œcon. viii. 7, εἰς τὸ κενούμενον (the empty space) ἀεὶ οἱ ὄπισθεν ἐπέρχονται.

Ch. XC. 6. μίαν δὲ αὐτοῖς ἀνδράσιν εἶλον] See Mitchell on Aristoph. Eq. 3, αὐταῖσι βουλαῖς, i. e. (he adds) σὺν, 'together with.'

Ch. XCI. 1. τὴν ἐπιστροφὴν] lit. 'turning about towards,' as in Polyb. v. 72, ἐξ ἐπιστροφῆς ('after a wheel about') ἐνεργὸν ποιησάμενος τὴν πορείαν, &c.

BOOK III.

Ch. XLII. 3. The sense I have assigned to ἐπίδειξιν, 'display,' is confirmed by Aristoph. Nub. 268, ἔλθετε— τῷ δ' εἰς ἐπίδειξιν, 'come and exhibit yourselves to this man.'

Ch. L. 2. κληρούχους τοὺς λαχόντας] On the subject of the ancient Cleruchies, see a full account in Boeckh's Public Economy, vol. ii. pp. 168—179, or a brief condensation of the most important matter in Mitchell's Aristoph. Nub. 202.

Ch. LXXXIV. In forming the present enlarged edition I have been induced to enter, for the first time, into a full consideration of the much-debated question as to the authenticity of this chapter. The editors down to the present age expressed no doubt as to its genuineness. First, Bekker, feeling some doubt as to that matter, was induced to place it within brackets; then Poppo, though he retained the brackets, yet strenuously maintained the authenticity of the chapter; while, on the other hand, Goeller attacked it most vehemently. In my Translation and my smaller edition, I was induced, in deference to the authority of Bekker and Goeller, to treat it as not genuine. Soon after, Dr. Arnold, in his first edition, ventured, in opposition to the arguments advanced by Goeller, to maintain its authenticity; nay, he went so far as to say, that 'he is most firmly persuaded that it was written by Thucydides, and does not know of any Greek writer at once so honest, so wise, and so eloquent, as to have been able to be the author of it.' In his second edition, however, Dr. Arnold expresses his belief that the portion is spurious, and supposes it to have been the production of a Christian, and to have been written not later than the sixth or seventh century. To advert to the reasons which have led him to this total change of judgment, 'while he is still,' he says, 'of the same opinion, that Goeller's objections to the general contents, and to particular phrases, are quite unreasonable;' 'it is vain,' he adds, 'to deny the numerous harshnesses that are contained in this chapter; which, added to the authority of the ancient Scholiasts, have induced me to think it an imitation of our author by some other writer, and a caricature on his style and manner.' Yet he admits, notwithstanding, that 'the matter of the chapter is really very good, nay quite worthy of Thucydides;' and that, 'had not the writer tried to imitate our author's style, and in so doing merely produced a caricature of its defects, the language of the chapter might have been as good as its substance.'

In coming to this latter conclusion, Dr. Arnold has indeed, in a remarkable degree, exchanged for an extreme view one way, what is not less an extreme view in another; but whether, in this instance, he has not altered for the worse, is, perhaps, more than questionable. The answers he formerly opposed to the objections advanced by Goeller were, generally speaking, satisfactory; while in his new dissertation on the authenticity of this portion, he has brought forward nothing in the shape of argument, but merely propounds what is matter of opinion and conjecture. Among other things, he professes it to be his firm belief that 'the whole passage was originally added as a note upon, or brief summary of, the contents of the two preceding chapters, and that it afterwards found its way into the text.' But it might have occurred to him, that he had himself disposed of that question, by having, as I apprehend, shown that the chapter is not a brief summary of the contents of the preceding chapter, but 'was added as a sort of supplement to the rest, because the mind of the writer was so full of his subject, that he could scarcely prevail upon himself to quit it.' That it is not a mere summary will fully appear from the annotations which I have subjoined. Moreover Dr. Arnold has here strangely jumbled together two hypotheses; namely, that 'the chapter in question was originally a note upon, or brief summary of, the contents of the preceding chapters,' (which, we see, is quite untenable, by its being at variance with plain facts,) and that it was the fabrication of some person who wanted the matter to pass as Thucydides', and accordingly imitated, as closely as possible, his style. Now one or the other it may have been, but certainly not both. Again, supposing any one to have been inclined to fabricate such a passage for such a purpose, good reason would there have been to imitate, but, surely, not to caricature the style of Thucydides. That would demand a third hypothesis equally improbable, that the writer framed the portion not as an imitation, but as a caricature on the style of our author. But then, it may be asked, how came the matter to be so very masterly, that, as Dr. Arnold affirms, 'no other Greek writer could have been able to produce it?' Suffice it to say, that all the different forms of the above hypothesis, by which it is supposed that the chapter is not genuine, involve the greatest improbability; and as the onus probandi may fairly be thrown on the party attacking the authenticity, what motive, we may ask, can be imagined for any one's sitting down to frame this imitation, or caricature? And supposing the thing to have been done, how are we enabled to account for the forgery having been introduced into every known MS., in spite of its being, if we believe Goeller, 'a senseless heap of bombast or nonsense?' While, indeed, many reasons exist why such a portion should not have been introduced, it being any thing but necessary to the context; not one can be imagined why it should. For the case differs widely between this chapter and the well-known passage in Josephus's Jewish Antiquities, on the subject of Jesus Christ. Well are we enabled to account for that portion being framed, (by degrees, I apprehend, and by different hands,) introduced into the text, and retained there, notwithstanding its manifest unsuitableness to the professed writer. As to Dr. Arnold's addition to his hypothesis, namely, that 'the chapter in question was the work of a Christian, and not later than the sixth or seventh century,' that is quite untenable; since, besides two evident annotations of the present portion which occur in Dio Cass., three others have been now adduced by me from Josephus. Accordingly this chapter could not have proceeded from a Christian writer; and the persons to whom almost all the fabrications and interpolations known to us have been ascribed, the monks, were as yet scarcely in existence. The circumstance, then, of the portion in question having been thus imitated, tends to evince beyond all doubt that it had place in the text of Thucydides as far back as the time of Josephus; beyond which period we have no means of proof, for the age of imitation only commenced at that time. But that the portion in question should have been thus fabricated and introduced into the text, we are the less warranted in suspecting, since before that time, however verbal corruptions might creep into the text, no reason is there to think that fabrication and interpolation were resorted to; this being a period too nearly approaching to the age of autographs, or copies formed from thence; and little more than about 380 years had elapsed since Xenophon first published the History of Thucydides. Nothing, indeed, from external evidence can be alleged against the authenticity of the portion, since the chapter is found in every known MS., and that not, as in the case of certain other disputed portions, (as, for instance, that of St. John viii. 1—11.) placed in the margin, or accompanied with obeli or asterisks; and the arguments deduced from internal evidence will be found, on examination, to resolve themselves into a string of ungrounded surmises, mutually contradicting each other. Thus, to advert to other arguments besides those already noticed, no reason is there to suspect the authenticity of the portion because the Scholia on it are so few; for, as the Scholiasts, we are told, accounted it not genuine, they would naturally, under this impression, decline the trouble of encountering its formidable difficulties; and that Dionysius does not touch on this portion, though he has criticized at considerable length chapters 82 and 83, is no proof that he considered it not genuine; since, as Arnold observes, 'he had already found enough for his purpose in the 82nd and 83rd chapters, and his quotation having run to so great a length, he stopped at the end of the 83rd, where there is a natural termination of the subject, and did not proceed any further.' Again, vain is it to attempt to prove the chapter to be not genuine, by lengthened criticisms on its style and phraseology. These, at best, form but matter of doubtful disputation, and are wholly inadequate to settle any question of this kind; as an instance of which it may be observed, that the laboured efforts of a whole phalanx of philologists to prove or to disprove the Pauline origin of the Epistle to the Hebrews from the phraseology alone, have produced no decisive results; and, be it remembered, far more evidence is requisite to prove that any portion is not from the pen of any alleged writer than that it is. As to the present case, of how little weight are the objections advanced by Goeller on that score, will be seen in the annotations on the chapter. At the same time, it cannot be denied that there is more of harshness, out-of-the-way phraseology, &c. in this, than even in the two foregoing chapters. And that, after all, seems to be the real reason why the ancient exegetæ thought it not genuine, though surely the reason is one wholly insufficient. No writer is always alike or equal to himself,—least of all, Thucydides, who is very unequal, there being several portions in the work which we are sure could not have received the author's last hand; nay, we know that he died before he had completed his labours. Again, as to the ancient critics whom Dr. Arnold so eulogizes, they, it is well known, very generally rejected the authenticity of the whole of the eighth book on the very grounds on which they rejected this chapter. But their opinion has never been received by any modern critic of note, because, as is quite plain, the book bears the stamp of the same mind as the foregoing books, and breathes the genuine Thucydidean character; though the matter was never thoroughly digested or polished, as those books were. Dr. Arnold himself says that 'the notion of certain ancient critics as to the eighth book not being the production of Thucydides, does not rest on a single substantial ground, the internal evidence in favour of the genuineness of the book (arising from its Thucydidean character, tone, &c.) being decisive, and no external testimony whatever existing against it. There do we recognise the same tone of mind, the same impartiality, the same character of language, though the phraseology has been less corrected than in the earlier parts of the history.' But this satisfactory argument for the genuineness of the eighth book applies exactly to the case of this 84th chapter, which there is no reason to doubt came from Thucydides, though the matter therein contained, from some cause or other, never received the author's last correction, but was left much in the rough—more so than any other portion of the first seven books, though probably not less so than one or two in the course of the eighth book.

LIBRARY

END OF VOL. I.

GILBERT & RIVINGTON, Printers, St. John's Square, London.

This book is due two weeks from the last date stamped

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
0025977512

88T43 IE42
1

04334841
88T-43
IE42 V1

JUN 12 1934

VOLUME 2

Columbia University in the City of New York

LIBRARY

SOUTHERN GREECE.

London, Published by Longman & Co. Paternoster Row, Jan.y 1842

Drawn & Engraved by Sid.y Hall, Bury St.t Blossoms.t

ΘΟΥΚΥΔΙΔΗΣ.

THE HISTORY

OF THE

PELOPONNESIAN WAR,

BY THUCYDIDES.

A NEW RECENSION OF THE TEXT,

WITH A CAREFULLY AMENDED PUNCTUATION,

AND

COPIOUS NOTES,

CRITICAL, PHILOLOGICAL, AND EXPLANATORY,

ALMOST ENTIRELY ORIGINAL,

BUT PARTLY SELECTED AND ARRANGED FROM THE BEST EXPOSITORS,

AND FORMING A CONTINUOUS COMMENTARY:

ACCOMPANIED

WITH FULL INDEXES, BOTH OF GREEK WORDS AND PHRASES EXPLAINED

AND MATTERS DISCUSSED IN THE NOTES.

BY THE

REV. S. T. BLOOMFIELD, D.D. F.S.A.

OF SIDNEY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE; VICAR OF BISBROOKE, RUTLAND;

EDITOR OF THE GREEK TESTAMENT WITH ENGLISH NOTES.

ILLUSTRATED BY VARIOUS MAPS AND PLANS,

MOSTLY TAKEN FROM ACTUAL SURVEYS.

IN TWO VOLUMES:—VOL. II.

LONDON:

LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, & LONGMANS,

PATERNOSTER ROW.

MDCCCXLIII.

LONDON:
GILBERT & RIVINGTON, PRINTERS.
ST. JOHN'S SQUARE.

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND VOLUME.

At length the Editor is enabled to bring his long-laboured work to a conclusion, by presenting to the Public the remaining five Books of Thucydides, edited on the same extensive plan as the first three, and omitting, he hopes, nothing which may be deemed essential to the thorough understanding of that most difficult of writers.

As to the critical notes,—although he was prevented by circumstances, over which he had no control, from making travels into foreign countries to examine fresh MSS., he did not neglect what was in his power at home, but collated afresh throughout the celebrated Codex Clarendonianus, and, in select passages, another MS. hitherto uncollated; the use of both having been kindly granted to him by a grace of the Senate of the University of Cambridge. This collation supplied very numerous various readings, (some of importance,) which had escaped the diligence of the painstaking Dr. Hudson. The Editor has also carefully collated for the last three Books a most correctly and beautifully written MS. (said by Montfaucon to be as ancient as the tenth century,) preserved in that splendid repository, the British Museum; the fruits of which appear in the present volume [1].

To advert to the notes philological and exegetical,—the Editor has, he trusts, effected for exegetical, as well as critical, science, what had long been wanting to it,—namely, the opening out of certain principles more practically, and making them more generally available, than his predecessors had done; thus supplying what can scarcely fail to impart a certain aptitude for critical disquisition to any but minds totally disqualified for it; and, by placing the means of critical knowledge within the reach of many,—whereas before it had been too much confined to a few,—making the possession of this advantage more a matter of general attainment to many, and less a matter of monopolizing pride to a few.

[1] Subjoined, by way of Appendix, is an able and interesting Memoir, for which the Editor is indebted to the kindness of his friend Colonel Leake, on the military details of the fatal expedition of the Athenians to Sicily, accompanied by an accurate Plan of Syracuse and the environs, formed by the Colonel partly on an actual survey by order of Government, and partly on his own personal examination on the spot.

191330

Upon the whole, the Editor cannot but avow that he shall think he has much misspent a larger portion of time and labour than has, perhaps, ever before been devoted to any ancient writer, if the result should not be some addition to the classical reputation of his country.

At all events he commits his work to the Public with the confidence of one who has spared no pains, and declined no sacrifices in its service;—and also with feelings of the deepest thankfulness to the Giver of all power, that health and strength have been mercifully vouchsafed him, to accomplish not the least arduous work of his life; thus bringing his classical labours—he trusts not ingloriously—to a close; so that he may dedicate the residue of his days solely to the promotion of sacred literature, in a cultivation of the studies, though always in subservience to an exercise of the active duties of his profession, according to the measure of the health and strength still to be useful in his generation, which may be dealt out by Him who worketh all in all.

SUMMARY OF THE CONTENTS

OF

VOLUME II.

BOOK IV.

SICILY. Year 7. Revolt of Messina from the Athenians, and attack on Rhegium by the Locrians, I. Attica. Invasion thereof. The ships which had been prepared for Sicily (iii. 115.) are despatched thither, with directions to annoy the enemy as much as possible by the way; and Demosthenes put on board to direct such enterprises, II. In the exercise of this special commission, he counsels the seizing on and occupying of Pylus on the coast of Messina; but his project is rejected as wild, and the possession of the port held useless, III. The fleet, however, being accidentally detained there by stress of weather, the sailors and soldiers, by way of pastime, set about constructing a fort, IV. This is raised in six days; and five galleys being left to garrison it, under the command of Demosthenes, the rest of the armament proceeds to its destination. On hearing of the seizing and fortifying of Pylus, the Peloponnesians hastily leave Attica, after a stay of only fifteen days, VI. Eion, in Thrace, is betrayed to the Athenians, but is recovered by the Chalcidians and Bottiæans, VII. The Lacedæmonians prepare to besiege Pylus both by sea and land, and recal their fleet from Corcyra, to form the naval blockade. Description of the scene of action, especially the island of Sphacteria, which is occupied by the Lacedæmonians, VIII. Demosthenes makes his dispositions to repel the enemy's attacks, IX.; and, in order to infuse courage into his men, he, just before the enemy's assault, addresses his men in a brief but spirit-stirring harangue, X. The attack described, and also the defence, in which Demosthenes and Brasidas both distinguish themselves, XI. The latter is wounded, and the Lacedæmonians are, after various ineffectual attempts, finally beaten off, XII. The Athenian fleet returns from Zacynthus, and proceeds to attack the Lacedæmonian fleet, XIII. A battle is fought in the harbour of Pylus, in which the Lacedæmonians are completely defeated, and their troops in Sphacteria cut off from all communication with the main army, XIV. The Lacedæmonians send an embassy to Athens, in order to save their men in Sphacteria by a timely negociation for peace, XV. An armistice is granted by the Athenians to the Lacedæmonians on their surrendering their fleet to the latter, to be restored at the conclusion of the war, or, on the breaking off of the negociations, XVI. Speech of the Lacedæmonian ambassadors, XVII—XX. The Athenians demand such hard terms, that the Lacedæmonian ambassadors, after ineffectual attempts to obtain better, at length break off the negociation, XXI, XXII. The armistice is accordingly broken off: nevertheless the Athenians, on various pretexts, still hold possession of the Lacedæmonian fleet, and proceed to the blockade of Sphacteria, XXIII. The scene now changes to Sicily, where the Syracusans and their allies prepare to besiege Rhegium both by sea and land, XXIV. Sea-fight in the straits of Messina, with little advantage to either party. The Messenians go on an expedition against Naxus, but are defeated; and the Athenians and their allies are equally unsuccessful in an attempt on Messina. The Athenians at length leave the Sicilians to carry on the war amongst themselves, XXV. The blockade of Sphacteria is vigorously pressed by the Athenians, while the Lacedæmonians resort to all expedients to relieve the place by throwing in supplies, XXVI. Vexation of the Athenians at the length of the blockade, which Cleon ascribes to the insufficiency of the commanders of the forces, XXVII. Nicias, the first of the ten state-generals, offers to resign the command to Cleon, who, thinking Nicias not serious, accepts it; but, on finding him in earnest, wishes to resign it, but is compelled by the people to keep it, and then undertakes to achieve the conquest of Sphacteria in twenty days, XXVIII. After associating Demosthenes with himself in the command, he proceeds to Pylus, where an accidental fire had, by consuming much of the woodland, in a great measure laid open the enemy's position; and Cleon is enabled to effect a disembarkation, and establish himself firmly on the island, XXIX, XXX. Position of the Lacedæmonian garrison described, and the dispositions of the Athenians for attacking them laid down, XXXI, XXXII. The battle itself is described as commencing with an attack on the Lacedæmonians by the light troops of the Athenians, who annoy the Lacedæmonians without their being able effectually to repress them, XXXIII. The Athenian light troops become more daring, and the Lacedæmonians more discouraged; until, being reduced to great straits, they retreat to the furthermost part of the island, and there, having their rear covered by the sea, they maintain their defence, XXXIV, XXXV., until the Athenians contrive to get possession of a position commanding the enemy's rear, XXXVI.; and having thus the upper hand even then, they summon them to surrender, XXXVII.; to which they at length agree, and are made prisoners, XXXVIII. Thus Cleon is enabled to fulfil his engagement of bringing the garrison prisoners to Athens within twenty days, XXXIX. General astonishment of Greece at this termination of the affair, XL. The prisoners are taken to Athens, and the place is garrisoned chiefly by Messenians from Naupactus; annoyed by whose incursions, and desiring to recover the prisoners, the Lacedæmonians make another attempt to negociate a peace, but without success, XLI. An expedition is undertaken by the Athenians against the sea-coast of Corinthia. The troops effect a landing at Solygia, XLII. The Corinthians meet them in the field; a battle ensues, in which, after a severe struggle, the Athenians come off victors; but, fearing the arrival of strong reinforcements to the enemy, they re-embark for home, XLIII, XLIV., and, after ravaging part of the coast of Corinthia and Epidaurus, and seizing on the peninsula of Methone as a military stronghold, they return home, XLV. The last act of the sad tragedy of the Corcyrean sedition. After leaving Pylus, Eurymedon and Sophocles proceed to Corcyra on their way to Sicily. They assist the democratical government in taking Istone, the last stronghold, and now only remaining refuge, of the aristocratical party. The garrison surrenders at discretion to the Athenians. Perfidious stratagem of the democratical party, by which the capitulation, securing their personal safety, is broken, XLVI., and the wretched people are given up to the infuriate vengeance of their political opponents, and cruelly butchered; after which the Athenians pursue their voyage to Sicily, XLVII, XLVIII. The Athenians take Anactorium from the Corinthians, and put it into the hands of the Acarnanians. Artaphernes, an ambassador from the king of Persia to the Lacedæmonians, apprehended and brought to Athens, and his letters read. After ascertaining their import, they send him away with some of their ambassadors to Ephesus. King Artaxerxes dying in the mean time, the ambassadors return without having effected any thing, L. The Chians, at the requisition of the Athenians, demolish their new city wall, LI.

Year 8. A party of Lesbian exiles surprise two towns of the Athenians on the continent opposite to Lesbos, and establish themselves there, LII. An expedition of the Athenians against Cythera, which is briefly described. The Athenians take it, and, holding military possession of it, proceed to ravage the neighbouring coast of Laconia, LIV. Extreme panic at Lacedæmon, discouragement in the councils, and feebleness in the measures of defence on the part of the Lacedæmonians, LV. Various descents of the Athenians on the south and south-east coasts of Peloponnesus. Attack on Thyrea, (where the expelled Æginetans had been settled by the Lacedæmonians, ii. 27,) LVI. The town is taken and burnt, and the inhabitants put to death. A tribute is imposed on Cythera, LVII. A general Congress is held of the Sicilian Greeks at Gela, in order to effect a general pacification, LVIII. Speech of Hermocrates on the occasion, LIX—LXIV.: according to whose representations they conclude a general peace, and the Athenian fleet retires from Sicily. On its return home, the commanders are punished, as having received bribes to abandon the conquest of Sicily, when it was in their power to have effected it. LXV. Revolution at Megara produced by the extreme distress of the city, arising from the war, and the harassing incursions of some aristocratical exiles; to stop which, their friends press for their recal. Alarmed at the prospect, the democratical leaders communicate with the Athenians, offering to give up the city to them, and first the Long Walls which connect the city with its port Nisæa, LXVI.; whereupon a strong force is sent from Athens, under the command of Hippocrates and Demosthenes, and possession obtained of the Long Walls, LXVII. The conspiracy, however, is detected by the aristocratical party in time to prevent the betrayal of the city itself, LXVIII. The Athenians attack Nisæa, (where the Lacedæmonian garrison of the Long Walls had fled for refuge,) and take it. LXIX. Meanwhile Brasidas (who happened to be then near Corinth, preparing an expedition into Thrace) gets together a strong force of the Lacedæmonian allies in those parts, in order to save Megara, and demands of the Megareans to be admitted into their city, LXX. They, however, think it better to wait the event, LXXI. Meanwhile the Bœotians come up to his aid, and their cavalry skirmishes with the Athenians, LXXII. To decide the contest, and fix the wavering Megareans, Brasidas offers the enemy battle, but they decline it; whereupon the Megareans admit Brasidas into the city, and the leaders of democracy fly to Athens, LXXIII. The aristocratical exiles are recalled, on condition of complete amnesty: but on their return, and readmission to power and office, they seize and put to death about 100 of the democratical party, and change the constitution into a strict oligarchy, LXXIV. The settlement of the Lesbian exiles at Antandrus is taken by the Athenians, LXXV. A plan is now concerted for bringing about a revolution from aristocracy to democracy in Bœotia. Athens is applied to for assistance; and Demosthenes, with the whole disposable force of the state, is to favour the attempt by entering into Bœotia, and first seizing the stronghold of Delium, near Tanagra, LXXVI. Demosthenes proceeds to Naupactus, and organizes the forces of the Athenian confederacy in those parts, to co-operate in the proposed attack, LXXVII. Brasidas sets out on his long-planned expedition to Northern Greece and Thrace. By the rapidity of his forced march, and the aid of some Thessalian chieftains, he passes across Thessaly, notwithstanding the hostility, from their good-will to Athens, of the Thessalian people at large, LXXVIII. He arrives in Macedonia, and makes a diversion (for which indeed the expedition was chiefly formed) in favour of the revolted Chalcidians and king Perdiccas, LXXIX. The Lacedæmonians make the plan subservient to their long-cherished purpose of employing on foreign service some helots of whom they stood in awe; and after emancipating, they treacherously murder 2000 of them, LXXX. Brasidas is appointed to the command in Thrace, chiefly at his own desire, from his possessing qualities likely to be, as they actually proved, of immense benefit to his country, LXXXI. The Athenians oppose these measures of Brasidas by a stricter attention to secure the fidelity of their subject-allies in those parts. They declare war against Perdiccas, LXXXII. Perdiccas employs Brasidas against his own private enemy, Arrhibæus; but Brasidas, induced by the representations of Arrhibæus, withdraws his forces from Perdiccas, who is highly incensed, and reduces the subsidy which he had given the Peloponnesians from one-half to one-third of the expense of their maintenance, LXXXIII. Brasidas makes an attempt on Acanthus, one of the Athenian dependencies; and prevails on the Acanthians to give him an audience within their city, LXXXIV. Speech of Brasidas, LXXXV—LXXXVII. The Acanthians revolt from the Athenians, and join the Lacedæmonian confederacy, on a solemn pledge from Brasidas that they shall be independent allies. The people of Stagirus follow their example, LXXXVIII. Demosthenes now sets about the long-planned invasion of Bœotia; but owing to a want of early co-operation on the part of Hippocrates, on the contrary side of Bœotia, the enterprise becomes abortive, LXXXIX., and a few days afterwards Hippocrates sets out from Athens, and seizes on Delium, which he fortifies, XC. But the whole force of Bœotia, being now at liberty, is arrayed against him. Hence he retreats to the frontier, and when the generals are doubtful whether to allow him to go off, or to pursue and engage him, though no longer on Bœotian ground, XCI., Pagondas, the Theban Bœotarch, urges, in a set speech, that they should engage with such bitter enemies as the Athenians wherever they should find them, XCII. Accordingly the Bœotians go in pursuit of and set themselves in order to engage with the enemy, XCIII. Hippocrates ranges his own troops to resist them, XCIV., and after a short, but spirit-stirring, harangue to his men, to acquit themselves in a manner worthy of the glory of Athens, XCV., the two parties engage in battle, and the Athenians are defeated, and only saved from total destruction by a rapid retreat, partly on board ship, to Athens, XCVI. The Bœotians refuse to give up the Athenian dead (as usual) for burial, till they should have evacuated Delium, which, being a temple, they had profaned by fortifying and occupying it for secular purposes, XCVII. The Athenians attempt to justify what they have done, and refuse to evacuate it, XCVIII., whereupon the Bœotians refuse to give up the dead bodies, XCIX. The Bœotians attack the fort of Delium, and take it, C., and then restore the dead. Number of the slain on both sides. Demosthenes makes another equally unsuccessful attempt in a descent on the coast of Sicyon. Death of Sitalces, king of Thrace, who is succeeded by his nephew Seuthes, CI. Brasidas undertakes an expedition against Amphipolis, of which the origin is pointed out, and its site described, CII. The Argilians conspire with Brasidas to betray the place into his hands. By their aid he effects the passage of the Strymon, by the bridge which crossed near Amphipolis, and occupies the open ground between the city and the river, CIII. The citizens are in no small tumult, and the friends of Athens, alarmed for the safety of the place, send a dispatch to Thucydides, the Athenian commander on those coasts, CIV. Brasidas, fearing he shall be anticipated by Thucydides, offers very mild terms to induce the inhabitants to surrender the city forthwith, CV. They accept his proposals, and open their gates to him; and on the evening of the same day, Thucydides arrives at Eion, the port of Amphipolis, and situated at the mouth of the Strymon, and, learning the fall of Amphipolis, puts Eion into a posture of defence, (CVI.) so that Brasidas, when he proceeds to attack Eion, is repulsed. Nevertheless, Myranus and other neighbouring towns go over to him, CVII. The Athenians, alarmed at the loss of Amphipolis, and the rapid progress of revolt among their allies in those parts, send garrisons to the several towns on the coast; and Brasidas, on his part, demands reinforcements from home, but obtains none, CVIII. Brasidas proceeds to march against the peninsula of Acte, on Mount Athos, and obtains possession of most of the towns, CIX.: insomuch that he attempts a more important enterprise on the city of Torone, on the coast of the peninsula, west of Athos, where a party favourable to Sparta agree to betray it to him, and accordingly bring in a few of his troops, CX., who open the gates to the rest of the army, CXI., and thus the city is entered on every side, CXII. The Athenian garrison for the most part escapes to the adjoining fort of Lecythus, CXIII. Brasidas convenes an assembly of the Toroneans, and addresses them in a speech, wherein he assures them of the friendship of Sparta, and invites those who had fled to Lecythus to return, on condition of receiving the same treatment as the rest, CXIV. He then attacks Lecythus, and, profiting by the confusion occasioned by the accidental fall of a tower, CXV., he captures it, and puts the garrison to the sword, CXVI.

Year IX. The reasons which induced the two belligerents to conclude a truce for a year, CXVII. Terms of the truce, as proposed by the Lacedæmonians to the Athenians, CXVIII., 1—6. Form of acceptance, and ratification of them on the part of the Athenians, § 7. The names of the persons who signed the truce on either side, CXIX. Scione now offers to revolt to Brasidas; who goes thither, and, after highly commending their zeal, engages to protect them, CXX. In return, the Scionæans pay him the highest honours. He hopes to likewise gain over Mendian Potidæa, CXXI. The conclusion of the truce is announced to Brasidas and the revolted cities. The Athenians insist that Scione shall not be included in the truce, as having revolted after it was signed; and they set about recovering it by force of arms, CXXII. Mende now revolts, and both Mende and Scione are garrisoned by Brasidas, the women and children being removed to a place of safety. Second expedition of Perdiccas and Brasidas against Arrhibæus, whom they defeat in battle; and then Brasidas wishes to return to the sea-coast, in order to protect the cities lately received into the Lacedæmonian alliance, CXXIV. The Illyrians are now induced to side with Arrhibæus; whereupon the Macedonian army makes a hasty retreat the ensuing night, leaving their Lacedæmonian allies to save themselves as they can. Brasidas makes dispositions for an orderly retreat, CXXV.; previously to which he addresses his troops in a brief, but soldierlike, harangue, encouraging them to rely on their well-tried prowess and habitual discipline and skill, and to despise the empty terrors of undisciplined and barbarian multitudes, CXXVI. The good order of the retreat. Attempt of the Illyrians to cut off their retreat by previously occupying the pass from the highland region into the lowlands of Macedonia, frustrated by the promptitude of Brasidas, CXXVII., who, after first repulsing their attacks, and then dislodging them, effects his retreat into Lower Macedonia. His soldiers plunder the country, to be avenged on the Macedonians for their late desertion of them; which reprisal, however, alienates Perdiccas from the Lacedæmonian cause, CXXVIII. Meanwhile the Athenians had sent a strong force to recover Mende, and had retaken the city before Brasidas's return from Upper Macedonia. They then lay siege to the citadel, whither the Peloponnesian garrison had taken refuge, CXXX., who afterwards effect their escape out of the place into Scione, CXXXI. Perdiccas now makes peace with the Athenians, and, through influence with the Thessalian chieftains, some reinforcements, which the Lacedæmonian government were sending to Brasidas, are stopped in their passage through Thessaly, CXXXII. The temple of Juno, at Argos, is burnt down, through the carelessness of the priestess. The blockade of Scione is completed, CXXXIII. Hostilities between the Tegeans and Mantineans, CXXXIV. Brasidas endeavours, but ineffectually, to surprise Potidæa, CXXXV.

BOOK V.

YEAR X. Expiration of the Truce, during which the Athenians expel the Delians, who have a residence granted them at Atramyttium by Pharnaces, I. Expedition of Cleon to recover the revolted towns in Macedonia and Thrace. He takes Torone, and proceeds against Amphipolis. Panactum is taken by the Bœotians, II, III. Embassy of Phœax to Sicily and Italy, to organize an Athenian interest against the Syracusans. His endeavours are attended by a mixture of success and discomfiture, IV, V. Cleon proceeds against Amphipolis, but waits at Eion for the expected quotas from the allies. Brasidas, in order to protect Amphipolis, occupies a strong position on Mount Cerdylium, VI. Cleon at length advances against Amphipolis, and halts on some high ground just under its walls, VII. Brasidas enters the city, and makes dispositions to attack Cleon by surprise, VIII. Brasidas addresses his soldiers, by way of instructing them, in a truly soldierlike harangue, IX. Battle of Amphipolis, in which the Athenians, being thrown into confusion, by the sudden attack, in an unfavourable position, of Brasidas, is defeated, with the loss of their general, Cleon. Brasidas also falls in the action, and is honourably interred in the market-place of Amphipolis. The loss on both sides in the action, XI. Reinforcements are sent from Sparta to Brasidas, XII., and arrive at Heraclea ; but, finding it difficult to proceed further, and hearing of the death of Brasidas, they return back to Sparta, XIII. Both the belligerent parties feel disposed for peace, XIV, XV., and especially the two leading persons of either nation, namely, Nicias and Pleistoanax, XVI. Accordingly a peace for fifty years is concluded, embracing the allies on both sides, except the Bœotians, Corinthians, Eleans, and Megareans, XVII. The treaty of peace for fifty years between Athens and Sparta, XVIII. The signatures ratifying it, XIX. Computation of the length of the first war now concluded, XX. Difficulties in the way of the due execution of the provisions in the treaty, and from what cause. The dislike towards it evinced by the allies of Lacedæmon induces the Lacedæmonians to conclude a separate treaty of alliance with Athens, XXI, XXII. Treaty of alliance between Athens and Lacedæmon, XXIII. Signatures in ratification thereof, XXIV. Beginning of fresh troubles, which ending, lead to a renewal of the war, XXV. The writer's peculiar means of attaining exact information as to the future events thereof, XXVI. The Corinthians try to induce Agis to become the head of a new Peloponnesian confederacy, XXVII. The Argives readily listen to the proposal, and measures are taken to bring the thing about, XXVIII. Accordingly the Mantineans and their allies are the first to revolt from Lacedæmon, and to pass over to the Argive alliance, XXIX. : whereupon the Lacedæmonians remonstrate with the Corinthians, but without success, XXX. The Eleans next join the Argive alliance, and then the Corinthians and Chalcidians in Thrace, XXXI. The Bœotians and Megareans still hold alliance with the Lacedæmonians, and the Tegeans refuse to desert them ; which alarms the Corinthians, and makes them reconsider their present policy, XXXII. Expedition of the Lacedæmonians into Arcadia, to aid some of the revolted allies of Mantinea, XXXIII. Internal measures of policy pursued by the Lacedæmonians. They enfranchise the helots who fought under Brasidas, and disfranchise the prisoners released from Sphacteria, XXXIV, XXXV. The new Ephori at Sparta are adverse to the peace with Athens. They try to make common cause with Corinth and Bœotia, and to bring Argos into alliance with themselves, XXXVI. : in order to which, it is proposed that the Bœotians should join the Argive alliance ; but the Bœotian people, supposing that their alliance with Argos would displease the Lacedæmonians, reject the proposal, XXXVII, XXXVIII. The Lacedæmonians then form a separate alliance with the Bœotians, though in breach of their treaty with Athens, XXXIX. : whereupon the Argives, alarmed, try to obtain for themselves a treaty with Lacedæmon, XL. The Lacedæmonians at length grant their request, and a period is fixed for concluding the treaty, XLI. Meanwhile the Athenians, on hearing of their separate treaty with the Bœotians, are much displeased with the Lacedæmonians, XLII. This feeling is fostered by the policy of Alcibiades, who is very inimical to the Lacedæmonian interest, and persuades the Argives to unite themselves with Athens rather than with Lacedæmon, XLIII. : whereupon the Argives, Eleans, and Mantineans send ambassadors to Athens, to form an alliance with the Athenians, XLIV. The Lacedæmonian ambassadors, being induced by the stratagem of Alcibiades to contradict their own declarations, and thus cause their sincerity to be more than suspected,—the Athenians, in disgust, conclude the alliance with the Argives, Eleans, and Mantineans, XLV, XLVI. Treaty of alliance between Athens and Argos, Elis and Mantinea, XLVII. The Corinthians refuse to accede to this new alliance, and incline to return to the old connexion with Lacedæmon, XLVIII. The Lacedæmonians are excluded by the Eleans from attending at the Olympic games, on account of their disobedience to the common religious law of Greece, XLIX, L. The colonists at Heraclea in Trachis (see iii. 92) are overpowered in battle by the neighbouring barbarian tribes, LI. Expedition of Alcibiades into Peloponnesus, LII. War between Argos and Epidaurus, and invasion of the latter by the former, LIII. The Lacedæmonians, being detained at home by the Carneian festival, cannot go to the aid of the Epidaurians, LIV. Negociations still carried on at Mantinea, but without any effect. The Lacedæmonians still remain inactive, LV. The Athenians again occupy Pylus, and garrison it with Messenians and helot deserters, to annoy the Lacedæmonians. A desultory warfare between Argos and Epidaurus, LVI. At length the Lacedæmonians are roused to some activity, and with the combined force of the whole confederacy invade Argolis, LVII., and, entering it in three directions, foil the vigilance of the Argive army, and cut it off from Argos, LVIII. Argos is saved by the bold stroke of two of its citizens, who, solely on their own authority, negociate with Agis, and prevail upon him to grant a truce for four months, and evacuate the Argive territories, LIX, LX. An Athenian force then arrives at Argos, and prevails on the people to disavow the truce. The allies then invade Arcadia, take Orchomenus, LXI., and then attack Tegea, LXII. The Lacedæmonians are angry with Agis for withdrawing the army so groundlessly from Argolis, and appoint a council of war to be a check on him for the future, LXIII. In alarm at the attack on Tegea, the Lacedæmonians take the field, to succour and invade the territory of Mantinea, LXIV. The allies move to oppose and offer battle on advantageous ground. Agis declines it, and succeeds in drawing them from their strong position to the plain, LXV. The Lacedæmonians hastily form an order of battle to meet them, LXVI. The dispositions of the two armies, and their respective lines of battle described, LXVII, LXVIII. Harangues are addressed to the troops by the generals on both sides, LXIX. Battle of Mantinea, LXX—LXXII. ; complete victory of the Lacedæmonians, LXXIII. Amount of the loss on both sides, LXXIV. Moral effect of the victory, in restoring the former military reputation of the Lacedæmonians. While they are celebrating the Carneian festival, the allies again attack, and lay siege to Epidaurus, LXXV. The Lacedæmonians proffer peace to the Argives, intending thereby to pave the way for a revolution in the government, LXXVI. Treaty of peace between Lacedæmon and Argos. The Argives throw up their alliance with Athens, and become allies of Lacedæmon, LXXVIII. Treaty of alliance between Lacedæmon and Argos, LXXIX. The Lacedæmonians and Argives try to persuade Perdiccas to join their alliance, LXXX. The Mantineans join the Lacedæmonian alliance. Oligarchical revolutions brought about in Sicyon and Argos, LXXXI. Counter-revolution in Argos. Restoration of the democracy, and renewal of the alliance with Athens. Long Walls are begun to be built, to connect Argos with the sea, LXXXII. The Lacedæmonians invade Argolis, and destroy the unfinished long walls. The Athenians blockade the coast of Macedonia, and cut off its maritime commerce, LXXXIII. Expedition of the Athenians against the island of Melos, LXXXIV. Conference by way of discussion between the Athenian and the Melian negociators, on the question of the submission of Melos to the Athenian dominion, LXXXV—CXI. After the conference, the Melians give their final answer, conveying their resolution not to submit to Athens, CXII. Accordingly the Athenians commence hostilities, and form a close blockade of the city, CXIII, CXIV. Hostilities by way of reprisal carried on between the Athenians and the Lacedæmonians, CXV. Melos, being brought to extremity, surrenders at discretion. Infamously barbarous treatment of the inhabitants, CXVI.

BOOK VI.

The Athenians now form a project of conquering Sicily. A sketch is given of the form and size of the island, I.; and of the several races by which it had been successively colonized,—such as the Sicanians from Spain, and inhabitants sent unto the Sicanians from Spain, II. A remnant of the Trojans after the sacking of Troy, III. Some Greeks of the returning armament from Troy, IV. The Siceli from Sicily, V.; the Phœnicians. The several Greek settlements on the sea-coast, as Naxos, Syracuse, Leontini, Catana, Trotilus, Thapsus, Hyblæan Megara, Selinus, Gela, Acragas, Zancle or Messana, Acræ, Casmeno, Camarina, III—V. A pretext for invading Sicily is supplied by the people of Egesta, who entreat aid from Athens against Selinus and Syracuse. Ambassadors are sent from Athens to ascertain and report upon the state of affairs in Sicily, VI. Hostilities are carried on in Peloponnesus between the Lacedæmonians and the Argives, VII. The ambassadors return from Sicily, and, on hearing their report, the Athenians resolve to send a powerful armament to that island, and fix on another day for a second assembly, in which they may consider of the details of the expedition, VIII. At the assembly speeches are delivered by Nicias and Alcibiades. Speech of Nicias against the measure, IX—XIV. Alcibiades is a warm advocate for the expedition. His character briefly depicted, and its effects on the welfare of Athens, XV. Speech of Alcibiades for the measure, XVI—XVIII. The Athenians persist in their determination to send out the expedition; whereupon Nicias tries to damp their ardour by representing the magnitude of the force requisite to be sent out, and the resources necessary to maintain it when there, so as to give any chance of success, XIX. Further speech of Nicias, XX—XXIII.; which, however, fails to alter the strong bent in favour of the measure, the people merely entering into his views as far as regarded the manner of doing the thing, XXIV. They call on him to specify the amount of men and money he thought necessary, XXV., and they vote every thing according to his suggestion, investing the generals, Nicias, Alcibiades, and Lamachus, with absolute power in all points that regarded the outfit of the expedition, XXVI. Meanwhile a great shock is given to public feeling by the mutilation of the Hermæ, or busts of Mercury, an atrocity of which the people are most anxious to discover the perpetrators, XXVII. Suspicion rests on Alcibiades; and his enemies represent it as part of a plot to subvert the popular constitution, XXVIII. He demands to be immediately put on his trial; but his enemies prevail that he shall at present go on the expedition, and afterwards be recalled for trial, XXIX. Corcyra is appointed as the rendezvous for the fleet, previous to crossing the sea. The Athenian division of the armament embarks at Piræus. Description of the embarkation, XXX—XXXII. § 1—3. Tidings of the expedition reach Syracuse,—are variously reported, and variously received. An assembly being called, the people are addressed by Hermocrates and by Athenagoras (the leaders of the two parties, the aristocratical and democratical) in two set speeches on the present posture of affairs, XXXIII—XL. After which, one of the stategenerals concludes the debate, by dissuading the assembly from all party invectives, and counselling that preparations should instantly be made to repel the invasion, should it really occur, XLI.

Progress of the Athenian expedition. The force is assembled at Corcyra, and is formed into three divisions, XLII. It crosses the Ionian gulf. Details of the various forces which compose the expedition, XLIII. The armament proceeds along the coast to Rhegium. How received by the cities along the coast, XLIV. On hearing of its arrival at Rhegium, the Syracusans form measures for defence, XLV. At Rhegium the armament is joined by the ships which had been sent to Egesta to reconnoitre the state of things, and ascertain what funds for the support of the war might be derived from thence. The averred wealth of Egesta turns out to be merely pretended, and the appearance thereof produced by trickery, XLVI. Proposed plans of operation, under present circumstances, of the three commanders; of Nicias, XLVII.; of Alcibiades, XLVIII.; of Lamachus, XLIX. Lamachus, however, comes over to the views of Alcibiades. After negociating with Messana to be received there, the armament leaves Rhegium, and, after proceeding to Catana, passes on to reconnoitre the harbour of Syracuse, and then returns to Catana; but is not received there, L. An entrance, however, is accidentally effected by the soldiers; whereupon Catana enters into alliance with Athens, and the armament takes up its quarters at that city, LI. An attempt is made, but unsuccessfully, to obtain the alliance of Camarina, LII. A summons arrives from Athens to Alcibiades to return for trial. Great tumult at Athens, and dread of an oligarchical revolution, LIII. A digression, in which Thucydides takes occasion to correct some popular errors in the history of Athens, as regards the conspiracy of Harmodius and Aristogiton, the age of the sons of Pisistratus, &c. LIV—LIX. Some informations are made as to the plot of the Mercuries, by which the persons before imprisoned on suspicion are released, and those now informed against are arrested, LX. Tumult and alarm of aristocratical plots, and strong prejudice against Alcibiades, still prevail at Athens. Alcibiades escapes from the officers of justice while on the voyage to Athens, and takes refuge in Peloponnesus, LXI. Various movements of the Athenian armament; while the head-quarters remain at Catana, LXII. The Syracusans are emboldened to active resistance by the inactivity of the Athenian forces, LXIII. This leads the Athenian generals to form a stratagem for drawing away the Syracusan forces to Catana, while they unmolestedly disembark theirs in the great port, and close by Syracuse, LXIV, LXV. On their return from Catana, the Syracusans find the Athenians in a strong position, and offer them battle, but in vain, LXVI. Both parties prepare for action next day; the position of the two armies, LXVII. Speech of Nicias, emboldening his men, LXVIII. Description of the commencement of the battle, and of the dispositions and feelings of the combatants on either side, LXIX. The Syracusans are, after a well-fought action, defeated, LXX. The Athenians re-embark their forces, and return to Catana to winter. They send for reinforcements and supplies to Athens, LXXI. Proceedings at Syracuse. Hermocrates encourages the Syracusans, LXXII. He is elected general-in-chief, with two colleagues. Ambassadors are sent to Lacedæmon and Corinth entreating aid, LXXIII. The Athenians attempt to gain possession of Messana, but fail of success, LXXIV. The Syracusans extend and strengthen the lines of defence which they had formed to prevent circumvallation. Hermocrates and others are sent to Camarina, to dissuade the Camarinæans from joining the Athenians, LXXV. The speech of Hermocrates on the occasion, LXXVI—LXXX. The speech of Euphemus, LXXXI—LXXXVII. The Camarinæans, alike suspicious of both parties, resolve to remain neutral, LXXXVIII. § 1, 2. The Athenians endeavour to gain over the Sicel tribes, and to obtain the alliance of Tuscany and Carthage, § 3—6. The Syracusan ambassadors arrive at Corinth; the Corinthians further their purpose, and send ambassadors with them to Sparta. They find Alcibiades there, who joins them in exciting the Spartans to aid the Syracusans, § 7—9. Speech of Alcibiades to the Spartans on that occasion, LXXXIX—XCII. They resolve to follow his counsels, embracing the cause of Syracuse; and Gylippus is sent to command the confederate forces of Syracuse and Lacedæmon, XCIII. § 1—3. The ship sent from the Athenian armament arrives at Athens. The Athenians resolve to send the supplies requested of them, § 4. Further operations of the Athenian armament in Sicily, XCIV. Petty warfare, as far as ravaging and plundering, between Argos and Lacedæmon. Unsuccessful attempt to bring about a democratical revolution at Thespiæ, XCV. The Syracusans endeavour in every way to prevent the Athenians from occupying Epipolæ, XCVI. Meanwhile the Athenians, arriving suddenly at Thapsus, proceed to seize on, and establish themselves on, the high ground of Epipolæ, XCVII. The Athenians carry forward their lines of circumvallation, and, by the aid of some reinforcements of horse, which they had lately received, defeat a party of Syracusan cavalry, XCVIII. The siege of Syracuse is pressed vigorously. The Syracusans endeavour to carry out a counterwork, to cut off the progress of the Athenian lines of circumvallation, XCIX. The Athenians attack the unfinished counterwork, and destroy it, C. The Syracusans are again foiled in their attempts to interrupt the Athenian works: a skirmish ensues, in which Lamachus is killed, CI. The Syracusans endeavour, but without success, to storm the Athenian works on Epipolæ. The Athenian fleet enters the great harbour of Syracuse, CII. Under this posture of affairs, so unfavourable for the Syracusans, and promising to the Athenians, the Syracusans treat with Nicias about terms of peace, and, dissatisfied with the conduct of their present generals, cashier them, and appoint new ones. CIII. Gylippus, hearing that Syracuse is completely blockaded, despairs of raising the siege, and thinks only of saving the cities of Italy. Arrives at Tarentum, CIV. The Athenians, as allies of the Argives, send a fleet to ravage the coasts of Laconia, whereby the treaty between Athens and Lacedæmon is manifestly violated, CV.

BOOK VII.

Gylippus arrives in Sicily, and having landed at Himera, and there collected a considerable force from the Siceliot cities, prepares to march over-land to Syracuse, I. He makes his way thither by Epipolæ, passing from thence into Syracuse, through a small vacant space of the yet uncompleted line of circumvallation, II. He formally summons the Athenians to evacuate Sicily within a specified period. On their not heeding this, he offers them battle, which they decline: he commences operations by attacking, and carrying by a coup-de-main, the fort of Labdalum, III. The Syracusans carry out a new counterwork, to interrupt the progress of the Athenian lines. Nicias, on his part, seizes on the peninsula of Plemmyrium, and establishes three forts in it; sends forth a squadron to prevent the introduction of any further reinforcements to the Syracusans from Greece, IV. An action ensues between the Syracusans and Athenians in the space between Syracuse and the enemy's lines, and the former are defeated. Gylippus takes the blame of the failure on himself, and encourages the Syracusans to a second engagement, V.; in which they are successful, and carry their counterwork beyond the proposed line of the Athenian circumvallation, VI. Further reinforcements arrive from Peloponnesus, and others are earnestly solicited from the other cities of Sicily by Gylippus; who now counsels the Syracusans to contest with the enemy even by sea, VII. Nicias, on his part, despatches a letter to the government at Athens, stating the condition the armament is in, and requesting that it may be either reinforced or recalled, VIII. The Athenians endeavour, but without success, to recover Amphipolis, IX. The messenger charged with Nicias's letter arrives at Athens, and the despatches are read to the assembled people, X. Copy of the letter itself, XI—XV. The Athenians do not accede to Nicias's wish to be recalled, but they appoint two of his principal officers as colleagues, to lighten his labours. They resolve to send a second armament to reinforce the first early in the spring; and in the mean time to forward supplies of money and necessaries, XVI. The Athenians and the Corinthians each send out squadrons, the former to intercept, the latter to protect the transmission of reinforcements from Peloponnesus to Syracuse, XVII. The Lacedæmonians proceed to renew the war, by an invasion of Attica, and that with great alacrity, inasmuch as they conceive that the Athenians have put themselves quite in the wrong in the quarrel, XVIII. The Peloponnesians seize on Decelcia, and despatch several ships with troops to Syracuse, XIX. The Athenians counteract the invasion of Attica, by sending a small squadron to cruise around, and ravage the coasts of Peloponnesus. The second armament, under the command of Demosthenes, sails from Athens and proceeds to Ægina. Amount of the forces employed, XX. Gylippus procures reinforcements from several of the cities of Sicily; and he and Hermocrates urge an attack on the Athenians by sea, XXI. Land-battle, and sea-fight at Syracuse, in the latter of which the Syracusans are defeated; but in the former they take the three forts on Plemmyrium, XXII, XXIII.; which last operation occasions great inconveniences to the Athenians, XXIV. Various operations are undertaken on both sides. The Syracusans send round to the other states of Sicily, to urge them to co-operate with them in destroying the present Athenian armament, before the arrival of the second in the spring, XXV. Demosthenes sets out from Ægina, and during the passage of the fleet round Peloponnesus, he occupies a rocky peninsula, on the coast of Laconia, to serve, like Pylus, as a post of annoyance to the enemy, XXVI. Some Thracian troops, hired for service in Sicily, arriving at Athens too late for the expedition, are sent home to their own country, XXVII, XXVIII. On their way they are landed on the coast of Bœotia, and surprise and sack, with circumstances of unusual atrocity, the town of Mycalessus, XXIX, XXX. The armament under Demosthenes proceeds forward towards its destination. Eurymedon, on his return from Sicily, joins Demosthenes off Acarnania, and enters on his office of colleague in the command, XXXI. All the Sicilian cities, except Agrigentum, take part against Athens. Demosthenes and Eurymedon cross the Ionian gulf, and arrive at Thurium, XXXII, XXXIII. Indecisive sea-fight between a Corinthian and an Athenian fleet in the gulf of Corinth, XXXIV. Demosthenes and Eurymedon advance to the coast of Rhegium, XXXV. The Syracusans proceed to attack the Athenians both by sea and land, XXXVI. The first day's action, which is indecisive, XXXVII, XXXVIII. It is renewed the next day, and after a long and severe contest the Athenian fleet is defeated, XXXIX—XLI. Demosthenes and Eurymedon arrive at Syracuse, and by their presence produce a great impression on both sides. The Athenian general resolves to commence operations with spirit, by an attack on Epipolæ, XLII. Celebrated night-battle, and attack on Epipolæ, commanded by Demosthenes, Eurymedon, and Menander. The Athenians are at first successful; but, from too great haste and want of steadiness, they fall into disorder, and are repulsed with a severe loss, XLIII—XLV. The Syracusans are much elevated by this timely and important success, and apply to the other Sicilian states for fresh reinforcements, XLVI. The Athenians begin to suffer distress, and Demosthenes urges their immediate retreat from Sicily,

XLVII.: but Nicias insists on a further trial of their fortune, rather than incur the displeasure of the Athenian people by returning without orders, XLVIII. Demosthenes and Eurymedon waive their own opinions, in deference to the opinion of the commander-in-chief, XLIX. However, not long after, finding that they were on the point of being attacked both by sea and land, all three generals are agreed on withdrawing the forces; when an eclipse of the moon occurring, alarms the superstition of Nicias, and accordingly the armament still remains in its position, L. General attack of the Syracusans both by sea and land, in the former of which the Syracusans gain the advantage, and Eurymedon is slain; in the latter they are repulsed, LI—LIV. The Athenians are in great despondency, LV. The Syracusans prepare for the final struggle; and, to cut off all retreat from the enemy, set about closing the mouth of the great harbour, LVI. Names of the different states which took part in the Sicilian contest on either side—1st, of the allies of Athens, LVII. 2ndly, of the allies of Syracuse, LVIII. The Syracusans close up the harbour's mouth, by mooring heavy vessels across it, LIX. The Athenians strenuously exert themselves to open the barricade, and effect their retreat by sea, LX. Nicias, to raise the spirits, and stimulate the courage of his men, addresses them in a speech, LXI—LXIV. The Syracusan generals on their side exhort their troops to finish their work, LXVI—LXVIII. Nicias evinces great judgment, magnanimity, and energy. He commits the fleet to the direction of Demosthenes and the other commanders, and himself remains with the land-forces drawn up on the shore of the harbour, as spectators of the battle, LXIX. Grand final and decisive sea-fight in the harbour, which is long and obstinately maintained on both sides, LXX. The various feelings of the land-forces while witnessing the progress of the battle, which ends in the total discomfiture of the Athenian fleet, LXXI. Demosthenes proposes even then, that they should endeavour to fight their way out of the harbour, but the sailors refuse to again face the enemy, LXXII. Hermocrates devises a stratagem by which to arrest the retreat of the Athenians by land, LXXIII. The Athenians defer their retreat till the third day. Meanwhile the enemy obstruct the roads in front of them, and try in every way to obstruct their passage, LXXIV. At length the Athenians break up their encampments, and commence their retreat, LXXV. Heroic spirit of Nicias, LXXVI., who addresses the soldiery in a most spirit-stirring address, LXXVII. Order of the retreat,—in which the Syracusans closely pursue and incessantly harass the enemy, and at length occupy a very strong position in front of them, LXXVIII. The Athenians attempt to force it, but in vain, and are obliged to retreat, continually annoyed by the Syracusans, LXXIX. The Athenians now alter the direction of their course, and try to gain a march on their pursuers by night; and notwithstanding some loss of time by such circumstances as usually accompany night-marches, they reach the sea-coast, and arrive on the banks of the Erineus, LXXX. The Syracusans pursue them, overtake Demosthenes' division, and after annoying it by their cavalry and light troops the whole day, LXXXI., at length compel it to surrender at discretion, LXXXII. Next day the Syracusans come up with Nicias's division. He offers to capitulate on terms which they refuse to grant. They attack and annoy him the whole day, LXXXIII. On the following, the retreat is still continued, until the Athenians arrive on the banks of the Assinarus; where they are overtaken by the enemy, and after a great carnage, LXXXIV., they are compelled to lay down their arms, LXXXV. Nicias and Demosthenes are put to death, LXXXVI., and the other Athenians are confined in the Stone-quarries of Syracuse. Their extreme sufferings there. Termination of the Sicilian expedition, LXXXVII.

BOOK VIII.—[It is not deemed necessary to subjoin the Contents of this Book, since they have been given at the commencement of the notes on each chapter.]

ΘΟΥΚΥΔΙΔΟΥ

ΞΥΓΓΡΑΦΗΣ Δ.

I. ΤΟΥ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους, περὶ σίτου ἐκβολήν, Συρακοσίων δέκα νῆες πλεύσασαι καὶ Λοκρίδες ἴσαι Μεσσήνην τὴν ἐν Σικελίᾳ κατέλαβον, αὐτῶν ἐπαγαγομένων· καὶ ἀπέστη Μεσσήνη Ἀθηναίων. 2. ἔπραξαν δὲ τοῦτο μάλιστα οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι, ὁρῶντες προσβολὴν ἔχον τὸ χωρίον τῆς Σικελίας, καὶ φοβούμενοι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, μὴ ἐξ αὐτοῦ ὁρμώμενοί ποτε, σφίσι μεῖζονι παρασκευῇ ἐπέλθωσιν· οἱ δὲ Λοκροί, κατὰ ἔχθος τὸ Ῥηγίνων, βουλόμενοι ἀμφοτέρωθεν αὐτοὺς καταπολεμεῖν. 3. καὶ ἐσεβεβλήκεσαν ἅμα ἐς

Ch. I. 1. περὶ σίτου ἐκβολήν] 'about the time when the corn came into ear;' meaning, according to the explanation of the Scholiast, the shooting forth of the ear from the calyx or germ, of which the next stage is the ἀκμή spoken of in the following chapter, and which is alluded to supra ii. 19, τοῦ σίτου ἀκμάζοντος. Adopting, then, this view of the expression, which is that of the commentators in general, from Eustathius, Suidas, Photius, and the Schol. downwards, there is here denoted one of those two different periods of time rudely marked by those designations. Considering, however, the nature of the phrase in question, it would rather seem that we have thereby denoted the blade or the first out-shoot of the germ; of which mention is made in a passage of St. Mark, iv. 28. ἡ γῆ καρποφορεῖ πρῶτον χόρτον, εἶτα στάχυν, εἶτα πλήρη σῖτον ἐν τῷ στάχυϊ. This idea, however, the mention of θέρους, modified though it be, seems to forbid; and accordingly we may best suppose that, when those grammarians speak of this ἐκβολή as ἡ ἐκ τῆς κάλυκος τῶν σταχύων ἔκφυσις, they mean by this the first stage of nature's mysterious process in germination, or that, in popular language, ἡ σίτου ἐκβολὴ was understood to mean the development of the blade into the ear.

2. προσβολὴν ἔχον — τῆς Σικελίας] Meaning, as Goeller explains, that it 'contains or affords an approach (or convenient place of approach) to Sicily,' as that to which vessels crossing from the nearest point of Greece (the promontory of Iapygia) would direct their course, and accordingly it would be the key of Sicily. Of this sense of προσβολή an example is found also at vi. 48, ἐν πόρῳ καὶ προσβολῇ εἶναι αὐτοὺς τῆς Σικελίας: and another in Lucian. Toxar. 57, ἐν προσβολῇ ἔστι τοῖς ἀπὸ Σκυθίας προσπλέουσιν. So the Schol. on iv. 53, explains the term προσβολὴ by προσόρμισις and καταγωγή: as also one of the Scholiasts on the present passage, by προσόρμισις. The genit. here is one of reference, conveying the sense as regards. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 338 & 341.

τὴν Ῥηγίνων οἱ Λοκροὶ πανστρατιᾷ, ἵνα μὴ ἐπιβοηθῶσι τοῖς Μεσσηνίοις, ἅμα δὲ καὶ ξυνεπαγόντων Ῥηγίνων φυγάδων, οἳ ἦσαν παρ' αὐτοῖς· τὸ γὰρ Ῥήγιον ἐπὶ πολὺν χρόνον ἐστασίαζε, καὶ ἀδύνατα ἦν ἐν τῷ παρόντι τοὺς Λοκροὺς ἀμύνεσθαι, ᾗ καὶ μᾶλλον ἐπετίθεντο. 4. δηώσαντες δὲ οἱ μὲν Λοκροὶ τῷ πεζῷ ἀπεχώρησαν, αἱ δὲ νῆες Μεσσήνην ἐφρούρουν· καὶ ἄλλαι αἱ πληρούμεναι ἔμελλον, αὐτόσε ἐγκαθορμισάμεναι, τὸν πόλεμον ἐντεῦθεν ποιήσεσθαι.

II. Ὑπὸ δὲ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους τοῦ ἦρος, πρὶν τὸν σῖτον ἐν ἀκμῇ εἶναι, Πελοποννήσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἐσέβαλον ἐς τὴν Ἀττικήν· ἡγεῖτο δὲ Ἄγις ὁ Ἀρχιδάμου, Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλεύς· καὶ ἐγκαθεζόμενοι ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν. 2. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ τάς τε τεσσαράκοντα ναῦς ἐς Σικελίαν ἀπέστειλαν, ὥσπερ παρεσκευάζοντο, καὶ στρατηγοὺς τοὺς ὑπολοίπους Εὐρυμέδοντα καὶ Σοφοκλέα· Πυθόδωρος γὰρ ὁ τρίτος αὐτῶν ἤδη προαφῖκτο ἐς Σικελίαν. 3. εἶπον δὲ τούτοις, καὶ Κερκυραίων ἅμα παραπλέοντας τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει ἐπιμεληθῆναι, οἳ ἐληστεύοντο ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν τῷ ὄρει φυγάδων· καὶ Πελοποννησίων αὐτόσε νῆες ἑξήκοντα παρεπεπλεύκεσαν τοῖς ἐν τῷ ὄρει τιμωροί, καὶ, λιμοῦ ὄντος μεγάλου ἐν τῇ πόλει, νομίζοντες κατασχήσειν ῥᾳδίως τὰ πράγματα. 4. Δημοσθένει δὲ, ὄντι ἰδιώτῃ μετὰ τὴν ἀναχώρησιν τὴν ἐξ Ἀκαρνανίας, αὐτῷ δεηθέντι εἶπον χρῆσθαι ταῖς

3. τοῖς Μεσσηνίοις] Meaning 'that party among the Messenians which favoured the Athenians,' consisting of the people at large, or commonalty, as opposed to the few, who sided with the Syracusans.

καὶ ξυνεπαγόντων Ῥηγίνων φυγάδων] 'and withal some Rhegine fugitives contributing to urge them on.' Of this word ξυνεπάγω examples are found supra iii. 11, and infra in the present book: but out of Thucydides I have met with it only in Dio Cass. 268, 72, and 1216, 15.

Ch. II. 1. πρὶν τὸν σῖτον ἐν ἀκμῇ εἶναι] See note supra i. 1, and compare Xen. Hist. ii. 2, 4, ἀκμάζοντος σίτου. The expression at ch. 6, τοῦ σίτου ἔτι χλωροῦ ὄντος, refers to the period when the ear is fully formed, though still green,—the second of the three stages adverted to at Mark iv. 28.

2. The matters which follow, from this passage to the end of ch. 40, form (as Mr. Mitchell observes) in this entire history what some interesting episode does in a great epic poem.

3. εἶπον δὲ—φυγάδων] With the then administration at Athens it seems to have been a favourite plan to attach something as a πάρεργον to a business of importance; as we find from supra ii. 85, where the fleet sent to the relief of Phormio is ordered to take Crete in the way, and despatch some business there. Παραπλέοντας stands for παραπλέουσι, as the Schol. explains: and of this idiom Duk. gives examples from ii. 11, and Aristoph. Eq. 1391; though he thinks that here, as in most of these cases, there is an ellipsis of αὐτούς. To this, however, Poppo, not without reason, demurs, referring to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 536, where it is shown, by instances adduced from the best writers, — especially the earlier Attic ones, — that the dative as well as the genitive was used with the infinitive.

4. ὄντι ἰδιώτῃ] Render, 'though a private person,' i. e. without any public office. In consequence of his late brilliant success in Acarnania, he was become such a favourite with the people, that this extra-official rank was conferred on him, of being authorized to embark on board the fleet, and employ its forces during the circumnavigation of Peloponnesus, as he should think proper, without any control from its commanders; a great irregularity this, forming a dangerous precedent, and such as would never have been thought of but at a period like the present, when, as Mitford observes, 'irregularities of all kinds were growing familiar to the Athenian government.'

ναυσὶ ταύταις, ἣν βούληται, περὶ τὴν Πελοπόννησον. III. Καὶ ὡς ἐγένοντο πλέοντες κατὰ τὴν Λακωνικήν, καὶ ἐπυνθάνοντο ὅτι αἱ νῆες ἐν Κερκύρᾳ ἤδη εἰσὶ τῶν Πελοποννησίων, ὁ μὲν Εὐρυμέδων καὶ Σοφοκλῆς ἠπείγοντο ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν, ὁ δὲ Δημοσθένης ἐς τὴν Πύλον πρῶτον ἐκέλευε σχόντας αὐτοὺς, καὶ πράξαντας ἃ δεῖ, τὸν πλοῦν ποιεῖσθαι· ἀντιλεγόντων δὲ, κατὰ τύχην χειμὼν ἐπιγενόμενος κατήνεγκε τὰς ναῦς ἐς τὴν Πύλον. 2. καὶ ὁ Δημοσθένης εὐθὺς ἠξίου τειχίζεσθαι τὸ χωρίον, (ἐπὶ ‡ τοῦτο γὰρ ξυν-

Ch. III. 1. ἠπείγοντο ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν] The commentators seem not aware, that this is one of those cases, adverted to in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 497, c. where the imperf. tense denotes action begun, or only contemplated, during some past completed action, as in Herodot. i. 68, ἐμισθοῦτο ('he wished to hire') παρ' οὐκ ἐκδιδόντος τὴν αὐλήν. Eurip. Here. Fur. 538, and another passage of our author infra ii. 5, 4, ἐπεβούλευον τοῖς ἔξω. Thus the sense here is, 'as they were going to hasten,' 'as they were for hastening.' This differs slightly from that idiom found at i. 134. ii. 5. iii. 24. vi. 98, sq., where the imperf. is simply used to denote attempt, as of action commenced, but not completed.

Πύλον] The name then given to the northern of the two headlands which jut out to form the spacious port now called the bay of Navarino. It then went by the name (which it retained down to the time of Strabo) of Coryphasium, but more anciently, and even then occasionally, was called Pylos, from its being commonly supposed to have been the residence of Nestor. It was very rocky, and then separated only by a very narrow channel from the island of Sphacteria, and, while almost inaccessible to seaward, was on the land side accessible only in one quarter. Hence, we may imagine, its name, since Πύλος, gate, (standing for πύλη,) had reference to this one narrow access, alluded to by the Schol. on Aristoph. Eq. p. 201, Biset, where, speaking of Pylus, he says, τόπος οὗτος τῆς Λακωνικῆς στενός. And so in Hom. Il. v. 397, we have ἐν πύλῳ for ἐν πύλῃ, meaning ἐν νεκρῶν πύλῳ, for ἐν τῇ τῶν νεκρῶν πύλῃ. It was, indeed, not uncommon to apply the word πύλη or πύλαι to a narrow mountain-pass. See Herodot. v. 52, and Xen. An. i. 4, 4. Ages. ii. 17, and Hist. i. 3, 13. Sometimes, too, the term became an appellation, as in Herodot. vii. 201, where, on the subject of Thermopylæ, it is said that the pass is so called by the Greeks at large, but by the people of the country round Πύλαι. Of this pass mention is made by Strabo, l. viii. p. 520, as follows: ἡ οὖν παλαιὰ Πύλος ἡ Μεσσ. ὑπὸ τῷ Αἰγαλέῳ πόλις ἦν· κατεσπασμένης δὲ ταύτης, ὑπὸ τῷ Κορυφασίῳ τινὲς αὐτῶν ᾤκησαν, and in Pausan. Mess. 36, 1, ἔστι δὲ ἐκ Μεθώνης ὁδὸς σταδίων ἑκατὸν ἐπὶ τὴν ἄκραν τὸ Κορυφάσιον. ἐπ' αὐτῇ δὲ ἡ Πύλος κεῖται, where, for ἐπ', it is evident from the above passage of Strabo, that the true reading is ἐπ'. It appears, then, that old Pylus was built under Mount Ægaleus; and that from its ruins arose new Pylus, which was situated a little distance off, i. e. below Mount Coryphasium, which also gave name to the adjacent promontory.

κατήνεγκε] The term has an implied notion of force: the sense being, 'drove them to.' Compare i. 137. iii. 69. iv. 120. vii. 53. 70.

2. ἐπὶ τοῦτο γὰρ ξυνεκπλεῦσαι] The sense is plainly, 'since for this purpose [to effect this object] he had sailed with them.' He had, doubtless, formed this project at Athens, or even on his way home from Acarnania, and had applied to the government for the commission he afterwards received with this very view. I have here thought proper to edit τοῦτο, not only because it is found in almost all the best MSS.,—including the Clarend. and Cantab.,—but also because it is, as Poppo admits, the more recondite construction. By Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold, indeed, the dative is retained, on the ground that such is sometimes found used in this sense for the accus. (as in i. 74. Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 39, and they refer also to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 585.) but it may be observed, that in the passage of our author the dative could not well have been used; and as to the passage of Xenophon, where such has place, that by no means decides the point; what we want in this case being an authority found in an old Attic writer. Again, the passages to this effect adduced by Matthiæ are not to the purpose, since in not one of them have we the pronoun. This is, in short, one of εκπλευσαι,) καὶ ἀπέφαινε πολλὴν εὐπορίαν ξύλων τε καὶ λίθων, καὶ φύσει καρτερὸν ὂν καὶ ἔρημον αὐτό τε καὶ ἐπὶ πολὺ τῆς χώρας· ἀπέχει γὰρ σταδίους μάλιστα ἡ Πύλος τῆς Σπάρτης τετρακοσίους, καὶ ἔστιν ἐν τῇ Μεσσηνίᾳ ποτὲ οὖσα γῇ· καλοῦσι δὲ αὐτὴν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι Κορυφάσιον· 3. οἱ δὲ πολλὰς ἔφασαν εἶναι ἄκρας ἐρήμους τῆς Πελοποννήσου, ἣν βούληται καταλαμβάνων τὴν πόλιν δαπανᾶν. 4. τῷ δὲ διάφορόν τι ἐδόκει εἶναι τοῦτο τὸ χωρίον ἑτέρου μᾶλλον, λιμένος τε προσόντος, καὶ τοὺς Μεσσηνίους, οἰκείους ὄντας αὐτῷ τὸ ἀρχαῖον, καὶ ὁμοφώνους τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, πλεῖστ' ἂν βλάπτειν ἐξ αὐτοῦ ὁρμωμένους, καὶ βεβαίους ἅμα τοῦ χωρίου φύλακας ἔσεσθαι. IV. Ὡς δὲ οὐκ ἔπειθεν οὔτε τοὺς στρατηγοὺς οὔτε τοὺς στρατιώτας,—ὕστερον καὶ τοῖς ταξιάρχοις κοινώσας,—ἡσύχαζεν, ὑπὸ those cases in which the authority of MSS. carries great weight, and ought to prevail.

At ξυνεκπλεῦσαι supply ἠξίου, which is (as Poppo notices) also left understood in two other passages, i. 136, and iv. 87; and similarly νομίζοντες is to be supplied from ὁρῶντες, iv. 27, and ἐνόμιζον from φοβούμενοι, iv. 8.

ἐπὶ πολὺ τῆς χώρας] 'to a considerable distance from the place.' See note on i. 1, 2. By αὐτό, just before, understand the place in question, Pylus.

3. τὴν πόλιν δαπανᾶν] Of this expression the exact sense is disputed. Goeller renders, 'if he wished, by occupying them, that the city should exhaust its funds,' lit. spend all that it possessed. But that involves something hyperbolical, and indeed scarcely to be justified on the score of good Grecism. I see no reason to reject the exposition of Suidas, (however disapproved by Poppo,) who explains δαπανᾶν by εἰς ἀναλώματα μεγάλα ἐμβάλλειν. And that Aristides also thus understood the word, appears from his expression (evidently imitated from this of our author) at t. ii. p. 32, πόλιν δαπάνῃ περιβάλλειν. I am persuaded, then, that the full meaning is what I long ago pointed out in my Translation, by a reference to the nature of the course of argument here pursued, and which has since been well expressed by Bp. Thirlwall as follows: 'Any other lone headland of Peloponnesus would serve as well as this, if he were bent on putting the city to the expense of fortifying,' or rather, 'on putting the city to expense, (wasting, squandering its means,) by occupying one:' a bold expression, properly adapted rather to poetry, though here not unsuitable, since there is little doubt that, although the admirals, in disapproving of the measure proposed, spoke from the best judgment, the expression of this disapprobation was embittered by envy and jealousy—passions which naturally seize on, and even coin, the strongest expressions.

4. διάφορόν τι] Meaning 'something excellent and especially commodious,' as in Diod. Sic. ii. 293. Pol. vi. 23. Dio Cass. 232: on account of which peculiar use of the term, μᾶλλον is a little after added, as though ἐπιτηδειότερον had been used.

λιμένος τε προσόντος, καὶ τοὺς Μεσσηνίους—βλάπτειν] Here, it is remarked by Haack and Poppo, the particles τε—καὶ well correspond, as referring to the two causes why Pylus seemed more commodious than other promontories of Peloponnesus: and they observe that the passage ought properly to have proceeded thus, καὶ τῶν Μεσσ. πλεῖστ' ἂν βλαπτόντων καὶ φυλάκων ἐσομένων, but that a transition was made to the infinitive, perhaps because from ἐδόκει the writer reverted in mind to ὅτι ἐνόμισε, or something similar. Οἰκείους αὐτῷ must not, as it is by Gail and Haack, be referred to Demosthenes, but (as Duk. and Poppo point out) to the place itself, namely, Pylus. The Messenians of Naupactus might truly be said to be οἰκεῖοι τῷ χωρίῳ, as having formerly been its inhabitants, and still speaking its language. Hence it was in a manner their country, as is expressed in ch. 41.

Ch. IV. 1. τοῖς ταξιάρχοις κοινώσας] On the nature of the office exercised by these ταξ. (a question of no little obscurity) see my note in Translation, and the authors there referred to, and also the notes of Poppo and Arnold. On the punctuation to be adopted in the words following, ἡσύχαζεν ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας, a difference of opinion exists. The older editions, here followed by Bekker, pointed ἡσύχαζεν ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας: while Poppo and Goeller point ἡσύχαζεν, ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας μέχρι. And this latter punctuation I adopted in my Translation, though in my succeeding edition I deemed the harshness of thus taking the phrase out of its natural position to be so great as not to be encountered, except from absolute necessity, which here is not the case; the sense, according to the common punctuation, being, that 'Demosthenes kept quiet, neither departing, nor taking any measures in furtherance of this project.' This view has, I find, been adopted by Dr. Arnold; who, however, supposes the meaning to be that 'Demosthenes, after having vainly tried to prevail either upon the generals or soldiers, continued to remain quietly at Pylus, instead of prosecuting the voyage, owing to the bad weather, which would not let him put to sea.' But there is no reason to think that Demosthenes had any intention of going forward with them on the expedition. It would seem that he had embarked solely for the purpose of putting his project in execution. Hence ἡσύχ., if taken in this sense, can only be understood of staying where he was, and not returning back to Athens. So feeble, however, is the sense thus arising, that I am now induced to give the preference to that assigned to the term by Poppo and Goell., namely, 'desisted from trying to persuade his fellow-soldiers;' and certain it is that the verb is not unfrequently used to denote the ceasing from any action before commenced. Considering, however, the harshness (no less than unprecedented) of supposing ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας μέχρι to stand for μέχρι. ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας, I am inclined to think that ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας is intended merely to describe the state of inability to sail, from bad weather, which attended his endeavours to prevail on his fellow-soldiers. Thus ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας signifies sub navigandi difficultate, 'amidst bad weather.' And by the μέχρι, which stands for μέχρις οὗ χρόνου, is denoted the terminus ad quem of time, indicating the period when the foregoing state of things, namely, 'unwillingness to be persuaded,' ceased. Moreover, the phrase ὁρμὴ ἐπέπεσε denotes the action in which it terminated, and the participle σχολάζουσι intimates the state in which the action commenced, intimating thereby its cause. Of ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας in this sense other examples are found at ii. 5, ὑπὸ ἀνέμων καὶ ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας ἐνδιέτριψεν οὐκ ὀλίγον χρόνον, and vi. 22.

ἀπλοίας, μέχρι αὐτοῖς τοῖς στρατιώταις σχολάζουσιν ὁρμὴ ἐπέπεσε περιστᾶσιν ἐκτειχίσαι τὸ χωρίον. 2. καὶ ἐγχειρήσαντες εἰργάζοντο,

I have here thought proper, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the vulg. ἐπέπεσε, for which Bekker and Arnold have edited ἐσέπεσε, on the authority of many MSS. In so minute a variation MSS. are of less weight than the usage of the author and of other good writers, and that is decidedly in favour of ἐπέπεσε: not to mention that the several passages, evidently imitated from the present, which I have in my Translation adduced from Dio Cassius, Josephus, Procopius, and other writers, though they have ἐπέπεσε, tend to support ἐπέπεσε rather than ἐσέπεσε.

For vulg. περὶ σπάσιν, I have now thought proper, with Bekker and Goeller, to receive περιστᾶσιν, and that for two reasons: 1. because the former is susceptible of no tolerable sense (for that of tumultuously, στασιώδως, is destitute of proof); and 2. because περιστᾶσιν has been at length found in a sufficient number of MSS. to justify its adoption. The question, however, is still what is the sense intended. That assigned by Heilm., Haack, and Goeller, mutatâ sententiâ, is quite unsupported by proof. Arnold thinks that the simple sense here meant to be expressed is, that the soldiers came round on all sides to carry on the fortification; and he compares a passage of Eurip. Bacch. 1104, φέρε, περιστᾶσαι κύκλῳ, Πενθέως λαβέσθε, Μαινάδες. But although this interpretation has obtained the approbation of Poppo, it cannot well be admitted; since the sense 'coming round,' which Poppo expresses by occurrentes, though sufficiently suitable,—nay, graphic,—cannot surely be elicited from περιστᾶσι, which here admits no other sense than that of 'standing about.' It is plain that περιστᾶσιν must be closely united with σχολάζουσιν, the two terms making together the sense 'standing about unemployed;' and so equivalent to a similar sort of expression in St. Matth. xx. 3, εἶδεν ἄλλους ἑστῶτας ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ ἀργούς, and v. 6, εὗρεν ἄλλους ἑστῶτας ἀργούς: and again, τί ὧδε ἑστήκατε ἀργοί (unemployed); Thus it designates their present state of inactivity, and not that which succeeded it, of bustle. In this sense of standing about, the word occurs in Xen. Cyr. vii. 16, 41 & 42, πλῆθος περιειστήκει βουλομένων προσιέναι. and Anab. vi. 6, 6, ἀπελαύνει σιδήρια μὲν λιθουργὰ οὐκ ἔχοντες, λογάδην δὲ φέροντες λίθους, καὶ ξυνετίθεσαν ὡς ἕκαστόν τι ξυμβαίνοι· καὶ τὸν πηλόν, εἴπου δέοι χρῆσθαι, ἀγγείων ἀπορίᾳ ἐπὶ τοῦ νώτου ἔφερον ἐγκεκυφότες τε, ὡς μάλιστα μέλλοι ἐπιμένειν, καὶ τῷ χεῖρε ἐς τοὐπίσω ξυμπλέκοντες, ὅπως μὴ ἀποπίπτοι. 3. παντί τε τρόπῳ ἠπείγοντο φθῆναι τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους τὰ ἐπιμαχώτατα ἐξεργασάμενοι, πρὶν ἐπιβοηθῆσαι· τὸ γὰρ πλέον τοῦ χωρίου αὐτὸ καρτερὸν ὑπῆρχε, καὶ οὐδὲν ἔδει τείχους. V. Οἱ δὲ ἑορτήν τινα ἔτυχον ἄγοντες, καὶ ἅμα πυνθανόμενοι ἐν ὀλιγωρίᾳ ἐποιοῦντο, ὡς, ὅταν ἐξέλθωσιν, ἢ οὐχ ὑπομενοῦντας σφᾶς ἢ ῥᾳδίως ληψόμενοι βίᾳ· καί τι καὶ αὐτοὺς ὁ στρατὸς ἔτι ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις ὢν ἐπέσχε. 2. τειχίσαντες δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τοῦ χωρίου τοὺς περιεστῶτας. Of ἐκτειχίσαι τὸ χωρίον the meaning is, 'to fully fortify the place,' make it quite defensible. So in Pollux, i. 174, we have πολὺ ἐκτειχίσαι.

2. σιδήρια] The word σιδήριον is properly the neut. of the adj. σιδήριος; but being much used with ἐργαλεῖον, came at length of itself to signify, as a subst., an iron tool; as in Herodot. vii. 18, 2, θερμοῖσι σιδηρίοισι, and iv. 37, σιδηρίου κρατήσας, and iii. 29. Plato, p. 300, τὰ σιδήρια. And so in a passage of Plut. cited by Steph. Thes. we have σιδηρίῳ διελεῖν ἢ τεμεῖν. Evidently written with a view to the present is a passage of Pollux, vii. 125, ἐργαλεῖα δὲ αὐτοῦ (scil. οἰκοδόμου) σὺν τοῖς ξυλουργικοῖς, σιδήρια λιθουργά, 'stone-cutting tools,' where by ξυλ. are denoted tools for wood-cutting, as necessary to the builder as those for stone-cutting. Hence strange is it that Wasse should there propose, for ξυλουργικοῖς, to read λιθουργικοῖς. That σιδήριον meant a tool for cutting either stone or wood, is certain from Plato, p. 300, b, ξύλα καὶ σιδήρια. Moreover, the word ξυλουργικὸς, however rare, is found in a passage of the Septuagint, Deut. xix. 5. 2 Kings vi. 5. Of λογάδην the sense is ἐπιλέκτως, 'by choice,' in opposition to stones taken after being cut and squared to fit: of which idiom—also occurring at iv. 31—I know of no examples out of our author except the following in Procop. de Ædif. iii. 26, λίθοις σύνθετοι λογάδην συνειλεγμένοις, and xli. 38, λίθοις λογάδην ἐμβεβλημένοις. The later writers have sometimes λογάδας λίθους.

The term just after, φέροντες, stands for προσφέροντες, as in Plato, Gorg. p. 123, οἱ δημιουργοί, βλέποντες πρὸς τὸ ἑαυτῶν ἔργον ἕκαστος, οὐκ εἰκῇ ἐκλεγόμενος, προσφέρει ἃ προσφέρει πρὸς τὸ ἔργον τὸ αὐτοῦ. Of the phrase ξυνετίθεσαν ὡς ἕκαστόν τι ξυμβαίνοι, the sense is, 'they put them together, as each particular [material] might happen to fit.'

εἴπου δέοι χρῆσθαι] This is said because the large blocks of stone would need no mortar or cement. Ἀγγείων: meaning baskets like our hampers or buck-baskets, such as the ancients, for want of any thing corresponding to our wheel-barrows, used to employ for the purpose of removing earth, mortar, &c.

3. πρὶν ἐπιβοηθῆσαι] 'before they should come to the aid or defence of their violated territory.'

Ch. V. 1. ἑορτήν τινα ἔτυχον ἄγοντες] 'keeping some festival;' not 'feast,' as if it were of one day, according to Hobbes's version, 'there happened that day.' It was probably a festival of several days' continuance; and at such times the Lacedæmonians abstained from warfare or military service. The pronoun τινα is here used, not, as Duk. strangely supposes, to indicate that the author was ignorant of the name of the festival, or, as Levêque thinks, by way of expressing contempt of their superstition; but—as it is perpetually used in all authors—to designate a person thus indefinitely, where the writer cannot or does not think it worth while to specify more particularly by name. See my Lex. N. T. in v. Τις.

ἐν ὀλιγωρίᾳ ἐποιοῦντο] 'made light of it:' one of the many phrases formed by ποιεῖσθαι and a subst. in the dat. with ἐν, instead of a verb cognate with the subst. See Vig. p. 282. In οὐχ ὑπομενοῦντας there is an irregular construction for ὑπομενούντων, scil. αὐτῶν; on which use see Viger, p. 328, sq., and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 568, 3. In ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις we have a sort of popular mode of expression for ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ, which occurs a little further on. See notes on v. 77. vi. 105. viii. 95.

τὰ πρὸς ἤπειρον καὶ ἃ μάλιστα ἔδει ἐν ἡμέραις ἓξ, τὸν μὲν Δημοσθένην μετὰ νεῶν πέντε αὐτοῦ φύλακα καταλείπουσι, ταῖς δὲ πλείοσι ναυσὶ τὸν ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν πλοῦν καὶ Σικελίαν ἠπείγοντο. VI. Οἱ δ' ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ ὄντες Πελοποννήσιοι ὡς ἐπύθοντο τῆς Πύλου κατειλημμένης, ἀνεχώρουν κατὰ τάχος ἐπ' οἴκου, νομίζοντες μὲν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ Ἄγις ὁ βασιλεὺς οἰκεῖον σφίσι τὸ περὶ τὴν Πύλον· ἅμα δὲ, πρῲ ἐσβαλόντες, καὶ τοῦ σίτου ἔτι χλωροῦ ὄντος, ἐσπάνιζον τροφῆς τοῖς πολλοῖς· χειμών τε ἐπιγενόμενος μείζων παρὰ τὴν καθεστηκυῖαν ὥραν, ἐπίεσε τὸ στράτευμα. 2. ὥστε πολλαχόθεν ξυνέβη ἀναχωρῆσαί τε θᾶσσον αὐτούς, καὶ βραχυτάτην γενέσθαι τὴν ἐσβολὴν ταύτην· ἡμέρας γὰρ πεντεκαίδεκα ἔμειναν ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ.

VII. Κατὰ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον Σιμωνίδης Ἀθηναίων στρατηγὸς Ἠϊόνα τὴν ἐπὶ Θράκης, Μενδαίων ἀποικίαν, πολεμίαν δὲ οὖσαν, Ch. VI. 1. ὡς ἐπύθοντο τῆς Πύλου κατειλημμένης] Genit. for the more usual construction with the accus.: of which examples are adduced from the best Attic writers in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 349, obs. 2.

νομίζοντες οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι] This is not simply a case of nomin. absol. for gen. absol., but falls under that rule laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 562, that in divisions the whole may have the same case as its part, as in i. 49, δεδιότες οἱ στρατηγοί, &c. Plato, Apol. Socr. p. 18, ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ ἡλικίᾳ λέγοντες πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐν ᾗ ἂν μάλιστα ἐπιστεύσατε παῖδες ὄντες ἔνιοι ὑμῶν, where ἐπιστεύσατε refers to all, of which some (ἔνιοι) form a part. So in the present instance ἀνεχώρουν refers to all, namely, οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι, of whom οἱ Λακεδ. form a part.

In νομίζοντες—οἰκεῖον σφίσι τὸ περὶ τὴν Πύλον, (where for the dat. the genit. would have been found, according to the more usual construction, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 371.) we have a stronger form of expression than at i. 60, οἰκεῖον τὸν κινδυνον ἡγούμενοι, and iii. 13, οἰκεῖον κίνδυνον ἕξειν. Render, 'regarding the offence as one coming home to themselves,' 'affecting them most nearly.'

πρῲ] An Attic form for the common πρωΐ: and hence the later editors have done very properly in writing πρῲ, agreeably to the direction of H. Steph. Thes., Brunck on Aristoph. Lysist. 612, and Ruhnk. on Tim. Lex. in v.: though those critics have not seen that the word has here the very rare sense prematurè, as indicated by the Scholiast, who explains it by πρὸ τοῦ δέοντος χρόνου: of which use the only example known to me elsewhere is in Plato, Parmenid. p. 135, C, πρῲ—πρὶν γυμνασθῆναι,—ὁρίζεσθαι ἐπιχειρεῖς, where the words πρὶν γυμν. are exegetical, as in the present passage, τοῦ σίτου ἔτι χλωροῦ ὄντος. And so in the gloss of Timæus we have, πρῲ· ἐστι ὄρθριον βαθέος, where for ἐστι read, from Suidas and Photius, ἔτι.

The words just after, τοῖς πολλοῖς, are meant to qualify the general assertion in ἐσπάνιζον τροφῆς; the sense being, 'to the greater part of the army.' Some, it seems, (as Haack remarks,) had gone forth on the expedition better provided with corn and other food than others. Χειμὼν I would not, with Goeller, understand to denote 'late winter;' a sense which, however suitable to the context, requires proof: but rather (by a use of the word found supra iii. 21, and in a passage of St. John, x. 22, ἐγένετο τὰ ἐγκαίνια—καὶ χειμὼν ἦν.) 'rough, stormy, winterly weather.' Thus, it may be observed, the term ἐπιγίνεσθαι, with which it is here associated, is not unfrequently used of the coming of bad weather, especially rain or sleet. So ii. 4, ὑετοῦ—πολλοῦ ἐπιγενομένου. Hdot. viii. 13, αὐτοῖσι χειμών τε καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ ἐπεγίνετο.

By μείζων παρὰ τὴν καθεστηκυῖαν ὥραν is meant, 'greater (i. e. more inclement) than according to the season of the year [then] existing or subsisting,' as at iii. 39, τοῖς νῦν καθεστηκόσι. On the use of παρὰ after a compar. see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 455, note 3, a.

Ch. VII. 1. Ἠϊόνα τὴν ἐπὶ Θράκης] Poppo and Arnold have shown that this cannot be the Eion near Amphipolis spoken of at i. 98, nor any other place of that ξυλλέξας Ἀθηναίους τε ὀλίγους ἐκ τῶν φρουρίων, καὶ τῶν ἐκείνῃ ξυμμάχων πλῆθος, προδιδομένην κατέλαβε. καὶ παραχρῆμα ἐπιβοηθησάντων Χαλκιδέων καὶ Βοττιαίων, ἐξεκρούσθη τε, καὶ ἀπέβαλε πολλοὺς τῶν στρατιωτῶν.

VIII. Ἀναχωρησάντων δὲ τῶν ἐκ τῆς Ἀττικῆς Πελοποννησίων, οἱ Σπαρτιᾶται αὐτοὶ μὲν καὶ οἱ ἐγγύτατα τῶν περιοίκων εὐθὺς ἐβοήθουν ἐπὶ τὴν Πύλον· τῶν δὲ ἄλλων Λακεδαιμονίων βραδυτέρα ἐγίγνετο ἡ ἔφοδος, ἄρτι ἀφιγμένων ἀφ' ἑτέρας στρατείας. 2. περιήγγελλον δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὴν Πελοπόννησον βοηθεῖν ὅτι τάχιστα ἐπὶ Πύλον, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς ἐν τῇ Κερκύρᾳ ναῦς σφῶν τὰς ἑξήκοντα ἔπεμψαν, αἳ ὑπερενεχθεῖσαι τὸν Λευκαδίων ἰσθμόν, καὶ λαθοῦσαι τὰς ἐν Ζακύνθῳ Ἀττικὰς ναῦς, ἀφικνοῦνται ἐπὶ Πύλον· παρῆν δὲ ἤδη name which we know of. But, considering that the name Eion is, as Arnold points out, a general one signifying (as I long ago indicated in my Translation with notes) shore or beach, it may have belonged to another place besides the three above noticed; or rather, any other place similarly situated. Arnold supposes it to have been on some point of that long and winding coast which extends from the Strymon to the Anius.

CH. VIII. The narrative of Pylus is now resumed, and carried forward without interruption to its completion. The first part of this, containing a recital of the attack on Pylus, and the siege of the Lacedæmonians who had gone over to the island of Sphacteria, extends to the end of ch. 14.

2. αἱ ὑπερενεχθεῖσαι, &c.] This would imply that all were sent; and yet in ch. 11 we find them rated at 43; a number, too, in some degree confirmed by Diodor. Sic. v. 12, who there says that the Lacedæmonian fleet at Pylus consisted of 45 triremes. Now the other 17 might be left at Cyllene, as a guard for that part of Peloponnesus against the Athenians at Zacynthus. And yet, when they are at length surrendered to the Athenians, Thucydides, ch. 16, says, αἱ νῆες παρεδόθησαν, οὖσαι περὶ ἑξήκοντα, and no more had joined them. There must, then, be an error somewhere. I am inclined to suspect that in ch. 11, for τεσσαράκοντα the true reading is ἑξήκοντα, i. e. Ξ for Μ, which two letters are sometimes confounded, especially in old MSS. Diodorus, indeed, reckons them at 45: but that is inconsistent with Thucydides, who not only says that they were sent, but that they came (ἀφικνοῦνται εἰς τὸ Πύλον); and the number in Thucydides is confirmed by ch. 2 & 16. I am persuaded, therefore, that the passage of Diodorus is not so much in itself corrupt, as founded upon a more inveterate and early corruption of the text of Thucydides, ch. 11, 1. I have no doubt that Diodorus, finding the number τεσσαράκοντα in his copy of Thucydides, adopted it in his work without considering how utterly inconsistent it is with the other two passages. He seems, however, to have written τεσσαράκοντα καὶ πέντε (not τρισί): and ἑξήκοντα καὶ πέντε I believe to be there the right number; for as here Thucydides says that 60 triremes were given up by the Lacedæmonians, according to the treaty, he cannot mean to include the five which the Athenians had before taken (πέντε ἔλαβον) in the sea-fight. These, then, will make the very 5 above 60 which are required, so that the Lacedæmonians should have 60 to give up. On this Poppo remarks, that it does not seem to him certain that the number 43 at ch. 11 is corrupt. 'Quid enim (continues he) si ex illis LX. navibus, dum Pylum revehuntur, nonnullæ sunt afflictatæ, quas adhibere ad impetum nequirent? aut si iis uti noluerunt, quum ne illas quidem simul in prœlium producere possent, sed ob loci angustiam partiri et cum paucis per vices aggredi cogerentur?' The reader must now judge for himself.

On this term ὑπερενεχθεῖσαι see note at iii. 15. The Leucadian isthmus was (as we learn from Livy, xxxiii. 17) 500 paces in length, and 120 in breadth. See Dodwell's Greece, vol. i. p. 44.

2. τὰς ἐν Ζακύνθῳ Ἀττικὰς ναῦς] These ships seem to have been the fleet of Eurymedon and Sophocles, which had passed from Pylus to Zacynthus, in its way to Sicily, and had there been staying καὶ ὁ πεζὸς στρατός. 3. Δημοσθένης δὲ, προσπλεόντων ἔτι τῶν Πελοποννησίων, ὑπεκπέμπει φθάσας δύο ναῦς ἀγγεῖλαι Εὐρυμέδοντι καὶ τοῖς ἐν ταῖς ναυσὶν ἐν Ζακύνθῳ Ἀθηναίοις παρεῖναι, ὡς τοῦ χωρίου κινδυνεύοντος. 4. καὶ αἱ μὲν νῆες κατὰ τάχος ἔπλεον κατὰ τὰ ἐπεσταλμένα ὑπὸ Δημοσθένους· οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι παρεσκευάζοντο ὡς τῷ τειχίσματι προσβαλοῦντες κατά τε γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν, ἐλπίζοντες ῥᾳδίως αἱρήσειν οἰκοδόμημα διὰ ταχέων εἰργασμένον, καὶ ἀνθρώπων ὀλίγων ἐνόντων. 5. προσδεχόμενοι δὲ καὶ τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς Ζακύνθου τῶν Ἀττικῶν νεῶν βοήθειαν, ἐν ᾧ εἶχον, ἣν ἄρα μὴ πρότερον ἕλωσι, καὶ τοὺς ἔσπλους τοῦ λιμένος ἐμφράξαι, ὅπως μὴ ᾖ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐφορμίσασθαι ἐς αὐτόν. 6. ἡ γὰρ νῆσος ἡ Σφακτηρία καλουμένη τόν τε λιμένα, παρατείνουσα καὶ ἐγγὺς ἐπικειμένη, ἐχυρὸν ποιεῖ καὶ τοὺς ἔσπλους στενούς, τῇ μὲν δυοῖν νεοῖν διάπλουν κατὰ τὸ τείχισμα τῶν Ἀθηναίων καὶ to refit after the storm, and take in necessaries; and perhaps were then detained by contrary winds: for the same wind which had brought the Peloponnesians so speedily to Pylus, would be adverse to them for crossing the Ionian sea. Thucydides, indeed, has not afforded us the means of tracing the chronology of the events very minutely: but, as he speaks of the Peloponnesian fleet escaping the notice of the Athenian fleet at Zacynthus, we must suppose that the Athenian fleet had got thither when the Peloponnesian fleet passed; keeping, no doubt, as close to the coast of Peloponnesus as possible. Indeed the Athenian fleet, though it stopped six days at Pylus, (c. 5.) must, with any tolerable weather, have reached Zacynthus nearly as soon as the message from the Lacedæmonians arrived at Coreyra.

The above view, already propounded in my Translation, has been since, I find, adopted by Goeller.

ὁ πεζὸς στρατὸς] Consisting, as we learn from Diodorus, of twelve thousand men.

3. ὡς τοῦ χωρίου κινδυνεύοντος] In this use of the gen. absol. with ὡς, ὡσεί, or other particles, where a reason is given, as contained in the reported opinion of another, (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 568.) there is a blending of the two constructions, the verbal and the participial.

4. τὰ ἐπεσταλμένα] Meaning, as Dukas is of opinion, the orders sent by word of mouth, as at v. 37, and in Aristoph. Nub. 608, and Æsch. Theb. 1020, and Prom. 3.

παρεσκευάζοντο] On this use of παρασκ. followed by a participle future instead of an infin. future, (which is the more usual in our author,) see Steph. Thes. in v. παρασκευάζομαι.

5. τὴν—βοήθειαν] Meaning simply 'the force [sent] in aid.' The τῆς before Ζακύνθου is not found in three MSS., and has been, on this ground, cancelled by Bekker and Goeller. I have thought proper, with Poppo, to retain it, because external authority is so decidedly in its favour, and internal evidence also tends not a little to support it, from the greater probability that the word should have been inadvertently omitted in three MSS., than that it should have been, without any authority, inserted in nearly thirty; for it is to be found in the Codd. Clarend. and Cantab., besides other MSS. Certain it is that the use here of the article is agreeable to strict propriety.

καὶ τοὺς ἔσπ. τοῦ λιμένος ἐμφ.] 'to even stop up the approaches to the port;' or, as Portus renders, 'ipsas etiam fauces portus obstruere.' Poppo, indeed, professes himself not to be satisfied with this interpretation; though he says he is unable to propose a better. The reader will judge whether this be not nodum in scirpo quærere. If the learned critic stumbles at the καὶ, (which, in effect, belongs to both verb and noun, or to the phrase,) he will, on reflection, cease to do so by considering the arduousness of the task, as adverted to in the καί.

6. Our historian now gives a brief sketch of the locality, in order to show how far the proposed blockade and obstruction of the port was practicable, namely, from the island stretching across τὴν Πύλον, τῇ δὲ πρὸς τὴν ἄλλην ἤπειρον † ὀκτὼ ἢ † ἐννέα· ὑλώδης τε καὶ ἀτριβὴς πᾶσα ὑπ' ἐρημίας ἦν, καὶ μέγεθος περὶ πεντεκαίδεκα σταδίους μάλιστα. 7. τοὺς μὲν οὖν ἔσπλους ταῖς ναυσὶν ἀντιπρώροις βύζην κλήσειν ἔμελλον· τὴν δὲ νῆσον ταύτην φοβούμενοι, μὴ ἐξ αὐτῆς τὸν πόλεμον σφίσι ποιῶνται, ὁπλίτας διεβίβασαν εἰς αὐτήν, καὶ παρὰ τὴν ἤπειρον ἄλλους ἔταξαν. 8. οὕτω γὰρ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τήν τε νῆσον πολεμίαν ἔσεσθαι, τήν τε ἤπειρον ἀπόβασιν οὐκ ἔχουσαν· τὰ γὰρ αὐτῆς τῆς Πύλου ἔξω τοῦ ἔσπλου πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος ἀλίμενα ὄντα οὐχ ἕξειν ὅθεν ὁρμώμενοι ὠφελήσουσι τοὺς αὐτῶν, σφεῖς δὲ ἄνευ τε ναυμαχίας καὶ κινδύνου ἐκπολιορκήσειν τὸ χωρίον κατὰ τὸ εἰκός, σίτου τε οὐκ ἐνόντος καὶ δι' ὀλίγης

the port, so as to close it up. In a passage of Strabo it is described as ἡ προσκειμένη πλησίον τοῦ Πύλου, where read with Casaub., for προσκειμένη, παρακειμένη; an emendation confirmed by the Scholiast on our author, and by Pausan. Messen. iv. 36, 4, τοῦ λιμένος δὲ ἡ Σφακτηρία νῆσος προβέβληται καθάπερ τοῦ ὅρμου τῶν Δηλίων Ῥήνεια. Of this rare syntax (namely, with the accus.) an example occurs in Herodot. i. 203, 6, τὰ μὲν πρὸς τὴν ἑσπέρην φέροντα ὁ Καύκασος παρατείνει, and another in a passage of Josephus, cited in Steph. Thes., παρατείνει δὲ τὴν Γεννησὰρ ὁμώνυμος χώρα.

ἀτριβὴς ὑπ' ἐρημίας] 'trackless by reason of its lying desert and uninhabited,' as in vi. 32. And so in Soph. Phil. 2, we have, Ἀκτὴ μέν ἠδε τῆς περιῤῥύτου χθονὸς, Λήμνου, βροτοῖς ἄστειπτος, οὐδ' οἰκουμένη.

μέγεθος περὶ πεντεκαίδεκα σταδίους μ.] That μέγεθος might not signify, as some explain it, circumference,—I am far from denying: but that use of the word, besides being of very rare occurrence, (not a single example of it being found in our author; for as to another passage infra vi. 1, there the word merely denotes size, as we use the term bigness to mean size; and in one of Herodot. i. 202, it denotes, like our word bigness, comparative bulk as to superficies.) is scarcely permitted by the context, which, as the island is spoken of as stretching across the port, naturally suggests the idea of length. In this view I am supported by the united opinion of Stanhope and Poppo.

Περὶ, just after, bears the sense circiter; and μάλιστα that of ad summum. See note on i. 54. Or we may, with Dobree, explain it plus minus, which sense the word bears supra i. 63 & 118.

7. ναυσὶν ἀντιπρώροις] 'with ships having their prows facing [the sea].' I have here followed the recent editors in introducing into the text, for vulg. ἀντιπρώρους, ἀντιπρώροις, such being an epithet applied to ships at ii. 91, and iii. 13.

βύζην] The word has here the same use as in Arrian, E. A. i. 19, 4, ἀντιπρώρους βύζην τὰς τριήρεις ὁρμίσαντες. Appian, Pun. c. 123. Jos. Bell. iii. 7, 31. Its literal sense is confertum, 'crammed closely,' as in Lucian, Lexiph. 4, μετὰ τοῦ σύῤῥακος βύζην ὠστιζόμενοι, 'crammed close.' The word is not rightly derived from βύζω: it comes from βύω; ζην being no other than the adverbial termination, the force of which is exactly the same as that of δην; as may be instanced in ῥύδην, σύδην, χύδην, &c. As to the present word, I suspect that its earliest form was βύσδην, afterwards softened to βύζην or βύδην.

8. At ἔσεσθαι, ἕξειν, and ἐκπολιορκήσειν, there is to be supplied, as Bauer remarks, ἐνόμιζον and ἤλπιζον, from the foregoing φοβούμενοι. Ἔχουσαν stands for παρέχουσαν, 'containing in itself.' Of οὐκ ἕξειν ὅθεν, &c., the sense is, 'they would not have any place from which, as a secure post, they might succour,' &c.; or rather, 'the parts about Pylus would not afford them any place to touch at.' At κατειλημμένου supply τοῦ χωρίου, from χωρίον preceding; though, as Goeller observes, the verb ἐκπολιορκήσειν would seem to require the accus.: and hence Bekker proposes to read κατειλημμένον. This, however, is forbidden by the τε—καί: not to say that another example of the same idiom is adduced by Goeller from ii. 8, ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, ἄλλως τε καὶ προειπόντων, &c. for προειπόντας.

παρασκευῆς κατειλημμένου. 9. ὡς δ' ἐδόκει αὐτοῖς ταῦτα, καὶ διεβίβαζον ἐς τὴν νῆσον τοὺς ὁπλίτας ἀποκληρώσαντες ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν λόχων. 10. καὶ διέβησαν μὲν καὶ ἄλλοι πρότερον κατὰ διαδοχήν, οἱ δὲ τελευταῖοι, καὶ ἐγκαταληφθέντες, εἴκοσι καὶ τετρακόσιοι ἦσαν, καὶ Εἵλωτες οἱ περὶ αὐτούς· ἦρχε δ' αὐτῶν Ἐπιτάδας ὁ Μολόβρου.

IX. Δημοσθένης δὲ, ὁρῶν τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους μέλλοντας προσβάλλειν ναυσί τε ἅμα καὶ πεζῷ, παρεσκευάζετο καὶ αὐτός· καὶ τὰς τριήρεις, αἵπερ ἦσαν αὐτῷ ἀπὸ τῶν καταλειφθεισῶν ἀνασπάσας ὑπὸ τὸ τείχισμα, † προσεσταύρωσε, καὶ τοὺς ναύτας ἐξ αὐτῶν ὥπλισεν ἀσπίσι τε φαύλαις καὶ οἰσυΐναις ταῖς πολλαῖς· οὐ γὰρ ἦν

9. ὡς δ' ἐδόκει—καὶ διεβίβαζον] Compare another example of the same idiom in ii. 93, ὡς δὲ ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς καὶ ἐχώρουν εὐθύς. Ἀποκληρώσαντες, 'having drafted them.'

CH. IX. 1. παρεσκευάζετο καὶ αὐτὸς] 'he, too, made his preparations [for defence].' Ἀνασπάσας ὑπὸ τὸ τείχισμα, 'having drawn up on shore under the fortification.' Προσεσταύρωσε, a little after, admits (as I have shown in my Translation) of no sense that can be tolerated except that proposed by Duker and the Scholiast, namely, that Demosthenes strengthened the ships' defence by upright palisades fixed in the front of them to form a closed port. This is, however, assigning to the πρὸς a signification of which the word is by no means capable. And as to that assigned by Arnold, (who adopts the above view of the sense,) namely, close to, or upon them, or to cover them; thus there arises a sense not a little forced and jejune, and, at any rate, one requiring proof: for as to the passage which he adduces as an example, from Appian, tom. ii. 755, 9, τὰς τάῤῥους προσεσταύρου, (which he explains to mean, 'strengthened the stakes with additional stakes,') it supplies no evidence; there being no reason to suppose that the ditches of the walls of Brusia had before any stakes, but quite the contrary. Schweigh., indeed, on that passage, though he makes no remark on προσεστ., yet he renders praemunirit, as if he had there read προεστ., which is found in one of the best MSS., and is doubtless the true reading. And thence, I would observe, may be confirmed the conjecture here proposed by me in my Translation, and since that time by Dobree, προεσταύρωσε, which is further borne out by the occurrence of that term, infra vii. 25, σταυροὺς πρὸ τῶν νεῶν καταπηγνύναι, and vi. 75, τὴν θάλασσαν προεσταύρωσε. Appian, ii. 631, πυλίδα ἀνέῳξαν, ἣ προεσταύρωτο πυκνωτάτοις σταυροῖς. That H. Steph. so read, is plain, since in his Thes. t. i. p. 1805, he cites as from our author, bk. iv. προσταυροῦσι (read προσταυροῦσαι) τὰς ναῦς, rendering 'palis (in terram) depactis praemunire.' Finally, Poppo (I find) at length is induced to regard this as the true reading, which, I would add, must have been read by Valla. Of this mode of defending a ship drawn on shore, another example is found in Herodot. ix. 97, τάς τε νέας ἀνείρυσαν, καὶ περιεβάλοντο ἕρκος καὶ λίθων καὶ ξύλων—καὶ σκόλοπας περὶ τὸ ἕρκος κατέπηξαν. Now such a fortification as this is called by military writers a stockade, from the French estocade.

τοὺς ναύτας ἐξ αὐτῶν] 'those of them who were sailors,' namely, in opposition to the epibatae or marines, who were regularly armed, nearly as the hoplitae. Compare Xen. Hist. i. 1, 24, ὁπλίσας τὰς ναύτας.

οἰσυΐναις] 'of osiers, or wicker-work.' On these Duker refers to Pollux, x. 176, (who cites the present passage,) and Lucian, Dial. Mort. 293, γέῤῥα οἰσύϊνα. Also Virg. Æn. vii. 632, 'fluctuntque saliqnae Umbonum crates,' where the commentators observe that the wicker-work was covered with leather. Yet that this was not always the case, appears from a passage of Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 25, ὅπλα ἐποιοῦντο—οἰσύϊνα, καὶ ταῦτα ἐλευκοῦντο, i.e. 'plastered them over with pipe-clay, or whitening.' And such are doubtless the shields meant in Sallust, frag. 40, and probably the Persian shields called γέῤῥα, of which mention is made by Harpocration and Eustathius. That this was the earliest kind of shield, is attested by Hesych., who explains the word ἰτέαι by αἱ ἀσπίδες, and it may, indeed, be supposed from the circumstance that ἰτέα of itself sometimes denotes shield, as in Eurip. Suppl. 655, and Troad. 1185 and

ὅπλα ἐν χωρίῳ ἐρήμῳ πορίσασθαι· ἀλλὰ καὶ ταῦτα ἐκ λῃστρικῆς Μεσσηνίων τριακοντόρου καὶ κέλητος ἔλαβον, † οἳ ἔτυχον παραγενόμενοι· ὁπλῖταί τε τῶν Μεσσηνίων τούτων ὡς τεσσαράκοντα ἐγένοντο, οἷς ἐχρῆτο μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων. 2. τοὺς μὲν οὖν πολλοὺς τῶν τε ἀόπλων καὶ ὡπλισμένων ἐπὶ τὰ τετειχισμένα μάλιστα καὶ ἐχυρὰ τοῦ χωρίου πρὸς τὴν ἤπειρον ἔταξε, προειπὼν ἀμύνασθαι τὸν πεζόν, ἢν προσβάλλῃ· αὐτὸς δὲ ἀπολεξάμενος ἐκ πάντων ἑξήκοντα ὁπλίτας καὶ τοξότας ὀλίγους, ἐχώρει ἔξω τοῦ τείχους ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, ᾗ μάλιστα ἐκείνους προσεδέχετο πειράσειν ἀποβαίνειν, ἐς χωρία μὲν χαλεπὰ καὶ πετρώδη πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος τετραμμένα, σφίσι δὲ τοῦ τείχους ταύτῃ ἀσθενεστάτου ὄντος, † ἐπισπάσασθαι αὐτοὺς ἡγεῖτο

1193, where, from the epithet χαλκώνωτον, we may infer that such shields were sometimes covered with brass: and such may be those adverted to in Theocr. Idyll. xvi. 79, ἀχθόμενοι σακέεσσι βραχίονας ἰτείνοισιν. Finally, these primitive shields of wicker-work whitened over are still in use in all parts of the east, especially China.

ἐκ λῃστρικῆς Μεσσηνίων τριακοντόρου καὶ κέλητος] 'from a piratical (or privateering) thirty-oared bark and pinnace;' the latter, as it would seem, belonging to the former. This name (derived from κέλης, a race-horse) was given to a vessel of this kind, from its being built with a particular reference to speed, (and therefore of a long and narrow form,) like the celox of the Romans and our pinnace.

οἳ ἔτυχον παραγενόμενοι] If this reading be correct, the subject of the verb must be Μεσσήνιοι. Yet, from the harshness thus involved, one may suspect the true reading to be αἳ—παραγενόμεναι: in which case the sense will be, 'which happened to have put in.' The Messenians were those of Naupactus, the bark being probably one of several cruisers sent out from Naupactus for privateering purposes.

2. τοὺς πολλοὺς—ἔταξε] Demosthenes had ranged the greater number of his troops (whether with or without armour) on the fortified and naturally strong position to land-ward, because, strong as the place might be, it would be attacked by an immense force; while the smaller number, consisting, however, of picked men, would suffice to keep the enemy off to the seaward, since the only landing-place existing was narrow and steep. Of its situation an exact description may be seen in Colonel Leake's Southern Greece, p. 414.

ἐς χωρία, &c.] These words are, as Haack very properly points out, an apposition explanatory of the foregoing. Render, 'at places turned towards the sea, difficult indeed and rocky, but where, as the wall was there the weakest, he thought they would be induced to try their best endeavours.' This version of a passage not a little difficult and perplexing, is, I believe, wholly unobjectionable. True it is that thus for ἐπισπάσασθαι must be read ἐπισπάσεσθαι, which I long ago proposed as a probable conjecture in my Translation, and afterwards found the same to have occurred to Dobree. Since that time the reading (which the Scholiast must certainly have had in his copy) has been adopted by Goeller and Poppo; though, indeed, these two commentators differ as to the precise import of the words ἐπισπ. προθυμήσεσθαι: for while the former supposes προθυμήσομαι ἐπισπάσεσθαι to be put in the same manner as ξυμπροθυμηθέντες ἀπαλλάξεσθαι, and such like phrases, on which he treats in Proleg. i. 1, p. 159; the latter, on the other hand, thinks the future tense in προθ. is used, from there being a signification of what is future inherent in the whole sentence (see note on ii. 29): to which Poppo, in his Appendix, objects that what is allowable in the case of 'verbs of willing, wishing, &c., is not so after one of drawing or inducing.' But surely the expressions I am induced to try, and I am willing or desirous to try, are no other than synonymous: and hence I entirely coincide in the view adopted by Goeller. There is, indeed, the less harshness in this use of the fut. after a fut., because, in fact, as Goeller is aware, προθ. depends on ὥστε understood. Examples both of the elliptical and the complete form may be seen in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 532. In such a case the infin. with ὥστε is expressive of purpose, aim, object, &c. In old English this was denoted by the prepos. for; e. g. 'I am desirous, anxious, or induced for to do it.' Here, then, the sense, if fully evolved, would stand thus:

† προθυμήσεσθαι· οὔτε γὰρ αὐτοὶ ἐλπίζοντες ποτὲ ναυσὶ κρατήθησεσθαι, οὐκ ἰσχυρὸν ἐτείχιζον, ἐκείνους τε, βιαζομένους τὴν ἀπόβασιν, ἀλώσιμον τὸ χωρίον γίγνεσθαι. 3. κατὰ τοῦτο οὖν πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν θάλασσαν χωρήσας ἔταξε τοὺς ὁπλίτας, ὡς ἄρξων, ἢν δύνηται· καὶ παρεκελεύσατο τοιάδε.

X. "Ἀνδρες οἱ ξυναράμενοι τοῦδε τοῦ κινδύνου, μηδεὶς ὑμῶν ἐν τῇ τοιᾷδε ἀνάγκῃ ξυνετὸς βουλέσθω δοκεῖν εἶναι, ἐκλογιζόμενος ᾗ ἡγεῖτο αὐτοὺς ἐπισπάσεσθαι (for ἐπισπασήσεσθαι, as just after κρατήσεσθαι stands for κρατηθήσεσθαι) ὥστε προθυμεῖσθαι, scil. ἐλεῖν τὸ τεῖχος. Of προθυμ. the import is here 'to earnestly strive to do a thing;' and such is the sense it bears infra ch. 12, 2, where on the very matter here in question we have, προὐθυμοῦντο μὲν, ἀξένατοι δ' ἦσαν ἀποβῆναι.

οὔτε γὰρ — ἐκείνους τε — γίγνεσθαι] Verba οὐκ ἰσχυρὸν ἐτείχιζον, quæ totam periodum continent, de more Thucydidis, interjecta sunt duobus membris, quibus infirmioris illius munitionis rationes exponuntur. Participium quidem ἐλπίζοντες ad utrumque pertinet infinitivum, ipsa autem membra inter se distinguuntur particulis οὔτε—τέ. 'Non enim firmius [illam partem] muniverant, existimantes neque se unquam navibus devictum iri, et ab illis, si per vim in terram escenderent, hoc castellum facili negotio capi posse.' (Haack.) Goell. and Arn. are of the opinion of the Scholiast, that ἐλπὶς ἦν is at ἐκείνους to be supplied from the preceding participle ἐλπίζοντες. This, however, is doing violence to the construction, and obtruding a sense quite foreign to the intention of the writer. The two members of the sentence cannot, as suspended in common on the same participle ἐλπίζοντες, be referred to any other than the same subject. The difficulty in question will almost wholly disappear if we bear in mind that the partic. ἐλπίζοντες is meant per dilogiam (a figure frequent in our author) to be taken with both members, though in a sense adapted to each. In the first it will have the sense expecting: in the second, that of believing, or thinking. Render, 'For they themselves had not built it strong, both as not expecting that they would be in the power of shipping, and as being fully of opinion that if they (the enemy) should once force their debarkation, the place was practicable.' Compare Herodot. iii. 153, ἐδόκεε ἀλωσιμος ἡ Βαβυλών. In this sense, too, the term occurs in Xen. Mem. iii. 11, 11, and in the Tragedians.

CH. X. Now follows the animated and truly soldier-like address of Demosthenes to his brave little band on the beach, while expecting the attack of the Peloponnesian fleet. In point of brevity and pith, it is not unlike some preceding from the most daring chieftain of modern times, Napoleon, especially that at the bridge of Lodi. In either case the oratory is alike simple and effective; though with this difference, that in the one it was employed to excite the ardent spirit of aggression proper to offensive warfare; in the other, the equally determined, though more composed, valour called for by defensive warfare: to excite which, he cheers them to the combat by pointing out the advantages of their position; which, he shows, were such as fully to counterbalance the enemy's numerical superiority; and, appealing to the motives not less of hope than of fear, he reminds them that their safety must entirely depend on their determined resistance to every attempt at debarkation.

1. ἄνδρες οἱ ξυναράμενοι τοῦδε τοῦ κινδύνου] Demosthenes, with admirable judgment, addresses them as companions in the same danger; thereby implying that, arduous as it was, he shared it in common with themselves, (similarly as says Nicias, infra vii. 72, 2, ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ κινδύνῳ τοῖς φανλοτάτοις αἰωροῦμαι,) and might therefore with propriety exhort them to meet it. Ξυνάρασθαι, like those verbs in our language which express, or, as here, imply, participation, takes the genitive. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 325. Of this use examples are found, besides the present passage, in several of Dionys. Hal. and others of the later writers. In this exordium (closely imitated by Procop. p. 228, 29.) it would seem that the pronoun μοι is, from modesty, left to be understood, which is expressed in a similar passage of Liban. Orat. Paneg. in Julian. οἱ Μαγνεντιῳ συναράμενοι τοῦ κινδύνου.

ἐν τῇ τοιᾷδε ἀνάγκῃ] 'in such a state of necessity as this.' Μηδεὶς — ξυνετὸς βουλέσθω δοκεῖν εἶναι, &c. 'Let no one wish to seem clever,' i. e. affect the credit of cleverness, by estimating the full magnitude of the peril which environs us. In ἐκλογιζόμενος there is a metaphor taken

ἅπαν τὸ περιεστὸς ἡμᾶς δεινὸν, μᾶλλον ‡ δ' ἀπερισκέπτως εὔελπις ὁμόσε χωρῆσαι τοῖς ἐναντίοις, καὶ ἐκ τούτων ἂν περιγενόμενος. ὅσα γὰρ ἐς ἀνάγκην ἀφῖκται, ὥσπερ τάδε, λογισμὸν ἥκιστα ἐνδεχόμενα, κινδύνου τοῦ ταχίστου προσδεῖται. 2. ἐγὼ δὲ καὶ τὰ πλείω ὁρῶ πρὸς ἡμῶν ὄντα, ἢν ἐθέλωμέν † τε μεῖναι, καὶ μὴ, τῷ πλήθει αὐτῶν

from casting up accounts. See Eurip. Suppl. 482.

μᾶλλον δ' ἀπερισκέπτως] So I read, with Haack, Goeller, and Poppo, from a majority of the best MSS., confirmed by the authority of the Scholiast; for vulg. ἢ after μᾶλλον, which, though retained by Bekker, cannot by any means be defended, as being destitute alike of propriety and authority; since almost all the MSS. which have not δ' or δὲ, are without any particle at all: which seems to have arisen partly from carelessness, in not seeing that the construction requires some particle, and partly from not knowing which to take of two readings seeming equally good; by which a blank space was left, afterwards meant to be, but never actually, filled up. Now, in such a case, the next copyist would be almost sure to fill up the hiatus left by his predecessor. Of the two readings in question, I prefer δ' to ἢ, because the former word is one far less frequent, in such a case, than the latter: and while the two are so much alike in MSS. as scarcely to be distinguished, a scribe would be almost sure to take ἢ in preference to δ', from that word so commonly being used after μᾶλλον: not that ἢ would be in such a case ungrammatical; but, from a strong opposition being here required, δ' is on that account far more suitable.

Again, for χωρῆσαι, twelve MSS. have χωρήσας, which Arnold is inclined to prefer, as giving a better construction than χωρῆσαι, and answering well to ἐκλογιζόμενος—δεινόν: but, in effect, it is this seeming correspondence that deceived the scribes. That there is no real correspondence, is plain, since thus no tolerable sense can be elicited: for as to the version of Arnold, 'But [let him] rather [show his sense] by going straightforward to encounter the enemy, and with a cheerful hope, and by thus being likely to win the victory'—it presents, in the latter part of the passage, a miserable falling off of the sense, which had begun, with such good promise, in the former. In tracing the construction we must, as Goeller observes, at μᾶλλον δὲ χωρῆσαι, bring in ἕκαστος from the foregoing μηδείς; as in a similarly framed passage infra viii. 66, ἀντέλεγεν οὐδεὶς ἔτι τῶν ἄλλων, δεδιὼς καὶ ὁρῶν [ἕκαστος] τὸ συνεστηκός. Goeller further observes, 'Porro cum illo ἕκαστος cogitatione junge verba καὶ ἐκ τούτων ἂν περιγενόμενος, et supple μᾶλλον δὲ βουλέσθω ἕκαστος ἀπερισκέπτως εὔελπις δοκεῖν ὁμόσε χωρῆσαι τοῖς ἐναντίοις, καὶ ἐκ τούτων ἂν περιγενόμενος, i. e. potius unusquisque non hæsitans, plenus spei, hostibus obviam ivisse videri velit, quum, ut sperari licet, salvus etiam ex hoc periculo discesserit. Nam ἂν περιγενόμενος præteriti vim habet: ἐὰν, ὡς εἰκὸς, περιγένηται. Vide Herm. ad Vig. p. 814, 231.' As illustrative of the present, compare a passage supra i. 141, where Pericles bids his men be of good courage, τὸ πιστὸν ἔχοντας ἐκ τῶν κινδύνων καὶ ἂν περιγενέσθαι, 'that they may even survive their dangers,' 'escape out of them safe.' In ὁμόσε χωρεῖν τινι we have a common and customary phrase, like cominus ire in Latin, and our to close with, denoting a coming to close engagement with.

ὅσα γὰρ — προσδεῖται] What is here said is meant to justify the preceding counsel as regarded ἀπερισκέπτως. Render, 'For matters which, like the present, are come to extremity, as they least admit of reflection, so they need the greatest hazardry.' Κινδύνου stands for διακινδυνεύσεως, periclitationis: and so in Tacit. Germ. 40, we have, 'Non per obsequium, sed prœliis et periclitando tuti sunt,' where there is an hendiadys. Of ἐς ἀνάγκην ἀφῖχθαι, which is a phrase like our 'to come to a pinch,' an example occurs also in a passage of Isocr. Arch. τοὺς εἰς ἀνάγκας ἀφιγμένους. The phrase ἐνδέχεσθαι is found at iv. 92, and in Jos. 848 (Huds.).

2. ἐγὼ δὲ—ὄντα] Render, 'I, for my part, even see more circumstances that are for us [than against us]:' thus offering the strongest incentive to courage; though, at the same time, he thinks proper to qualify it by reminding them that the advantage they possess can be retained only by maintaining their position (ἢν ἐθ. μεῖναι): and to induce them so to do, he warns them of the consequences of the contrary course—however that might be prompted by the fear of superior numbers—which is, that they would thus betray their advantages.

For τε, Elmsl. and Wellauer conjecture

καταπλαγέντες, τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ἡμῖν κρείσσω καταπροδοῦναι. 3. τοῦ † τε γὰρ χωρίου τὸ δυσέμβατον ἡμέτερον νομίζω· ὃ, μενόντων ἡμῶν, ξύμμαχον γίγνεται, ὑποχωρήσασι δὲ, καίπερ χαλεπὸν ὂν, εὔπορον

the true reading to be γε. If this be not admitted, it will be necessary to suppose a transposition of the particle for μεῖναί τε καὶ μὴ, &c., of which examples are adduced by Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, 300: though in not one of these instances is there found, as in the present, τε—καὶ occurring in two separate clauses; insomuch that the τε after μεῖναι would be inadmissible, as closely uniting clausulæ which the context shows to be distinct; the force of the latter clausula being to urge the act denoted in the former, by showing the consequences of not doing it. Such being the case, I prefer to read γε. Certain it is that most jejune and utterly inadmissible is the sense also assigned to the τε by Arnold.

τῷ πλήθει is a dat. for genit. with ὑπὸ, as at v. 10. vi. 33, et al. By τὰ κρείσσω understand the things in which they had the advantage,—namely, in their position.

3. Demosthenes now specifies the chief disadvantage on the side of the enemy, and in which their own superiority may be especially said to lie.

τὸ δυσέμβατον] Meaning the difficulty of debarkation. Of this term, which is very rare, I know no example elsewhere except in Dio Cass. 820, 57, ὕλαις δυσεμβάτοις, where, for δυσεμβάτοις, read δυσέμβατος. So Hesych. explains δυσέμβατος by ἀτριβὴς and τραχύς. Poppo thinks that here, for δυσεμβ., we should have expected δυσέκβ. But besides that the word is only found in the writers infimæ Græcitatis, δυσέμβ. is a more forcible and a very appropriate term, as used of a rocky shore which would have to be mounted from the first attempt at debarkation.

The τε before τοῦ χωρίου is by Poppo and Arnold supposed to have answering to it the τε, a little further on, at τό τε πλῆθος. That, however, would involve a mere verbal correspondence without any correspondence in sense, and would oblige us to place the intermediate portion in a parenthesis; though there is nothing parenthetical in its character. Hence I would regard the τε as having crept in from the margin, where it was, I suspect, originally a γε standing for a var. lect. on the foregoing τε. Ἡμέτερον stands for ἡμῶν, meaning παρὰ ἡμῶν. The ὃ, just after, has no place in the best MSS., and has been cancelled by Haack, at the suggestion of Poppo; who, however, himself retains it, though within brackets. I have chosen to follow Bekker and Goeller in retaining it without brackets, and that for three reasons—1. because, as Poppo himself now acknowledges, the construction would without it be most abrupt and harsh; 2. because the ὃ might easily slip out after ω; and 3. because if the ὃ be removed, the γίγνεται cannot be retained, which, however, is found in every MS. and Dionys. Krueger aptly compares a similar passage at vi. 10, οἴεσθε ἴσως τὰς γενομένας ὑμῖν σπονδὰς ἔχειν τι βέβαιον· αἳ, ἡσυχαζόντων μὲν ὑμῶν, ὀνόματι σπονδαὶ ἔσονται,—σφαλέντων δὲ, &c. In either case (besides several others that might be adduced) the relative thus placed at the beginning of a sentence or principal clause therein, is equivalent to καὶ and a pronoun demonstrative. Render, 'and this, as long as we stand firm, is a help to us; but retreating, (i. e. on our retreating,) the thing (i. e. the debarkation), though difficult, will become practicable, there being no one to hinder it.' Here, for ὑποχωρήσασι, we should have expected rather ὑποχωρησάντων; and indeed the Scholiast regards the former as standing for the latter, by an enallage of case; which, however, explains nothing. Again, Poppo supposes the word to be an inveterate error, older than the time of Dionysius, for ὑποχωρησάντων, which he is persuaded our author wrote. But what could occasion this change of an easy and obvious term into one most difficult to understand, and bearing no resemblance to the other, is to me incomprehensible. Surely the extreme antiquity of the common reading tends not a little to confirm its truth. Retaining it, then, as I think we ought, we must explain it as best we can: and first I would observe, by no means is it necessary, with Poppo, to supply τοῖς πολεμίοις, or τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις; for that is only to needlessly increase the difficulty: and though ὑποχωρήσασι cannot be a dat. absol., because, as Poppo observes, it has been fully shown by Wannowski in his Theory of the Case Absolute, fasc. 2, that such does not exist—the dat. may be governed of ἐπὶ understood: and as ἡμῖν is here evidently meant to be supplied, the sense will thus be, 'on our having receded,' i. e. after we shall have receded. The whole clause may be rendered as follows: 'But after we shall have receded, the passage, however

ἅπαν τὸ περιεστὸς ἡμᾶς δεινὸν, μᾶλλον ‡ δ' ἀπερισκέπτως εὔελπις ὁμόσε χωρῆσαι τοῖς ἐναντίοις, καὶ ἐκ τούτων ἂν περιγενόμενος. ὅσα γὰρ ἐς ἀνάγκην ἀφῖκται, ὥσπερ τάδε, λογισμὸν ἥκιστα ἐνδεχόμενα, κινδύνου τοῦ ταχίστου προσδεῖται. 2. ἐγὼ δὲ καὶ τὰ πλείω ὁρῶ πρὸς ἡμῶν ὄντα, ἢν ἐθέλωμέν † τε μεῖναι, καὶ μὴ, τῷ πλήθει αὐτῶν

from casting up accounts. See Eurip. Suppl. 482.

μᾶλλον δ' ἀπερισκέπτως] So I read, with Haack, Goeller, and Poppo, from a majority of the best MSS., confirmed by the authority of the Scholiast; for vulg. ἢ after μᾶλλον, which, though retained by Bekker, cannot by any means be defended, as being destitute alike of propriety and authority; since almost all the MSS. which have not δ' or δὲ, are without any particle at all: which seems to have arisen partly from carelessness, in not seeing that the construction requires some particle, and partly from not knowing which to take of two readings seeming equally good; by which a blank space was left, afterwards meant to be, but never actually, filled up. Now, in such a case, the next copyist would be almost sure to fill up the hiatus left by his predecessor. Of the two readings in question, I prefer δ' to ἢ, because the former word is one far less frequent, in such a case, than the latter: and while the two are so much alike in MSS. as scarcely to be distinguished, a scribe would be almost sure to take ἢ in preference to δ', from that word so commonly being used after μᾶλλον: not that ἢ would be in such a case ungrammatical; but, from a strong opposition being here required, δ' is on that account far more suitable.

Again, for χωρῆσαι, twelve MSS. have χωρήσας, which Arnold is inclined to prefer, as giving a better construction than χωρῆσαι, and answering well to ἐκλογιζόμενος—δεινόν: but, in effect, it is this seeming correspondence that deceived the scribes. That there is no real correspondence, is plain, since thus no tolerable sense can be elicited: for as to the version of Arnold, 'But [let him] rather [show his sense] by going straightforward to encounter the enemy, and with a cheerful hope, and by thus being likely to win the victory'—it presents, in the latter part of the passage, a miserable falling off of the sense, which had begun, with such good promise, in the former. In tracing the construction we must, as Goeller observes, at μᾶλλον δὲ χωρῆσαι, bring in ἕκαστος from the foregoing μηδείς; as in a similarly framed passage infra viii. 66, ἀντέλεγεν οὐδεὶς ἔτι τῶν ἄλλων, δεδιὼς καὶ ὁρῶν [ἕκαστος] τὸ συνεστηκός. Goeller further observes, 'Porro cum illo ἕκαστος cogitatione junge verba καὶ ἐκ τούτων ἂν περιγενόμενος, et supple μᾶλλον δὲ βουλέσθω ἕκαστος ἀπερισκέπτως εὔελπις δοκεῖν ὁμόσε χωρῆσαι τοῖς ἐναντίοις, καὶ ἐκ τούτων ἂν περιγενόμενος, i. e. potius unusquisque non hæsitans, plenus spei, hostibus obviam ivisse videri velit, quum, ut sperari licet, salvus etiam ex hoc periculo discesserit. Nam ἂν περιγενόμενος præteriti vim habet: ἐὰν, ὡς εἰκὸς, περιγένηται. Vide Herm. ad Vig. p. 814, 231.' As illustrative of the present, compare a passage supra i. 141, where Pericles bids his men be of good courage, τὸ πιστὸν ἔχοντας ἐκ τῶν κινδύνων καὶ ἂν περιγενέσθαι, 'that they may even survive their dangers,' 'escape out of them safe.' In ὁμόσε χωρεῖν τινι we have a common and customary phrase, like cominus ire in Latin, and our to close with, denoting a coming to close engagement with.

ὅσα γὰρ — προσδεῖται] What is here said is meant to justify the preceding counsel as regarded ἀπερισκέπτως. Render, 'For matters which, like the present, are come to extremity, as they least admit of reflection, so they need the greatest hazardry.' Κινδύνου stands for διακινδυνεύσεως, periclitationis: and so in Tacit. Germ. 40, we have, 'Non per obsequium, sed prœliis et periclitando tuti sunt,' where there is an hendiadys. Of ἐς ἀνάγκην ἀφῖχθαι, which is a phrase like our 'to come to a pinch,' an example occurs also in a passage of Isocr. Arch. τοὺς εἰς ἀνάγκας ἀφιγμένους. The phrase ἐνδέχεσθαι is found at iv. 92, and in Jos. 848 (Huds.).

2. ἐγὼ δὲ—ὄντα] Render, 'I, for my part, even see more circumstances that are for us [than against us]:' thus offering the strongest incentive to courage; though, at the same time, he thinks proper to qualify it by reminding them that the advantage they possess can be retained only by maintaining their position (ἢν ἐθ. μεῖναι): and to induce them so to do, he warns them of the consequences of the contrary course—however that might be prompted by the fear of superior numbers—which is, that they would thus betray their advantages.

For τε, Elmsl. and Wellauer conjecture

καταπλαγέντες, τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ἡμῖν κρείσσω καταπροδοῦναι. 3. τοῦ † τε γὰρ χωρίου τὸ δυσέμβατον ἡμέτερον νομίζω· ὃ, μενόντων ἡμῶν, ξύμμαχον γίγνεται, ὑποχωρήσασι δὲ, καίπερ χαλεπὸν ὂν, εὔπορον

the true reading to be γε. If this be not admitted, it will be necessary to suppose a transposition of the particle for μεῖναί τε καὶ μὴ, &c., of which examples are adduced by Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, 300: though in not one of these instances is there found, as in the present, τε—καὶ occurring in two separate clauses; insomuch that the τε after μεῖναι would be inadmissible, as closely uniting clausulæ which the context shows to be distinct; the force of the latter clausula being to urge the act denoted in the former, by showing the consequences of not doing it. Such being the case, I prefer to read γε. Certain it is that most jejune and utterly inadmissible is the sense also assigned to the τε by Arnold.

τῷ πλήθει is a dat. for genit. with ὑπὸ, as at v. 10. vi. 33, et al. By τὰ κρείσσω understand the things in which they had the advantage,—namely, in their position.

3. Demosthenes now specifies the chief disadvantage on the side of the enemy, and in which their own superiority may be especially said to lie.

τὸ δυσέμβατον] Meaning the difficulty of debarkation. Of this term, which is very rare, I know no example elsewhere except in Dio Cass. 820, 57, ὕλαις δυσεμβάτοις, where, for δυσεμβάτοις, read δυσέμβατος. So Hesych. explains δυσέμβατος by ἀτριβὴς and τραχύς. Poppo thinks that here, for δυσέμβ., we should have expected δυσέκβ. But besides that the word is only found in the writers infimæ Græcitatis, δυσέμβ. is a more forcible and a very appropriate term, as used of a rocky shore which would have to be mounted from the first attempt at debarkation.

The τε before τοῦ χωρίου is by Poppo and Arnold supposed to have answering to it the τε, a little further on, at τό τε πλῆθος. That, however, would involve a mere verbal correspondence without any correspondence in sense, and would oblige us to place the intermediate portion in a parenthesis; though there is nothing parenthetical in its character. Hence I would regard the τε as having crept in from the margin, where it was, I suspect, originally a γε standing for a var. lect. on the foregoing τε. Ἡμέτερον stands for ἡμῶν, meaning πρὸ ἡμῶν. The ὅ, just after, has no place in the best MSS., and has been cancelled by Haack, at the suggestion of Poppo; who, however, himself retains it, though within brackets. I have chosen to follow Bekker and Goeller in retaining it without brackets, and that for three reasons—1. because, as Poppo himself now acknowledges, the construction would without it be most abrupt and harsh; 2. because the ὅ might easily slip out after ω; and 3. because if the ὅ be removed, the γίγνεται cannot be retained, which, however, is found in every MS. and Dionys. Krueger aptly compares a similar passage at vi. 10, οἴεσθε ἴσως τὰς γενομένας ἐμῖν σπονδὰς ἔχειν τι βέβαιον· αἵ, ἡσυχαζόντων μὲν ὑμῶν, ὀνόματι σπονδαὶ ἔσονται,—σφαλέντων δὲ, &c. In either case (besides several others that might be adduced) the relative thus placed at the beginning of a sentence or principal clause therein, is equivalent to καὶ and a pronoun demonstrative. Render, 'and this, as long as we stand firm, is a help to us; but retreating, (i. e. on our retreating,) the thing (i. e. the debarkation), though difficult, will become practicable, there being no one to hinder it.' Here, for ὑποχωρήσασι, we should have expected rather ὑποχωρησάντων; and indeed the Scholiast regards the former as standing for the latter, by an enallage of case; which, however, explains nothing. Again, Poppo supposes the word to be an inveterate error, older than the time of Dionysius, for ὑποχωρησάντων, which he is persuaded our author wrote. But what could occasion this change of an easy and obvious term into one most difficult to understand, and bearing no resemblance to the other, is to me incomprehensible. Surely the extreme antiquity of the common reading tends not a little to confirm its truth. Retaining it, then, as I think we ought, we must explain it as best we can: and first I would observe, by no means is it necessary, with Poppo, to supply τοῖς πολεμίοις, or τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις; for that is only to needlessly increase the difficulty: and though ὑποχωρήσασι cannot be a dat. absol., because, as Poppo observes, it has been fully shown by Wannowski in his Theory of the Case Absolute, fasc. 2, that such does not exist—the dat. may be governed of ἐπὶ understood: and as ἡμῖν is here evidently meant to be supplied, the sense will thus be, 'on our having receded,' i. e. after we shall have receded. The whole clause may be rendered as follows: 'But after we shall have receded, the passage, however it be difficult [now], will [then] be easy, there being no one to hinder it.' So in Xen. Anab. iii. 5, 17, we have, ἐντεῦθεν δὲ εὔπορον ἔφασαν εἶναι, (scil. τὸ χωρίον,) ὅποι τις ἐθέλει πορεύεσθαι, and Dio Cass. 958, 22, τὰ εὔπορα τοῦ χωρίου. The ἄτε, found in two MSS. before μηδενὸς, is, indeed, somewhat confirmed by a passage of Polyb. v. 48, 10, where we have, διαβὰς τὸν ποταμὸν ἀσφαλῶς, ἄτε μηδενὸς κωλύοντος: but even there, as here, the ἄτε was probably nothing more than a mere marginal gloss; since in another passage of the above writer, iii. 42, 8, we have διεκομίσθησαν ἀσφαλῶς, μηδενὸς κωλύοντος.

ἔσται, μηδενὸς κωλύοντος· καὶ τὸν πολέμιον δεινότερον ἕξομεν, μὴ ‡ῥᾳδίας αὐτῷ πάλιν οὔσης τῆς ἀναχωρήσεως, ἣν καὶ ὑφ' ἡμῶν βιάζηται· ἐπὶ γὰρ ταῖς νανσὶ ῥᾷστοί εἰσιν ἀμύνεσθαι, ἀποβάντες δὲ ἐν τῷ ἴσῳ ἤδη. 4. τό τε πλῆθος αὐτῶν οὐκ ἄγαν δεῖ φοβεῖσθαι· κατ' ὀλίγον γὰρ μαχεῖται, καίπερ πολὺ ὄν, ἀπορίᾳ τῆς προσορμίσεως· καὶ οὐκ ἐν γῇ στρατός ἐστιν ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου μείζων, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ νεῶν, αἷς πολλὰ τὰ καίρια δεῖ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ξυμβῆναι. 5. ὥστε

καὶ τὸν πολέμιον—βιάζηται] Render, 'we shall have (i. e. find) the enemy the more formidable, or troublesome (pressing us the harder), the retreat back being not easy to him, if he be forced by us [to give way].' At ῥᾳδίας the reading is disputed. The common reading is ῥᾳδίως, which has been retained by Bekker; while Haack, Poppo, and Goeller edit ῥᾳδίας, from seven MSS., giving the preference to it on the ground of its being the less familiar expression: and they adduce examples of a similar use of adverbs in the predicate, for adjectives, even when εἶναι and γίγνεσθαι are copulas, especially with ἴσα, χωρίς, οὕτως, (as infra ii. 47, οὐδὲ φθορὰ οὕτως ἀνθρώπων ἐμνημονεύετο γενέσθαι,) ὅμοια, ἴσα; referring, for others, to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 308. Thiersch, Gr. § 307, 5. Of these, however, several are not to the purpose; nor, indeed, in any one of these cases is ῥᾳδίως to be found so used: nay, whether it could be so used, consistently with propriety, may be doubted; since while here the article is used with the substantive, in none of the passages adduced by the above philologists do I find that it has place. Of the words in question the literal rendering is, 'the retreat back again being not easy to him.' Now in such a case I see not how the adverb can be tolerated; for which reason, and because the common reading is found in 29 out of the 36 MSS., I have thought proper to retain it.

ἐπὶ γὰρ ταῖς νανσὶ—ἤδη] These words are meant to prove and illustrate what has just been said,—that, 'if they allow the enemy to force a debarkation, they will find him more troublesome,'—namely, because, though as long as they are at their ships, they are very easy to repulse, when once on shore, they are on an equal footing with us.

4. τό τε πλῆθος—προσορμίσεως] This is meant to anticipate the objection that 'so superior a force must be irresistible;' q. d. 'It is true the Lacedæmonians are numerous, but their numbers are not formidable, since they, however numerous, can, for want of room for debarkation, only fight by a few at a time.' Κατ' ὀλίγον stands for κατ' ὀλίγους, (which, indeed, formerly had place in the Cod. Clarend.) by a use also found infra v. 32, τὸ κατ' ὀλίγον καὶ μὴ ἅπαντας κινδυνεύειν, and vi. 34, 4, βραδεῖα καὶ κατ' ὀλιγον προσπίπτουσα.

καὶ οὐκ ἐν γῇ—ξυμβῆναι] Another reason is now urged why they are not to be feared,—namely, 'because they are not in a position to act with effect.' The full sense here intended is as follows: 'And it is not an army on shore [that we have to do with], superior in numbers while on equal terms in other respects, but fighting from ships.' Agreeable to this is the view of the sense expressed by Arnold, Poppo, and Kistemacher, 'ac non in terrâ est exercitus, qui sit ex æquo, secum cætera sint paria, major; sed in navibus;' or rather, 'ex navibus.' Μείζων bears the sense 'more powerful,' as at i. 32, μείζονι παρασκευῇ.

The words following, αἷς πολλὰ—ξυμβῆναι, advert to a certain disadvantage under which the enemy's force lay by being on ship-board,—which is, that to ships at sea πολλὰ τὰ καίρια δεῖ ξυμβῆναι: where by τὰ καίρια Portus understands opportunitates. And so Goeller and other commentators, including Arnold, render, 'require many favourable accidents in order to act with effect.' To this sense, however, there lies an insuperable objection on the score of its requiring so much to be supplied,—an objection only lessened, not removed by the passage adduced in exemplification from vi. 23, πολλὰ μὲν ἡμᾶς δέον βουλεύσασθαι, ἔτι δὲ πλεῖω εὐτυχῆσαι, i. e. 'if we would accomplish our object.' The sense demanded by the context is rather that adopted by the ancient Scholiast, Valla, Dukas, Heilm., Kistem., Haack, Goeller, and Dobree, casualties: a sense which Poppo is inclined to adopt, but that he doubts whether examples of this signification can be adduced. As, however, the term may very well, from its root, have a general notion of both time and chance, so it may denote what is casual; for, as says Solomon, Eccles. x. 11, καιρὸς καὶ ἀπάντημα συναντήσει σύμπασιν αὐτοῖς. And for an example, the following may suffice: Æschyl. Choëph. 1051, σ' ἐποπτεύων πρόφρων Θεὸς φυλάσσοι καιρίοισι συμφοραῖς, (where read, with Pors., καιρίοις ἐν συμφοραῖς,) meaning, 'amidst dangerous contingencies.' So Suidas explains καιριώτατα by ἐπικινδυνώτατα, and Hesych. καιρια by ἐπικίνδυνα. In the present passage, however, τὰ καίρια means rather what we express by casualties, 'accidental occurrences:' to which use of the word, however rare, Hesych. doubtless alludes when he explains καιρια by τὰ μέρη, τὰ λεπτὰ, βέβαια, where, for the words as they now stand, read, τὰ μέρη τὰ λεπτὰ, ἀβέβαια, and render, 'those parts of the body which are delicate in structure, and are hence exposed to casualty,' or the uncertainties of time and chance. See Eurip. Hipp. 133, compared with Hom. Il. xxiv. 226. How suitable is the epithet in the present case as applied to what concerns the sea, is obvious; for, as the ancient Scholiast says, ἐν θαλάσσῃ πολλὰ γίνεται τὰ ἀπροσδόκητα, καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ κλυδωνίου καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνέμων, καὶ ἐξ ἄλλων πολλῶν, which is so true, that one might apply to the sea what is said of man in Herodot. i. 32, πᾶν ἐστι ἄνθρωπος συμφορή, i. e. casualty, fortune casibus obnoxius, as Schweigh. there rightly explains.

5. ὥστε τὰς—πλήθει] 'insomuch that I account their great difficulties only put them on an equal footing with our paucity of numbers.' Of πλῆθος in this sense (which is rare), to denote paucitas, examples are found in Hom. Il. xvii. 330, πλήθεΐ τε σφετέρῳ, καὶ ὑπερβασίῃ δήμου ἔχοντας. Herodot. i. 77, Κροῖσος μεμφθεὶς τὰς τούτων ἀπορίας ἀντιπάλους ἡγοῦμαι τῷ ἡμετέρῳ πλήθει· καὶ ἅμα ἀξιῶ ὑμᾶς, Ἀθηναίους ὄντας καὶ ἐπισταμένους ἐμπειρίᾳ τὴν ναυτικὴν ἐπ' ἄλλους ἀπόβασιν,—ὅτι, εἴ τις ὑπομένοι, καὶ μὴ φόβῳ κατὰ τὸ πλῆθος τὸ ἑωυτοῦ στράτευμα· ἦν γὰρ οἱ ὁ συμβαλὼν στρατὸς πολλὸν ἐλάσσων ἢ ὁ Κύρου. See also two passages of our author infra v. 6. vi. 104. The principle whereon this idiom turns is this, that πλῆθος (which primarily denotes simply plenitude, fulness) is one of those terms spoken of by Mr. Locke in his Essay, bk. ii. ch. 25. 3. and 26. 3. of terms seemingly absolute, which yet often stand for relatives, (i. e. become relative terms,) as large and small, strong and weak, which, as he observes, are but relative denominations of power to some ideas which we have at that time of greater or less power. Thus it is with the words full and fulness, empty, &c. However, after all, the word, in none of those passages, can be said to absolutely denote fewness, but has simply the signification number, and that by implication is understood to be small. This is quite clear from the use of the comparative term ἀντιπάλους, implying the weighing of one thing with another, as here of number. Thus the Scholiast well explains the words as being equivalent to ἐξισοῖ τὸ πλῆθος πρὸς τὸ ἡμέτερον (scil. πλῆθος) τὸ πολὺ τῆς ἀπορίας ἣν ἔχουσι, 'sets their numbers upon an equality with ours.'

Ἀθηναίους ὄντας καὶ ἐπισταμένους] Meaning, 'you who, as being Athenians, well know by experience,' &c.

τὴν ναυτικὴν ἐπ' ἄλλους ἀπόβασιν] 'the [nature of a] debarkation against others,' i. e. in the face of an opposing force: where we have the very rare idiom of an adjective put in the place of the substantive from which it is derived, in the genit. Hence the expression here used is equivalent to τὴν ἀπόβασιν ἀπὸ νεῶν, 'the debarkation from ships to land.'

The words following, ὅτι, εἴ τις—βιάζοιτο, are explanatory of the foregoing, and may be rendered, 'namely, that if any one should stand his ground, and not, for fear of the dashing surge and the threatening approach to land of the ships, give way, he would never be forced [from his position].' If, however, it should seem too harsh to thus take τὴν ἀπόβασιν as standing for τὴν φύσιν τῆς ἀποβάσεως, we may, with Haack, refer βιάζοιτο, not to the person, but the action, ἀπόβασις: supposing the meaning to be, that 'the debarkation would never be forced' (and so at ch. 10 we have, βιάζεσθαι τὴν ἀπόῥοθίου καὶ νεῶν δεινότητος κατάπλου ὑποχωροίη, οὐκ ἄν ποτε βιάζοιτο,—καὶ αὐτοὺς νῦν μεῖναί τε, καὶ ἀμυνομένους παρ' αὐτὴν τὴν ῥαχίαν, σώζειν ὑμᾶς τε αὐτοὺς καὶ τὸ χωρίον."

XI. Τοσαῦτα τοῦ Δημοσθένους παρακελευσαμένου, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐθάρσησάν τε μᾶλλον, καὶ ἐπικαταβάντες ἐτάξαντο παρ' αὐτὴν τὴν θάλασσαν. 2. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἅραντες, τῷ τε κατὰ γῆν στρατῷ προσέβαλλον τῷ τειχίσματι, καὶ ταῖς ναυσὶν ἅμα, οὔσαις τεσσαράκοντα καὶ τρισί· ναύαρχος δὲ αὐτῶν ἐπέπλει Θρασυμηλίδας ὁ Κρατησικλέους. Σπαρτιάτης. προσέβαλλε δὲ ᾗπερ ὁ Δημοσθένης προσεδέχετο. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι ἀμφοτέρωθεν, ἔκ τε γῆς καὶ ἐκ θαλάσσης, ἠμύνοντο· οἱ δὲ κατ' ὀλίγας ναῦς διελόμενοι, διότι οὐκ ἦν πλείοσι προσχεῖν, καὶ ἀναπαύοντες ἐν τῷ μέρει, τοὺς ἐπίπλους ἐποιοῦντο, προθυμίᾳ τε πάσῃ χρώμενοι καὶ παρακελευσμῷ, εἴ πως ὠσάμενοι ἕλοιεν τὸ τείχισμα. 4. πάντων δὲ φανερώτατος Βρασίδας ἐγένετο. τριηραρχῶν γάρ, καὶ ὁρῶν, τοῦ χωρίου χαλεποῦ βασιν); in which case the ὅτι will have to be construed with ἐπισταμένους, and the sense will then be, 'knowing by experience that the debarkation from shipping to shore can, any one would stand his ground, never be forced.'

The sense of the term τὸ ῥόθιον is best expressed by 'the dashing surge.' Evidently written in imitation of the present are similar passages in Dio Cass. 145. 93, τῷ τε ῥοθίῳ σφᾶς τοῦ πρόσπλου ἐξεφόβησε. Appian, i. 466, ῥοθίῳ τε φοβερῷ καταπλέουσι, and ii. 849, σύν τε βοῇ καὶ ῥοθίῳ νεῶν καὶ καταπλήξει. With respect to the remarkable accumulation of genitives here in ῥοθίου, νεῶν, δεινότητος, and κατάπλου, it is well pointed out by Haack that νεῶν depends on κατάπλου, and that on δεινότητος, which term stands for καταπλήξεως. The αὐτοὺς just after is to be referred to ὑμᾶς, in the sense ipsos quoque.

τὴν ῥαχίαν] Meaning that part of the sea-beach on which the waves break on reaching the shore. Here a rocky beach (or what is in Latin called dorsum) is—as in Æschyl. Prom. 738—to be understood: and indeed such, from its derivation ῥήγνυσθαι, must have been the original acceptation of the word.

Here I have, with Bekker, edited ἡμᾶς, though the MSS. seem to have ὑμᾶς, which, considering that the word has to be referred to ἀξιῶ before, is surely not to be tolerated. This is indeed one of those cases in which the authority of MSS. has far less weight than propriety of language, or fitness as regards the context.

Ch. XI. 1. ἐτάξαντο] 'ranged themselves,' 'drew up.'

2. ἅραντες] This, as Poppo points out, stands for ὁρμηθέντες, with reference both to the sea-forces and the land-forces.

3. κατ' ὀλίγας ναῦς διελόμενοι] A condensed form of expression for 'having drawn their ships into squadrons, each composed of a few.' So vii. 19, 1, κατὰ πόλεις διελόμενοι τὸ ἔργον. See also ii. 75 & 78.

ἐν τῷ μέρει] 'in their turn:' a phrase of frequent occurrence in the Tragedians and in Aristophanes, and which is illustrated by Blomfield on Æschylus, Ag. 325.

παρακελευσμῷ] Meaning the cheering of each other on to the attack. Evidently imitated from which is the expression in Jos. Ant. 100, 7, προθυμίᾳ τε καὶ διακελευσμῷ πρὸς ἀλλήλους χρωμένων. With respect to ὠσάμενοι, just after, we may assign to it the sense irruentes, of which I have noted examples in Arrian, Dio Cass., Dionys. Hal., Diod. Sic., and Plutarch; some of them with ἐπὶ or εἰς and a noun of person; others, with the expression used, as here, absolutely. It is well pointed out by Markland on Max. Tyr. Diss. vii. 9. that the term ὠθεῖσθαι contains in itself a notion of zealous endeavour to accomplish an object.

4. φανερώτατος ἐγένετο] 'was the most distinguished;' as we say, 'most distinguished himself.' So in Diod. Sic. xii. 62, μεγίστης ἀποδοχῆς ἔτυχε, 'gained most approbation.'

ὄντος, τοὺς τριηράρχους καὶ κυβερνήτας, εἴ πη καὶ δοκοίη δυνατὸν εἶναι σχεῖν, ἀποκνοῦντας, καὶ φυλασσομένους τῶν νεῶν, μὴ ξυντρίψωσιν, ἐβόα λέγων ὡς οὐκ εἰκὸς εἴη, ξύλων φειδομένους, τοὺς πολεμίους ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ περιδεῖν τεῖχος πεποιημένους· ἀλλὰ τάς τε σφετέρας ναῦς, βιαζομένους τὴν ἀπόβασιν, καταγνύναι ἐκέλευε, καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους μὴ ἀποκνῆσαι ἀντὶ μεγάλων εὐεργεσιῶν τὰς ναῦς τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐν τῷ παρόντι ἐπιδοῦναι, ὀκείλαντας δὲ, καὶ παντὶ τρόπῳ ἀποβάντας, τῶν τε ἀνδρῶν καὶ τοῦ χωρίου κρατῆσαι. XII. Καὶ ὁ μὲν τούς τε ἄλλους τοιαῦτα ἐπέσπερχε, καὶ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ κυβερνήτην ἀναγκάσας ὀκεῖλαι τὴν ναῦν, ἐχώρει ἐπὶ τὴν ἀποβάθραν· καὶ πειρώμενος ἀποβαίνειν ἀνεκόπη ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ τραυματισθεὶς πολλὰ, ἐλειποψύχησέ τε, καὶ πεσόντος αὐτοῦ ἐς τὴν παρφυλασσομένους τῶν νεῶν] Meaning 'to be chary of their vessels.' It is to be observed that φυλάσσεσθαι here takes the gen., from its having the sense of φείδεσθαι, which always has the genit., as in the words just afterwards added by way of explanation, ξύλων φειδομένους. In ξυντρίψωσιν, just after, we have a strong term signifying 'to dash to pieces,' as any earthen vessel, by being crushed together: though the word was sometimes applied to a ship, as here and in Eurip. Cycl. 698, οὐ ἔῆτ', ἐπεί σε, τῆσδ' ἀποῤῥῆξαι πέτρας Αὐτοῖσι σὺν ναύτῃσι συντρίψω βαλών.

ξύλων φειδομένους] The literal sense of the expression is 'to be chary or sparing of timber;' and the full meaning here intended is, in other words, 'Do not be afraid of timbers, as if the running of the ships on shore would only be a sacrifice of timbers, that might be repaired.' So in Herodot. viii. 100 & 116, we have, οὐ γὰρ ξύλων ἀγὼν ὁ—ἔστι ἡμῖν, ἀλλ' ἀνδρῶν: and Xen. Hist. i. 1. 24, ἀθυμεῖν περὶ ξύλων. Indeed the word ξύλον (from ξύω cognate with ξέω) meant a trunk of a tree hacked and hewed into a sort of square beam; and by ξύλων here we are to understand what in ship-building is especially denoted by the term timbers, namely, the ribs branching from the keel in a vertical direction, (and usually formed of a single beam,) since those, in running a ship on shore, are the first to receive the shock. Of course, Demosthenes, while using the term by a rhetorical meiosis, means the ships themselves. Accordingly he just after exhorts them τὰς ναῦς τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐπιδοῦναι: and in so speaking he would be the more easily understood, since the word ξύλον, in one of its earliest uses, as found in Homer, Hesiod, Pindar, and the earlier tragedians, meant a boat or vessel, originally a mere trunk of a tree hewed and hollowed: and so the Latin terms trabs and ratis, which at first denoted merely a trunk or beam, afterwards meant a ship, and that one of any description, though sometimes with allusion to the original use. So Virg. Æn. iii. 191, says, 'vastumque cava trabe currimus æquor,' and Hor. Od. i. 1, 1.

βιαζομένους τὴν ἀπόβασιν] Schol. σὺν βιᾳ ποιοῦντας. So βιαζ. τὸν ἔκπλουν and ἔσπλουν in Arrian, i. 19, 11. ii. 23, 4, and βιαζ. πάροδον in Zos. v. 29. Diod. Sic. v. 124, 8: and hence in a passage of Polyb. iv. 18, 6. for τῇ πύλῃ βιαζομένους ought to be read τὴν πύλην β.

ἀντὶ μεγάλων εὐεργεσιῶν] 'in return for great benefits.' Evidently imitated from these are the words of Dionys. Hal. Ant. vii. 60, ἀξιῶν ἀντὶ πολλῶν καὶ καλῶν ἔργων μίαν χάριν ἐπιδοθῆναι.

ὀκειλαντας] Schol. προσπελάσαντας, for which, however, ought doubtless to be read προσελάσαντας; that term and its derivative προσελασία being, as Ernesti in his Lex. testifies, used 'de navium appulsu.' See my note on Acts xxvii. 41.

Ch. XII. 1. τοὺς ἄλλους ἐπέσπερχε] 'roused on,' namely, by such spirit-stirring words. On the double accus. here see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 421, note 2.

τὴν ἀποβάθραν] Meaning the gang-board, or heavy plank used in landing from vessels. The term occurs in Hdot. viii. 93. Poppo remarks that 'at πολλά, a little after, we may either supply τραύματα (similarly as πληγὰς is supplied in the phrase τυπτόμενος πολλὰς, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 635); or we may take πολλὰ adverbially.' Of these two methods of explanation, the former seems to deserve the preference.

εξειρεσίαν, ἡ ἀσπὶς περιεῤῥύη ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ, ἐξενεχθείσης αὐτῆς ἐς τὴν γῆν, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀνελόμενοι, ὕστερον πρὸς τὸ τροπαῖον ἐχρήσαντο ὃ ἔστησαν τῆς προσβολῆς ταύτης. 2. οἱ δ' ἄλλοι προὐθυμοῦντο μὲν, ἀδύνατοι δ' ἦσαν ἀποβῆναι, τῶν τε χωρίων χαλεπότητι, καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων μενόντων καὶ οὐδὲν ὑποχωρούντων. 3. ἐς τοῦτό τε περιέστη ἡ τύχη, ὥστε Ἀθηναίους μὲν ἐκ γῆς τε, καὶ ταύτης Λακωνικῆς, ἀμύνεσθαι ἐκείνους ἐπιπλέοντας, Λακεδαιμονίους δὲ ἐκ νεῶν τε καὶ ἐς τὴν ἑαυτῶν, πολεμίαν οὖσαν, ἐπ' Ἀθηναίους ἀποβαίνειν· ἐπὶ πολὺ γὰρ ἐποίει τῆς δόξης ἐν τῷ τότε τὴν παρεξειρεσίαν] The word signifies properly that part of either end of a vessel which is aft of the oar-way (τῶν εἰρεσιῶν), and of which we find mention in Polyæn. iii. 11, 13, ὑπὸ τὴν παρεξειρεσίαν ἑκατέρου τοίχου. Here, however, it must be understood to denote that aft of the prow. Of the word (which is rare) examples are found in Dio Cass., Polyæn., and Arrian.

περιεῤῥύη] Arnold renders, 'slipped from around [his arm];' adducing several examples of a similar use of περί in the sense 'from around,' in the case of περιαιρεῖν and the Latin circumscindere. Here, however, the difficulty remains just the same, namely, how to account for the circumstance of περιῤῥέω, which term properly signifies 'to flow around,' being used in the derived sense 'to slip around,' with the implied notion, arising from the nature of the action, of slipping or tumbling off. In this view the passage of Plato, Crit. p. 111, 6, which Arnold places last, and only directs to be compared, is of more consequence than all the rest; for of περιεῤῥωγυίας τῆς γῆς the meaning is, 'the soil around the hill having slipped off, so as to leave the rock bare;' a phenomenon which is of no unfrequent occurrence in Switzerland. Similarly in a passage of Arrian, Ind. xxx. 8, we have mention of whales' carcases being driven ashore, καὶ σηπόμενα ἀπόλλυσθαί τε, καὶ τὰς σάρκας αὐτοῖσι περιῤῥεούσας ὑπολείπειν τὰ ὀστέα, 'having slipped or fallen off around, leave the bones bare.' So again in Diod. Sic. 33, vol. ii. p. 241, the cold in Scythia is described as so great, that τὰ ἀκρωτήρια τῶν ἀνθρώπων περιῤῥεῖ, 'men's fingers and toes fall off.' Another example, too, (and that containing the construction with εἰς,) is found in Plut. vi. 190, 8, εἰς ἄλλον ἐξ ἄλλου τύπον, ὥσπερ τὸ μεταιρόμενον ὕδωρ, περιῤῥέων ἀεί: and hence in a passage of Plut. Amat. p. 754, ὡς μὴ παραῤῥυῇ ἐεδιὼς, for παραῤῥυῇ ought undoubtedly to be read περιῤῥυῇ, 'fearing lest the ring should slip from his finger.' Here, then, the full sense intended to be expressed is, 'slipped off from his arm and tumbled into the sea;' the idea of tumbling being implied in the subjoined ἐς: and so in Diod. Sic. xii. 62, where the circumstance in question is described, we have the use of the fuller expression ἡ ὀ ἀσπὶς περιῤῥνεῖσα καὶ πεσοῦσα εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν.

3. ἐς τοῦτό τε περιέστη ἡ τύχη] 'to so great a degree was fortune changed;' or literally, 'to this had fortune come round;' implying a total change, similarly as the phrase περιέστη ἐς τοὐναντίον, which is of frequent occurrence in Dionys. Hal. At ἀποβαίνειν, further on, there is no occasion to suppose, with Goeller, the endeavour as here standing for the action itself. It is sufficient to say that the present tense here, as often, represents the action as only commenced and in progress, not completed.

ἐπὶ πολὺ γὰρ ἐποίει τῆς δόξης, &c.] The purpose of these words is to justify what had just been said on the total revolution of circumstances as to the two nations, and to show how much that redounded to the honour of each of the parties. The sense here intended to be expressed is best laid down by Schoemann, Obs. p. 21, and Goeller, who regard the words as equivalent to πολλὴν γὰρ δόξαν ἐποίει ἐν τῷ τότε τοῖς μὲν τὸ ἠπειρώτας μάλιστα εἶναι καὶ τὰ πεζὰ κρατίστους, τοῖς δὲ τὸ θαλασσίους τε εἶναι καὶ ταῖς ναυσὶ πλεῖστον προέχειν: 'plurimam gloriæ suæ sive maximam gloriæ suæ partem efficiebat Lacedæmoniis, quod erant terra optimi; Atheniensibus, quod mari, i. e. Lacedæmoniorum eo tempore gloria in eo maxime posita erat, quod terra; Atheniensium, quod mari optimi erant.' The import of the phrase, then, is, as we should say, 'formed a considerable part of the glory they acquired in the war.' Evidently imitated from hence is the expression in τοῖς μὲν ἠπειρώταις μάλιστα εἶναι, καὶ τὰ πεζὰ κρατίστοις, τοῖς δὲ θαλασσίοις τε, καὶ ταῖς ναυσὶ πλεῖστον προέχειν.

XIII. Ταύτην μὲν οὖν τὴν ἡμέραν καὶ τῆς ὑστεραίας μέρος τι προσβολὰς ποιησάμενοι ἐπέπαυντο· καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ ἐπὶ ξύλα ἐς μηχανὰς παρέπεμψαν τῶν νεῶν τινας ἐς Ἀσίνην, ἐλπίζοντες τὸ κατὰ τὸν λιμένα τεῖχος ὕψος μὲν ἔχειν, ἀποβάσεως δὲ μάλιστα οὔσης ἐλεῖν μηχαναῖς. 2. ἐν τούτῳ δὲ αἱ ἐκ τῆς Ζακύνθου νῆες τῶν Ἀθηναίων παραγίγνονται ‡ πεντήκοντα· προσεβοήθησαν γὰρ τῶν τε φρουρίδων τινὲς αὐτοῖς τῶν ἐκ Ναυπάκτου καὶ Χῖαι τέσσαρες. 3. ὡς δὲ εἶδον τήν τε ἤπειρον ὁπλιτῶν περίπλεων τήν τε νῆσον, ἔν τε τῷ λιμένι οὔσας τὰς ναῦς, καὶ οὐκ ἐκπλεούσας, ἀπορήσαντες ὅπη καθορμίσωνται, τότε μὲν ἐς Πρωτὴν τὴν νῆσον (ἣ οὐ πολὺ ἀπέχει, ἔρημος οὖσα), ἔπλευσαν καὶ ηὐλίσαντο· τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ παρα-

Appian, i. 441, 67, καὶ τοῦτο πρῶτον αὐτὸν ἐπὶ δόξης ἐποίησεν, where had Schweigh. been aware of the imitation, he would have seen that Appian must have written καὶ τοῦτο πολὺ αὐτῷ ἔτι ἐποίησεν; the use of ἔτι there being parallel to that of ἐν τῷ τότε in the present passage.

CH. XIII. 1. ἐπὶ ξύλα ἐς μηχανὰς] 'to fetch timber for the making of machines.' So Appian, i. 439, 27, ἐπὶ ὕλῃ ἐς μηχανὰς ἐὐπλευσε, where, for ὕλῃ, read ὕλην. On this elliptical use of ἐπί, to denote purpose, see Valcken. on Herodot. vii. 193. Of παρέπεμψαν the meaning is, 'sent along shore.'

ἐς Ἀσίνην] On the situation of this place see my note in Translation, and Col. Leake's Travels in the Morea, vol. i. p. 443.

ἐλπίζοντες τὸ κατὰ τὸν λιμένα τεῖχος ὕψος μὲν ἔχειν] Here ἐλπίζοντες, by a certain idiom frequent in our author, includes within it two senses: in the first clause bearing the sense putantes; in the second, that of sperantes. With ὕψος ἔχειν (which signifies 'to have some height,' namely, such as to be defensible,) compare ὕψος λαμβάνειν, i. 91.

On the manner of the thing a certain obscurity exists, which Poppo applies himself to remove as follows: 'Prius Lacedæmonii ab alto (κατὰ τὸ πέλαγος, ch. 8), tunc autem a portu navibus impetum facturi erant; nam castellum Atheniensium in ipso promontorio situm utroque spectabat. Ad portum murus excelsus, sed exscensio facilis; in altum mare versus loca aspera, murus infirmus et exiguus; a terra denique castellum optime munitum erat.' See Col. Leake, Travels in the Morea, vol. i. p. 415.

2. πεντήκοντα] So I have thought proper to edit, for vulg. τεσσαράκοντα, which, though retained by Haack, Bekker, and Goeller, is not permitted by known facts: a circumstance more than sufficient to counterbalance the slenderness of MS. authority for πεντήκοντα, which is, indeed, found only in two MSS., the Clarend. and Venet. (and in collating the former of these, I noticed that the reading πεντ. was on erasure); but considering the near resemblance between the literal figures μ and ν, the authority of MSS. in such a case is but slender.

3. Ηρωτὴν] So I have thought proper to edit, with Poppo, on the authority of the MS. August. (to which I am enabled to add also that of the second Cambridge MS.) and of Steph. Byz., for vulg. Ηρώτην. In a case like the present, of far greater weight than any authority of MSS., is the positive testimony of Steph. Byz., borne out as it is by strong probability, this being an instance in which a difference of accent is not unusual.

The words, a little after, ἔρημος οὖσα, are not to be considered as giving any reason why they went, but are merely to be regarded as an incidental topographical illustration, like another in our author supra i. 26, ἔστι δ' ἰσθμὸς τὸ χωρίον, and one which occurs in a passage of St. John, vi. 10, ἦν δὲ χόρτος πολὺς ἐν τῷ τόπῳ. The real reason why they went thither was, because the fleet was in want of a port, which they would there find, since the island of Prote (which, I suspect, was so called from its being the first that presents itself, on the voyage along the western coast of Greece, to a ship navigating the western coast of Peloponnesus from the gulf of Corinth to the south) was, as Col. Leake informs us, one forming by its σκευασάμενοι ὡς ἐπὶ ναυμαχίαν, ἀνήγοντο,—ἢν μὲν ἀντεκπλεῖν ἐθέλωσι σφίσιν ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν, εἰ δὲ μή, ὡς αὐτοὶ ἐπεσπλευσούμενοι. 4. καὶ οἱ μὲν οὔτε ἀντανήγοντο, οὔτε ἃ διενοήθησαν, φράξαι τοὺς ἔσπλους, ἔτυχον ποιήσαντες· ἡσυχάζοντες δ' ἐν τῇ γῇ, τάς τε ναῦς ἐπλήρουν, καὶ παρεσκευάζοντο, ἢν ἐσπλέῃ τις, ὡς ἐν τῷ λιμένι, ὄντι οὐ σμικρῷ, ναυμαχήσοντες. XIV. Οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι, γνόντες, καθ' ἑκάτερον τὸν ἔσπλουν ὥρμησαν ἐπ' αὐτούς· καὶ τὰς μὲν πλείους καὶ μετεώρους ἤδη τῶν νεῶν καὶ ἀντιπρώρους, προσπεσόντες ἐς φυγὴν κατέστησαν, καὶ ἐπιδιώκοντες, ὡς διὰ βραχέος, position with the continent, the best port north of Navarino.

3. ἢν μὲν ἀντεκπλεῖν ἐθέλωσι, &c.] It has been usually thought that the apodosis to this first clause is wanting, as in another case, iii. 3, καὶ ἢν μὲν ξυμβῇ ἡ πεῖρα. Dukas, however, rightly denies the existence of any anapodoton; and he takes the words as equivalent to παρασκευασάμενοι ἀνήγοντο ὅπως, ἢν μὲν ἐκπλεύσωσιν οἱ πολέμιοι, ναυμαχήσωσιν αὐτοῖς· εἰ δὲ μή, &c. Arnold and Goeller, however, explain the words as follows: παρασκευασάμενοι ὡς ἐπὶ ναυμαχίαν ἀνήγοντο, ἢν μὲν ἀντεκπλεῖν ἐθέλωσι σφίσιν ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν, ἐν τῇ εὐρυχωρίᾳ, εἰ δὲ μή, ὡς αὐτοὶ ἐπεσπλευσούμενοι ἐπὶ ναυμαχίαν ἐν τῷ ἐντὸς τοῦ λιμένος. In this latter mode of explication there is less of simplicity, but perhaps what comes nearer the truth.

4. Here, as Goeller remarks, the relative sentence ἃ διενοήθησαν is, as usual, illustrated by the apposition of the infin. φράξαι, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 476. On the plural ἃ see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 472, 5.

ἢν ἐσπλέῃ τις] Meaning the enemy, the Lacedæmonians; on which idiom see note at v. 14, 4.

ὄντι οὐ σμικρῷ] A litotes to denote very large; this being, in effect, one of the largest harbours in Europe. As to the form σμικρῷ, for which Goeller, with the approbation of Poppo, edits μικρῷ, from two MSS. (Clar. and Græv.) I have chosen, with Bekker, to retain σμικρῷ; such being called for by the authority of almost every MS. (for, from the dissent of the Cod. Venet., I suspect that in the Cod. Clar. the σ has been erased; and as to the Cod. Græv., it is one quite of modern date and of little authority,) and that in a case where MSS. have peculiar weight. Again, that the above form should have place in our author, is the more probable from its being (as Elmsley on Eurip. Med. attests) of universal occurrence in the early tragedians, wherever the metre permits. There, while rare is the use of μικρός, very frequent is that of σμικρός, and that especially where, as here, a meiosis is intended; e. g. Æschyl. Theb. 461, ἐσχημάτισται δ' ἀσπὶς οὐ σμικρὸν τρόπον. Soph. Œd. Col. 587, οὐ σμικρὸς ἀγών. 635, ζασμὸν οὐ σμικρόν. Trach. 873, οὐ σμικρῶν κακῶν ἠρξεν. And so also in Eurip. Hec. 352. Hipp. 1037. Andr. 86. Heracl. 387. Antiop. frag. 24, 1. Moreover, in another passage of our author, vii. 75, we have καὶ ταύτῃ οὐ σμικρᾷ in all the MSS. but ου, and that the least valuable. Indeed I know not one instance of μικρὸς ever being used in such a case, while that of σμικρὸς is perpetual. Herodotus often uses σμικρός, (especially with οὐ, to express a meiosis, as at v. 113, and iii. 4.) but never μικρός: and Pindar uses σμικρὸς once, (namely, in Pyth. iii. 191, σμικρὸς ἐν σμικροῖς.) but never μικρός. Again, that our author did here use the term σμικρός, is the more probable, from the circumstance that his perpetual imitator (Dio Cass.) uses this and its derivatives, though in that writer's age the middle form μικρός was almost exclusively employed. Hence very properly has Bekker in another passage of our author, viii. 81, for vulg. οὐ μικράς, edited, from one of the best MSS., οὐ σμικράς; though he has at iv. 30, left μικρόν. Finally, that our author so wrote, is the more probable, because Herodotus, in the passage which he seems here to have had in mind, has σμικρόν: though whether the ancient writers used σμικρὸς after a word terminating with ς, or rejected the σ, is more than I would venture to assert either way.

Ch. XIV. 1. μετεώρους ἤδη καὶ ἀντιπρώρους] Meaning 'such as had got into deep water, and were ranged prow-forward,' i. e. on their way to meet the enemy. Ὡς διὰ βραχέος is well explained by Poppo to mean 'quatenus, per brevitatem spatii, poterant:' for they would ἔτρωσαν μὲν πολλὰς, πέντε δὲ ἔλαβον, καὶ μίαν τούτων αὐτοῖς ἀνδράσι· ταῖς δὲ λοιπαῖς ἐν τῇ γῇ καταπεφευγυίαις ἐνέβαλλον· αἱ δὲ καὶ, πληρούμεναι ἔτι, πρὶν ἀνάγεσθαι, ἐκόπτοντο·—καί τινας καὶ ἀναδούμενοι κενὰς εἵλκον, τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἐς φυγὴν ὡρμημένων. 2. ἃ ὁρῶντες οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, καὶ περιαλγοῦντες τῷ πάθει, ὅτιπερ αὐτῶν οἱ ἄνδρες ἀπελαμβάνοντο ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, παρεβοήθουν· καὶ ἐπεσβαίνοντες ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν ξὺν τοῖς ὅπλοις, ἀνθείλκον ἐπιλαμβανόμενοι τῶν νεῶν, καὶ ἐν τούτῳ κεκωλῦσθαι ἐδόκει ἕκαστος ᾧ μή τινι καὶ αὐτὸς ἔργῳ παρῆν. 3. ἐγένετό τε ὁ θόρυβος μέγας καὶ ἀντηλλαγμένος soon attain the friendly shore, and be out of their reach. On the term ἔτρωσαν, 'shattered their hulls' by the ἐμβολή or charge, see note at viii. 41, 4.

ἐν τῇ γῇ καταπεφευγυίας ἐνέβαλλον] Commentators are not agreed as to the reference or the force of the ἐν. To refer it, as some do, (including Matth. Gr. Gr. § 577.) to ἐνέβαλλον, leads to a sense any thing but apposite. Preferable is the view of Goeller, who takes ἐν τῇ γῇ as standing for ἐς τὴν γῆν; adducing, in exemplification of this idiom, a passage of Plato, p. 260, τὸν δέ γε σοφιστὴν ἴφαμεν ἐν τούτῳ που τῷ τόπῳ καταπεφευγέναι, where Heind. compares Xen. Hist. iv. 5. 5, οἱ δὲ ἐν τῷ Ἡραίῳ καταπεφευγότες ἐξέφυγον: and he further observes, that 'we do not find this construction in any other tense except the preterite.' That, however, may be considered a circumstance purely accidental, there being no imaginable reason why it should not have place in the present tense. Thus we say 'to take refuge in,' as in a passage of Bp. Atterbury, 'they take refuge in a multitude:' and so here the sense will be, 'which had refuge on the shore.' Still, however, the difficulty remains, how to account for the idiom in question: in order to which, we may best, with Poppo, (Prol. i. 1, 178.) suppose the present to be a sort of condensed form of expression for ἐν τῇ γῇ οὔσαις, καταπεφευγυίας ἐς αὐτὴν, ἐνέβαλλον: and the same principle will apply to the above-cited passages of Plato and Xenophon (and more evidently in the latter, from the circumstance of ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον κατέφυγον occurring just before): and similarly our phrase, above adverted to, 'to take refuge in a multitude,' is to be explained as standing for 'to fly to or be in a multitude.' In short, in the present passage, the principle in question is necessary for the very purpose of drawing forth the full sense intended, and making prominent the most important part of it, which fixes the place of the action, as done to the ships ἐν τῇ γῇ, opposed to those before mentioned, as attacked μετεώρους καὶ ἀντιπρώρους, whereas in this the prows would be turned the contrary way—to land.

ἐκόπτοντο] 'were battered,' namely, by the beaks of the enemy's vessels in charging: of which use of the word another example occurs infra viii. 13, κοπεῖσαι, and one is found in Plut. Alcib. 27, ἔκοπτε τὰς ναῦς. Probably the term obtained this use from that of κόπτω, found in Homer, as employed of a bird or dragon striking with the beak, &c. On the phrase, just after, ἀναδούμενοι εἵλκον, see note at i. 50, 1.

2. περιαλγοῦντες τῷ πάθει] 'grieving exceedingly at the mishap.' The term περιαλγέω is formed from περιαλγής, which is of the same form as περιοργής. In ὅτιπερ, just after, we have a certain Attic, though rare, conjunction of particles, of which I know no examples elsewhere except in Aristoph. Eq. 53. Lucian, i. 140. Poppo compares the form διότιπερ, referring to Hartung de Part. i. p. 342, sq. With ἐπεσβαίνοντες, &c. compare ii. 90, sub fin.

ἀνθείλκον ἐπιλαμβανόμενοι] Meaning, 'hauled off the ships,' laying hold of the poops, and dragging them the contrary way. Here, for vulg. ἀντιλ., which has very slender authority from MSS., and was evidently a gloss, the later editors have very properly edited ἐπιλ.

καὶ ἐν τούτῳ — παρῆν] Meaning, as Arnold explains, ἕκαστος ἐδόκει κεκωλῦσθαι τὸ ἔργον ᾧ τινι ἔργῳ μὴ καὶ αὐτὸς παρῆν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 474, b, and compare the very similar passage at ii. 8. Here, however, Poppo objects to the insertion of the negative between ᾧ and τινι, and proposes to read instead μή τις, found at ii. 8, which I have reason to think had place in the original whence the Cod. Clarend. was copied.

3. ἐγένετο—ἀντηλλαγμένος] The construction is, as Goeller rightly points out, τοῦ ἑκατέρων τρόπου περὶ τὰς ναῦς· οἵ τε γὰρ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ὑπὸ προθυμίας καὶ †ἐκπλήξεως, ὡς εἰπεῖν, ἄλλο οὐδὲν ἢ ἐκ γῆς ἐναυμάχουν· οἵ τε Ἀθηναῖοι, κρατοῦντες, καὶ βουλόμενοι τῇ παρούσῃ τύχῃ ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἐπεξελθεῖν, ἀπὸ νεῶν ἐπεζομάχουν. 4. πολύν τε πόνον παρασχόντες ἀλλήλοις, καὶ τραυματίσαντες, διεκρίθησαν· καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τὰς κενὰς ναῦς, πλὴν τῶν τὸ πρῶτον ληφθεισῶν, διέσωσαν. 5. καταστάντες δὲ ἑκάτεροι ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον, οἱ μὲν τροπαῖόν τε ἔστησαν καὶ νεκροὺς ἀπέδοσαν, καὶ ναυαγίων ἐκράτησαν, καὶ τὴν νῆσον εὐθὺς περιέπλεον καὶ ἐν φυλακῇ εἶχον, ἐγένετό τε ὁ Θόρυβος περὶ τὰς ναῦς μέγας καὶ ἀντηλλαγμένος τοῦ ἑκατέρων τρόπου, 'and such wherein the mode pursued by each party, in naval combat, was interchanged.' Ἀντηλλ. stands for μετηλλ. The term θόρυβος, which signifies properly a noise, tumult, uproar in general, here denotes particularly that tumultuous shouting which is incident to battle, as in Hdot. iv. 13, and often in Xen. and other classical writers: and hence we may perceive the graphic force of the words of the prophet Amos, ii. 12, 'Moab shall die with tumult, shouting, (meaning the shout of war, as in Jer. xlvi. 17, and Hos. x. 14.) and triumph;' which last particular is subjoined by way of completing the picture, as in Virg. Æn. ii. 313, 'Exoritur clamorque virûm clangorque tubarum:' and so in Job xxxix. 25, Sept. we have, πόρρωθεν δὲ ὀσφραίνεται πολέμου σὺν ἅλματι καὶ κραυγῇ, where, for σὺν ἅλματι, read σὺν ἀλαλάγματι, 'the battle-shout, the war-cry' (see I Sam. xvii. 20): a conjecture confirmed by the Ald. edit. and some MSS. συναλάγματι: though the translators have not well represented the sense; overlooking the middle word Sarim, (perhaps from its being corrupt in their copies, and unintelligible,) which, being taken into the account, determines the sense to be, 'the thundering of the captains [giving their orders], and the [respondent] war-cry of the troops, even the former of which, it is meant, the war-horse smells (or understands);' a circumstance attested by the words of Oppian, cited by Bochart: καὶ μάθεν εἰσάϊεν κρατερῶν σύνθημα λοχαγῶν.

With respect to ἐκπλήξεως, just after, of this the sense required by the context is certainly fury, what is expressed at iii. 82, by τὸ ἐμπλήκτως ὀξύ. This, however, is a sense by no means admitted by the term employed, ἐκπλήξ.; and I doubt not that, for this, our author wrote ἐμπλήξεως, which term has precisely this force; as in Ælian, V. H. ii. 19; where, though one MS. has ἐκπλ., that reading has been very properly rejected by the editors. The word is also found in Longin. § 15, though one MS. has ἔκπληξις, which is justly preferred by Toup, on the ground that, as he says, ἔμπληξις signifies insania (furor); ἔκπληξις, perterrefactio. The word is also found in the Schol. on Æschyl. Theb. 548, and in Hom. Il. v. 226; as also the cognate form ἐμπληξία, in Plut. vi. 206. Pollux, v. 121. Dio Cass. 64, 59. And so in a passage of Hippocr. Aphor. vii. 14, for ἔκπληξις ought undoubtedly to be read ἔμπληξις; as also in Polyb. i. 81, 6, διὰ τὴν πρὸς ἀφροδίσια ὁρμὴν καὶ ἐν τούτοις ἔκπληξιν, for ἔκπ., ἔμπληξιν, (compare Plato, p. 482, καὶ μοι ἐστι τῶν ἑτέρων παιδικῶν πολὺ ἧττον ἔμπληκτος,) and in Basil. ap. Steph. Thes. for ἔκπληκτος ὁρμὴ read ἔμπλ.: and so in Soph. Aj. 1358, for vulg. φῶτες ἔκπληκτοι, Brunck and others have rightly edited φῶτες ἔμπλ.

Finally, the purpose of these words, οἵ τε γὰρ Λακεδαιμόνιοι—ἐπεζομάχουν, is to illustrate the above-mentioned marvellous revolution in affairs; where at προθυμίας καὶ ἐκπλ. (or rather ἐμπ.) the latter particular, καὶ ἐκπλήξεως, is meant to further develop the sense; q. d. nay, fury; in allusion to the fierce contest and desperate exertions made by the Lacedæmonians to rescue and regain their empty ships.

ἄλλο οὐδὲν] Supply ἐποιουν, as at iii. 85: on which ellipsis see Blomfield on Æschyl. Pers. 214, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 612.

βουλόμενοι τῇ παρούσῃ—ἐπεξελθεῖν] 'anxious to follow up their present fortune to the utmost;' namely, as well knowing that 'There is a tide in the affairs of men, Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.' Evidently imitated from hence is the expression of Dio Cass. 66, 19, τῇ παρούσῃ οἱ εὐτυχίᾳ ἐπίπαν ἐπεξελθεῖν ἐπεθύμει.

4. τὰς κενὰς ναῦς] Namely, those which the Athenians were hauling off by ropes. See § 1.

ὡς τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἀπειλημμένων· οἱ δ' ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ Πελοποννήσιοι, ‡καὶ ἀπὸ πάντων ἤδη βεβοηθηκότες, ἔμενον κατὰ χώραν ἐπὶ τῇ Πύλῳ.

XV. Ἐς δὲ τὴν Σπάρτην ὡς ἠγγέλθη τὰ γεγενημένα περὶ Πύλον, ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς, ὡς ἐπὶ ξυμφορᾷ μεγάλῃ, τὰ τέλη καταβάντας ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον βουλεύειν παραχρῆμα, ὁρῶντας, ὅ τι ἂν δοκῇ. 2. καὶ ὡς εἶδον ἀδύνατον ὂν τιμωρεῖν τοῖς ἀνδράσι, καὶ κινδυνεύειν οὐκ ἐβούλοντο ἢ ὑπὸ λιμοῦ τι παθεῖν αὐτούς, ἢ ὑπὸ πλήθους βιασθέντας κρατηθῆναι, ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς πρὸς τοὺς στρα-

5. καὶ ἀπὸ πάντων ἤδη βεβοηθηκότες] From the context, compared with the words at ch. 8, it plainly appears that the meaning here intended must be, 'and those who had now come up to aid from all [the other allies],' namely, the allies at large in Peloponnesus, as distinguished from the Spartans and their Perioeci, who are at i. 1. mentioned as having first come up to the siege. Supposing, however, such to be the sense of the words, the article here cannot be dispensed with; and hence, for καὶ, I would read καὶ οἱ. How easily the οἱ might, in this instance, be absorbed by the αι preceding, it is scarcely necessary to observe.

CH. XV. 1. τὰ τέλη] Meaning the officers for the administration of state-affairs, the Ephori. See note on i. 58. Of the two readings here existing, vulg. πρὸς τὸ χρῆμα, adopted by Haack, Dind., and Goeller, and that of almost all the MSS., edited by Bekker and Poppo, παραχρῆμα, I am decidedly of opinion that the latter is to be preferred. As to the two passages, of Aristoph. Av. 1330, and Dionys. de C. V. p. 190, adduced in confirmation of the former, they only prove, what no one could doubt, that ὁρᾶν can be followed by πρὸς χρῆμα, but they will not determine the reading here. As to παραχρῆμα, internal as well as external evidence is in its favour; since far more likely is it that πρὸς τὸ χρῆμα should have arisen from παραχρῆμα, than the reverse. Πρὸς τὸ χρῆμα was, I suspect, an alteration proceeding from certain critics who did not understand or approve of παραχρῆμα, or, as it was perhaps written, παρὰ χρῆμα.

Supposing, then, as we justly may, that παραχρῆμα is the true reading, the question is, to what particular word in the sentence it is to be referred. Taken, as it might, with ὁρῶντας, (with which verb it is associated in a passage of Plato, p. 365.) it will thus be scarcely necessary to the sense; whereas, if taken with βουλεύειν, it is highly significant and even appropriate, since the sluggishness of the Lacedæmonians would need to be thus stirred up. The import of the expression is, statim, e tempore, 'for the nonce:' and so in Cic. Off. ii. 9, we have, 'expedire rem, et consilium e tempore capere.' Such, too, is the sense of the word in the phrase βουλεύειν παρ. ὅ τι ἂν δοκῇ, 'to determine upon and take what course might seem advisable,' as iii. 28, βουλεῦσαι—ὁπόσον ἂν τι βούλωνται. Παραχρ., then, being referred to βουλεύειν, ὁρῶντας is to be taken by itself, in the sense re inspecta, 'on seeing the state of affairs.' How little defensible is the reading πρὸς τὸ χρῆμα, will fully appear by considering that, if taken with βουλ., it leaves ὅ τι ἂν δοκῇ without a verb; and if with ὁρῶντας, it is little significant, and almost uncalled for, since ὁρῶντας needs no adjunct to develop its sense, its full meaning being, 'after ascertaining the state of things with their own eyes.'

2. ἢ ὑπὸ λιμοῦ—κρατηθῆναι] There is here no little discrepancy in the MSS., and some diversity in the opinion of critics as to the true reading. The common reading is, ὑπὸ λιμοῦ τι παθεῖν αὐτούς, ἢ ὑπὸ πλήθους βιασθέντας ἢ κρατηθέντας. This, however, though retained by Wasse and Duker, is any thing but defensible; since to repeat, as Duker directs, τι παθεῖν from the context, would be to make a distinction between terms that are no other than synonymous. Hence I feel fully justified in editing, with Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold, from a majority of the MSS., ἢ ὑπὸ λιμοῦ — κρατηθῆναι. Poppo seems to have been in this instance influenced by the authority of Hermann, who, I find, so reads, interpreting thus: 'ut aut fame aut a multitudine superati morerentur (παθεῖν τι) caperenturve.' This is, however, surely doing violence to the plain scope of the sentence, (which is to represent the Lacedæmonians as exposed to two fatal alternatives, either of τηγοὺς τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἢν ἐθέλωσι, σπονδὰς ποιησαμένους τὰ περὶ Πύλον, ἀποστεῖλαι ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας πρέσβεις περὶ ξυμβάσεως, καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας ὡς τάχιστα πειράσθαι κομίσασθαι. XVI. Δεξαμένων δὲ τῶν στρατηγῶν τὸν λόγον ἐγίγνοντο σπονδαὶ τοιάδε, 'Λακεδαιμονίους μὲν τὰς ναῦς ἐν αἷς ἐναυμάχησαν, καὶ τὰς ἐν τῇ Λακωνικῇ πάσας ὅσαι ἦσαν μακραί, παραδοῦναι κομίσαντας ἐς Πύλον Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ ὅπλα μὴ ἐπιφέρειν τῷ τειχίσματι μήτε κατὰ γῆν μήτε κατὰ θάλασσαν· Ἀθηναίους δὲ τοῖς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ἀνδράσι σῖτον ἑᾶν τοὺς ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ Λακεδαιμονίους ἑκπέμπειν τακτὸν καὶ μεμαγμένον, δύο χοίνικας ἑκάστῳ Ἀττικὰς ἀλφίτων, perishing by hunger or of being cut off by the sword.) and may be said to run counter to propriety of language; for where does κατηθῆναι in any good writer bear the sense 'to be taken prisoners?' a sense, indeed, here wholly irrelevant, since the Lacedæmonians had never on any occasion submitted to be taken prisoners, having never asked for quarter, or been willing to receive it by yielding up their arms. So at ch. 40 it is said of the actual surrender of these men afterwards, that it was of all the events of the war the one least expected by the Greeks: τοὺς γὰρ Λακεδαιμονίους οὔτε λιμῷ οὔτε ἀνάγκῃ οὐδεμιᾷ ἠξίουν τὰ ὅπλα παραδοῦναι, ἀλλὰ ἔχοντας, καὶ μαχομένους ὡς ἐδύναντο, ἀποθνήσκειν. The difficulty would, indeed, be lessened by reading, for βιασθέντας, βιασθῆναι, as Valla seems to have done, though without the slightest authority from MSS. The whole perplexity vanishes by reading, from full half of the MSS., βιασθέντας κρατηθῆναι, to which there is no reasonable objection to be alleged; for as to that urged by Poppo, that 'it is difficult to imagine how so plain an expression should have given use to others very far from perspicuous,' that is purely imaginary. The inconvenience was, I doubt not, occasioned by the accidental omission of the first ἡ before λιμοῦ, which, when lost, was afterwards noted in the margin to be supplied, but was introduced in the wrong place; a circumstance which has occurred in various other instances.

Of ὑπὸ πλήθους βιασθέντας κρατηθῆναι, the sense is, 'to be mastered, or overpowered, by force of numbers:' and so ἐκρατήθησαν at vii. 55.

Ch. XVI. 1. σῖτον ἑᾶν -μεμαγμένον] Arnold is of opinion, that by subjoining δύο χοίνικας—ἀλφίτων, our author means to indicate that the words σῖτον μεμαγμένον are to be understood of barley-flour ground. This, however, does not necessarily follow; for words in apposition sometimes serve to denote the contents of any thing just mentioned in its component parts: and there is the more reason to adopt this view in the present instance, since μεμαγμένον does not denote, as it is explained by Portus and others, molitum, ground, but, as Bredow, Goeller, and Poppo rightly interpret, kneaded: and σῖτον may be taken to denote either bread, or the dough-cake, μάζαν, from which it was formed. So in a passage of Aristoph. Eq. we have μάζαν μεμαγμένος, and in Archil. frag. 56, μάζαν μεμαγμένην: also in Herodot. i. 200, μάζαν μαξάμενος ἔχει (i. e. uses it as a dough-cake), ὁ δὲ, ἄρτου τρόπον ὀπτήσας. Aristoph. Pax, 55, μάττειν μάζαν. Plato de Rep. ii. 372, b, θρέψονται, ἐκ μὲν τῶν κριθῶν ἄλφιτα σκευαζόμενοι, ἐκ δὲ τῶν πυρῶν ἄλευρα, τὰ μὲν πέψαντες, τὰ δὲ μάξαντες μάζας, which last passage serves to show the distinction of terms as applied to barley-cakes, or wheaten loaves: and so in Dio Cass. lxii. 6, p. 1006, 33, we have, σίτου τε μεμαγμένου καὶ οἴνου καὶ ἐλαίου δέονται, where there is an allusion to the cakes kneaded up with oil and wine, which were given to the soldiers on hard service. See note at iii. 49, ἤσθιον—οἴνῳ καὶ ἐλαίῳ ἀλφιτα πεφυραμένα, where Duker cites Aristoph. Ran. 1105, as calling the food of rowers μάζαν. Finally, in a passage of Aristoph. in his Centaur, cited by Pollux, vii. 24, are conjoined, among the several particulars pertaining to the process of bread-making, the following, μάττω, δεύω. And in Xen. Œcon. x. 11, we have, ἀγαθὸν γυμνάσιον—τὸ ἐσθίειν καὶ μάζαν.

δύο χοίνικας] Answering to two English quarts, corn measure. The Greek χοῖνιξ, as Boeckh, Staatsh. vol. i. p. 99, has shown, was equivalent to the Roman modius, consisting of nearly two pints. From what Boeckh there says, it appears that one quart was considered a bare sustenance καὶ δύο κοτύλας οἴνου, καὶ κρέας, θεράποντι δὲ τούτων ἡμίσεα· ταῦτα δὲ ὁρώντων τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐσπέμπειν, καὶ πλοῖον μηδὲν ἐσπλεῖν λάθρα· φυλάσσειν δὲ καὶ τὴν νῆσον Ἀθηναίους μηδὲν ἧσσον, ὅσα μὴ ἀποβαίνοντας· καὶ ὅπλα μὴ ἐπιφέρειν τῷ Πελοποννησίων στρατῷ μήτε κατὰ γῆν μήτε κατὰ θάλασσαν. 2. ὅ τι δ' ἂν τούτων παραβαίνωσιν ἑκάτεροι καὶ ὁτιοῦν, τότε λελύσθαι τὰς σπονδάς. ἐσπεῖσθαι δὲ αὐτὰς μέχρι οὗ ἐπανέλθωσιν οἱ ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν Λακεδαιμονίων πρέσβεις· ἀποστεῖλαι δὲ αὐτοὺς τριήρει Ἀθηναίους, καὶ πάλιν κομίσαι. ἐλθόντων δὲ, τάς τε σπονδὰς λελύσθαι ταύτας, καὶ τὰς ναῦς ἀποδοῦναι Ἀθηναίους ὁμοίας οἵασπερ ἂν παραλάβωσιν.' 3. αἱ μὲν σπονδαὶ ἐπὶ τούτοις ἐγένοντο, καὶ αἱ νῆες παρεδόθησαν, οὖσαι περὶ ἑξήκοντα, καὶ οἱ πρέσβεις ἀπεστάλησαν. ἀφικόμενοι δὲ ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας ἔλεξαν τοιάδε.

XVII. "Ἐπεμψαν ἡμᾶς Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, περὶ τῶν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ἀνδρῶν πράξοντας ὅ τι ἂν ὑμῖν τε ὠφέλιμον ὂν τὸ αὐτὸ πείθωμεν, καὶ ἡμῖν ἐς τὴν ξυμφορὰν, ὡς ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, κόσμον for a man, and two quarts a comfortable and even liberal provision. See Herodot. vi. 57. Arnold observes, that 'though in Polyb. vi. 39, one chœnix is mentioned as the soldier's allowance per diem, yet that was of wheat-meal rather than wheat-flour,' probably of a fine quality; which would in serviceableness far exceed the same measure of barley-meal. Probably, too, the allowance of flesh-meat to the Romans was greater than that to the Greeks. The cotyla was one-quarter of the chœnix, a little more than three-quarters of a pint, wine measure. See Boeckh, ubi supra, and note on vii. 87, 2.

By κρέας, just after, understand simply flesh-meat, doubtless in proportion to the allowance of meal, and probably according to some well-known weight, as we may infer from the use of the word in Xenophon, and writers after his time, to denote a piece of flesh of a certain known weight. So Xen. Cyr. ii. 2, 2, ἐγένετο ἑκάστῳ ἡμῶν τρία κρέα (for κρέατα). Athen. iv. τέτταρα λήψῃ κρέα, and Aristot. κρέα εἴκοσι. Here, however, and perhaps in the passages of Xen. and Athen. above cited, the term may be best rendered portions, answering to the μερίδες κρεῶν in Plut. And so in Athen. iv. μερίδας πεπήσαντες τῶν κρεῶν καὶ τῶν ἄρτων ἴσας. Indeed the word κρέας here may best be rendered by our old term 'a mess [of meat].'

ὅσα μὴ ἀποβαίνοντας] This, as Poppo points out, stands for ὅσα δύνασθαι μὴ ἀποβαίνοντας. 'quantum possent non descendentes,' (rather, 'excensionem facientes.') or, according to Goeller, for ὅσα φυλάσσειν ἐδύναντο οὐκ ἀποβαίνοντες. Compare i. 111, ὅσα μὴ κρατεῖν τῆς γῆς, for ὅσα κρατεῖν τῆς γῆς ἐδύναντο, μή. Soph. Trach. 1221, 2.

καὶ ὁτιοῦν] 'in any particular whatever.'

Ch. XVII. 1. ἔπεμψαν ἡμᾶς Λακεδαιμόνιοι] Similarly commencing speeches are found in Herodot. vii. 157. viii. 142. The first three sections of this chapter contain the proem to the speech, in which the speakers at once come to the point and mention their business, (that of proposing peace and amity on the single condition of recovering their men,) and in bringing forward the subject, immediately appeal to motives of interest, τὸ συμφέρον.

περὶ τῶν — οἴσειν] Render, 'to negotiate with you on behalf of the men in the island, and to endeavour to induce you to such a course as may be at once advantageous to you,—and to us may (considering present circumstances) be honourable, in respect of the present disaster.' Τὸ αὐτὸ is, like the Latin idem, for ὁμοῦ. and signifies at once, or both. The phrase ὡς ἐκ τῶν παρόντων occurs often elsewhere in Thucydides, and occasionally in the best writers. Sometimes, though very rarely, the παρόντων is left to be supplied, as in a passage of Soph. Aj. τί δὴ τ' ἂν, ὡς ἐκ τῶνδ', ἂν ὠφελοῖμί σε; where Hermann explains, 'ex locorum statu,' i. e. quum hæc ita sint. In κόσμον οἴσειν we have a phrase similar to φέρειν δόξαν or αἰσχύνην at i. 5, and φέρειν ἀξίωσιν at i. 69.

μάλιστα μέλλῃ οἴσειν. 2. τοὺς δὲ λόγους μακροτέρους οὐ παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς μηκυνοῦμεν, ἀλλ' ἐπιχώριον ὂν ἡμῖν, οὗ μὲν βραχεῖς ἀρκῶσι, μὴ πολλοῖς χρῆσθαι, πλείοσι δὲ, ἐν ᾧ ἂν καιρὸς ᾖ διδάσκοντάς τι τῶν προὔργου λόγοις τὸ δέον πράσσειν. 3. λάβετε δὲ αὐτοὺς μὴ πολεμίως, μηδ' ὡς ἀξύνετοι διδασκόμενοι, ὑπόμνησιν δὲ τοῦ καλῶς βουλεύσασθαι πρὸς εἰδότας ἡγησάμενοι. 4. ὑμῖν γὰρ

2. τοὺς δὲ λόγους—μηκυνοῦμεν] Goeller remarks, that οὐ μηκυνοῦμεν does not, as one might think, stand for οὐ ποιήσομεν, because μακροτέρους has preceded; and he regards the clause as equivalent to τοὺς δὲ λόγους, μακροτέρους ὄντας, οὐ μηκ. παρὰ τὸ εἰωθός. To me, however, this subaudition of ὄντας appears far too arbitrary; and I prefer to consider the whole as a condensed form of expression blending two into one; q. d. 'We shall make an address somewhat long, but not more so than is agreeable to the usage of our people.' The occurrence of the article τοὺς shows that two clauses are here blended into one: otherwise one might regard λόγους μακροτέρους as merely a brief phrase for λόγους ἐς πλεῖον μακρ., like those of Æschylus and Sophocles, μῆκος ἐκτεῖναι λόγου and ἐς μεῖζον, and πλείονα λόγον ἐκτεῖναι adduced by Poppo, who refers to Heindorf and Stallbaum on Plato, Gorg. § 47. The words following, οὐ παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς, are meant to anticipate the objection that might be urged to their somewhat long discourse, as being contrary to national custom, which demanded brevity of speech. This they do by simply indicating what that rule or custom really is,—namely, 'where few words will suffice, not to use more; but where an occasion offers for us to do our duty to our country by pointing out in words (i. e. at large) any thing of importance in action, to use more;' or, as it might be more freely rendered, 'to use many words where many are necessary, and [only] few when few will suffice.' Ἀλλ' ἐπιχώριον ὂν is, as Poppo observes, opposed to οὐ παρὰ τὸ εἰωθός: and of the phrase in this very application we have an example in Pausan. iv. 7, 4, πρὸς μὲν δὴ τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους βραχεῖαν κατὰ τὸ ἐπιχώριον τὴν παράκλησιν ἐποιεῖτο: and to this purpose is the saying of Menelaus in Eurip. Orest. 637, Ἔστι δ' οὐ σιγὴ λόγου κρείσσων γένοιτ' ἂν (scil. σιγὴ ἔστω)· ἔστι δ' οὗ σιγῆς λόγος (λόγος ἔστω). On the syntax in οὗ μὲν—ἀρκῶσι, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 527, note 2.

ἐν ᾧ ἂν—πράσσειν] Of this imperfectly understood clause the true construction and sense seem to be as follows: πλείοσι δὲ (χρῆσθαι) ἐν ᾧ καιρὸς ἂν ᾖ (ἡμᾶς) πράσσειν τὸ δέον διδάσκοντας λόγοις τι τῶν προὔργου, 'but to use more wherever an opportunity may occur for us to do our duty by teaching in words any thing of importance.' Τι προὔργου signifies 'what is of immediate importance for attaining any object.' So Aristoph. Plut. 623, τι τῶν προὔργου ποιεῖν, and Eccl. 784, σύ γ' ἔμ' ἃ προὔργου τι ἐρᾷν.

3. λάβετε δὲ—ἡγησάμενοι] This seems meant to deprecate any offence being taken at the freedom of the expostulations made, or the counsels that shall be given; the more effectually to accomplish which object, the speakers season what they say with a spice of compliment, in the words μηδ' ὡς ἀξύνετοι διδασκόμενοι, &c. 'nor as simpletons when being instructed,' &c.

λάβετε αὐτοὺς μὴ πολεμίως] 'receive them not in a hostile spirit.' Μηδ' ὡς ἀξύνετοι, &c. meaning, 'nor receive what we say, as if, supposing you to be ignorant, we meant to teach you, but regard it as a suggestion of good counsel addressed to the well-informed;' a conciliatory form of commencement, with which compare the similar language employed in 2 Pet. i. 12, οὐκ ἀμελήσω ὑμᾶς—ὑπομιμνήσκειν—καίπερ εἰδότας, and 1 John, ii. 21, οὐκ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ὅτι οὐκ οἴδατε τὴν ἀλήθειαν, ἀλλ' ὅτι οἴδατε αὐτήν: meaning, in other words, 'I write to you, not because ye are ignorant of the truth, but because ye know it, and accordingly know,' &c. Gail justly points out the great circumspection of address here displayed, so necessary to be employed by the speakers of a nation little lettered when addressing another which piqued itself on being highly intellectual. Yet besides circumspection of language, so as to avoid giving unnecessary offence, we may also notice, with Bp. Thirlwall, 'the tone of the address, which is that of a humbled enemy, appealing to the generosity as to the policy of his victorious antagonist.'

4. ὑμῖν γὰρ—θέσθαι] The speakers now proceed to open out this ὑπόμνησις: and γὰρ has here what Hoogeveen calls the εὐτυχίαν τὴν παροῦσαν ἔξεστι καλῶς θέσθαι, ἔχουσι μὲν ὧν κρατεῖτε, προσλαβοῦσι δὲ τιμὴν καὶ δόξαν, καὶ μὴ παθεῖν ὅπερ οἱ ἀήθως τι ἀγαθὸν λαμβάνοντες τῶν ἀνθρώπων· ἀεὶ γὰρ τοῦ πλέονος, ἐλπίδι, ὀρέγονται, διὰ τὸ καὶ τὰ παρόντα ἀδοκήτως εὐτυχῆσαι. 5. οἷς δὲ πλεῖσται μεταβολαὶ ἐπ' ἀμφότερα ξυμβεβήκασι, δικαιοί εἰσι καὶ ἀπιστότατοι εἶναι ταῖς εὐπραγίαις. ὧ τῇ τε ὑμετέρᾳ πόλει, δι' ἐμπειρίαν, καὶ ἡμῖν μάλιστ' ἂν ἐκ τοῦ εἰκότος προσείη.

XVIII. Γνῶτε δὲ καὶ ἐς τὰς ἡμετέρας νῦν ξυμφορὰς ἀπιδόντες, οἵτινες ἀξίωμα μέγιστον τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἔχοντες ἥκομεν παρ' ὑμᾶς, inchoative sense, by which it answers to the Latin videlicet, nempe, nimirum, as at ii. 37, κτώμεθα γὰρ φίλους. Accordingly the sense might here be expressed as follows: 'Know, then, that it is in your power to turn your present good fortune to good account,' lit. bene disponere, or constituere, 'to so manage your affairs as to turn them to good account,' (compare i. 25, and iv. 59.) and thereby establish and secure your present prosperity.

ἔχουσι μὲν ὧν κρατεῖτε] 'keeping what you hold in possession,' namely, by what is now called the uti possidetis, the very principle acted on by the two belligerents, when they at length came to an agreement, as it is said infra ch. 118, ἑκατέρους ἔχειν ἅπερ ἔχουσιν.

τιμὴν καὶ δόξαν] A forcible expression, occurring also in a passage of St. Paul, Epist. Rom. ii. 6. 'Thus,' as says Mitford, 'the speakers offer, in return for the boon they ask, simply the honour and glory that would redound to Athens from a peace solicited by those who were heretofore in a condition rather to grant conditions than ask a favour.' The term παθεῖν (like admittere in Latin) is used, as elsewhere in Thucydides and the best writers, to denote the affections and dispositions: of which use examples occur at vii. 71, and 69, ὅπερ πάσχουσιν ἐν τοῖς μεγάλοις (scil. κινδύνοις), and especially a kindred passage of vii. 61, οὐδὲ πάσχειν ὅπερ οἱ ἀπειρότατοι τῶν ἀνθρώπων, οἵ, &c. Aristid. ii. 126, C, ὃ δὲ κοινὸν ἅπασιν ὡς εἰπεῖν ἐστιν ἁμάρτημα, τοῦτ' οὐ πεπόνθασιν. Also Soph. Œd. Col. 1539. Æschyl. Suppl. 1021, and not unfrequently in Xenophon and Polybius.

ἀεὶ γὰρ—εὐτυχῆσαι] Construe, ἀεὶ γὰρ, διὰ τὸ ἀδοκήτως εὐτυχῆσαι καὶ τὰ παρόντα, ὀρέγονται, ἐλπίδι, τοῦ πλέονος. Ἐλπίδι is for δι' ἐλπίδα, spe dati. The ἀδοκήτως, &c. is illustrated by Eurip. Suppl. 741, ὅθ' αὖ, τότ' εὐτυχὴς, Λαβὼν, πένης ὡς, ἀρτίπλουτα χρήματα, Ὕβριζ'.

5. οἷς δὲ πλεῖσται—ξυμβεβήκασι] 'But those to whom most changes have happened both ways, for good and for evil,' in utramque partem, as ii. 11. Compare Plutarch, Æmil. Paul. 34, ἅμιστα δυκῶσι πράττειν, οἷς ἀ τύχαι τροπὴν ἐπ' ἀμφότερα τῶν πραγμάτων ἔχουσιν: and Anton. 68, καθάπερ οὐ πολλάκις ἐπ' ἀμφότερα τῇ τύχῃ κεχρημένος. Joseph. Ant. xviii. 9, 2, ἐξεπιστάμενοι—τῆς τύχης τὸ ἐπ' ἀμφότερα φιλοῦν τοῖς πράγμασι παρατυγχάνειν. Thus the Athenians were admonished to remember the fluctuating chances of war, which might soon reverse the relative positions of both parties.

ὧ τῇ τε ὑμετέρᾳ—προσείη] 'which may justly be expected to be the case both with your country, by reason of its experience, and with ours most justly;' by ἐμπειρίαν is meant not only experience in a general way, (as at vi. 36, the Athenians are said to be πολλῶν ἔμπειροι.) but particularly as respects the events of war, κατ' ἀμφότερα. The words δι' ἐμπειρίαν are not meant (as Arnold supposes them) to refer to both Athens and Lacedæmon, since, by their position, they can only refer to Athens. The reverses which the speakers mean to show had happened to Lacedæmon, had been too recent to be designated as forming experience, which implies some length of time; insomuch that it is generally employed with some epithet that expresses or implies length of time: and as δι' ἐμπειρίαν is to be referred solely to the Athenians, so must ἐκ τοῦ εἰκότος be meant of the Lacedæmonians. The late events had effectually taught them a striking lesson, (which they might before have learnt by the experience of others, in the case of the Athenians,) namely, to distrust the uncertain favours of fortune. Ἐκ τοῦ εἰκότος stands for εἰκότως, κατὰ τὸ εἰκός, and is very applicable to the Lacedæmonians.

CH. XVIII. 1. Γνῶτε] 'be assured of this.' Ἀπιδόντες, 'by looking at,' 'reflecting on,' as vii. 71. In κυριώτεροι ἴσως εἶναι the term κύριος simply signifies πρότερον αὐτοὶ κυριώτεροι νομίζοντες εἶναι δοῦναι ἐφ' ἃ νῦν ἀφιγμένοι ὑμᾶς αἰτούμεθα. 2. καίτοι οὔτε δυνάμεως ἐνδείᾳ ἐπάθομεν αὐτό, οὔτε μείζονος προσγενομένης ὑβρίσαντες, ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν ἀεὶ ὑπαρχόντων γνώμῃ σφαλέντες, ἐν ᾧ πᾶσι τὸ αὐτὸ ὁμοίως ὑπάρχει. 3. ὥστε οὐκ εἰκὸς ὑμᾶς, διὰ τὴν παροῦσαν νῦν ῥώμην πόλεώς τε καὶ τῶν προσγεγενημένων, καὶ τὸ τῆς τύχης οἴεσθαι ἀεὶ μεθ' ὑμῶν ἕσεσθαι. 4. σωφρόνων δὲ ἀνδρῶν οἵτινες τἀγαθὰ ἐς ἀμφίβολον ἀσφαλῶς ἔθεντο, (καὶ ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς οἱ αὐτοὶ εὐξυνετώτερον ἂν προσφέροιντο.) τόν τε πόλεμον νομίσωσι μὴ, καθ' ὅσον ἄν τις

'possessing the power of doing any thing.'

2. οὔτε μείζονος προσγενομένης ὑβρίσαντες] 'nor from having fallen into arrogance from an accession of good fortune.' It is truly observed by Poppo, that the words ξυνάμεως ἐνδείᾳ ('any failure of power') — μείζονος προσγενομένης ('when a greater degree of it accrued to us'), and ἀπὸ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων, are opposed to each other. Of ἀπὸ τῶν ἀεὶ ὑπαρχόντων the sense is, 'from the course of events as they occurred one after the other (ἀεί);' in other words, 'taking our measures from them.'

ἐν ᾧ πᾶσι τὸ αὐτὸ ὁμοίως ὑπάρχει] 'wherein (i. e. in respect to which) the same thing happens equally to all;' all being apt to think the power or prosperity which they have will never fail them, and therefore act upon and depend upon it. So in Æschyl. Pers. 604—8, (a passage peculiarly to the present purpose,) we have, Φίλοι, κακῶν μὲν ὅστις ἔμπειρος κυρεῖ, Ἐπίσταται, βροτοῖσιν ὡς ὅταν κλύδων Κακῶν ἐπέλθῃ, πάντα δειμαίνειν φιλεῖ· Ὅταν δ' ὁ δαίμων εὐροῇ, πεποιθέναι (scil. φιλεῖ ἄνθρωπος) Τὸν αὐτὸν ἀεὶ δαίμον' οὐρσῖν τύχης, where δαίμων τύχης, 'fortunæ numen,' is a poetical amplification for τὸ τῆς τύχης.

3. ὥστε οὐκ εἰκὸς—ἔσεσθαι] An inference is here drawn from the foregoing: 'Such being the case as regards us, it is not reasonable for you to suppose, by reason of the present power of the state, and its acquisitions, that fortune will be always with you.' By οὐκ εἰκὸς is meant, 'what is not warranted by sound reason.' Ῥώμην signifies 'power,' as said of a state, 'vim et opulentiam, quæ ex partis nascitur.' So infra vii. 63, τῆς εὐτυχούσης ῥώμης, and v. 14. Xen. Ages. viii. 5. Τῶν προσγεγενημένων I would, with Poppo, explain 'accessions or acquisitions made by the state.'

In τὸ τῆς τύχης (which may be rendered 'good fortune') we have an idiom of the same kind as τὸ τῆς τύχης in the similar passage infra vii. 61, τὸ τῆς τύχης μεθ' ἡμῶν στῆναι, and τὰ τῆς τύχης, iv. 55.

4. The above reasoning is now confirmed by a weighty adage, or moral gnome, σωφρόνων δὲ ἀνδρῶν—ἔθεντο, which (after the insertion of a passing observation bearing on the point in question) is in the words which follow, τόν τε πόλεμον νομίσωσι—ἡγήσωνται, converted into a political maxim. The whole passage, however, is one of acknowledged difficulty,—partly from extreme brevity, and partly from the involved nature of the construction. The commencing words are best considered by Poppo and Goeller as containing a mixture of two different constructions,—σωφρόνων ἀνδρῶν ἐστι θέσθαι, and σώφρονες ἄνδρες εἰσὶν οἵτινες ἔθεντο. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 481, 3, and 632. 6: whence it appears that the best writers not unfrequently fall into this irregularity of expression. Dobree, too, observes, that ὅστις and ὃς ἂν are frequently used in the Attic writers where one would expect rather ὅταν τις, ἐάν τις. So (I would add) in a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Dionys. Hal. viii. 48, we have, σωφρόνων δὲ ἔστιν ἀνθρώπων, ὅταν εὖ πράττειν δοκῶσι, ταμιεύεσθαι τὰς τύχας. The words οἵτινες τἀγαθὰ ἐς ἀμφίβολον ἀσφαλῶς ἔθεντο may be rendered, 'who securely place prosperous events in uncertainty;' meaning, 'who, pursuing a safe course, place or regard their advantages as possessions that may be lost again,' literally, ancipitia, 'that turn two ways,' backwards and forwards. Thus τιθεσθαι ἐς ἀμφίβολον stands for τιθ. ἐν ἀμφιβόλῳ, as in Dio Cass. 268, 72, ἐς ἀμφιβολον καθιστάμενοι stands for ἐν ἀμφ. καθ. In ἔθεντο we have an aorist denoting custom. Of the words following, καὶ ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς οἱ αὐτοὶ εὐξυνετώτερον ἂν προσφέροιντο, (which form a parenthetic passing remark, bearing on the point in question,) the sense is, 'and even misfortunes those same persons would deal with more discreetly,' viz. than others. So Aristot. Eth. bk. x. sub fin. we have εὐσυνετώτεροι ἂν γένοιντο, 'would be more knowing or perspicacious [than the others].'

αὐτοῦ μέρος βούληται μεταχειρίζειν, τούτῳ †ξυνεῖναι, ἀλλ' ὡς ἂν αἱ τύχαι †αὐτῶν ἡγήσωνται. καὶ ἐλάχιστ' ἂν οἱ τοιοῦτοι πταίοντες, διὰ τὸ μὴ τῷ ὀρθουμένῳ αὐτοῦ πιστεύοντες ἐπαίρεσθαι, ἐν τῷ εὐτυχεῖν ἂν μάλιστα καταλύοιντο. 5. ὃ νῦν ὑμῖν, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, καλῶς ἔχει πρὸς ἡμᾶς πρᾶξαι, καὶ μήποτε ὕστερον, ἢν ἄρα, μὴ πειθόμενοι, σφαλῆτε, (ἃ πολλὰ ἐνδέχεται,) νομισθῆναι τύχῃ καὶ τὰ νῦν προχωρήσαντα κρατῆσαι, ἐξὸν ἀκίνδυνον δόκητόν τε πόλεμον νομίσωσι—ἡγήσωνται] 'and are of opinion that war does not adapt itself to any plans according to which any one may be disposed to engage in it, but will take a course according as accidents may lead the way for him,' mark out his course. Such appears to be the sense intended, supposing the words, as they stand, to be (what is far from certain) correct. The term ξυνεῖναι may, indeed, be explained, as Poppo suggests, on the principle that as in Greek a person is said not only συνεῖναι γήρᾳ, πενίᾳ, νόσῳ, &c., but γῆρας, &c. is said συνεῖναι ἀνθρώπῳ. See Doederlein on Soph. Œd. Col. 7. But that would surely involve a harshness only allowable in Lyric poetry. Poppo, indeed, himself seems aware that the expression is scarcely admissible; and he ventures to propose a faint query, whether our author may not have written ξυμβαίνειν. This, indeed, seems to have been read by the Scholiast, and probably had place in the archetype of the Cod. A.; whence, too, we might account for the occurrence of the two words after μεταχειρίζειν: and this I believe to be in effect the true reading. With respect to the other explication noticed by the Scholiast, it evidently proceeds on the reading ξυνεῖναι.

Of καθ' ὅσον μέρος the sense is, 'quantâ ex parte,' quatenus. For αὐτῶν, supposing, as we may, the true reading to be αὐτῷ (as referred to τις), which was read by Valla, and conjectured by Bredow, the sense will be, 'according as fortune may mark out the course for him,' or it, meaning the war: where we have a metaphor taken from an ἡγεμὼν τῆς ὁδοῦ, (Xen. Mem. i. 3, 4.) who traces out the course for another to take, and thereby determines that course. So Hom. Od. x. 263, ἠνώγεα αὐτὴν ὁδὸν ἡγήσασθαι. Of the dative as following this verb examples elsewhere are found in Herodot. ix. 15, αὐτῷ τῇ ὁδὸν ἡγέοντο, and Hom. Od. vi. 114. Finally, supposing αὐτῶν to be the true reading, the pronoun must be referred to the persons alluded to in σωφρόνων ἀνδρῶν; and the sense will be, 'according as their fortunes (i. e. the fortune of each) may mark out their course.'

καὶ ἐλάχιστ' ἂν—καταλύοιντο] The above moral and political maxims are now confirmed by an appeal to experience for the wholesome lesson they inculcate; and then the course is pointed out which such prudent persons do take, as an example worthy to be followed. Render, 'and such persons, least of all miscarrying, because they are not puffed up with too great confidence in success, will come to treaty while they are yet in a course of good fortune.' Ηττωντες is put for a verb and particle, 'while they least of all miscarry.' Τῷ ὀρθουμένῳ is (as the Schol. says) put for εὐπραγίᾳ. On the nature of the metaphor, see note on iii. 37, 4.

5. What has been just said generally, is now applied to the case in point as regards the Athenians.

ὃ νῦν ὑμῖν, &c.] 'Now this, (ὃ standing for καὶ τοῦτο.) Athenians, there is a favourable opportunity for you to do towards us, (compare iv. 93, καλῶς αὐτοῖς εἶχε, καὶ μήποτε ὕστερον—νομισθῆναι,) and so as not afterwards—if indeed, by not hearkening to us, ye fall into misfortune, (as may well take place,)—to be thought to have attained your present successes by good luck only; whereas it is in your power to leave behind you a reputation for power and for discretion unendangered by any future events.' The construction is, καλῶς ἔχει ὑμῖν πρᾶξαι, καὶ μήποτε νομισθῆναι. Of ἃ πολλὰ ἐνδέχεται the literal sense is, 'which things do often happen;' πολλὰ being here used as an adverb to signify sæpè, as at i. 69, 5, and not unfrequently in Xenophon. Of ἐνδέχεται the sense is, 'usu venire solent,' as at i. 140.

σιν ἰσχύος καὶ ξυνέσεως ἐς τὸ ἔπειτα καταλιπεῖν. XIX. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ ὑμᾶς προκαλοῦνται ἐς σπονδὰς καὶ διάλυσιν πολέμου, διδόντες μὲν εἰρήνην καὶ ξυμμαχίαν, καὶ ἄλλην φιλίαν πολλὴν καὶ οἰκειότητα ἐς ἀλλήλους ὑπάρχειν, ἀνταιτοῦντες δὲ τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου ἄνδρας, καὶ ἄμεινον ἡγούμενοι ἀμφοτέροις μὴ διακινδυνεύεσθαι, εἴτε βίᾳ διαφύγοιεν, παρατυχούσης τινὸς σωτηρίας, εἴτε καὶ, ἐκπολιορκηθέντες, μᾶλλον ἂν χειρωθεῖεν. 2. νομίζομέν τε τὰς μεγάλας ἔχθρας μάλιστ' ἂν διαλύεσθαι βεβαίως, οὐκ ἢν ἀνταμυνόμενός τις, καὶ ἐπικρατήσας τὰ πλέω τοῦ πολέμου, κατ' ἀνάγκην ὅρκοις ἐγκαταλαμβάνων, μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ξυμβῇ· ἀλλ' ἢν, παρὸν τὸ αὐτὸ δρᾶσαι, πρὸς τὸ ἐπιεικές, (καὶ ἀρετῇ † αὐτὸ νικήσας.) παρὰ ἃ προσεδέχετο,

Ch. XIX. The speakers now come home to their purpose, and invite the Athenians to form a stable peace, to be cemented by their generosity in not pressing an unfortunate enemy, and their prudence in not so abusing present success as to lay up matter for future rancorous hostility; but by conferring a deep obligation on Sparta, to secure her permanent friendship.

1. ὑμᾶς προκαλοῦνται ἐς σπονδὰς] 'invite you to [form a] treaty.' Duk. observes, that the preposition is omitted in a passage of Aristoph. Eq. 791, αἳ (scil. πρεσβεῖαι) σπονδὰς προκαλοῦνται, and infra ch. 22. Other examples of the elliptical use may be seen in note at v. 38, 5. See also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 419, h. Διακινδυνεύεσθαι is here a passive form, as at i. 68, 73. ii. 35 & 43, where see notes.

εἴτε βίᾳ—χειρωθεῖεν] Render, 'whether by some opportunity of safety presenting itself, they should escape by dint of force, or whether, being reduced by siege and starvation, they should be brought even more under your power,' viz. than they now are; so as to be not only blockaded, but in reality captured.

2. νομίζομέν τε τὰς μεγάλας—ξυναλλαγῇ] Of this passage, which is one of no little difficulty, the meaning appears to be as follows: 'And we are of opinion that great enmities would most effectually be reconciled, not if he who has obtained the superiority should repay vengeance on his enemy, and, binding him down with compulsory oaths, should grant him peace on unequal conditions; but if, when having in his power to do this, he (thus conquering him even by kindness) should make peace with him on terms mild and moderate beyond what he expected.' Considering, however, that this sense cannot be fully elicited from the words as they stand in the editions, we may suppose here a certain corruption, the seat of which seems to be αὐτὸς, or (what is found in many MSS., and is read by Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo) αὐτὸ, which Poppo refers to τὸ παρεῖναι τοῦτο δρᾶσαι, i. e. τὸ δύνασθαι μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ξυμβῆναι. But rather than resort to so harsh a mode of taking the words, may we not venture to read αὐτὸν, supposing the ν to have been in this case absorbed by the ν following? Thus an excellent sense arises, which is confirmed and illustrated by the following passages. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 676, 30, νικᾷ γὰρ ἡμᾶς χρηστὸς ὤν. Eurip. Here. Fur. 339, ἀρετῇ σε νικῶ. Xen. Cyr. v. 7, 29, ὅς μοι τοὺς ἐμὲ τιμῶντας νικῆσαι εὖ ποιοῦντα. And so in Valer. Max. 'Speciosius multo beneficiis vincuntur injuriæ, quam mutuo odio pertinaciâ pensantur.' Justin, xi. 12, 'Tum Darius se ratus vere victum, quum etiam beneficiis ab hoste superaretur.' That αὐτὸν was here read by Josephus, appears from the following passage, evidently imitated from the present, Antiquities, xvi. 7, 4, ἐγὼ δὲ νικῶν ἀεὶ τοὺς ἐμοὺς, μήτε ἀμυνόμενος κατ' ἀξίαν, καὶ μειζόνως εὐεργετῶν, ἢ τυχεῖν εἰσι δίκαιοι.

Arnold remarks on the antithesis here existing, by which the different parts of the sentence are exactly opposed to each other (forming what is called by the rhetoricians the παρίσωσις), and observes that the words πρὸς τὸ ἐπιεικές (i. e. σκοπῶν πρὸς τὸ ἐπιεικές) answer to our phrase 'consulting humanity:' yet whether that view be sufficiently substantiated, I greatly doubt; for as to the examples which he refers to in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 591, d, they are, I apprehend, not to the present purpose. It would rather seem that this use of πρὸς is parallel to that of the Latin pro with an ablative, in the sense μετρίως ξυναλλαγῇ. 3. ὀφείλων γὰρ ἤδη ὁ ἐναντίος μὴ ἀνταμύνεσθαι, ὡς βιασθείς, ἀλλ' ἀνταποδοῦναι ἀρετὴν, ἑτοιμότερός ἐστιν αἰσχύνῃ ἐμμένειν οἷς ξυνέθετο. 4. καὶ μᾶλλον πρὸς τοὺς μειζόνως ἐχθροὺς τοῦτο δρῶσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι, ἢ πρὸς τοὺς τὰ μέτρια διενεχθέντας· πεφύκασί τε τοῖς μὲν ἑκουσίως ἐνδοῦσιν ἀνθησσᾶσθαι μεθ' ἡδονῆς, πρὸς δὲ τὰ ὑπεραυχοῦντα καὶ παρὰ γνώμην διακινδυνεύειν. XX. Ἡμῖν δὲ καλῶς, εἴπερ ποτὲ, ἔχει ἀμφοτέροις ἡ ξυναλλαγὴ, πρίν τι ἀνήκεστον διὰ μέσου γενόμενον ἡμᾶς καταλαβεῖν, ἐν ᾧ

'conformably with,' as found in Cic. Ep. ad Fam. iv. 6, 'pro tuâ prudentiâ.' So that here we might best render by 'pro clementiâ.' Of course, this is a phrase standing for an adverb, ἐπιεικῶς, clementer: and accordingly it is well followed up by the synonyme μετρίως; a circumstance the more easily accounted for, since in a passage of Demosth. cont. Mid. (cited in Steph. Thes.) and in Lucian, t. ii. 188, we have ἐπιεικὴς καὶ μέτριος.

Of the form τὸ ἐπιεικές (which is one of rare occurrence) I know of no examples elsewhere, except in Soph. Œd. Col. 1127. Lucian, ii. 737, and in a passage of St. Paul, Ep. to Phil. iv. 5.

3. ὀφείλων γὰρ—ξυνέθετο] Now is subjoined the reason why such is the case. Render, 'for then the enemy being not bound to seek retribution [for injury], as having been forced to accept terms unreasonably hard, but [being obliged] to render back a return of kindness, is, out of shame, more disposed to abide by what he had covenanted.'

4. From the reason of the thing, showing that such must be, the speakers now revert to the testimony of experience, proving that such is the case; adverting to the well-known fact that 'men are disposed to do this (τὸ μετρίως ξυναλλαγῆναι, which words are to be supplied from the context) in respect to those with whom they have been at very great enmity;' μειζόνως having here either no comparative force, or only, as Poppo says, a faint one, to signify 'greater than others,' and so merely denoting very great, as in Xen. Cyneg. xiii. 83. Isocr. p. 559 (Long). Dio Cass. 802, 79. Τὰ μέτρια stands for μετρίως, as in Eurip. Suppl. 555, μέτρια ἀδικούμενος, and other passages adduced in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 283 & 446: and hence may be illustrated the following passage of Eurip. Suppl. 740, Ἐτεοκλέους τε σύμβασιν ποιουμένου, Μέτρια θέλοντος, οὐκ ἐχρήζομεν λαβεῖν.

πεφύκασί τε τοῖς—διακινδυνεύειν] A political maxim, importing that 'men are naturally disposed to gladly concede in turn to those who have voluntarily given way to them; but, against the overbearing, to run all hazards, even beyond the dictates of sound judgment or discretion.' In ἀνθησσᾶσθαι, as Poppo observes, we have a sort of conventional term to denote the making concessions to the wishes of friends; and he refers to Lobeck on Soph. Aj. 1340. I have met with the term only elsewhere in Dio Cass. 602, 32. Of this use of the neut. for masc. in τοῖς ἐνδοῦσιν and τὰ ὑπεραυχοῦντα, examples may be seen in Poppo, Proleg. i. p. 103 Of the verb ὑπεραυχέω (which is very rare) I have met with an example elsewhere in Phalaris; and the noun ὑπέραυχος is found in Æschylus and Xenophon. The expression παρὰ γνώμην is, indeed, capable of more than one suitable sense; but the preference is decidedly due to the sense above assigned, which is adopted by Heilm., who remarks, 'Γνώμη in universum significat judicium consulto et cum rerum reputatione latum, et studia ex hac consultatione nata; quo sensu est contrarium ὀργῇ, sive cæco animi impetui; id quod luculentissimè apparet e iii. 42, ubi junguntur ὀργὴ et βραχύτης γνώμης, item ex ii. 65, ubi Pericles dicitur δυνατὸς [τῷ τε] ἀξιώματι καὶ τῇ γνώμῃ.' Poppo and Goeller also compare a passage supra i. 70, παρὰ γνώμην κινδυνεύεται.

Ch. XX. This chapter contains the ἐπίλογοι, or conclusion, in which the speakers first press the immediate doing of the thing in question, while a favourable opportunity offers for reconciliation, before some irreparable mischance on the side of the Lacedæmonians renders it impracticable.

1. ἡμῖν δὲ, &c.] Render, 'There is moreover now, if ever, a favourable opportunity to both of us for the reconciliation, before any irreparable catastrophe interposing should befal, wherein it would be imperative on us to bear you perpetually a private and individual as well as public hostility, and whereby you must be deprived of the advantages to which we now invite you.'

In τι ἀνήκεστον there is an allusion to ἀνάγκη αἴδιον ὑμῖν ἔχθραν πρὸς τῇ κοινῇ καὶ ἰδίαν ἔχειν, ὑμᾶς δὲ στερηθῆναι ὧν νῦν προκαλούμεθα. 2. ἔτι δ' ὄντων ἀκρίτων, καὶ ὑμῖν μὲν δόξης καὶ ἡμετέρας φιλίας προσγιγνομένης, ἡμῖν δὲ πρὸ αἰσχροῦ τινος, ξυμφορᾶς μετρίως κατατιθεμένης, διαλλαγῶμεν, καὶ αὐτοί τε ἀντὶ πολέμου εἰρήνην ἑλώμεθα, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις Ἕλλησιν ἀνάπαυσιν κακῶν ποιήσωμεν· οἳ καὶ ἐν τούτῳ ὑμᾶς αἰτιωτέρους ἡγήσονται. πολεμοῦνται μὲν γὰρ ἀσαφῶς ὁποτέρων ἀρξάντων· καταλύσεως δὲ γιγνομένης, ἧς νῦν ὑμεῖς τὸ πλέον κύριοί ἐστε, τὴν χάριν

the slaughter of the men blockaded on the island. Ἰδίαν, private or individual; with reference to the relations of those who thus fall a sacrifice.

2. ὄντων ἀκρίτων] 'while matters are yet undecided:' on which idiom see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 563 & 564.

ξυμφορᾶς μετρίως κατατιθεμένης] These words, Arnold observes, admit of two interpretations, either, 'our disaster being settled on tolerable terms,' (in which sense κατατιθεσθαι occurs in Demosth. p. 425, and Lysias, 914.) or, 'our misfortune being laid upon us lightly,' κατατιθεσθαι being taken in the sense of bestowing or rendering, as in Xen. Venat. x. 8, εἰς τοῦτον τὴν ὀργὴν κατέθετο: of which two senses the latter, (propounded by me in my Transl.) namely, 'misfortune or calamity being moderately inflicted upon us,' yields, I apprehend, a preferable sense, and one not liable to any well-founded objection. Poppo, indeed, urges that such a use of κατατιθεσθαι ξυμφορὰν to signify infligere, irrogare infortunium, (which Goeller allows does exist.) cannot be admitted except in cases where the prep. εἰς, or some similar word, is subjoined: but here it is plain that ἡμῖν stands for εἰς ἡμᾶς, and consequently there is something similar or equivalent. As to the objection of Goeller, that 'this would require, not πρὸ αἰσχροῦ τινος, but ἄνευ αἰσχροῦ τινος,' that is quite groundless; since πρὸ αἰσχροῦ τινος is not to be taken with κατατιθεμένης, but with διαλλαγῶμεν; though by being placed where it is, the sense of ἄνευ αἰσχροῦ τινος would seem to be implied. The metaphor, however, is one not taken, as Arnold supposes, from bestowing any thing on a person, as a present, (for as to the passages he adduces from Xenophon and Sophocles, they are not to the purpose,) but rather from, as we say, laying stripes or blows on any one. Thus in a passage of St. Luke, x. 30, we have, πληγὰς ἐπιθέντες: and in Acts xvi. 23, ἐπιθέντες αὐτοῖς πληγάς. So also the Latin phrase 'plagas alicui imponere,' found in a passage of Cicero pro Sext. ch. 19. And plaga in the figurative, as used to denote affliction or calamity, occurs in Corn. Nepos, Eumen. ch. 5, 'perculsus plagâ, non succubuit.' Moreover, in English the phrase to lay on is used to denote afflicting, as in the following passage of Shakspeare: 'The weariest and most loathed life That age, ache, penury, imprisonment Can lay on nature, is a paradise To what we fear of death.' The same metaphor, too, is observable in a passage of Psalm lxvi. 11, Sept. ἔθου θλίψεις ἐπὶ τὸν νῶτον ἡμῶν. It is only necessary to add, that the other mode of interpretation, as above adverted to, does no little violence to the words: for though κατατίθεσθαι πόλεμον not unfrequently bears the sense 'to lay down a war,' yet there is neither proof nor probability that κατατίθεσθαι ξυμφορὰν ever signified 'to settle a disaster;' which is, indeed, itself scarcely sense. Moreover, not to mention the straining of sense at μετρίως, κατατ. ought to be in the past tense, and ξυμφ. would require the article.

ἐν τούτῳ] This, as the Scholiast says, stands for ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ γενέσθαι, 'on this taking place,' namely, a peace. The καί, Poppo points out, is to be referred, not to ἐν τούτῳ, but to the relative οἳ and the whole sentence. Αἰτιωτέρους, just after, stands for αἰτίους μᾶλλον. Πολεμεῖσθαι in this sense, 'to be at war,' is somewhat rare. In ὁποτέρων ἀρξάντων we have, as Goeller says, nominatives absolute (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 367.) for accusatives, which the verb following would require. With respect to the sense meant to be conveyed by ὁποτέρων ἀρξάντων, 'which began first,' here we have a peculiar idiom, probably borrowed from the language of common life, to signify 'which of the two was in the wrong,' or ought to bear the blame as the author of the miseries suffered by the Greeks at large.

ἧς νῦν ὑμεῖς τὸ πλέον κύριοί ἐστε] 'which you have now more in your power to bring about [than they].' So Dio Cass. 317, 73, καὶ πολέμων καὶ εἰρήνης κύριον.

ὑμῖν προσθήσουσιν. 3. ἤν τε γνῶτε, Λακεδαιμονίοις ἔξεστιν ὑμῖν φίλους γενέσθαι βεβαίως, αὐτῶν τε προκαλεσαμένων, χαρισαμένοις τε μᾶλλον ἢ βιασαμένοις. 4. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ τὰ ἐνόντα ἀγαθὰ σκοπεῖτε ὅσα εἰκὸς εἶναι· ἡμῶν γὰρ καὶ ὑμῶν ταὐτὰ λεγόντων, τό γε ἄλλο Ἑλληνικόν, ἴστε ὅτι, ὑποδεέστερον ὄν, τὰ μέγιστα τιμήσει."

XXI. Οἱ μὲν οὖν Λακεδαιμόνιοι τοσαῦτα εἶπον, νομίζοντες τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐν τῷ πρὶν χρόνῳ σπονδῶν μὲν ἐπιθυμεῖν, σφῶν δὲ ἐναντιουμένων κωλύεσθαι· διδομένης δὲ εἰρήνης, ἀσμένους δέξεσθαί τε καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας ἀποδώσειν. 2. οἱ δὲ τὰς μὲν σπονδάς, ἔχοντες τοὺς ἄνδρας ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, ἤδη σφίσιν ἐνόμιζον ἑτοίμους εἶναι ὁπόταν βούλωνται ποιεῖσθαι πρὸς αὐτούς, τοῦ δὲ πλέονος ὠρέγοντο. 3. μάλιστα δὲ αὐτοὺς ἐνῆγε Κλέων ὁ Κλεαινέτου, ἀνὴρ δημαγωγὸς κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον ὢν, καὶ τῷ πλήθει πιθανώτατος· καὶ ἔπεισεν ἀποκρίνασθαι, ὡς χρὴ τὰ μὲν ὅπλα καὶ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς τοὺς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ παραδόντας πρῶτον, κομισθῆναι Ἀθήναζε, ἐλθόντων δὲ, ἀποδόντας Λακεδαιμονίους Νίσαιαν, καὶ Πηγὰς, καὶ Τροιζῆνα, καὶ Ἀχαΐαν,— ἃ οὐ πολέμῳ ἔλαβον, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῆς προτέρας ξυμβάσεως, Ἀθηναίων

Livy, xxiii. 12, 'quo (scil. tempore) magis dare quam accipere possumus videri pacem.'

3. ἤν τε γνῶτε] scil. οὕτω, 'if you so decide.' So Schol. ἂν τε πεισθῆτε. Λακεδαιμονίοις ἔξεστιν—βιασαμένοις, 'it is in your power that the Lacedæmonians should be firmly your friends, they inviting you [to this pacification], and you granting a favour, rather than imposing conditions.'

4. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ — εἶναι] 'and herein consider how many advantages are, as is likely, contained.'

ἡμῶν γὰρ—τιμήσει] 'for if we and you say the same thing, the rest of Greece, ye know, as being inferior in power, will render us the highest honour.' In ταὐτὰ λεγόντων we have a figurative mode of expressing perfect accord and union. So v. 31, 3, τὸ αὐτὸ λέγοντες, where the Scholiast explains by τὴν αὐτὴν γνώμην ἔχοντες. Compare also 1 Corinth. i. 10. Jos. Ant. xviii. 9, 9. In the words τὰ μέγιστα τιμήσει, 'will in the highest degree honour us,' (i. e. do as we please,) we have a certain euphemism, resorted to in order to avoid the use of the invidious term obey. So Poppo and Goeller observe, 'Sine illo euphemismo Spartanos palam loqui non licitum erat, propter socios liberos, qui si Græciæ liberatores, ut profitebantur, ultro sequerentur.' The plain truth, apart from euphemism, is expressed in a passage of Aristoph. Pax, 1080, Ἀλλὰ τί χρῆν; ἡμᾶς οὐ παύσασθαι πολεμοῦντας, Ἢ διακαυνιάσαι, ('to waste our substance,') πότεροι κλαυσούμεθα μείζω, ('which of us two shall suffer most,') Ἔξον σπεισαμένοις κοινῇ τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἄρχειν;

CH. XXI. 2. τὰς μὲν σπονδὰς—ἑτοίμους εἶναι] 'that the treaty of peace was ready for them,' ready to be made. Τοῦ πλέονος ὠρέγοντο, 'coveted something more,' viz. than treating on terms of equality. Thus they coveted some further concessions; for being as elevated by their unexpected good fortune as the Spartans were depressed by their temporary disaster, they were, as Thucyd. says, more inclined to follow their example than to take their advice. Comp. Aristoph. Pax, 216, Κἄλθοιεν οἱ Λάκωνες εἰρήνης πέρι, Ἐλέγετ' ἂν ὑμεῖς εὐθύς· ἐξαπατώμεθα, Νὴ τὴν Ἀθηνᾶν· νὴ Δί', οὐχὶ πειστέον· Ἥξουσι καὐθις, ἢν ἔχωμεν τὴν Πύλον.

3. δημαγωγὸς] On this term, which, as appears from Isocr. p. 295, and other authorities that might be adduced, is susceptible of a good as well as a bad sense; see Wachsmuth, Ant. Gr. § 69, note 2. In ἐνῆγε we have a very forcible term, serving to set forth the uncompromising opposition of Cleon to any peace on the terms offered. The chief reason for this seems to be, that he thought such a holding out for further and unlimited demands would be most pleasing to the rapacity of his mob supporters. With τῷ πλήθει πιθανώτατος compare iii. 36, on the subject of the same person.

ἀνάγκη αἴδιον ὑμῖν ἔχθραν πρὸς τῇ κοινῇ καὶ ἰδίαν ἔχειν, ὑμᾶς δὲ στερηθῆναι ὧν νῦν προκαλούμεθα. 2. ἔτι δ' ὄντων ἀκρίτων, καὶ ὑμῖν μὲν δόξης καὶ ἡμετέρας φιλίας προσγιγνομένης, ἡμῖν δὲ πρὸ αἰσχροῦ τινος, ξυμφορᾶς μετρίως κατατιθεμένης, διαλλαγῶμεν, καὶ αὐτοί τε ἀντὶ πολέμου εἰρήνην ἐλώμεθα, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις Ἕλλησιν ἀνάπαυσιν κακῶν ποιήσωμεν· οἳ καὶ ἐν τούτῳ ὑμᾶς αἰτιωτέρους ἡγήσονται. πολεμοῦνται μὲν γὰρ ἀσαφῶς ὁποτέρων ἀρξάντων· κατα-

the slaughter of the men blockaded on the island. Ἰδίαν, private or individual; with reference to the relations of those who thus fall a sacrifice.

2. ὄντων ἀκρίτων] 'while matters are yet undecided:' on which idiom see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 563 & 564.

ξυμφορᾶς μετρίως κατατιθεμένης] These words, Arnold observes, admit of two interpretations, either, 'our disaster being settled on tolerable terms,' (in which sense κατατιθεσθαι occurs in Demosth. p. 425, and Lysias, 914.) or, 'our misfortune being laid upon us lightly,' κατατιθεσθαι being taken in the sense of bestowing or rendering, as in Xen. Venat. x. 8, εἰς τοῦτον τὴν ὀργὴν κατέθετο: of which two senses the latter, (propounded by me in my Transl.) namely, 'misfortune or calamity being moderately inflicted upon us,' yields, I apprehend, a preferable sense, and one not liable to any well-founded objection. Poppo, indeed, urges that such a use of κατατιθεσθαι ξυμφορὰν to signify infligere, irrogare infortunium, (which Goeller allows does exist.) cannot be admitted except in cases where the prep. εἰς, or some similar word, is subjoined: but here it is plain that ἡμῖν stands for εἰς ἡμᾶς, and consequently there is something similar or equivalent. As to the objection of Goeller, that 'this would require, not πρὸ αἰσχροῦ τινος, but ἄνευ αἰσχροῦ τινος,' that is quite groundless; since πρὸ αἰσχροῦ τινος is not to be taken with κατατιθεμένης, but with διαλλαγῶμεν; though by being placed where it is, the sense of ἄνευ αἰσχροῦ τινος would seem to be implied. The metaphor, however, is one not taken, as Arnold supposes, from bestowing any thing on a person, as a present, (for as to the passages he adduces from Xenophon and Sophocles, they are not to the purpose,) but rather from, as we say, laying stripes or blows on any one. Thus in a passage of St. Luke, x. 30, we have, πληγὰς ἐπιθέντες: and in Acts xvi. 23, ἐπιθέντες αὐτοῖς πληγάς. So also the Latin phrase 'plagas alicui imponere,' found in a passage of Cicero pro Sext. ch. 19. And plaga in the figurative, as used to denote affliction or calamity, occurs in Corn. Nepos, Eumen. ch. 5, 'perculsus plagâ, non succubuit.' Moreover, in English the phrase to lay on is used to denote afflicting, as in the following passage of Shakspeare: 'The weariest and most loathed life That age, ache, penury, imprisonment Can lay on nature, is a paradise To what we fear of death.' The same metaphor, too, is observable in a passage of Psalm lxvi. 11, Sept. ἔθου θλίψεις ἐπὶ τὸν νῶτον ἡμῶν. It is only necessary to add, that the other mode of interpretation, as above adverted to, does no little violence to the words: for though κατατίθεσθαι πόλεμον not unfrequently bears the sense 'to lay down a war,' yet there is neither proof nor probability that κατατίθεσθαι ξυμφορὰν ever signified 'to settle a disaster;' which is, indeed, itself scarcely sense. Moreover, not to mention the straining of sense at μετρίως, κατατ. ought to be in the past tense, and ξυμφ. would require the article.

ἐν τούτῳ] This, as the Scholiast says, stands for ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ γενέσθαι, 'on this taking place,' namely, a peace. The καὶ, Poppo points out, is to be referred, not to ἐν τούτῳ, but to the relative οἳ and the whole sentence. Αἰτιωτέρους, just after, stands for αἰτίους μᾶλλον. Πολεμεῖσθαι in this sense, 'to be at war,' is somewhat rare. In ὁποτέρων ἀρξάντων we have, as Goeller says, nominatives absolute (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 367.) for accusatives, which the verb following would require. With respect to the sense meant to be conveyed by ὁποτέρων ἀρξάντων, 'which began first,' here we have a peculiar idiom, probably borrowed from the language of common life, to signify 'which of the two was in the wrong,' or ought to bear the blame as the author of the miseries suffered by the Greeks at large.

ἧς νῦν ὑμεῖς τὸ πλέον κύριοι ἐστε] 'which you have now more in your power to bring about [than they].' So Dio Cass. 317, 73, καὶ πολέμων καὶ εἰρήνης κύριον.

ὑμῖν προσθήσουσιν. 3. ἢν τε γνῶτε, Λακεδαιμονίοις ἔξεστιν ὑμῖν φίλους γενέσθαι βεβαίως, αὐτῶν τε προκαλεσαμένων, χαρισαμένοις τε μᾶλλον ἢ βιασαμένοις. 4. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ τὰ ἐνόντα ἀγαθὰ σκοπεῖτε ὅσα εἰκὸς εἶναι· ἡμῶν γὰρ καὶ ὑμῶν ταὐτὰ λεγόντων, τό γε ἄλλο Ἑλληνικόν, ἴστε ὅτι, ὑποδεέστερον ὄν, τὰ μέγιστα τιμήσει."

XXI. Οἱ μὲν οὖν Λακεδαιμόνιοι τοσαῦτα εἶπον, νομίζοντες τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐν τῷ πρὶν χρόνῳ σπονδῶν μὲν ἐπιθυμεῖν, σφῶν δὲ ἐναντιουμένων κωλύεσθαι· διδομένης δὲ εἰρήνης, ἀσμένους δέξεσθαί τε καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας ἀποδώσειν. 2. οἱ δὲ τὰς μὲν σπονδάς, ἔχοντες τοὺς ἄνδρας ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, ἤδη σφίσιν ἐνόμιζον ἑτοίμους εἶναι ὁπόταν βούλωνται ποιεῖσθαι πρὸς αὐτούς, τοῦ δὲ πλέονος ὠρέγοντο. 3. μάλιστα δὲ αὐτοὺς ἐνῆγε Κλέων ὁ Κλεαινέτου, ἀνὴρ δημαγωγὸς κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον ὤν, καὶ τῷ πλήθει πιθανώτατος· καὶ ἔπεισεν ἀποκρίνασθαι, ὡς χρὴ τὰ μὲν ὅπλα καὶ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς τοὺς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ παραδόντας πρῶτον, κομισθῆναι Ἀθήναζε, ἐλθόντων δὲ, ἀποδόντας Λακεδαιμονίους Νίσαιαν, καὶ Πηγὰς, καὶ Τροιζῆνα, καὶ Ἀχαΐαν,— ἃ οὐ πολέμῳ ἔλαβον, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῆς προτέρας ξυμβάσεως, Ἀθηναίων

Livy, xxiii. 12, 'quo (scil. tempore) magis dare quam accipere possumus videri pacem.'

3. ἢν τε γνῶτε] scil. οὕτω, 'if you so decide.' So Schol. ἂν τε πείσθητε. Λακεδαιμονίοις ἔξεστιν—βιασαμένοις, 'it is in your power that the Lacedæmonians should be firmly your friends, they inviting you [to this pacification], and you granting a favour, rather than imposing conditions.'

4. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ — εἶναι] 'and herein consider how many advantages are, as is likely, contained.'

ἡμῶν γὰρ—τιμήσει] 'for if we and you say the same thing, the rest of Greece, ye know, as being inferior in power, will render us the highest honour.' In ταὐτὰ λεγόντων we have a figurative mode of expressing perfect accord and union. So v. 31, 3, τὸ αὐτὸ λέγοντες, where the Scholiast explains by τὴν αὐτὴν γνώμην ἔχοντες. Compare also 1 Corinth. i. 10. Jos. Ant. xviii. 9, 9. In the words τὰ μέγιστα τιμήσει, 'will in the highest degree honour us,' (i. e. do as we please,) we have a certain euphemism, resorted to in order to avoid the use of the invidious term obey. So Poppo and Goeller observe, 'Sine illo euphemismo Spartanos palam loqui non licitum erat, propter socios liberos, qui si Græciæ liberatores, ut profitebantur, ultro sequerentur.' The plain truth, apart from euphemism, is expressed in a passage of Aristoph. Pax, 1080. Ἀλλὰ τί χρῆν; ἡμᾶς οὐ παύσασθαι πολεμοῦντας, Ἢ διακαυνιάσαι, ('to waste our substance,') πότεροι κλαυσούμεθα μείζω, ('which of us two shall suffer most,') Ἑξὸν σπεισαμένοις κοινῇ τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἄρχειν;

CH. XXI. 2. τὰς μὲν σπονδὰς—ἑτοίμους εἶναι] 'that the treaty of peace was ready for them,' ready to be made. Τοῦ πλέονος ὠρέγοντο, 'coveted something more,' viz. than treating on terms of equality. Thus they coveted some further concessions; for being as elevated by their unexpected good fortune as the Spartans were depressed by their temporary disaster, they were, as Thucyd. says, more inclined to follow their example than to take their advice. Comp. Aristoph. Pax, 216. Κἄλθοιεν οἱ Λάκωνες εἰρήνης πέρι, Ἐλέγετ' ἂν ὑμεῖς εὐθύς· ἐξαπατώμεθα, Νὴ τὴν Ἀθηνᾶν· νὴ Δί', οὐχὶ πειστέον· Ἥξουσι καὐθις, ἢν ἔχωμεν τὴν Πύλον.

3. δημαγωγὸς] On this term, which, as appears from Isocr. p. 295, and other authorities that might be adduced, is susceptible of a good as well as a bad sense; see Wachsmuth, Ant. Gr. § 69, note 2. In ἐνῆγε we have a very forcible term, serving to set forth the uncompromising opposition of Cleon to any peace on the terms offered. The chief reason for this seems to be, that he thought such a holding out for further and unlimited demands would be most pleasing to the rapacity of his mob supporters. With τῷ πλήθει πιθανώτατος compare iii. 36, on the subject of the same person.

ξυγχωρησάντων κατὰ ξυμφορὰς, καὶ ἐν τῷ τότε δεομένων τι μᾶλλον σπονδῶν,—κομίσασθαι τοὺς ἄνδρας, καὶ σπονδὰς ποιήσασθαι ὁπόσον ἂν δοκῇ χρόνον ἀμφοτέροις. XXII. Οἱ δὲ πρὸς μὲν τὴν ἀπόκρισιν οὐδὲν ἀντεῖπον, ξυνέδρους δὲ σφίσιν ἐκέλευον ἑλέσθαι, οἵτινες λέγοντες καὶ ἀκούοντες περὶ ἑκάστου, ξυμβήσονται κατὰ ἡσυχίαν, ὅ τι ἂν πείθωσιν ἀλλήλους. 2. Κλέων δὲ ἐνταῦθα δὴ πολὺς ἐνέκειτο, λέγων γιγνώσκειν μὲν καὶ πρότερον οὐδὲν ἐν νῷ ἔχοντας δίκαιον αὐτοὺς, σαφὲς δ' εἶναι καὶ νῦν, οἵτινες τῷ μὲν πλήθει οὐδὲν ἐθέλουσιν εἰπεῖν, ὀλίγοις δὲ ἀνδράσι ξύνεδροι βούλονται γίγνεσθαι· ἀλλὰ εἴ τι ὑγιὲς διανοοῦνται, λέγειν ἐκέλευσεν ἅπασιν. 3. ὁρῶντες δὲ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὔτε σφίσιν οἷόν τε ὂν ἐν πλήθει εἰπεῖν, εἴ τι καὶ ὑπὸ τῆς ξυμφορᾶς ἐδόκει αὐτοῖς ξυγχωρεῖν, μὴ ἐς τοὺς ξυμμάχους διαβληθῶσιν, εἰπόντες καὶ οὐ τυχόντες, οὔτε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐπὶ μετρίοις ποιήσοντας ἃ προὐκαλοῦντο, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἄπρακτοι. XXIII. Ἀφικομένων δὲ αὐτῶν, διελύοντο εὐθὺς αἱ σπονδαὶ αἱ περὶ Πύλον, καὶ τὰς ναῦς οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἀπῄτουν, καθάπερ ξυνέκειτο· οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι ἐγκλήματα ἔχοντες ἐπιδρομήν τε τῷ τειχίσματι παράσπονδον, καὶ ἄλλα οὐκ ἀξιόλογα δοκοῦντα εἶναι, οὐκ ἀπε-

Ch. XXII. 1. οὐδὲν ἀντεῖπον] Why they returned no answer to the demands, and made no offer at all, was this, that while the demands themselves were wholly inconsistent with the honour of Lacedæmon, not to say impracticable to be fulfilled, any attempt to effect a modification of the terms, by mutual concession, was too nice and delicate a matter to be discussed with a whole people: hence they, without returning any answer, demanded that ξύνεδροι should be appointed, with whom they might attempt to negotiate the various matters in debate; as in a similar case at v. 35. The term ξύνεδροι is employed, though in a sense receding from general usage, by which it means assessores, or consessores, consiliarii; not with reference (as in our commissioners) to their holding a delegated office to act for another, but with reference to their sitting with and holding conferences with the persons on the other side. The duties performed by them are evident from the words following.

2. πολὺς ἐνέκειτο] multum instabat, 'bitterly inveighed [against them],' as in Herodot. vii. 158, Γελῶν πολλὸς ἐνέκειτο. Hdian. vi. 2, 13. Dio Cass. 142, 64. 162, 26. 320, 74. 847, 74. On this force of πολὺς see Blomf. on Æschyl. Theb. 6.

ὀλίγοις ἀνδράσι ξύνεδροι βούλονται γίγνεσθαι] Meaning, as we should say, 'to be closeted with a few, in opposition to an open conference with the people at large.'

εἴ τι ὑγιὲς διανοοῦνται] 'if they meant any thing sincere and true.' So iii. 75, οὐδὲν ὑγιὲς διανοουμένων. There is here a medical metaphor, taken from sound flesh which conceals no latent proud flesh, and is therefore what it professes to be. Hence the senses sincere, real, true, &c. The same metaphor may be traced in the term ὕπουλος, which properly signifies 'flesh that has an ulcer beneath,' and figuratively, hollow, false, insincere, &c.

3. μὴ ἐς τοὺς ξυμμάχους διαβληθῶσιν] 'lest they should incur censure or hatred with their allies;' namely, for having sacrificed the honour of the confederacy.

Ch. XXIII. 1. ἐπιδρομήν τε τῷ τειχίσματι] The term ἐπιδρομὴ in general denotes an attack, incursio; but here, a sudden assault on a fort, to carry it by a coup de main. At iv. 34 & 56, it bears the sense, frequent in Polybius and Herodian, a sudden and violent charge. It is hardly to be supposed that our author here means to include this ἐπιδρομὴ in the number of other matters of no great moment: for thus it would be necessary to almost explain away the force of the term; understanding it, as the commentators and historians do, merely of some act of hostility committed against the garrison. The term may be said to differ from προσβολὴ in this, that the δίδοσαν, ἰσχυριζόμενοι ὅτι δὴ εἴρητο, "ἐὰν καὶ ὁτιοῦν παραβαθῇ, λελύσθαι τὰς σπονδάς." οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἀντέλεγόν τε καὶ ἀδίκημα ἐπικαλέσαντες τὸ τῶν νεῶν, ἀπελθόντες ἐς πόλεμον καθίσταντο. 2. καὶ τὰ περὶ Πύλον ὑπ' ἀμφοτέρων κατὰ κράτος ἐπολεμεῖτο, Ἀθηναῖοι μὲν δυοῖν ἐναντίαιν ἀεὶ τὴν νῆσον περιπλέοντες τῆς ἡμέρας, τῆς δὲ νυκτὸς καὶ ἅπασαι περιώρμουν, πλὴν τὰ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος, ὁπότε ἄνεμος εἴη· (καὶ ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν αὐτοῖς εἴκοσι νῆες ἀφίκοντο ἐς τὴν φυλακὴν, ὥστε αἱ πᾶσαι ἑβδομήκοντα ἐγένοντο·) Πελοποννήσιοι δὲ ἔν τε τῇ ἠπείρῳ στρατοπεδευόμενοι, καὶ προσβολὰς ποιούμενοι τῷ τείχει, σκοποῦντες καιρὸν, εἴ τις παραπέσοι, ὥστε τοὺς ἄνδρας σῶσαι.

XXIV. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ οἱ ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ Συρακόσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, πρὸς ταῖς ἐν Μεσσήνῃ φρουρούσαις ναυσὶ τὸ ἄλλο ναυτικὸν ὃ παρεσκευάζοντο προσκομίσαντες, τὸν πόλεμον ἐποιοῦντο ἐκ τῆς Μεσσήνης. 2. καὶ μάλιστα ἐνῆγον οἱ Λοκροὶ, τῶν Ῥηγίνων κατὰ ἔχθραν· καὶ αὐτοὶ δὲ ἐσεβεβλήκεσαν πανδημεὶ ἐς τὴν γῆν αὐτῶν. 3. καὶ ναυμαχίας ἀποπειρᾶσθαι ἐβούλοντο, ὁρῶντες τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις action thereby denoted is sudden and violent, but not continued or persevering.

ἰσχυριζόμενοι ὅτι] 'alleging that,' lit. 'resting their justification on this, that.' So the Scholiast explains by ἐπερειδόμενοι, καὶ ὡς ἰσχυρὸν προτείνοντες. The complete phrase occurs in a passage of Demosthenes cited in Steph. Thes. in v. οὐ μὴν ἰσχυρίζω καὶ τούτῳ, ὅτι, &c.; and is also found at p. 901, 8. 1020, 21.

2. τὰ περὶ Πύλον—ἐπολεμεῖτο] Meaning that 'the military operations were carried on strenuously.' At Ἀθηναῖοι μὲν, &c., there is, as Poppo and Goeller point out, the use of nomin. instead of the genit. ὑπ' Ἀθηναίων; the phrase ὑπ' ἀμφ. ἐπολεμεῖτο being equivalent in sense to ἀμφότεροι ἐπολέμουν. Poppo compares a passage v. 70, ἡ ξύνοδος ἦν Ἀργεῖοι μὲν—χωροῦντες. Herodot. viii. 74, πολλὰ ἐλέγετο περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν· οἱ μὲν—οἱ δέ. Eurip. Heracl. 39. Δυοῖν ἐναντίαιν, 'with two [ships] sailing contrary ways.' So i. 93, δύο ἅμαξαι ἐναντίαι ἀλλήλαις, where see note.

περιώρμουν] 'moored around,' by way of blockade. Of this word, which is extremely rare, two examples elsewhere are found, one in Pollux, i. 122, (cited in Steph. Thes.) and another in Dio Cass. p. 921, 25.

πλὴν τὰ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος, ὁπότε ἄνεμος εἴη] 'quoties ventus spirabat, non circumibant τὰ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος.'

ἔν τε τῇ ἠπείρῳ] After ἐν I have, with Poppo and Haack, received τε, from several of the best MSS.; though the word is not found in the majority of the MSS. and the common text. Certain it is that internal evidence is quite in its favour; and how easily the word might be absorbed by the τῇ following, it is scarcely necessary to observe.

εἴ τις παραπέσοι] scil. καιρὸς, 'should fall out,' 'chance to occur.' So Xenoph. Hipp. vii. 4, ὁπότε καιρὸς παραπέσοι. Polyb. i. 75 9. xi. 16, 1. xii. 6, 5, καιροῦ παραπεσόντος. The term is almost always used of what is good, as Eurip. Orest. 1173, εἰ πόθεν—παραπέσοι σωτηρία: yet sometimes of evil, as Diod. Sic. ii. 265. Dionys. Hal. p. 375, 7. The ὥστε, just after, is meant, as Poppo observes, to explain the καιρὸν preceding.

Ch. XXIV. The scene now changes to Sicily: and there is first narrated in this chapter a fresh attempt of the Syracusans and their allies to take Rhegium.

2. Here, for vulg. ἐσβεβλήκεσαν, I have thought proper, with Haack and Poppo, to edit ἐσεβεβλήκεσαν: for though it may be said that of these two forms one is as good as the other, yet the latter is, there is some reason to think, more Attic. This is, moreover, a case in which the authority of MSS. has considerable weight, and that is here decidedly in favour of ἐσεβ.

3. ναυμαχίας ἀποπειρᾶσθαι] 'to make trial of.' See note on ii. 93, 1.

τὰς μὲν παρούσας ὀλίγας ναῦς, ταῖς δὲ πλείοσι καὶ μελλούσαις ἥξειν πυνθανόμενοι τὴν νῆσον πολιορκεῖσθαι. 4. εἰ γὰρ κρατήσειαν τῷ ναυτικῷ, τὸ Ῥήγιον ἤλπιζον, πεζῇ τε καὶ ναυσὶν ἐφορμοῦντες, ῥᾳδίως χειρώσασθαι, καὶ ἤδη σφῶν ἰσχυρὰ τὰ πράγματα γίγνεσθαι· ξύνεγγυς γὰρ κειμένου τοῦ τε Ῥηγίου ἀκρωτηρίου τῆς Ἰταλίας τῆς τε Μεσσήνης τῆς Σικελίας, τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τε οὐκ ἂν εἶναι ἐφορμεῖν, καὶ τοῦ πορθμοῦ κρατεῖν. 5. ἔστι δὲ ὁ πορθμὸς ἡ μεταξὺ Ῥηγίου θάλασσα καὶ Μεσσήνης, ᾗπερ βραχύτατον Σικελία τῆς ἠπείρου ἀπέχει· καὶ ἔστιν ἡ Χάρυβδις κληθεῖσα τοῦτο, ᾗ Ὀδυσσεὺς λέγεται διαπλεῦσαι. διὰ στενότητα δὲ καὶ ἐκ μεγάλων πελαγῶν, τοῦ τε Τυρσηνικοῦ καὶ τοῦ Σικελικοῦ, ἐσπίπτουσα ἡ θάλασσα ἐς αὐτό, καὶ ῥοώδης οὖσα, εἰκότως χαλεπὴ ἐνομίσθη.

4. ξύνεγγυς γὰρ — Σικελίας] 'for as the promontory of Rhegium in Italy, and Messena in Sicily, are in vicinity to one another;' the ξυν prefixed to ἐγγὺς denoting that the vicinity of the two sites is in common, or reciprocal. So Aristot. Polit. l. ii. σύνεγγυς ἀλλήλων εἰσί. This force of the preposition, though in general passed over as immaterial, is here by no means unimportant.

5. ἔστι δὲ — ἀπέχει] Render, 'Now the strait is that part of the sea between Rhegium and Messena, where Sicily is at the shortest distance from the continent;' an assertion, strictly speaking, not entirely borne out by the truth of facts, yet not materially contradictory thereto. By the words ἔστιν ἡ Χάρυβδις κληθεῖσα τοῦτο, it would seem to be expressed that the whole strait was called Charybdis: and that might, in common parlance, be said; though the name in question was properly only applied to denote a small part so called, and described by Capt. Smyth (cited in Arnold) as 'an agitated water (i. e. piece of water, μέρος τῆς θαλάσσης) of from 70 to 90 fathoms deep, circling in quick eddies, and owing its existence to the meeting of the harbour and lateral currents with the main one; the latter being forced over in this direction by the opposite point of Pezzo.' He adds, that 'Thucydides is the only ancient writer who has assigned this danger its true situation, and not exaggerated its effects.' See Cluver, Sic. Ant. p. 70, and Dorville, Sic. p. 9.

On the words, a little after, ἐκ μεγάλων πελαγῶν—ἐσπίπτουσα ἡ θάλασσα, Poppo points out as remarkable the distinction between the nouns πέλαγος and θάλασσα, of which the former is said of any particular seas; the latter, of the waves of the sea, rather what we should call a sea-flood.

ῥοώδης] 'rushing in a strong current.' So Aristot. ap. Steph. Thes. θάλασσα ῥοώδης. Arrian, Ind. xxii. 6, τῇ θαλάσσῃ ῥοώδει. Diod. Sic. ii. 166, θάλασσα ῥοώδης. Joseph. p. 91, 1, ἐπιχεῖται πάλιν ἡ θάλασσα ῥοώδης.

εἰκότως χαλεπὴ ἐνομίσθη] From the manner in which Charybdis is mentioned, we may infer that it was not thought so dangerous in the historian's time, and indeed at the present day it is very far from being so, though subject to violent agitation in stormy weather. So Dorville, Sicula, ch. 1, p. 9, says, 'Charybdin hanc aliquando per totos dies tranquillissimam esse vidimus, et sic mare sæpe in utroque hujus freti introitu non magis solito effervescere accepimus. Nempe æstum maris pro ventis modo rapidiorem, modo lentiorem esse satis constat, et pro copia aquæ in has fauces irruentis jam longius durare, jam citius deficere, consentaneum veritati videtur.' I would not, however, be so sceptical as Mr. Hobbes, who seems to doubt whether it was ever subject to any extraordinary agitation. Great changes of nature may be supposed, and indeed are known, to have taken place in the course of nearly three thousand years, amply sufficient to account for the difference; and such is the opinion of a learned naturalist (Dr. Daubeny) in a late interesting work on volcanoes. Thucydides evidently does not doubt the truth of the ancient relations; though, in attributing them to the narrowness of the strait, he seems not to go far enough. There are almost equally narrow straits in the world, where two seas meet, and yet where no such phenomena as those observed at Charybdis occur, as the straits of Dover and Calais, the straits of Gibraltar, of Babelmandel, &c. The reason seems to be, that for the production of the same phenomena, it is requisite not only that the straits should be narrow, and the current set in from two seas, but also that it should be crooked, as is the case with the one in question. Wherever that is found, the same phenomena may be expected to occur. Such is the case in the straits of Magellan, and for that reason.

XXV. Ἐν τούτῳ οὖν τῷ μεταξὺ οἱ Συρακόσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ναυσὶν ὀλίγῳ πλείοσιν ἢ τριάκοντα ἠναγκάσθησαν ὀψὲ τῆς ἡμέρας ναυμαχῆσαι περὶ πλοίου διαπλέοντος, ἀντεπαναγόμενοι πρός τε Ἀθηναίων ναῦς ἐκκαίδεκα καὶ Ῥηγίνας ὀκτώ. 2. καὶ νικηθέντες ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, διὰ τάχους ἀπέπλευσαν, ὡς ἕκαστοι ἔτυχον, ἐς τὰ οἰκεῖα στρατόπεδα, τό τε ἐν τῇ Μεσσήνῃ καὶ ἐν τῷ Ῥηγίῳ, μίαν ναῦν ἀπολέσαντες· καὶ νὺξ ἐπεγένετο τῷ ἔργῳ. 3. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο οἱ μὲν Λοκροὶ ἀπῆλθον ἐκ τῆς Ῥηγίνων· ἐπὶ δὲ τὴν Πελωρίδα τῆς Μεσσήνης συλλεγεῖσαι αἱ τῶν Συρακοσίων καὶ ξυμμάχων νῆες ὥρμουν, καὶ ὁ πεζὸς αὐτοῖς παρῆν. 4. προσπλεύσαντες δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ Ῥηγῖνοι, ὁρῶντες τὰς ναῦς κενάς, ἐνέβαλον· καὶ χειρὶ σιδηρᾷ ἐπιβληθείσῃ μίαν ναῦν αὐτοὶ ἀπώλεσαν, τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἀποκολυμβησάντων. 5. καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο τῶν Συρακοσίων ἐσβάντων ἐς τὰς ναῦς, καὶ παραπλεόντων ἀπὸ κάλω ἐς τὴν Μεσσήνην, αὖθις προσἀντεπαναγόμενοι] For this, which is the common reading, Poppo has edited, from eight of the best MSS., ἀντεπαγόμενοι: but I have, with Haack, Bekker, and Goeller, thought proper to retain the former, on the ground of its being a term more significant and appropriate: and indeed while our author and other good writers not unfrequently use ἀντανάγεσθαι, I know of no writer in whom ἀντεπάγεσθαι occurs. As to the objection urged by Poppo, that ἀντεπαν. would be unsuitable, because the battle was not at open sea, that is quite groundless; and as to the accumulation of prepositions in this case, it may be said that ἀντεπανάγεσθαι presents what is no more without precedent than many other compound verbs occurring in Thucydides; e. g. ἀντεπεξάγω, which I have noted in no other author except Dio Cass. The ἐπι in this case bears simply the sense against; and many are the examples that might be adduced of a similar use of ἐπι subjoined to ἀντι in composition.

Cn. XXV. 1. ἠναγκάσθησαν — ναυμαχῆσαι] i. e. 'they were constrained by the circumstance subjoined.'

2. ὡς ἕκαστοι ἔτυχον] i. e. 'as such chanced [to be able]:' the formula being used by way of intimating that 'the ships effected their retreat to their own naval camp with difficulty,'—i. e. each as well as it could. As to the sense assigned to ἕκαστοι by the generality of commentators, it is, as Arnold and Poppo point out, quite inadmissible, since it would require, not ὡς ἕκαστοι ἔτυχον, but simply ἑκάτεροι ἀπέπλευσαν; and the phrase διὰ τάχους would thus be wholly unmeaning.

For τότε, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller have done quite right in editing (though merely on conjecture) τό τε; since the former is incapable of any tolerable sense: and indeed for the latter I am enabled to adduce the authority of the Cod. Clar.

τὴν Πελωρίδα] This is elsewhere called Pelorus; but the feminine form in ις is here adopted by way of expressing the ἄκραν or promontory of Pelorus.

4. χειρὶ σιδηρᾷ] A sort of harpago (Ang. grapnel) often used by the ancients in naval warfare; on which see Reimar on Dio Cass. p. 571. It was employed for the purpose of holding a ship fast, in order to its being boarded and taken by an overpowering force. In the present case we are to understand the implement as thrown by the Syracusans from the land. For vulg. αὐτοῖς (retained by Bekker), αὐτοὶ has been very properly edited by Poppo and Goeller, from several MSS.; the context imperatively requiring it, in the sense 'and they themselves (they, too, on their part) lost one ship,' namely, as the enemy had before done.

5. παραπλεόντων ἀπὸ κάλω] 'coasting along by tow-ropes;' equivalent to the Greek ῥυμουλκεῖν and the Latin remulco

βαλόντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀποσιμωσάντων ἐκείνων καὶ προεμβαλόντων, ἑτέραν ναῦν ἀπολλύουσι. 6. καὶ ἐν τῷ παράπλῳ καὶ τῇ ναυμαχίᾳ, τοιουτοτρόπῳ γενομένῃ, οὐκ ἔλασσον ἔχοντες οἱ Συρακόσιοι, παρεκομίσθησαν ἐς τὸν ἐν τῇ Μεσσήνῃ λιμένα. 7. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι, Καμαρίνης ἀγγελθείσης προδίδοσθαι Συρακοσίοις ὑπ' Ἀρχίου καὶ τῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ, ἔπλευσαν ἐκεῖσε· Μεσσήνιοι δ' ἐν τούτῳ πανδημεὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ ταῖς ναυσὶν ἅμα ἐστράτευσαν ἐπὶ Νάξον τὴν Χαλκιδικήν, ὅμορον οὖσαν. 8. καὶ τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τειχήρεις ποιήσαντες τοὺς Ναξίους, ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν, τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ταῖς μὲν ναυσὶ περιπλεύσαντες κατὰ τὸν Ἀκεσίνην ποταμόν, τὴν γῆν ἐδῄουν, τῷ δὲ πεζῷ πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ἐσέβαλλον. 9. ἐν τούτῳ δὲ οἱ Σικελοὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἄκρων πολλοὶ κατέβαινον βοηθοῦντες ἐπὶ τοὺς Μεσσηνίους. καὶ οἱ Νάξιοι ὡς εἶδον, θαρσήσαντες καὶ παρακελευόμενοι ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ὡς οἱ Λεοντῖνοι σφῖσι καὶ [οἱ] ἄλλοι Ἕλληνες ξύμμαχοι ἐς trahere. Pollux, i. 113, has ἐκ κάλων: but the singular ἐκ κάλω (gen. contract. Attic), for κάλως, (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 70, 3.) is found in Appian, i. 757, ἀπὸ κάλω διαπλέων, and should undoubtedly be restored, from two good MSS., at ii. 680, instead of vulg. ἀπὸ κάλων. In a passage of Polyæn. vii. 21, 3, for ἀπὸ κάλου read ἀπὸ κάλω.

ἀποσιμωσάντων] This term (which has not a little perplexed philologists) comes from ἀπὸ and σιμὸς, which latter, however, is a word bearing a variety of senses; e. g. altus, arduus, found in passages of Xen. and Athen. adduced by Steph. Thes. (See also Toup's Opusc. i. 416.) Hence it may mean,—as one of the Scholiasts and the ancient lexicographers explain,—μετεωρισάντων, 'having moved off the ships in altum—to the high sea;' namely, in order to have more space for manœuvring them. For this view, however, I find no authority in the classical writers; and hence I am inclined to seek the sense from that signification of σιμὸς, by which it means a turn-up nose: whence the verb σιμόω might bear the sense to turn or twist, or wind oneself, and so ἀποσιμόω that of 'to twist or wind oneself off or away:' a view supported by certain passages which I have in my Translation adduced from Xenophon and Appian; e. g. Xen. Hist. v. 4, 40, πρὸς ἐκείνους μὲν οὐκ ἦγεν, ἐπισιμώσας δὲ, πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ᾔει, 'having wound off, drawn off,' (what in Polyænus is expressed by λοξώσας.) 'he went towards the city:' where that ἀποσιμ. (found in the marg. and Leunel.) is the true reading, there can be no doubt, since ἐπισιμόω is a word of no authority, and the preposition in this case would yield no tolerable sense. Again, in a passage of Appian, ii. 622, we have, αἱ δὲ ἐμβολαὶ καὶ ἀποσιμώσεις ἀσθενεῖς ἐγίγνοντο, where ἀποσ. can only mean ἀναστροφαί: and so the Scholiast here rightly explains by ὑπαναχωρησάντων, 'having wound or drawn off.' Of course it is implied, from the nature of the thing, that they wound off by a sidelong movement to sea-ward, in order to have room to act either on the offensive or the defensive: moreover, at ii. 89, 9, it is said, of a sea-fight carried on in a confined situation, οὔτε γὰρ ἂν ἐπιπλεύσειέ τις ὡς χρὴ ἐς ἐμβολὴν, οὔτε ἂν ἀποχωρήσειεν (draw off) ἐν ᾧ ἔξοντι πιεζόμενος. The only point, indeed, wanting to this view of the expression is to find an example of σιμόω used in the sense to twist, turn, or wind, obliquare. Now this is supplied by the following passage of Alciphron, Epist. i. 39, ἀπεδύσατο τὸ χιτώνιον· καὶ μικρὸν ἀποσιμώσασα τὴν ὀσφῦν, (paululum obliquans lumbos,) &c. And so Statius, Theb. xii. 749, 'Illa paventes obliquarit equos,' i. e. drew them off obliquely by a lateral motion.

Of προεμβαλόντων the sense is, 'having charged (or used the ἐμβολὴ) first.'

8. τειχήρεις ποιήσαντες] See note on ii. 101. κατὰ τὸν Ἀκεσίνην ποταμὸν, 'over-against the Acesines.'

9. ὑπὲρ τῶν ἄκρων] i. e. 'those inhabiting the highlands' above Messina, especially the Heræi montes, Pelorias and Taurus. In παρακελευόμενοι ἐν ἑαυτοῖς (which is a somewhat remarkable phrase) we have a confusion of two different forms of expression, παρακ. ἑαυτοῖς, and παρακ.

τιμωρίαν ἐπέρχονται, ἐκδραμόντες ἄφνω ἐκ τῆς πόλεως προσπίπτουσι τοῖς Μεσσηνίοις, καὶ τρέψαντες, ἀπέκτειναν τε ὑπὲρ χιλίους, καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ χαλεπῶς ἀπεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἴκου· καὶ γὰρ οἱ βάρβαροι ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς ἐπιπεσόντες τοὺς πλείστους διέφθειραν. 10. καὶ αἱ νῆες, σχοῦσαι ἐς τὴν Μεσσήνην, ὕστερον ἐπ' οἴκου ἕκασται διεκρίθησαν. 11. Λεοντῖνοι δὲ εὐθὺς καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι μετὰ Ἀθηναίων ἐς τὴν Μεσσήνην, ὡς κεκακωμένην, ἐστράτευον, καὶ προσβάλλοντες οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι κατὰ τὸν λιμένα ταῖς ναυσὶν ἐπείρων, ὁ δὲ πεζὸς πρὸς τὴν πόλιν. 12. ἐπεκδρομὴν δὲ ποιησάμενοι οἱ Μεσσήνιοι καὶ Λοκρῶν τινες μετὰ τοῦ Δημοτέλους, οἳ μετὰ τὸ πάθος ἐγκατελείφθησαν φρουροὶ, ἐξαπιναίως προσπεσόντες, τρέπουσι τοῦ στρατεύματος τῶν Λεοντίνων τὸ πολὺ, καὶ ἀπέκτειναν πολλούς. 13. ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ ἀποβάντες ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν ἐβοήθουν, καὶ κατεδίωξαν τοὺς Μεσσηνίους πάλιν ἐς τὴν πόλιν, τεταραγμένους ἐπιγενόμενοι· καὶ τροπαῖον στήσαντες, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς τὸ Ῥήγιον. 14. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο οἱ μὲν ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ Ἕλληνες ἄνευ τῶν Ἀθηναίων κατὰ γῆν ἐστράτευον ἐπ' ἀλλήλους.

XXVI. Ἐν δὲ τῇ Πύλῳ ἔτι ἐπολιόρκουν τοὺς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ Λακεδαιμονίους οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ τὸ ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ στρατόπεδον τῶν Πελοποννησίων κατὰ χώραν ἔμενεν. 2. ἐπίπονος δ' ἦν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἡ φυλακὴ σίτου τε ἀπορίᾳ καὶ ὕδατος· οὐ γὰρ ἦν κρήνη ὅτι μὴ μία ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ ἀκροπόλει τῆς Πύλου, καὶ αὕτη οὐ μεγάλη· ἀλλὰ διαμώμενοι τὸν κάχληκα οἱ πλεῖστοι ἐπὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἔπινον οἷον ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, (for ἀλλήλοις; on which idiom see Museum Crit. i. 198.) and that standing for παρακελεύσεις ποιούμενοι ἐν ἑαυτοῖς; as in similar forms of expression at v. 69, and viii. 76, παρακελεύσεις ἐποιοῦντο ἐν σφίσιν, and ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς τὴν παρακέλευσιν ἐποιοῦντο.

10. ἐπ' οἴκου ἕκασται διεκρίθησαν] 'divisæ [naves] vel separatæ abierunt domum.' (Bauer.)

11. ἐπείρων] 'assaulted it,' lit. essayed to take it. Πρὸς τὴν πόλιν, 'on the side of the city.' It would appear that the port and the city formed two almost distinct towns, though enclosed by one wall, like Athens and Piræus. The port seems to have been (where the present commercial quarter of Messene is) at the isthmus of the hooked peninsula which forms the harbour; and the city, further back up the country.

CH. XXVI. Our historian now reverts to the affair at Pylus, and recounts the various operations resorted to by the Athenians in the progress of the blockade.

2. διαμώμενοι τὸν κάχληκα] 'removing the shingles by digging,' (a term formed from διὰ, through, and ἄμη, a spade,) literally, what, in agricultural phraseology, is called a crooked spade, long, narrow, and made to penetrate into the earth. Thus Hesychius rightly explains the term by διϊστάντες. As examples of the word I have noted Appian, i. 350, διαμ. τὸν ψάμμον. Arrian, E. A. vi. 23, 5, and 26, 12, διαμωμένους τὸν κάχληκα. Philostr. Icon. xi. 8. Plut. de Is. et Os. § 60. Polyb. iii. 55, 6, διαμησάμενος τὴν χιόνα, 'having dug and removed the snow.' Eurip. Bacch. 665, ἀκροῖς δακτύλοισι διαμῶσαι χθόνα. Thus the verb in question, by means of its preposition in composition, includes the combined sense of digging through (διὰ) and bringing upward. Finally, in a passage of Themist. Orat. p. 250, τῶν ναμάτων τὰ διαφανῆ τε καὶ καθαρὰ ἀνιχνεύοντές τε καὶ διασμώσμενοι, for διασμώσμενοι ought undoubtedly to be read διαμώμενοι.

Of κάχληξ, which is a rare word, an example occurs in Procop. 331, 21. The word comes from καχλάζειν, on which see εἰκὸς ὕδωρ. 3. στενοχωρία τε ἐν ὀλίγῳ στρατοπεδευομένοις ἐγίγνετο· καὶ τῶν νεῶν οὐκ ἐχουσῶν ὅρμον, αἱ μὲν σῖτον ἐν τῇ γῇ ᾑροῦντο κατὰ μέρος, αἱ δὲ μετέωροι ὥρμουν. 4. ἀθυμίαν τε πλείστην ὁ χρόνος παρεῖχε παρὰ λόγον ἐπιγιγνόμενος, οὓς ᾤοντο ἡμερῶν ὀλίγων ἐκπολιορκήσειν, ἐν νήσῳ τε ἐρήμῃ καὶ ὕδατι ἁλμυρῷ χρωμένους. 5. αἴτιον δὲ ἦν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι προειπόντες ἐς τὴν νῆσον ἐσάγειν σῖτόν τε τὸν βουλόμενον ‡ ἀληλεμένον, καὶ οἶνον, καὶ τυρὸν, καὶ εἴτι ἄλλο βρῶμα, οἷον ἂν ἐς πολιορκίαν ξυμφέρῃ, τάξαντες ἀργυρίου πολλοῦ, καὶ τῶν Εἱλώτων τῷ ἐσαγαγόντι ἐλευθερίαν ὑπισχνούμενοι. 6. καὶ ἐσῆγον ἄλλοι τε, παρακινδυνεύοντες, καὶ μάλιστα οἱ Εἵλωτες, ἀπαίροντες ἀπὸ τῆς Πελοποννήσου ὁπόθεν τύχοιεν, καὶ καταπλέοντες ἔτι νυκτὸς ἐς τὰ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος τῆς νήσου. 7. μάλιστα δὲ ἐτήρουν ἀνέμῳ καταφέρεσθαι· ῥᾷον γὰρ τὴν φυλακὴν τῶν τριήρων ἐλάνθανον, ὁπότε πνεῦμα ἐκ πόντου εἴη· ἄπορον γὰρ ἐγίγνετο περιορμεῖν, τοῖς δὲ ἀφειδὴς ὁ κατάπλους καθεστήκει· ἐπώκελλον γὰρ τὰ πλοῖα τετιμημένα χρημάτων, καὶ οἱ ὁπλῖται περὶ τὰς κατάρσεις τῆς νήσου ἐφύλασσον. 8. ὅσοι δὲ γαλήνῃ κινδυνεύσειαν, ἠλίσκοντο. ἐσένεον δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὸν λιμένα κολυμβηταὶ ὕφυδροι, καλωδίῳ ἐν ἀσκοῖς ἐφέλκοντες μήκωνα μεμελιτωμένην καὶ Blomf. on Æschyl. Theb. 110, and Monk on Eurip. Hipp. 1205.

4. ἐπιγιγνόμενος] 'carried on,' protracted. Οὓς ᾤοντο is, as Goeller says, for ὅτι αὐτοὺς ᾤοντο: an idiom frequent in the best writers, by which the relative at the beginning of a sentence, even without an article, is equivalent to the pronoun demonstrative with such a conjunction as the context requires, which is here a causal. Nor is this confined to the classical writers, but is frequent in the scriptural ones, especially the Epistles of St. Paul. Ἁλμυρῷ does not mean, as Bauer explains, salsa, but subsalsa, 'brackish:' and so the expression ἁλμυρὸν ὕδωρ in Plut. Ant. 48, and elsewhere.

5. In the words αἴτιον ἦν οἱ Λακεδ. προειπόντες the verb ἦν is, as Goeller points out, accommodated to the predicate, not the subject; and he refers to Dorv. on Chariton. p. 565, and Matth. Gr. Gr. p. 611.

I have followed Bekker and Goeller in editing, from five MSS., ἀληλεμένον, instead of vulg. ἀληλεσμένον, which is retained by Haack and Poppo, and may seem to be confirmed by Herodot. vii. 23. That, however, seems to have been an Ionic, not an Attic form. So Amphis ap. Athen. p. 642, has ἀληλεμένον: and though Casaub. prefers ἀληλεσμένον, and adduces examples, yet they are almost entirely from later writers, as Porphyry.

7. ἐτήρουν καταφέρεσθαι] for ἐτήρουν τὸν καιρὸν ὥστε κατ. Of this ellipsis, which is rare, examples are found elsewhere, in Aristot. Rhet. ii. ἐξαγγελτικοὶ δὲ, οἵ τε ἠδικημένοι, διὰ τὸ παρατηρεῖν (scil. τὸν καιρὸν) καὶ οἱ κακολόγοι. St. Luke, xx. 20, καὶ παρατηρήσαντες ἀπέστειλαν ἐγκαθέτους. With ὁπότε εἴη πνεῦμα ἐκ πόντου, 'from the seaward,' compare Homer, Odyss. ix. 286, ἄνεμος δ' ἐκ πόντου ἔνεικεν.

ἀφειδὴς ὁ κατάπλους] The term ἀφειδὴς is properly only applicable to persons; and very rarely is it used, as here, of things. Another instance, however, occurs in Æschyl. Agam. 188, πνοαὶ—νεῶν τε καὶ πεισμάτων ἀφειδεῖς.

τὰς κατάρσεις] Meaning 'the places where they could make the shore.' Κάταρσις is a rare word, but occurs in Dio Cass. 217, 83. 327, 76, and Plutarch.

8. κολυμβηταὶ ὕφυδροι] Meaning 'those who could swim under water.' So Dio Cass. 313, 97, τούς τε γὰρ λίθους τοὺς ἐν τοῖς σκάφεσι συγκειμένους κολυμβηταῖς ὑφύδροις διασκεδάσας. Arrian, E. A. ii. 21, 8, ὕφαλοι κολυμβηταὶ τὰς σχοίνους αὐτοῖς ὑπέτεμνον. The term ὕφυδρος, from its being rare, has been, like various other words little used, liable to corruption.

λίνου σπέρμα κεκομμένον· ὧν τὸ πρῶτον λανθανόντων, φυλακαὶ ὕστερον ἐγένοντο. 9. παντί τε τρόπῳ ἑκάτεροι ἐτεχνῶντο, οἱ μὲν ἐσπέμπειν τὰ σιτία, οἱ δὲ μὴ λανθάνειν σφᾶς.

XXVII. Ἐν δὲ ταῖς Ἀθήναις πυνθανόμενοι περὶ τῆς στρατιᾶς ὅτι ταλαιπωρεῖται, καὶ σῖτος τοῖς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ὅτι ἐσπλεῖ, ἠπόρουν, καὶ ἐδεδοίκεσαν μὴ σφῶν χειμὼν τὴν φυλακὴν ἐπιλάβοι, ὁρῶντες τῶν τε ἐπιτηδείων τὴν περὶ τὴν Πελοπόννησον κομιδὴν ἀδύνατον ἐσομένην ἅμα ἐν χωρίῳ ἐρήμῳ, καὶ οὐδ' ἐν θέρει οἷοί τε ὄντες ἱκανὰ περιπέμπειν, τόν τε ἔφορμον χωρίων ἁλιμένων ὄντων οὐκ ἐσόμενον· ἀλλ' ἤ, σφῶν ἀνέντων τὴν φυλακὴν, περιγενήσεσθαι τοὺς ἄνδρας, ἢ τοῖς πλοίοις ἃ τὸν σῖτον αὐτοῖς ἦγε, χειμῶνα τηρήσαντας, ἐκπλεύσεσθαι. 2. πάντων δὲ ἐφοβοῦντο μάλιστα τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, ὅτι ἔχοντάς τι ἰσχυρὸν αὐτοὺς ἐνόμιζον οὐκέτι σφίσιν ἐπικηρυκεύεσθαι· καὶ μετεμέλοντο τὰς σπονδὰς οὐ δεξάμενοι. 3. Κλέων δὲ, γνοὺς αὐτῶν τὴν ἐς αὐτὸν ὑποψίαν περὶ τῆς κωλύμης τῆς ξυμβάσεως, οὐ ταληθῆ ἔφη λέγειν τοὺς ἐξαγγέλλοντας. παραινούντων δὲ

Thus in a passage of Philostr. V. A. i. 25, for ἔφυδρον ought undoubtedly to be read ὕφυδρον: and the same correction is to be applied to the ἔφυδρος of Suidas. It may be noticed, too, though the editors have failed to perceive it, that the two passages cited in that lexicographer are from Dio Cass. 313 & 697. So again in Pollux, i. 97, (on diving) for κολυμβητὴς, ὕφαλος, ὑφυδρος, ought to be read κολυμβητὴς ὕφαλος, ὕφυδρος. So also at vii. 137, of the same writer, for ὑδροκολυμβηταὶ, ὕφυδροι, κολυμβηταὶ, δυόμενοι, read ὑδροκολυμβηταὶ, κολυμβηταὶ ὕφυδροι, κολυμβηταὶ, δυόμενοι: an emendation further confirmed by the authority of Cod. A. On the other hand, in Hippocr. Proth. 2, p. 83, C, for ὑφυδρ. read, from the MSS., ἐφυδρ.

μήκωνα μεμελιτωμένην καὶ λίνου σπέρμα κεκομμένον] 'poppy-seed mixed with honey and bruised linseed.' The Scholiast conjectures the two articles here specified to have served the purpose of medicine rather than food; the former, he says, being good to remove hunger, and the latter thirst. Both, indeed, have medicinal properties; but it is not unlikely that the former was also taken, as opium now is, from its cheering effect; and both that and the linseed might be meant to counteract the bad effects of the brackish water. Yet the Scholiast and the commentators have overlooked the very nutritive quality of linseed. Nay, it is not improbable that the ingredients in question were meant to be mixed with flour: for I find from Athen. 110, F, and 111, A, that the ancients used mixed bread of that kind. His words are these: Μακωνιδῶν δ' ἄρτων μνημονεύει Ἀλκμάν. Athenæus also subjoins: χρυσοκόλλα ἐστὶ βρωμάτιον διὰ μέλιτος καὶ λίνου, where I conj. βρῶμά τι ὄν, which is confirmed by Hesych. χρυσοκόλλα· βρῶμά τι ἐκ λινοσπέρμου καὶ μέλιτος. καὶ χρῶμά τι χλωρὸν, where I read μέλιτος, καὶ χρώματι χλωρόν. Casaubon, too, quotes a passage of Galen where he says, 'lini semen inter illa habet, quæ et alimenti et pharmaci usum præstent.' Also at l. vii. he tells us that the seed was prepared for the table 'frictum et non frictum;' where the frictum answers to the κεκομμένον of Thucydides (bruised).

CH. XXVII. 1. ὁρ. τῶν τε ἐπιτηδείων—χωρίῳ ἐρήμῳ] Pop. rightly regards this as a condensed form of expression, for 'videntes commeatum, qui in loco deserto totus aliunde (Athenis) apportandus esset, circa Peloponnesum subvehi (hieme) non posse.' Of περιγενήσεσθαι the sense is, 'would hold out,' 'escape being taken.' Poppo remarks, that the infinitives here and just afterwards are to be considered as dependent on νομίζοντες, or some similar word inherent in the foregoing ὁρῶντες. See note on ch. 3.

2. ἔχ. τι ἰσχυρὸν] 'having some sure dependence,' or consciousness of strength: a view of the sense confirmed by the following similar forms of expression in Dio Cass. 263, 14. οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἰσχυρὸν παρεσκευάσαντο, and 509, 85, ἰσχυρόν τι τῶν ἀφιγμένων, εἰ μὴ σφίσι πιστεύουσι, κατασκόπους τινὰς πέμψαι, ῥᾴθη κατάσκοπος αὐτὸς μετὰ Θεογένους ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων. 4. καὶ γνοὺς ὅτι ἀναγκασθήσεται ἢ ταὐτὰ λέγειν οἷς διέβαλλεν, ἢ, τἀναντία εἰπών, ψευδὴς φανήσεσθαι, παρῄνει τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, ὁρῶν αὐτοὺς καὶ ὠρμημένους τι τὸ πλέον τῇ γνώμῃ στρατεύειν, ὡς χρὴ κατασκόπους μὲν μὴ πέμπειν, μηδὲ διαμέλλειν καιρὸν παριέντας, εἰ δὲ δοκεῖ αὐτοῖς ἀληθῆ εἶναι τὰ ἀγγελλόμενα, πλεῖν ἐπὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας. 5. καὶ ἐς Νικίαν τὸν Νικηράτου, στρατηγὸν ὄντα, ἀπεσήμαινεν, ἐχθρὸς ὢν, καὶ ἐπιτιμῶν, ῥᾴδιον εἶναι παρασκευῇ, εἰ ἄνδρες εἶεν οἱ στρατηγοί, πλεύσαντας λαβεῖν τοὺς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, καὶ αὐτός γ' ἂν, εἰ ἦρχε, ποιῆσαι τοῦτο. XXVIII. Ὁ δὲ Νικίας, τῶν τε Ἀθηναίων τι ὑποθορυβησάντων ἐς τὸν Κλέωνα, ὅτι οὐ καὶ νῦν πλεῖ, εἰ ῥᾴδιόν γε αὐτῷ φαίνεται, καὶ ἅμα ὁρῶν αὐτὸν ἐπιτιμῶντα, ἐκέλευεν ἣν τινα βούλεται δύναμιν λαβόντα, τὸ ἐπὶ σφᾶς εἶναι, ἐπιχειρεῖν. 2. ὁ δὲ, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον οἰόμενος αὐτὸν λόγῳ μόνον ἀφιέναι, ἑτοῖμος ἦν· γνοὺς δὲ τῷ ὄντι παραδωσείοντα, ἀνεχώρει, καὶ οὐκ ἔφη αὐτὸς ἀλλ' παραλαβεῖν. 426, 74, οὐδὲν ἰσχυρὸν εἶχε. Lucian, t. ii. 698, οὐδὲν ἰσχυρὸν ἐπινοεῖ. i. 795. Liban. Orat. in Jul. 72, μηδὲν ἔχοντα ἰσχυρὸν εἰς ἄφεσιν.

3. Θεογένους] Wholly without reason is it that Haack and Poppo have edited, from a few of the worst MSS., Θεαγένους; for as to Θεαγενὴς being (as is plain from Duker's note, and that of Reitz on Lucian, ii. 47.) a far more usual name, that circumstance surely makes against the reading. And, as Dr. Arnold observes, that Θεογένης is a genuine Athenian name, may surely be inferred from its occurrence in Xen. Hist. i. 3, 13, and ii. 3, 2, and in an inscription of the age of the Peloponnesian war, copied in Boeckh, Inscr. part ii. p. 298, and Aristoph. Vesp. 1378.

4. στρατεύειν] i. e. to send forces thither by way of reinforcement.

5. ἐς Νικίαν — ἀπεσήμαινεν] 'he glanced, pointed at, pointedly alluded to Nicias.' Similarly Dio Cass. p. 421, ed. Steph. ὅπερ που ἐς τὸ Γερμανικοῦ πάθος ἀπεσήμανεν, and Plut. t. vi. 675, ἀπεσήμαινεν εἰς ἐκεῖνον. Jos. Ant. xviii. 6, 5. Thus in a passage of Dio Cass. p. 880, οὐκ ἐς τὴν ὑπατείαν ἀλλ' ἐς τὸ κράτος ὑποσημαίνοντες, ἐδήλουν, I would read ἀποσημαίνοντες, understanding the term, however, in the sense 'having regard to:' and in Appian, i. 715, οὐδὲν ἐς τιμὴν ἐπεσήμηνε τοῦ Φιμβρίου, where Schweigh. proposes to restore the old reading ὑποσ., the true reading is undoubtedly ἀποσ., understood in the same sense as in the passage of Dio Cass. 880. The preposition in this case has the same force as in ἀποβλέπειν ἔς τι.

καὶ ἐπιτιμῶν, &c.] 'Et cum exprobratione dicens,' &c.

ῥᾴδιον εἶναι—τοῦτο] 'that it would be easy for them, if the commanders were men of spirit, to sail in full force and capture those in the island; and that he, for his part, had he been in command, would have [already] done it.'

Ch. XXVIII. 1. τι ὑποθορυβησάντων ἐς τὸν Κλέωνα] The term ὑποθ. has here a sensus prægnans, importing that 'they somewhat murmured against Cleon, saying,' &c. By the expression ὑποθορυβεῖσθαι it is denoted that what was said was said in a low voice. See supra ch. 67, 2. On the change of construction here from genit. τῶν Ἀθηναίων to nomin. ὁρῶν, see note on ch. 30.

ἐπιτιμῶντα] 'carping at [him].' Τὸ ἐπὶ σφᾶς εἶναι, 'as far as they were concerned.' Of the construction with the accus. examples occur in the Tragedians, (see Porson on Eurip. Orest. 1338.) and are also found in Xen. Mem. i. 6, 9, and Agath. p. 161. See also Herm. on Vig. note 398. Poppo on Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 13, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 283, and 586, c.

2. ὁ δὲ—ἑτοῖμος ἦν] 'But he, thinking at first that he gave him the permission in word only, and not in earnest.' That τὸ μὲν πρῶτον is to be taken with οἰόμενος, and not, as Poppo supposes, with ἐκεῖνον στρατηγεῖν, δεδιὼς ἤδη, καὶ οὐκ ἂν οἰόμενός οἱ αὐτὸν τολμῆσαι ὑποχωρῆσαι· αὖθις δὲ ὁ Νικίας ἐκέλευε, καὶ ἐξίστατο τῆς ἐπὶ Πύλῳ ἀρχῆς, καὶ μάρτυρας τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐποιεῖτο. 3. οἱ δὲ,—οἷον ὄχλος φιλεῖ ποιεῖν,—ὅσῳ μᾶλλον ὁ Κλέων ὑπέφευγε τὸν πλοῦν, καὶ ἐξανεχώρει τὰ εἰρημένα, τόσῳ ἐπεκελεύοντο τῷ Νικίᾳ παραδιδόναι τὴν ἀρχὴν, καὶ ἐκείνῳ ἐπεβόων πλεῖν. 4. ὥστε, οὐκ ἔχων ὅπως τῶν εἰρημένων ἔτι ἐξαπαλλαγῇ, ὑφίσταται τὸν πλοῦν· καὶ παρελθὼν, οὔτε φοβεῖσθαι ἔφη Λακεδαιμονίους, πλεύσεσθαί τε λαβὼν ἐκ μὲν τῆς πόλεως οὐδένα, Λημνίους δὲ καὶ Ἰμβρίους τοὺς παρόντας, καὶ πελταστὰς οἳ ἦσαν ἔκ τε Αἴνου βεβοηθηκότες, καὶ ἄλλοθεν τοξότας τετρακοσίους· ταῦτα δὲ ἔχων, ἔφη, πρὸς τοῖς ἐν Πύλῳ στρατιώταις ἐντὸς ἡμερῶν εἴκοσιν ἢ ἄξειν Λακεδαιμονίους ζῶντας, ἢ αὐτοῦ ἀποκτενεῖν. 5. τοῖς δὲ Ἀθηναίοις ἐνέπεσε μέν τι καὶ γέλωτος τῇ κουφολογίᾳ αὐτοῦ, ἀσμένοις δ' ὅμως ἐγίγνετο τοῖς σώφροσι τῶν ἀνθρώπων, λογιζομένοις δυοῖν ἀγαθοῖν τοῦ ἑτέρου τεύξεσθαι, ἢ Κλέωνος ἀπαλλαγήσεσθαι,—ὃ μᾶλλον ἤλπιζον,—ἢ, σφαλεῖσι γνώμης, Λακεδαιμονίους σφίσι χειρώσασθαι. XXIX. Καὶ πάντα διαπραξάμενος ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, καὶ ψηφισαμένων Ἀθηναίων αὐτῷ τὸν πλοῦν, τῶν τε ἐν Πύλῳ στρατηγῶν ἕνα προσελόμενος ἑτοῖμος ἦν, is plain from the antithetic γνοὺς δέ.

3. ἐξανεχώρει τὰ εἰρημένα] Meaning, as we should in popular and colloquial phraseology, 'backed out (i. e. endeavoured to back out) of what he had said.' Here the accus. is used, though the genit. might rather have been expected, (as in a passage of Philo cited by Steph. Thes., where we have ὧν ἐξαναχωροῦσα,) because the term is equivalent in sense to relinquere, 'to abandon.'

4. τῶν εἰρημένων ἐξαπαλλαγῇ] 'should get out of what he had said.'

ἔκ τε Αἴνου βεβοηθηκότες, καὶ ἄλλοθεν τοξότας τετρακοσίους] 'Scriptor simul ad genus militum, simul ad patriam eorum respiciens, duas constructiones in unam contraxit; nam aut καὶ ἔκ τε Αἴνου βεβοηθηκότας πελταστὰς καὶ ἄλλοθεν τοξότας dicendum erat, aut καὶ (i. e. ἔτι δὲ) πελταστάς τε, οἳ ἦσαν ἐξ Αἴνου βεβοηθηκότες, καὶ ἄλλοθεν τοξότας.' (Haack.)

5. ἀσμένοις δ' ὅμως ἐγίγνετο, &c.] See note on ii. 3.

ἢ Κλέωνος ἀπαλλαγήσεσθαι, ὃ μᾶλλον ἤλπιζον] What is here said of the hope of οἱ σώφρονες τῶν ἀνθρώπων, is fully borne out by what Aristophanes, Eq. 936, puts into the mouth of the Chorus of the Knights (who were almost to a man of the class of σώφρονες, or what we call conservatives): Ἥδιστον φάος ἡμέρας Ἔσται τοῖσι παροῦσι πᾶΣιν καὶ ἀφικνουμένοις Ἢν Κλέων ἀπόληται.

Here, for vulg. χειρώσεσθαι, χειρώσασθαι has been very properly received, from several of the best MSS., by all the recent editors; internal evidence being strongly in its favour. The fut. would, indeed, be correct: but here there is a delicate propriety in the aorist, since, as Arnold observes, 'while in the future there is the notion of a continued future circumstance, (q. d. they would get rid of Cleon, and be rid of him from thenceforward,) the aorist expresses one single action, with regard to which the time is unessential.'

Ch. XXIX. 1. καὶ πάντα διαπραξάμενος — καὶ ψηφισαμένων — τῶν τε — προσελόμενος] Poppo remarks on the accumulation of genitives absolute, and nominatives of participles, also observable at ch. 28, and on which see note at iii. 84. Not without reason did Cleon choose Demosthenes for his associate in the command, since his assistance in the matter was quite indispensable, and by his merit he might justly anticipate success in the enterprise, the honour of which he should appropriate to himself. To this there is an allusion in the words of Aristoph. Eq. 392 (of Cleon), κᾆτ' ἀνὴρ ἔδοξεν εἶναι, τἀλλότριον ἀμῶν θέρος. Compare St. Matth. xxv. 24, θερίζων ὅπου οὐκ ἔσπειρες.

Δημοσθένην, τὴν ἀγωγὴν διὰ τάχους ἐποιεῖτο. 2. τὸν δὲ Δημοσθένην προσέλαβε, πυνθανόμενος τὴν ἀπόβασιν αὐτὸν ἐς τὴν νῆσον διανοεῖσθαι. οἱ γὰρ στρατιῶται, κακοπαθοῦντες τοῦ χωρίου τῇ ἀπορίᾳ, καὶ μᾶλλον πολιορκούμενοι ἢ πολιορκοῦντες, ὥρμηντο διακινδυνεῦσαι. 3. καὶ αὐτῷ ἔτι ῥώμην καὶ ἡ νῆσος ἐμπρησθεῖσα παρέσχε. πρότερον μὲν γὰρ αὐτῆς οὔσης ὑλώδους ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ καὶ ἀτριβοῦς διὰ τὴν ἀεὶ ἐρημίαν, ἐφοβεῖτο, καὶ πρὸς τῶν πολεμίων τοῦτο ἐνόμιζε μᾶλλον εἶναι· πολλῷ γὰρ ἂν στρατοπέδῳ ἀποβάντι ἐξ ἀφανοῦς χωρίου προσβάλλοντας αὐτοὺς βλάπτειν. σφίσι μὲν γὰρ τὰς ἐκείνων ἁμαρτίας καὶ παρασκευὴν ὑπὸ τῆς ὕλης οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως δῆλα εἶναι, τοῦ δὲ αὐτῶν στρατοπέδου καταφανῆ ἂν εἶναι πάντα τὰ ἁμαρτήματα, ὥστε προσπίπτειν ἂν αὐτοὺς ἀπροσδοκήτως, ᾗ βούλοιντο· ἐπ' ἐκείνοις γὰρ ἂν εἶναι τὴν ἐπιχείρησιν. 4. εἰ δ' αὖ ἐς δασὺ χωρίον βιάζοιτο ὁμόσε ἰέναι, τοὺς ἐλάσσους, ἐμπείρους δὲ τῆς χώρας, κρείσσους ἐνόμιζε τῶν πλεόνων ἀπείρων· λανθάνειν τε ἂν τὸ ἑαυτῶν στρατόπεδον, πολὺ ὂν, διαφθειρόμενον, οὐκ οὔσης τῆς † προσόψεως, ᾗ χρὴν ἀλλήλοις ἐπιβοηθεῖν. XXX. Ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ Αἰτωλικοῦ πάθους, ὃ διὰ τὴν ὕλην μέρος τι ἐγένετο, οὐχ ἥκιστα αὐτὸν ταῦτα ἐσῆει. 2. τῶν δὲ στρατιωτῶν ἀναγκασθέντων διὰ τὴν στενοχωρίαν τῆς νήσου τοῖς ἐσχάτοις προσίσχοντας ἀριστοποιεῖσθαι διὰ προφυλακῆς, καὶ ἐμπρήσαντός τινος κατὰ μικρὸν τὴν ἀγωγὴν ἐποιεῖτο] 'proceeded to make the voyage.'

3. ῥώμην] for θάρσος, as the Scholiast explains. Compare ii. 43.

4. εἰ δ' αὖ ἐς—ἰέναι] Of these words the sense (which has been disputed) seems to be, 'but if, on the other hand, he should be compelled to engage with [the enemy] at the thicket.' Ὁμόσε ἰέναι is parallel to ὁμόσε χωρῆσαι, and may be compared with the Latin cominus ire, as said of close combat. Notwithstanding what Poppo urges to the contrary, the ἐς stands for ἐν and a dative; and that from the idea of coming into the place in question being implied in the context; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 596. By δασὺ χωρίον is meant 'the thicket' or 'the bush,' by which is to be understood the woody part of the island, in opposition to the plain and level.

οὐκ οὔσης τῆς προσόψεως] Supposing προσόψεως to have been the word written by our author, we must, as Abresch directs, take it as standing for προόψεως, i. e. εἰς τὸ πρόσω ὄψεως. No example, however, does he adduce of the word thus used to denote view or prospect; and so little probable is it that πρόσοψις should have been employed to express a sense of which it seems not susceptible, when πρόοψις would be so much better calculated to convey this idea, that I doubt not our author wrote, in reality, προόψεως, which term occurs also at v. 8; though it is a word of such rare occurrence, that the scribes would easily mistake it for another more frequent: and how often προ and προς are confounded, is well known. It is true that at ii. 89, 9, we have, μὴ ἔχων τὴν πρόσοψιν τῶν πολ.; but there πρόοψιν is as much required as here, and in both instances Bekker has edited πρόοψ.

CH. XXX. 1. αὐτὸν ταῦτα ἐσῄει] The dative is more usual, though almost confined to Plato and the Greek writers after him; the earlier ones using the accus. So Herodot. i. 116, τὸν Ἀστ. ἐσῄει, and vii. 46. Xen. Anab. vi. 1, 11, εἰσῄει αὐτοὺς (λογισμός). See Hemsterh. on Lucian, Prom. 26.

2. ἀριστοποιεῖσθαι διὰ προφυλακῆς] 'to take their meals with a picket-guard posted in front,' i. e. to prevent a surprise; a customary expedient. See Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 29. Διὰ here bears the sense sub, as denoting state; and it is well rendered by Poppo, 'ita ut excubias disponerent.' On the idiom in κατὰ μικρὸν τῆς ὕλης, see τῆς ὕλης ἄκοντος, καὶ ἀπὸ τούτου πνεύματος ἐπιγενομένου, τὸ πολὺ αὐτῆς ἔλαθε κατακαυθέν. 3. οὕτω δὴ τούς τε Λακεδαιμονίους μᾶλλον κατιδὼν πλείους ὄντας, ὑπονοῶν πρότερον ἐλάσσοσι τὸν σῖτον † αὐτοῦ ἐσπέμπειν, † τότε ὡς ἐπ' ἀξιόχρεων τοὺς Ἀθηναίους μᾶλλον σπουδὴν ποιεῖσθαι, τήν τε νῆσον εὐαποβατωτέραν οὖσαν, τὴν ἐπιχείρησιν παρεσκευάζετο στρατιάν τε μεταπέμπων ἐκ τῶν ἐγγὺς ξυμμάχων, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ἑτοιμάζων. 4. Κλέων δὲ ἐκείνῳ τε προπέμψας ἄγγελον ὡς ἥξων, καὶ ἔχων στρατιὰν ἣν ᾐτήσατο, ἀφικνεῖται ἐς Πύλον. καὶ ἅμα γενόμενοι, πέμπουσι πρῶτον ἐς τὸ ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ στρατόπεδον κήρυκα, προκαλούμενοι εἰ βούλοιντο ἄνευ κινδύνου τοὺς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ἄνδρας σφίσι τά τε ὅπλα καὶ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς κελεύειν παραδοῦναι, ἐφ' ᾧ φυλακῇ τῇ μετρίᾳ τηρήσονται, ἕως ἄν τι περὶ τοῦ πλέονος ξυμβαθῇ. XXXI. Οὐ προσδεξαμένων δὲ αὐτῶν, μίαν μὲν ἡμέραν ἐπέσχον, τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἀνηγάγοντο μὲν, νυκτὸς ἐπ' ὀλίγας ναῦς τοὺς ὁπλίτας πάντας ἐπιβιβάσαντες· πρὸ δὲ τῆς ἕω ὀλίγον ἀπέβαινον τῆς νήσου ἑκατέρωθεν, ἔκ τε τοῦ πελάγους καὶ πρὸς τοῦ note on ii. 16, ἐπὶ μέγα τοῦ οἰκοδομήματος, and iv. 12, ἐπὶ πολὺ τῆς δόξης. At καὶ ἀπὸ τούτου πνεύματος ἐπιγενομένου, Poppo, stumbling at the καὶ, would cancel it, or read ὡς. Neither, however, is necessary; nor is there any real difficulty in the case if ἀπὸ be taken in the sense after, as in the phrase ἀπὸ δείπνου, ἀπὸ τοῦ πολέμου, and others. The sense is, 'and a wind having sprung up (so Acts xxviii. 13, ἐπιγενομένου νότου, and ii. 4. iii. 74.) after [the conflagration].'

3. μᾶλλον πλείους] 'rather more [than fewer].' Αὐτοῦ. Supposing this, as I am now fully of opinion that we may, to be the true reading, and discarding all conjecture, we must regard the word as standing for αὐτόσε, (as ἐκεῖ often does for ἐκεῖσε,) and so constituting one of the many unusual idioms in our author. Render, 'suspecting before that he was sending in food thither for less (viz. than the real number):' where, though the word might be dispensed with, yet it is tacitly to be understood, and therefore cannot be, what Arnold considers it, useless.

τότε ὡς ἐπ' ἀξιόχρεων—ποιεῖσθαι] After τότε Poppo would insert a δέ. But I agree with Dr. Arnold, that the simpler mode of emendation is to read τό τε—ποιεῖσθαι; thus referring the three clauses τούς τε Λακεδαιμονίους—τό τε ὡς ἐπ' ἀξιόχρεων τοὺς Ἀθ. μᾶλλον σπουδὴν ποιεῖσθαι—τήν τε νῆσον, all to the same word κατιδών, 'perceiving.' And such is the view of the sense long ago propounded in my Transl. For another example of τε as thus used (which it rarely is) in three successive clauses, Arnold refers to viii. 96. At ἀξιόχρεων supply πρᾶγμά τι. So infra vi. 34, we have, εἴ τι ἀξιόχρεων ἀφ' ἡμῶν ὀφθείη, and Herodot. v. 65, ὅσα ἔρξαν ἀξιόχρεα ἀπηγήσιος, which savours of pleonasm: for as ἀξιόχρεως signifies properly and primarily, as said of persons, 'able to pay one's debts,' so it denotes 2ndly, the being competent to any thing, trustworthy, serviceable; and thus, as said of things, 'what is worthy of consideration, remarkable, important,' &c.

4. προπέμψας ἄγγελον ὡς ἥξων] 'having sent forward a messenger to say that he was about to come.' This is one of those instances, adverted to by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 569, 5, in which the participle with ὡς is used for ὅτι with the finite verb. At ἅμα γενόμενοι we have an example of the idiom treated on by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 308, and Poppo, Proleg. i. p. 169, by which the adverb ἅμα is not used, as it mostly is, with a participle having the force of time, but as the predicate of a sentence.

προκαλούμενοι εἰ βούλοιντο] A condensed form of expression for 'inviting them to and wishing to know whether they would,' &c. Φυλακῇ τῇ μετρίᾳ, 'in mild custody,' meaning confinement with mild treatment. Περὶ τοῦ πλέονος, 'de summâ rerum,' as Arnold explains.

CH. XXXI. 1. ἐκ τοῦ πελάγους] These words may be rendered, 'on the sea-side, or sea-ward.' So Hom. Od. xxiv. 83, ἐκ ποντόφιν, and another passage of our author, infra vii. 9, ἐκ τοῦ ποταμοῦ.

λιμένος, ὀκτακόσιοι μάλιστα ὄντες ὁπλῖται, καὶ ἐχώρουν δρόμῳ ἐπὶ τὸ πρῶτον φυλακτήριον τῆς νήσου. 2. ὧδε γὰρ διετετάχατο. ἐν ταύτῃ μὲν τῇ πρώτῃ φυλακῇ ὡς τριάκοντα ἦσαν ὁπλῖται, μέσον δὲ καὶ ὁμαλώτατόν τε καὶ περὶ τὸ ὕδωρ οἱ πλεῖστοι αὐτῶν καὶ Ἐπιτάδας ὁ ἄρχων εἶχε· μέρος δέ τι οὐ πολὺ αὐτὸ τὸ ἔσχατον ἐφύλασσε τῆς νήσου τὸ πρὸς τὴν Πύλον, ὃ ἦν ἐκ τε θαλάσσης ἀπόκρημνον, καὶ ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἥκιστα ἐπίμαχον· καὶ γάρ τι καὶ ἔρυμα αὐτόθι ἦν παλαιὸν λίθων λογάδην πεποιημένον, ὃ ἐνόμιζον σφίσιν ὠφέλιμον ἂν εἶναι, εἰ καταλαμβάνοι ἀναχώρησις βιαιοτέρα. οὕτω μὲν τεταγμένοι ἦσαν. XXXII. Οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι τοὺς μὲν πρώτους φύλακας, οἷς ἐπέδραμον, εὐθὺς διαφθείρουσιν, ἔν τε ταῖς εὐναῖς ἔτι ἀναλαμβάνοντας τὰ ὅπλα, καὶ λαθόντες τὴν ἀπόβασιν, οἰομένων αὐτῶν τὰς ναῦς, κατὰ τὸ ἔθος, ἐς ἔφορμον τῆς νυκτὸς πλεῖν. 2. ἅμα δὲ ἕῳ γιγνομένῃ καὶ ὁ ἄλλος στρατὸς ἀπέβαινον, ἐκ πρὸς τοῦ λιμένος] 'opposite to, facing the port.' So Poppo and Goeller edit, from the greater part of the MSS., for vulg. πρὸ, which is retained by Bekker. Internal evidence is quite in favour of πρὸς, as being the more recondite reading, though indeed the word is found at i. 62. iii. 21. iv. 31. Arrian, E. A. ii. 20, 13. Xen. An. iv. 3, 19. Hist. v. 4, 38. Herodot. ii. 30.

2. ὧδε διετετάχατο, &c.] Of the description which follows, the best illustration is found in a passage of Col. Leake, Morea, p. 408—410. The φυλακτήριον or φυλακὴ was not, as Mitford supposes, a fort, but a sort of advanced post. The situation was probably on some high ground about half a mile from the south extremity of the island. By τὸ ὕδωρ cannot be meant (as the translators explain it) 'the spring;' for since the only water they had is described as ἀλμυρὸν, brackish, there could not be one: and we do not find from Col. Leake's account, that there is one. Hence τὸ ὕδωρ must mean 'the watering-place' (a sort of well) laid down in Col. Leake's plan, and marked E. By the levellest part here mentioned, we are to understand, not a plain, but the crown of the hilly ridge which runs along the centre of the island lengthwise.

αὐτὸ τὸ ἔσχατον] Meaning 'the very extremity of the island,' which is described, in the words following, as 'steep to the seaward, and to the landward least assailable,' viz. of all the other situations in the island. It was probably at the north point of the island, opposite to Pylus, where a peak is laid down in Col. Leake's Map.

λογάδην] This is to be construed with λίθων; the sense being, 'stones not hewn and squared, but picked out so as to fit in one with another.' See note supra ch. 4, 4.

ἀναχώρησις βιαιοτέρα] This the later editors have justly preferred to vulg. βεβαιοτ., which admits of no tolerable sense; whereas βιαιοτ. yields one highly suitable: the meaning here intended to be expressed being, 'a somewhat forced and precipitate retreat;' as v. 73, φυγὴ β. Hence in a passage of Arrian, E. A. iv. 27, 13, οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ—ξυμφυγόντες βεβαιότερον, ἤδη εἴργοντο, ought undoubtedly to be read, (as the context requires, and the manifest imitation of the above passage absolutely demands,) for βεβαιότερον, βιαιότερον.

CH. XXXII. 1. ἔν τε ταῖς εὐναῖς—καὶ λαθόντες τὴν ἀπόβασιν] That ἔτι ought to be construed with εὐναῖς, not, as the common punctuation makes it, with ἀναλαμβάνοντας, is plain both from the similar passages which I have, in my smaller edition, adduced from Arrian and Xenophon, and from a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 46, adduced by Poppo. Still, however, it will remain a question whether the τε before ταῖς, and the καὶ before λαθόντες, correspond. Krueger on Dionys. p. 302, thinks that they do not; but I rather incline to the opinion that there is a correspondence, though not one reconcileable with the rules of correct composition, λαθόντες τὴν ἀπόβασιν being equivalent in sentiment to τὴν ἀπόβασιν οὐ προϊδόντες.

ἐς ἔφορμον τῆς νυκτὸς] 'to anchorage for the night;' as usual. See ch. 23, 2.

μὲν νεῶν ἑβδομήκοντα καὶ ὀλίγῳ πλειόνων πάντες πλὴν θαλαμίων, ὡς ἕκαστοι ἐσκευασμένοι, τοξόται τε ὀκτακόσιοι, καὶ πελτασταὶ οὐκ ἐλάσσους τούτων, Μεσσηνίων τε οἱ βεβοηθηκότες, καὶ ἄλλοι ὅσοι περὶ Πύλον κατεῖχον πάντες, πλὴν τῶν ἐπὶ τοῦ τείχους φυλάκων. 3. Δημοσθένους δὲ τάξαντος, διέστησαν κατὰ διακοσίους τε καὶ πλείους, ἔστι δ' ἣ ἐλάσσους, τῶν χωρίων τὰ μετεωρότατα λαβόντες, ὅπως ὅτι πλείστη ἀπορία ἦ τοῖς πολεμίοις πανταχόθεν ± κεκυκλωμένοις, καὶ μὴ ἔχωσι πρὸς ὅ τι ἀντιτάξωνται, ἀλλ' ἀμφίβολοι

2. καὶ ὀλίγῳ πλειόνων] 'or a little beyond that number;' namely, from the ships,—or certainly one,—which Cleon brought, (for he would, of course, be conveyed in a trireme,) and probably two; for the land-forces could not be conveyed in a single trireme. Θαλαμίων. Meaning those rowers who occupied the lowest row or tier of oars. See Scheffer de Milit. Nav. ii. 2. Meibom. de Fabr. Trir. Boeckh. Staatsh. t. i. p. 302.

ὡς ἕκαστοι ἐσκευασμένοι] Meaning, 'each armed and accoutred according to his class,'—namely, whether as zeugitæ, (middle-tier men,) or thranitæ, (upper-tier men,) or the duty and service required by the port where they were stationed. The θαλάμιοι are excepted, because, as appears from Aristoph. Ran. 1074, (where see Mitchell,) compared with Æschyl. Ag. 1607, (where see Blomfield,) they were, as being composed of the least efficient men, unprovided with arms, at least for land-warfare, and were left in charge of the ship.

ὅσοι περὶ Πύλον κατεῖχον] literally, 'such as had post, were stationed on duty, about Pylus;' formed part of its garrison.

3. διέστησαν κατὰ διακοσίους] The Schol. well explains διέστησαν by ἐτάχθησαν μεμερισμένως, 'they were formed into separate divisions.' Compare Xen. Cyr. ii. 4, 20, πεζοὶ καὶ ἱππεῖς διέστησαν. The verb, however, may have a reciprocal force, to signify, 'they formed themselves into bodies of 200.' So i. 15, τὸ ἄλλο Ἑλληνικὸν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν ἑκατέρων διέστη.

κεκυκλωμένοις] For this, twelve MSS. have κεκωλυμένοις, which was approved by Wasse and Haack, and edited by Poppo; while Bekker and Goeller retain the common reading; and, I think, very properly; for not only is external authority in favour of the common reading, but internal evidence; since, while the two words are not unfrequently confounded, κεκυκλ. might the more easily be changed into κεκωλ. than the reverse; and also because, while κεκωλ. is capable of no sense here suitable, κεκυκλ. yields one sufficiently apposite; for why it may be asked, were these bodies of 200 men distributed around, but in order to surround the enemy and hamper them in their movements? In which view compare a similarly expressed passage of Is. xxix. 3, (containing a military metaphor, and an allusion to this same manœuvre,) where Dr. Henderson well renders, 'I will encamp against thee round about' (Sept. κυκλώσομαι εἰς σέ,) 'I will beset thee with posts,' 'I will hem thee in with posts;' and where he truly remarks that 'the word in the original correspondent to posts denotes the advanced posts, or columns of pioneers.' Why not, of men at arms stationed around to provide reinforcements or supplies to the garrison? the allusion there being not, as Dr. Henderson imagines, to a regular siege, but rather to a blockade; which was resorted to when the forces brought against a city were not sufficiently numerous to regularly besiege it. The encamping around may be understood of camps in various strong positions around and commanding the chief approaches; of which, several examples might be adduced from Thucyd. and the other historical writers. So Herodot. viii. 16, μηνυτῆρας ποιήσαντες τῶν νεῶν, ἐκυκλέοντο ὡς περιλάβοιεν αὐτούς. The scribes, however, not unfrequently make blunders in the word, especially in the passive form and with the augment. Thus in a passage of Appian, Bell. Civ. iv. 71. t. ii. 622, ἡ ἐμπειρία διέφθαρτο ὑπὸ τῆς στενοχωρίας κεκυκλωμένοις is read in the editions before that of Schweigh., who edited κεκυκλευμένοις, and the MSS. present κεκλυκομένοις and κεκυλευμένοις, each a manifest error, yet, I apprehend, pointing at two different readings contained in the ancient archetypes, κεκυκλωμένοις and κεκωλυμένοις, 'hampered;' of which the latter, I doubt not, is the true reading. No number of MSS. could establish the former, since to speak of persons being encircled or surrounded by narrowness of space, involves a palpable absurdity. In the present passage κεκωλ. would not γίγνωνται τῷ πλήθει, εἰ μὲν τοῖς πρόσθεν ἐπίοιεν, ὑπὸ τῶν κατόπιν βαλλόμενοι, εἰ δὲ τοῖς πλαγίοις, ὑπὸ τῶν ἑκατέρωθεν παρατεταγμένων. 4. κατὰ νώτου τε αἰεὶ ἔμελλον αὐτοῖς, ἢ χωρήσειαν, οἱ πολέμιοι ἔσεσθαι ψιλοί, καὶ οἱ ἀπορώτατοι, τοξεύμασι καὶ ἀκοντίοις καὶ λίθοις καὶ σφενδόναις ἐκ πολλοῦ ἔχοντες ἀλκήν· οἷς μηδὲ ἐπελθεῖν οἷόν τε ἦν· φεύγοντές τε γὰρ ἐκράτουν καὶ ἀναχωροῦσιν ἐπέκειντο. 5. τοιαύτῃ μὲν γνώμῃ ὁ Δημοσθένης be unsuitable as taken in the sense hampered (which the word bears in the above passage of Appian, probably written with a view to the present); but in this respect is it inferior to κεκυκλ., that while κεκυκλ. will imply the sense of κεκωλ., hampered, κεκωλ., on the other hand, will not imply that of κεκυκλ.

ἀμφιβόλοι γίγνωνται] 'might be exposed to shots on all sides.' The phrase occurs at ii. 76, and not unfrequently in the later historians.

4. οἱ ἀπορώτατοι] This cannot mean, as Portus and Kistemacher understand it, 'the meanest,' and consequently worst-armed persons (nor does the passage at i. 82, prove that it may); but rather, as Heilm. and Bauer explain, 'the hardest to deal with,' lit. 'those who occasion most trouble to their opponents;' this being one of those adjectives (not few in number) which, though generally having a passive, sometimes assume an active sense. Of ἄπορος in this use I have noted examples in Dio Cass. 178. 37, οὕτω διετέθησαν, ὡς μηδὲ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους τινάς, ἀλλὰ πρὸς θηρία ἄπορα (where Reimar, at a loss to perceive the sense, for ἄπορα, conjectures ἄκορα, a poetic form (for ἀκόρεστος) only found in a single passage of Pindar). Themist. 344, d, ὁ λόγος ἐξ ἅπαντα ὁ πάντων ἀμηχανώτατος, πρᾶγμα ἀπορωτέρων ἐστὶ τοῦ σιδήρου. Hdot. vi. 44, ἄνεμος μέγας τε καὶ ἄπορος: ix. 49, ἱπποτοξόται ὄντες καὶ πυκνοφορᾶσθαι ἄπορον: and v. 3, ἄπορον καὶ ἀμήχανον. Arrian, E. A. v. 14. 8, οἱ γὰρ ἐλέφαντες μόνα ἄπορα ἴσι πρὸς τοὺς ἐκβαίνοντας ἵππους. Aristoph. Nub. 624, οὐκ εἶδον οὕτως ἄνδρ' ἀγοραῖον οὐδένα, Οὐδ' ἄπορον, 'difficult to deal with;' namely, with allusion to a θηρίον. (See Dio Cass. supra.) Plato, p. 573, c. 698, d. 18, d, οὗτοι πάντες κατήγοροι ἀπορώτατοι εἰσιν, meaning, as Fischer explains, 'quos oppugnare vel convincere, aut omnino non, aut aegre, licet:' a passage, this, evidently written with a view to the following, of Eurip. Bacch. 799, Ἀπόρῳ γε τῷδε συμπεπλέγμεθα ξένῳ, Ὃς οὔτε πάσχων, οὔτε δρῶν, σιγήσεται, i. e. will not be quiet whether beaten or victor, as Livy tells us Hannibal said of Marcellus. Finally, so Suidas and Harpocr. adduce from Isaeus an example of the term ἀπορώτατος as used in the sense πρὸς ὃν οὐδέν πόρον ἐστὶν εὑρεῖν. And with this active use of ἄπορος, we may compare that not unfrequent in the instance of ἀμήχανος. (as Theocr. Id. i. 85.) ἀφυκτος, 'not occasioning fear,' (as Soph. Aj. 366.) and ἄσπονος, as Eurip. Iph. Taur. 423.

ἐκ πολλοῦ ἔχοντες ἀλκήν] These words are meant to show in what respect the troops in question were so troublesome and awkward to deal with,—namely, as having their force (τέναμιν) effective even at a distance, by means of missiles. Ἐπελθεῖν, 'to come up to, to close with.' In the words following, φεύγοντές τε ἐκράτουν, (of which the sense is not merely, what most commentators, including Dobree, assign to them, 'cursu erant meliores,') we have a bold but elegant form of expression to represent the great advantage the light-armed had over the enemy; which may serve to remind us of what we read of the Parthian light cavalry, (the Cossacs of ancient times,) whose warfare consisted in declining close attack, and in galling their foes with arrows, even when flying. So Hor. Od. ii. 13, 18, 'Miles sagittas et celerem fugam Parthi timet,' where there is an evident hendiadys, as in a passage of Virg. Georg. iii. 31, 'Fidentemque fugâ Parthum versisque sagittis;' and Milton, P. R. iii. 'How quick they wheel'd, and flying behind them shot Sharp sleet of arrowy shower against the face Of their pursuers, and overcame by flight.'

The next words, ἀναχωροῦσιν ἐπέκειντο, form the counterpart of the picture, and are well illustrated by passages of Eurip. Iph. Taur. 325, Ἀλλ' εἰ φύγοι τις, ἄτεροι προσκείμενοι Ἐβαλλον αὐτούς· εἰ δὲ τούσδ' ὠσαίατο. Λύθις τὸ νῦν ὑπείκον ἤμασον πέτρας, and Dionys. Hal. p. 413, ἐβαλλον ὑποχωροῦντες. Compare two passages of our author infra ii. 76, 6, and iii. 97, and notes.

τό τε πρῶτον τὴν ἀπόβασιν ἐπενόει καὶ ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ ἔταξεν. XXXIII. Οἱ δὲ περὶ τὸν Ἐπιτάδαν, καὶ ὅπερ ἦν πλεῖστον τῶν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, ὡς εἶδον τό τε πρῶτον φυλακτήριον διεφθαρμένον, καὶ στρατὸν σφίσιν ἐπιόντα, ξυνετάξαντο καὶ τοῖς ὁπλίταις τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπῆσαν, βουλόμενοι ἐς χεῖρας ἐλθεῖν· ἐξ ἐναντίας γὰρ οὗτοι καθεστήκεσαν, ἐκ πλαγίου δὲ οἱ ψιλοὶ καὶ κατὰ νώτου. 2. τοῖς μὲν οὖν ὁπλίταις οὐκ ἠδυνήθησαν προσμῖξαι, οὐδὲ τῇ σφετέρᾳ ἐμπειρίᾳ χρήσασθαι· οἱ γὰρ ψιλοὶ ἑκατέρωθεν βάλλοντες εἶργον, καὶ ἅμα ἐκεῖνοι οὐκ ἀντεπῄεσαν ἀλλ' ἡσύχαζον· τοὺς δὲ ψιλοὺς ᾗ μάλιστα αὐτοῖς προσθέοντες προσκέοιντο ἔτρεπον, καὶ οἱ, ὑποστρέφοντες ἠμύνοντο, ἄνθρωποι κούφως τε ἐσκευασμένοι καὶ προλαμβάνοντες ῥᾳδίως τῆς φυγῆς, χωρίων τε χαλεπότητι καὶ ὑπὸ τῆς πρὶν ἐρημίας τραχέων

Ch. XXXIII. In this and the two next chapters is narrated the action itself, of which the preceding chapter contained only the prelude. The present details the commencement; ch. 34, the progress: and ch. 35, the termination of the engagement.

1. οἱ περὶ τὸν Ἐπιτάδαν] Meaning, 'Epitadas and the soldiers around him,' consisting probably of his own body-guard and the officers of his staff, as we should say. So Aristoph. Vesp. 1301, οἱ περὶ Φρυνίχὸν, 'Phrynichus and his colleagues.' The meaning might, indeed, be, did not the καὶ following forbid, 'Epitadas and his troops,' as infra viii. 105, οἱ περὶ Ὁρασίβουλον, and other passages which may be seen in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 583.

καὶ ὅπερ ἦν πλεῖστον τῶν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ] Render, 'and that body of those in the island which was the most considerable:' with which use of the neuter relative Poppo compares Appian, vii. 23, περὶ αὐτοὺς ἦν ὅσον ἄριστον. Tacit. Ann. xiv. 37, 'perfringit, quod obvium et validum erat.'

ξυνετάξαντο] 'drew up in order of battle;' as v. 6, and vii. 6. In another passage infra vii. 2, is subjoined ὡς ἐς μάχην. Ἐξ ἐναντίας, 'opposite to them,' in front of them. So in Xen. Cyr. vii. i. 20, the οἱ ἐξ ἐναντίας are opposed to those ἐκ πλαγίου, 'on the flank.' See also Xen. Hist. iv. 5, 15. Such, too, is the sense of οἱ ἐξ ἐναντίας in Onosand. p. 82.

2. καὶ οἱ] So I read, with Haack and Poppo, on the authority of the MS. Aug. Pal. (to which I am enabled to add that of Clarend. and Cantab.) for vulg. καὶ οἱ, which, though retained by Goeller and Bekker, is quite indefensible. Καὶ οἱ (which occurs also at ch. 68) is from the singular καὶ ὃς, 'and he;' an idiom treated on in Buttm. Gr. Gr. § 126, 5, as follows: 'When the question is of persons as subjects or agents, the proposition may be connected with καί; in which case the nominative has always the form of the article postpos. ὅς, ἥ, οἵ, αἵ; but the accus. takes the form of the article prepos. τόν, τούς. When the plural form occurs, and the subsequent participle is in the present tense, a comma is desirable, if not requisite.'

ἄνθρωποι κούφως τε ἐσκευασμένοι—φυγῆς] These words are meant to suggest how it was that these light-armed were enabled to turn about and maintain a combat with the heavy-armed; namely, from their being more lightly equipped, and easily in flight outstripping their adversaries, so that they could not overtake and punish them. Of the expression κούφως σκευάζεσθαι, I have noted only one other example, in Dio Cass. 803, 26. In the genit. φυγῆς we have a somewhat uncommon construction; the dative in such a case being far more usual, as in Plut. Alex. 20, 6, προλαβόντα τῇ φυγῇ, and Xen. Cyneg. vii. 7: though the genit. is found also in Herodot. iii. 105, and Diod. Sic. t. vii. 221, 14 The genitive here is by Haack and Poppo rightly regarded as dependent on τί understood. And as τῆς φυγῆς includes the idea of ὀπῇ, which implies the act of following, the full sense may be laid down, in the words of Poppo, as follows: 'aliquantum fugae occupantes, antequam hostes insequerentur.'

In the next words, χωρίων τε χαλεπότητι καὶ ὑπὸ τῆς πρὶν ἐρημίας τραχέων ὄντων, which are meant to further develope the above idea, it is best, with Poppo, to recognise a somewhat careless form of expression (founded on hypallage), standing either for χωρίων τε χαλεπότητι—καὶ ὄντων, ἐν οἷς οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὐκ ἠδύναντο διώκειν, ὅπλα ἔχοντες. XXXIV. Χρόνον μὲν οὖν τινα ὀλίγον οὕτω πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἠκροβολίσαντο· τῶν δὲ Λακεδαιμονίων οὐκέτι ὑξέως ἐπεκθεῖν, ᾗ προσπίπτοιεν, δυναμένων, γνόντες αὐτοὺς οἱ ψιλοὶ βραδυτέρους ἤδη ὄντας τῷ ἀμύνασθαι, καὶ αὐτοὶ τῇ τε ὄψει τοῦ θαρσεῖν τὸ πλεῖστον εἰληφότες, πολλαπλάσιοι φαινόμενοι, καὶ ξυνειθισμένοι μᾶλλον, μηκέτι δεινοὺς αὐτοὺς ὁμοίως σφίσι φαίνεσθαι, ὅτι οὐκ εὐθὺς ἄξια τῆς προσδοκίας ἐπεπόνθεσαν, ὥσπερ ὅτε πρῶτον ἀπέβαινον τῇ γνώμῃ δεδουλωμένοι, ὡς ἐπὶ Λακεδαιμονίους· καταφρονήσαντες καὶ ἐμβοήσαντες, ἀθρόοι ὥρμησαν ἐπ' αὐτούς, καὶ ἔβαλλον λίθοις τε καὶ τοξεύμασι καὶ ἀκοντίοις, ὡς ἕκαστός τι πρόχειρον εἶχε. 2. γενομένης δὲ τῆς βοῆς ἅμα τῇ ἐπιδρομῇ, ἔκπληξίς τε ἐνέπεσεν ὑπὸ ἐρημίας τραχύτητι, or for χωρίων τε χαλεπῶν καὶ ὑπὸ ἐρημίας τραχέων ὄντων. A similarly moulded passage occurs at ch. 36, 3.

ἐν οἷς] scil. χωρίοις, 'on which difficult and rough ground.'

Ch. XXXIV. 1. ὑξέως ἐπεκθεῖν ᾗ προσπίπτοιεν] 'to alertly run out upon them where they made their attack.' In ἐπεκθεῖν we have a military term of frequent occurrence in the historians.

βραδυτέρους ἤδη ὄντας τῷ ἀμύνασθαι] Of these words the sense seems to be, as Poppo explains, 'ipsa defensione tardi erant;' or rather, 'tardiores [quam antea] redditi erant.'

τῇ τε ὄψει—εἰληφότες] Render, 'And they themselves having derived the utmost confidence on the sight of their own [superior] numbers.' Compare vi. 31, τῇ ὄψει ἀνεθάρσουν, and 49, τῇ γνώμῃ ἀναθαρσοῦντας ἀνθρώπους τῇ ὄψει, καταφρονεῖν μᾶλλον. The τὸ, indeed, might seem to require the sense 'having derived most of their courage:' and so Arnold renders, 'their own eyes having given them the greatest courage.' This, however, is a sense which, besides being in itself somewhat jejune, is little likely to have come from our author: for to say of his own countrymen, who were never deficient in bravery, (so ii. 40, 3, διαφερόντως—τόδε ἔχομεν, ὥστε τολμᾶν τε οἱ αὐτοὶ μάλιστα, &c.) that they derived the greatest part of their courage from the sight of their own superior numbers, would be no other than a sly way of calling them cowards; since our author himself puts into the mouth of Phormio (i. ii. 87.) this sentiment, that 'in whatever circumstances fortune may place men, the truly brave are ever in heart and mind the same,' ταῖς γνώμαις τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἀεὶ ἀνδρείους. ὀρθῶς, εἶναι. Accordingly I would take τὸ πλεῖστον as standing for πλεῖστον: and so Duker explains τοῦ θαρσεῖν τὸ πλῆθος εἰληφότες by θαρσήσαντες μάλιστα.

The words following, ξυνειθισμένοι, &c., contain the other reason for their great courage and confidence: 'and being now become more used to the enemy, so that they no longer appeared to them so formidable as before.' At μηκέτι supply ὥστε.

ἄξια τῆς προσδοκίας] 'any thing correspondent to their expectations.' The words ὥσπερ ὅτε πρῶτον ἀπέβ., &c., are, as Poppo and Arn. remark, to be referred to the preceding μηκέτι δεινοὺς αὐτοὺς ὁμοίως φαίνεσθαι, 'not so formidable as they regarded them on first landing, with minds daunted at the prospect.' In δεδουλωμένοι τῇ γνώμῃ we have a phrase occurring also at vii. 71, and used several times by Arrian and Plato. Yet the term does not necessarily import that the feeling is a servile one: and Arnold is wrong in explaining it, 'with spirits cowed like slaves before their masters;' for there is nothing in the conduct of the Athenian troops, on this or any other occasion, to warrant the adoption of the utmost force that the term admits. The very strongest terms (especially when metaphorical ones) must always be modified by due regard to the context, or to the well-ascertained facts of any case. The sense here can only be, 'daunted in mind and spirits;' a feeling quite reconcileable with bravery; for, as Mitford remarks, 'Such was then the reputation of the Lacedæmonian heavy-armed, that the light-armed of the Athenians had never approached them without awe.'

2. The term ἔκπληξις is not well rendered by Portus pavor, and by Hobbes ἀνθρώποις ἀήθεσι τοιαύτης μάχης, καὶ ὁ κονιορτὸς τῆς ὕλης νεωστὶ κεκαυμένης ἐχώρει πολὺς ἄνω, ἄπορόν τε ἦν ἰδεῖν τὸ πρὸ αὐτοῦ ὑπὸ τῶν τοξευμάτων καὶ λίθων ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἀνθρώπων μετὰ τοῦ κονιορτοῦ ἅμα φερομένων. 3. τό τε ἔργον ἐνταῦθα χαλεπὸν τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις καθίστατο· οὔτε γὰρ οἱ πῖλοι ἔστεγον τὰ τοξεύματα, terror: for that were an idea little suitable to men so brave. The term seems here to denote a mixed feeling of astonishment and perplexity; the former signified in Arrian, E. A. i. 9, 3, et al. Eurip. Hel. 556; the latter, in Eurip. Phœn. 968, and Incert. frag. xvi. 3. Perplexity they might well feel at a scene so novel and astonishing to them, almost choked and blinded as they were with dust, and deafened by the resounding clamours of an enemy that vastly outnumbered them.

3. τό τε—καθίστατο] 'and now the affair became one of great difficulty to the Lacedæmonians.'

οὔτε γὰρ—τοξεύματα] Of these words the sense (though disputed) seems to be, 'neither were their cuirasses proof against the arrow-shots.' The chief doubt here existing respects the obscure term πῖλοι, which is by the commentators in general explained helmets, agreeably to the force of the term in Hom. Il. x. 265. But the helmet of the ancients was, I believe, always arrow-proof; and hence no such sense can here be intended. Our author, it must be observed, is speaking of other parts of armour, which might, or might not, be arrow-proof. The true interpretation, however, is pointed out by the first Scholiast, who explains πῖλοι by τὰ ἐξ ἐρίου πηκτὰ ἐνδύματα, ὥσπερ θωράκιά τινα. So the correspondent term in our language, felt, (formed from this πῖλος,) is defined by Spelman as a coarse covering of wool coactus, not textus: and of this description is Holland wool driven together into a felt without spinning or weaving: and so Hemsterh. says, 'Quicquid ex lana coacta et densata est compactum (πηκτὸν) Græce πίλους vocant.' The word is evidently formed from πίω or πιέω (whence πιέζω), 'to compress,' coqo, 'to beat together.' Thus in this gloss of the Scholiast πηκτὰ bears the sense conjumentata, compacta, with reference to the process of manufacturing this rudely-formed cloth: and so Hesych. explains the term πηκτὸν by ἐκ πολλῶν ξυλῶν πεπηγμένον. And Tzetzes on Hesiod, Oper. 542. says, Πίλοις properly means τοῖς ἐξ ἐρίων πεπιλημένοις καὶ συμπατηθεῖσι καὶ συσφιγχθεῖσιν ὑφάσμασι. Considering, however, that the materials of which such are composed are never woven, but merely felted, (whence the word felt, which is properly fell-ed,) certainly the word there, ὑφάσμασι, cannot be correct; and I propose to read instead of it συσφιχθεῖσι σκεπάσμασι: an emendation confirmed by the words of Erotian, who on πίλοις in Hippocr. p. 291, 31, says, Πίλοι καλοῦνται παρὰ Λάκωσι τὰ σκεπάσματα σκιᾶς χάριν πεποιημένα: where for σκιᾶς, which is manifestly corrupt, read σκέπης. So in Xen. Mem. iii. 10, 9, we have, τὰ δεόμενα σκέπης τοῦ ἀνθρώπου σκεπάζειν τὸν θώρακα. It is true that in Plato, p. 27, D, we have, σαφῶς πάντα (scil. τὰ ἔντερα) κατεσκίασαν, προβολὴν τῶν ἔξωθεν τὴν σάρκα, οἷον τὰ πιλήματα, προβέμενοι. But from the context there it is plain that the author must have written, not κατεσκίασαν, but κατεσκέπασαν: and so in a passage of Polyb. i. 22, 10, we have, τὴν κατὰ πρόσωπον ἐπιφάνειαν ἐσκέπαζον ταῖς τῶν θυρεῶν προβολαῖς. Indeed σκεπάζειν is a term appropriated to the thing. And in the above passage of Plato, the words προβολὴν τῶν ἔξωθεν may be illustrated from what went a little before, τὴν δὲ σάρκα προβολὴν μὲν καυμάτων, πρόβλημα δὲ χειμώνων, ἔτι δὲ πτωμάτων (accidents) οἷον τὰ πιλητὰ ἔσεσθαι κτήματα, 'so as to be, as it were, the felt-wares of the body.' These πῖλοι were, as we learn from Erotian, chiefly in use among the Lacedæmonians: and so Pollux, i. 149, has πῖλον Λακωνικόν; from which we may infer that there were others as well as the Lacedæmonian: and so we read in various parts of the classical writers of the Thessalian and the Arcadian πῖλοι; though there we are, I believe, to chiefly understand the word as denoting felt hats; and such is its acceptation in Hom. Il. x. 265. Hesiod, Oper. 544. The material, however, of which these πῖλοι were composed, was, as appears from Plato and Pollux, x. 50, and his interpreters, also applied to form winter shoes; also, as we find from Plato, p. 220, A, a sort of military gaiters; and finally, as appears from Xen. Cyr. v. 5, 7, a sort of coarse carpet. But the use which is here in particular meant to be denoted, is that of a kind of wrapper passing around the body close under the breast, (which was fortified by a breastδοράτιά τε ἐναποκέκλαστο βαλλομένων, εἶχόν τε οὐδὲν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς χρήσασθαι, ἀποκεκλημένοι μὲν τῇ ὄψει τοῦ προορᾶν, ὑπὸ δὲ της μείζονος βοῆς τῶν πολεμίων τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς παραγγελλόμενα οὐκ ἐσακούοντες, κινδύνου τε πανταχόθεν περιεστῶτος, καὶ οὐκ ἔχοντες ἐλπίδα καθ' ὅτι χρὴ ἀμυνομένους σωθῆναι. XXXV. Τέλος δὲ, τραυματιζομένων ἤδη πολλῶν, διὰ τὸ ἀεὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ἀναστρέφεσθαι, ξυγκλήσαντες ἐχώρησαν ἐς τὸ ἔσχατον ἔρυμα plate, θώραξ.) and probably descending to the middle of the thigh, having for its purpose chiefly to cover the upper and the lower belly (abdomen) and the groin: and of this use among any other nation than the Lacedæmonians I know of no example. Levêque, indeed, speaks of the Persians as using a tunic of felt called πῖλος; referring to the words of Pollux, vii. 11: but, on examination, I find nothing to this effect in the passage appealed to; nor is such, I believe, to be found in any other passage of that lexicographer. In the passage (of whatever writer) there had in view by Levêque, I suspect, we are to understand those thick quilted coats worn by the orientals, from which perhaps the crusaders borrowed the use of the buff-jerkins of the middle ages, and which indeed prevailed in aftertimes.

Of οὔτε ἔστεγον the sense is literally 'did not keep off:' for the term στέγειν signifies primarily 'to keep out,' as said of a vessel that is water-tight, and so denoting both to hold or keep in, and also to keep out, the water: whence arise the metaphorical senses 'to keep off,' sustinere, 'to endure:' and thus the term comes to have the sense 'to be impenetrable,' and that as understood both in a physical and in a moral sense; signifying, as respects the former, 'to be able to repel,' (Ang. 'to be proof against,') as said of shields or armour, whose property is to repel, like adamant, every attempt to indent its surface: which last is the sense here intended; for the arrows, it seems, penetrated through the πῖλοι.

δοράτιά τε ἐναποκέκλαστο] 'and the darts [of the enemy] had been broken in,' namely, so as to leave the spicula or dart-heads sticking in the felt, and not to be removed; consequently hampering and impeding their motions. In βαλλομένων we have—as Portus, Goeller, Poppo, and Arnold point out—a genit. absolute: and the other genitive of subst. αὐτῶν (viz. Λακεδαιμονίων) being here understood from the context, the sense is, 'when they were shot at.' Compare Pausan. i. 21, 8, ἐναποκλῶνται γάρ σφισι λεόντων ὀδόντες. Plut. Crass. 25, and Agath. p. 36, fin.

The next words, εἶχον — χρήσασθαι, serve to state the result of the above; and they might mean, as they have been rendered by Hobbes (and formerly by myself, in my Translation), 'had not the power to handle themselves, use their limbs,' but that the words following rather determine the sense to be that assigned by Stephens, 'knew not what to do,' i. e. what means of defence to resort to; namely, because, as it is added, ἀποκεκλημένοι μὲν τῇ ὄψει τοῦ προορᾶν, ὑπὸ δὲ τῆς μείζονος βοῆς τῶν πολεμιων τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς παραγγελλόμενα οὐκ ἐσακούοντες, 'being, as regarded their sight, prevented from seeing [any thing] before them; and, from the overpowering shoutings of the enemy, not being able to hear any orders among themselves.' (Compare ii. 84.) Here τῇ ὄψει might seem to be redundant; but, as Arnold points out, 'it is added for the sake of the opposition, since ἐσακούοντες follows.' Had the antithesis been completed, the sense would have run thus: 'as far as eyesight was concerned, they could see nothing before them; and as far as hearing went, they could make no use of it, not being able to hear the orders given by their officers.' With κινδύνου περιεστῶτος compare iii. 54, φόβος περιέστη τὴν Σπάρτην.

CH. XXXV. 1. διὰ τὸ ἀεὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ἀναστρέφεσθαι] Compare vii. 44, ἐν στενοχωρίᾳ ἀναστρέφεσθαι. As to this being given as the reason why many were wounded,—it may be understood by considering that the being straitened for room, and confined to one spot, would necessarily prevent them from moving about, and so occasionally avoiding the missiles. See v. 71, 1.

ξυγκλήσαντες] scil. ἑαυτούς: meaning, as we should say, 'having closed their ranks;' agreeably to the explanation of one of the Scholiasts, πυκνώσαντες, πυκνωθέντες; an evolution which implied a closing of the shields: and accordingly the phrase συγκλ. τὰς ἀσπίδας in Xen. Cyr. vii. 1, 26, and Arrian, E. A. i. 1, 17, is τῆς νήσου, ὃ οὐ πολὺ ἀπεῖχε, καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν φύλακας. 2. ὡς δὲ ἐνέδυσαν, ἐνταῦθα ἤδη πολλῷ ἔτι πλέονι βοῇ τεθαρσηκότες οἱ ψιλοὶ ἐπέκειντο· καὶ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ὅσοι μὲν ὑποχωροῦντες ἐγκατελαμβάνοντο ἀπέθνησκον, οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ, διαφυγόντες ἐς τὸ ἔρυμα, μετὰ τῶν ταύτῃ φυλάκων ἐτάξαντο παρὰ πᾶν, ὡς ἀμυνούμενοι, ᾗπερ ἦν ἐπίμαχον. 3. καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐπισπόμενοι, περιόδων μὲν αὐτῶν καὶ κύκλωσιν, χωρίου ἰσχύϊ, οὐκ εἶχον, προσιόντες δὲ ἐξ ἐναντίας, ὥσασθαι ἐπειρῶντο, καὶ χρόνον μὲν πολὺν καὶ τῆς ἡμέρας τὸ πλεῖστον ταλαιπωρούμενοι ἀμφότεροι ὑπό τε τῆς μάχης καὶ δίψους καὶ ἡλίου ἀντεῖχον, πειρώμενοι οἱ μὲν ἐξελάσασθαι ἐκ τοῦ μετεώρου, οἱ δὲ μὴ ἐνδοῦναι· ῥᾷον δ' οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἠμύναντο ἢ ἐν τῷ πρὶν, οὐκ οὔσης σφῶν τῆς κυκλώσεως ἐς τὰ πλάγια. XXXVI. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἀπέραντον ἦν, προσελθὼν ὁ τῶν Μεσσηνίων στρατηγὸς Κλέωνι καὶ Δημοσθένει, ἄλλως ἔφη πονεῖν σφᾶς· εἰ δὲ βούλονται ἑαυτῷ δοῦναι τῶν τοξοτῶν μέρος τι καὶ τῶν ψιλῶν, περιέναι κατὰ νώτου αὐτοῖς οἷός τ' ἂν αὐτὸς εὑρεῖν, δοκεῖν βιάσασθαι τὴν ἔφοδον. 2. λαβὼν δὲ ἃ ᾐτήσατο, ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς ὁρμήσας, ὥστε μὴ ἰδεῖν ἐκείνους, κατὰ τὸ ἀεὶ παρεῖκον τοῦ κρημνώδους τῆς equivalent to the former: and hence, again, in a passage of Arrian, Tact., there cited by Raphel, the noun σύγκλεισις stands for συνασπισμός; both terms implying the forming into close order. Answering to συγκλήσαντες ἐχώρησαν here, is συγκλεισαντες τὰς ἀσπίδας ἐχώρουν in the passage of Xenophon. Τὸ ἔσχατον ἔρυμα τῆς νήσου stands, by hypallage, for 'the fort on the [northern] extremity of the island,' of which mention is made at ch. 31, where see note.

3. ἐξ ἐναντ.] 'in front.' See note at ch. 33.

CH. XXXVI. 1. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἀπέραντον ἦν] An impersonal form answering to our 'it was endless;' though here the word πρᾶγμα may be supplied, which is expressed in a passage of Dio Cass. p. 753. Evidently formed on this is the expression of Jos. Ant. xvii. 5, 7, ὁρῶν ἀπέραντον ὂν τὸ γινόμενον.

ὁ τῶν Μεσσηνίων στρατηγὸς] Named Comon, as appears from Pausan. iv. 26. With ἄλλως πονεῖν, 'are labouring in vain,' comp. Plato, p. 232, ὅτι οὐκ ἄλλως αὐτοῖς πεπόνηται. and i. 15, ἄλλως λέγειν. In this use of ἄλλως for μάτην, (found also at ii. 18, and vii. 42.) we have not—as is usually thought—a merely Attic idiom; the same occurring in Hom. Il. xxiii. 144, and Od. xiv. 124. Hdot. iii. 16. iv. 77. v. 41. How, indeed, the word comes to bear that sense, editors and commentators do not attempt to explain. I would account for it by considering that the full sense, in this case, implied by the term is, 'otherwise [than to a good purpose],' and consequently in vain. Thus on Hom. Il. xxiii. 144, ἄλλως σοιγε πατὴρ ἠρήσατο. it is well remarked by Eustath., μὴ κατὰ σκοπὸν ἡ εὐχὴν ἀποδεδηκὼς, ἀλλ' ἐτέρως. ἄλλως ἀποβῆναι (aliter evenisse ac voluimus) φαμέν, κατά τινα ματαίαν.

καὶ τῶν ψιλῶν] Here certainly no distinction can be intended between the archers and the light troops, since the archers were themselves such; but we have, as Poppo points out, a brief form of expression for καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ψιλῶν, as at Xen. Anab. v. 2, 12. The ratio of the idiom will appear from what is said at i. 16, 1, and 116, 3. Poppo aptly compares here Livy, xxxviii. 15, 'velites et levis armatura.'

In περιέναι we have, as Poppo points out, an infin. denoting purpose, (what, in old English, would be expressed by 'for to go round,') on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 532.

2. ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς] 'out of ken of the enemy:' meaning, that he set out from a part of the coast-line not in view from the fort. The words ὥστε μὴ ἰδεῖν ἐκείνους are not well placed by Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, 204, among the examples of verbositas; the sense intended being, 'so that the enemy did not espy them,' or, 'that they might νήσου ‡ προσβαίνων, καὶ ᾗ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, χωρίου ἰσχύϊ πιστεύσαντες, οὐκ ἐφύλασσον, χαλεπῶς τε καὶ μόλις περιελθὼν ἔλαθε, καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ μετεώρου ἐξαπίνης ἀναφανεὶς κατὰ νώτου αὐτῶν, τοὺς μὲν τῷ ἀδοκήτῳ ἐξέπληξε, τοὺς δὲ, ἃ προσεδέχοντο ἰδόντας, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἐπέρρωσε. 3. καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, βαλλόμενοί τε ἀμφοτέρωθεν ἤδη, καὶ γιγνόμενοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ξυμπτώματι, ὡς μικρὸν μεγάλῳ εἰκάσαι, τῷ ἐν Θερμοπύλαις—ἐκεῖνοί τε γὰρ, τῇ ἀτραπῷ περιελθόντων τῶν Περσῶν, διεφθάρησαν, οὗτοί τε, ἀμφίβολοι ἤδη ὄντες, οὐκέτι ἀντεῖχον, ἀλλὰ πολλοῖς τε ὀλίγοι μαχόμενοι, καὶ ἀσθενείᾳ σωμάτων διὰ τὴν σιτοδείαν, ὑπεχώρουν· καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι not see them,' i. e. their motions. The next words, κατὰ τὸ ἀεὶ παρεῖκον τοῦ κρημνώδους τῆς νήσου, serve to mark the course taken from this 'point out of ken' to the summit of the cliff in the rear of the enemy's forces, and at a point, as appears from what follows, left unguarded.

For vulg. παρῆκον, (retained and defended, but quite unsuccessfully, by Duk. and Bredow,) editors and critics are now agreed that the true reading is παρεῖκον; though on the import of the term they differ. After a careful reconsideration of the passage, I am now inclined to reject the physical sense assigned to the expression, namely, declivis esse, as embarrassing us with difficulties little less than insurmountable: and I finally coincide in the view of the sense adopted by Abresch, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, 'prout singulis in locis præruptæ rupes aditum dabant,' or, 'prout singulis in locis præruptarum rupium fieri poterit,' i. e. 'rependo, aliisque modis,' 'winding along in a slanting or diagonal direction:' a view, I would observe, borne out by the account of the present state of the locality given by Col. Leake, (Morea, vol. i. p. 409.) as follows: 'The cliffs are here perpendicular; though just above the water (qy. water's edge?) there is a small slope (i. e. oblique acclivity) capable of admitting the passage of a body of men active in climbing among rocks.' Finally, such is the use of κατὰ τὸ παρεῖκον in Dio Cass. xlix. 2, (cited by Poppo,) and in a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Zosim. p. 31, τῆς πέζης δυνάμεως αὐτοῖς διὰ τῆς ἠϊόνος κατὰ τὸ παρεῖκον συμπαραβεούσης. Evidently imitated also from this of our author is a passage of Jos. Bell. vii. 8, 3 (describing the site of the hill-fort of Massada): βαθεῖαι φάραγγες—κρημνώδεις καὶ πάσῃ βάσει ζώων ἀπρόσιτοι, πλὴν ὅσον κατὰ δύο τόπους τῆς πέτρας εἰς ἄνοδον παρεικούσης· literally, 'conceding the power of approach for ascent.' And so Agath. 94, med. ἐκβαμόντες οἱ Ῥ. κατὰ τὸ παρῆκον, where, for παρῆκον, ought undoubtedly to be read παρεῖκον, which is required by the preceding words ἐκείνων ἐφέντων.

For προσβαίνων, three MSS. have προβ., which Poppo edits, as did also Goeller in his 1st edit., though in his 2nd he has restored προσβ.; and rightly; for προσβ. here (as often in the best writers) stands for πρόσω βαίνω, 'to proceed forward or onward' towards any object (as infra iii. 22. iv. 129. vii. 43.); and here the nature of the thing must imply motion upward, which in προσβαίνω (though never in προβαίνω) is a not unfrequent sense. Of this use of the word, by which, as says Schweigh. on Polyb. ii. 67, 6, 'signatè de ascensu montis usurpatur,' I have noted several examples in other writers besides Polybius. So Eurip. Cycl. 701, Ἄνω δ' ἐπ' ὄχθον εἶμι, καίπερ ὢν τυφλὸς, Δι' ἀμφιτρῆτος τῆσδε προσβαίνων ποδί· the very same action as that here described; namely, the creeping along up a cavernous rock eaten away and bored into holes, so as to afford foot or hand hold: and so Plut. Arat. 22, describing the successful attempt of Aratus to take the hill-fortress of the Acricorinthias by a nocturnal escalade: ὁ Ἄρατος ἐμφὺς τῇ πορείᾳ παρὰ τὸ κρημνῶδες ἠμιλλᾶτο, βραδέως καὶ ταλαιπώρως τὸ πρῶτον—ἀλλ' ἀποπλανώμενος, τοῦ τρίβου ἐνδεδυκότος (answering to παρεῖκον here)—καὶ προσβαίνοντες, meaning 'as they made their way upwards.'

3. καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι—ὑπεχώρουν] Here there is a manifest irregularity of construction; though on the nature of it, commentators are by no means agreed. Abresch and Gottl. rightly recognise here an anacoluthon; yet in tracing its nature they shoot wide of the mark. We may reasonably suppose, with Poppo, Haack, and Goeller, that our author meant at first to say, οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι γενόμενοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ξυμπτώματι τοῖς ἐν Θερμοπ. περιελθόντων τῶν Περσῶν διαφθαρεῖσι: but afterwards changed the form of the wording, as in the passages adduced by Poppo, Proleg. vol. i. 1. p. 108.

ἐκράτουν ἤδη τῶν ἐφόδων. XXXVII. Γνοὺς δὲ ὁ Κλέων καὶ ὁ Δημοσθένης ὅτι, εἰ καὶ ὁποσονοῦν μᾶλλον ἐνδώσουσι, διαφθαρησομένους αὐτοὺς ὑπὸ τῆς σφετέρας στρατιᾶς, ἔπαυσαν τὴν μάχην καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν ἀπεῖρξαν, βουλόμενοι ἀγαγεῖν αὐτοὺς Ἀθηναίοις ζῶντας, εἴ πως, τοῦ κηρύγματος ἀκούσαντες, ἐπικλασθεῖεν τῇ γνώμῃ τὰ ὅπλα παραδοῦναι, καὶ ἠσσηθεῖεν τοῦ παρόντος δεινοῦ. 2. ἐκήρυξάν τε, εἰ βούλοιντο τὰ ὅπλα παραδοῦναι καὶ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς Ἀθηναίοις, ὥστε βουλεῦσαι ὅ τι ἂν ἐκείνοις δοκῇ. XXXVIII. Οἱ δὲ, ἀκούσαντες, παρῆκαν τὰς ἀσπίδας οἱ πλεῖστοι, καὶ τὰς χεῖρας ἀνέσεισαν, δηλοῦντες προσίεσθαι τὰ κεκηρυγμένα. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα γενομένης τῆς ἀνακωχῆς, ξυνῆλθον ἐς λόγους ὅ τε Κλέων καὶ ὁ Δημοσθένης, καὶ ἐκείνων Στύφων ὁ Φάρακος, τῶν πρότερον ἀρχόντων τοῦ μὲν πρώτου τεθνηκότος Ἐπιτάδου, τοῦ δὲ μετ' αὐτὸν Ἱππαγρέτου ἐφημένου ἐν τοῖς νεκροῖς ἔτι ζῶντος

With the phrase ὡς μικρὸν μεγάλῳ εἰκάσαι, (answering to our form of expression, 'to compare small things with great,') compare Dio Cass. 628, 99, ὡς μικρὰ μεγάλοις ὁμοιῶσαι. On this use before the inf. of ὡς for ὥστε, ita ut, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 545. Ξυμπτώματι, casu, 'condition, predicament.' Τῇ ἀτραπῷ: meaning (by the force of the article) 'the [well-known] by-path over the mountains,' minutely described in Herodot. vii. 213, seqq., by which a Greek traitor brought round the Persians. Answering to τῇ ἀτραπῷ here is κατὰ ἀτραπὸν in the above passage of Herodotus.

ἀμφίβολοι] See note on ch. 32. In ἀσθενείᾳ σωμάτων we have, as Poppo says, a varied form of expression for ἀσθενεῖς ὄντες: though the sense may be literally expressed, 'under weakness of body.'

CH. XXXVII. 1. γνοὺς—ὅτι—διαφθαρησομένους αὐτοὺς] On this confusion of two different constructions, γνοὺς διαφθαρησομένους and γνοὺς ὅτι διαφθαρήσονται, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 549, note 1. Καὶ ὁποσονοῦν, 'even ever so little.' So ὁποσονοῦν χρόνου and ὁποσονοῦν βάρους, occurring in Aristotle. Hence in a passage of Joseph. Ant. xv. 9, 5, for οὐδ' ὁποσοῦν I conjecture the true reading to be ὁποσονοῦν or ὁπόσας οὖν. And so again in Dionys. Hal. Ant. x. 42. p. 2103, 4, for λαζόντες ὁπόσην γοῦν ought to be read ὁπόσην οὖν: the γ there doubtless arising from the ν preceding.

εἴ πως] Meaning, '[to try] if haply by any means.' So in another passage of our author we have, εἴπως ἕλοιεν τὸ τείχισμα. Compare also Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 2. Hom. Od. xiv. 460. Acts xxvii. 12. The force of the optat. may be expressed by our could or would.

ἐπικλασθεῖεν τῇ γνώμῃ] The full meaning of this expression (which occurred at iii. 72.) is, 'to be so broken in spirit as to give way to any demand made.'

2. εἰ βούλοιντο] 'Prout ei nunc aut si interpretamur, ratio grammatica totius enunciati duobus modis expediri potest. Si posteriorem interpretationem præfers, cf. ad iii. 52, 2. Priorem, ex qua κηρύσσειν missio præcone interrogare valet, hic proponit Arn., conferens Herod. vii. 134.' (Poppo.)

CH. XXXVIII. 1. παρῆκαν τὰς ἀσπίδας] 'lowered their shields;' namely, in token of obedience. So Herodot. iii. 128, (cited by Poppo,) μεθῆκαν τὰς ἀσπίδας. Answering to this is the expression just after, to denote surrender—τὰς χεῖρας ἀνέσεισαν; with which compare Dio Cass. 1004, 24, τὰς χεῖρας ἀνέσειον: and see note on iii. 58, 3.

ἐκείνων] Render, 'of those;' viz. of the Lacedæmonians. Compare v. 19, ὦμνυον—Λακεδαιμόνιοι μέν.

Ἱππαγρέτου] By Cragius and Duker this word is understood to denote the hippagretes, or commander of the 300 horse-guards attached to the person of the king of the Lacedæmonians. But, as Poppo well observes, 'considering that there was κειμένου ὡς τεθνεῶτος, αὐτὸς τρίτος ἐφημημένος ἄρχειν κατὰ νόμον, εἴ τι ἐκεῖνοι πάσχοιεν. 2. ἔλεγε δὲ ὁ Στύφων καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὅτι βούλονται διακηρυκεύσασθαι πρὸς τοὺς ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ Λακεδαιμονίους ὅ τι χρὴ σφᾶς ποιεῖν. 3. καὶ ἐκείνων μὲν οὐδένα ἀφέντων, αὐτῶν δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων καλούντων ἐκ τῆς ἠπείρου κήρυκας, καὶ γενομένων ἐπερωτήσεων δὶς ἢ τρὶς, ὁ τελευταῖος διαπλεύσας αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν ἐκ τῆς ἠπείρου Λακεδαιμονίων ἀνὴρ ἀπήγγειλεν ὅτι "Οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι κελεύουσιν ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς περὶ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν βουλεύεσθαι, μηδὲν αἰσχρὸν ποιοῦντας." οἱ δὲ, καθ' ἑαυτοὺς βουλευσάμενοι, τὰ ὅπλα παρέδοσαν καὶ σφᾶς αὐτούς. 4. καὶ ταύτην μὲν τὴν ἡμέραν καὶ τὴν ἐπιοῦσαν νύκτα ἐν φυλακῇ εἶχον αὐτοὺς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι· τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι, τροπαῖον στήσαντες ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, τἆλλα διεσκευάζοντο ὡς ἐς πλοῦν, καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας τοῖς τριηράρχοις διεδίδοσαν ἐς φυλακήν· οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι κήρυκα πέμψαντες τοὺς νεκροὺς διεκομίσαντο. 5. ἀπέθανον δ' ἐν τῇ νήσῳ

no king at Sphacteria, how could there be an hippagrete! It may be urged, too, that had such been the meaning intended, the article could not, in that case, have been dispensed with. The word is doubtless a proper name, and so presents in itself another example, added to not a few already occurring, of names of office becoming in the end proper names.

κατὰ νόμον] This is to be joined with ἐφημένος; the expression, as Duker points out, serving to denote that such persons were not nominated to their office by the suffrages of the soldiers, but were publicly and by law selected and appointed thereto; so that if any thing happened to the first-named officers, they should take their place; as was the case in naval affairs, where a legate called ἐπιστολεὺς was added to the admiral, that he might occupy his post in case of his death.

3. γενομένων ἐπερωτήσεων δὶς ἢ τρὶς] The full sense is, 'after interrogatories had been put and answered for two or three times.' In ἐπερ. we have a word of extremely rare occurrence; insomuch that I know no other example of it except in Lucian, p. 454, and Gen. xliii. 7: and to this circumstance may we ascribe the existence of the two varr. lectt. ἐπ' ἐρωτήσεως and ἐπερωτημάτων.

τὰ ὅπλα παρέδοσαν] These, as we learn from Aristoph. Eq. 846, were taken to Athens, and there preserved as trophies of victory.

4. τἆλλα διεσκευάζοντο ὡς ἐς πλοῦν] For vulg. τὰ ἄλλα, I have followed Bekker and Goeller in editing τἆλλα. The word is not well taken with διεσκευάζοντο; for thus διεσκεύαζον, and not διεσκεύαζοντο, ought to have been written: and, moreover, the very term ἄλλα were in that case unsuitable; there being here no previous mention of preparations. It is best, then, to take the expression adverbially; a use also observable at iii. 3, 6, and 10, where we have, τἆλλα ὁμοιότροποι εἶεν: and answering to this is the use of cetera in Latin, (so Virg. Æn. ix. 656, 'cetera parce, puer, bello,') and the French au reste. Thus the term διασκευάζεσθαι will have its proper reciprocal force, 'to prepare oneself,' as in Xen. Hist. iv. 2, 19, ἀντιπαρήγγειλαν ἅπαντας διασκευάσασθαι ὡς ἐς μάχην: and Synes. ap. Steph. Thes. ἐσεσκευάζοντο ὡς ἐς μάχην. Polyb. i. 35, 5. xii. 19, 6. Here, however, the word bears the rare sense,—noticed by Budæus. Comment. and Constant. Lex. διασκευάζομαι,—'sarcinas compono, colligo easa, ut alio migraturus:' as an example of which is adduced a passage of Demosth. p. 845, 14, διασκευασάμενος τὴν οὐσίαν. Yet there, I would observe, the sense in question is merely alluded to; the real import of the term being, 'having dissipated, got rid of his substance;' (what is more fully expressed in a passage of St. Luke, xv. 13, by διεσκόρπισε τὴν οὐσίαν αὐτοῦ) namely, with allusion to the previous packing up of the goods, which circumstance is expressed in the words just after, ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας τὰ σκεύη λαβών.

For the occurrence of ὡς before ἐς πλοῦν, we may account from the circumstance of the phrase being formed on διασκευάζεσθαι ὡς ἐς μάχην. The force here καὶ ζῶντες ἐλήφθησαν τοσοίδε. εἴκοσι μὲν ὁπλῖται διέβησαν καὶ τετρακόσιοι οἱ πάντες· τούτων ζῶντες ἐκομίσθησαν ὀκτὼ ἀποδέοντες τριακόσιοι, οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι ἀπέθανον· καὶ Σπαρτιᾶται τούτων ἦσαν τῶν ζώντων περὶ εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατόν. Ἀθηναίων δὲ οὐ πολλοὶ διεφθάρησαν· ἡ γὰρ μάχη οὐ σταδία ἦν. XXXIX. Χρόνος δὲ ὁ ξύμπας ἐγένετο, ὅσον οἱ ἄνδρες οἱ ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ἐπολιορκήθησαν ἀπὸ τῆς ναυμαχίας μέχρι τῆς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ μάχης, ἑβδομήκοντα ἡμέραι καὶ δύο. 2. τούτων περὶ εἴκοσιν ἡμέρας, ἐν αἷς οἱ πρέσβεις περὶ τῶν σπονδῶν ἀπῆσαν, ἐσιτοδοτοῦντο, τὰς δὲ ἄλλας τοῖς ἐσπλέουσι λάθρα διετρέφοντο. καὶ ἦν σῖτος ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, καὶ ἄλλα βρώματα ἐγκατελήφθη· ὁ γὰρ ἄρχων Ἐπιτάδας ἐνδεεστέρως ἑκάστῳ παρεῖχεν ἢ πρὸς τὴν ἐξουσίαν. 3. οἱ μὲν δὴ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι ἀνεχώρησαν τῷ στρατῷ ἐκ τῆς Πύλου ἑκάτεροι ἐπ' οἴκου, καὶ τοῦ Κλέωνος, καίπερ μανιώδης οὖσα, ἡ ὑπόσχεσις ἀπέβη· ἐντὸς γὰρ εἴκοσιν ἡμερῶν ἤγαγε τοὺς ἄνδρας, ὥσπερ ὑπέστη. XL. Παρὰ γνώμην τε δὴ μάλιστα τῶν κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον τοῦτο τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ἐγένετο· τοὺς γὰρ Λακεδαιμονίους οὔτε λιμῷ οὔτ' ἀνάγκῃ οὐδεμιᾷ ἠξίουν τὰ ὅπλα παραδοῦναι, ἀλλὰ ἔχοντας, καὶ μαχομένους ὡς ἐδύναντο, ἀποθνήσκειν. 2. ἀπιστοῦντές τε μὴ εἶναι τοὺς παραδόντας τοῖς τεθνεῶσιν ὁμοίους, καί, τινος ἐρομένου ποτὲ ὕστερον τῶν Ἀθηναίων ξυμμάχων ἐπ' ἀχθηδόνα ἕνα τῶν ἐκ τῆς of the preposition (which is not pleonastic) has been already treated on in the note at i. 50, 5.

5. οἱ πάντες] The οἱ is, indeed, not found in several good MSS.: but it is quite necessary to the sense, which is 'in all,' literally, 'the whole.' In οὐ σταδία ἦν, 'was not a regular battle, hand to hand,' we have a phrase well expressed by the Latin pugna stataria, and which is not unfrequent in the historians, being derived, we may suppose, from the Homeric ἐν σταδίῃ ὑσμίνῃ.

CH. XXXIX. 2. τοῖς ἐσπλέουσι] for ὑπὸ τῶν ἐσπλεόντων.

ἢ πρὸς τὴν ἐξουσίαν] 'than according to his power.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 449.

3. ἡ ὑπόσχεσις ἀπέβη] There would seem to be something anomalous in the use here of a term like ἀποβαίνω. properly applied to predictions, not promises: yet considering that a promise is a declaration of something which we engage to do, and when the performance follows, the thing declared comes to pass, no real impropriety exists.

CH. XL. In this chapter is expressed the amazement occasioned in Greece at a termination of the affair so unexpected, as being hitherto without precedent.

1. ἠξίουν τὰ ὅπλα παραδοῦναι] Dobree would before ἠξίουν insert ἄν: while Poppo thinks the word may be understood, as noting custom; and he refers to his Proleg. i. 1, p. 56. It would rather, however, seem to denote the opinion of the Greeks as to who they thought ought to die at their posts with arms in their hands.

ὡς ἐδύναντο] Meaning en passant, 'as far as they could,' ὡς ἐνατόν.

2. ἀπιστοῦντές τε μὴ εἶναι] Here, as Poppo well observes, the nomin. absol., with reference to what follows, is put per anacoluthon, for the genit., as at iii. 34, and iv. 80: and he refers to his Proleg. i. p. 108, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 562, 1.

ὁμοίους] Meaning 'persons of the same stamp,' of equal valour. Of ἐπ' ἀχθηδόνα the sense, as demanded by the context, must be what I have assigned in my Translation, 'by way of taunt or insult:' though, as Goeller observes, for ἐπ' ἀχθ., the more usual form of expression would have been ἐπ' ἀχθηδόνι or πρὸς ἀχθηδόνα. And so (I would remark) Philo-νήσου αἰχμαλώτων, εἰ οἱ τεθνεῶτες αὐτῶν καλοὶ κἀγαθοὶ, ἀπεκρίνατο αὐτῷ πολλοῦ ἂν ἄξιον εἶναι τὸν ἄτρακτον, (λέγων τὸν ὄϊστὸν,) εἰ τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς διεγίγνωσκε· δήλωσιν ποιούμενος ὅτι ὁ ἐντυγχάνων τοῖς τε λίθοις καὶ τοξεύμασι διεφθείρετο.

XLI. Κομισθέντων δὲ τῶν ἀνδρῶν, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐβούλευσαν δεσμοῖς μὲν αὐτοὺς φυλάσσειν, μέχρι οὗ τι ξυμβῶσιν· ἢν δ' οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι πρὸ τούτου ἐς τὴν γῆν ἐσβάλλωσιν, ἐξαγαγόντες ἀποκτεῖναι. 2. τῆς δὲ Πύλου φυλακὴν κατεστήσαντο· καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Ναυπάκτου Μεσσήνιοι ὡς ἐς πατρίδα ταύτην (ἔστι γὰρ ἡ Πύλος τῆς Μεσσηνίδος ποτὲ οὔσης γῆς) πέμψαντες σφῶν αὐτῶν τοὺς ἐπιτηδειοτάτους, ἐλῄζόν τε τὴν Λακωνικὴν, καὶ πλεῖστα ἔβλαπτον, ὁμόφωνοι ὄντες. 3. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἀμαθεῖς ὄντες ἐν τῷ πρὶν χρόνῳ stratus (Vit. Ap. iv. 31.) must have taken the expression, as appears from his words there, evidently imitated from these of our author: ἐρομένου δὲ Κορινθίου τινὸς κατὰ ἀχθηδόνα. And so again at viii. 16, he has, ἐπιδόντες τῇ ἀχθηδόνι. Finally, in vain is it that Haack opposes the usus loquendi to what is imperatively demanded by the context.

καλοὶ κἀγαθοὶ] Meaning what we should express by fine fellows; the expression here, as in a passage of Aristoph. Eq. 183, (where it is so explained by Mitchell,) having reference to person and manners, not to rank or station. Of course, among these personal qualities bravery must chiefly be had in view. Why, indeed, Mitchell and Arnold should agree in regarding the expression as parallel to our gentleman, I cannot imagine; since it is manners and rank in life that would thus be denoted (as at viii. 48, 6, where see note); which are surely inapplicable to the present case.

τὸν ἄτρακτον] I must still adhere to the opinion formerly expressed, that the term is not, as Bredow, Wasse, Haack, Goeller, and Poppo suppose it, used contemptuously, in the sense of spindle, as it were a woman's weapon. I have, in my note in Translation, given good reasons for thinking (and in this view, I find, Arnold coincides) that ἄτρακτος was a term used by the Spartans to denote what the Greeks at large expressed by ὀϊστός. That it was a very ancient word, we may suppose from its being found used to denote such in the Ionic Greek of Hippocrates. See Foësii Œcon. Hipp. The primary signification of the term is a shaft; and in this sense it occurs in Philostr. Vit. Ap. ii. 11, ἄτρακτον βέλους ἢ τοξεύματος. Hence it came, by an ellipsis of βέλους, to signify, as in various passages of the Greek dramatists, a dart: and such is the sense it bears in the Greek of the middle ages. Indeed from this (for which the modern Greek is ἄδρακτος) our word dart is originally derived.

Ch. XLI. 1. δεσμοῖς φυλάσσειν] In the words of Diodorus, xii. 63, the word δεσμοῖς is omitted; but wrongly; since the phrase δεσμοῖς φυλάσσειν has an exactly contrary import to that of ἐν φυλακῇ ἀδέσμῳ ἔχειν, occurring at iii. 34 & 36. In Aristoph. Eq. 394, a yet stronger expression is used; for on the subject of the persons in question it is said, νῦν δὲ τοὺς στάχυς ἐκείνους, οὓς ἐκεῖθεν ἤγαγεν (Cleon) ἐν ξύλῳ δήσας ἀφαύει: on which expression ἐν ξύλῳ δῆσαι see my note on Acts xvi. 24, and Lex. Nov. Test. in v. ξύλον. In the concluding term ἀφαύει there is allusion to the dried up, withered visages of the Spartan prisoners, which are compared to shrivelled up ears of corn—a natural image beautifully expressed in the words of Dryden: 'The scorching blast invades The tender corn, and shrivels up the blades:' and so again, 'And shrivell'd herbs on withering stems decay.' Thus they are described as mere shrivellings.

2. τῆς Πύλου φυλακὴν κατεστήσαντο] A phrase nearly allied to that in our own language, 'to set a watch over a place.' The plainer form of expression would have been, ἐς τὴν Πύλου φυλακὴν κατ., as at viii. 29, 1, τὴν Ἴασον κατεστήσατο ἐς φυλακήν. By τὴν Λακωνικὴν understand Messenia, as being a Lacedæmonian province. See note on ii. 25.

3. ἀμαθεῖς ὄντες ἐν τῷ πρὶν χρόνῳ λῃστείας] literally, 'being ignorant of it, unacquainted with it, not knowing what it λῃστείας καὶ τοιούτου πολέμου, τῶν τε Εἱλώτων αὐτομολούντων, καὶ φοβούμενοι μὴ καὶ ἐπὶ μακρότερον σφίσι τι νεωτερισθῇ τῶν κατὰ τὴν χώραν, οὐ ῥᾳδίως ἔφερον· ἀλλὰ, καίπερ οὐ βουλόμενοι ἔνδηλοι εἶναι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, ἐπρεσβεύοντο παρ' αὐτούς, καὶ ἐπειρῶντο τήν τε Πύλον καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας κομίζεσθαι. 4. οἱ δὲ μειζόνων τε ὠρέγοντο, καὶ, πολλάκις φοιτώντων, αὐτοὺς ἀπράκτους ἀπέπεμπον. ταῦτα μὲν τὰ περὶ Πύλον γενόμενα.

XLII. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους, μετὰ ταῦτα εὐθύς, Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὴν Κορινθίαν ἐστράτευσαν ναυσὶν ὑγδοήκοντα, καὶ δισχιλίοις ὁπλίταις ἑαυτῶν, καὶ ἐν ἱππαγωγοῖς ναυσὶ διακοσίοις ἱππεῦσιν· ἠκολούθουν δὲ καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων Μιλήσιοι, καὶ Ἄνδριοι, καὶ Καρύστιοι· ἐστρατήγει δὲ Νικίας ὁ Νικηράτου, τρίτος αὐτός. 2. πλέοντες δὲ ἅμα was.' Of nearly the same sense as, though a stronger term than, ἀπαθεῖς (which Markland, indeed, would read instead of ἀμαθεῖς); the full meaning intended being, that they knew not what the evil was, not having actually suffered it. And such is the import of the verb in a passage of Hebr. v. 8, ἔμαθεν, ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε, τὴν ὑπακοήν: a paronomasia formed on the adage μαθήματα τὰ παθήματα. The words following, τῶν τε Εἱλώτων αὐτομολούντων, are not well joined by Goeller with the subsequent words καὶ φοβούμενοι. They are rather to be considered as belonging to the foregoing; being meant to throw in a circumstance which should serve to set forth the nature of the war, as one of ravage and devastation, together with the additional evil, of the desertion of the helots to the enemy.

φοβούμενοι μὴ — νεωτερισθῇ] Render: 'fearing lest the revolt, which was going on in the country, should proceed to a greater length.' Poppo compares Dio Cass. lxvii. 48, δείσας μὴ καὶ πλεῖόν τι νεωτερισθῇ. Worthy of notice is this impersonal use of νεωτ., which comes under the rule laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 297, obs. 2, of 'the verb which should be referred to a subject, being changed into the passive, and being used impersonally with the dative of the subject,' as vii. 77, ἱκανὰ τοῖς πολεμίοις εὐτύχηται. Herodot. vi. 112, ὡς δέ σφι διετέτακτο.

οὐ ῥᾳδίως ἔφερον] 'they bore it ill;' οὐ ῥᾳδίως standing, as at vi. 57, and vii. 73, for κακῶς. Of καίπερ οὐ βουλόμενοι ἔνδηλοι εἶναι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις the sense is, 'although unwilling to betray their alarm to the Athenians;' for here, as Dukas well points out, the word φοβούμενοι (yet in the mind of our author) is to be supplied at ἔνδηλοι εἶναι. Almost any other writer would have expressed the thought, as Dukas words it, thus: ἐπρεσβεύοντο περὶ εἰρήνης· ἀλλὰ μὴ ἔνδηλοι εἶναι, ἐφ' οἷς πάσχοντες ἐφοβοῦντο, ἐβούλοντο. The sense, here but imperfectly developed, is more fully evolved in a kindred passage at ii. 64, μήτε ἔνδηλοί ἐστε τοῖς παροῦσι πόνοις βαρυνόμενοι.

4. πολλάκις φοιτώντων] Here we have one of the examples of genit. of subject put for accus. of subject; on which see Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, 121. The sense, however, is, 'after they had gone repeatedly.'

CH. XLII. 1. Here, for Κορινθίαν, several MSS. and all the early editions have Κόρινθον; a reading, indeed, supported by the following passage of Aristoph. Eq. 595, Ἄξιοι δ' εἰσ' εὐλογεῖσθαι — ἐξεπήδων τ' εἰς Κόρινθον. But the common lection was evidently read by Polyænus, (Strat. i. 39.) who, relating the present transaction, commences thus: Νικίας ἐπιπλεύσας τῇ Κορινθίᾳ νύκτωρ, &c. Moreover, Κορινθίαν is absolutely required by the fact, that the expedition was made not against the city, but the territory.

2. ἅμα ἕῳ] To take these words, with Arnold, (and, before him, Smith,) not with πλέοντες, but with ἔσχον, is to do no little violence to the construction, and also to make πλέοντες almost useless. As to the reason for that view assigned by Arnold, it is any thing but conclusive; since, as Poppo well observes, 'the nature of the navigation might be such as to forbid the Athenians being discerned at a distance:' and as to arriving too soon, that might easily be prevented by lying off at sea. Besides, by πλέοντες ἅμα ἕῳ it may only be meant that they commenced the necessary dispositions for sailing at ἕῳ, ἔσχον μεταξὺ Χερσονήσου τε καὶ Ῥείτου ἐς τὸν αἰγιαλὸν τοῦ χωρίου ὑπὲρ οὗ ὁ Σολύγειος λόφος ἐστίν· ἐφ' ὃν Δωριῆς τὸ πάλαι ἱδρυθέντες, τοῖς ἐν τῇ πόλει Κορινθίοις ἐπολέμουν, οὖσιν Αἰολεῦσι· καὶ κώμη νῦν ἐπ' αὐτοῦ Σολύγεια καλουμένη ἐστίν. ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ αἰγιαλοῦ τούτου, ἔνθα αἱ νῆες κατέσχον, ἡ μὲν κώμη αὕτη δώδεκα σταδίους ἀπέχει, ἡ δὲ Κορινθίων πόλις ἑξήκοντα, ὁ δὲ ἰσθμὸς † εἴκοσι. 3. Κορίνθιοι δὲ, προπυθόμενοι ἐξ Ἄργους ὅτι ἡ στρατιὰ ἥξει τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐκ πλείονος, ἐβοήθησαν ἐς ἰσθμὸν πάντες, πλὴν dawn of day; though, of course, it would require several hours before a fleet of eighty ships of war, besides the horse transports and other attendant vessels, could get fairly off to sea.

τὸν αἰγιαλὸν] 'the beach;' meaning the situation proper for debarkation in the bay. So Xen. Cyr. vi. 4, 4, λιμὴν—αἰγιαλὸν ἔχων, and Acts xxvii. 39, κατενόουν αἰγιαλὸν ἔχοντα κόλπον τινά. On the several situations of Chersonesus, Rheitus, the Solygian hill, and the village Solygia, see remarks by Colonel Leake, in his Morea, vol. iii. p. 308. The Solygian hill is found alone in Lapie's Map. Rheitus is doubtless at the mouth of the rivulet in Capt. Copeland's Map, where the mill is marked. I must still adhere to the opinion formerly expressed, that this was not a town, but merely a place so called; the meaning of the name being literally, 'the Brook' or rivulet: and so several places in our own country bear the name Brooke. The word occurs also as a name at ii. 19, 2, περὶ τοὺς Ῥείτους καλουμένους ('the rivulets'); where see note. Col. Leake supposes it to have been the harbour sheltered by a small island, which is situated three miles and a half south-east of Kekhriés. But the harbour he speaks of (which, however, may be rather called a roadstead) is, I apprehend, quite distinct from Rheitus. From Capt. Copeland's Survey it appears to be about a quarter of a mile south-east from the Brook. See the annexed Plan, formed by Col. Leake, which will make the narration of our historian quite intelligible. Chersonesus is there so distinctly pointed out as not to be mistaken. The Mill there indicated implies (as the Mill at Rheitus) the existence of a mill-stream or rivulet, constituting, I apprehend, the tepid stream anciently called the Bath of Helene.

For vulg. Σολύγιος, I have, with Poppo and Goeller, edited Σολύγειος, which is found in Steph. Byz., and called for by the form Σολύγεια just after occurring. The Solygian hill is plainly indicated in the recent surveys, and has been introduced into the annexed Plan by Col. Leake. The term λόφος here used well corresponds to the form of the eminence, a kind of table-land or crest, swelling above the plain, of the form of a horse's neck: and so the very term in Latin, collis, cognate with collum, properly means an eminence of that form. The other term in Greek to signify a hill (ὄρος) thus far differs from λόφος, that it denotes properly a hill of a round form—a crag—and seems cognate with βωμὸς, which word signified originally something raised, and so exactly corresponding to the term ara in Virg. Æn. i. 109, 'Saxa, vocant Itali mediis quæ in fluctibus aras:' where Servius notices that the Greeks called such βωμούς.

Finally, ὁ Σολύγειος λόφος should be rendered, not 'the hill of Solygius,' but 'the Solygian hill;' the name in question being formed from the obsolete word σολύγη (of the same form as λύγη, ἀλυγὴ, ἠλωγὴ, ὀλολυγὴ), which comes from the obsolete verb σολύζω, 'to throw the discus,' from σόλος, discus, or quoit: and hence (I would observe) what we find in Polyæn. i. 39, 1, ὁ Σολύγης λόφος, is not necessarily an error of the scribes for ὁ Σολύγειος, but serves to show that the hill in question was also called ὁ Σολύγης λόφος: and in the above passage it may be supposed to stand as it did in the writer (not Thucydides) whom Polyænus there followed, in his account of the stratagem by which Nicias effected his landing.

εἴκοσι] This number, for which I formerly proposed to substitute λ' or μ', may be tolerated if ἰσθμὸς before it be taken, as it is by Col. Leake, to denote the nearest point of the isthmus plain; meaning the level tract between the two ridges of Oneion, as laid down in the annexed Plan.

3. ἐκ πλείονος] Goeller thinks it doubtful whether this should be construed with προπυθόμενοι, or with ἐβοήθησαν: and Poppo does not venture to pronounce positively on the matter. Yet more agreeable τῶν ἔξω ἰσθμοῦ· καὶ ἐν Ἀμπρακίᾳ καὶ ἐν Λευκαδίᾳ ‡ ἀπῆσαν αὐτῶν πεντακόσιοι φρουροί· οἱ δ' ἄλλοι πανδημεὶ ἐπετήρουν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, οἳ κατασχήσουσιν. 4. ὡς δὲ αὐτοὺς ἔλαθον νυκτὸς καταπλεύσαντες, καὶ τὰ σημεῖα αὐτοῖς ἦρθη, καταλιπόντες τοὺς ἡμίσεις αὐτῶν ἐν Κεγχρειᾷ, ἣν ἄρα οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐπὶ τὸν Κρομμύωνα ἴωσιν, ἐβοήθουν κατὰ τάχος. XLIII. Καὶ Βάττος μὲν ὁ ἕτερος τῶν στρατηγῶν, (δύο γὰρ ἦσαν ἐν τῇ μάχῃ οἱ παρόντες) λαβὼν λόχον, ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τὴν Σολύγειαν κώμην φυλάξων ἀτείχιστον οὖσαν, Λυκόφρων δὲ τοῖς ἄλλοις ξυνέβαλε. 2. καὶ πρῶτον μὲν τῷ δεξιῷ κέρᾳ τῶν Ἀθηναίων εὐθὺς ἀποβεβηκότι πρὸ τῆς Χερσονήσου οἱ Κορίνθιοι ἐπέκειντο, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ τῷ ἄλλῳ στρατεύματι. καὶ ἦν ἡ μάχη καρτερὰ, καὶ ἐν χερσὶ πᾶσα. 3. καὶ τὸ μὲν δεξιὸν κέρας τῶν Ἀθηναίων καὶ Καρυστίων (οὗτοι γὰρ παρατεταγμένοι ἦσαν ἔσχατοι,) ἐδέξαντό τε τοὺς Κορινθίους, καὶ ἐώσαντο μόλις· οἱ δὲ, ὑποχωρήσαντες πρὸς αἰμασιὰν (ἦν γὰρ τὸ χωρίον πρόσαντες πᾶν), βάλλοντες τοῖς λίθοις, καθύπερθεν ὄντες, καὶ παιωνίσαντες ἐπέσαν αὖθις· δεξαμένων δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἐν χερσὶν ἦν πάλιν ἡ μάχη. 4. λόχος δέ τις τῶν Κορινθίων, ἐπιβοηθήσας τῷ εὐωνύμῳ κέρᾳ ἑαυτῶν, ἔτρεψε τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας, καὶ ἐπεδίωξεν ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν· πάλιν δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν ἀνέστρεψαν οἵ τε Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ οἱ Καρύστιοι. 5. τὸ δὲ ἄλλο στρατόπεδον ἀμφοτέρωθεν ἐμάχετο συνεχῶς, μάλιστα δὲ τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας τῶν Κορινθίων, ἐφ' ᾧ ὁ Λυκόφρων ὢν κατὰ τὸ εὐώνυμον τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἠμύνετο· ἤλπιζον γὰρ αὐτοὺς ἐπὶ τὴν Σολύγειαν κώμην πειράσειν. XLIV. Χρόνον μὲν οὖν πολὺν ἀντεῖχον, οὐκ ἐνδιδόντες ἀλλήλοις· ἔπειτα (ἦσαν γὰρ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις οἱ ἱππῆς ὠφέλιμοι ξυμμαχόμενοι, τῶν ἑτέρων οὐκ ἐχόντων ἵππους,) ἐτράποντο οἱ Κορίνθιοι, καὶ ὑπεχώρησαν πρὸς τὸν λόφον, καὶ ἔθεντο τὰ ὅπλα, is it to the manner of our author (who is so remarkably distinguished by his fondness for such transpositions) to take it with προπυθόμενοι; by which there arises a sense sufficiently good (namely, 'of a long time,' as infra viii. 88, εἰδὼς ἐκ πλείονος τὴν Τεσσαφέρνου γνώμην); whereas taken with ἐβοήθησαν, the expression yields a sense by no means so suitable, and indeed inconsistent with the subsequent words, πλὴν τῶν ἔξω ἰσθμοῦ.

ἀπῆσαν] This, the common reading, (for which Bekker and Arnold edit ἀπῆσαν,) I have now thought proper to retain, from its having place in all the MSS. And though Arnold urges that it is not the departure, but the absence of the persons, that our author is speaking of, yet, as Poppo observes, 'that will not supply any conclusive argument against ἀπῆσαν, since the term may be regarded as a vox pragmans standing for ἀπῆλθον ἐς καὶ ἀπῆσαν ἐν.'

4. τὰ σημεῖα] Meaning the signals that had been previously agreed on by the Corinthians to announce the presence of the expected enemy. Compare iv. 111, τὸ σημεῖον τοῦ τυφὸς ἀνέσχον.

Ch. XLIII. 2. πρὸ τῆς Χερσονήσου] 'in front of the Chersonesus,' opposite to it.

3. αἰμασιὰν] 'a stone fence.' So of τοῖς λιθοις, just after, the sense is, 'with the stones which composed it.'

5. ἐπὶ τὴν Σολύγειαν κώμην πειράσειν] 'would try [to reach] Solygia.'

Ch. XLIV. 1. ἔθεντο τὰ ὅπλα] 'piled arms,' took post. See note on ii. 2.

καὶ οὐκέτι κατέβαινον, ἀλλ' ἠσύχαζον. 2. ἐν δὲ τῇ τροπῇ ταύτῃ κατὰ τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας οἱ πλεῖστοί τε αὐτῶν ἀπέθανον, καὶ Λυκόφρων ὁ στρατηγός. 3. ἡ δὲ ἄλλη στρατιὰ τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ, οὐ κατὰ δίωξιν πολλὴν, οὐδὲ ταχείας φυγῆς γενομένης, ἐπεὶ ἐβιάσθη, ἐπαναχωρήσασα πρὸς τὰ μετέωρα ἱδρύθη. 4. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, ὡς οὐκέτι αὐτοῖς ἐπῄεσαν ἐς μάχην, τούς τε νεκροὺς ἐσκύλευον, καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν ἀνῃροῦντο, τροπαῖόν τε εὐθέως ἔστησαν. 5. τοῖς δ' ἡμίσεσι τῶν Κορινθίων, οἳ ἐν τῇ Κεγχρειᾷ ἐκάθηντο φύλακες, μὴ ἐπὶ τὸν Κρομμύωνα πλεύσωσι, τούτοις οὐ κατάδηλος ἡ μάχη ἦν ὑπὸ τοῦ ὄρους τοῦ Ὀνείου· κονιορτὸν δὲ ὡς εἶδον, καὶ ὡς ἔγνωσαν, ἐβοήθουν εὐθύς. ἐβοήθησαν δὲ καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς πόλεως πρεσβύτεροι τῶν Κορινθίων, αἰσθόμενοι τὸ γεγενημένον. 6. ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ξύμπαντας αὐτοὺς ἐπιόντας, καὶ νομίσαντες τῶν ἐγγὺς ἀστυγειτόνων Πελοποννησίων βοήθειαν ἐπιέναι, ἀνεχώρουν κατὰ τάχος ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς, ἔχοντες τὰ σκυλεύματα καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν νεκροὺς, πλὴν δυοῖν οὓς ἐγκατέλιπον, οὐ δυνάμενοι εὑρεῖν. 7. καὶ ἀναβάντες ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς, ἐπεραιώθησαν ἐς τὰς ἐπικειμένας νήσους, ἐκ δ' αὐτῶν ἐπικηρυκευσάμενοι τοὺς νεκροὺς οὓς ἐγκατέλιπον ὑποσπόνδους ἀνείλοντο. ἀπέθανον δὲ Κορινθίων μὲν ἐν

5. μὴ ἐπὶ τὸν Κρομμύωνα πλεύσωσι] For, it appears, they thought the seeming debarkation at the beach between Chersonesus and Rheitus was only a feint to cover a real attack on Krommyon.

ὑπὸ τοῦ ὄρους τοῦ Ὀνείου] 'by reason of Mount Oneion intercepting their view.' From the accompanying Plan it is plain that the mountain throws out (what I long ago supposed it must) a shoulder (or, as the Greeks expressed it, a foot) extending almost to the sea. Col. Leake well remarks, that 'from this narration it appears that Thucydides gives the name of Oneium to the ridge which borders the isthmus on the south-east, stretching from the bath of Helene and Cenchria to the river on the east side of the Acro-Corinthus:' and so indeed do Polybius and Plutarch. It appears, therefore, that all the height bordering upon the isthmus, as well those on the south as on the north side, were called Oneia.

κονιορτὸν] 'dust,' i. e. the dust of battle; since, especially in the hot countries of the East, considerable dust must be raised by battle; reference to which may be traced in the symbolical action κονιορτὸν βάλλειν, occurring in Acts xxii. 23, where see my note.

καὶ ὡς ἔγνωσαν] The full sense is, 'and thus knew [that there was battle going on].'

6. ξύμπαντας αὐτοὺς ἐπιόντας] 'were coming en masse.'

7. τὰς ἐπικειμένας νήσους] 'the islands lying off [the place of disembarkation];' meaning the cluster of islands laid down in our best recent maps six or seven miles off the coast, and called Evreo-nasi, or Jews' islands.

τοὺς νεκροὺς—ἀνείλοντο] 'To fetch off the dead by a herald, was a confession of being beaten; but yet Nicias chooses rather to renounce the reputation of victory, than omit an act of piety. Besides, the people took very ill the neglect of the dead bodies, as may appear by their sentence on the captains after the battle at Arginusæ.' (Hobbes.) 'The effect of this omission to fetch away the dead, marks both the character of the general and the manners of the age. It is difficult to say whether the predominant motive of Nicias in thus sending a herald on shore to recover the two corpses, (and so not hesitating to sacrifice the honours of victory,) was the fear of the gods or of men: for though there was a strong tincture of superstition in his character, he was no less habitually governed by the dread of affording any handle for calumnies which might injure him in public opinion.' (Thirlwall.)

τῇ μάχῃ δώδεκα καὶ διακόσιοι, Ἀθηναίων δὲ ὀλίγῳ ἐλάσσους πεντήκοντα.

XLV. Ἄραντες δὲ ἐκ τῶν νήσων οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἔπλευσαν αὐθημερὸν ἐς Κρομμύωνα τῆς Κορινθίας· ἀπέχει δὲ τῆς πόλεως εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν σταδίους. καὶ καθορμισάμενοι, τήν τε γῆν ἐδῄωσαν, καὶ τὴν νύκτα ηὐλίσαντο. 2. τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ παραπλεύσαντες ἐς τὴν Ἐπιδαυρίαν πρῶτον, καὶ ἀπόβασίν τινα ποιησάμενοι, ἀφίκοντο ἐς Μεθώνην τὴν μεταξὺ Ἐπιδαύρου καὶ Τροιζῆνος, καὶ ἀπολαβόντες τὸν τῆς χερσονήσου ἰσθμὸν, ἐτείχισαν, ἐν ᾧ ἡ Μεθώνη ἐστὶ, καὶ φρούριον καταστησάμενοι, ἐλῄστευον τὸν ἔπειτα χρόνον τήν τε Τροιζηνίαν γῆν, καὶ Ἁλιάδα, καὶ Ἐπιδαυρίαν. ταῖς δὲ ναυσὶν, ἐπειδὴ ἐξετείχισαν τὸ χωρίον, ἀπέπλευσαν ἐπ' οἴκου.

XLVI. Κατὰ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον ὃν ταῦτα ἐγίγνετο, καὶ Εὐρυμέδων καὶ Σοφοκλῆς, ἐπειδὴ ἐκ τῆς Πύλου ἀπῆραν ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν ναυσὶν Ἀθηναίων, ἀφικόμενοι ἐς Κέρκυραν, ἐστράτευσαν μετὰ τῶν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως ἐπὶ τοὺς ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῆς Ἰστώνης Κερκυραίων καθιδρυμένους, οἳ τότε μετὰ τὴν στάσιν διαβάντες ἐκράτουν τε τῆς γῆς καὶ πολλὰ ἔβλαπτον. 2. προσβαλόντες δὲ, τὸ μὲν τείχισμα εἷλον· οἱ δὲ ἄνδρες καταπεφευγότες ἀθρόοι πρός μετέωρόν τι, ξυνέβησαν ὥστε τοὺς μὲν ἐπικούρους παραδοῦναι, περὶ δὲ σφῶν, τὰ ὅπλα παραδόντων, τὸν Ἀθηναίων δῆμον διαγνῶναι. 3. καὶ αὐτοὺς ἐς τὴν νῆσον οἱ στρατηγοὶ τὴν Πτυχίαν ἐς φυλακὴν διεκόμισαν ὑποσπόνδους, μέχρι οὗ Ἀθήναζε πεμφθῶσιν, ὥστε ἄν τις ἁλῷ ἀποδιδράσκων, ἅπασι λελύσθαι τὰς σπονδάς. 4. οἱ δὲ τοῦ δήμου προστάται

Ch. XLV. 1. Κρομμύωνα] The situation of this place has been disputed; but it seems best fixed by Col. Leake about two miles south-west from Kineta.

2. Μεθώνην] Called by Scylax, Pausanias, and Strabo Μέθανα, which, indeed, I should be inclined to think, with Arnold, Thucydides wrote, (and certainly it was in the text of most copies in the time of Strabo,) but that Μεθώνη is the more likely to have proceeded from him, considering that it was the Attic form; whereas geographers and antiquaries (as Strabo, Scylax, and Pausanias) usually prefer the form and spelling used on the spot: and it appears from what Gell and Leake have written, that the place still retains its Doric form; and the latter attests that there are considerable remains of the acropolis and the town-walls.

In the words a little after, I have thought proper to edit χερσονήσου with a small χ, the word being here not a proper name, but merely denoting the peninsula. On the term ἀπολαβόντες, see note on i. 7.

Ἁλιάδα] See note on i. 105, and Col. Leake's Morea, ii. 462.

Ch. XLVI. 1. ὃν] I have followed Poppo and Goeller in cancelling, from several MSS., the καθ' found in the common text before ὃν, especially as the phrase occurs without it at iii. 17 & 18, and elsewhere. To cancel, as Bekker does, both the καθ' and the ὃν, is scarcely permitted by propriety of language: and more probable is it that the ὃν was absorbed by the ον preceding, than that it should have been introduced from the margin.

τότε] Bauer and Arnold well explain the word to mean illo tempore, 'at the time before spoken of,' iii. 85. The words μετὰ τὴν στάσιν are, as Poppo remarks, added by way of explanation.

3. τὴν Πτυχίαν] Probably so called from some fancied resemblance to a leaf of a tree, as in the case of the name Morea, which means a mulberry-leaf.

τῶν Κερκυραίων, δεδιότες μὴ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τοὺς ἐλθόντας οὐκ ἀποκτείνωσι, μηχανῶνται τοιόνδε τι. 5. τῶν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ πείθουσί τινας ὀλίγους, ὑποπέμψαντες φίλους, καὶ διδάξαντες, ὡς κατ' εὔνοιαν δή, λέγειν ὅτι κράτιστον αὐτοῖς εἴη ὡς τάχιστα ἀποδρᾶναι, πλοῖον δέ † τι αὐτοὶ ἑτοιμάσειν· μέλλειν γὰρ δὴ τοὺς στρατηγοὺς τῶν Ἀθηναίων παραδώσειν αὐτοὺς τῷ δήμῳ τῶν Κερκυραίων. XLVII. Ὡς δὲ ἔπεισαν, καὶ μηχανησαμένων τὸ πλοῖον ἐκπλέοντες ἐλήφθησαν, ἐλέλυντό τε αἱ σπονδαὶ καὶ τοῖς Κερκυραίοις παρεδέδοντο οἱ πάντες. 2. ξυνελάβοντο δὲ τοῦ τοιούτου οὐχ ἥκιστα, ὥστε ἀκριβῆ τὴν πρόφασιν γενέσθαι καὶ τοὺς τεχνησαμένους ἀδεέστερον ἐγχειρῆσαι, οἱ στρατηγοὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, κατάδηλοι ὄντες τοὺς ἄνδρας μὴ ἂν βούλεσθαι ὑπ' ἄλλων κομισθέντας, (διότι αὐτοὶ ἐς Σικελίαν ἔπλεον,) τὴν τιμὴν τοῖς ἄγουσι προσποιῆσαι. 3. παρα-

4. μηχανῶνται τοιόνδε τι] In Polyæn. Strat. vi. 2, this base trick to entrap helpless persons is strangely placed among military stratagems.

5. τῶν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ πείθουσί τινας] 'Non diserte expressit, quid persuadere iis conati sint. Sed id latet in sequentibus verbis, ὅτι κράτιστον αὐτοῖς εἴη ὡς τάχιστα ἀποδρᾶναι. Quæ verba quum pendeant ex λέγειν, noluit ea bis dicere, etsi bis intelligenda sunt, certe ἀποδρᾶναι.' (Haack.)

ὑποπέμψαντες] 'privily setting on, or employing.' So Xen. Anab. ii. 4, 11 (ed. Thieme), ὅτι οἱ βάρβαροι τὸν ἄνθρωπον ὑποπέμψαιεν ὀκνοῦντες. Jos. Bell. i. 24, 8, κατασκόπους ὑποπεμψάντων. Dionys. Hal. 683, 35. 686, 6.

ὡς—δὴ] 'as if forsooth.' The common reading, and that of some MSS., δῆθεν, is an evident gloss. Of δή as thus used for δῆθεν, several examples might be adduced.

δέ τι] Considering that τι here is worse than useless, one may suspect it to be a mere error, and conjecture the true reading to be δ' ὅτι, 'but that they would,' &c. In the passage of Polyænus, written with a view to the present, neither τι nor ὅτι is found: but possibly that writer might have ὅτι in his MS., and omit the word as useless; though this it is far from being, since it serves to introduce another and important head of communication.

CH. XLVII. 1. παρεδέδοντο] On this peculiar use of the pluperfect, where one might have expected the imperfect, see Arnold, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 505, iv. The several pluperfects in this whole passage, as Arnold and Poppo observe, have reference to the words at § 3, παραλαβόντες καθεῖρξαν.

2. ξυνελάβοντο δὲ—προσποιῆσαι] Of this difficult passage the sense, though disputed, appears to be, 'Towards the bringing about of such a catastrophe, and the affording some tolerable pretext for it, and that the contrivers should fearlessly take it in hand, it tended not a little that the Athenian generals were manifestly not willing that the men, being conveyed to Athens by any other [than themselves], should confer honour on the bringers.' The difficulty here centres in the words ὥστε ἀκριβῆ τὴν πρόφασιν γενέσθαι, of which the full sense is, 'that the pretext for this atrocity should be such as would, if tried by the strict letter of the covenant, be justifiable:' and so Dobree renders, 'ut summum jus exigeretur,' or, 'ut conditiones severæ statuerentur.' If, however, that should be thought to involve too much harshness, I would propose that πρόφασιν should be taken in the sense subterfuge; which, indeed, it very well may, considering that the notions of pretence, pretext, feint, subterfuge, and trick, are so closely connected as to run one into another. Thus, moreover, the term ἀκριβῆ will not need to be tortured in order to yield a tolerable sense, but may be explained to mean what exactly tallies, and therefore gains belief. Here, then, the fact of the unwillingness of the commanders that the men should be brought as prisoners by others, tallied so exactly with the πρόφασις or pretended allegation, as to make it credible.

βούλεσθαι] On this use of infinitive for participle, (resorted to for the purpose of preventing the too great accumulation of participles,) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 549, note 2, and note supra ch. 38.

λαβόντες δὲ αὐτοὺς οἱ Κερκυραῖοι ἐς οἴκημα μέγα καθεῖρξαν· καὶ ὕστερον ἐξάγοντες κατὰ εἴκοσιν ἄνδρας, διῆγον διὰ δυοῖν στοίχοιν ὁπλιτῶν ἑκατέρωθεν παρατεταγμένων, δεδεμένους τε πρὸς ἀλλήλους καὶ παιομένους καὶ κεντουμένους ὑπὸ τῶν παρατεταγμένων, εἴ πού τίς τινα ἴδοι ἐχθρὸν ἑαυτοῦ· μαστιγοφόροι τε παριόντες ἐπετάχυνον τῆς ὁδοῦ τοὺς σχολαίτερον προσιόντας. XLVIII. Καὶ ἐς μὲν ἄνδρας ἑξήκοντα ἔλαθον τοὺς ἐν τῷ οἰκήματι τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ ἐξαγαγόντες καὶ διαφθείραντες· (ᾤοντο γὰρ αὐτοὺς ‡ μεταστήσοντάς που ἄλλοσε ἄγειν) ὡς δὲ ᾔσθοντο, καί τις αὐτοῖς ἐδήλωσε, τούς τε Ἀθηναίους ἐπεκαλοῦντο, καὶ ἐκέλευον σφᾶς, εἰ βούλονται, αὐτοὺς διαφθείρειν, ἔκ τε τοῦ οἰκήματος οὐκέτι ἤθελον ἐξιέναι, οὐδ' ἐσιέναι ἔφασαν, κατὰ δύναμιν, περιόψεσθαι οὐδένα. 2. οἱ δὲ Κερκυραῖοι κατὰ μὲν τὰς θύρας οὐδ' αὐτοὶ διενοοῦντο βιάζεσθαι, ἀναβάντες δὲ ἐπὶ τὸ τέγος τοῦ οἰκήματος, καὶ διελόντες τὴν ὀροφήν, ἔβαλλον τῷ κεράμῳ, καὶ ἐτόξευον κάτω. 3. οἱ δὲ ἐφυλάσσοντό τε ὡς ἠδύναντο, καὶ ἅμα οἱ πολλοὶ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς διέφθειρον, οἵστούς τε οὓς ἀφίεσαν ἐκεῖνοι ἐς τὰς σφαγὰς καθιέντες, καὶ ἐκ κλινῶν τινῶν, αἳ ἔτυχον αὐτοῖς ἐνοῦσαι, τοῖς σπάρτοις, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἱματίων παραιρήματα ποιοῦντες, ἀπαγχόμενοι, παντὶ τρόπῳ τὸ πολὺ τῆς νυκτὸς, (ἐπε-

3. οἴκημα μέγα] Meaning some spacious building, probably a public edifice. See note on ii. 4, and Acts Ap. xxii. 7.

μαστιγοφόροι] 'whip-bearers,' as in Xen. Cyr. viii. 3, 9, and Rep. Laced. ii. 2. Dio Cass. 1032, 71. Answering to these were the ῥαβδοῦχοι of the Greeks, the lictores of the Romans, and our beadles. From Hesych. in v. Κερκυραία μάστιξ, it appears that the Corcyræan whip was one of a large form like what we call a cat o'-nine-tails. Of ἐπετάχυνον τῆς ὁδοῦ the sense is, 'hastened them on their way,' literally, 'as to their way;' on which use of the genitive see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 338. Προσιόντας stands for πρόσω ἰόντας, 'going onward.'

CH. XLVIII. 1. μεταστήσοντας] So I have finally thought proper to edit, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, for vulg. μεταστήσαντας, found in all the MSS., which, though retained by Bekker, is, from the great harshness it involves, quite indefensible. In so minute a variation MSS. have very little authority.

2. διελόντες τὴν ὀροφὴν] 'having made an orifice through the roofing,' through which they might throw their missiles. So Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 9, ἀναβάντες ἐπὶ τὴν νεὼν, καὶ τὴν ὀροφὴν διελόντες. Polyæn. v. 3, τὰς ὀροφὰς τῶν οἰκημάτων διελεῖν. With which compare a passage of St. Mark, ii. 4, ἀπεστέγασαν τὴν στέγην—ἐξορύξαντες. Hence, I would observe, may be emended a passage of Herodot. v. 33, 12, διὰ θαλαμίης διελόντας τῆς νεὸς, where Wessel. causelessly, for διελόντας, conjectures διελῶντας.

3. ἐς τὰς σφαγὰς καθιέντες] 'having thrust down into their throats:' a somewhat extraordinary sense of σφαγὴ, of which, however, examples occur in the best writers both in poetry and prose.

καὶ ἐκ κλινῶν τινῶν — ἀπαγχόμενοι] Render, 'and hanging themselves with the ropes of some couches which happened to be there, and with bands made of shreds or strips from their clothes.' By τοῖς σπάρτοις is denoted the roping of the bedsteads, on which the beds were laid. And the full sense contained in ἐκ τῶν ἱματίων παραιρήματα ποιοῦντες is, 'making ropes by tearing shreds from their garments;' meaning that they tore their garments into strips, and platted them together: where παραιρήματα is well explained by the gloss of Hesych. παραράμματα. With respect to the construction of this sentence, it is well treated on by Poppo as follows: 'Variata est oratio; nam hic dativus instrumenti insequenti participio ποιοῦντες respondet, quum hic sit ordo verborum:

γένετο γὰρ νὺξ τῷ παθήματι,) ἀναλοῦντες σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, καὶ βαλλόμενοι ὑπὸ τῶν ἄνω, διεφθάρησαν. 4. καὶ αὐτοὺς οἱ Κερκυραῖοι, ἐπειδὴ ἡμέρα ἐγένετο, φορμηδὸν ἐπὶ ἁμάξας ἐπιβαλόντες, ἀπήγαγον ἔξω τῆς πόλεως· τὰς δὲ γυναῖκας, ὅσαι ἐν τῷ τειχίσματι ἐάλωσαν, ἠνδραποδίσαντο. 5. τοιούτῳ μὲν τρόπῳ οἱ ἐκ τοῦ ὄρους Κερκυραῖοι ὑπὸ τοῦ δήμου διεφθάρησαν, καὶ ἡ στάσις, πολλὴ γενομένη, ἐτελεύτησεν ἐς τοῦτο, ὅσα γε κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον τόνδε· οὐ γὰρ ἔτι ἦν ὑπόλοιπον τῶν ἑτέρων ὅ τι καὶ ἀξιόλογον. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν, ἵναπερ τὸ πρῶτον ὥρμηντο, ἀποπλεύσαντες μετὰ τῶν ἐκεῖ ξυμμάχων ἐπολέμουν.

XLIX. Καὶ οἱ ἐν τῇ Ναυπάκτῳ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ Ἀκαρνᾶνες, ἅμα τελευτῶντος τοῦ θέρους στρατευσάμενοι, Ἀνακτόριον Κορινθίων πόλιν, ἣ κεῖται ἐπὶ τῷ στόματι τοῦ Ἀμπρακικοῦ κόλπου, ἔλαβον προδοσίᾳ· καὶ ἐκπέμψαντες Κορινθίους, αὐτοὶ Ἀκαρνᾶνες οἰκήτορες ἀπὸ πάντων ἔσχον τὸ χωρίον. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

L. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος Ἀριστείδης ὁ Ἀρχίππου, εἷς τῶν ἀργυρολόγων νεῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγὸς, αἳ ἐξεπέμφθησαν πρὸς τοὺς ξυμμάχους, Ἀρταφέρνην ἄνδρα Πέρσην, παρὰ βασιλέως πορευόμενον ἐς Λακεδαίμονα, ξυλλαμβάνει ἐν Ἠιόνι τῇ ἐπὶ Στρυμόνι. 2. καὶ αὐτοῦ κομισθέντος, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὰς μὲν ἐπιστολὰς μεταγραψάμενοι ἐκ τῶν Ἀσσυρίων γραμμάτων, ἀνέγνωσαν, ἐν αἷς, πολ-ὄϊστούς τε — καθιέντες, καὶ ἀπαγχόμενοι ἐκ κλινῶν τινῶν τοῖς σπάρτοις καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἱματίων παραιρήματα ποιοῦντες, i. e. et se suspendentes partim e lectis ope funium (horum lectorum) partim eo, quod ex vestibus παραιρήματα faciebant.'

ἀναλοῦντες] This, for vulg. ἀναδοῦντες, (which, notwithstanding what Arnold alleges in its favour, is quite indefensible,) is sufficiently borne out by the authority of the ancient lexicographers, Suidas, Zonaras, and Phavorinus, as also of Valla, who must have so read. It may be supposed that the scribes fell into the error, from the unfrequency of ἀναλοῦντες in this sense; of which, indeed, the only examples I have noted are, Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 5. ii. 1, 2. Soph. Incert. Tr. frag. 85, 1. Eurip. Alc. 456, and El. 681. Rhes. 58. Dio Cass. 277, 34, (which last passage was probably written with a view to the present,) πάντας αὐτοὺς ἀνάλωσαν. That the scribes should have stumbled on so elegant a term, is little likely.

4. φορμηδὸν] 'one upon another.' So Aristid. iii. 520, φορμηδὸν ἐπ' ἀμαξῶν ἐκφέρειν, ὥσπερ τοὺς Κερκυραίων νεκρούς. Compare also Dionys. Hal. Ant. ix. 67, ἐπὶ ἁμάξαις σωρηδὸν οἱ θνήσκοντες ἀπεκομίζοντο: as also a passage of Herodian, iv. 6, 2, which serves to fix the sense of φορμηδόν.

Ch. XLIX. αὐτοὶ — ἔσχον] themselves occupied it.' The intermediate words, οἰκήτορες ἀπὸ πάντων, serve to show how,—namely, by colonists sent from their various tribes.

Ch. L. 1. τῶν ἀργυρολόγων νεῶν] Meaning the ships sent for the collection of the annual tribute from the islanders and other allies of Athens. See notes on iii. 19. ii. 69. viii. 3; and compare Xen. Hist. i. 1, 12. iv. 8, 3, and Aristoph. Eq. 1034.

2. ἐκ τῶν Ἀσσυρίων γραμμάτων] By this it is surely not allowable, with Abresch, Gottl., and Haack, to understand, 'the Assyrian language;' for the ruling nation of the empire, namely, the Persian, would certainly require that all writings on public business should be in Persian: and no proof does there exist, that, in the earlier writers at least, Assyrian was ever used for Persian; and that the Persians spoke the Assyrian language (as Haack supposes) is, as Heeren has shown, conλῶν ἄλλων γεγραμμένων, κεφάλαιον ἦν πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους, οὐ γιγνώσκειν ὅ τι βούλονται· πολλῶν γὰρ ἐλθόντων πρέσβεων, οὐδένα ταὐτὰ λέγειν· εἰ οὖν βούλονται σαφὲς λέγειν, πέμψαι μετὰ τοῦ Πέρσου ἄνδρας ὡς αὐτόν. 3. τὸν δὲ Ἀρταφέρνην ὕστερον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀποστέλλουσι τριήρει ἐς Ἔφεσον, καὶ πρέσβεις ἅμα· οἳ πυθόμενοι αὐτόθι βασιλέα Ἀρταξέρξην τὸν Ξέρξου νεωστὶ τεθνηκότα (κατὰ γὰρ τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ἐτελεύτησεν), ἐπ' οἴκου ἀνεχώρησαν.

LI. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος καὶ Χῖοι τὸ τεῖχος περιεῖλον τὸ καινὸν, κελευσάντων Ἀθηναίων, καὶ ὑποπτευσάντων ἐς αὐτούς τι νεωτεριεῖν, ποιησάμενοι μέντοι πρὸς Ἀθηναίους πίστεις καὶ βεβαιότητα ἐκ τῶν δυνατῶν, μηδὲν περὶ σφᾶς νεώτερον βουλεύσειν. καὶ ὁ χειμὼν ἐτελεύτα καὶ ἕβδομον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα τῷδε ὃν Θουκυδίδης ξυνέγραψεν.

LII. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους εὐθὺς, τοῦ τε ἡλίου ἐκλιπές τι ἐγένετο περὶ νουμηνίαν, καὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ μηνὸς ἰσταμένου ἔσεισε. 2. καὶ οἱ Μυτιληναίων φυγάδες καὶ τῶν ἄλλων Λεσβίων, ὁρμώμενοι οἱ πολλοὶ ἐκ τῆς ἠπείρου, καὶ μισθωσάμενοι ἔκ τε Πελοποννήσου ἐπικουρικὸν καὶ αὐτόθεν ξυναγείραντες, αἱροῦσι Ῥοίτειον· καὶ λαβόντες δισχιλίους στατῆρας Φωκαΐτας ἀπέδοσαν πάλιν, οὐδὲν ἀδικήσαντες. 3. καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο ἐπὶ Ἄντανδρον στρατεύσαντες, προδοσίας γενομένης, λαμβάνουσι τὴν πόλιν. καὶ ἦν αὐτῶν ἡ διάνοια τάς τε ἄλλας πόλεις τὰς Ἀκταίας καλουμένας, ἃς πρότερον trary to fact. The best mode of encountering the difficulty is to suppose, with Duk., Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, that by γραμμάτων are meant to be denoted characters, letters. It has been fully proved by Heeren, that the Persians, having no written character of their own, borrowed that of the Assyrians, of a wedge-like shape; just as the Gauls, in ancient times, and the Russians, in modern, used the Greek characters, as the Britons and some other northern nations did the Roman. And that the Persians did use the Assyrian letters, at least in public inscriptions, Heeren proves from a passage of Herodot. iv. 87, where the same expression, γράμματα Ἀσσύρια, occurs.

Ch. LI. 1. Here by αὐτοὺς must, as appears from the context, be meant the Athenians; though I am inclined, with Bekker, in his second edition, to read αὐτούς.

ποιησάμενοι πρὸς Ἀθηναίους πίστεις καὶ βεβαιότητα] The words are rightly rendered by Schoemann, Krueger, Poppo, and Goeller, 'pacti cum Atheniensibus, ne de conditione suâ quidquam novaretur:' and Arnold regards this as a condensed form for πράξαντες πρὸς Ἀθ. πίστεις σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἐποιήσαντο. It is well remarked by Schoemann, 'Πίστιν ποιεῖσθαι etiam is dicitur qui efficit ut sibi fides detur: πρὸς autem significatione latissimâ usurpatur ubi aliquid alteri cum altero intercedere dicitur.'

Ch. LII. 1. τοῦ ἡλίου ἐκλιπές τι ἐγένετο] An unusual form of expression; though it is also found in Dio Cass. 793, 30, and Arrian, E. A. iii. 7, 9. Ἔσεισε, 'there was an earthquake:' an impersonal form of expression, on which see Elmsl. on Eurip. Heracl. 830, (who compares the terms ὕει, νίφει, &c.) and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 295.

2. ὁρμώμενοι — ἐκ τῆς ἠπείρου] 'proceeding from that as their ὁρμητήριον or sally-post.' On the στατὴρ Φωκαΐτης, see Boeckh's Pub. Œcon. of Athens, i. p. 34.

3. τὰς Ἀκταίας καλουμένας] Meaning the town occupying that part of the sea-coast of the continent which was opposite

Μυτιληναίων νεμομένων, Ἀθηναῖοι εἶχον, ἐλευθεροῦν, καὶ πάντων μάλιστα τὴν Ἄντανδρον· καὶ κρατυνάμενοι αὐτὴν, (ναῦς τε γὰρ εὐπορία ἦν ποιεῖσθαι αὐτόθεν, ξύλων ὑπαρχόντων καὶ τῆς Ἴδης ἐπικειμένης, καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ παρασκευῇ.) ῥᾳδίως, ἀπ' αὐτῆς ὁρμώμενοι, τήν τε Λέσβον, ἐγγὺς οὖσαν, κακώσειν, καὶ τὰ ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ Αἰολικὰ πολίσματα χειρώσασθαι. 4. καὶ οἱ μὲν ταῦτα παρασκευάζεσθαι ἔμελλον.

LIII. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει ἑξήκοντα ναυσὶ, καὶ δισχιλίοις ὁπλίταις, ἱππεῦσί τε ὀλίγοις, καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων Μιλησίους καὶ ἄλλους τινὰς ἀγαγόντες, ἐστράτευσαν ἐπὶ Κύθηρα· ἐστρατήγει δὲ αὐτῶν Νικίας ὁ Νικηράτου, καὶ Νικόστρατος ὁ Διοτρέφους, καὶ Αὐτοκλῆς ὁ Τολμαίου. 2. τὰ δὲ Κύθηρα νῆσός ἐστιν, ἐπίκειται δὲ τῇ Λακωνικῇ κατὰ Μαλέαν· Λακεδαιμόνιοι δ' εἰσὶ τῶν Περιοίκων, καὶ Κυθηροδίκης ἀρχὴ ἐκ τῆς Σπάρτης διέβαινεν αὐτόσε κατὰ ἔτος· to Lesbos. See Plehn's Lesbiac. p. 45. Πάντων is commonly regarded as supplying an example of the use of masc. for fem. πασῶν. But it is better to consider it as an adverbial phrase meaning above all; which, indeed, our phrase above all confessedly is. Accordingly Johnson assigns to it a place in his dictionary, and explains it to mean chiefly. But what is of more consequence, and applies especially to the case in point, is that both our phrase above all, and the Greek πάντων μάλιστα, are properly elliptical and parenthetical clausulæ standing for ὃ μάλιστα πάντων ἐστί. Accordingly the πάντων has no connexion with any other noun in the preceding context, and therefore needs not to be accommodated to it in gender. In κρατυνάμενοι there is, as Bauer and Arnold show, what is called a constructio πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον.

The parenthesis which follows is by Poppo rightly made to terminate, not at ἐπικειμένης, but at παρασκευῇ.

τῇ ἄλλῃ παρασκευῇ] Here we have a dativus commodi, εὐπορία having, as Goeller says, to be repeated. Accordingly, wholly without reason was it that Poppo, in his Observationes Criticæ, proposed, for τῇ ἄλλῃ παρασκευῇ, to read τὴν ἄλλην παρασκευήν: a conjecture which, in his subsequent edition, he has very properly abandoned, and coming to the decision that no alteration is to be made, regards this as another example, added to not a few occurring in our author, of the oratio variata. With respect to the reading of almost every MS., σκευῇ, for which the commonly received reading is παρασκευῇ, this I would not, with the recent editors, reject on the ground of its being quite unsuitable in sense. Such, indeed, it would be, if it could be made out that the sense intended were apparatus belli, which is certainly one by no means to be elicited from the term σκευῇ. But, considering that ship-building forms the subject of the context, here surely the sense intended to be expressed might very well be, ships' tackling and equipment, (including military equipment in general,) which is one that the term σκευὴ is fully suited to convey. See supra i. 10. vi. 94. vii. 24. viii. 27.

Ch. LIII. 2. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δ' εἰσὶ τῶν Περιοίκων] 'they are Lacedæmonians of the class called the Periœci.' See the Appendix.

Κυθηροδίκης ἀρχὴ] Meaning a governor to administer rule in the island, and also (as is intimated by the -δικης) to decide in matters which concerned the relations subsisting between Lacedæmon and Cythera, as a member of the Περίοικοι. Parallel to this is the Ἑλλανοδίκαι, mentioned by Xenophon as the title of the judges who decided on matters which concerned the relations of Sparta with her allies. Of the use, by no means common, of the singular ἀρχὴ in this sense, examples occur elsewhere at v. 27, and in Theogn. 1941. Liban. Or. 369.

The administration of these annual governors was probably, as in other cases, oppressive; and this sort of half-citizenship enjoyed by the Cytherians, as members of the Periœci, became proverbial to denote any thing mean. So in a passage of Synes. p. 301, we have, νησιώτης οἰκήσω—μέτοικος ἀτιμότερος ἀστοῦ Κυθηρίου.

ὁπλιτῶν τε φρουρὰν διέπεμπον ἀεὶ, καὶ πολλὴν ἐπιμέλειαν ἐποιοῦντο. ἦν γὰρ αὐτοῖς τῶν τε ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου καὶ Λιβύης ὁλκάδων προσβολὴ· καὶ λῃσταὶ ἅμα τὴν Λακωνικὴν ἧσσον ἐλύπουν ἐκ θαλάσσης, ᾗπερ μόνον οἷόν τ' ἦν κακουργεῖσθαι· πᾶσα γὰρ ἀνέχει πρὸς τὸ Σικελικὸν καὶ Κρητικὸν πέλαγος. LIV. Κατασχόντες οὖν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τῷ στρατῷ, δέκα μὲν ναυσὶ καὶ δισχιλίοις Μιλησίων ὁπλίταις τὴν ἐπὶ θαλάσσῃ πόλιν, Σκάνδειαν καλουμένην, αἱροῦσι, τῷ δὲ ἄλλῳ στρατεύματι ἀποβάντες τῆς νήσου ἐς τὰ πρὸς Μαλέαν τετραμμένα ἐχώρουν ἐπὶ τὴν ἐπὶ θαλάσσῃ πόλιν τῶν Κυθηρίων, καὶ εὗρον εὐθὺς αὐτοὺς ἐστρατοπεδευμένους ἅπαντας. 2. καὶ μάχης γενομένης, ὀλίγον μέν τινα χρόνον ὑπέστησαν οἱ Κυθήριοι, ἔπειτα τραπόμενοι, κατέφυγον ἐς τὴν ἄνω πόλιν, καὶ ὕστερον ξυνέβησαν πρὸς Νικίαν καὶ τοὺς ξυνάρχοντας Ἀθηναίοις ἐπιτρέψαι περὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν, πλὴν θανάτου. 3. ἦσαν δέ τινες καὶ γενόμενοι τῷ Νικίᾳ λόγοι πρότερον πρός τινας τῶν Κυθηρίων· διὸ καὶ θᾶσσον καὶ ἐπιτηδειότερον, τό τε παραυτίκα καὶ τὸ ἔπειτα τὰ τῆς ὁμολογίας ἐπράχθη αὐτοῖς· ἀνέστησαν γὰρ ἂν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι Κυθηρίους, Λακεδαιμονίους τε ὄντας, καὶ ἐπὶ τῇ Λακωνικῇ τῆς νήσου οὕτως ἐπικειμένης. 4. μετὰ δὲ τὴν ξύμἐπιμέλειαν ἐποιοῦντο] Here ἐπιμέλεια bears the sense custodia, as in Xen. Hist. i. 2, 7, and Œcon. vii. 5.

ὁλκάδων προσβολὴ] 'the point of approach for ships' (otherwise called προσόρμισις); as in iv. 1. Hence it is called in Xen. Hist. iv. 8, 7, the Phœnician port, as being that where the Phœnicians touched in their trading voyages to Western Greece, the Adriatic, Italy, and Spain.

πᾶσα] This may be referred either to Λακωνικὴν, just before, or to νῆσος, further back, at the beginning of the section. But the former mode is preferable; and thus more suitable is the sense yielded by the πᾶσα; for the coast-line of Laconia almost wholly runs out into the Sicilian and Cretan seas, and thus renders it obnoxious to attack on the sea-ward: whereas Cythera covers it at its most exposed point.

Ch. LIV. 1. τὴν ἐπὶ θαλάσσῃ πόλιν] 'the city on the sea-side:' so called with allusion to the city on the high ground above it, which bore the name of the highland Κύθηρα. Accordingly just after we have τὴν ἄνω πόλιν, meaning Cythera. In short, by τὴν ἐπὶ θαλάσσῃ πόλιν τῶν Κυθηρίων is here denoted 'the lower city of Cythera,' just as ἡ πόλις τῶν Ἀθηναίων elsewhere is equivalent to αἱ Ἀθῆναι.

2. ἐπιτρέψαι περὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν, πλὴν θανάτου] A brief form of expression to denote surrendering at discretion, with the sole condition of their lives being spared.

3. The τὰ before τῆς ὁμολογίας, absent from almost all the best MSS., Arn. thinks has here possibly no place; and on this supposition says the sense will thus be, 'the present and subsequent arrangement of the capitulation.' But, in effect, all was arranged at once. And it may be supposed that the sense here intended, though too briefly expressed by our author, is, that 'both the present capitulation was more speedily arranged, and the subsequent carrying it into execution was more favourably brought about:' to both of which circumstances reference is had in the τὰ (which word might easily, as Duk. supposes, be lost after the τα of the preceding word ἔπειτα); and of τό τε παραυτίκα καὶ τὸ ἔπειτα the sense is, 'both for the present and for hereafter.' With τὰ τῆς ὁμολογίας here, compare τὰ τῆς τύχης iv. 55, and τὰ τῆς ναυμαχίας viii. 43.

ἀνέστησαν γὰρ ἂν] I have followed all the recent editors in admitting the ἂν, (notwithstanding that no one MS. seems to have it,) from its being absolutely essential to the sense; since from ch. 57 it appears that the inhabitants were not removed from the island: and the meaning intended can be no other than this, 'otherwise (for the ἂν implies here, as βασιν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τήν τε Σκάνδειαν, τὸ ἐπὶ τῷ λιμένι πόλισμα, παραλαβόντες, καὶ τῶν Κυθήρων φυλακὴν ποιησάμενοι, ἔπλευσαν ἔς τε Ἀσίνην, καὶ Ἕλος, καὶ τὰ πλεῖστα τῶν περὶ θάλασσαν, καὶ ἀποβάσεις ποιούμενοι, καὶ ἐναυλιζόμενοι τῶν χωρίων οὗ καιρὸς εἴη, ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν ἡμέρας μάλιστα ἑπτά.

LV. Οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἰδόντες μὲν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τὰ Κύθηρα ἔχοντας, προσδεχόμενοι δὲ καὶ ἐς τὴν γῆν σφῶν ἀποβάσεις τοιαύτας ποιήσεσθαι, ἀθρόᾳ μὲν οὐδαμοῦ τῇ δυνάμει ἀντετάξαντο, κατὰ δὲ τὴν χώραν φρουρὰς διέπεμψαν, ὁπλιτῶν πλῆθος, ὡς ἑκασταχύσε ἔδει, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ἐν φυλακῇ πολλῇ ἦσαν, φοβούμενοι μὴ σφίσι νεώτερόν τι γένηται τῶν περὶ τὴν κατάστασιν, γεγενημένου μὲν τοῦ ἐπὶ τῇ νήσῳ πάθους ἀνελπίστου καὶ μεγάλου, Πύλου δὲ ἐχομένης καὶ Κυθήρων, καὶ πανταχόθεν σφᾶς περιεστῶτος πολέμου ταχέος καὶ ἀπροφυλάκτου· ὥστε, παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς, ἱππέας τετρακοσίους κατεστήσαντο καὶ τοξότας, ἔς τε τὰ πολεμικά, εἴπερ ποτὲ, μάλιστα δὴ ὀκνηρότεροι ἐγένοντο, ξυνεστῶτες παρὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν σφῶν ἰδέαν τῆς παρασκευῆς ναυτικῷ ἀγῶνι, καὶ τούτῳ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους, οἷς τὸ μὴ ἐπιχειρούμενον ἀεὶ ἐλλιπὲς ἦν τῆς δοκήσεώς τι πράξειν. 2. καὶ ἅμα τὰ τῆς τύχης, πολλὰ καὶ ἐν ὀλίγῳ ξυμβάντα παρὰ λόγον αὐτοῖς, ἔκπληξιν μεγίστην παρεῖχε, καὶ ἐδεδίεσαν μήποτε αὖθις ξυμφορά τις αὐτοῖς περιτύχῃ οἵα καὶ ἐν τῇ νήσῳ. 3. ἀτολμότεροι δὲ δι' αὐτὸ ἐς τὰς μάχας ἦσαν, καὶ πᾶν ὅ τι κινήσειαν ᾤοντο ἁμαρτήσεσθαι, διὰ τὸ τὴν γνώμην ἀνεχέγγυον γεγενῆσθαι, ἐκ τῆς πρὶν ἀηθείας τοῦ κακοπραγεῖν. LVI. Τοῖς δ' Ἀθηναίοις τότε τὴν παραθαλάσσιον δῃοῦσι τὰ μὲν πολλὰ ἡσύχασαν ὡς καθ' ἑκάστην φρουρὰν γίγνοιτό τις ἀπόβασις, πλήθει τε ἐλάσσους ἕκαστοι ἡγούμενοι εἶναι, καὶ ἐν τῷ τοιούτῳ· μία δὲ φρουρὰ, ἥπερ καὶ ἡμύνατο περὶ Κοτύρταν καὶ Ἀφροδισίαν, τὸν μὲν ὄχλον τῶν ψιλῶν ἐσκεδασμένον ἐφόβησεν ἐπιδρομῇ, τῶν τε ὁπλιτῶν δεξαμένων, ὑπεχώρησε πάλιν· καὶ ἄνδρες τέ τινες ἀπέθανον αὐτῶν ὀλίγοι, καὶ ὅπλα ἐλήφθη, τροπαίων τε στήσαντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀπέπλευσαν ἐς Κύθηρα. 2. ἐκ δὲ αὐτῶν περιέπλευσαν often, an ellipsis of ἄλλως) had not things taken the favourable turn they did, (owing to the speedy and the friendly mediation of Nicias,) the Athenians would have expelled the Cytherians, for the reason immediately subjoined.' Strange, however, may it seem that a word so necessary to the sense should be wanting in all the MSS.: and hence I cannot but suspect that the ἂν is not introduced here at the right place. Supposing it to have been originally introduced by the writer after ἀνέστησαν, easily may we account for its omission, on the same principle as the τὰ, a little before.

In ἀνέστησαν we have a customary term to express the expulsion of persons from one place, sometimes implying their removal to another. See note on ii. 18.

4. παραλαβόντες] 'having taken possession of,' viz., as Poppo explains, at the hands of the Milesians, who had captured it. Of τῶν Κυθήρων φυλακὴν ποιησάμενοι, the sense is, 'having put a garrison in the city of Cythera.' Οὗ καιρὸς εἴη, 'where it might be convenient.'

CH. LV. 1. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι—ἀθρόᾳ μὲν οὐδαμοῦ τῇ δυνάμει ἀντετάξαντο] The late unexpected events caused a panic at Lacedæmon; the government was dismayed at the suddenness of the late reverse in her fortunes, and bewildered by the new and dangerous position in which it stood. 'It saw itself (as observes Bp. Thirlwall) in a contest for which its institutions were not adapted, with an enemy whose enterprising spirit baffled all the calculations of ordinary prudence. It began to distrust its own fortunes; and while feeling the necessity of resisting the invaders, it feared to risk any considerable part of its forces by a general engagement, and therefore remained strictly on the defensive.' It must also be borne in mind that they might well feel a fear of domestic insurrection; for a constitution like theirs, so imperfectly extended to many (the περίοικοι), and only the instrument of oppression to more (the Helots), might excite reasonable apprehensions as to its stability in times of innovation like the present.

φρουρὰς διέπεμψαν] 'despatched corps de garde to various parts of the country.' The term διαπέμπω seems here to include the two senses of dimittere (found in Virg. Æn. i. 580.) and disponere, to distribute, (as Livy, xxxix. 14, 'disponere vigilias per urbem,') or to station, as in Cæs. B. Gall. vii. 34, 'milites in præsidiis disponere.' In the present instance, then, the corps were doubtless distributed and stationed at commanding positions, strong posts, either by art or by nature.

μὴ σφίσι νεώτερόν τι γέν. τῶν περὶ τὴν κατάστασιν] 'lest there should be a change of the constitution,' or present state of things; namely, by a mutiny of the Periœci, which would probably produce a revolt of the Helots. In περιεστῶτος πολέμου ταχέος καὶ ἀπροφυλάκτου we have an expression of almost poetic boldness, and pregnant in meaning. Similar to περιεστῶτος πολέμου here is φόβος περιέστη τὴν Σπάρτην at iii. 54. Of ταχέος the meaning is, 'rapid in its fortunes, and quickly producing events unlooked for.' And ἀπροφυλάκτου signifies 'not to be guarded against or provided for.' Of the use of the term with πόλεμος, I know of no other example than the following in Dio Cass. 89, 21 (a passage evidently written with a view to the present): ὥστε καὶ μέγαν καὶ συνεχῆ καὶ ἀπροφύλακτον τὸν πόλεμον αὐτῶν γενέσθαι.

παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς] The Lacedæmonians had hitherto used only heavy-armed foot, or peltastæ: as for horse and light-armed, they had none of their own, but merely employed such as were furnished by their allies. See Wachsm. Antiq. vol. ii. 1, p. 400.

εἴπερ ποτὲ, μάλιστα δὴ ὀκνηρότεροι ἐγένοντο] We have here a blending of two modes of expression, 'they were more indisposed to war than they had ever been,' and, 'they were then, if ever, indisposed thereto,' equivalent to 'they were most indisposed thereto.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 417, ε. In ξυνεστῶτες—ναυτικῷ ἀγῶνι, 'being engaged in a naval combat,' we have a sense of ξυνίστ. by no means common.

οἷς τὸ μὴ ἐπιχειρούμενον—πράξειν] 'to whom what was not undertaken by them, seemed ever to fall short of what they expected to achieve.' On these words the best commentary is that supplied by the similar ones supra i. 70: ἃ μὲν ἂν ἐπινοήσαντες μὴ ἐξέλθωσιν, οἰκεῖα στέρεσθαι ἡγοῦνται· ἃ δ' ἂν ἐπελθόντες κτήσωνται, ὀλίγα πρὸς τὰ μέλλοντα τυχεῖν πράξαντες. Arnold aptly compares iv. 63, τὸ ἐλλιπὲς τῆς γνώμης ὧν ἕκαστός τις ᾐτιᾶτο ἡμῶν πράξειν.

2. τὰ τῆς τύχης] 'fortunæ casus.' So τὰ τῆς ὀργῆς at ii. 60, 1, where see note.

3. καὶ πᾶν ὅ τι, &c.] Render, 'and whatever they might set on foot, they thought they should fail in; their minds having become devoid of confidence, from their former unacquaintance with reverses.' Ἀνεχέγγυον stands for μὴ ἀξιόπιστον, signifying literally, 'not to be relied on for want of surety.' So in Dio Cass. 292, 39, we have, πίστιν σωτηρίας ἐχέγγυον, and in Eurip. Andr. 191, ἐχεγγύῳ λόγῳ πεισθεῖσα. See note on iii. 46.

CH. LVI. 1. τοῖς δ' Ἀθηναίοις, &c.] Ordo verborum hic est: τοῖς δ' Ἀθηναίοις τότε τὴν παραθαλάσσιον δῃοῦσιν ὡς καθ' ἑκάστην φρουρὰν γίγνοιτό τις ἀπόβασις τὰ μὲν πολλὰ ἡσύχασαν, πλήθει τε ἐλάσσους ἕκαστοι ἡγούμενοι εἶναι καὶ ἐν τῷ τοιούτῳ. Structura similis illi, quæ est iii. 15, καὶ [Λακεδαιμόνιοι] τὴν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβολὴν τοῖς τε ξυμμάχοις παροῦσι κατὰ τάχος ἔφραζον εἶναι ἐς τὸν ἰσθμὸν τοῖς δύο μέρεσιν ὡς ποιησόμενοι, καὶ αὐτοὶ πρῶτοι ἀφίκοντο. (Poppo.) Of ἐν τῷ τοιούτῳ the sense is, 'in the state of affairs, or state of disposition;' as at iii. 81.

ἐς Ἐπίδαυρον τὴν Λιμηρὰν, καὶ δῃώσαντες μέρος τι τῆς γῆς, ἀφικνοῦνται ἐπὶ Θυρέαν, ἥ ἐστι μὲν τῆς Κυνουρίας γῆς καλουμένης, μεθορία δὲ τῆς Ἀργείας καὶ Λακωνικῆς. νεμόμενοι δὲ αὐτὴν ἔδοσαν Λακεδαιμόνιοι Αἰγινήταις ἐκπεσοῦσιν ἐνοικεῖν, διά τε τὰς ὑπὸ τὸν σεισμὸν σφίσι γενομένας καὶ τῶν Εἱλώτων τὴν ἐπανάστασιν εὐεργεσίας, καὶ ὅτι, Ἀθηναίων ὑπακούοντες, ὅμως πρὸς τὴν ἐκείνων γνώμην ἀεὶ ἔστασαν. LVII. Προσπλεόντων οὖν ἔτι τῶν Ἀθηναίων, οἱ Αἰγινῆται τὸ μὲν ἐπὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ, ὃ ἔτυχον οἰκοδομοῦντες, τεῖχος

2. ἐς Ἐπίδαυρον τὴν Λιμηράν] So called to distinguish it from the other city of the same name in Argolis; whereas this was on the eastern coast of Laconia. Its situation is by Gell, Cramer, and Col. Leake, fixed to a place about four miles north from Monembasia, called Palea Monembasia, situated on a height a little above the sea-coast, of which the walls, both of the city and the acropolis, are traceable, and in some places remain to more than half their original height, and divided into separate parts by a wall. Why it was called ἡ λιμηρὰ, is far from certain. The Scholiast and Apollod. ap. Strabo suppose the appellation to stand, per syncopen, for λιμενηρά. And although Poppo maintains that λιμενηρὸς is not Greek, yet the word may have nevertheless existed; and that Epidaurus had two harbours, situated at a lower town a mile distant on each side of the peninsula, appears from Col. Leake's accurate description, Morea, i. 310: and this view is supported by the authority of Apollodor. ap. Strabo, Steph. Byz., Hesychius, and Suidas. No sufficient reason, indeed, can be imagined why λιμενηρὸς should not have existed as well as λιμενηρὴς, which is noticed in the Etym. Mag. in Λιμήρη, a word adduced by that lexicographer from Pindar as standing, per syncopen, for λιμνήρη; from which circumstance it plainly appears that Poppo is wrong in saying 'talis syncope inaudita est.' As to the supposition of the Schol. on vii. 26, that allusion is thereby had to the dryness and poverty of its soil, (similarly as we speak of a hungry soil,) it involves a great improbability; nor indeed am I aware that the soil in that part is inferior in fertility to that of the Epidaurus in Argolis. This supposition, too, is not a little discountenanced by the circumstance subjoined, that the Athenians ἐδῄωσαν μέρος τι τῆς γῆς.

Κυνουρίας] For this Bekker, from five MSS., edits Κυνοσουρίας, which reading is also found at v. 14 & 41: while Goeller and Poppo very properly retain the old reading, which is confirmed by Steph. Byz. and by a passage of Herodot. viii. 73, where the inhabitants of this country are called Κυνούριοι, and are said to have been αὐτόχθονες. The inhabitants had, doubtless, been long settled there; and obtained their name, probably, from some fabulous stories of their difference of formation, originating in ignorance and the little communication with other places. Thus Africa and other distant countries were peopled with Cynocephali, and even more portentous beings. The country of Cynuria is truly said by Col. Leake, Morea, ii. 493, to have been one of great military importance, as lying between Argolis and Laconia, and as commanding the passes which separated them.

νεμόμενοι] The term here signifies simply 'to possess, to have in possession.' See i. 2. ii. 15, 27, 72. iii. 68, 88, and notes there. Of πρὸς τὴν ἐκείνων γνώμην ἀεὶ ἔστασαν the sense is literally, 'they had ever stood to their mind or will,' i. e. thought with them, been on their side: where the complete expression would have been, 'their minds were ever set on that of the Athenians.' Ἵστ. here denotes the setting of the mind, the fixing of the affections, and has nothing to do with that force of ἵστημι by which it means 'to stand on one's side.' Compare Soph. Ant. 299, τόδ' ἐκδιδάσκει—φρένας χρηστὰς πρὸς αἰσχρὰ πράγματ' ἵστασθαι βροτῶν, where Musgrave aptly adduces the present passage, and another infra vi. 34, τῶν δὲ ἀνθρώπων πρὸς τὰ λεγόμενα αἱ γνῶμαι ἵστανται. And so we say, 'to set one's mind on any thing.'

Ch. LVII. 1. τὸ μὲν ἐπὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ, ὃ ἔτυχον οἰκοδομοῦντες] Here τεῖχος denotes, not wall, (as it is commonly rendered,) but rather some sort of fortification serving to defend the lower town and the shipping, which was probably erected on the peninsula of St. John. Col. Leake (Morea, vol. ii. 484, sq.) is of the same opinion; observing that the peninsula, now called Astro, (probably from an ancient fort, of which there are yet some remains,) was the situation of this τεῖχος or maritime fortress.

σταδίους μάλιστα δέκα τῆς θαλάσσης] Supposing the distance to have been what Col. Leake makes it, thrice what is here stated, namely, near the monastery of Lakia, some error here exists,—though that may rest not with our author, but with the scribes. And for ι' we may conjecture the true reading to be λ'.

Ch. LVIII. 1. ἐκεχειρία] 'a cessation from hostilities, an armistice.' By Σικελιῶται are meant, 'the Greek colonists in Sicily:' so called by way of distinction from the Σίκελοι, or original inhabitants, then confined to the inland parts of the country. Parallel to this was the distinction in like manner made between the Itali and the Italiotæ. Πρεσβεῖς, a little after, is put by way of exegetical apposition with Σικελιῶται.

2. καὶ ἀξιούντων ὡς] 'Quum postularent (postulata facerent) prout,' i. e. quum ea postularent quibus. (Poppo.) Render, 'demanding satisfaction as each thought himself aggrieved.' Ἔπεισεν αὐτοὺς, 'swayed them,' 'had influence with them.'

Ch. LIX. Now follows one of the most masterly and consummate of all the orations in Thucydides. In the proem (which displays no little art and address) it is the purpose of the speaker to give weight to what he is about to say, by intimating the dignity of him who is addressing them, (or rather that of the state of ἐκλείπουσιν, ἐς δὲ τὴν ἄνω πόλιν, ἐν ᾗ ᾤκουν, ἀπεχώρησαν, ἀπέχουσαν σταδίους μάλιστα δέκα τῆς θαλάσσης. 2. καὶ αὐτοῖς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων φρουρὰ μία τῶν περὶ τὴν χώραν, ἥπερ καὶ ξυνετείχιζε, ξυνεσελθεῖν μὲν ἐς τὸ τεῖχος οὐκ ἠθέλησαν, δεομένων τῶν Αἰγινητῶν, ἀλλ' αὐτοῖς κίνδυνος ἐφαίνετο ἐς τὸ τεῖχος κατακληῆσθαι. ἀναχωρήσαντες δὲ ἐπὶ τὰ μετέωρα, ὡς οὐκ ἐνόμιζον ἀξιόμαχοι εἶναι, ἡσύχαζον. 3. ἐν τούτῳ δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι κατασχόντες, καὶ χωρήσαντες εὐθὺς πάσῃ τῇ στρατιᾷ, αἱροῦσι τὴν Θυρέαν· καὶ τήν τε πόλιν κατέκαυσαν καὶ τὰ ἐνόντα ἐξεπόρθησαν, τούς τε Αἰγινήτας, ὅσοι μὴ ἐν χερσὶ διεφθάρησαν, ἄγοντες ἀφίκοντο ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, καὶ τὸν ἄρχοντα, ὃς παρ' αὐτοῖς ἦν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, Τάνταλον τὸν Πατροκλέους· ἐζωγρήθη γὰρ τετρωμένος. 4. ἦγον δέ τινας καὶ ἐκ τῶν Κυθήρων ἄνδρας ὀλίγους, οὓς ἐδόκει ἀσφαλείας ἕνεκα μεταστῆσαι. καὶ τούτους μὲν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐβουλεύσαντο καταθέσθαι ἐς τὰς νήσους, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους Κυθηρίους, οἰκοῦντας τὴν ἑαυτῶν, φόρον τέσσαρα τάλαντα φέρειν, Αἰγινήτας δὲ ἀποκτεῖναι πάντας ὅσοι ἑάλωσαν, διὰ τὴν προτέραν ἀεί ποτε ἔχθραν, Τάνταλον δὲ παρὰ τοὺς ἄλλους τοὺς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ Λακεδαιμονίους καταδῆσαι.

LVIII. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους ἐν Σικελίᾳ Καμαριναίοις καὶ Γελῴοις ἐκεχειρία γίγνεται πρῶτον πρὸς ἀλλήλους· εἶτα καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι Σικελιῶται ξυνελθόντες ἐς Γέλαν ἀπὸ πασῶν τῶν πόλεων πρέσβεις, ἐς λύγους κατέστησαν ἀλλήλοις, εἴ πως ξυναλλαγεῖεν. 2. καὶ ἄλλαι τε πολλαὶ γνῶμαι ἐλέγοντο ἐπ' ἀμφότερα, διαφερομένων, καὶ ἀξιούντων, ὡς ἕκαστοί τι ἐλασσοῦσθαι ἐνόμιζον· καὶ Ἑρμοκράτης ὁ Ἕρμωνος Συρακόσιος, ὅσπερ καὶ ἔπεισε μάλιστα αὐτούς, ἐς τὸ κοινὸν τοιούτους δὴ λόγους εἶπεν.

LIX. "Οὔτε πόλεως ὢν ἐλαχίστης, ὦ Σικελιῶται, τοὺς λόγους ποιήσομαι, οὔτε πονουμένης μάλιστα τῷ πολέμῳ, ἐς κοινὸν δὲ τὴν δοκοῦσάν μοι βελτίστην γνώμην εἶναι ἀποφαινόμενος τῇ Σικελίᾳ πάσῃ. 2. καὶ περὶ μὲν τοῦ πολεμεῖν ὡς χαλεπόν, τί ἄν τις πᾶν τὸ ἐνὸν ἐκλέγων ἐν εἰδόσι μακρηγοροίη; οὐδεὶς γὰρ οὔτε ἀμαθίᾳ ἀναγκάζεται αὐτὸ δρᾶν, οὔτε φόβῳ, ἢν οἴηταί τι πλέον σχήσειν, ἀποτρέπεται· ξυμβαίνει δὲ τοῖς μὲν τὰ κέρδη μείζω φαίνεσθαι τῶν δεινῶν, οἱ δὲ τοὺς κινδύνους ἐθέλουσιν ὑφίστασθαι πρὸ τοῦ αὐτίκα τι ἐλασσοῦσθαι. 3. αὐτὰ δὲ ταῦτα εἰ μὴ καιρῷ τύχοιεν ἑκάτεροι πράσwhich he is the representative; for such may be the force of ὤν with a genitive,) as also to excuse the liberty of speech which he may assume.

1. οὔτε πόλεως ὢν—ποιήσομαι] No little force exists in the litotes here, with which compare a similar one in the words of the apostle St. Paul to the Roman Chiliarch, Acts xxi. 39 (forming a sort of proem to the subsequent speech addressed to the people): Ἐγὼ—Ταρσεὺς, τῆς Κιλικίας οὐκ ἀσήμου πόλεως πολίτης. Compare also Herodot. vii. 101, σὺ εἷς Ἕλλην τε, καὶ—πόλιος οὔτ' ἐλαχίστης, οὔτ' ἀσθενεστάτης. In subjoining the words following, οὔτε πονουμένης μάλιστα τῷ πολέμῳ, the speaker means to anticipate the reflection to which those are obnoxious who urge pacific measures, namely, that 'they do so from weakness and distress,' and so to pre-occupy the objection, that 'it is for this reason he is desirous of peace, because his country is now worsted in war.' It is well observed by the Scholiast, Διὰ δύο αἰτίας εἰώθαμεν ἀπιστεῖν τοῖς συμβουλεύουσιν, ἢ διὰ τὸ εἶναι ἄδοξον τὸ πρόσωπον, ἢ διὰ τὸ οἰκείων ἕνεκα χρειῶν λέγων· ἅπερ ἀμφότερα μαρτυρεῖ ἑαυτῷ ὁ Ἑρμοκράτης μὴ ὑπάρχειν.

The expression ἐς κοινὸν (answering to the Latin in commune, and signifying 'for the common good,') is also meant to anticipate the objection, that the counsel he is about to offer may be what is for the advantage of Syracuse in particular. This he denies, affirming it to be what is best in common for all Sicily. While most of those who had addressed the assembly merely advocated the pretensions, and considered the interests of the cities which they represented, Hermocrates professes to be guided by no view of the particular interest of Syracuse in the matter he has to propound, in thus drawing the attention of the assembly to the common interest as involved in the danger of the Siceliot states in general.

After these preliminaries, the speaker then proceeds to address himself to the subject in view; in doing which the Scholiast remarks, that 'his arguments are distributed into three heads, the just, the expedient, and the possible.' I see not, however, that the first is at all touched on; nor was it necessary; for no one questioned the justice of those who were of a common race making common cause against a common enemy, by compounding their mutual differences. It would rather seem that the speaker closes with his subject at once, not by enlarging on the ordinary advantages of peace or the evils of war, on which the question before them did not turn,—but simply adverts to the acknowledged fact, of the inexpediency of war at that time in order to deliver Sicily from a greater evil and danger impending over it,—that of common subjugation to a foreign power. To strengthen his admonition, Hermocrates adverts to the plain fact that the war in which they had been engaged had been entered upon by each for certain advantages; and that now, in order the better to attain that object, mutual negociation has been resorted to, and pacification thought of.

2. πᾶν τὸ ἐνὸν ἐκλέγων] 'omne quod insit [mali] bello afferens vel colligens,' resorting to every argument in proof. With the words following, τί ἄν τις—μακρηγοροίη, compare those of another passage supra i. 68, τί δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν; Ἐν εἰδόσι, 'among those who know [all that can be said].' See note on vi. 77, 1. Ἀναγκάζεται signifies, by a use of the word frequent in the classical writers, and also found in the scriptural ones, (see my Lex. N. Test. in voc.) 'is impelled,' 'is moved by strong inducements.' Of οἱ μέν, as followed by οἱ δέ, the sense is, 'the one party—the other party.'

πρὸ τοῦ αὐτίκα τι ἐλασσοῦσθαι] 'in preference to suffering any immediate wrong,' as i. 77. v. 30, and elsewhere.

3. αὐτὰ δὲ ταῦτα—ὠφέλιμοι] 'But if these very things [to seek gain, or prevent loss] either party should chance to be doing unseasonably,—the counsels for σοντες, αἱ παραινέσεις τῶν ξυναλλαγῶν ὠφέλιμοι. 4. ὃ καὶ ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ παρόντι πειθομένοις πλείστου ἂν ἄξιον γένοιτο· τὰ γὰρ ἴδια ἕκαστοι εὖ βουλευόμενοι δὴ θέσθαι τό τε πρῶτον ἐπολεμήσαμεν, καὶ νῦν πρὸς ἀλλήλους δι' ἀντιλογιῶν πειρώμεθα καταλλαγῆναι, καὶ ἢν ἄρα μὴ προχωρήσῃ ἴσον ἑκάστῳ ἔχοντι ἀπελθεῖν, πάλιν πολεμήσομεν. LX. Καίτοι γνῶναι χρὴ ὅτι οὐ περὶ τῶν ἰδίων μόνον, εἰ σωφρονοῦμεν, ἡ ξύνοδος ἔσται, ἀλλ' εἰ ἐπιβουλευομένην τὴν πᾶσαν Σικελίαν, ὡς ἐγὼ κρίνω, ὑπ' Ἀθηναίων δυνησόμεθα ἔτι διασῶσαι· καὶ διαλλακτὰς πολὺ τῶν ἐμῶν λόγων ἀναγκαιοτέρους περὶ τῶνδε Ἀθηναίους νομίσαι, οἳ, δύναμιν ἔχοντες μεγίστην τῶν Ἑλλήνων, τάς τε ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν τηροῦσιν, ὀλίγαις ναυσὶ παρόντες, καὶ ὀνόματι ἐννόμῳ ξυμμαχίας τὸ φύσει πολέμιον εὐπρεπῶς ἐς τὸ ξυμφέρον accommodation of differences are useful.' I have finally decided on cancelling, with Bekker and Goeller, the ἐν which, according to the common reading, has place before καιρῷ, because it is not found in any good MS., and may very well be supposed to have crept in from the margin, where it would be likely to be supplied, since of the use of καιρῷ for ἐν καιρῷ examples are rare: though here καιρῷ seems put for ἐπὶ καιρῷ, which complete phrase occurs in a passage of Philostr. Epist. 59; for so should we there read, for ἐπὶ καιροῦ.

4. The speaker now applies these general truths to this one particular case; q. d. 'A truth which it may be highly for our advantage to be persuaded of on the present occasion:' the proof of which is then subjoined in the words following—'For, consulting well, forsooth, each for our private interest, we first went to war, and for that purpose we are now endeavouring by mutual discussion with one another to effect a pacification.' With the phrase τὰ ἴδια εὖ θέσθαι, (on which I have already treated supra i. 25.) compare Polyæn. p. 516, Ἑλλήνων τὰ οἰκεῖα εὖ θεμένων, and a passage of Plut. de Sanit. tuend. 14, τὰ περὶ αὐτὸν ἐν τοῖς πλησίον εὖ τίθεσθαι.

καὶ ἢν ἄρα—ἀπελθεῖν] 'And unless indeed it should turn out to each of us that he should come off with what is just and right.' Προχωρέω may here have what is its usual sense, 'to turn out well,' thus: 'and unless it should turn out [well if it does] for each of you,' &c.

CH. LX. 1. The speaker now most adroitly introduces the public interest of all Sicily, q. d. 'We shall all at every seasonable period each pursue his own private interest. And yet this is no time to think of them; for it behoves us to know that we are not met to consult our private interests, but whether we can save our country at large.' Such is the general sense here intended: though, from the interposition of εἰ σωφρονοῦμεν, there is occasioned a slight change in the mode of expressing the assertion; the import of which is, in other words, 'And yet it behoves us to know that this congress is intended to be, and will, if we are wise and prudent, be employed not for our interests alone, but,' &c.

In εἰ δυνησόμεθα the εἰ imports 'whether,' or 'whether or not;' a sense which it is observed to bear after verbs of considering, (see Poppo on Xen. Cyr. viii. 4, 16.) and even where there is an ellipsis thereof; on which ellipsis of πειρᾶσθαι, or, what is in the present case to be understood, σκοπεῖν, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 525, and my note on ii. 12. In διασῶσαι we have a more forcible term than σῶσαι, of which the sense is, 'to bring through danger of any kind into a state of safety and security.' Compare 1 Pet. iii. 20, διεσώθησαν δι' ὕδατος, and 1 Cor. iii. 15, σωθήσεται, οὕτω δὲ ὡς [σωθεὶς] διὰ πυρός.

καὶ διαλλακτὰς—νομίσαι] 'and [it behoves us] to think the Athenians far more compulsory pacificators in these matters than my words.' In ἀναγκαιοτέρους we have the same idiom as in the case of the verb ἀναγκάζεται, ch. 59; the sense being, persuasive, prevailing. Of the words, a little after, καὶ ὀνόματι ἐννόμῳ—καθίστανται, the sense, obscurely expressed, seems to be, 'and who, under the honest name of "alliance," speciously accommodate, to their own advantage, what is naturally hostile;' meaning the feeling καθίστανται. 2. πόλεμον γὰρ αἰρομένων ἡμῶν καὶ ἐπαγομένων αὐτούς,—ἄνδρας οἳ καὶ ‡ τοὺς μὴ ἐπικαλουμένους αὐτοὶ ἐπιστρατεύουσι,—κακῶς τε ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ποιούντων τέλεσι τοῖς οἰκείοις, καὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς ἅμα προκοπτόντων ἐκείνοις, εἰκός, ὅταν γνῶσιν ἡμᾶς τετρυχωμένους, καὶ πλέονί ποτε στόλῳ ἐλθόντας αὐτούς, τάδε πάντα πειράσασθαι ὑπὸ σφᾶς ποιεῖσθαι. LXI. Καίτοι τῇ ἑαυτῶν ἑκάστους, εἰ σωφρονοῦμεν, χρὴ τὰ μὴ προσήκοντα ἐπικτωμένους μᾶλλον, ἢ τὰ of hostility which they naturally entertain towards the Sicilian Greeks, as their rivals in commerce, arts, &c.; and indeed as all of them, except the Leontines and Catanæans, the allies of their enemies the Lacedæmonians. Of καθίστασθαι the sense is, 'to regulate,' and also 'to adjust, accommodate,' &c. Τὸ πολέμιον, by a frequent idiom, stands for a noun. The full meaning intended is, that 'they so regulated and managed their natural hostility to the Sicilians,—covering what they did under the specious name of alliance,—as to make it seem amity.' The phrase ἐς τὸ ξυμφέρον adverts to the motive of this, namely, self-interest.

2. The γὰρ here has reference, not to what goes immediately before, but to something further back, as to the danger the country was in from the ambitious projects of the Athenians: and the sense here intended is, '[Danger there is;] for on our undertaking war, and calling them into aid,—persons who are ready enough of themselves to bring in their forces uncalled for,'—&c. The phrase πόλεμον αἴρεσθαι (formed on the phrase αἴρεσθαι ὅπλα) has already occurred supra i. 80, and iii. 39, and is found in the best writers. I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing, for vulg. τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις, τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους, which, besides being confirmed by the authority of the best MSS., is, as Poppo shows, quite permitted by the usus loquendi, though offering a rarer syntax, but, on that very account, more likely to be genuine. Here (notwithstanding what is urged by Arnold) I cannot think that hostility is denoted. The expression may be supposed to mean, as Poppo explains it, 'to carry an expedition to any place or person:' and so it may be understood in a passage of Agath. p. 43, 31, (doubtless written with a view to the present,) τί γὰρ ἠβούλοντο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, τοὺς ἐπὶ θύραις πολεμίους ἀφέντες, οὐδὲ (I conj. ὧδε) ὡς ποῤῥωτάτω ἐπιστρατεύειν καὶ λυμαίνεσθαι τῇ Σικελίᾳ;

On the use here of αὐτὸς, to signify sponte, see note on iii. 65, and Herm. Opusc. i. 313. In the words following, κακῶς τε ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ποιούντων τέλεσι τοῖς οἰκείοις, 'doing harm to ourselves at our own expense,' there is conveyed a bitter reflection on the folly of the war party.

τῆς ἀρχῆς ἅμα προκοπτόντων ἐκείνοις] 'paving the way for their dominion [over us],' 'promoting its increase.' In προκ. there is a metaphor taken from cutting one's way, or making a road, through woods or rough ground. See my note on Matth. iii. 3. With respect to the genitive here, it may depend, as Haack and Poppo suppose, on μέρος understood: but preferable is the view of Goeller, who thinks that the genitive is here put from the term προκόπτειν being equivalent to the phrase προκοπὴν ποιεῖν, which would take the genitive. And so indeed the Scholiast explains by προοδοποιούντων, ἤγουν προκοπὴν καὶ ἐπίδοσιν ποιούντων ἡμῶν τῆς ἀρχῆς ἐκείνων.

τάδε πάντα] Meaning, by the use of neuter for masculine, all the various Siceliot states.

CH. LXI. Now comes the argument founded on the τὸ ξυμφέρον, in which the speaker first shows that peace is the common interest of all parties in every city, even of those who, as being of Ionian origin, may think they have nothing to fear, but much to hope, from the Athenians: a notion which is then set aside by an appeal to facts, as founded on the grasping conduct of Athens, by which it is evident that she makes no distinctions of race among those whose possessions she covets, but is incited by ambition and desire of rule to subjugate all without distinction. Such is the general sense contained in the first six sections of this chapter.

1. καίτοι τῇ ἑαυτῶν—προσλαμβάνειν] Render, 'And yet, if we be wise, it behoves us to call allies to our aid, and face additional dangers in war, rather when endeavouring to acquire what does not at present belong to us, than when injuring what is already our own.' This view of the sense is at once called for by the con-ἑτοῖμα βλάπτοντας ξυμμάχους τε ἐπάγεσθαι καὶ τοὺς κινδύνους προσλαμβάνειν· νομίσαι τε στάσιν μάλιστα φθείρειν τὰς πόλεις καὶ τὴν Σικελίαν, ἧς γε οἱ ἔνοικοι ξύμπαντες μὲν ἐπιβουλευόμεθα, κατὰ πόλεις δὲ διέσταμεν. 2. ἃ χρὴ γνόντας καὶ ἰδιώτην ἰδιώτῃ καταλλαγῆναι καὶ πόλιν πόλει, καὶ πειρᾶσθαι κοινῇ σώζειν τὴν πᾶσαν Σικελίαν· παρεστάναι δὲ μηδενὶ ὡς οἱ μὲν Δωριῆς ἡμῶν πολέμιοι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, τὸ δὲ Χαλκιδικὸν τῇ Ἰάδι ξυγγενείᾳ ἀσφαλές· οὐ γὰρ τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ὅτι δίχα πέφυκε, τοῦ ἑτέρου ἔχθει ἐπίασιν, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ ἀγαθῶν ἐφιέμενοι, ἃ κοινῇ κεκτήμεθα. 3. ἐδήλωσαν δὲ νῦν ἐν τῇ τοῦ Χαλκιδικοῦ γένους παρακλήσει· τοῖς γὰρ οὐδεπώποτε σφίσι κατὰ τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν προσβοηθήσασιν αὐτοὶ τὸ δίκαιον μᾶλλον τῆς ξυνθήκης προθύμως παρέσχοντο. 4. καὶ τοὺς μὲν Ἀθηναίους ταῦτα πλεονεκτεῖν τε καὶ προνοεῖσθαι πολλὴ ξυγ-text, and supported by the exposition of the Scholiast. With the expression τὰ ἑτοῖμα, (which is, as Duk. observes, opposed to τὰ μὴ προσήκοντα, aliena,) compare i. 70, τὰ ἑτοῖμα βλάψαι. It is well pointed out by Poppo, that the participles ἐπικτωμένους and βλάπτοντας connect, not with ἑκάστους, but with ξυμμάχους. Of the phrase τοὺς κινδύνους προσλαμβάνειν the sense is, 'to take to ourselves (suscipere) dangers.'

With the weighty truth conveyed in the words following, νομίσαι τε, viz. that 'faction most of all ruins the cities singly, and Sicily collectively,' might be compared several parallel ones in the historians and orators.

ἧς γε οἱ ἔνοικοι — διέσταμεν] These words are meant to bring more home the charge of faction on the Siceliots, and to set in a strong point of view its pernicious effects; the sense being, 'inasmuch as (quippe) we its inhabitants are, on the one hand, plotted against collectively, while, on the other, we are at dissension with each other, city set against city.' Διέσταμεν stands for κατὰ διαστάσεις ἐσμέν.

2. On this confessed truth the speaker adduces the prudent counsel, that 'fully aware of this evil, they should endeavour to be reconciled to each other, both individuals (such as the leaders of political factions) and states, and endeavour conjointly to save Sicily.'

παρεστάναι] Repeat χρὴ, 'nor should it occur to any one, nor should any one imagine:' a sense of παρ. occurring also at iv. 95, and vi. 34, and occasionally found in other Attic writers besides our author.

τῇ Ἰάδι ξυγγενείᾳ ἀσφαλὲς] 'is secure by its Ionian affinity.' In the words following, οὐ γὰρ—κεκτήμεθα, I have thought proper to follow the punctuation adopted by Goeller and Poppo, of whom the latter very properly explains the sense to be, 'Non enim propterea quod Sicilia in duas gentes (propr. gentibus eam habitantibus in duas partes) divisa est, alterius odio aggrediuntur.' And so Arnold renders, 'It is not a national quarrel on account of a distinction of races, which makes them invade us, because one of our races is their natural enemy.' Τοῦ ἑτέρου ἔχθει, 'by hatred of the one [of those two],' the Dorian. On the expression δίχα πέφυκε see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 309, C.

3 αὐτοὶ τὸ δίκαιον — παρέσχοντο] Render, 'they willingly afforded what was right [by covenant], even beyond what the covenant required:' so meaning, as Dobree explains, 'Athenienses Chalcidensibus omnia ea præstitisse, quæ postulare propter animum quo socius affectus esset, potius quam per verba fœderis potuissent.' Here αὐτοὶ, as a little before, bears the sense volentes, ultro. Μᾶλλον τῆς ξυνθήκης stands, as Poppo explains it, for μᾶλλον ἢ ἐστιν ἡ ξυνθήκη, equivalent to μᾶλλον ἢ κατὰ τὴν ξυνθήκην. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 454. By τὴν ξυνθήκην is meant, as Poppo points out, the ancient alliance spoken of at iii. 86.

4. προνοεῖσθαι] sibi providere ac prospicere, 'to forecast for oneself as to these things.' Of this construction (somewhat rare) examples occur in Xen. Mem. iv. 3, 12, τὰ συμφέροντα προνοεῖσθαι, and Diod. Sic. t. v. 114, 4, πρ. τὴν προδοσίαν: also in a passage of St. Paul, Epist. Rom. xii. 17, πρ. καλά. In all which cases the sense is literally, 'to be provident for oneγνώμη· καὶ οὐ τοῖς ἄρχειν βουλομένοις μέμφομαι, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ὑπακούειν ἑτοιμοτέροις οὖσι. πέφυκε γὰρ τὸ ἀνθρώπειον διὰ παντὸς ἄρχειν μὲν τοῦ εἴκοντος, φυλάσσεσθαι δὲ τὸ ἐπιόν. 5. ὅσοι δὲ, γιγνώσκοντες αὐτὰ, μὴ ὀρθῶς προσκοποῦμεν, μηδὲ τοῦτό τις πρεσβύτατον ἥκει κρίνας, τὸ κοινῶς φοβερὸν ἅπαντας εὖ θέσθαι, ἁμαρτάνομεν. 6. τάχιστα δ' ἂν ἀπαλλαγὴ αὐτοῦ γένοιτο, εἰ πρὸς ἀλλήλους ξυμβαίημεν· οὐ γὰρ ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῶν ὁρμῶνται Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῆς τῶν ἐπικαλεσαμένων. 7. καὶ οὕτως οὐ πόλεμος πολέμῳ, εἰρήνῃ δὲ διαφοραὶ ἀπραγμόνως παύονται· οἵ τ' ἐπίκλητοι, εὐπρεπῶς ἄδικοι ἐλθόντες, εὐλόγως ἄπρακτοι ἀπίασι. LXII. Καὶ τὸ μὲν πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τοσοῦτον ἀγαθὸν εὖ βουλευομένοις εὑρίσκεται· τὴν δὲ ὑπὸ πάντων ὁμολογουμένην ἄριστον εἶναι εἰρήνην πῶς οὐ χρὴ καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ποιήσασθαι; 2. ἢ δοκεῖτε, εἴ τῳ τι ἔστιν ἀγαθὸν, self as to any thing,' and, by implication, to study, cultivate, or practise it. Πλεονεκτεῖν is added by way of explanation, to show that the consideration of self-interest in this matter was carried even to grasping.

In the words following, τοῖς ὑπακούειν ἑτοιμοτέροις οὖσι, the comparative is to be resolved into μᾶλλον and the positive, (as iii. 63, where ἀξιώτεροι stands for μᾶλλον ἄξιοι,) the expression here being for ἑτοίμοις ὑπακούειν μᾶλλον, scil. ἢ ἀντιστῆναι. Of φυλάσσεσθαι τὸ ἐπιὸν the sense is, 'to be wary as to an assailant,' 'to beware of meddling with an assailing power.'

5. ὅσοι δὲ — ἁμαρτάνομεν] There is here, as Goeller observes, a commixture of two constructions. Of πρεσβύτατον κρίνας—εὖ θέσθαι the sense is, 'regarding this as a most important object, for all to well regulate what is the common object of fear to all [namely, subjugation].' The phrase πρεσβύτατον κρῖναι answers to the Latin antiquius habere; and in both we recognise a use originating in the several ideas of antiquity, honour, esteem, and importance being so closely connected as to mutually merge one into another.

6. After showing that the speediest mode of being rid of the fear in question is to come to terms of mutual accommodation, the speaker then proceeds to subjoin the reason,—which, expressed in plain and explicit terms, is, that the Athenians would have no point d'appui from which to attack them: though for this, which would have been the direct and obvious mode of expression, we have what is the same thing intimated indirectly by reference to the fact, that the Athenians do not make the attack proceeding from their own country, but from that of those who have called them.

7. καὶ οὕτως—ἀπίασι] These words are meant to further set forth the beneficial effect of pacification; though the sense contained therein is somewhat obscured by the unusual mode of expression adopted. Render, 'And thus war will not be terminated by war, but differences will without trouble cease by pacification:' where there is reference to the state of things which subsists when pacification is not resorted to. Here, then, it is declared that war cannot only be terminated by war, namely, by such contest as shall utterly destroy or humble one of the belligerent parties: whereas differences will of themselves cease in peace; q. d. 'War engenders war, and peace peace, by extinguishing differences.' In the next words we have a most pointed sentence, serving to set in a strong light the happy result of this pacification. Render, 'And thus those who have been called in, after having come hither with fair pretences but unjust views, will with fair reason be dismissed without having effected their object:' where it is well observed by Poppo, 'Sæpe apud Thucyd. paria paribus referri, et contrariis contraria opponuntur.'

Ch. LXII. Here the speaker urges his object on the sole ground of the danger to be apprehended from the Athenians, alleging the extreme uncertainty which ever attends hostilities, insomuch that no state could feel sure that it would not lose rather than gain by the continuance of the war, of which the sacrifices and hazards were certain, and the prospective advantages were illusive.

1. πῶς οὐ χρὴ καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς

ἢ εἴ τῳ τὰ ἐναντία, οὐχ ἡσυχία μᾶλλον ἢ πόλεμος τὸ μὲν παύσαι ἂν ἑκατέρῳ, τὸ δὲ ξυνδιασώσαι, καὶ τὰς τιμὰς καὶ λαμπρότητας ἀκινδυνοτέρας ἔχειν τὴν εἰρήνην, ἄλλα τε ὅσα ἐν μήκει λόγων ἄν τις διέλθοι, ὥσπερ περὶ τοῦ πολεμεῖν; ἃ χρὴ σκεψαμένους μὴ τοὺς ἐμοὺς λόγους ὑπεριδεῖν, τὴν δὲ αὐτοῦ τινα σωτηρίαν μᾶλλον ἀπ' αὐτῶν προϊδεῖν. 3. καὶ εἴ τις βεβαίως τι ἢ τῷ δικαίῳ ἢ βίᾳ πράξειν οἴεται, τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδα μὴ χαλεπῶς σφαλλέσθω, γνοὺς ὅτι πλείους ἤδη καὶ τιμωρίαις μετιόντες τοὺς ἀδικοῦντας, καὶ ἐλπίσαντες ἕτεροι δυνάμει τινὶ πλεονεκτήσειν, οἱ μὲν οὐχ ὅσον οὐκ ἠμύναντο, ἀλλ' ποιήσασθαι;] Meaning, in other words, 'if all confess it to be the best thing in the case of others, why should they not prefer it in their own?' With the sentiment here expressed as to the preciousness of peace, may be compared (besides other similar ones occurring in the best writers) the following in a passage of Menand. as cited in Stob. Serm. p. 366, Εἰρήνη γεωργὸν κἂν πέτραις τρέφει καλῶς, πόλεμος δὲ κἂν πεδίῳ κακῶς. See also a passage of Philemon cited in Stob. Serm. p. 367.

2. ἢ δοκεῖτε — πολεμεῖν] Of this long and involved sentence the meaning may be thus expressed: 'Or think ye that if any be in prosperity, or the reverse, that quiet rather than warfare will not better remove the evil and secure the good; and think ye not that peace keeps honours and splendours freer from danger; besides having many other advantages such as any one might employ as many words in dilating on, as on those of war.' Very properly, for the infin. παῦσαι—ξυνδιασῶσαι, have Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller restored the optat. παύσαι—ξυνδιασώσαι: such being, I apprehend, required by the hypothetical cast of the words, q. d. 'would it not be so?' though a certain obscurity pervades the whole sentence, owing to two irregularities in the construction; 1. that pointed out by Goeller as follows: 'post verbum δοκεῖ oratio ex verbo finito in verbum infinitum transit: δοκεῖ δέ μοι οὐδὲ—εἶχεν, ἀλλὰ—οὐδὲ εἶναι ἡ ἐπίκλησις αὕτη.' 2. that which (as Poppo observes) is involved in the circumstance of the interrogation in the former member of the sentence denying, in the latter affirming; in consequence of which there is, as Goeller and Arnold point out, an absence of the negative before ἔχειν, as though the preceding οὐ had been joined with δοκεῖτε instead of being united with μᾶλλον. Poppo refers to a similar negligence of expression occurring at i. 71, 1, καὶ οἴεσθε—ἴσον νέμετε. In ὑπεριδεῖν and προϊδεῖν we have an instance of paronomasia set off (as the poet expresses it) by 'apt alliteration's artful aid.'

3. καὶ εἴ τις — ξυνέβη] What is here said is intended to repress the disappointment that any one would be likely to feel on being thwarted in his projects of benefiting in some way or other by the war: and the full sense here intended is, 'If any one makes himself sure that he should, either by justice or by force, accomplish some favourite object,—let him not take it in dudgeon that he is baffled in his expectations, knowing that already many who had taken in hand to avenge themselves on those that had injured them, and others who had hoped, by some power they possessed, to aggrandize themselves, have been respectively frustrated in their hopes; the former not only not obtaining vengeance, but not coming off with safety; the latter, instead of getting more, having, perchance, lost what they already had.' Βεβαίως may, agreeably to the view of the Scholiast and Poppo, be taken with πράξειν: but more in accordance with the context will it be to take it with οἴεται, in the sense pro certo, as in another passage of our author supra i. 134, βεβαίως εἰδότες, and in Plato, p. 685, τὶ βεβαίως οἴεσθαι. Parallel to this is also the expression in Acts Ap. ii. 36, ἀσφαλῶς γινωσκέτω. With τῷ δικαίῳ, which means 'by the justice of his cause,' comp. Soph. Œd. Col. 880, τοῖς τοι δικαίοις χὠ βραχὺς νικᾷ μέγαν. The expression τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδα is by Arnold rightly regarded as equivalent to τῷ παραλόγῳ. Compare another passage further on, vii. 66, and see note on ii. 89, 5. In μὴ χαλεπῶς σφαλλέσθω (scil. τῆς ἐλπίδος) the term χαλεπῶς bears the sense graviter, as in the phrase χαλεπῶς πάσχειν or φέρειν: there being indeed a sort of permutation of expression οὐδ' ἐσώθησαν, τοῖς δ', ἀντὶ τοῦ πλέον ἔχειν, προσκαταλιπεῖν τὰ αὐτῶν ξυνέβη. 4. τιμωρία γὰρ οὐκ εὐτυχεῖ, δικαίως, ὅτι καὶ ἀδικεῖται· οὐδὲ ἰσχὺς βέβαιον, διότι καὶ ἔνελπι. τὸ δὲ ἀστάθμητον τοῦ μέλλοντος ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον κρατεῖ, πάντων τε σφαλερώτατον ὄν, ὅμως καὶ χρησιμώτατον φαίνεται· ἐξ ἴσου γὰρ δεδιότες, προμηθείᾳ μᾶλλον ἐπ' ἀλλήλους ἐρχόμεθα. LXIII. Καὶ νῦν τοῦ ἀφανοῦς τε τούτου διὰ τὸ ἀτέκμαρτον δέος, καὶ διὰ τὸ ἤδη φοβεροὺς παρόντας Ἀθηναίους, κατ' ἀμφότερα ἐκπλαγέντες, καὶ τὸ ἐλλιπὲς τῆς γνώμης, for μὴ χαλεπαινέτω σφαλλόμενος. Of προσκαταλιπεῖν the sense is, insuper amittere, 'to lose what they already had.'

4. The speaker now shows how it comes to pass that these two classes of persons are respectively disappointed of their expectations. It is, that 'vengeance (meaning the avenger of wrong) does not necessarily, as ought justly to be the case, come off with success, because it is injured; nor is strength (meaning the strong party) sure [of attaining its object], because it is hopeful,' i. e. fully expects success. With this use of δικαίως, which here signifies ut par est, ut jure debebat, 'as of right it ought,' compare Soph. Œd. Col. 742, and Xen. de Venat. iv. 5. A close imitation of this whole passage as far as πλεῖστον κρατεῖ is found in Dio Cass. p. 398, 16—29, where, had the editors been aware of the circumstance, they would not, as they have done, for εὐτυχεῖ, have read ἀτυχεῖ.

This the speaker then follows up with a weighty moral maxim,—namely, that the uncertainty of the future has, for the most part, the predominance, so as to order events: where the expression τὸ ἀστάθμητον bears the same sense as at iii. 59, 1: and τοῦ μέλλοντος means, 'of future fortune,' 'what shall happen in future.' Similarly in a passage of Dio Cass. we have, τῷ ἀσταθμήτῳ τῆς τύχης.

Finally, on this great moral truth the speaker then engrafts a profound reflection, to make it the more salutary,—namely, that 'although it be the most deceitful to be trusted to of all things, yet it is evidently fraught with useful instruction; inasmuch as each party, being alike inspired with apprehension, proceeds against the other with the more forethought [as to consequences]:' where at the words χρησιμώτατον φαίνεται there is an ellipsis of εἶναι or ὄν, on which see note at iii. 42, 5.

Ch. LXIII. The speaker now proceeds to draw the inference which necessarily followed from the foregoing statement of the case, as to what they ought to do.

1. καὶ νῦν] 'and now [such being the present posture of affairs].' Of τοῦ ἀφανοῦς—ἐκπλαγέντες the sense is, 'struck with alarm on both grounds,—as well on account of the undefinable fear of the uncertain (lit. unseen) [future], as because the Athenians present are formidable,' meaning, in other words, 'on account of the present fear of the Athenians.' Such seems to be the full sense here intended, though imperfectly developed in the words employed to express it. In τοῦ ἀφανοῦς allusion is had to the ἀστάθμητον τοῦ μέλλοντος, a little before. By ἀτέκμαρτον is denoted that which cannot be brought to the τέκμαρ, the mark or sign by which any thing is determined to be so or so; and consequently what is undefined and obscure, or what is not to be conjectured as to its event from previous signs. Compare Pind. Pyth. x. 98, and Olymp. vii. 83, and Herodot. v. 92, χρηστήριον ἀτέκμαρτον. Hence the term is especially applied to fate (as Æschyl. Pers. 907, μοίρας τῇδε κυρήσας ἀτεκμαρτοτάτης,) or fortune, (as Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1811 & 1087, 7, where we have τύχη ἀτ., and 2345, 3, ἀτέκμαρτον πρᾶγμα τύχη.) and that especially with reference to the unseen fortune, which may well excite fear as to the event. Here, then, it forms a most appropriate term: and with the bold expression τοῦ ἀφανοῦς [τοῦ μέλλοντος] διὰ τὸ ἀτέκμαρτον δέος, we may compare a not dissimilar one in Shakspeare's Hamlet, act iii. sc. 1, 'the dread of something after death,—That undiscovered country, from whose bourn No traveller returns,—puzzles the will, And makes us rather bear those ills we have, Than fly to others that we know not of.' In διὰ τὸ ἤδη φοβεροὺς παρόντας Ἀθηναίους there is, as Goeller observes, a confusion of two modes of expression, διὰ Ἀθηναίους φοβεροὺς παρόντας and διὰ τὸ παρεῖναι Ἀθ.

καὶ τὸ ἐλλιπὲς τῆς γνώμης—ἀποπέμπωμεν] Render, 'And as to what is deficient in the plans which we each thought we should accomplish, accounting that we have been enough hampered in their execution [by these hindrances], let us send packing these enemies hovering around us.' With respect to the construction, we may either suppose, with Goeller, that τὸ ἐλλιπὲς is an accusative absolute, the sense being, quod attinet ad; or, with Arnold, regard τὸ ἐλλιπὲς τῆς γνώμης as a condensed form of expression for τὴν γνώμην ἐρχθῆναι ὥστε ἐλλιπῆ γίγνεσθαι.

ὧν ἕκαστός ‡ τις ᾠήθημεν πράξειν, ταῖς κωλύμαις ταύταις ἱκανῶς νομίσαντες ἐρχθῆναι, τοὺς ἐφεστῶτας πολεμίους ἐκ τῆς χώρας ἀποπέμπωμεν· καὶ αὐτοὶ μάλιστα μὲν ἐς ἀΐδιον ξυμβῶμεν, εἰ δὲ μή, χρόνον ὡς πλεῖστον σπεισάμενοι, τὰς ἰδίας διαφορὰς ἐς αὖθις ἀναβαλώμεθα. 2. τὸ ξύμπαν τε δὴ γνῶμεν, πειθόμενοι μὲν ἐμοί, πόλιν ἔξοντες ἕκαστος ἐλευθέραν, ἀφ' ἧς αὐτοκράτορες ὄντες τὸν εὖ καὶ κακῶς δρῶντα ἐξ ἴσου ἀρετῇ ἀμυνούμεθα· ἢν δὲ ἀπιστήσαντες, ἄλλοις ὑπακούσωμεν, οὐ περὶ τοῦ τιμωρήσασθαί τινα, ἀλλὰ, καὶ ἄγαν εἰ μεθα, 'let us defer, postpone to some other season,' comp. Lucian, ii. 231, τὰς ἐλπίδας ἐσαῦθις ἀεὶ ἀνεβάλλετο. Xen. Symp. ii. 7, τοῦτο μὲν εἰς αὖθις ἀποθώμεθα (where, for ἀποθώμεθα, I conjecture the true reading to be ἀναθώμεθα, as in Synes. p. 201, τοῦτο εἰς αὖθις ἀναθώμεθα). The phrase seems to have been properly a forensic one: and so in a passage of Aristoph. Conc. 984, we have, ἀλλ' οὐχὶ νῦν τὰς ὑπερεξηκονταέτεις Ἐσάγομεν, ἀλλ' ἐσαῦτις ἀναβεβλήμεθα Τὰς ἐντὸς εἴκοσιν γὰρ ἐκδικάζομεν.

2. τὸ ξύμπαν τε δὴ γνῶμεν] These words are to be joined with πόλιν ἔξοντες, the sense being, 'upon the whole, let us assuredly know, that by following my counsel we shall each of us hold his state free.'

ἀφ' ἧς] 'ex qua [urbe] profecti.' With αὐτοκράτορες ὄντες, 'being masters of our own actions,' compare Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 21, αὐτοκράτορες γιγνόμενοι. Parallel to this is the fuller expression at iii. 62, αὐτοκράτωρ οὖσα ἑαυτῆς, where see note. The next words advert to the result of this independence, in their being able to make due return for either benefits or injuries: where ἐξ ἴσου, as Poppo points out, signifies ex æquo, standing for æqualiter, alike: and the term ἀρετῇ adverts to the principle on which this remuneration, whether for good or evil, would be made,—namely, that of moral virtue; since, according to Pagan ethics, virtue was alike shown in avenging oneself on him who injures, as in benefiting him who does us good.

The next words advert to the evil consequences of following the other counsel, that of the war-party,—namely, that avenging themselves on their enemies would be out of the question, since they would from necessity become friends to those they hate, and at variance with those they love: where at περὶ τοῦ τιμωρήσασθαι we may supply either, with Kistemacher and Haack, λόγος ἔσται; or, with Hermann, from the immediate context, for ἐφεστῶτας stands for ἐπικειμένους, bearing the sense of the Latin imminentes, as said of those who are hovering around to watch the time for attack. So Livy, xxv. 20, 'alterius ducis exercitusque opprimendi occasionem imminebat.'

ἐς ἀΐδιον] in perpetuum, 'for perpetuity or duration for all future time.' With the phrase, a little after, ἐς αὖθις ἀναβαλώ- τύχοιμεν, φίλοι μὲν ἂν τοῖς ἐχθίστοις, διάφοροι δὲ οἷς οὐ χρὴ, κατ' ἀνάγκην ‡ γιγνόμεθα. LXIV. Καὶ ἐγὼ μὲν,—ἅπερ καὶ ἀρχόμενος εἶπον,—πόλιν τε μεγίστην παρεχόμενος, καὶ ἐπιὼν τῷ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀμυνούμενος, ἀξιῶ προειδόμενος αὐτῶν ξυγχωρεῖν, καὶ μὴ τοὺς ἐναντίους οὕτω κακῶς δρᾶν, ὥστε αὐτὸς τὰ πλείω βλάπτεσθαι, μηδὲ μωρίᾳ φιλονεικῶν ἡγεῖσθαι τῆς τε οἰκείας γνώμης ὁμοίως αὐτοκράτωρ the words φίλοι ἂν γιγνοίμεθ' ἀλλήλοις. Of καὶ ἄγαν εἰ τύχοιμεν the sense is, 'if even we should be exceedingly fortunate,' viz. so as to avoid death or slavery. Καὶ εἰ stands for εἰ καὶ, 'if even;' and the transposition, as Poppo observes, has an intensive force. Here καὶ is used as in καὶ πάνυ, καὶ λίαν, &c.: and the ἄγαν stands for πάνυ. Compare another passage infra v. 9, and Dionys. Hal. 256, 34, εἰ δὲ τὰ κράτιστα πράξειαν, and 330, fin.

For vulg. γιγνώμεθα, (which is confessedly solœcistic,) Poppo and Goeller edit γιγνοίμεθα; Bekker, γιγνόμεθα; which last reading has been adopted by Herm. de Part. ἀν, i. 9; and rightly; such being borne out by the authority of almost every good MS., and by no means forbidden by propriety; since, as Hermann remarks, 'Ut φίλοι et διάφοροι,—τοῖς ἐχθίστοις et οἷς οὐ χρὴ, invicem opposuit scriptor, sic opposuit etiam γιγνοίμεθα ἂν et κατ' ἀνάγκην γιγνόμεθα; ita quidem, ut optativus ad ἂν ex illo indicativo supplendus sit.'

Ch. LXIV. This chapter contains the ἐπίλογοι, or conclusion; in which, after first briefly repeating what had been said at the beginning of the speech, (namely, that in thus urging pacification, he is not actuated by regard for the interest of Syracuse in particular, but by the common interest of all the Siceliot states,) he proceeds to say, that Syracuse is ready to make all due concessions for this purpose (concessions called for by prudence, since it were utter folly so to injure one's foes as ourselves to receive greater harm); and it is but just that the rest of the cities should imitate her example. He then proceeds to say that such mutual concessions must be made, or else they would all have to concede and submit to the common enemy—Athens. He adds, that it is no shame for men to give way to their own flesh and blood, or near kinsmen, or even to fellow-countrymen, as they were natives of the same soil—and that sea-girt and separate—and linked together by the same common appellation of Siceliots. Now the mention of this common name could not fail to suggest the idea of national independence, as consisting in being masters of their own actions—undictated to, not intermeddled with—by making war, or concluding peace, as they saw good, without interference. He concludes by showing the advantages of the course he is recommending,—namely, that 'by so doing they shall be at once rid of foreign interference and domestic war, and thus too will secure their national independence abroad.'

1. πόλιν μεγίστην παρεχόμενος] 'civitatem maximam exhibens, proferens, in concilium afferens.' There is also an implied notion of his sustaining the person of the city, as is plain from the next words, ἐπιὼν τῷ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀμυνούμενος, where he speaks in his own person for the state which he represents.

For vulg. προειδομένους and αὐτοὺς, (which, notwithstanding that it is found in all the MSS., must, for the reasons assigned by Goeller and others, be considered quite indefensible,) I have, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, received the conjectural readings of Reiske, προειδόμενος and αὐτός: for the words ἐγὼ μὲν—ἀξιῶ are, as Arnold observes, opposed to those at § 2, τοὺς ἄλλους δικαιῶ ταὐτό μοι ποιῆσαι, and serve to distinguish what Hermocrates thinks should be done by others, from what he was prepared to do himself.

With the sentiment contained in the words, just after, μωρίᾳ φιλονεικῶν—καὶ ἧς οὐκ ἄρχω τύχης, compare a similar one at vi. 78, οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε ἅμα τῆς τε ἐπιθυμίας καὶ τῆς τύχης τὸν αὐτὸν ὁμοίως ταμίαν γενέσθαι. Evidently written with a view to the present, is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1826, 2, τίς ἂν ὑπομείνειεν, ἄνθρωπος ὤν, ἅπαντα, καὶ τὰ τῆς γνώμης (consilii) καὶ τὰ τῆς τύχης, εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἀναλαβεῖν; also of Aristid. iii. 419. By μωρίᾳ φιλονεικῶν is meant, 'through foolishness of strife;' where the term φιλον. designates the so striving to have one's own way, as to be obstinately bent thereon; striving for the love of strife. Such is the sense expressed by the verb at v. 111, 4, and by the noun φιλονεικία at i. 41.

εἶναι, καὶ ἧς οὐκ ἄρχω τύχης, ἀλλ' ὅσον εἰκὸς ᾿σασθαι. 2. καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους δικαιῶ ταὐτό μοι ποιῆσαι, ὑφ' ὑμῶν αὐτῶν καὶ μὴ ὑπὸ τῶν πολεμίων τοῦτο παθεῖν. 3. οὐδὲν γὰρ αἰσχρὸν οἰκείους οἰκείων ἡσσᾶσθαι, ἢ Δωριέα τινὰ Δωριέως, ἢ Χαλκιδέα τῶν ξυγγενῶν, τὸ δὲ ξύμπαν γείτονας ὄντας, καὶ ξυνοίκους μιᾶς χώρας καὶ περιῤῥύτου, καὶ ὄνομα ἓν κεκλημένους Σικελιώτας· οἳ πολεμήσομέν τε, οἶμαι, ὅταν ξυμβῇ, καὶ ξυγχωρησόμεθά γε πάλιν καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτούς, λόγοις κοινοῖς χρώμενοι· τοὺς δὲ ἀλλοφύλους ἐπελθόντας ἀθρόοι ἀεί, ἢν σωφρονῶμεν, ἀμυνούμεθα, εἴπερ καὶ καθ' ἑκάστους βλαπτόμενοι ξύμπαντες κινδυνεύομεν· ξυμμάχους δὲ οὐδέποτε τὸ λοιπὸν ἐπαξό-

2. In the words ὑφ' ὑμῶν αὐτῶν—παθεῖν (equivalent to ἡσσᾶσθαι) there is involved a certain harshness, which would be effectually removed by reading, with Dobree, ἀφ' for ὑφ'. This, however, is forbidden by the opposition between τῶν πολεμίων and ὑμῶν αὐτῶν; an opposition to which alone the harshness in question is to be attributed. Moreover, the sense here intended is not 'of your own accord,' but 'at the hands of each other,' as in the phrase ἀποθανεῖν ὑπό τινος.

3. οἰκείους] Meaning 'those connected by ties of family, or relationship,' (as at i. 9. iv. 106.) such as were the Dorians or Chalcidians, who were both of one race, though not one family or nation. Similarly in a passage of the prophet Jeremiah, xxxi. 1, the Jewish tribes are spoken of as several families of the same race (namely of Israel). From this connexion by affinity there is at τὸ δὲ ξύμπαν, a little after, a transition to the less binding, but nevertheless close, ties of local connexion, as regards inhabitants of the same country.

Of ἡσσᾶσθαι the sense is, 'to suffer oneself to come off with the worst;' the term being equivalent to ἐλασσοῦσθαι at i. 77, 1: and so in Æschyl. Ag. 916, τοῖς δ' ὀλβίοις γε καὶ τὸ νικᾶσθαι πρέπει. In περιῤῥύτου we have a highly significant and emphatic term, (q. d. and that sea-girt,) of which the purpose is to intimate that 'as being separated from the society of others, they were the more closely bound to each other, and had a common interest in keeping off the interference of foreigners, with whom they could have no natural connexion.'

καὶ ὄνομα ἓν κεκλημένους Σικελιώτας, &c.] Here the mention of the common appellation Siceliots naturally serves to suggest the idea of national independence; and hence no little address may be recognised in the sentiment now expressed by the speaker: 'and, being Siceliots, we shall, I wot, exercise our independence by making war or concluding peace one with another, at our own pleasure.' Of ξυγχωρησόμεθα—καθ' ἡμᾶς the sense is, literally, 'we shall come to terms of peace one with another:' with which compare the expression ξυγχωρεῖν πρός τινας at ii. 59, and iii. 27. The more usual phrase to denote this is, ξυμβαίνειν πρός τινα. With λόγοις κοινοῖς χρώμενοι, 'holding common conferences one with another,' compare the Latin expression colloquia habere or facere.

τοὺς δὲ ἀλλοφύλους ἐπελθόντας] These words are by all the translators and commentators explained 'foreigners invading us,' 'foreign invaders.' But they might have remembered that the Athenians, who are here alluded to, had not come as invaders, but merely as interlopers, intermeddlers in business which was none of theirs: and such is, I apprehend, in effect the sense here meant to be conveyed. Hence we may render, 'foreigners intruding,' 'foreign intruders.' So, I would observe, Josephus must certainly have understood the words, as appears from the following passage (evidently written in imitation of the present) in Ant. xvii. 12, 6, τοὺς δ' ἀλλοφύλους ἐπελθόντας σωφρονιστὰς τοῦ στασιάσοντος τῶν ἀνθρώπων—γενέσθαι.

εἴπερ καὶ καθ' ἑκάστους βλαπτόμενοι ξύμπαντες κινδυνεύομεν] 'inasmuch as, while injured individually, we are collectively imperilled.' Comp. Tacit. Agric. 12, 'Dum singuli pugnant, universi vincuntur;' and Justin, viii. 1, 'Græciæ civitates, omnibus perire, quod singulæ amitterent, non nisi oppressæ senserunt.' The words εἴπερ καὶ κινδυνεύομεν are in some measure parenthetical; serving to give the reason why they should repel all foreign interference: and in the next words, ξυμμάχους δὲ, &c., the δὲ is continuative or resumptive. Render, 'but, I say, we shall μεθα οὐδὲ διαλλακτάς. 4. τάδε γὰρ ποιοῦντες ἔν τε τῷ παρόντι δυοῖν ἀγαθοῖν οὐ στερήσομεν τὴν Σικελίαν, Ἀθηναίων τε ἀπαλλαγῆναι, καὶ οἰκείου πολέμου, καὶ ἐς τὸ ἔπειτα καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ἐλευθέραν νεμούμεθα καὶ ὑπὸ ἄλλων ἧσσον ἐπιβουλευομένην."

LXV. Τοιαῦτα τοῦ Ἑρμοκράτους εἰπόντος, πειθόμενοι οἱ Σικελιῶται, αὐτοὶ μὲν κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ξυνηνέχθησαν γνώμῃ, ὥστε ἀπαλλάσσεσθαι τοῦ πολέμου, ἔχοντες ἃ ἕκαστοι ἔχουσι, τοῖς δὲ Καμαριναίοις Μοργαντίνην εἶναι, ἀργύριον τακτὸν τοῖς Συρακουσίοις ἀποδοῦσιν. 2. οἱ δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ξύμμαχοι, παρακαλέσαντες αὐτῶν τοὺς ἐν τέλει ὄντας, εἶπον ὅτι ξυμβήσονται, καὶ αἱ σπονδαὶ ἔσονται κἀκείνοις κοιναί. 3. ἐπαινεσάντων δὲ αὐτῶν, ἐποιοῦντο τὴν never, if we be wise, henceforth call in allies or pacificators.'

4. In conclusion the speaker adverts to the advantages, both present and future, of following this counsel :—they will at present be rid of two evils, foreign intrusion and domestic war ; and, for the future, they will enjoy their country in freedom, and less plotted against by others. In the words οὐ στερήσομεν δυοῖν ἀγαθοῖν I would not suppose a mere meiosis for 'we shall confer a double benefit on Sicily,' (a view which involves something frigid and jejune,) but rather regard them as glancing at the war-party, who were, it is hinted, depriving Sicily of these two benefits.

Ch. LXV. 1. ξυνηνέχθησαν γνώμῃ] The term ξυμφέρεσθαι has here not so much the sense convenire, 'to agree,' as that of reconciliari, in concordiam redire, found in Dio Cass. 146, 23. 424, 11 ; a sense, indeed, required by the added term γνώμῃ. Compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. 592, init. συμφέρεσθαι ταῖς γνώμαις, and Plato, p. 929, ἐὰν ἀνὴρ καὶ γυνὴ μηδαμῇ ξυμφέρωνται. Yet with the above the sense 'to agree' is included, as appears from the ὥστε following, of which the force is, 'agreed to lay aside the war, on the proviso of each holding what they possessed ;' namely, on the well-known principle of later times called the uti possidetis.

Καμαριναίοις Μοργαντίνην εἶναι] It may be supposed that this town was not, as it has usually been thought, the same with the Morgantia situated on the eastern coast of Sicily, and near the mouth of the river Simæthus ; since, from its great distance from the Camarinæan territories, it could not have been held by them. It would rather seem, (agreeably to the view long ago propounded by me in my former Thucydidean works, and which I have found further borne out by the opinion of Poppo in his Proleg. ii. p. 508.) that it was some other of nearly the same name, but of little note. That two places of nearly the same name should exist within no great distance of each other is, though a circumstance unusual, yet not unprecedented, since no less than two examples of this are to be found elsewhere in our author ; one at iii. 4, 5, where we have mention of two places of the name of Malea, within eight or nine miles of each other ; and the other at iv. 107, 2, where we have two places of the name of Gapselus. I still adhere to the opinion expressed in my Transl. with Notes, that the Morgantine here meant was a town situated at some point in the interior, where the territories of Camarina and Syracuse abutted on each other ; and that it was, as also the other Morgantine or Morgantia, founded by the Morgetes, an Italian tribe, which passed over into Sicily soon after the Siculi, and occupied a considerable portion of the interior of the island in common with them. See Cluver, Sicil. p. 335. Hence it is not improbable that two towns should have been called after them as founders. The Morgetes were a tribe inhabiting the central parts of Samnium in Sicily, and they called the Morgantina which they founded in Sicily, (far in the interior, as is certain from Strabo, and not, where Arrowsmith places it, on the sea-coast,) from Morgantia in Samnium.

2. αὐτῶν τοὺς ἐν τέλει ὄντας] Meaning the Athenian generals. Εἶπον ὅτι ξυμβήσονται, 'told them that they should enter into this treaty.' Καὶ αἱ σπονδαὶ ἔσονται κἀκείνοις κοιναὶ, 'and that the terms of the treaty would be common to them (i. e. the Athenians),' i. e. would include them also.

3. ἐπαινεσάντων αὐτῶν] 'when they

ὁμολογίαν, καὶ αἱ νῆες τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀπέπλευσαν μετὰ ταῦτα ἐκ Σικελίας. 4. ἐλθόντας δὲ τοὺς στρατηγοὺς οἱ ἐν τῇ πόλει Ἀθηναῖοι τοὺς μὲν φυγῇ ἐζημίωσαν, Πυθόδωρον καὶ Σοφοκλέα, τὸν δὲ τρίτον Εὐρυμέδοντα χρήματα ἐπράξαντο, ὡς ἐξὸν αὐτοῖς τὰ ἐν Σικελίᾳ καταστρέψασθαι, δώροις πεισθέντες ἀποχωρήσειαν. 5. οὕτω, τῇ παρούσῃ εὐτυχίᾳ χρώμενοι, ἠξίουν σφίσι μηδὲν ἐναντιοῦσθαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ δυνατὰ ἐν ἴσῳ καὶ τὰ ἀπορώτερα μεγάλῃ τε ὁμοίως καὶ ἐνδεεστέρᾳ παρασκευῇ κατεργάζεσθαι. αἰτία δ' ἦν ἡ παρὰ λόγον τῶν πλειόνων εὐπραγία αὐτοῖς, ὑποτιθεῖσα ἰσχὺν τῆς ἐλπίδος.

had consented [to the treaty entered into by their allies].' Of ἐπαινεῖν in this sense another example occurs at v. 37 ; and indeed the same is found in the best writers, especially Homer ; where, as here, the term is not unfrequently used absolutely. So Il. xxiv. 539 & 540, and Od. iv. 673. Xen. Cyr. iii. 2, 11, where we have ἐπῄνεσαν, 'consented to the conditions of peace.' Also Aristoph. Ran. 508, ἐπαινῶ, and Av. 1616. See also note on another passage of our author, iii. 38. I should not have thought it necessary to enlarge thus far on the matter, but that here the sense in question is, I find, missed by all the translators and commentators in general : and under this misapprehension Bp. Thirlwall, in his History of Greece, assigns to the expression of our author what is far from correctly representing its import, the sense 'having commended their conduct.' All that we can suppose to be meant is a faint acquiescence in what they could not alter. Nay, the very telling the Athenians that 'it was their intention to enter into the common treaty of pacification,' was as much as to say that they had no further occasion for their services.

4. χρήματα ἐπράξαντο] 'imposed on him a money fine :' on which phrase see Blomfield on Æschyl. Pers. 482 We are not told why Eurymedon was more mildly dealt with than his two colleagues. It could not be because he had less authority than the rest, and therefore incurred less blame : for from what was said at ch. 2 and 46, it is plain that he was first in the commission. It was probably because he had acquiesced unwillingly in the united judgments of his colleagues.

5. οὕτω, τῇ παρούσῃ εὐτυχίᾳ — κατεργάζεσθαι] 'Thus, while using their present good fortune, they thought that no hindrance was to come across them ; but that they were to accomplish what was possible, and what was very difficult, both with a large and with a most deficient force.' Such is the sense here intended, which is well conveyed in the following free version of the words offered by Bp. Thirlwall : 'The people was so elated with its recent good fortune, that, as no enterprise was now too great for its ambition, so it neglected all proportion between its means and its ends, and would not hear of any obstacles which nature or man could oppose to its success.' Of τὰ ἀπορώτερα the sense is, literally, by a peculiar use of the comparative, 'things more difficult than can be accomplished,' i. e. too difficult to be accomplished : in which sense ἀπορ. occurs at v. 111, and occasionally in the best writers. Similarly ἐνδεεστέρᾳ. a little after, signifies literally, 'too deficient [for the purpose],' as in Herodot. vii. 48, ἐνδεέστερα φαίνεται εἶναι τὰ ἡμέτερα πρήγματα.

I must not omit to say, that I have, with Bekker and Goeller, thought proper not to receive the τε after τῇ just before, though found in most of the best MSS., and adopted by Haack, Poppo, and Arnold. My reason for so deciding is, that the word can have no place here, and may easily have crept in as a var. lect. of the immediately preceding τῇ. In vain does Dr. Arnold defend it on the ground that the particle is frequently found in Thucyd. where it is equally unnecessary : for, not to say that we must not causelessly multiply such cases, the word is here not merely unnecessary, but detrimental to the sense, by obscuring the construction. Besides, whenever οὕτω is used, as here, at the beginning of a sentence, and as serving to introduce an epiphonema, (as at i. 81, fin. οὕτως εἰκὸς—δουλεῦσαι,) it is always per asyndeton, and not followed by any connective particle.

αἰτία δ' ἦν — ἐλπίδος] These words advert to the cause of this unreasonable expectation of the end without the means, namely, 'the unexpected good success they had met with in most of their undertakings, which supplied strength to their

LXVI. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους Μεγαρῆς οἱ ἐν τῇ πόλει, πιεζόμενοι ὑπό τε Ἀθηναίων τῷ πολέμῳ, ἀεὶ κατὰ ἔτος ἕκαστον δὶς ἐσβαλλόντων πανστρατιᾷ ἐς τὴν χώραν, καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν σφετέρων φυγάδων τῶν ἐκ Πηγῶν· οἳ, στασιασάντων, ἐκπεσόντες ὑπὸ τοῦ πλήθους, χαλεποὶ ἦσαν λῃστεύοντες, ἐποιοῦντο λόγους ἐν ἀλλήλοις ὡς χρὴ δεξαμένους τοὺς φεύγοντας, μὴ ἀμφοτέρωθεν τὴν πόλιν φθείρειν. 2. οἱ δὲ φίλοι τῶν ἔξω τὸν θροῦν αἰσθόμενοι, φανερῶς μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον καὶ αὐτοὶ ἠξίουν τούτου τοῦ λόγου ἔχεσθαι. 3. γνόντες δὲ οἱ τοῦ δήμου προστάται οὐ δυνατὸν τὸν δῆμον ἐσόμενον ὑπὸ τῶν κακῶν μετὰ σφῶν καρτερεῖν, ποιοῦνται λόγους, δείσαντες, πρὸς τοὺς τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγούς, Ἱπποκράτην τε τὸν Ἀρίφρονος καὶ Δημοσθένην τὸν Ἀλκισθένους, βουλόμενοι ἐνδοῦναι τὴν πόλιν, καὶ νομίζοντες ἐλάσσω σφίσι τὸν κίνδυνον, ἢ τοὺς ἐκπεσόντας ὑπὸ σφῶν κατελθεῖν. 4. ξυνέβησάν τε πρῶτα μὲν τὰ μακρὰ τείχη ἑλεῖν Ἀθηναίους, (ἦν δὲ σταδίων μάλιστα ὀκτὼ ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως ἐπὶ τὴν Νίσαιαν τὸν λιμένα αὐτῶν) ὅπως μὴ ἐπιβοηθήσωσιν ἐκ τῆς Νισαίας οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι, ἐν ᾗ αὐτοὶ μόνοι ἐφρούρουν βεβαιότητος ἕνεκα τῶν Μεγάρων, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ τὴν ἄνω πόλιν πειρᾶσθαι ἐνδοῦναι· ῥᾷον δ' ἤδη ἔμελλον προσχωρήσειν, τούτου γεγενημένου. LXVII. Οἱ οὖν Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐπειδὴ ἀπό τε τῶν ἔργων καὶ τῶν λόγων παρεσκεύαστο ἀμφοτέροις, ὑπὸ νύκτα πλεύσαντες ἐς Μίνωαν τὴν Μεγαρέων νῆσον ὁπλίταις ἑξακοσίοις, ὧν Ἱπποκράτης ἦρχεν, ἐν ὀρύγματι ἐκαθέζοντο, ὅθεν ἐπλίνθευον τὰ τείχη, καὶ ἀπεῖχεν οὐ πολύ. 2. οἱ δὲ μετὰ τοῦ Δημοσθένους τοῦ ἑτέρου στρατηγοῦ, Πλαταιῆς τε ψιλοὶ καὶ ἕτεροι περίπολοι, ἐνήδρευσαν ἐς † τὸν Ἐνυάλιον, ὅ ἐστιν ἔλασσον ἄποθεν. καὶ ἤσθετο οὐδείς, εἰ μὴ οἱ ἄνδρες οἷς ἐπιμελὲς ἦν εἰδέναι, τὴν νύκτα ταύτην. 3. καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἕως ἔμελλε γίγνεσθαι, οἱ προδιδόντες τῶν Μεγαρέων οὗτοι τοιόνδε ἐποίησαν. ἀκάτιον ἀμφηρικὸν, ὡς λῃσταί, ἐκ πολλοῦ, τεθεραπευκότες τὴν ἄνοιξιν τῶν πυλῶν, εἰώθεσαν ἐπὶ ἁμάξῃ, πείθοντες τὸν ἄρχοντα, διὰ τῆς τάφρου κατακομίζειν τῆς νυκτὸς ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασ-hope' (namely, of carrying all before them). The expression ὑποτιθεῖσα ἰσχὺν τῆς ἐλπίδος signifies literally, 'supplying to them strength of hope,' 'a strong hope.' Similar to this is an expression in the Epistle to the Hebrews, vi. 18, ἵνα ἰσχυρὰν παράκλησιν ἔχωμεν—κρατῆσαι τῆς προκειμένης ἐλπίδος, where the consolation is called strong from its being a firm ground for hope. Ὑποτιθέναι here corresponds to subjicere in Latin, as at i. 138, ἐλπίδα ἣν ὑπετίθει, and Eurip. Orest. 1186, ὑποτίθης τιν' ἐλπίδα. Xen. Hist. iv. 8, 28, ἐλπίδας ὑποθεὶς τοῖς M.

To pass from words to things, the extravagant views and presumptuous expectations of the Athenian people at this period are depicted with a masterly pencil by Aristophanes, in his Vespæ and Aves. See Vesp. v. 705, seqq., and Av. 1225 and 1023—1050. Of this state of things the effect was to at once throw themselves off their guard, and to rouse in the breasts of the Greek states at large a spirit as well of alarm as of indignation and deeper animosity than ever: and hence, as observes Mitford, 'arose that fermentation which principally gave birth to the transactions now to be recorded.'

Ch. LXVI. The scene now changes from Sicily to Greece; and an account is given of the revolution of Megara, the circumstances leading to which are first narrated, especially the increasingly grievous distress of the city, (depicted in lively colours by Aristophanes,) occasioned as well by the war, as by the devastations of an aristocratical faction, which, though banished, had established themselves at Pegæ, the Megarean port on the gulf of Corinth. And as the people, since the late occupation of Minoa by the Athenians, and the consequent more rigorous blockade of their only port Nisæa, (by which, as excluded from any supplies from abroad, and in danger of being starved, they had been driven almost to despair,) had begun to reflect, that one great source of evil might be removed by the recal of the exiles; so now the friends of the exiles (who, we find, were many) were emboldened to publicly demand it to be done. Whereupon the leaders of the democratical party, knowing that the recal of their political adversaries would be fatal to them, entered into secret communication with the Athenian generals Hippocrates and Demosthenes, for giving up at first the long walls and Nicæa, and then Megara, into the hands of the Athenians.

1. κατὰ ἔτος—δὶς ἐσβαλλόντων] See note supra ii. 31. Φυγάδων τῶν ἐκ Πηγῶν. These, Poppo thinks, were the same persons, of the aristocratical party, mentioned at iii. 68, as occupying for a year the territory of Platæa after being captured by the Peloponnesians. On leaving Platæa, they probably seized on Pegæ, about fourteen miles distant: for I entirely coincide in the opinion of Col. Leake, who fixes Pegæ at the present Port Psatha, and not, as geographers in general, at Alepochosa.

2. τὸν θροῦν αἰσθόμενοι] The sense seems to be, 'hearing of the muttering,' viz. that this was buzzed about in low mutterings. So in Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 35, (Thiem.) we have, θροῦς τις τοιοῦτος διῆλθεν. Dio Cass. 424, 86. 1002, 9. 1277, 42. Polyb. i. 32, 6. Jos. Ant. xviii. 10, 5, αἰσθομένη τοῦ θροῦ. With ἠξίουν—ἔχεσθαι, 'thought proper to stick to, follow up the matter,' compare the phrase ἔχεσθαι λόγου at v. 49. By τοῦ λόγου is meant, per metonymiam, the matter which formed the subject of discussion. See my Lex. N. Test. in v. λόγος 2.

3. οἱ τοῦ δήμου προστάται] See note on iii. 10. Of μετὰ σφῶν καρτερεῖν the sense is secum tolerare, 'to hold out, to bear up, with them,' under the distress they had to endure.

4. ἦν δὲ σταδίων, &c.] See the Dissertation on the topography of Megara, in the Appendix.

Ch. LXVII. 1. ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων καὶ τῶν λόγων] for ἔργοις καὶ λόγοις, 'both by words and by deeds,' by previous treaty, and by providing forces for carrying its terms into effect. So at viii. 87, 5, we have ἀπ' ἐλασσόνων put for ἐλάσσονι, scil. δαπάνῃ. The verb παρεσκεύαστο is to be taken impersonally. Ἀμφοτέροις, for ὑπ' ἀμφοτέρων.

ἐν ὀρύγματι ἐκαθέζοντο—τείχη] 'in a hollow from which they made the bricks for [the building of] the walls.' Similarly in Herodot. i. 179, we have, ἐπλίνθευον τὴν γῆν ἐκ τοῦ ὀρύγματος ἐκφερομένην.

2. ἕτεροι περίπολοι] A brief form of expression for ἕτεροι, οἳ ἦσαν π.: with which compare one occurring in a passage of St. Luke, xxiii. 32, καὶ ἕτεροι δύο, κακοῦργοι, where Bornemann cites the present passage and another of Aristoph. Av. 1525, εἰσὶν γὰρ ἕτεροι βάρβαροι Θεοί τινες ἄνωθεν ὑμῶν; i. e. ἕτεροί τινες θεοί, οἵ εἰσι βάρβαροι. On the περίπολοι see my note in Translation, and also Boeckh and Platner, as referred to by Goeller: also an Essay in the Cambridge Philological Musæum, vol. ii. p. 400.

The τὸν before Ἐνυάλιον I have obelized, because I think it has been fully proved by Poppo and Arnold, that ἐνήδρευσαν ἐς τὸν Ἐν. were an incorrect expression, and that it should be either ἐς τὸ Ἐνναλιεῖον (as I conjectured in my smaller edition) or παρὰ τὸν Ἐννάλιον; of which the former is greatly preferable to the latter.

ὅ ἐστιν ἔλασσον ἄποθεν] 'which is a less distance.'

3. ἀκάτιον ἀμφηρικὸν] Meaning a light boat of two oars both plied by one person; of which mention is made in J. Pollux, i. 82.

λῃσταί] Meaning freebooters carrying on a private warfare merely for spoil. See note on iii. 51. Τεθεραπευκότες τὴν ἄνοιξιν τῶν πυλῶν. Render, 'having procured, or brought about, by interest or favour, the opening of the gates.' So Lucian, ii. 558, 86, ἐτεθεραπεύκει ἄλλον ἕνα σφίσι ἱππέα ἔπεσθαι. Aristid. i. 300, τεθεραπευκότες ἐκ πολλοῦ ἀκάτιον.

τὸν ἄρχοντα] Meaning, as Kistemacher explains, the Lacedæmonian governor of Nisæa. By τῆς τάφρου must be meant σαν, καὶ ἐκπλεῖν· καὶ πρὶν ἡμέραν εἶναι, πάλιν αὐτὸ τῇ ἀμάξῃ κομίσαντες ἐς τὸ τεῖχος, κατὰ τὰς πύλας ἐσῆγον, ὅπως τοῖς ἐκ τῆς Μινώας Ἀθηναίοις ἀφανὴς δὴ εἴη ἡ φυλακὴ, μὴ ὄντος ἐν τῷ λιμένι πλοίου φανεροῦ μηδενός. 4. καὶ τότε πρὸς ταῖς πύλαις ἤδη ἦν ἡ ἅμαξα, καὶ ἀνοιχθεισῶν κατὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς, ὡς τῷ ἀκατίῳ, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι (ἐγίγνετο γὰρ ἀπὸ ξυνθήματος τὸ τοιοῦτον) ἰδόντες, ἔθεον δρόμῳ ἐκ τῆς ἐνέδρας, βουλόμενοι φθάσαι πρὶν ξυγκλεισθῆναι πάλιν τὰς πύλας, καὶ ἔως ἔτι ἡ ἅμαξα ἐν αὐταῖς ἦν, κώλυμα οὖσα προσθεῖναι· καὶ αὐτοῖς ἅμα καὶ οἱ ξυμπράσσοντες Μεγαρῆς τοὺς κατὰ πύλας φύλακας κτείνουσι. 5. καὶ πρῶτον μὲν οἱ περὶ τὸν Δημοσθένην Πλαταιῆς τε καὶ περίπολοι ἐσέδραμον, οὗ νῦν τὸ τροπαιόν ἐστι, καὶ εὐθὺς ἐντὸς τῶν πυλῶν (ἤσθοντο γὰρ οἱ ἐγγύτατα Πελοποννήσιοι) μαχόμενοι τοὺς προσβοηθοῦντας οἱ Πλαταιῆς ἐκράτησαν, καὶ τοῖς τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὁπλίταις ἐπιφερομένοις βεβαίους τὰς πύλας παρέσχον. LXVIII. Ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἤδη ὁ ἀεὶ ἐντὸς γιγνόμενος χωρεῖ ἐπὶ τὸ τεῖχος. 2. καὶ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι φρουροὶ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀντισχόντες ἠμύνοντο ὀλίγοι, καὶ ἀπέθανόν τινες αὐτῶν, οἱ δὲ πλείους ἐς φυγὴν κατέστησαν φοβηθέντες, ἐν νυκτί † τε πολεμίων προσπεπτωκότων, καὶ, τῶν προδιδόντων Μεγαρέων ἀντιμαχομένων, νομίσαντες τοὺς ἅπαντας σφᾶς Μεγαρέας προδεδωthe trench by the outer side of one of the long walls, namely, the one which was the most convenient for approach to the sea, so as to avoid observation from the Athenian naval blockading force at Minoa, and also had a gate through which to convey the boat into the trench. The boat was then conveyed on the wain along the trench to the open sea. Small boats were, in ancient times, not unfrequently conveyed down to the sea on a wain. See Plut. Lucull. 9. Zosim. 111, p. 264. Similar to the present is a stratagem recorded in Livy, xxv. 9. The boat was conveyed down the trench, both as better eluding observation, and as affording an easier approach to the sea.

ὅπως τοῖς—ἡ φυλακὴ] 'in order that the watch of the Athenians at Minoa might be uncertain.' So the Scholiast explains by ὅπως ἀφανὲς δῆθεν ᾖ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τί χρὴ φυλάττεσθαι.

4. ἔθεον δρόμῳ] 'ran at full speed.' See supra ii. 81, 5. Καὶ ἕως — προσθεῖναι. Render, 'and while yet the wain was in them (meaning the portals, or gate-way), being [thereby] a hindrance to the shutting them to.' On this sense of προσθεῖναι (which is found also in Lucian, i. 633, and Pollux, x. 25.) see Valcken. on Herodot. iii. 78.

Ch. LXVIII. 1. ὁ ἀεὶ ἐντὸς γιγνόμενος] 'as any one came up.' See note on iii. 77, where we have similarly τὰς ἀεὶ πληρουμένας ναῦς.

2. φοβηθέντες, ἐν νυκτί τε—νομίσαντες—προδεδωκέναι] To relieve the construction here (which is not a little perplexed), Poppo supposes the τε after νυκτὶ to be put out of its place, though meant to connect with φοβηθέντες: an expedient, however, involving something so harsh, that he has since then laid down the sense as follows: 'Plerique autem perterriti, quod et noctu hostes aggressi erant, et proditores ex Megarensibus contra pugnabant, in fugam se verterunt, arbitrati ab universis Megarensibus se esse proditos.' Yet here, again, a certain violence is done to the construction; there being thus no connecting link whereby to attach the word νομίσαντες, not to say that it would be almost useless. From the air of the passage it plainly appears that the general sense intended hinges on the two terms φοβηθέντες and νομίσαντες, of which the former states the main cause of their taking to flight, namely, alarm on seeing the enemy had broken in by night (when it would be almost impossible to drive them out); the latter, a cause auxiliary and subordinate to the former. Hence as κέναι. 3. ξυνέπεσε γὰρ καὶ τὸν τῶν Ἀθηναίων κήρυκα ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ γνώμης κηρῦξαι, τὸν βουλόμενον ἰέναι Μεγαρέων μετὰ Ἀθηναίων θησόμενον τὰ ὅπλα. οἱ δ' ὡς ἤκουσαν, οὐκέτι ἀνέμενον, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὄντι νομίσαντες κοινῇ πολεμεῖσθαι, κατέφυγον ἐς τὴν Νίσαιαν. 4. ἅμα δὲ ἕῳ, ἐαλωκότων ἤδη τῶν τειχῶν, καὶ τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει Μεγαρέων θορυβουμένων, οἱ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους πράξαντες καὶ ἄλλοι μετ' αὐτῶν, πλῆθος ὃ ξυνῄδει, ἔφασαν χρῆναι ἀνοίγειν τὰς πύλας, καὶ ἐπεξιέναι ἐς μάχην. 5. ξυνέκειτο δὲ αὐτοῖς, τῶν πυλῶν ἀνοιχθεισῶν, ἐσπίπτειν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους· αὐτοὶ δὲ διάδηλοι ἔμελλον ἔσεσθαι· λίπα γὰρ ἀλείψεσθαι, ὅπως μὴ ἀδικῶνται. ἀσφάλεια δὲ αὐτοῖς μᾶλλον ἐγίγνετο τῆς ἀνοίξεως· καὶ γὰρ οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἐλευσῖνος, κατὰ τὸ ξυγκείμενον τετρακισχίλιοι ὁπλῖται τῶν Ἀθηναίων καὶ ἱππῆς ἑξακόσιοι [οἱ] τὴν νύκτα πορευόμενοι παρῆσαν. 6. ἀληλιμμένων δὲ αὐτῶν, καὶ ὄντων ἤδη περὶ τὰς πύλας, καταγορεύει τις ξυνειδὼς τοῖς ἑτέροις τὸ ἐπιβούλευμα. καὶ οἳ, ξυστραφέντες, ἀθρόοι ἦλθον, καὶ οὐκ ἔφασαν χρῆναι οὔτε ἐπεξιέναι (οὐδὲ γὰρ πρότερόν πω τοῦτο, ἰσχύοντες μᾶλλον, τολμῆσαι), οὔτε ἐς κίνδυνον φανερὸν τὴν πόλιν καταγαγεῖν· εἴ τε μὴ πείσεταί τις, αὐτοῦ τὴν μάχην ἔσεσθαι.

the former was one proceeding from sudden impulse, so was the latter one originating in reflection; they supposing, when they saw the Megarean traitors fighting against them, that the whole of the Megareans had betrayed them. Such is plainly the import of the words, and this determines the construction to be φοβηθέντες—καὶ νομίσαντες. Consequently I have placed a comma after καὶ. As to the τε, the transposition is one so harsh, that I suspect that word to be corrupt, and am inclined to think that our author wrote τῶν; for while τῶν is almost indispensable to πολεμίων, the τε is little better than useless. That τε and τῶν should be, as they are, often confounded, is no wonder, from the similarity of their manuscript abbreviations $\frac{\epsilon}{\tau}$ and $\frac{\omega}{\tau}$. Finally, the construction which I have above laid down, is placed beyond doubt by a strikingly similar passage at iv. 125, 1, τὸ πλῆθος τῶν βαρβάρων εὐθὺς φοβηθέντες,—καὶ νομίσαντες πολλαπλασίους μὲν ἢ ἦλθον ἐπιέναι—καταστάντες ἐς φυγὴν, ἐχώρουν ἐπ' οἶκον. If, however, the τε should be retained, and the transposition admitted, the τε must be joined, not with ἐν νυκτὶ, but with φοβηθέντες, as in a passage of Herodot. ix. 70, where a similar synchysis is found: ἀλύκταζόν τε οἷα ἐν ὀλίγῳ χωρίῳ πεφοβημένοι τε καὶ πολλαὶ μυριάδες κατειλημέναι ἀνθρώπων, put for ἀλ. τε οἷα πεφοβημένοι τε καὶ πολλαὶ μυρ. κατ. ἐν ὀλίγῳ χωρίῳ, where Herodotus probably had in mind a passage of Hom. Il. xv. 4. οἱ μὲν δὴ παρ' ὄχεσφιν ἐρητύοντο μένοντες, Ἀχαιοὶ ὑπὸ δείους, πεφοβημένοι.

3. ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ γνώμης] 'of his own mind, or accord,' as occasionally in Dio Cass., for the more usual expression ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ.

4. πλῆθος ὃ ξυνῄδει] 'the multitude of those who had been conscious of what was going on;' who had been, as the Scotch say, heart and part.

5. διάδηλοι] literally, 'thoroughly manifest.' Of the words following, λίπα γὰρ ἀλείψεσθαι, the sense is, 'for they were to anoint themselves with oil.' This, Arnold observes, was so common, preparatory to any great bodily exertion, that it would excite no suspicion.

The οἱ after ἑξακόσιοι I have bracketed, as considering the word quite indefensible. It is not found in seven MSS., and doubtless arose from the οι preceding.

6. αὐτοῦ τὴν μάχην ἔσεσθαι] A brief and spirited form of expression, of which the meaning is, 'that the battle should be there, inside of the city [not outside, and with the Athenians];' q. d. if they were resolved to fight, the battle should be first there, to see whether they could carry their point or not. In εἴ τε μὴ πείσεταί τις we have, as at iii. 111, the use of the singular

7. ἐδήλουν δὲ οὐδὲν ὅτι ἴσασι τὰ πρασσόμενα, ἀλλ' ὡς τὰ βέλτιστα βουλεύοντες ἰσχυρίζοντο, καὶ ἅμα περὶ τὰς πύλας παρέμενον φυλάσσοντες, ὥστε οὐκ ἐγένετο τοῖς ἐπιβουλεύουσι πρᾶξαι ὃ ἔμελλον. LXIX. Γνόντες δὲ οἱ τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγοὶ ὅτι ἐναντίωμά τι ἐγένετο, καὶ τὴν πόλιν βίᾳ οὐχ οἷοί τε ἔσονται λαβεῖν, τὴν Νίσαιαν εὐθὺς περιετείχιζον, νομίζοντες, εἰ πρὶν ἐπιβοηθῆσαι τινὰς, ἐξέλοιεν, θᾶσσον ἂν καὶ τὰ Μέγαρα προσχωρῆσαι. 2. παρεγένετο δὲ σίδηρός τε ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ταχὺ, καὶ λιθουργοὶ, καὶ τἆλλα ἐπιτήδεια· ἀρξάμενοι δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους ὃ εἶχον, καὶ διοικοδομήσαντες τὸ πρὸς Μεγαρέας, ἀπ' ἐκείνου ἑκατέρωθεν ἐς θάλασσαν τῆς Νισαίας, τάφρον τε καὶ τείχη διελομένη ἡ στρατιὰ, ἔκ τε τοῦ προαστείου λίθοις καὶ πλίνθοις χρώμενοι, καὶ κόπτοντες τὰ δένδρα καὶ ὕλην, ἀπεσταύρουν, εἴ πη δέοιτό τι· καὶ αἱ οἰκίαι τοῦ προαστείου ἐπάλξεις λαμβάνουσαι αὐταὶ ὑπῆρχον ἔρυμα. 3. καὶ ταύτην μὲν τὴν ἡμέραν ὅλην εἰργάζοντο· τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ περὶ δείλην τὸ τεῖχος ὅσον οὐκ ἀπετετέλεστο, καὶ οἱ ἐν τῇ Νισαίᾳ δείσαντες, σίτου τε ἀπορίᾳ, (ἐφ' ἡμέραν γὰρ ἐκ τῆς ἄνω πόλεως ἐχρῶντο,) καὶ τοὺς Πελοποννησίους οὐ νομίζοντες ταχὺ ἐπιβοηθήσειν, τούς τε Μεγαρέας πολεμίους ἡγούμενοι, ξυνέβησαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ῥητοῦ μὲν ἕκαστον ἀργυρίου ἀπολυθῆναι, ὅπλα παραδόντας, τοῖς δὲ Λακεδαιμονίοις, τῷ τε ἄρχοντι καὶ εἴτις ἄλλος ἐνῆν, χρῆσθαι Ἀθηναίους ὅ τι ἂν βούλωνται. 4. ἐπὶ τούτοις ὁμολογήσαντες ἐξῆλθον. καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὰ μακρὰ τείχη ἀπορρήξαντες ἀπὸ τῆς τῶν Μεγαρέων πόλεως, καὶ τὴν Νίσαιαν παραλαβόντες, τἆλλα παρεσκεύαζοντο.

LXX. Βρασίδας δὲ ὁ Τέλλιδος, Λακεδαιμόνιος, κατὰ τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ἐτύγχανε περὶ Σικυῶνα καὶ Κόρινθον ὢν, ἐπὶ Θράκης στρα-as said of many; the sense, as expressed in other words, being, 'if they would not be quiet and listen to reason.'

Ch. LXIX. 2. σίδηρός τε—καὶ λιθουργοί] 'iron and stone-cutters.' The iron was necessary for the purpose of forming the iron cramps with which the coping-stones were fastened (see note on i. 93); or perhaps the numerous tools, as spades, mattocks, &c., that would be required for the work of circumvallation, which implied the digging a very deep and wide ditch: and by the term λιθουργοὶ may be denoted simply masons. At ἀρξάμενοι, just after, is to be supplied ἀπεσταύρουν or περιετείχιζον.

διελομένη] This was usual. See ii. 78. Προαστείου. Meaning, as Arnold explains, an open space, (like the parks in our metropolis,) with trees and walks, used as a ground for military exercise and reviews, and public games. The houses in question, occasionally of the largest size, are described as ἐπάλξεις λαμβάνουσαι, 'furnished with battlements;' and so themselves forming a defence.

3. τῷ ἄρχοντι] 'the Spartan commander of the Peloponnesian garrison.'

4. ἀπορρήξαντες] Not meaning (as some explain) that they razed the long walls, but only that they beat down that part which joined to the city wall of Megara, and which, if left standing, would have been some defence to the place.

Ch. LXX. 1. ἐτύγχανε περὶ Σικυῶνα καὶ Κόρινθον] Meaning that Brasidas (to whose courage and ability Sparta was indebted for that favourable turn which her affairs now took and afterwards continued to take) happened to be engaged in the territories of Sicyon and Corinth, levying troops to aid in an expedition which was about to be sent (in order to effect a diversion) into Thrace and maritime Macedonia, to attack the Athenian possessions in that quarter.

τιὰν παρασκευαζόμενος. καὶ ὡς ἤσθετο τῶν τειχῶν τὴν ἅλωσιν, δείσας περί τε τοῖς ἐν τῇ Νισαίᾳ Πελοποννησίοις, καὶ μὴ τὰ Μέγαρα ληφθῇ, πέμπει ἐς τε τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς, κελεύων κατὰ τάχος στρατιᾷ ἀπαντῆσαι ἐπὶ Τριποδίσκον, (ἔστι δὲ κώμη τῆς Μεγαρίδος ὄνομα τοῦτο ἔχουσα, ὑπὸ τῷ ὄρει τῇ Γερανίᾳ) καὶ αὐτὸς ἔχων ἦλθεν ἑπτακοσίους μὲν καὶ δισχιλίους Κορινθίων ὁπλίτας, Φλιασίων δὲ τετρακοσίους, Σικυωνίων δὲ ἑξακοσίους, καὶ τοὺς μεθ' αὑτοῦ, ὅσοι ἤδη ξυνειλεγμένοι ἦσαν, οἰόμενος τὴν Νίσαιαν ἔτι καταλήψεσθαι ἀνάλωτον. 2. ὡς δὲ ἐπύθετο, (ἔτυχε γὰρ νυκτὸς ἐπὶ τὸν Τριποδίσκον ἐξελθὼν,) ἀπολέξας τριακοσίους τοῦ στρατοῦ, πρὶν ἔκπυστος γενέσθαι, προσῆλθε τῇ τῶν Μεγαρέων πόλει, λαθὼν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ὄντας περὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, βουλόμενος μὲν τῷ λόγῳ, καὶ ἅμα, εἰ δύναιτο, ἔργῳ τῆς Νισαίας πειρᾶσαι, τὸ δὲ μέγιστον, τὴν τῶν Μεγαρέων πόλιν εἰσελθὼν βεβαιώσασθαι. καὶ ἠξίου δέξασθαι σφᾶς, λέγων ἐν ἐλπίδι εἶναι ἀναλαβεῖν Νίσαιαν. LXXI. Αἱ δὲ τῶν Μεγαρέων στάσεις φοβούμεναι, οἱ μὲν, μὴ, τοὺς φεύγοντας σφίσιν ἐσαγαγὼν, αὐτοὺς ἐκβάλῃ, οἱ δὲ, μὴ αὐτὸ τοῦτο ὁ δῆμος δείσας ἐπιθῆται σφίσι, καὶ ἡ πόλις, ἐν μάχῃ καθ' αὑτὴν οὖσα, ἐγγὺς ἐφεδρευόντων Ἀθηναίων ἀπόληται, οὐκ ἐδέξαντο, ἀλλ' ἀμφοτέροις ἐδόκει ἡσυχάσασι τὸ μέλλον περιϊδεῖν· ἤλπιζον γὰρ καὶ μάχην ἑκατέροι ἔσεσθαι τῶν τε Ἀθηναίων καὶ τῶν προσβοηθησάντων, καὶ οὕτω σφίσιν ἀσφαλεστέρως ἔχειν, οἷς τις εἴη εὔνους, κρατήσασι προσχωρῆσαι. 2. ὁ δὲ Βρασίδας ὡς οὐκ ἔπειθεν, ἀνεχώρησε πάλιν ἐς τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα.

LXXII. Ἅμα δὲ τῇ ἕῳ οἱ Βοιωτοὶ παρῆσαν, διανενοημένοι μὲν, καὶ πρὶν Βρασίδαν πέμψαι, βοηθεῖν ἐπὶ τὰ Μέγαρα, ὡς οὐκ ἀλλοτρίου ὄντος τοῦ κινδύνου, καὶ ἤδη ὄντες πανστρατιᾷ Πλαταιᾶσιν· ἐπειδὴ δὲ καὶ ἦλθεν ὁ ἄγγελος, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἐρρώσθησαν, καὶ ἀποστείλαντες διακοσίους καὶ δισχιλίους ὁπλίτας καὶ ἱππέας ἑξακοσίους, τοῖς πλείοσιν ἀπῆλθον πάλιν. 2. παρόντος δὲ ἤδη ξύμπαντος τοῦ στρατεύματος, ὁπλιτῶν οὐκ ἔλασσον ἑξακισχιλίων, καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων τῶν μὲν ὁπλιτῶν περὶ τὴν Νίσαιαν ὄντων καὶ τὴν θάλασ-

For vulg. στρατιὰν, Haack and Poppo have edited, from the conjecture of Portus, στρατείαν; such being, they think, required by the sense. I have, however, thought proper, with Bekker and Goeller, to retain the former; the word being here used, as occasionally elsewhere, in a middle sense between that of army and expedition, to denote what we express by armament.

2. ἀναλαβεῖν] On the force of the aorist see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 501.

Ch. LXXI. 1. τὸ μέλλον περιϊδεῖν] 'Circumspicere, eventum aucupantibus exspectare.' (Bauer.) 'Ita τὸ μέλλον περιορᾶσθαι,' Appian, vol. iii. 379. (Poppo.)

καὶ οὕτω — προσχωρῆσαι] 'Atque ita sibi tutius esse in eorum, quibus aliquis benevolus esset, deditionem ubi vicissent, concedere.' (Poppo.)

Ch. LXXII. 1. οὐκ ἀλλοτρίου] In this is implied ἀλλ' οἰκείου, (as expressed at ii. 15, οἰκεῖον κίνδυνον ἔξειν,) on the well-known principle, 'Tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet.'

σαν ἐν τάξει, τῶν δὲ ψιλῶν ἀνὰ τὸ πεδίον ἐσκεδασμένων, οἱ ἱππῆς οἱ τῶν Βοιωτῶν, ἀπροσδοκήτοις ἐπιπεσόντες τοῖς ψιλοῖς, ἔτρεψαν ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν· ἐν γὰρ τῷ πρὸ τοῦ οὐδεμία βοήθειά πω τοῖς Μεγαρεῦσιν οὐδαμόθεν ἐπῆλθεν. 3. ἀντεπεξελάσαντες δὲ καὶ οἱ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἐς χεῖρας ἦεσαν, καὶ ἐγένετο ἱππομαχία ἐπὶ πολύ, ἐν ᾗ ἀξιοῦσιν ἑκάτεροι οὐχ ἧσσους γενέσθαι. 4. τὸν μὲν γὰρ ἵππαρχον τῶν Βοιωτῶν, καὶ ἄλλους τινὰς οὐ πολλούς, πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν Νίσαιαν προσελάσαντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ ἀποκτείναντες, ἐσκύλευσαν, καὶ τῶν τε νεκρῶν τούτων κρατήσαντες, ὑποσπόνδους ἀπέδοσαν, καὶ τροπαῖον ἔστησαν· οὐ μέντοι ἔν γε τῷ παντὶ ἔργῳ βεβαίως οὐδέτεροι τελευτήσαντες ἀπεκρίθησαν, ἀλλ' οἱ μὲν Βοιωτοὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἑαυτῶν, οἱ δὲ ἐπὶ τὴν Νίσαιαν.

LXXIII. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο Βρασίδας καὶ τὸ στράτευμα ἐχώρουν ἐγγυτέρω τῆς θαλάσσης καὶ τῆς τῶν Μεγαρέων πόλεως, καὶ καταλαβόντες χωρίον ἐπιτήδειον, παραταξάμενοι ἡσύχαζον, οἰόμενοι σφίσιν ἐπιέναι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ τοὺς Μεγαρέας ἐπιστάμενοι περιορωμένους ὁποτέρων ἡ νίκη ἔσται. 2. καλῶς δὲ ἐνόμιζον σφίσιν ἀμφότερα ἔχειν, ἅμα μὲν τὸ μὴ ἐπιχειρεῖν προτέρους, μηδὲ μάχης καὶ κινδύνου ἑκόντας ἄρξαι,—ἐπειδή γε ἐν φανερῷ ἔδειξαν

2. ἔτρεψαν ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν] 'routed.' The full sense intended is, 'routed and pursued them to the sea-side.' Compare Josh. x. 11.

4. βεβαίως οὐδέτεροι τελευτήσαντες ἀπεκρίθησαν] Portus, Haack, Arnold, and Poppo are agreed that βεβαίως is to be construed with τελευτ.; the sense, they say, being, 'neutri certum pugnæ eventum adepti.' But βεβ. τελ. thus understood in the sense assigned by Arnold, 'with a decided result,' would surely be a strange and unheard of mode of expression. Hence I am inclined to suspect that the word βεβ. should be taken with ἀπεκρίθησαν, to signify dirempti sunt à pugnâ (a sense more usually expressed by διεκρίθησαν): and thus βεβαίως will mean decisirely, i. e. with a sure or decisive result, such as shall settle the event. Compare vi. 37, 4, τὸν πόλεμον μήπω βεβαίως καταλελυμένους. Plut. viii. 305, βεβαίως ἀπαγγέλλειν. Arrian, E. A. ii. 17, 8. vi. 19, 4, βεβαίως θαλασσοκρατεῖν. Accordingly τελευτήσαντες, scil. τὴν μάχην, will signify, 'having ceased fighting.'

CH. LXXIII. 1. οἰόμενοι σφίσιν ἐπιέναι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους] Render, 'supposing that the Athenians would [from their characteristic impetuosity] attack them,' 'be the assailants.' For such may be supposed to be the real sense intended.

2. καλῶς δὲ ἐνόμιζον—ἦλθον] Of this long, involved, and perplexed passage the sense may be thus expressed: 'for they conceived that this policy was expedient both ways to them, both not attacking first, nor spontaneously encountering battle and danger (for they had plainly showed themselves to be ready for battle, by which the credit of victory, without the labour, would, they thought, justly be ascribed to them). At the same time it would, they thought, happen right in respect of the Megareans: for had they (i. e. the Peloponnesians) not come up in sight, the thing would not have been suspended on the die of fortune, but the Megareans would clearly have been deprived of their city, as beaten men; but now, even should the Athenians not choose to hazard a battle, they would obtain the object for which they came without striking a stroke.' With respect to the construction, ἀμφότερα is, as Arnold observes, explained by what follows, ἅμα μὲν τὸ μὴ ἐπιχειρεῖν—ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ δὲ, &c., which formulæ correspond to each other. And here Haack well renders, 'utrumque sibi successurum putarunt, et cunctationem — et victoriæ opinionem, si forte Athenienses vel ipsi prælium detrectarent.'

The words ἐπειδή γε—ἂν τίθεσθαι are parenthetical, and serve the purpose of ἑτοῖμοι ὄντες ἀμύνεσθαι, καὶ αὐτοῖς, ὥσπερ ἀκονιτὶ, τὴν νίκην δικαίως ἂν τίθεσθαι,—ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ δὲ καὶ πρὸς τοὺς Μεγαρέας ὀρθῶς ξυμβαίνειν· εἰ μὲν γὰρ μὴ ὤφθησαν ἐλθόντες, οὐκ ἂν ἐν τύχῃ γίγνεσθαι σφίσιν, ἀλλὰ σαφῶς ἄν, ὥσπερ ἡσσηθέντων, στερηθῆναι εὐθὺς τῆς πόλεως· νῦν δὲ, κἂν τυχεῖν αὐτοὺς Ἀθηναίους μὴ βουληθέντας ἀγωνίζεσθαι, ὥστε ἀμαχεὶ ἂν περιγενέσθαι αὐτοῖς ὧν ἕνεκα ἦλθον. 3. ὅπερ καὶ ἐγένετο. οἱ γὰρ Μεγαρῆς—ὡς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐτάξαντο μὲν παρὰ τὰ μακρὰ τείχη ἐξελθόντες, ἡσύχαζον δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ, μὴ ἐπιόντων, λογιζόμενοι, καὶ οἱ ἐκείνων στρατηγοὶ, μὴ ἀντίπαλον εἶναι σφίσι τὸν κίνδυνον, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὰ πλείω αὐτοῖς προεκεχωρήκει, explanation; q. d. 'The thing was right,' i. e. right for them; since they had shown, &c.; or, according to the statement of the connexion as offered by Poppo, ['They had no need to fight;] since they had plainly shown,' &c. That the portion in question is (what I had long ago maintained it to be) parenthetical, Poppo, I find, now admits. On the expression ἀκονιτί, 'sine pulvere et labore,' see Blomf. on Æschyl. Prom. 216. At καὶ αὐτοῖς — τίθεσθαι must, as Poppo points out, be supplied the word ἐνόμιζον, ex primario enunciato. The simple verb τίθεσθαι is here used for the compound προστίθεσθαι.

The words following, ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ—ξυμβαίνειν, contain, as Poppo points out, an anantapodoton for ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ δὲ τὸ πρὸς τοὺς Μεγαρέας. From the manifest intended coherence it is plain that, as Dr. Arnold says, the words ὀρθῶς ξυμβαίνειν are merely a repetition of the preceding καλῶς ἔχειν, being added for perspicuity sake.

οὐκ ἂν ἐν τύχῃ γίγνεσθαι σφίσι] Reiske well renders, 'nisi venissent ipsi (Lacedæmonii), non fuisse futurum, ut [res] in aleam daretur, aut in discrimen veniret.' The verb γίγνεσθαι is, as Goeller points out, to be taken impersonally: and the genit. ἡσσηθέντων stands for the nominat., which the construction requires; for there is the same subject to the participle as to the infin. στερηθῆναι.

ὥστε ἀμαχεὶ ἄν, &c.] Ὥστε here bears the sense atque ita: and the sense of the clause is well represented by Portus as follows: 'Jam vero illud etiam fortasse eventurum, ut ipsi Athenienses prælium detrectarent, atque ita res eas, quarum causa venerant, sibi sine prælio conservatum iri;' except that the import of the phrase περιγίγνεταί μοί τι is rather obvenit mihi, a sense established and illustrated by Abresch in Dil. Thucyd. p. 343, and Irmisch on Herodian, iii. 3, 16. See also note on i. 144. ii. 39.

3. οἱ γὰρ Μεγαρῆς, &c.] The verb to this nomin. is not brought in till οὕτω δή, some ten lines off, after various changes of construction and a diversity of involutions. The construction here is well laid down by Goeller as follows: 'οἱ γὰρ Μεγαρῆς, ὡς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, &c.—οὕτω δή—οἱ τῶν φευγόντων φίλοι Μεγαρῆς—ἀνοίγουσι τὰς πύλας. Subjectum sententiæ primariæ, quia multa interposita sunt, post hæc verba interposita alio modo et quidem accuratius definitum repetitur: οἱ Μεγαρῆς—οἱ τῶν φευγόντων φίλοι Μεγαρῆς. Interpositorum hæc structura est: ὡς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐτάξαντο μὲν παρὰ τὰ μακρὰ τείχη ἐξελθόντες, ἡσύχαζον δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ μὴ ἐπιόντων—χρόνου δὲ ἐπισχόντες, καὶ ὡς οὐδὲν ἀφ' ἑκατέρων ἐπεχειρεῖτο, ἀπῆλθον πρότερον (οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι) ἐς τὴν Νίσαιαν καὶ αὖθις οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι ὅθενπερ ὡρμήθησαν. Subjectum οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι post ἀπῆλθον consulto repetitum est propter plurima, quæ interposita facile efficere potuerunt, ut lecturi subjectum non in mente retinerent.' This view, which had also occurred to Hobbes, has been subsequently adopted by Levêque, Heilm., Poppo, and Arnold.

The words λογιζόμενοι—οἱ—στρατηγοὶ by a certain use (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 562, 1.) stand for λογιζομένων τῶν στρατηγῶν. Of the expression following, μὴ ἀντίπαλον εἶναι σφίσι τὸν κίνδυνον, the full sense is, 'that the danger would not be equal to themselves [and to their enemies].'

ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὰ πλείω—βλαφθῆναι] The difficulty of this obscure sentence will be much lessened by connecting ἀρξασι with σφίσι, and repeating κίνδυνον. The sense may be thus expressed: 'the danger to them, I say, if they should, even after they had for the most part experienced success, ἄρξασι μαχης πρὸς πλείονας αὐτῶν, ἢ λαβεῖν νικήσαντας Μέγαρα, ἢ σφαλέντας, τῷ βελτίστῳ τοῦ ὁπλιτικοῦ βλαφθῆναι· τοῖς δὲ ξυμπάσης τῆς δυνάμεως † καὶ τῶν παρόντων μέρος †ἕκαστον κινδυνεύειν εἰκότως ἐθέλειν τολμᾶν· χρόνον δὲ ἐπισχόντες, καὶ ὡς οὐδὲν ἀφ' ἑκατέρων ἐπεχειρεῖτο, ἀπῆλθον πρότερον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὴν Νίσαιαν, καὶ αὖθις οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι ὅθενπερ ὡρμήθησαν—οὕτω δὴ τῷ μὲν Βρασίδᾳ αὐτῷ καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν πόλεων ἄρχουσιν οἱ τῶν φευγόντων φίλοι Μεγαρῆς, ὡς ἐπικρατήσαντι καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων οὐκέτι ἐθελησάντων μάχεσθαι, θαρσοῦντες μᾶλλον, ἀνοίγουσί τε τὰς πύλας, καὶ δεξάμενοι, καταπεπληγμένων ἤδη τῶν πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους πραξάντων, ἐς λόγους ἔρχονται. LXXIV. Καὶ ὕστερον ὁ μὲν, διαλυθέντων τῶν ξυμμάχων κατὰ πόλεις, ἐπανελθὼν καὶ αὐτὸς ἐς τὴν Κόρινθον, τὴν ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης στρατείαν παρεσκεύαζεν, ἵναπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον ὥρμητο· οἱ δὲ ἐν τῇ πόλει Μεγαρῆς, ἀποχωρησάντων καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπ' οἴκου, ὅσοι μὲν τῶν πραγμάτων πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους μάλιστα μετέσχον, εἰδότες ὅτι ὤφθησαν, εὐθὺς ὑπεξῆλθον· οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι, κοινολογησάμενοι τοῖς τῶν φευγόντων φίλοις, κατάγουσι τοὺς ἐκ Πηγῶν, ὁρκώσαντες πίστεσι μεγάλαις μηδὲν μνησικακήσειν, βουλεύσειν δὲ τῇ πόλει τὰ ἄριστα. 2. οἱ δὲ, ἐπειδὴ ἐν ταῖς ἀρχαῖς commence battle against numbers superior to their own, either if they should conquer, to only take Megara, or, if defeated, to suffer loss in the best portion of their heavy infantry.' If it be thought an objection to this interpretation, that it represents the taking of Megara as one of two dangers, be it considered that it is not necessary to strain the sense of κίνδυνον. Otherwise we must regard the sentence as very imperfectly developed, anomalous, and devoid of construction, but of which we may regard the following as the sense: 'Since if, after they had generally experienced success, they would if they ventured on a battle with superior numbers, either, if they conquered, only capture Megara, or,' &c.

CH. LXXIV. 1. ἵναπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον ὥρμητο] Compare supra ch. 48, ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν, ἵναπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον ὥρμητο. In each of these cases ὁρμᾶσθαι denotes impulse or the bent of purpose, as signified by an ἐπὶ, or an εἰς followed by an accus. of the object, (as at v. 1. vi. 9 & 78. vii. 21.) or by an infin. of action, as v. 6, ὁρμ. στρατεύειν, and Herodot. ix. 59, ὡρμωμένους διώκειν: though sometimes it is followed by an adverb of place, where the action is to come to pass, as here and in Herodot. i. 158, ὁρμεωμένου δὲ ταύτῃ τοῦ πλήθεος. And so our idiom hither, or whither, bound: in which case there is also an ellipsis of a verb denoting to go.

τῶν πραγμάτων πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους μάλιστα μετέσχον] 'had participated in the correspondence with the Athenians;' where, as Abresch points out, the verbal has the regimen of the verb πράσσεσθαι. Of ὤφθησαν the sense is, 'they were marked and noted as.' By οἱ ἄλλοι are to be understood chiefly τὰ μέσα τῶν πολιτῶν, those who had been connected with neither faction: though there may be included, as Poppo suggests, those friends of the Athenians who had been less concerned in the plan of delivering up the city. Of course, as applied to the latter, κατάγουσι can only imply concurrence in the wishes of the oligarchical and the moderate parties. In fact, they (as Bp. Thirlwall observes) suffered them to open the gates to Brasidas, and to confer with him on the means of securing the Spartan interest in Megara, and afterwards consented to the recalling of the exiles from Pegæ.

ὁρκώσαντες πίστεσι] 'having bound them by the faith of solemn oaths.' Compare Dio Cass. p. 62, ὥρκωσαν αὐτὸν πίστεσι μεγάλαις, ἢ μὴν ἐπανήξειν, and infra iv. 86 & 88. viii. 75.

2. ἐν ταῖς ἀρχαῖς] 'in the offices of magistracy and government.' Ἐξέτασιν ἐγένοντο, καὶ ἐξέτασιν ὅπλων ἐποιήσαντο, διαστήσαντες τοὺς λόχους, ἐξελέξαντο τῶν τε ἐχθρῶν καὶ οἳ ἐδόκουν μάλιστα ξυμπρᾶξαι τὰ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ἄνδρας ὡς ἑκατόν· καὶ τούτων πέρι ἀναγκάσαντες τὸν δῆμον ψῆφον φανερὰν διενεγκεῖν, ὡς κατεγνώσθησαν, ἔκτειναν, καὶ ἐς ὀλιγαρχίαν τὰ μάλιστα κατέστησαν τὴν πόλιν. καὶ πλεῖστον δὴ χρόνον αὕτη ὑπ' ἐλαχίστων ‡ γενομένη ἐκ στάσεως μετάστασις ξυνέμεινεν.

LXXV. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους, τῆς Ἀντάνδρου ὑπὸ τῶν Μυτιληναίων, ὥσπερ διενοοῦντο, μελλούσης κατασκευάζεσθαι, οἱ τῶν ἀργυρολόγων Ἀθηναίων στρατηγοὶ, Δημόδοκος καὶ Ἀριστείδης, ὅπλων. Duker objects to the version arma recognoscere, or lustrari, and does not see why the expression should not be taken, as at vi. 96, to signify exercitum recensere, and compares Xen. Cyr. iv. 1, ἐξέτασιν ἐν τοῖς ὅπλοις ποιεῖσθαι, and Anab. v. 3, 3, ἐξέτασις ἐν τοῖς ὅπλοις. Thus ὅπλων will stand for ὁπλιτῶν, as it is taken by Schneider on the latter passage of Xenophon. Although, however, the chief purpose of the review must have been to inspect the men, (so Dio Cass. 84, 38, ἐξέτασις τῶν στρατιωτῶν, and 804, 47. 1036, 87, ἐξέτασις τῶν ἱππέων, compare with a passage of our author infra vi. 96.) yet that, of course, implied an inspection of the arms; and vice versâ an inspection of the arms and accoutrements implied that of the men: so that Cicero, contra Cæc. 21, well argues, 'tanquam si arma militis inspicienda sint, ita probat (for examinat, the expression used in Agr. ii. 34.) armatum.' In the present case in the review is not implied an inspection of arms, but it was the custom that the arms should be piled for that purpose (which was expressed by τίθεσθαι τὰ ὅπλα); and consequently opportunity was given for the magistrates to seize the arms.

διαστήσαντες τοὺς λόχους] The purpose of this separate review was to prevent the possibility of combination, and consequent tumult, and secure the effectual mastery in detail of the whole. Of ψῆφον φανερὰν διενεγκεῖν the sense is, 'to pass their vote [of condemnation or acquittal] publicly, and not by ballot:' the policy being, as Hobbes observes, 'that thus they should not dare but to condemn them; which they would not have done had the vote been given by secret suffrage.'

γενομένη] So Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller edit, from several of the best MSS., for vulg. νεμομένη, which, notwithstanding what Arnold urges in its favour, is incapable of any tolerable sense: and indeed the expression νεμομένη μετάστασις is by Arnold allowed to be harsh and unusual. He might have said unprecedented; for νέμειν is never used in the sense administrare, except in the phrase νέμειν πόλιν: certainly never in the passive. Moreover, the phrase νέμειν μετάστασιν, in the sense 'to administer an altered constitution,' would be inexpressibly harsh. Finally, as to the argument urged by Arnold, that 'it does not appear from the story that the revolution was effected by a very few persons,'—that is of little weight, since, as he himself admits, the persons most active in effecting the change may have been only a few out of the whole body of the restored exiles. Indeed these not only may, but must have been such, since the persons in question are those just designated as being in the offices of state, and so could not be more than a few; though doubtless the most powerful and influential of the number.

The term μετάστασις denotes here, as at vi. 20, not mutatio, the change itself, but, by metonymy, the result thereof in the altered state of the constitution. However, though our author does not expressly say that the oligarchy established at Megara was a very narrow one, yet such is implied in the expression ὑπ' ἐλαχίστων γενομένη, ('brought about by a few,') and still more in the words ἐς ὀλιγαρχίαν τὰ μάλιστα, ('in the greatest degree,' 'to the utmost degree,') κατέστησαν τὴν πόλιν. The phrase πλεῖστον δὴ χρόνον is to be taken comparatè, to denote (as Bp. Thirlwall expresses it) a much longer time than such governments were commonly able to stand.

CH. LXXV. 1. τῶν Μυτιληναίων] Meaning the Mitylenæan and Lesbian exiles mentioned supra ch. 52. Κατασκευάζεσθαι denotes the repairing and occasionally strengthening the walls, expressed at ch. 52 by the term κρατυνάμενοι. On ἀργυρολόγων, scil. νεῶν, see ὄντες περὶ Ἑλλήσποντον, (ὁ γὰρ τρίτος αὐτῶν, Λάμαχος, δέκα ναυσὶν ἐς τὸν Πόντον ἐσεπεπλεύκει,) ὡς ἠσθάνοντο τὴν παρασκευὴν τοῦ χωρίου, καὶ ἐδόκει αὐτοῖς δεινὸν εἶναι μὴ, ὥσπερ τὰ Ἄναια ἐπὶ τῇ Σάμῳ, γένηται, ἔνθα οἱ φεύγοντες τῶν Σαμίων καταστάντες, τούς τε Πελοποννησίους ὠφέλουν ἐς τὰ ναυτικὰ, κυβερνήτας πέμποντες, καὶ τοὺς ἐν τῇ πόλει Σαμίους ἐς ταραχὴν καθίστασαν, καὶ τοὺς ἐξιόντας ἐδέχοντο· οὕτω δὴ ξυναγείραντες ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμμάχων στρατιὰν, καὶ πλεύσαντες, μάχῃ τε νικήσαντες τοὺς ἐκ τῆς Ἀντάνδρου ἐπεξελθόντας, ἀναλαμβάνουσι τὸ χωρίον πάλιν. 2. καὶ οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον, ἐς τὸν Πόντον ἐσπλεύσας Λάμαχος, ἐν τῇ Ἡρακλεώτιδι † ὁρμήσας ἐς τὸν Κάληκα ποταμὸν, ἀπόλλυσι τὰς ναῦς, ὕδατος ἄνωθεν γενομένου, καὶ κατελθόντος αἰφνιδίου τοῦ ῥεύματος· αὐτός τε καὶ ἡ στρατιὰ πεζῇ διὰ Βιθυνῶν Θρᾳκῶν, οἵ εἰσι πέραν ἐν τῇ

note supra ch. 50. The term παρασκευὴν, further on, corresponds, as Poppo observes, to the foregoing κατασκευάζεσθαι; for otherwise κατασκευὴ is the more usual term, and may be paralleled by the Fr. garnison. See note on ii. 14 & 85.

δεινὸν εἶναι—γένηται] 'that there was reason to fear (compare δεινὸν at iii. 102.) lest it should be there as it had been in the case at Anæa against Samos.' Κυβερνήτας πέμποντες, 'sending them pilots;' of which, it appears from i. 143, they stood in great need: for Pericles in that passage, contrasting the Athenians with the Peloponnesians, says, 'we have pilots of our own citizens;' meaning that they had not to fetch them from foreign states.

2. ὁρμήσας ἐς τὸν Κάληκα ποταμὸν] I have followed Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in adopting, for vulg. ὁρμίσας, ὁρμήσας; though Arnold thinks the reading here doubtful; first, because almost all the best MSS. have that reading; secondly, because, as Poppo shows, ὁρμίσας for ὁρμισάμενος would be soloecistic: and yet neither can ὁρμίσας be joined, according to the view of Arnold and Goeller, with the subsequent τὰς ναῦς; nor is Arnold justified in saying that ὁρμίζειν ἐς τὸν Κάληκα is more correct than ὁρμεῖν ἐς τὸν Κάληκα. At least ὁρμεῖν ἐς τὸν Κάληκα is not less correct; for as κεῖσθαι ἐς, &c. frequently signifies 'to lie or be seated at a place,' why should not ὁρμεῖν ἐς bear the sense 'to lie at anchor at a place?' Such is the use of καθέζεσθαι ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον, i. 24, and καθίζειν ἐς, iii. 75; and in a passage of St. Mark, xiii. 3, καθῆσθαι εἰς. This belongs to one of those cases treated of by Passow in v. εἰς, Winer's Gr. § 54, 4, 6, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 596, where the ἐς is justifiable on the ground that the idea of a previous coming into that place is implied in the context. Thus, in the present instance, ὁρμίσας is implied in ὁρμήσας; though at first sight ὁρμίσας would seem necessary; and hence it was doubtless introduced by the Aristarchuli.

ὕδατος ἄνωθεν γενομένου] The word ἄνωθεν might here bear the sense 'the upper country:' but considering that the Calix is, as Arnold observes, hardly more than a mountain-torrent, and therefore can have no upper country whence to receive water, it is best explained to signify cœlitus, 'from the sky,' as Xen. Mem. iv. 3, 14, ὁ Κεραυνὸς ἄνωθεν ἀφίεται, and Symp. vi. 7, where the gods are said ἄνωθεν φῶς παρέχειν. Compare with this the phrase ὕδωρ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ occurring in another passage of our author, ii. 77, 6, and others which I have, in the note there, adduced from various classical writers.

The next words, κατελθόντος αἰφνιδίου τοῦ ῥεύματος, are explanatory of the manner of the thing. By ῥεῦμα is denoted a water-flood, such as is produced by mountain-torrents rushing down from a short distance to the plain or sea, after a sudden and violent rain, and carrying all before it. In the present instance the evil might be increased by a water-spout, (or vertical column of water rising out of the sea,) which might be dashed against the ships, and, together with the land-flood, sweep the ships from the place where they were hauled up on shore, and hurrying them to the sea, water-logged as they would be, swamped them.

Ἀσίᾳ, ἀφικνεῖται ἐς Χαλκηδόνα, τὴν ἐπὶ τῷ στόματι τοῦ Πόντου, Μεγαρέων ἀποικίαν.

LXXVI. Ἐν δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει καὶ Δημοσθένης Ἀθηναίων στρατηγὸς τεσσαράκοντα ναυσὶν ἀφικνεῖται ἐς Ναύπακτον, εὐθὺς μετὰ τὴν ἐκ τῆς Μεγαρίδος ἀναχώρησιν. 2. τῷ γὰρ Ἱπποκράτει καὶ ἐκείνῳ τὰ Βοιώτια πράγματα ἀπό τινων ἀνδρῶν ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν ἐπράσσετο, βουλομένων μεταστῆσαι τὸν κόσμον καὶ ἐς δημοκρατίαν, ὥσπερ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, τρέψαι· καὶ Πτοιοδώρου μάλιστ', ἀνδρὸς φυγάδος ἐκ Θηβῶν, ἐσηγουμένου, τάδε αὐτοῖς παρεσκευάσθη. 3. Σίφας μὲν ἔμελλόν τινες προδώσειν· αἱ δὲ Σίφαι εἰσὶ τῆς Θεσπικῆς γῆς ἐν τῷ Κρισαίῳ κόλπῳ ἐπιθαλασσίδιοι. Χαιρώνειαν δὲ, ἣ ἐς Ὀρχομενὸν τὸν Μινύειον πρότερον καλούμενον, νῦν δὲ Βοιώτιον, ξυντελεῖ, ἄλλοι ἐξ Ὀρχομενοῦ ἐνεδίδοσαν, καὶ οἱ Ὀρχομενίων φυγάδες ξυνέπρασσον τὰ μάλιστα, καὶ ἄνδρας ἐμισθοῦντο ἐκ Πελοποννήσου· ἔστι δὲ ἡ Χαιρώνεια ἔσχατον τῆς Βοιωτίας πρὸς τῇ Φανοτίδι τῆς Φωκίδος, καὶ Φωκέων μετεῖχόν τινες. 4. τοὺς δὲ Ἀθηναίους ἔδει Δήλιον καταλαβεῖν, τὸ ἐν τῇ Ταναγραίᾳ πρὸς Εὔβοιαν

Χαλκηδόνα] Poppo shows that the true spelling (as found on coins, and as established by a passage of Herodot. iv. 144.) is ἡ Καλχηδών; but that for this the Attic writers used Χαλκηδών, and the Latin ones, following them, Chalcedon.

CH. LXXVI. 2. πράγματα—ἐπράσσετο] The term πράσσ. has here the sense treated of by Duker on iv. 89, denoting a drawing over of others to one party, by devices or stratagems, or secret correspondence, whereby the thing is so transacted or concerted as to be finally brought about. By πράγματα is here meant state of affairs, or rather their management, (meaning the government,) as i. 89, 1, ἦλθον ἐπὶ τὰ πράγματα. Ἀπό τινων ἀνδρῶν, 'on the part of certain persons.' On this sense of ἀπὸ see note on i. 17. At τὸν κόσμον supply ἔτρεψαν, taken from τρέψαι. This attempt at revolution in Bœotia is well accounted for by Mitford as arising from the effects produced by the advantages recently gained by Athens in the war; whence the partisans of democracy, especially when exiles, watched every opportunity to profit from this turn of affairs to introduce their favourite form of government.

3. ἐς Ὀρχομενὸν—ξυντελεῖ] contributa est Orchomeno, 'was subject to the political control of;' on which signification see note on ii. 15. Chæronea was one of the dependent states called ξύμμοροι or ξυντελεῖς, politically subject to the larger ones, and bound to furnish a certain proportion of troops or money, to make up their contingent of the sovereign states to which they belonged; as in the old Swiss constitution, certain states were attached, as subjects, to one or other of the larger cantons. See more in Mueller's Orchomenus, p. 403, and Wachsmuth's Antiq. i. 1, p. 128, sq. With the expression ἔσχατον τῆς Βοιωτίας compare a similar use of the neuter at i. 138, πολυοινότατον, where see note. By τῇ Φανοτίδι is to be understood the territory of Phanoteus or Phanote, not the town. The town in question was, as we learn from Pausan. x. 4, 1, twenty stadia from Chæronea: but the reading Πανοπέας cannot be right. Read Πανοπέα, (the ς having arisen from the έ following,) which Rom. Amæseus must have had in his MS., since he renders by Panopeum. The site of this town might easily be fixed, from the accurate description of Pausanias, at twenty stadia from Chæronea on the site of Phocis, in a ravine so near the hills as to procure them water from thence.

4. ἔδει Δήλιον καταλαβεῖν] 'it was incumbent on them,' &c., namely, by virtue of the plan formed, as at vi. 56. vii. 26. Δήλιον. This temple, and afterwards petty town, is supposed to have occupied the site of the present village of Dramisi: but from the expression imminens mari, applied to it in Livy, xxxv. 5, I suspect it to have been on a hill over-τετραμμένον Ἀπόλλωνος ἱερόν· ἅμα δὲ ταῦτα ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ῥητῇ γίγνεσθαι, ὅπως μὴ ξυμβοηθήσωσιν ἐπὶ τὸ Δήλιον οἱ Βοιωτοὶ ἀθρόοι, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τὰ σφέτερα αὐτῶν ἕκαστοι κινούμενα. 5. καὶ εἰ κατορθοῖτο ἡ πεῖρα, καὶ τὸ Δήλιον τειχισθείη, ῥᾳδίως ἤλπιζον, εἰ καὶ μὴ παραυτίκα ‡ νεωτερίζοιτό τι τῶν κατὰ τὰς πολιτείας τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς, ἐχομένων τούτων τῶν χωρίων, καὶ λῃστευομένης τῆς γῆς, καὶ οὔσης ἑκάστοις διὰ βραχέος ἀποστροφῆς, οὐ μενεῖν κατὰ χώραν τὰ πράγματα· ἀλλὰ χρόνῳ, τῶν Ἀθηναίων μὲν προσιόντων τοῖς ἀφεστηκόσι, τοῖς δὲ οὐκ οὔσης ἀθρόας τῆς δυνάμεως, καταστήσειν αὐτὰ ἐς τὸ ἐπιτήδειον· ἡ μὲν οὖν ἐπιβουλὴ τοιαύτη παρεσκευάζετο.

LXXVII. Ὁ δὲ Ἱπποκράτης αὐτὸς μὲν, ἐκ τῆς πόλεως δύναμιν ἔχων, ὁπότε καιρὸς εἴη, ἔμελλε στρατεύειν ἐς τοὺς Βοιωτούς, τὸν δὲ Δημοσθένην προαπέστειλε ταῖς τεσσαράκοντα ναυσὶν ἐς τὴν Ναύπακτον, ὅπως, ἐξ ἐκείνων τῶν χωρίων στρατὸν ξυλλέξας Ἀκαρνάνων τε καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ξυμμάχων, πλέοι ἐπὶ τὰς Σίφας, ὡς προδοθησομένας· ἡμέρα δ' αὐτοῖς εἴρητο, ᾗ ἔδει ἅμα ταῦτα πράσσειν. 2. καὶ ὁ μὲν Δημοσθένης ἀφικόμενος, Οἰνιάδας δὲ, ὑπό τε Ἀκαρνάνων πάντων κατηναγκασμένους καταλαβὼν ἐς τὴν Ἀθηναίων ξυμμαχίαν, καὶ αὐτὸς ἀναστήσας τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν τὸ ἐκείνῃ πᾶν, ἐπὶ hanging the sea, about a mile south from Dramisi. Now this would exactly suit the distance specified in Livy, of five miles from Tanagra and thirty stadia from Aulis.

5. νεωτερίζοιτο] So Haack, Poppo, and Goeller edit, from two MSS., for vulg. νεωτερίζοι, which is retained by Bekker and Arnold, and by the latter defended on the supposition, either that πεῖρα is the nominative case to νεωτερίζοι, or that, τι being regarded as the nomin., νεωτ. is (as Bauer also takes it) used in a neuter sense, like the Latin mutare and our verb to change. But of these two methods of exposition the former would involve a harshness intolerable; and the latter proceeds on mere supposition that νεωτερίζω was one of the verbs in which the active was used in a passive sense. Far more likely is it that, as Duker suggests, the last syllable of νεωτερίζοιτο was absorbed in the following το. And the sense thus yielded is far more direct; whereas the other is feeble and jejune. And although the passive form be rare, yet it is not unprecedented, being found in a kindred passage supra ch. 41, φοβούμενοι μὴ σφίσι τι νεωτερισθῇ τῶν κατὰ τὴν χώραν, and viii. 73, 1, ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ ἐνεωτερίζετο ἤδη τὰ περὶ τὴν ὀλιγαρχίαν, where τι is left to be understood. And so also in Arrian, E. A. iii. 6, 4, τὰ ἐν Πελ. νενεωτέρισθαι, and iii. 19, 2, εἴ δή τι νεωτερισθείη τῶν ἀμφὶ Ἀλέξανδρον, and iv. 8, 3, τὰ—ἤδη νενεωτέριστο, and vii. 13, 5, μή τι νεωτερισθείη, &c. To the authority derived from MSS. which have νεωτερίζοιτο, I am enabled to add, from collation, that of the Clarend. à prima manu and the Cantab.

διὰ βραχέος ἀποστροφῆς] 'a refuge within a short distance,' i. e. in case of any disaster. Comp. viii. 75, ἀποστροφὴν σωτηρίας, where see note. Μένειν κατὰ χώραν is a phrase used of freedom from revolutionary movements. On the words, a little after, καταστήσειν αὐτὰ ἐς τὸ ἐπιτήδειον, (of which the sense is, 'they should establish the polity on such a footing as might be advantageous to them,') compare i. 18, 58. iv. 113. For ἐπιβουλὴ, two MSS., the Cass. and Cant., have ἐπιβολὴ, which Duker was inclined to prefer. But a plan for the invasion of a country, or an attempt on a fortress, is not unfrequently styled an ἐπιβουλὴ, as in Xen. Cyr. i. 5, 4. Lucian, ii. 559, 14, ὡς ἤκουσε τὴν ἐπιβουλὴν, and Thucyd. iv. 97, 1, ἐπεβούλευον, and 103, ἐπιβουλεύοντες τῷ χωρίῳ.

Ch. LXXVII. 2. Οἰνιάδας — ξυμμαχίαν] Of these words the full sense is, 'and having found the Œniadæ compelled Σαλύνθιον καὶ Ἀγραίους στρατεύσας πρῶτον, καὶ προσποιησάμενος, τἆλλα ἡτοιμάζετο ὡς ἐπὶ τὰς Σίφας, ὅταν δέῃ, ἀπαντησόμενος.

LXXVIII. Βρασίδας δὲ κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον τοῦ θέρους πορευόμενος ἑπτακοσίοις καὶ χιλίοις ὁπλίταις ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης, ἐπειδὴ ἐγένετο ἐν Ἡρακλείᾳ τῇ ἐν Τραχῖνι, καὶ, προπέμψαντος αὐτοῦ ἄγγελον ἐς Φάρσαλον παρὰ τοὺς ἐπιτηδείους, ἀξιοῦντος διάγειν ἑαυτὸν καὶ τὴν στρατιὰν, ἦλθον ἐς Μελιτίαν τῆς Ἀχαΐας Πάναιρός τε καὶ Δῶρος, καὶ Ἱπολοχίδας, καὶ Τορύλαος, καὶ Στρόφακος πρόξενος ὢν Χαλκιδέων, τότε δὴ ἐπορεύετο. 2. ἦγον δὲ καὶ ἄλλοι Θεσσαλῶν αὐτὸν καὶ ἐκ Λαρίσσης Νικονίδας, Περδίκκᾳ ἐπιτήδειος ὤν. τὴν γὰρ Θεσσαλίαν ἄλλως τε οὐκ εὔπορον ἦν διϊέναι ἄνευ ἀγωγοῦ, καὶ μετὰ ὅπλων γε δή· καὶ τοῖς πᾶσί γε ὁμοίως Ἕλλησιν ὕποπτον by the united force of the Acarnanians [to enter] into the Athenian alliance.' Here, Poppo has well seen, there is no place for the τε, but that in preference to cancelling the word, it would be advisable to alter it to τῶν, the two words being not unfrequently confounded. Of καταλαμβάνω, used as it is here, another example occurs at vii. 2, and elsewhere.

καὶ προσποιησάμενος] scil. αὐτοὺς, 'having gained over to the Athenian alliance:' a sense of the term frequent in our author: though since it is certain, from ch. 101, that the passing over was compulsory, we may render here reduced.

Ch. LXXVIII. The scene now changes to Thessaly; and in this chapter is narrated the rapid forced march of Brasidas across that country in his expedition to Macedonia and the maritime parts of Thrace.

1. Μελιτίαν τῆς Ἀχαΐας] Meaning Achaia Phthiotis and the earliest seat of the Hellenic race. Accordingly Scylax renders, 'Melitias, a town of the Achaians.' See also Pausan. p. 205, 33. Moreover, in another passage of our author infra viii. 3, there is mention of Ἀχαῖοι οἱ Φθιῶται, as also in Polyb. xxx. 7, where it is said that their territory was apportioned to the Thessalians by Antiochus, and consequently had been regarded as not in Thessaly. And such must have been the case in the time of Thucydides, otherwise Brasidas would have required a conductor. The name is almost invariably spelt Μελίταια or Μελίτεια: insomuch that I should suspect here some mistake in the MS. of Thucydides, were it not that Μελιτία is found in Dicæarchus, p. 21; and in Scylax, p. 58, we have Μελιτιάδας, in which latter passage, for Μελιτιάδας, ought certainly to be read Μελιτιάδα, meaning the district of Melitia.

Of this place the situation has been disputed, and is far from certain. By Col. Leake, North. Gr. iv. p. 470, it is fixed at Keutzlan; while by the generality of authorities it is placed at Vlako-Jano: both situations, these, too near to Pharsalus to suit with the expression of our author ἐτέλεσε (scil. ὁδὸν) further on, § 4, which implies a long day's journey, and too great a distance from Heraclea to have been accomplished. It was probably on a ridge above some point of the upper course of the Enipeus, not far from its source, (see Strabo, ix. 5, 6.) probably about five miles east from Thaumaco, as it is laid down in Lapie's Map.

2. ἀγωγοῦ] for προπομποῦ, 'a conductor.' I have here thought proper, with Poppo, to retain the colon at γε δή, (though it has been removed by Bekker and Goeller,) because these particles cannot be referred to the words following, being absolutely necessary to complete the formula ἄλλως τε, and to strengthen the limitation, or the preceding assertion in οὐκ εὔπορον. Moreover, as Poppo remarks, a sufficient objection to that punctuation exists in the circumstance, that thus there would arise an unheard of accumulation of particles, namely, καὶ—γε δὴ καὶ—γε. As to the argument urged by Arnold, that γε δὴ cannot terminate a sentence, that is at once set aside by the fact that those particles do terminate one in Plato, p. 242, 277, 557, et al.; though, indeed, in these instances, they do not in effect end the sentence, since there is always something καθεστήκει τὴν τῶν πέλας μὴ πείσαντας διέναι· τοῖς τε Ἀθηναίοις ἀεί ποτε τὸ πλῆθος τῶν Θεσσαλῶν εὔνουν ὑπῆρχεν. ὥστε, εἰ μὴ δυναστείᾳ μᾶλλον ἢ ἰσονομίᾳ ἐχρῶντο τὸ ἐγχώριον οἱ Θεσσαλοί, οὐκ ἄν ποτε προῆλθεν· ἐπεὶ καὶ τότε πορευομένῳ αὐτῷ ἀπαντήσαντες ἄλλοι τῶν τἀναντία τούτοις βουλομένων ἐπὶ τῷ Ἐνιπεῖ ποταμῷ, ἐκώλυον, καὶ ἀδικεῖν ἔφασαν ἄνευ τοῦ πάντων κοινοῦ πορευόμενον. 3. οἱ δὲ ἄγοντες οὔτε ἀκόντων ἔφασαν διάξειν, αἰφνίδιόν τε παραγενόμενον, ξένοι ὄντες, κομίζειν. ἔλεγε δὲ καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ Βρασίδας τῇ Θεσσαλῶν γῇ καὶ αὐτοῖς φίλος ὢν ἰέναι, καὶ Ἀθηναίοις, πολεμίοις οὖσι, καὶ οὐκ ἐκείνοις ὅπλα ἐπιφέρειν· Θεσσαλοῖς τε οὐκ εἰδέναι καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις ἔχθραν οὖσαν, ὥστε τῇ ἀλλήλων γῇ μὴ χρῆσθαι· νῦν τε ἀκόντων ἐκείνων οὐκ ἂν προελθεῖν, (οὐδὲ γὰρ ἂν δύνασθαι,) οὐ μέντοι ἀξιοῦν γε εἴργεσθαι. 4. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀκούσαντες ταῦτα, ἀπῆλθον· ὁ δὲ, κελευόντων τῶν ἀγωγῶν, πρίν τι πλέον ξυστῆναι τὸ κωλῦσον, ἐχώρει οὐδὲν ἐπισχὼν δρόμῳ. καὶ ταύτῃ μὲν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, ᾗ ἐκ τῆς Μελιτίας ἀφώρμησεν, ἐς Φάρσαλόν τε ἐτέλεσε καὶ ἐστρατοπεδεύσατο ἐπὶ τῷ Ἀπιδανῷ ποταμῷ, ἐκεῖθεν δὲ to be supplied from the preceding context; which here would be, 'and with an armed force at least especially difficult to be crossed.'

ὥστε, εἰ μὴ—Θεσσαλοὶ] Render, 'so that unless the Thessalians had, agreeably to their country's custom, been under a government of powerful persons, rather than that which by law dealt out power equally to all:' where the term δυναστεία is equivalent to ὀλιγαρχία τυραννικὴ, as opposed to ἰσονομία, on which see note at iii. 82. Τὸ ἐγχώριον stands for ἐγχωρίως.

ἄνευ τοῦ πάντων κοινοῦ] 'without the permission of the common council of the realm,' as in a passage of Xen. Mem. 4, fin. (cited by Duker,) ἄνευ τῆς τοῦ πάντων κοινοῦ γνώμης. On ἄνευ so placed see note at i. 128, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 576.

4. πρίν τι πλέον ξυστῆναι τὸ κωλῦσον] 'before some greater force came together, which should hinder [his progress].' Ἐχώρει δρόμῳ, 'went at a rapid march.' At ἐτέλεσε is to be supplied ὁδὸν, which word is expressed in a passage of Theogn. Admon. 72. In this ellipsis we have a condensed form of expression, involving a significatio prægnans, as found in the use of τελ. to signify 'he accomplished the distance and came to Pharsalus.' The foregoing expression, ταύτῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, ᾗ ἐκ τῆς Μελιτίας ἀφώρμησεν, seems to imply that it was a long day's march from Melitia; and hence Melitia was perhaps even nearer to Heracleia than I have before stated it—perhaps on a tract skirting the right bank of the Enipeus, not far from its source. See Lapie's Map, from which it plainly appears that Brasidas must (notwithstanding the opinion of Dr. Arnold to the contrary) have crossed the Enipeus, and probably not far from Melitia. Again, from the words ἐπὶ τῷ Ἐνιπεῖ ποταμῷ ἐκώλυον it may justly be concluded (against the view of that commentator) that the hindrance in question was attempted at the crossing of the Enipeus. As to what Dr. Arnold urges, that it was not a stream capable of affording any obstacle to his progress, that is supposing far more than any one can know without actual survey of the country. From the words καὶ ἐστρατοπεδεύσατο ἐπὶ τῷ Ἀπιδανῷ ποτ., it would seem that Pharsalus was upon the Apidanus. Yet good reason is there to think such was not the case. We may suppose that he not only reached Pharsalus, but went three or four miles further, and then took up his camp on the side of the Apidanus, along which his course would lie for a great part of the way to Phocium. It was his policy to avoid Pharsalus, as he did Larissa, because at such populous places the democratical interest would be too strong to be controlled. This view of the sense is confirmed by the τε—καὶ.

ἐς Φάκιον, καὶ ἐξ αὐτοῦ ἐς Περαιβίαν. 5. ἀπὸ δὲ τούτου ἤδη οἱ μὲν τῶν Θεσσαλῶν ἀγωγοὶ πάλιν ἀπῆλθον· οἱ δὲ Περαιβοὶ αὐτὸν, ὑπήκοοι ὄντες Θεσσαλῶν, κατέστησαν ἐς Δῖον τῆς Περδίκκου ἀρχῆς, ὃ ὑπὸ τῷ Ὀλύμπῳ Μακεδονίας πρὸς Θεσσαλοὺς πόλισμα κεῖται.

LXXIX. Τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ Βρασίδας Θεσσαλίαν φθάσας διέδραμε, πρίν τινα κωλύειν παρασκευάσασθαι, καὶ ἀφίκετο ὡς Περδίκκαν καὶ ἐς τὴν Χαλκιδικήν. 2. ἐκ γὰρ τῆς Πελοποννήσου, ὡς τὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων εὐτύχει, δείσαντες οἵ τε ἐπὶ Θράκης ἀφεστῶτες Ἀθηναίων καὶ Περδίκκας ἐξήγαγον τὸν στρατὸν, οἱ μὲν Χαλκιδῆς νομίζοντες ἐπὶ σφᾶς πρῶτον ὁρμήσειν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, (καὶ ἅμα αἱ πλησιόχωροι πόλεις αὐτῶν αἱ οὐκ ἀφεστηκυῖαι, ξυνεπῆγον κρύφα,) Περδίκκας δὲ πολέμιος μὲν οὐκ ὢν ἐκ τοῦ φανεροῦ, φοβούμενος δὲ καὶ αὐτὸς τὰ παλαιὰ διάφορα τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ μάλιστα βουλόμενος Ἀρριβαῖον τὸν Λυγκηστῶν βασιλέα παραστήσασθαι. 3. ξυνέβη δὲ αὐτοῖς, ὥστε ῥᾷον ἐκ τῆς Πελοποννήσου στρατὸν ἐξαγαγεῖν, ἢ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ἐν τῷ παρόντι κακοπραγία.

LXXX. Τῶν γὰρ Ἀθηναίων ἐγκειμένων τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ, καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα τῇ ἐκείνων γῇ, ἤλπιζον ἀποστρέψαι αὐτοὺς μάλιστα, εἰ ἀντιπαραλυποῖεν πέμψαντες ἐπὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους αὐτῶν στρατιὰν, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἑτοίμων ὄντων τρέφειν τε, καὶ ἐπὶ ἀποστάσει σφᾶς πρὸς Θεσσαλοὺς] 'versus Thessalos.' This is to be referred to Μακεδονίας, not to Ὀλύμπῳ.

5. ἀπὸ τούτου] Meaning 'from that point,' 'at that part of his road.' Κατέστησαν, literally, 'brought and set him down at Dium:' a vox signata de hac re; as iv. 103, and Xenoph. Anab. iv. 8, 8. Jambl. de Vit. Pyth. § 127, εἰς τὴν Μεσσηνὴν αὐτὸν κατέστησεν. Plut. Ag. 12. Act. Apost. xvii. 15, καθιστῶντες τὸν Παῦλον ἤγαγον ἕως Ἀθηνῶν. Dionys. Hal. viii. 12, κατέστησεν ἅπαντας ἐπὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα. The earliest authority for this sense is found in Hom. Od. xiii. 274, τούς μ' ἐκέλευσα Πύλονδε καταστῆσαι καὶ ἐφέσσαι.

CH. LXXIX. 2. ἐξήγαγον τὸν στρατὸν] The conjecture here of Dobree, ἐπηγάγοντο, is, besides being forbidden by the repetition of the somewhat unusual expression of the chapter, also unnecessary, since the sense intended is, 'had drawn forth,' i. e. had been the cause of their going forth, had brought it about. Accordingly here we have one of the many idioms proceeding on the principle of metonymy.

τὰ παλαιὰ διάφορα τῶν Ἀθηναίων] Meaning 'his old differences with the Athenians.' On the term παραστήσασθαι, 'to bring to terms of submission,' (as in Herodot. iii. 45, Πολυκράτεα παραστήσασθαι,) see note on i. 114.

3. ξυνέβη αὐτοῖς] 'happened opportunely for them;' αὐτοῖς being a dativus commodi.

CH. LXXX. 1. ἐγκειμένων τῇ Πελ.] Not imminentis Peloponneso, as Portus renders, but infestantis, 'pressing upon,' 'harassing,' as at i. 144, ἐγκειμένους. By τῇ ἐκείνων γῇ is meant, 'their territory in particular,' namely, Laconia, including Messenia, which would lie open to ravage from Pylus and Cythera. Of ἀποστρέψαι αὐτοὺς the sense is, 'to divert them,' 'draw off their forces to another quarter.' The reading here of many MSS., ἀποτρέψαι, is more suitable than vulg. ἀποστρέψαι. Compare other passages of our author infra v. 75. vi. 18 & 19. viii. 108, where, though the MSS. present the same confusion as to the two terms, ἀποστρέφω is with reason preferred. In ἐπὶ ἀποστάσει, which signifies 'for or in order to revolt,' we have a phrase occurring also at iii. 2. And so ἐπὶ δουλείᾳ, iv. 114. ἐπὶ καταδουλώσει, iii. 10. and ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ, viii. 33.

ἐπικαλουμένων. 2. καὶ ἅμα τῶν Εἱλώτων βουλομένοις ἦν ἐπὶ προφάσει ἐκπέμψαι, μή τι πρὸς τὰ παρόντα, τῆς Πύλου ἐχομένης, νεωτερίσωσιν· ἐπεὶ καὶ τόδε ἔπραξαν, φοβούμενοι αὐτῶν τὴν νεότητα καὶ τὸ πλῆθος· (ἀεὶ γὰρ τὰ πολλὰ Λακεδαιμονίοις πρὸς τοὺς Εἵλωτας τῆς φυλακῆς πέρι μάλιστα καθεστήκει·) προεῖπον αὐτῶν ὅσοι ἀξιοῦσιν ἐν τοῖς πολεμίοις γεγενῆσθαι σφίσιν ἄριστοι, κρίνεσθαι, ὡς ἐλευθερώσοντες, πεῖραν ποιούμενοι, καὶ ἡγούμενοι τούτους σφίσιν ὑπὸ φρονήματος, ὑπέρ καὶ ἠξίωσαν πρῶτος ἕκαστος ἐλευθεροῦσθαι, μάλιστα ἂν καὶ ἐπιθέσθαι. 3. καὶ προκρίναντες ἐς

2. τῶν Εἱλώτων βουλομένοις — ἐκπέμψαι] The construction here is, ἦν [αὐτοῖς] βουλ. ἐκπέμψαι ἐπὶ προφάσει [τινὰς] τῶν Εἱλ. On the idiom in βουλ. see note at iii. 2, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 391, 5. On this partitive force of the genit. see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 318, seqq. Of ἐπὶ προφάσει the meaning is, 'on pretence of this expedition.' Πρὸς τὰ παρόντα, 'on the present posture of affairs,' i. e. with reference to it.

ἐπεὶ καὶ τόδε ἔπραξαν] By τόδε understand 'this following [action].' It is here remarked by Bp. Thirlwall, that 'though our author does not precisely mark the time of this horrible deed, yet the words καὶ τόδε seem distinctly to refer the massacre to a different period from that in which the 700 Helots were sent out. To suppose that the government would have ordered the massacre of the Helots at a time when it was able to employ them advantageously in the foreign service, for which Brasidas was so scantily provided with troops,—involves an insuperable difficulty.' I entirely agree with the learned writer, that wholly incredible is it that the atrocity should have been committed at that time; and that the τόδε may be supposed to refer to some other previous time. Nor are we compelled to render ἔπραξαν by 'they committed;' a sense which would rather require ἔπρασσον. It may very well signify, 'they had committed heretofore.' And so we may render, 'for they had [heretofore] even committed this [following deed].' Or the aorist may be supposed to have the force shown to be inherent in it, Matth. Gr. Gr. § 502, namely, as denoting that the action in question has occurred once at least. Accordingly the meaning intended to be conveyed will be, 'they have perpetrated even this enormity.' And hence the purpose of the parenthetical portion occupying sect. 2, 3, and 4, is to illustrate the present case by showing that the present expedient of Sparta for drawing off the enemy that was attacking her at home,—namely, by getting rid of part of her Helot population by sending them to attack her enemy in the same manner —had a parallel in another expedient yet more unscrupulous, namely, that of secret assassination. Ἐπεί here, as not unfrequently elsewhere, stands for the explicative γάρ, as used by way of explanation or illustration; i. e. by comparing one case with another that had already occurred. This case is related in the words προεῖπον—διεφθάρη. But previously to this is introduced another remark bearing on the Lacedæmonian policy generally,—namely, that 'these two cases were only some among the many expedients to which the Lacedæmonians had resorted for security against the Helots.' Or the meaning intended may be, that 'the institutions of Sparta were mostly framed especially for security against the Helots.' Τὴν νεότητα καὶ τὸ πλῆθος is, as Poppo observes, put, by hendiadys, for τῆς νεότητος τὸ πλῆθος. And it may be further observed, that at ii. 21, τῇ νεότητι is by the Scholiast explained τῷ πλήθει τῶν νέων. Strange is it that Bekker should, in his second edition, for νεότητα, have edited, from only two MSS., σκαιότητα, which yields no suitable sense, and is evidently a mere marginal gloss, proceeding from those who neither comprehended the force of the idiom, nor understood what sense the context required. By a contrary misapprehension in a passage of Ecclesiastes, ix. 9, Sept. πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας ματαιότητός σου, some critics, (as appears from the MSS.) stumbling at the term ματ., proposed to read νεότητος, though such completely annihilates the moral indirectly couched in this exhortation, to cheerfully use present comforts, namely, with the constant recollection of their fragility, emptiness, and unsatisfactoriness.

3. καὶ προκρίναντες] For this, Goeller

δισχιλίους, οἱ μὲν ἐστεφανώσαντό τε καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ περιῆλθον, ὡς ἠλευθερωμένοι, οἱ δὲ οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον ἠφάνισάν τε αὐτοὺς, καὶ οὐδεὶς ἤσθετο ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἕκαστος διεφθάρη. 4. καὶ τότε προθύμως τῷ Βρασίδᾳ αὐτῶν ξυνέπεμψαν ἑπτακοσίους ὁπλίτας, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους ἐκ τῆς Πελοποννήσου, μισθῷ πείσας, ἐξήγαγεν. 5. αὐτόν τε Βρασίδαν βουλόμενον μάλιστα Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἀπέστειλαν,

LXXXI. προὐθυμήθησαν δὲ καὶ οἱ Χαλκιδῆς, ἄνδρα ἔν τε τῇ Σπάρτῃ δοκοῦντα δραστήριον εἶναι ἐς τὰ πάντα, καὶ, ἐπειδὴ ἐξῆλθε, πλείστου ἄξιον Λακεδαιμονίοις γενόμενον. 2. τό τε γὰρ παραυτίκα, ἑαυτὸν παρασχὼν δίκαιον καὶ μέτριον ἐς τὰς πόλεις, ἀπέστησε τὰ πολλὰ, τὰ δὲ προδοσίᾳ εἷλε τῶν χωρίων· ὥστε τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις γίγνεσθαι ξυμβαίνειν τε βουλομένοις, ὅπερ ἐποίησαν, ἀνταπόδοσιν καὶ ἀποδοχὴν χωρίων, καὶ τοῦ πολέμου ἀπὸ τῆς Πελοremarks, the more natural construction would be προκρίναντες — στεφανωθέντας — ἠφάνισαν. The same irregularity is observable at iii. 34, and in other passages adduced by Poppo, i. 1, p. 108. Ἠφάνισαν —διεφθάρη Wachsmuth regards as giving an example of the κρυπτεία, or secret lying-in-wait to assassinate the Helots. But, as Poppo observes, it is more rightly distinguished from this by Mueller, Dor. ii. p. 44.

4. αὐτῶν] Meaning the Helots generally.

CH. LXXXI. 1. προὐθυμήθησαν] scil. αὐτὸν, to be repeated from the foregoing context: the sense being, to use a similar form of expression in old English, 'they were desirous of him.' Compare 1 Thess. ii. 8, 'we were desirous of you.' Now in verbs of this kind, which properly take an accus. of thing, it is to be observed that when used with an accus. of person, there is an ellipsis either of ἔχειν, habere, or of some other word. Thus it was that Brasidas himself was quite willing to be sent to the Chalcidians, and they were desirous to have him. It comes to the same thing if, with Arnold and Poppo, we supply ἀποσταλῆναι αὐτὸν, from the foregoing ἀπέστειλαν. But the other mode, while more simple, is equally effectual; and as to the passage which they compare at vii. 86, τοὺς ἄνδρας—προὐθυμήθη—ὥστε ἀφεθῆναι, that is no rule for the present, since the expression there is not, like the one here, elliptical. Strange it is that Poppo should not have seen that the words αὐτὸν —ἀπέστειλαν are so closely connected with the commencing words of the next chapter, as to form but two clauses of the same sentence. This plainly appears from the particles δὲ καὶ, vero etiam, on which see Hoogev. de Part. p. 135. The form is, indeed, one of frequent occurrence in Xenophon: and Bekker, perceiving this, has rightly altered the period into a comma. The chapter ought indeed to have commenced at the word αὐτόν; or rather the matter at ch. 81 should have been thrown to ch. 80. Here Poppo and Goeller have done wrong in adopting the common punctuation, by which there is no stop between Χαλκιδῆς and ἄνδρα; whereas propriety surely requires a comma (very properly placed here by Bekker); the word ἄνδρα not being in regimen with προὐθυμήθησαν, but in apposition, namely, an apposition serving the purpose of explanation. And so in Acts ii. 22, Ἰησοῦν τὸν Ναζωραῖον, ἄνδρα ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀποδεδειγμένον. In such a case, considering that the apposition is in the place of the relative pronoun and the verb subst., the comma cannot be dispensed with. Here the apposition is meant to give the reason for the thing. The Chalcidians were desirous to have Brasidas sent to them.

δοκοῦντα δραστήριον ἐς τὰ πάντα] 'having the reputation of activity and promptitude in all his undertakings,' namely, as opposed to the general sluggishness of the Spartan character.

2. δίκαιον καὶ μέτριον] Namely, in opposition to the general character of the Lacedæmonian governors and generals, who were at once rapacious, and harsh in their demeanour. See iii. 93, note. With the expression, a little after, ἀνταπόδοσιν καὶ ἀποδοχὴν χωρίων (scil. γίγνεσθαι), 'they had in their turn to reciprocally give up and receive back places,' compare a similar form of expression at v. 18. And with τοῦ πολέμου λώφησιν compare vi. 12, ἀπὸ πολέμου λελωφήκαμεν, 'we have had πονnήσου λώφησιν· ἐς τε τὸν χρόνῳ ὕστερον μετὰ τὰ ἐκ Σικελίας πόλεμον ἡ τότε Βρασίδου ἀρετὴ καὶ ξύνεσις,—τῶν μὲν πείρᾳ αἰσθομένων, τῶν δὲ ἀκοῇ νομισάντων,—μάλιστα ἐπιθυμίαν ἐνεποίει τοῖς Ἀθηναίων ξυμμάχοις ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους. 3. πρῶτος γὰρ ἐξελθὼν καὶ δόξας εἶναι κατὰ πάντα ἀγαθὸς, ἐλπίδα ἐγκατέλιπε βέβαιον ὡς καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι τοιοῦτοί εἰσιν.

LXXXII. Τότε δ' οὖν ἀφικομένου αὐτοῦ ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι πυθόμενοι, τόν τε Περδίκκαν πολέμιον ποιοῦνται, νομίσαντες αἴτιον εἶναι τῆς παρόδου, καὶ τῶν ταύτῃ ξυμμάχων φυλακὴν πλέονα κατεστήσαντο. LXXXIII. Περδίκκας δὲ, Βρασίδαν καὶ τὴν στρατιὰν εὐθὺς λαβὼν μετὰ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεως, στρατεύει ἐπὶ Ἀρρίβαῖον τὸν Βρομεροῦ, Λυγκηστῶν Μακεδόνων βασιλέα, ὅμορον ὄντα, διαφορᾶς τε αὐτῷ οὔσης, καὶ βουλόμενος καταστρέψασθαι. 2. ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐγένετο τῷ στρατῷ μετὰ τοῦ Βρασίδου ἐπὶ τῇ ἐσβολῇ τῆς Λύγκου, Βρασίδας λόγοις ἔφη βούλεσθαι πρῶτον ἐλθὼν πρὸ πολέμου Ἀρρίβαῖον ξύμμαχον a breathing-time from war.' So here the genitive may be for ἀπὸ and a genitive, as in Hom. Od. ix. 460, κἀδ δὲ ἐμὸν κῆρ Λωφήσειε κακῶν, and Plato, p. 511, C, the verbal taking the construction of its verb. But thus one should have expected, not ἀπὸ τῆς Πελοποννήσου, but τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ. I am therefore of opinion that the sense of the words literally expressed is, that 'there would be a cessation or intermission of the war from Peloponnesus,' that 'it would cease from Peloponnesus;' where we have a metaphor taken from working oxen, who rest from their labour, depositis collo oneribus. So Hesychius: λωφῆσαι, ἀπὸ τοῦ τραχήλου τὸ ἄχθος ἀποθέσθαι. This tends to confirm the common etymology of λωφάω, as derived from λόφος, since when oxen rest awhile from their labour, the drawing collar is removed from the shoulder, and cast over the neck. Thus the term λωφάω came to simply denote cessation from labour, the laying it aside, or laying any thing aside, as Plato, p. 620, φιλοτιμίας λωφ.

μετὰ τὰ ἐκ Σικελίας] Poppo compares with this another form of expression infra viii. 2, πρὸς τὴν ἐκ τῆς Σικελίας τῶν Ἀθηναίων κακοπραγίαν (i. e. τὴν ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ γενομένην καὶ ἐκ τῆς Σικελίας ἀγγελθεῖσαν), and iii. 102, μετὰ τὰ ἐκ τῆς Αἰτωλίας. But the sense in those passages may be, 'the events which befel them from that quarter,' i. e. which happened there, and of which the effects came upon the Athenians from thence. Of ἐπιθυμίαν —ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους the sense is, 'a desire towards the Lacedæmonians;' meaning a well-affectedness towards them, πρὸς here denoting object. So in a passage of Canticles, vii. 10, we have, 'I am my beloved's, and his desire is towards me;' and Gen. iii. 16, 'thy desire shall be towards thy husband,' implying that she shall have no will but his, and so meaning that her desires will centre in his.

3. πρῶτος ἐξελθών] 'being the first that went abroad as governor,' i. e. first in this war. See Hobbes.

Ch. LXXXII. 1. πολέμιον ποιοῦνται] i. e. declare him a public enemy; declare war against him.

Ch. LXXXIII. 1. Λυγκηστῶν Μακεδόνων] 'of the Lyncestæ, who are Macedonians.' So ii. 99, τῶν γὰρ Μακεδόνων εἰσὶ καὶ Λυγκησταί.

2. ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐγένετο — τοῦ Βρασίδου] Render, 'but after he advanced with an army, accompanied by Brasidas.' Ἐπὶ τῇ ἐσβολῇ τῆς Λύγκου, 'to the pass of Lyncus,' meaning the pass or mountain leading from Macedonia unto the country of Lyncestia. This is by Col. Leake supposed to have been the same with that described in Livy, xxxi. 39, as the fauces leading from the valley of the Erigonus unto Eordæa; and which is by Polyb. xviii. 6, described as τὰς εἰς τὴν Ἐορδαίαν ὑπερβολάς. The same, too, is that by which Brasidas afterwards effected his retreat out of Lyncestia. By λόγοις is meant persuasion, as opposed to force. And at ἐλθὼν is to be supplied, from the context, ἐς Ἀρρίβαῖον.

Λακεδαιμονίων, ἢν δύνηται, ποιῆσαι. 3. καὶ γάρ τι καὶ Ἀρρίβαῖος ἐπεκηρυκεύετο, ἑτοῖμος ὢν Βρασίδᾳ μέσῳ δικαστῇ ἐπιτρέπειν· καὶ οἱ Χαλκιδέων πρέσβεις ξυμπαρόντες ἐδίδασκον αὐτὸν μὴ ὑπεξελεῖν τῷ Περδίκκᾳ τὰ δεινὰ, ἵνα προθυμοτέρῳ ἔχοιεν καὶ ἐς τὰ ἑαυτῶν χρῆσθαι. 4. ἅμα δέ τι καὶ εἰρήκεσαν τοιοῦτον οἱ παρὰ τοῦ Περδίκκου ἐν τῇ Λακεδαίμονι, ὡς 'πολλὰ αὐτοῖς τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν χωρίων ξύμμαχα ποιήσοι·' ὥστε ἐκ τοῦ τοιούτου κοινῇ μᾶλλον ὁ Βρασίδας τὰ τοῦ Ἀρρίβαίου ἠξίου πράσσειν. 5. Περδίκκας δὲ οὔτε δικαστὴν ἔφη Βρασίδαν τῶν σφετέρων διαφορῶν ἀγαγεῖν, μᾶλλον δὲ καθαιρέτην ὧν ἂν αὐτὸς ἀποφαίνῃ πολεμίων· ἀδικήσειν τε εἰ, αὐτοῦ τρέφοντος τὸ ἥμισυ τοῦ στρατοῦ, ξυνέσται Ἀρρίβαίῳ. 6. ὁ δὲ ἄκοντος καὶ ἐκ διαφορᾶς ξυγγίγνεται, καὶ πεισθεὶς τοῖς λόγοις,

3. μέσῳ δικαστῇ] This is by the Schol. explained μεσίτῃ καὶ διαιτητῇ, a gloss meant to intimate that the term included the sense both of mediator and of arbitrator or umpire, (what is denoted by medius in Latin,) one, as Arnold explains, 'appointed to judge between two persons, as a third party interposing to settle their quarrel.' Such, too, is the use of μεσίτης in Polyb. xxvii. 15, 8.

For the vulg. ὑπεξελθεῖν, I have thought proper to read, from most of the best MSS. and with all the recent editors, ὑπεξελεῖν, the sense here intended being, as they point out, 'not to remove dangers out of the way of Perdiccas;' for, as Bp. Thirlwall justly remarks, 'Perdiccas might be a less faithful and zealous ally when he had gained all his ends, and saw all his dangers removed.' This sense of ὑπεξελεῖν is rarely found, and is to be distinguished from that of the middle verb, ὑπεξελέσθαι, used of a person, in the sense e medio tollere. The term here signifies eximere, subtrahere, as said of a thing: and so it is used in Dio Cass. 543, 74, τῆς προφάσεως σφίσι τοῦ πολέμου ὑπεξῃρημένης. Plutarch, vi. 77, 11, τὴν ἀνάγκην ὡς βιαζομένην ὑπεξείλετο, and viii. 676, ἀλγηδόνι ὑπεξ. Diod. Sic. tom. ii. 216, ὑπεξαίρεσις τοῦ λυποῦντος. Soph. Œd. R. 227, τοὐπίκλημ' ὑπεξελὼν Αὐτὸς καθ' αὑτοῦ, where the Scholiast paraphrases by καὶ εἰ φοβεῖται λέγειν αὐτὸς καθ' αὑτοῦ, τὸν φόβον ὑπεξελὼν λεγέτω. And so the Latin eximere curas, solicitudinem, or timorem alicui.

4. ὥστε ἐκ τοῦ τοιούτου—πράσσειν] Of these words the sense is far from clear; and hence they have been interpreted in more than one way. Arnold, following Dukas, takes them to mean, 'so that on this ground Brasidas thought himself entitled to deal jointly with Pausanias in the matters of Arrhibæus, rather than to leave Perdiccas to manage them as he pleased.' But on this view of the sense it is well remarked by Poppo, 'Nobis quo jure Brasidas ex Perdiccæ promissione Lacedæmoniis multos socios parandi illud sibi persuadere potuerit non satis elucet.' And he gives the preference to the sense expressed in my Translation: 'insomuch that on this ground Brasidas was disposed to show more impartiality in negotiating the affairs of Arrhibæus than he otherwise would.' The term κοινῇ has reference to the two parties between whom he was negotiating a peace, and consequently must imply sine partium studio, 'with impartiality,' as does κοινὸς at iii. 53, ὑποπτεύομεν μὴ οὐ κοινοὶ (scil. δικασταὶ) ἀποβῆτε. Had not Brasidas wished to bring Arrhibæus into an alliance with Lacedæmon, he would have been more impartial, would not have sided so much with Arrhibæus.

5. δικαστὴν—τῶν σφετέρων διαφορῶν] The term δικαστὴς here denotes not so much a judge, as a decider, one who settles differences between parties at variance, as arbiter, umpire, acting between two parties who are at litigation. So in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke, xii. 14, we have, τίς με κατέστησε δικαστὴν ἢ μεριστὴν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς; and 1 Cor. vi. 5, διακρῖναι ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ. And so Dio Cass. p. 34, διακρῖναι τὰ διαφέροντα. The same construction (genit. of thing) occurs in a passage of Acts, xix. 39, κριτὴς τούτων. In καθαιρέτης, just after, we have a very rare word, which I have not met with elsewhere, except in Dio Cass. p. 40, 99, and 380, 9, in both of which cases it is used, as here, with a genit. of person.

6. ἄκοντος] scil. αὐτοῦ, 'against his will.' The next words, καὶ ἐκ διαφορᾶς, ἀπήγαγε τὴν στρατιὰν πρὶν ἐσβαλεῖν ἐς τὴν χώραν. Περδίκκας δὲ μετὰ τοῦτο τρίτον μέρος ἀνθ' ἡμίσεως τῆς τροφῆς ἐδίδου, νομίζων ἀδικεῖσθαι.

LXXXIV. Ἐν δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει εὐθὺς ὁ Βρασίδας, ἔχων καὶ Χαλκιδέας, ἐπὶ Ἄκανθον τὴν Ἀνδρίων ἀποικίαν ὀλίγον πρὸ τρυγήτου ἐστράτευσεν. 2. οἱ δὲ περὶ τοῦ δέχεσθαι αὐτὸν κατ' ἀλλήλους ἐστασίαζον, οἵ τε μετὰ τῶν Χαλκιδέων ξυνεπάγοντες, καὶ ὁ δῆμος· ὅμως δὲ, διὰ τοῦ καρποῦ τὸ δέος ἔτι ἔξω ὄντος, πεισθὲν τὸ πλῆθος ὑπὸ τοῦ Βρασίδου δέξασθαί τε αὐτὸν μόνον, καὶ ἀκούσαντας βουλεύσασθαι, δέχεται· καὶ καταστὰς ἐπὶ τὸ πλῆθος, (ἦν δὲ οὐδὲ ἀδύνατος, ὡς Λακεδαιμόνιος, εἰπεῖν) ἔλεγε τοιάδε.

are intended to inculcate a stronger sense, though certainly not that assigned by Portus, 'ac repugnante,' of which the term is by no means susceptible. One might prefer that assigned by Bauer, 'post altercationem et dissensionem cum Perdicca,' which Poppo, adopting, supports from another passage, ch. 125, ἐκ τῆς διαφορᾶς. Yet that is objectionable on the ground of being forced and frigid, and not supported by the passage at ch. 125; for the article there is found, and the sense intended is, 'in consequence of the dissension between them.' Again, the sense assigned by Dr. Arnold, 'in defiance of,' however suitable to the context, is incapable of proof; nay, it may be doubted whether ἐκ ever denotes state or condition. Here it is plain that ἐκ διαφορᾶς signifies 'out of (i. e. in consequence of) dispute and animosity,' the preposition serving to denote the moving cause or incidental occasion of an action. And so in a passage of the New Testament, Epist. to Philipp. i. 16, we have, οἱ μὲν ἐξ ἐριθείας τὸν Χριστὸν καταγγέλλουσιν.

πεισθεὶς τοῖς λόγοις, ἀπήγαγε τὴν στρατιὰν] He was the more easily induced to abandon the expedition, since matters of greater importance to Sparta demanded his presence elsewhere; and indeed the Athenian possessions on the coast of Thrace, which he immediately proceeded to attack, had been all along his main object.

Ch. LXXXIV. 2. ἀκούσαντας] One might have expected ἀκούσαντες, (found in one MS.) as referred to the nomin. τὸ πλῆθος, which Poppo approves, showing that the accus. cannot be defended on the ground taken by Haack; and adducing the words of Hermann on Vig. p. 743, who pronounces that 'the accus. in this kind of expression cannot with propriety be employed, except with the addition of a pronoun.' Yet surely our author breaks the ordinary rules of grammatical propriety too often to make an argument of this kind conclusive. And here internal evidence is as strongly in favour of the common reading as is external; since far more likely is it that one MS. should have been altered so as to present a reading which tends to remove all difficulty, than that all the rest should have been corrupted from an easy to a difficult reading. After all, however, may we not account for the accus. by supposing an ellipsis of ὥστε, which word is in the Attic writers not unfrequently used after πειθ. before an infinitive? So supra iii. 31, we have, πείσειν Πισσούθνην ὥστε ξυμπολεμεῖν: and in Aristoph. Ran. 68, κούδείς γέ μ' ἂν πείσειεν ἀνθρώπων τὸ μὴ οὐκ ἐλθεῖν ἐπ' ἐκεῖνον. It would seem, then, that our author wrote ἀκούσαντας, as if ὥστε had preceded; which is in some measure necessary, since such is almost implied in the words καὶ ἀκούσ. βουλεύσασθαι, of which the sense is, 'and with the proviso that after having heard [what he had to say], they would consult what was to be done.'

καταστὰς ἐπὶ τὸ πλῆθος] Comp. ch. 97, καταστὰς ἐπὶ Ἀθηναίους. Render, 'being set up to [address] the people.'

ὡς Λακεδαιμόνιος] ut Lacedæmonius, 'for a Lacedæmonian.' So in Dionys. Hal. x. 36, (as cited by Duker,) it is said of Siccius Dentatus, εἰπεῖν, ὡς στρατιώτης, οὐκ ἀδύνατος, and x. 31, δραστήριος ἦν ἀνὴρ, καὶ, ὡς Ῥωμαῖος, εἰπεῖν οὐκ ἀδύνατος. See also other examples adduced in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 388 & 545. Of more importance, however, is it to advert to the exact force of the expression, which is not (as it is supposed by Mueller, Dor. vol. ii. 287, 3.) merely meant to designate the LXXXV. "Ἡ μὲν ἔκπεμψίς μου καὶ τῆς στρατιᾶς ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων, ὦ Ἀκάνθιοι, γεγένηται τὴν αἰτίαν ἐπαληθεύουσα ἣν ἀρχόμενοι τοῦ πολέμου προείπομεν Ἀθηναίοις, ἐλευθεροῦντες τὴν Ἑλλάδα πολεμήσειν. 2. εἰ δὲ χρόνῳ ἐπήλθομεν, — σφαλέντες τῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐκεῖ πολέμου δόξης, ᾗ διὰ τάχους αὐτοὶ ἄνευ τοῦ ὑμετέρου κινδύνου ἠλπίσαμεν Ἀθηναίους καθαιρήσειν, — μηδεὶς μεμφθῇ· νῦν γὰρ, ὅτε παρέσχεν, ἀφιγμένοι, καὶ μετὰ ὑμῶν πειρασόμεθα κατεργάpeculiar character of Lacedæmonian oratory, namely, a laconic brevity, but the faculty itself of eloquence; the meaning intended being, as Bp. Thirlwall expresses it, that 'Brasidas was gifted with an easier flow of speech than was commonly found among the Lacedæmonians.' He had, indeed, been led to cultivate what natural talent he had for public speaking, by the peculiar exigencies of the times in which he was called upon to act: and the general deficiency of the Spartans in that respect had been mainly produced by a want of exercise for such a talent, restrained as it was by the severe institutions of Lycurgus.

Ch. LXXXV. The following address is marked by a brevity, not arising from simplicity and straightforwardness, (as in the case of the harangues to his soldiers,) but from that which is inherent in falsehood, a desire to sophisticate, by resorting to expressions such as we find in Cromwell's speeches, which may be interpreted in more than one way, the better to disguise injustice and wrong. In fact, Brasidas was, like Napoleon in modern times, no less remarkable for his political sagacity and acuteness, than for his military talents; and, like him, was almost irresistible in his endeavours to conciliate the good-will of those whom he addressed.

The speech commences without preface, (which was needless, since it was self-evident that liberty was to be preferred to slavery, and it might be taken for granted that the yoke of the Athenians was an evil, from which their subjects would gladly be released,) the speaker proceeding at once to advert to the purpose of his visit to a part of the country so remote from the usual scene of action,—namely, that for which the war itself was first undertaken, the giving liberty to Greece. He thinks it only necessary to apologize for the tardiness of the Spartans in coming hither for such a purpose; which he does by accounting for that tardiness. Such being the case, he professes wonder that the Acanthians did not at once receive him as a deliverer and protector. Their hesitation not only disappoints his expectations, but pains his feelings, as implying either doubt of his power to accomplish his enterprise, or a suspicion that his professions were only a cover to some bad design. His power, he proceeds to say, has been evinced by the Athenians having, though in full force, and greatly superior in numbers, yet lately declined to fight the army he commanded: and as to the purity of his intentions, that was evinced by his having, before he left home, bound the Spartan government by the most solemn oaths to respect the independence of every state that should be brought over to the Lacedæmonian alliance.

1. γεγένηται τὴν αἰτίαν ἐπαληθεύουσα] 'has been confirmatory of the truth of,' 'has shown to be true.' Ἐπαλ. in this active sense occurs also in another passage of our author viii. 52, and in Dio Cass. 406, 52, ἐπ. τὴν φήμην. Appian, ii. 710, λόγον ἐπαλ. Jos. 1314. Dionys. Hal. i. 58. Lucian ii. 306. iii. 96, 244, & 285. On the expression ἐλευθεροῦντες τὴν Ἑλλάδα πολεμήσειν, see ii. 8, 4, and note, as illustrative both of the sense and construction in the present passage.

2. σφαλέντες τῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐκεῖ πολέμου δόξης] Poppo rightly explains the sense to be, 'deceived in the opinion which had arisen in their minds from the war that was there carrying on.' With these Goell. compares, as similar in sense, the words at ch. 18, ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν — ὑπαρχόντων γνώμῃ σφαλέντες. The next words, ᾗ διὰ τάχους—καθαιρήσειν, serve, as Poppo points out, to denote what sort of opinion that was.

ὅτε παρέσχεν] scil. καιρὸς, 'when opportunity offered.' See note on i. 120. In κατεργάζεσθαι we have a highly forcible term, corresponding to καθαιρεῖν, just before, and of which the sense is conficere, 'to utterly destroy.' Examples of it are found in Herodotus, Dio Cass., Dionys. Hal., and other writers.

ζεσθαι αὐτούς. 3. θαυμάζω δὲ τῇ τε ἀποκλήσει μου τῶν πυλῶν, καὶ εἰ μὴ ἀσμένοις ὑμῖν ἀφῖγμαι. 4. ἡμεῖς μὲν γὰρ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, οἰόμενοί τε παρὰ ξυμμάχους, καὶ πρὶν ἔργῳ ἀφικέσθαι, τῇ γοῦν γνώμῃ ἥξειν, καὶ βουλομένοις ἔσεσθαι, κίνδυνόν τε τοσόνδε ἀνερρίψαμεν, διὰ τῆς ἀλλοτρίας πολλῶν ἡμερῶν ὁδὸν ἰόντες καὶ πᾶν τὸ πρόθυμον παρεχόμενοι· ὑμεῖς δὲ, εἴ τι ἄλλο ἐν νῷ ἔχετε, ἢ εἰ ἐναντιώσεσθε τῇ τε ὑμετέρᾳ αὐτῶν ἐλευθερίᾳ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων

3. θαυμάζω τῇ ἀποκλήσει μου τῶν πυλῶν] 'I wonder at the shutting up of your gates.' On the construction here see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 399. With respect to the double genitive here, it falls under the rule in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 380, of a substantive governing two genitives, though in different relations, as at iii. 12, προαποστάντες διὰ τὴν ἐκείνων μέλλησιν τῶν, &c. The literal sense of the words is, 'at this exclusion of me as to your gates;' for in Greek any one is said ἀποκλείεσθαι τῶν θυρῶν.

4. οἰόμενοί τε—ἥξειν] The full sense of this passage, by no means clear, has been best discerned by Portus, Haack, Poppo, and Arnold, and may be expressed as follows: 'thinking that we should be come to persons who even before we had in act and deed reached them, were, in mind and heart at least, allies.' The τε after οἰόμενοι is transposed, for οἰόμενοι παρὰ ξυμμάχους τε, answering to which are the words, a little after, καὶ βουλομένοις ἔσεσθαι, of which the sense is, 'and that it (the coming) would be to you willing,' to your mind; on which idiom see note at ii. 3, 2.

κίνδυνόν τε τοσόνδε—παρεχόμενοι] The τε here involves no little difficulty as to construction; which Poppo would remove by cancelling the word, on the supposition that there is a confusion arising from inadvertence pervading the whole sentence, like a similar one at viii. 45. Yet difficult is it to imagine how a particle so worse than useless could have crept into all the MSS. And to suppose such a degree of confusion as Arnold does, is taking too much for granted; and as to the passage adduced in support of this view from l. viii., it is far from decisive, being not sufficiently similar. Preferable to this is the view adopted by Poppo, who cuts the knot; which, however, may better be untied by supposing an error in the case of the word τε, as carelessly written by the scribes instead of γε, saltem: a particle, this, not a little apt, the full sense being, 'We Lacedæmonians, supposing we were coming,' &c., 'we, I say, have at any rate (i. e. whether that be found the case or not) run so great a danger [as you see].' In κίνδυνον there is a metaphor taken from throwing the dice; on which Goeller refers to Elmsl. on Eurip. Her. 149, and Poppo to Valcken. on Herodot. vii. 50. See note on v. 103, 1.

The next words, διὰ τῆς ἀλλοτρίας—παρεχόμενοι, are meant to illustrate the danger in question, and advert to the alacrity which prompted the Spartans to encounter and carried them through it; where τὸ πρόθυμον stands for προθυμίαν, as in a passage of St. Paul's Ep. to Rom. i. 15. Of the phrase πρόθ. παρέχεσθαι an example occurs also in Demosth. Olynth. i. The term παρέχεσθαι here, as at iii. 90, 4, (where see note,) signifies præbere, exhibere, 'to display.' The ὑμεῖς δὲ, just after, answers to ἡμεῖς μὲν, a little before. I have, with Bekker and Goeller, pointed accordingly. A similar construction is observable in a passage of the New Testament, St. John, viii. 44 & 45, where, opposed to the words Ὑμεῖς ἐκ πατρὸς τοῦ διαβόλου ἐστὲ are the words, a little after, ἐγὼ δὲ ὅτι, &c.; the intermediate words, ἐκεῖνος—ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ, being in a great measure parenthetical and illustrative, and the ἐγὼ strongly emphatic, importing 'I for my part.' And in this manner must the ὑμεῖς in the present passage be taken; for otherwise Thucydides would have written εἰ δὲ ὑμεῖς τι, &c. In εἴ τι ἄλλο ἐν νῷ ἔχετε we have a phrase of which the sense, by no means clear, seems to be, 'if ye entertain other views of this matter' (namely, the liberation of Greece); and the words have reference to a certain party in the place composed of persons who, though not without some impatience of Athenian domination, were apprehensive lest, if they connected themselves with Lacedæmon, they might lose their present popular constitution, and after exchanging for a worse aristocracy or oligarchy, still remain subject, as before, to a foreign power. Of these persons some were merely otherwise disposed, indifferent to the specious

Ἑλλήνων, δεινὸν ἂν εἴη. 5. καὶ γὰρ οὐ μόνον ὅτι αὐτοὶ ἀνθίστασθε, ἀλλὰ καὶ, οἷς ἂν ἐπίω, ἥσσόν τις ἐμοὶ πρόσεισι, δυσχερὲς ποιούμενοι, εἰ ἐπὶ οὓς πρῶτον ἦλθον ὑμᾶς, καὶ πόλιν ἀξιόχρεων παρεχομένους, καὶ ξύνεσιν δοκοῦντας ἔχειν, μὴ ἐδέξασθε· καὶ τὴν αἰτίαν οὐχ ἕξω πιστὴν ἀποδεικνύναι, ἀλλ' ἢ ἄδικον τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἐπιφέρειν, ἢ ἀσθενὴς καὶ ἀδύνατος τιμωρῆσαι τὰ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους, ἢν ἐπίωσιν, ἀφῖχθαι. 6. καίτοι στρατιᾷ γε τῇδ' ἣν νῦν ἐγὼ ἔχω, ἐπὶ Νίσαιαν ἐμοῦ βοηθήσαντος, οὐκ ἠθέλησαν Ἀθηναῖοι, πλέονες ὄντες, προσμῖξαι· ὥστε οὐκ εἰκὸς νηΐτῃ γε αὐτοὺς τῷ ἐν Νισαίᾳ στρατῷ ἴσον πλῆθος ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἀποστεῖλαι· 7. αὐτός τε οὐκ ἐπὶ κακῷ, offer of liberation, while others, adverted to in the next words, ἢ εἰ ἐναντιώσεσθε, &c., were even opposed to it. Of these the former class was to be swayed, and the latter, if needful, compelled.

With the expression following, δεινὸν ἂν εἴη, non ferendum or tolerandum, compare Herodot. i. 187, and Xen. Anab. v. 6, 27, δεινὸν εἴη.

5. οὐ μόνον ὅτι] This is, as Goeller points out, an elliptical form of expression for οὐ μόνον λέγω ὅτι, as in the instance of οὐχ ὅτι standing for οὐ λέγω ὅτι. Of δυσχ. ποιούμενοι the sense is, 'regarding it as a thing difficult to be accounted for.' Ἐπὶ οὓς πρῶτον ἦλθον ὑμᾶς is, by a frequent Attic syntax, (on which see Bernh. Synt. p. 205.) for ὑμεῖς, ἐπὶ οὓς πρώτους ἦλθον. On the expression πόλιν ἀξιόχρεων παρεχομένους, see note supra ch. 64, 1. At αἰτίαν supply τοῦ μὴ δέξασθαι from the foregoing context. The infinitives ἐπιφέρειν and ἀφῖχθαι depend, as Arnold points out, on the phrase τὴν αἰτίαν ἕξω, 'I shall be charged with,' repeated, though in a different sense, from the words preceding, τὴν αἰτίαν οὐχ ἕξω πιστὴν ἀποδεικνύναι. By ἄδικον ἐλευθερίαν is meant, as Abresch and Arnold explain, 'a false and spurious liberty.' Similar to which is an expression at viii. 64, 4, ὕπουλον αὐτονομίαν, where see note. Now this might be called ἄδικος, as cheating the eye by a fair semblance, without any reality. And so in Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 41, Love is said to be ἄδικος σοφιστής, one who cheats the understanding by offering the semblance for the reality. Thus the liberty here spoken of is a liberty which does not correspond to its name, by being deficient in that which is the foundation of all true liberty, political independence (αὐτονομίαν), on the one hand, and a constitution which deals out just and equal laws to all classes, on the other; what is expressed by ἰσονομίαν. See note on iii. 82, 8, and supra ch. 78, 3.

6. καίτοι στρατιᾷ γε—ἀποστεῖλαι] It is rightly remarked by Poppo, that the division of the chapters is here not correctly indicated, and that ch. 85 ought not to have terminated at ἀποστεῖλαι, since the words καίτοι—ἀποστεῖλαι contain Brasidas' reply to the first of two charges supposed to be made against him,—namely, want of power on the one hand, and want of integrity and good faith on the other; the first of which is replied to in the words καίτοι—ἀποστεῖλαι, the second in αὐτός—τε ὑμᾶς θαρσήσαντας.

From the words ὥστε οὐκ εἰκὸς, which are to me wholly unintelligible, no tolerable sense can, without considerable violence, be elicited: and hence the passage may justly be supposed corrupt. Dobree and Arnold propose to emend it by removing the words τῷ ἐν Νισαίᾳ, which they regard as coming from the margin. But it would rather seem that the word στόλῳ has been lost after νηΐτῃ γε: a supposition somewhat confirmed by the reading of the Venice MS. νηΐτῃ γε στρατῷ. There is little doubt but that the scribe had in his original the word στόλῳ, for which he inadvertently read στρατῷ. And though the phrase νηΐτης στόλος is rare, yet it is not unprecedented, being found in Arrian, Exp. Alex. vii. 8, 11, where we have νηΐτῃ στόλῳ κρατήσαντας. The general sense intended may be thus expressed: 'So that it is not probable that [now], when their force must come by a naval armament, they will send against us a number equal to the army at Nisæa.' The obscurity here existing may be mainly attributed to the extreme brevity of the expression νηΐτῃ γε στρατῷ, of which the meaning is, 'as they must at any rate come by a naval armament;' the speaker thus hinting at the difficulty mentioned at vi. 37, of ἐπ᾽ ἐλευθερώσει δὲ τῶν Ἑλλήνων παρελήλυθα, ὅρκοις τε Λακεδαιμονίων καταλαβὼν τὰ τέλη τοῖς μεγίστοις, ἢ μήν, οὓς ἂν ἔγωγε προσαγάγωμαι ξυμμάχους, ἔσεσθαι αὐτονόμους· καὶ ἅμα οὐχ ἵνα ξυμμάχους ὑμᾶς ἔχωμεν ἢ βίᾳ ἢ ἀπάτῃ προσλαβόντες, ἀλλὰ τούναντίον, ὑμῖν δεδουλωμένοις ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων ξυμμαχήσοντες. 8. οὔκουν ἀξιῶ οὕτ᾽ †αὐτὸς ὑποπτεύεσθαι, πίστεις γε διδοὺς τὰς μεγίστας, οὔτε τιμωρὸς ἀδύνατος νομισθῆναι, προσχωρεῖν τε ὑμᾶς θαρσήσαντας. LXXXVI. Καὶ εἴ τις ἰδίᾳ τινὰ δεδιὼς ἄρα, μὴ ἐγώ transporting a large army by sea. Here, for vulg. ὑμᾶς, I fully agree with Goeller, ought to be read, from the Cassel MS., ἡμᾶς. Such, too, was formerly, I find, the reading of the Cod. Clarend., afterwards altered to ὑμᾶς. The inference intended in the word ὥστε, which is, through brevity, not a little obscure, can only be brought out by expanding the phraseology, as follows: 'They cannot send by sea an army equal to that which did not venture to attack us at Nisæa; accordingly, they will send not one against us at all.'

7. αὐτός τε οὐκ ἐπὶ κακῷ, &c.] Here we have the reply to the second supposed charge: and this is, as Arnold points out, twofold; 1. grounded on his own conduct in having obtained from the government at home a solemn pledge that all cities or states who might come over to the Athenian alliance, should be bonâ fide independent; 2. as drawn from the nature of the case, namely, that the Acanthians had more need of the Lacedæmonians than the Lacedæmonians of them. This expression ὅρκοις καταλαμβάνειν, found also in Hdot. iii. 74, and ix. 106, is not unfrequently used by the later writers. The allusion in the term καταλ. is to the holding any one down to any place by cords or bands. So Plut. Num. καταλαβόντες ἱμᾶσι. Diod. Sic. t. ii. 266. Pollux, v. 33.

8. αὐτὸς] For this, Poppo, justly supposing the word to be corrupt, proposes to read ἄλλως (temere) or ἀδίκως: yet too little similar are the words to have been thus confounded. I rather propose to read οὕτως, which word might easily be mistaken for αὐτὸς, since it would at first seem little necessary, though it is, in effect, highly suitable; the full sense intended being tam, tantopere, 'to be so suspected as I am.' And so at i. 75, 1, we have, ἆρ᾽ ἀξιοί ἐσμεν—μὴ οὕτως ἄγαν ἐπιφθόνως διακεῖσθαι; How often the two words οὕτως and οὗτος are confounded, it is scarcely necessary to observe. In the present case οὕτως was, I suspect, first corrupted to οὗτος, and then altered to αὐτός.

πίστεις γε διδοὺς τὰς μεγίστας] These words are intended to show why he ought not to be suspected. For vulg. τε, injudiciously retained and vain'y defended by Arnold, I have thought proper, with Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker, to read γε: for while the former can here have no place, the latter is highly suitable, having the use mentioned in Hoogev. de Part. p. 115, by which the word stands for γοῦν in probationibus a signo, as i. 74, ὅτε γοῦν ἡμεν ἔτι σῶοι, οὐ παρεγένεσθε.

CH. LXXXVI. I have chosen, with Bekker and Arnold, to make ch. 86 commence here, its proper place. Now, as Arnold points out, is noticed the third supposed charge, namely, that of favouring one political party in Acanthus, in preference to the others. To this Brasidas replies at large, to the end of the chapter, and even to the words ὁμοίως ὡς εἰπεῖν, comprehending the first section of ch. 87, according to the common, but not right division; in opposition to which, Arnold, whom I have here followed, has very properly transferred the section to ch. 86. Here, as says Poppo, 'tertiam rem, quam quis præter duas c. 85, extr. dictas Brasidæ opponat, paucorum dominatum ab eo constitutum iri contendens, Laco ita refutat usque ad c. 87, § 1, ut et veram libertatem patriis suis institutis convenire, et honestatem sibi ipsis utilem esse ostendat.'

Brasidas now proceeds to allay the fears of the commonalty (whose wishes and fears were almost suspended between two opposite feelings,—impatience of the Athenian dominion, and dread lest, if they should connect themselves with Sparta, they might lose their free constitution, and still remain subject, though to a different power); while he assures them that he is not come to espouse the interests of any party, and that he should deem it an encroachment

τισι προσθῶ τὴν πόλιν, ἀπρόθυμός ἐστι, πάντων μάλιστα πιστευσάτω. 2. οὐ γὰρ ξυστασιάσων ἥκω, οὐδὲ ἀσαφῆ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν νομίζω ἐπιφέρειν, εἰ, τὸ πάτριον παρεὶς τὸ πλέον τοῖς ὀλίγοις, ἢ τὸ ἔλασσον τοῖς πᾶσι δουλώσαιμι. 3. χαλεπωτέρα γὰρ ἂν τῆς ἀλλοφύλου ἀρχῆς εἴη· καὶ ἡμῖν τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις οὐκ ἂν ἀντὶ πόνων χάρις καθίσταιτο, ἀντὶ δὲ τιμῆς καὶ δόξης αἰτία μᾶλλον· οἷς τε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐγκλήμασι καταπολεμοῦμεν, αὐτοὶ ἂν φαινοίμεθα on their rights, which he was sent to vindicate, if he attempted to alter an established form of government in favour either of the few, or of the many.

1. ἰδίᾳ τινὰ δεδιὼς] 'through fear of any person individually.' The expression ἰδίᾳ being here opposed to δημοσίᾳ, which, to use the critics' phrase, in contextu præcedente latet, as it does in the words at vii. 48, ὑπὸ τῶν πολεμίων—κινδυνεύσας τοῦτο παθεῖν ἰδίᾳ: and in Xen. Mem. i. 2, 63, ἀλλὰ μὴν τῇ πόλει γε—κακοῦ οὐδένος πώποτε αἴτιος ἐγένετο· οὐδὲ μὴν ἰδίᾳ γε οὐδένα πώποτε ἀνθρώπων οὔτε ἀγαθῶν ἀπεστέρησεν.

The particle ἄρα, just after, though passed over by the translators, is not without force. It belongs to εἰ, and the meaning of the two participles together is si fortè, as at i. 136, 3, εἴ τι ἄρα, and elsewhere in our author and in the best Attic writers. So in a passage of Demosthenes cited by Budæus in v. we have εἴ τις ἄρα ἐστὶν ἄξιος: and so ἐὰν or ἤν τις. ἐὰν μὴ ἄρα, and other phrases, on which see Steph. Thes. 2170, C.

τισι] Meaning certain persons forming any one of the political parties. With ἀπρόθυμός ἐστι, 'is indisposed to the thing,' (namely, προσχωρεῖν,) comp. Xen. Anab. vi. 2, 7, ἐδόκουν ἀπρόθυμοι εἶναι, and Herodot. vii. 220, ἐπεὶ ᾔσθετο τοὺς συμμάχους ἐόντας ἀπροθύμους, καὶ οὐκ ἐθέλοντας συνδιακινδυνεύειν. Plut. vi. 490, ἄπτεσθαί τινος ὀκνηρῶς καὶ ἀπροθύμως. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1039 & 1755. There is in this case an ellipsis of πρὸς and an accus. of object, which is supplied in Plut. vii. 282. viii. 453. vi. 274.

2. ξυστασιάσων] Meaning not, as Portus renders, 'ut factiones alam,' but 'that I might take part with a faction;' where the word τισι is to be supplied, from what precedes. This is expressed in a passage of Dio Cass. 336, 51, φοβηθεὶς μὴ καὶ ἐκεῖνοι συστασιάσωσι σφίσιν, ἡσύχασε. The word ξυστασιάζω is so rare, that I have not met with it elsewhere, except in a passage of Jos. Ant. xvii. 10, 6, fin. Haverc. τοὺς δὲ ἀλλοφύλους ἐπελθόντας σωφρονιστὰς τοῦ στασιάσοντος τῶν ἀνθρώπων —γενέσθαι. So Huds. and Haverc. edited, from two MSS., for the vulg. τοῦ μὴ συστασ. But they ought to have retained the συν, since Josephus had in mind this passage of Thucydides, and by συστασ. τῶν ἀνθρ. he meant the persons who make συστάσεις, or factious bands of men. By ἀσαφῆ ἐλευθερίαν, just after, is meant 'an uncertain liberty,' such as exists only in semblance, not in reality.

εἰ—δουλώσαιμι] Here we have, as Kistemacher, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold are agreed, a brief form of expression for οὐδὲ ἀσαφῆ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν νομίζω ἐπιφέρειν, ἐπιφέροιμι δ᾽ ἂν [ἀσαφῆ ἐλευθερίαν] εἰ, &c. Goeller refers to a similar passage at iii. 11, ἅμα μὲν γὰρ μαρτυρίῳ ἐχρῶντο, μὴ ἂν τούς γε ἰσοψήφους ἄκοντας, εἰ μή τι ἠδίκουν οἷς ἐπῆσαν, ξυστρατεύειν. The words τὸ πάτριον παρεὶς are rightly explained by the Schol. as equivalent to τὴν πάτριον ἑκάστοις πολιτείαν καταλύσας. I entirely coincide in the opinion of Bp. Thirlwall, that it seems necessary to adopt this interpretation for the sake of the argument. Brasidas would disclaim an intention of establishing oligarchy or democracy, not because of his respect to the constitution of Sparta, which he could not mean to make a model for his new allies, but because it was inconsistent with his liberal professions to change their hereditary institutions.

3. οἷς τε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους—κατακτώμενοι] The words are well rendered by Poppo as follows: 'Et propter quæ crimina Athenienses bello persequimur, (ea) odiosiora (i. e. ita ut sint odiosiora) nos, quam qui virtutem non præ se tulit, videamur contrahere seu incurrere.' And so Arnold expresses the sense: 'And the very charges with which we are bearing down the Athenians, we should ourselves be found to incur in more hateful measure than they who had shown no glimpses of honesty at all:' though here, for bearing down, I would rather substitute beating down, (what is in Latin expressed by bello petere or appetere,) of course understanding ἐχθίονα, ἢ ὁ μὴ ὑποδείξας ἀρετὴν κατακτώμενοι. 4. ἀπάτῃ γὰρ εὐπρεπεῖ αἴσχιον τοῖς γε ἐν ἀξιώματι πλεονεκτῆσαι ἢ βίᾳ ἐμφανεῖ· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἰσχύος δικαιώσει, ἣν ἡ τύχη ἔδωκεν, ἐπέρχεται, τὸ δὲ γνώμης ἀδίκου ἐπιβουλῇ. οὕτω πολλὴν περιωπὴν τῶν ἡμῖν ἐς τὰ μέγιστα διαφόρων ποιούμεθα· 5. καὶ οὐκ ἂν μείζω πρὸς τοῖς ὅρκοις βεβαίωσιν λάβοιτε, ἢ οἷς τὰ ἔργα ἐκ τῶν λόγων ἀναθρούμενα δύκησιν ἀναγκαίαν παρέχεται ὡς καὶ ξυμφέρει ὁμοίως ὡς

the word in a metaphorical sense, as in a passage of Ulpian, Digest. xlviii. 5, 27, where we have 'appetere aliquem per calumniam,' and in one of Cicero, pro Planco, p. 29, 'appetere insidiis.' Of the verb καταπολεμεῖν, which is very rare, I have noted an example elsewhere in Xen. Hist. iii. 5, 8, and would observe that the term seems originally to have had place in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 29, τοῖς δ' ἄλλοις Ῥωμαίοις ἀπέχθομαί τε, ὡς δύναμαι μάλιστα, καὶ πολεμῶ, καὶ οὐδέποτε μισῶν αὐτοὺς παύσομαι, where, for the words as they now stand, I propose to read, τοῖς δ' ἄλλοις Ῥωμαίοις ἀπέχθομαί τ',—ὡς δύναμαι μάλιστα καταπολεμῶν,—καὶ οὐδ. μ. α. π.

4. ἀπάτῃ γὰρ εὐπρεπεῖ αἴσχιον—ἐπιβουλῇ] Compare i. 17. Similar to this is the sentiment expressed in a passage of Cic. Off. i. 13, 10 (cited by Poppo): 'Quum autem duobus modis, id est, aut vi aut fraude, fiat injuria, fraus quasi vulpeculæ, vis leonis videtur; utrumque homine alienissimum, sed fraus odio digna majore.' The reading here γε, for which τε is found in almost all the MSS. (and in some neither word,) is sufficiently defended by a similar elegance of expression in another passage of our author, supra ii. 43, ἀνδρί γε φρόνημα ἔχοντι. With the expression, a little after, ἐπέρχεται, compare a similar one at iii. 84, 1, πλεονεξίᾳ—ἐπιόντος. On the term δικαίωσις see note at i. 141. It here denotes jure, ('by the right of favour,') a sense found also in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 432, 12. 1348, 14. 1582, 3. Septuag. in Levit. iv. 22.

οὕτω πολλὴν περιωπὴν — ποιούμεθα] Here, as Arnold well points out, the speaker sums up what he has been saying in proof of his sincerity and that of his governing. As much as to say, 'such being the case, (our honour being pledged, and honesty being our best policy,) we use careful circumspection about matters which are of such importance to us.' The term περιωπὴ signifies properly a look-out, where we have a prospect of all around us, as in Lucian, i. 586, and Dio Cass. 1243, 81, ἀνήχθη ἐς περιωπήν. The term also denotes the act of looking out or about, and figuratively circumspection.

5. βεβαίωσιν] 'confirmation [of the uprightness of our intentions].' The next words, ἢ οἷς—εἶπον, involve a certain difficulty, which may be attributed to the harshness of the construction at οἷς. Dobree completes the construction thus, ἢ ἀπ' ἐκείνων οἷς: and renders, 'than from those with whom facts, compared with their words, convince us that they state their real interest truly.' I would express the sense of the passage as follows: 'Nor can you receive any stronger assurance [of our integrity] besides the oaths already sworn, than [that they proceed from] those in respect of whom the facts [of the case] examined by and compared with their words, afford a necessary opinion (i. e. must needs convince one) that it is even their interest [to do] like as they have said.' In ἔργα ἐκ τῶν λόγων ἀναθρούμενα we have a condensed form of expression to signify 'facts examined by and compared with words.' Of ἀναθρέω, a word of extreme rarity, I have met with only two examples elsewhere; in Eurip. Hec. 808, ἰδοῦ με κἀνάθρησον οἵ' ἔχω κακά, and Plato, 399, C, ἀναθρεῖ καὶ ἀναλογίζεται τοῦτο. It signifies properly, 1. to look up at, as painters who are copying a statue; 2. by implication, to survey attentively, (as in the above passage of Euripides,) which may be either for the purpose of close examination, to ascertain the quality of an article, or for the purpose of comparing it with another, as here, though in a figurative sense. Poppo, indeed, thinks it questionable whether the interest spoken of has respect to τοὺς πίστιν παρεχομένους, or to τοὺς βεβαίωσιν λαβ. And he adds, 'Si illud est, Brasidas dicere vult iis maxime confidendum esse, qui, quæ honesta suaserint, eadem sibi utilia esse demonstrare possint; quæ sententia superiori disputationi satis congruens est, sed obscurius expressa; sin hoc probandum, sententia est: quorum facta cum dictis collata certo persuadent [non solum εἶπον. LXXXVII. Εἰ δ', ἐμοῦ ταῦτα προϊσχομένου, ἀδύνατοι μὲν φήσετε εἶναι, εὖνοι δ' ὄντες ἀξιώσετε μὴ κακούμενοι διωθεῖσθαι· καὶ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν μὴ ἀκίνδυνον ὑμῖν φαίνεσθαι, δίκαιόν τε εἶναι, οἷς καὶ δυνατὸν δέχεσθαι αὐτήν, τούτοις καὶ ἐπιφέρειν, ἄκοντα δὲ μηδένα προσαναγκάζειν, μάρτυρας μὲν θεοὺς καὶ ἥρωας τοὺς ἐγχωρίους ποιήσομαι ὡς ἐπ' ἀγαθῷ ἥκων οὐ πείθω, γῆν δὲ τὴν ὑμετέραν δῃῶν πειράσομαι βιάζεσθαι· 2. καὶ οὐκ ἀδικεῖν ἔτι νομιῶ, προσεῖναι δέ τί μοι καὶ κατὰ δύο ἀνάγκας τὸ εὔλογον, τῶν μὲν Λακεδαιμονίων, ὅπως μὴ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ εὔνῳ, εἰ μὴ προσαχθήσεσθε, τοῖς ἀπὸ ὑμῶν χρήμασι φερομένοις παρ' Ἀθηναίους βλάπτωνται, οἱ δὲ Ἕλληνες, ἵνα μὴ κωλύωνται ὑφ' ὑμῶν δουλείας ἀπαλλαγῆναι. 3. οὐ γὰρ δὴ εἰκότως γ' ἂν τάδε † πράσσοιμεν, οὐδὲ ὀφείλομεν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, honesta et speciosa, sed] etiam utilia ab iis dicta esse.' But the fact is surely not so doubtful as Poppo supposes. The interest here spoken of can, according to the context, be understood only of the party affording the security or pledge, not the party receiving it, namely, the Lacedæmonians. But the words supplied in the second interpretation above stated are quite as suitable to the first; the full sense here intended being, that 'a due regard to interest, as well as their reputation for honour, (involved in the observance of engagements bound by oaths,) would dictate the very course they spoke of (εἶπον), to act exactly as (ὁμοίως ὡς) they said.' The καὶ (which is to be rendered even) involves, by implication, the sense left to be in thought supplied.

CH. LXXXVII. Brasidas concludes by enforcing his arguments with a threat, which touched many of his hearers personally. He could not suffer them to reject the boon he was offering them. (Thirlw.)

1. εὖνοι δ' ὄντες—διωθεῖσθαι] Meaning, 'But if you think it only right (i. e. claim, require), as being well affected to us, so to reject [the offer] as not to be injured thereby.' At εὖνοι is to be supplied ἡμῖν. The term ἀξιόω has here the sense it bears at vii. 15, ἀξιῶ δ' ὑμῶν ξυγγνώμης τυγχάνειν, namely, 'to claim to be allowed to do this or that.' At διωθεῖσθαι (which term is used as at iv. 108, 4, of rejecting an offer) supply τὰ προεσχημένα from the preceding προϊσχομένου. Of μὴ κακούμενοι the sense is, 'uninjured [thereby].' The following infinitives, φαίνεσθαι, εἶναι, and προσαναγκάζειν, depend on φήσετε, to be repeated from the preceding. Δέχεσθαι in this passage has the mixed sense to receive and retain, meaning 'so to receive as to retain.' And προσαναγκάζειν here stands for ἀναγκάζειν πρὸς, 'to compel to [do a thing],' as at iii. 61, and elsewhere.

μάρτυρας μὲν θεοὺς καὶ ἥρωας τοὺς ἐγχωρίους ποιήσομαι] An usual form of protestation by way of appeal to the gods, as witnesses of the justice of their cause. Compare ii. 71 & 74.

2. προσεῖναι δέ τί μοι—τὸ εὔλογον] 'but that I have reason and justice on my side, which will justify me in so doing.' Τὸ εὔλογον signifies 'what is reasonable and agreeable to justice.' So Plut. viii. 206, ποῦ δὲ ταῦτα τὸ εὔλογον ἴσχει καὶ δίκαιον, and viii. 174, οὐδὲ οὓς ἄνθρωποι νόμους τίθενται, τὸ εὔλογον ἁπλῶς ἔχουσι καὶ πάντοτε φαινόμενον. No other example have I met with of this use. Τί here bears the sense nonnihil; which had Reiske perceived, he would certainly not have proposed to cancel the word, on the authority of one MS. Of κατὰ δύο ἀνάγκας the sense is, as Poppo and Arnold explain, 'on account of two urgent reasons which will not suffer me to act otherwise.' The gen. τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων refers to ἀνάγκην taken from ἀνάγκας, the sense being, 'one necessity, as respects the Lacedæmonians.'

ὅπως μὴ τῷ ὑμ. εὔνῳ—βλάπτωνται] 'lest by your good-will, should you not be brought over to us, they should be injured by the monies contributed by you to the Athenians.' By τῷ ὑμετέρῳ εὔνῳ cannot be denoted, as Arnold supposes, the circumstances of the action, i. e. as he explains, 'with all your good-will, your wishing us well,'—for that would quite dis-spirit the expression,—but the instrument, i. e. 'by or through your good-will;' where there is, as Goeller points out, an irony conveyed; q. d. 'from good-will to help our enemies with money to ruin us.'

3. οὐ γὰρ δὴ εἰκότως, &c.] These words

μὴ κοινοῦ τινος ἀγαθοῦ αἰτίᾳ, τοὺς μὴ βουλομένους ἐλευθεροῦν. 4. οὐδ' αὖ ἀρχῆς ἐφιέμεθα, παῦσαι δὲ μᾶλλον ἑτέρους σπεύδοντες, τοὺς πλείους ἂν ἀδικοῖμεν εἰ ξύμπασιν αὐτονομίαν ἐπιφέροντες ὑμᾶς τοὺς ἐναντιουμένους περιΐδοιμεν. 5. πρὸς ταῦτα βουλεύεσθε εὖ, καὶ ἀγωνίσασθε τοῖς τε Ἕλλησιν ἄρξαι πρῶτοι ἐλευθερίας, καὶ αἴδιον δόξαν καταθέσθαι· καὶ αὐτοὶ τά τε ἴδια μὴ βλαφθῆναι, καὶ ξυμπάσῃ τῇ πόλει τὸ κάλλιστον ὄνομα περιθεῖναι."

LXXXVIII. Ὁ μὲν Βρασίδας τοσαῦτα εἶπεν. οἱ δὲ Ἀκάνθιοι, πολλῶν λεχθέντων πρότερον ἐπ' ἀμφότερα, κρύφα διαψηφισάμενοι, διά τε τὸ ἐπαγωγὰ εἰπεῖν τὸν Βρασίδαν, καὶ περὶ τοῦ καρποῦ φόβῳ, ἔγνωσαν οἱ πλείους ἀφίστασθαι Ἀθηναίων· καὶ πιστώσαντες αὐτὸν τοῖς ὅρκοις, οὓς τὰ τέλη τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ὁμόσαντα αὐτὸν ἐξέπεμare meant to offer the reason and justification of what they are doing; though they are so framed as to have respect to the second of the two foregoing urgent reasons, —namely, that of not suffering the Acanthians to hinder the common deliverance of the Greeks. And the γὰρ here, as very often elsewhere, has reference to something omitted and to be understood from the context. Supplying, then, as we best may, the word ἄλλως, the full sense will be, 'for otherwise (i. e. if we were not bound by duty to prevent the common subjugation of the Greeks thus promoted by you) we should not be justified in doing what we are doing, endeavouring to force you to the course you ought to take.' Poppo, indeed, urges that thus the optative would not be permitted by grammatical propriety: and so thought Dobree, when he proposed, for τάδε πράσσοιμεν, to read τάδ' ἐπράσσομεν. Why not, then, adopt it? especially since τάδε πράσσομεν is found in at least one MS., attesting the reading τάδ' ἐπράσσομεν in its original. Otherwise it will have to be taken, as Poppo admits, in a sense quite unsuitable to the context. The full meaning intended may be expressed as follows: 'for otherwise we should certainly not with justice have done what we are doing [forced freedom on persons unwilling to receive it].' In fact, at τάδε must be supplied ἃ πράσσομεν: on which are suspended the words of the next clause, 'nor ought we—the Lacedæmonians—to set free those who desire not liberation, unless on account of some common good.'

4. οὐδ' αὖ ἀρχῆς—σπεύδοντες] Here, for brevity-sake, two clauses are combined into one; for οὐδ' αὖ ἀρχῆς ἐφιέμεθα, παῦσαι δὲ μᾶλλον ἑτέρους σπεύδομεν καὶ οὕτω σπεύδοντες, κ. τ. λ.

5. πρὸς ταῦτα] This may mean, as it is generally rendered, 'upon these matters;' and the phrase is one not unfrequent in the best writers; though not, I think, after the imperative mood. And indeed such a sense as the above were here not a little flat. Hence I prefer to render by quamobrem; a sense of the expression frequent in the Attic writers, and of which examples may be seen in Herm. on Viger, p. 863, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 391, c. Here it is the rather to be adopted, since with these words commences, as the Scholiast remarks, the ἐπίλογοι. And no other instance do I know of such commencing without some particle, generally one of inference, as here. Render, 'Wherefore (such being the posture of your affairs) consult ye well [what is to be done].'

αἴδιον δόξαν καταθέσθαι] 'to lay up for yourselves an ever-during glory;' as in Herodot. vii. 220, and ix. 78; and in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Tim. vi. 19.

CH. LXXXVIII. 1. ἐπ' ἀμφότερα] See note on ii. 11, 9. Κρύφα διαψηφισάμενοι, 'having given their votes secretly:' similar to what we express by voting by ballot, as opposed to the usual mode of voting by a show of hands: see Schoemann de Com. Athen. p. 122, referred to by Poppo. Ἐπαγωγά, 'attractive.' So infra vi. 8, ἐπαγωγὰ καὶ οὐκ ἀληθῆ, and Hdot. iii. 83, ἐπαγ. λέγου.

τὰ τέλη τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ὁμόσαντα αὐτὸν ἐξέπεμψαν] Some doubt exists as to the construction here. By Valla the word ὁμόσαντα is taken as agreeing with αὐτόν: a method objected to by Æmilius Portus, Hudson, Poppo, and Arnold, on the ground that 'no reason was there why the Spartan government should have required such an oath from Brasidas, since, ψαν, ἢ μὴν ἔσεσθαι ξυμμάχους αὐτονόμους οὓς ἂν προσαγάγηται, οὕτω δέχονται τὸν στρατόν. καὶ οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον καὶ Στάγειρος, Ἀνδρίων ἀποικία, ξυναπέστη. ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἐν τῷ θέρει τούτῳ ἐγένετο.

LXXXIX. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος εὐθὺς ἀρχομένου, ὡς τῷ Ἱπποκράτει καὶ Δημοσθένει, στρατηγοῖς οὖσιν Ἀθηναίων, τὰ ἐν τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς ἐνεδίδοτο, καὶ ἔδει τὸν μὲν Δημοσθένην ταῖς ναυσὶν as we have seen at ch. 85, he had in fact required it of them, ὅρκοις Λακεδαιμονίων καταλαβὼν τὰ τέλη.' Thus ὁμόσαντα will be referred to τὰ τέλη, which, as being masculine in sense, though neuter in form, may have a plural verb. But the order of the words is rather in favour of Valla's construction, which has been embraced by Dobree, and is not overturned by the reason alleged, as is evident from the able view of the sense propounded by Bp. Thirlwall, as follows: 'Whether Brasidas himself had already taken the same oath at Sparta before he set out, (as the position of ὁμόσαντα seems to intimate,) must depend on the circumstances under which the oath was required from the Spartan government. If these were such as Brasidas represented to the Acanthians, there would certainly, as Dr. Arnold observes, be no reason why the government should have required such an oath from him. But if, as seems much more probable, the oath was really required by the Chalcidians, it would be quite conceivable that they might have required it from Brasidas as well as from the government. Whether Thucydides, after the language which he had put into the mouth of Brasidas, would in this manner have alluded to a fact somewhat at variance with it, is a different question.'

Στάγειρος] A city about 19 miles to the north-west of Acanthus (now Erisso); and which is rightly fixed by Col. Leake (North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 159, 168.) at the present Stavro, a name corrupted from Stagro, a contraction of Stageiro, produced by accent on the antepenult. Though no coins or inscriptions have been found to determine the site, yet its position (very much that of an Hellenic town) and some appearances which Col. Leake has noticed of ancient walls of a very rough and irregular species, (coeval, I suspect, with the foundation of the city, about 700 years B. C.) on the east side, serve to determine the point. It is evident that the city was situated, not, as has been commonly supposed, on the sea-shore, but about two miles from it, on a height at the foot of woody mountains. Some have fixed Stagirus at the present Stratone, 12 miles to the south-east of Stavro. But that must, from its name, be old Stratoniceia, as Col. Leake admits; though he seems to have been staggered by the assurance he received from an agoyates there, that this was ἡ πατρίδα τοῦ Ἀριστοτέλους. Yet we are not absolutely obliged to understand by this the native town of Aristotle. The expression may quite as well denote (what is, indeed, in the earlier and purer writers, its only meaning) the native country; by which might be understood both Stagirus and its vicinity, comprehending the western side of the Sinus Strymonicus. That so few ruins should remain, is by no means surprising; since it was a decayed town even in the time of Aristotle, whose attempts to restore it produced, there is reason to think, but a temporary improvement: and in the time of Dio Chrysostom it had become a mere village; for in the 47th oration of that writer we have, Στάγειρα κώμη καὶ Ὀλυνθίας. What occasioned the mistake of many geographers in placing it on the shore, was the existence of a town a few miles south-east from it (now called Scala), and doubtless forming the port of Stageirus. And this is all that Meletius means, p. 393, when he says, speaking of Stavro, ἔχει λιμένα, as indeed is plain from the added words, οὗ ὄνομα Κάπρος.

CH. LXXXIX. The scene now changes to Bœotia, and our historian proceeds to narrate an undertaking of the Athenians at home, similar to those by which they had already annoyed the enemy abroad, (in Peloponnesus and elsewhere,) and which held out a promise of even greater advantages, (in the probability of a general revolution in Bœotia,) namely, the before-concerted attempt on Bœotia adverted to supra ch. 77, but which, from a failure on the part of the forces under Hippocrates to co-operate with Demosthenes in his movement, had proved abortive.

1. ἐνεδίδοτο] Meaning, 'were being given up,' 'put into the hands of the Atheἐς τὰς Σίφας ἀπαντῆσαι, τὸν δ' ἐπὶ τὸ Δήλιον, γενομένης διαφορᾶς τῶν ἡμερῶν ἐς ἃς ἔδει ἀμφοτέρους στρατεύειν, ὁ μὲν Δημοσθένης πρότερον πλεύσας πρὸς τὰς Σίφας, καὶ ἔχων ἐν ταῖς ναυσὶν Ἀκαρνᾶνας, καὶ τῶν ἐκεῖ πολλοὺς ξυμμάχων, ἄπρακτος γίγνεται, μηνυθέντος τοῦ ἐπιβουλεύματος ὑπὸ Νικομάχου, ἀνδρὸς Φωκέως ἐκ Φανοτέως, ὃς Λακεδαιμονίοις εἶπεν, ἐκεῖνοι δὲ Βοιωτοῖς· 2. καὶ βοηθείας γενομένης πάντων Βοιωτῶν, (οὐ γάρ πω Ἱπποκράτης παρελύπει ἐν τῇ γῇ ὢν,) προκαταλαμβάνονται αἵ τε Σίφαι καὶ ἡ Χαιρώνεια. ὡς δὲ ᾔσθοντο οἱ πράσσοντες τὸ ἁμάρτημα, οὐδὲν ἐκίνησαν τῶν ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν. XC. Ὁ δὲ Ἱπποκράτης ἀναστήσας Ἀθηναίους πανδημεί, αὐτοὺς καὶ τοὺς μετοίκους καὶ ξένων ὅσοι παρῆσαν, ὕστερος ἀφικνεῖται ἐπὶ τὸ Δήλιον, ἤδη τῶν Βοιωτῶν ἀνακεχωρηκότων ἀπὸ τῶν Σιφῶν· καὶ καθίσας τὸν στρατὸν, Δήλιον ἐτείχιζε τοιῷδε τρόπῳ τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος. 2. τάφρον μὲν nians;' (so ἐνεδίδοσαν, as used of the same thing, supra ch. 76.) namely, Siphæ, the sea-port of Bœotia, on the gulf of Corinth, and Chæronea, on the borders of Phocis, to be seized by some refugees from Orchomenus, aided by a party of sympathizers from Phocis. In ἐς τὰς Σίφας ἀπαντῆσαι the term ἀπαντῆσαι is, as Duk. well points out, used in a not unfrequent sense to denote the being at hand at any certain time or place, for any particular purpose. And so supra ch. 70 we have, ἀπ. ἐπὶ Τοιπόδισκον: and Xen. Hist. i. 3, 13, τοὺς πρέσβεις ἀπαντᾷν ἐκέλευσεν ἐς Κυζικὸν, and iv. 8, 3, ἐς Σῆστον εἶπεν ἀπαντᾷν. Aristoph. Lysist. 13, εἰρημένον δ' αὐταῖς ἀπαντᾷν ἐνθάδε. As to the phrases by Duker adduced in exemplification of the present, ἀπαντᾷν ἐπὶ τὴν κυρίαν, ἐπὶ τὸ δικαστήριον, they are merely forensic ones, though perhaps founded on the above idiom.

διαφορᾶς τῶν ἡμερῶν] 'a mistake of the days,' meaning the days on which each respectively was to commence operations: for no reason is there to suppose (as does Bp. Thirlwall) that the movements were to take place exactly on the same day; since that would have required rather τῆς ἡμερῆς ἐς ἥν. The mistake (as appears from the subsequent expression) πρότερον πλεύσας πρὸς τὰς Σίφας, was that Demosthenes had gone before, whereas he should rather have gone after Hippocrates' departure to attack Delium; which would thus have prevented the Bœotians from sending any strong force to repel the invasion of the country at Siphæ. This, it may be observed, is obscurely alluded to in the words at § 2, οὐ γάρ πω Ἱππ. παρελύπει ἐν τῇ γῇ ὤν, of which the full sense is, 'for Hippocrates had not yet annoyed them by his presence, and this prevented them from sending,' &c. The word παραλυπέω is rare, yet not unprecedented; since it occurs in Xenophon and Dio Cass.

2. οἱ πράσσοντες] Meaning those who were concerned in the plot. On this term, which bears the same sense supra i. 57, and not unfrequently elsewhere, (see note on ii. 79. iv. 132. v. 83. vi. 10.) it is observed by Duker, 'habet in universum significationem clandestinæ molitionis, et studii partium. Unde etiam illi, qui id agunt, ut alios sibi concilient, et in suas partes pertrahant, quique aliorum rebus student ac favent, dicuntur πράσσειν.'

CH. XC. 1. ἀναστήσας] See note on ii. 97, 1. I have here followed Bekker in placing a comma at πανδημεὶ and παρῆσαν, because the accusatives αὐτοὺς, &c. form an exegetical apposition, as in a passage of the Old Testament, Daniel vi. 24, (Sept.) καὶ εἰς τὸν λάκκον τῶν λεόντων ἐνεβλήθησαν, αὐτοὶ καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ αὐτῶν καὶ αἱ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν (for so the passage ought to be pointed). The words, a little after, τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος, are by Haack suspected to be not genuine, and by Dobree are proposed to be cancelled—and that for two reasons: 1. that they are superfluous; and 2. that they are out of place after τοιῷδε τρόπῳ, by which every where else there is subjoined a description of the thing. Of these arguments, however, the former is utterly groundless; since, as Poppo observes, our author does not reject repetitions: and the latter is wholly without force; since, as Poppo proves, our author occasionally separates κύκλῳ περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν καὶ τὸν νεὼν ἔσκαπτον, ἐκ δὲ τοῦ ὀρύγματος ἀνέβαλλον ἀντὶ τείχους τὸν χοῦν, καὶ σταυροὺς παρακαταπηγνύντες, ἄμπελον,—κόπτοντες τὴν περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν,—ἐσέβαλλον, καὶ λίθους ἅμα καὶ πλίνθον ἐκ τῶν οἰκοπέδων τῶν ἐγγὺς καθαιροῦντες, the apposition from its noun, as at i. 47. iii. 35. v. 30. vii. 37. Yet that is no reason why any editor should further dissever them by placing a comma between them. I have, therefore, with Poppo, removed the comma.

2. τὸ ἱερὸν καὶ τὸν νεὼν] On the distinction between these two terms see note at i. 134, 2, and Wachsm. Antiq. vol. ii. 2, p. 218. Of ἀνέβαλλον τὸν χοῦν the sense is, 'cast or threw up the earth,' 'dug.' In this use (which is extremely rare) the word ἀναβάλλω occurs also in Xen. Anab. v. 2, 5. Ἀντὶ τειχους, 'to serve for a wall,' as ii. 75, ἀντὶ τοίχων. Of σταυροὺς παρακαταπηγνύντες the sense is literally, 'having fixed down side by side palisades.' The next words down to καθαιροῦντες may best be regarded (as they are by Poppo) in the light of a brief mode of expression for καὶ σταυροὺς παρακαταπηγνύντες ἐσέβαλλον ἄμπελον, κόπτοντες αὐτὴν περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν, καὶ λίθους καὶ πλίνθον ἐσέβαλλον, καθαιροῦντες αὐτὰ ἐκ τῶν οἰκοπέδων τῶν ἐγγύς. In this view Poppo, after remarking that at ἐσέβαλλον must be supplied ἐς τὸν χοῦν, assigns the following as the full sense intended: 'Et vallos propter fossam defigentes, vites, quæ circa templum erant, excisas et lapides atque lateres ex proximis ædificiis detractos in terram aggestam (seu aggerem) injiciebant (infigebant).' How preferable to the sense assigned to ἐσέβαλλον by Portus, Heilm., Gail, and others, is that above laid down, I have fully shown in the notes to my Translation. Perhaps, indeed, immittebant might be thought a still better rendering, since the term immittere in Latin is not unfrequently used for inserere, or interserere. Yet in order to decide that point it will be necessary previously to determine whether the palisade is to be considered as single or double. Now this our author makes by no means clear; though the words σταυροὺς παραπηγνύντες would rather lead us to suppose that there was a single palisade. According to this view, we must understand the expression ἐσβ. ἄμπελον to mean, 'clapping in the vine-twigs between the palisades' (after the manner that country people construct what is called a staked hedge); an operation this, of course, implying something of interweaving. And that the word is adapted to express that idea, we have already seen. Yet it is to be considered that the stones and bricks just afterwards mentioned could not be interwoven; they would rather be inserted: which circumstance would necessarily imply that the palisade was double: in which view we may suppose the term ἄμπελον to denote (as it is explained in my Translation, and interpreted by Goeller) jagots, fascines of vine-tree wood. Thus the stones and bricks would be thrown in, together with some more earth, to consolidate the rampart. If this view of the sense be not admitted, it will be necessary to suppose the construction of a sort of staked hedge, on one side of which were piled bricks and stones. Yet such would surely little correspond to the name ἔρυμα just after given, and the wooden towers just after spoken of, and again the term τεῖχος applied to the fabric at ch. 100; nor would so sorry a fence have withstood all attempts to take it, until the fire-machine was applied. Ἄμπελος is here used, like πλίνθος just after, and elsewhere κέραμος, κάλαμος, κάχληξ, τάρσος, and other terms which may be seen in Bernhardy's Syntax, as a collective noun, whose singular carries with it the notion of a plural. And such is the use of our tile, lath, reed, plaster, &c. By the σταυροὶ here mentioned are to be understood, not what we denote by palisades, but rather beams of wood fixed into the ground, as is plain from the term ξύλοις applied to them, ch. 100. Of ἐσβάλλειν in this very rare sense to signify immittere, to clap on, an example elsewhere occurs in a passage of Aristophanes (where the term is employed at least by way of allusion): τὰ νοήματα—ἐσβάλλετε εἰς τὰς κιβωτοὺς μετὰ τῶν μηλῶν.

By οἰκοπέδων the older commentators and translators understand ruined edifices; while Poppo understands it of edifices generally; a sense which the word may be proved to bear elsewhere, namely, in Appian, i. 141, 79. 717, 89. ii. 662, 17. Yet thus domos would be a better rendering. I suspect, however, that the term is here used to denote farm-houses; as in Plato, 541, C, οἰκοπέδων ἢ γηπέδων, 'houses or homesteads.' And such, I am inclined to think, Suidas has in view when he says (in v. οἰκόπεδον), Γήπεδον, τὸ χωρίον ὥσπερ καὶ οἰκόπεδον· meaning that οἰκόπεδον is sometimes so used: and he καὶ παντὶ τρόπῳ ἐμετεώριζον τὸ ἔρυμα. πύργους τε ξυλίνους κατέστησαν, ᾗ καιρὸς ἦν, καὶ τοῦ ἱεροῦ οἰκοδόμημα οὐδὲν ὑπῆρχεν· ἥπερ γὰρ ἦν στοα, καταπεπτώκει. 3. ἡμέρᾳ δὲ ἀρξάμενοι τρίτῃ, ὡς οἴκοθεν ὥρμησαν, ταύτην τε εἰργάζοντο, καὶ τὴν τετάρτην, καὶ τῆς πέμπτης μέχρι ἀρίστου. 4. ἔπειτα, ὡς τὰ πλεῖστα ἀπετετέλεστο, τὸ μὲν στρατόπεδον προαπεχώρησεν ἀπὸ τοῦ Δηλίου οἷον δέκα σταδίους, ὡς ἐπ' οἴκου πορευόμενον, καὶ οἱ μὲν ψιλοὶ οἱ πλεῖστοι εὐθὺς ἐχώρουν, οἱ δ' ὁπλῖται θέμενοι τὰ ὅπλα ἡσύχαζον· Ἱπποκράτης δὲ, ὑπομένων ἔτι, καθίστατο φυλακάς τε, καὶ τὰ περὶ τὸ προτείχισμα, ὅσα ἦν ὑπόλοιπα, ὡς χρὴν ἐπιτελέσαι.

XCI. Οἱ δὲ Βοιωτοὶ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ταύταις ξυνελέγοντο ἐς τὴν Τάναγραν· καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἀπὸ πασῶν τῶν πόλεων παρῆσαν, καὶ ᾐσθάνοντο τοὺς Ἀθηναίους προχωροῦντας ἐπ' οἴκου, τῶν ἄλλων Βοιωταρχῶν, οἳ εἰσιν ἕνδεκα, οὐ ξυνεπαινούντων μάχεσθαι, ἐπειδὴ οὐκ ἐν adds, by way of explanation, τὸ γῆ καὶ οἰκήμασιν ἀπαρτιζόμενον meaning by this a whole plot of land and buildings, as we say a house with outhouses and homestead. In like manner fundus in Latin originally signified simply the foundation of any thing, especially of a building; though it was afterwards not unfrequently used to denote omne ædificium, and sometimes ager cum villa, a house and homestead, or farm-house; the very sense, I apprehend, here intended.

ᾗ καιρὸς ἦν] 'where it was suitable,' 'at suitable places.' Of the words καὶ τοῦ ἱεροῦ οἰκοδόμημα οὐδὲν ὑπῆρχεν the sense is, 'and where there was no building of the temple,' (for a screen, it seems, ran on most sides,) or, 'where none remained.' The sense here intended is rendered plainer by the subjoined words, ἥπερ γὰρ ἦν στοὰ, καταπεπτώκει, of which the full meaning is, 'for this last was the case on one side,' where a cloister had once stood, but had fallen into ruins.

3. ὥρμησαν] for ὡρμήθησαν. See note on ii. 19. The ὡς, just before, stands for ἐξ ὅτου. (Poppo and Dobree.)

Ch. XCI. 1. οἳ εἰσιν ἕνδεκα] Mueller and Schneider are of opinion (as was also Wesseling) that these words refer to the other Bœotarchs; thus making the whole number, including Pagondas, twelve. But little likely is it that an even number should have been adopted. And though the number might vary at different times, yet odd numbers were always, for an obvious reason, selected. Arnold, indeed, is inclined to think that the words οἳ εἰσιν ἕνδεκα do refer to the other Bœotarchs. But that would, as he admits, make the number of Bœotarchs at that time thirteen; which is, he thinks, the true number. Against this view, however, Poppo justly urges the circumstance, that from the other Bœotarchs who dissuaded battle, not two Thebans, but Pagondas alone is distinguished; and hence that number cannot be right. The opinion advanced by me in my Translation, that there were then eleven, has been since then strengthened by the suffrages of Poppo, Boeckh, and Clinton. Certainly no proof that there were thirteen Bœotarchs will arise from the fact, plainly to be collected from the words following, that Pagondas had a colleague from Thebes; or, in other words, that Thebes sent two Bœotarchs. That the command was always with one of those two, is, though not certain, probable from the words καὶ ἡγεμονίας οὔσης αὐτοῦ.

οὐ ξυνεπαινούντων μάχεσθαι] 'they disapproved of, dissuaded fighting.' Of which rare idiom an example occurs in Herodot. vii. 15, οὐδαμῶς συνεπαίνεον ποιεῖν με ταῦτα. Their ground of objection was, that the enemy had himself retreated out of Bœotia, being now, as in the territory of Oropia, on Attic ground; in consequence of which it was no point of honour to fight. This objection Pagondas, as general-in-chief, might have overruled, and led the army on to battle on his own authority. But he did not think it prudent so to act without the concurrent approbation and support of the army at large; which he sought to attain in the following spirited harangue, addressed, for greater effect, to the λόχοι or divisions of the army separately, (similarly as on another occasion, vii. 77 & 78, each τῇ Βοιωτίᾳ ἔτι εἰσὶ, (μάλιστα γὰρ ἐν μεθορίοις τῆς Ὠρωπίας οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἦσαν, ὅτε ἔθεντο τὰ ὅπλα,) Παγώνδας ὁ Αἰολάδου, βοιωταρχῶν ἐκ Θηβῶν μετ' Ἀριανθίδου τοῦ Λυσιμαχίδου, καὶ ἡγεμονίας οὔσης αὐτοῦ, βουλόμενος τὴν μάχην ποιῆσαι, καὶ νομίζων ἄμεινον εἶναι κινδυνεῦσαι, προσκαλῶν ἑκάστους κατὰ λόχους, ὅπως μὴ ἀθρόοι ἐκλίποιεν τὰ ὅπλα, ἔπειθε τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς ἰέναι ἐπὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους καὶ τὸν ἀγῶνα ποιεῖσθαι, λέγων τοιάδε.

XCII. "Χρὴν μὲν, ὦ ἄνδρες Βοιωτοὶ, μηδ' ἐς ἐπίνοιάν τινα ἡμῶν ἐλθεῖν τῶν ἀρχόντων ὡς οὐκ εἰκὸς Ἀθηναίοις, ἢν ἄρα μὴ ἐν τῇ Βοιωτίᾳ ἔτι καταλάβωμεν αὐτοὺς, διὰ μάχης ἐλθεῖν· τὴν γὰρ Βοιωτίαν ἐκ τῆς ὁμόρου ἐλθόντες, τεῖχος ἐνοικοδομησάμενοι, μέλλουσι φθείρειν, καὶ εἰσὶ δήπου πολέμιοι, ἐν ᾧ τε ἂν χωρίῳ καταληφθῶσι, καὶ ὅθεν ἐπελθόντες πολέμια ἔδρασαν. 2. νυνὶ δ', εἴ τῳ καὶ ἀσφαλέστερον ἔδοξεν εἶναι, μεταγνώτω. οὐ γὰρ τὸ προμηθὲς, οἷς ἂν division of the army is addressed in language substantially the same, by its generals Nicias and Demosthenes,) and couched in language adapted to rouse their general patriotism, and provincial esprit du corps. As bearing no little resemblance to the present, we may compare the speech of Sthenelaidas, supra i. 86. With respect to the distribution of the matter contained in this speech, the Scholiast, with somewhat too much reference to logical science, remarks as follows. It is distributed into arguments alike of expediency and of justice, intermixed with somewhat of the possible. The protasis deals in reprehension of those who had dissuaded battle. The κατασκευὴ (or disposition of the proofs on which the counsel rested) consists in invectives against the Athenians. And the συμπέρασμα, or result of the argument, is couched in a powerful exhortation as to what ought to be done.

Ch. XCII. 1. ἐς ἐπίνοιάν τινα ἡμῶν ἐλθεῖν] The τινα, Duk. points out, stands for τινός: and he adds, that there is no difference between the phrase here used by our author and the one at iii. 46, χρὴ προκαταλαμβάνειν, ὅπως μηδ' ἐς ἐπίνοιαν τούτου ἴωσι. As another example of the use of the accusative, Poppo cites a passage of Dio Cass. lii. 31, (evidently written with a view to the present,) μηδ' ἐς ἔννοιάν ποτε μήτ' αὐτὸν ἀφικνεῖσθαι χρή. Yet this rather tends to prove that the above writer referred the τινα here, not to ἐπίνοιαν, as does Duker, but to χρή: a view, this, far preferable to the other; since an intolerable flatness arises from taking the word with ἐπίνοιαν. It would seem that our author meant the τινα to be referred to χρὴ, but fell into a certain negligence of expression, writing μηδέ τινα where propriety would rather have required μηδ' ἕνα. The argument intended is, 'There should not have been even any one of us [much less ten].' On the phrase διὰ μάχης ἐλθεῖν, see Blomfield on Æschyl. Prom. 121; Monk on Eurip. Hippol. 1159; and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 580. Δήπου, 'assuredly.'

ἐν ᾧ τε ἂν—ἔδρασαν] So Eurip. Incert. frag. 3, Νόμος τὸν ἔχθρον δρᾶν, ὅπου λάβῃς, κακόν.

2. εἴ τῳ καὶ] 'etiamsi alicui.' On the words, a little after, οὐ γὰρ τὸ προμηθὲς, &c. Duker cites, as admirably illustrative of the sentiment, the annotation of the Scholiast Cod. Cass. as follows: Ἡ προμήθεια τοῦ μέλλοντος καὶ ἡ πρόνοια οὐχ ὁμοίου χρήζει διαλογισμοῦ τῶν τε ὑπερμαχούντων τῆς ἰδίας γῆς, καὶ τῶν ἐχόντων μὲν τὴν ἰδίαν, ὀρεγομένων δὲ γῆς ἀλλοτρίας καὶ ἐπιόντων· ἐμφαίνει δὲ ὅτι χρὴ ἡμᾶς ὑπερμαχοῦντας τῇ ἡμῶν αὐτῶν τόλμῃ χρήσασθαι καὶ ἀπονοίᾳ μᾶλλον ἤπερ λογισμῷ. Still more adapted to illustrate the present is another passage of our author, supra i. 86, καὶ ὡς ἡμᾶς πρέπει βουλεύεσθαι ἀδικουμένους, μηδεὶς διδασκέτω· ἀλλὰ τοὺς μέλλοντας ἀδικεῖν μᾶλλον πρέπει πολὺν χρόνον βουλεύεσθαι. With respect to the construction, on this it is well observed by Poppo, p. 298, 'Sive, ut Haack, ante οἷς genitivum τούτων, sive, quum recte ἐνδέχεταί τί μοι λογισμὸν pro τὸν ἐμὸν λογισμὸν dicamus dativum τούτοις supplere malumus, orationis compositio legitima et usitata est.'

ἄλλος ἐπίῃ, περὶ τῆς σφετέρας ὁμοίως ἐνδέχεται λογισμόν, καὶ ὅστις τὰ μὲν ἑαυτοῦ ἔχει, τοῦ πλείονος δὲ ὀρεγόμενος, ἐκών τινι ἐπέρχεται. 3. πάτριόν δὲ ὑμῖν στρατὸν ἀλλόφυλον ἐπελθόντα καὶ ἐν τῇ οἰκείᾳ καὶ ἐν τῇ τῶν πέλας ὁμοίως ἀμύνεσθαι· Ἀθηναίους δέ, καὶ προσέτι ὁμόρους ὄντας, πολλῷ μάλιστα δεῖ. 4. πρός τε γὰρ τοὺς ἀστυγείτονας πᾶσι τὸ ἀντίπαλον καὶ ἐλεύθερον καθίσταται, καὶ πρὸς τούτους γε δή, οἳ καὶ μὴ τοὺς ἐγγύς, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἄποθεν πειρῶνται δουλοῦσθαι, πῶς οὐ χρὴ καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ ἔσχατον ἀγῶνος ἐλθεῖν; (παράδειγμα δὲ ἔχομεν τούς τε ἀντιπέρας Εὐβοέας καὶ τῆς

At καὶ ὅστις we have again a variation of construction.

3. πάτριον ὑμῖν] sc. ἐστιν. Similarly at iv. 17, we have ἐπιχώριόν ἐστιν ἡμῖν, and elsewhere ἐν ἔθει εἶναι. Here, then, as the Scholiast points out, there is ἡ ἐργασία τοῦ δυνατοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθους, 'a working out of the argument of power from the fact of custom:' which, he adds, is further on established from example. By τῇ τῶν πέλας may be meant, by a use of the word frequent in our author, 'that of others,' as of the Oropians.

προσέτι ὁμόρους ὄντας] See note on i. 15, 2. I have thought proper to place a colon, and not a period, after ἀμύνεσθαι, because, though there be a slight change of construction, yet it is essentially the same, and the clause Ἀθηναίους—δεῖ is closely united with the preceding, there being here an argumentum à fortiori. And the full sense intended may be thus expressed: 'but most of all ought you to repel Athenians, both as invaders, and moreover borderers.' The true scope of the words is best traced by the Scholiast, who regards this as a by-argument of interest deduced ἀπὸ προσώπου καὶ τρόπῳ, each of which is treated on in the next section. But previously the circumstance of their being borderers and neighbours is considered, as enforcing greater caution as to the forbearing to repel aggression; since such passiveness would only provoke future insults.

4. The argument founded on ὁμόρους ὄντας is now brought forward in the weighty form of a political axiom of universal application; q. d. 'for to all (i. e. in the case of all) as to their neighbours, an equal balance of power constitutes likewise freedom or liberty,' meaning, as Poppo explains the term καθίσταται, 'in ea inest,' 'ea nititur;' a sense of καθίστασθαι (fieri, γίνεσθαι) found in a passage of Isocr. ap. Budæi Comm. p. 253, πλείστων ἀγαθῶν δεσπόται καθίστανται, and other passages of Xenophon, Plut., and Lucian adduced by Poppo. Ἐλεύθερον is, as Poppo points out, the predicate to τὸ ἀντίπαλον, as in the not dissimilar form of expression at iii. 11, 1, τὸ δὲ ἀντίπαλον δέος μόνον πιστὸν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν.

καὶ πρὸς τούτους γε δή, &c.] The argument as regards person and disposition is now treated. Γε δή here has the same force as supra ch. 78, and in each case the δή serves to strengthen the limitative force of γε; the sense intended being, 'least of all,' or 'especially;' for there is here an argumentum à minori ad majus. I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing τούτους instead of vulg. τούτοις; which, though found in almost every MS., cannot, notwithstanding what Bauer and Kistemacher allege in its defence, be tolerated; the construction not admitting of it, and the correspondence with the preceding πρὸς τοὺς ἀστυγείτονας requiring the accusative.

Justly does Goeller object to the ellipsis here supposed by Duk. and others, of μόνον: for had that word been meant to be understood, not μὴ, but οὐ, ought to have been written: and the sense conveyed by the μὴ is ne dicam. See Herm. on Vig. p. 304, note 267. The sentence ought, in strict grammatical propriety, to have terminated at δουλοῦσθαι; but the words πῶς οὐ—ἐλθεῖν are added with reference to πρὸς τούτους considered as repeated, and standing in the place of τούτους πάτριόν ἐστι ἀμύνεσθαι.

ἐπὶ τὸ ἔσχατον ἀγῶνος] 'to the last degree of contest,' 'fight to the uttermost.' So Herodot. viii. 52, ἐς τὸ ἔσχατον κακοῦ ἀπιγμένοι. Plato, 240, ἐπ' ἔσχατον ἐλθεῖν ἀηδίας, and de Repub. ii. εἰς τὸ ἔσχ. ἐληλυθότες—ἀδικίας. Eurip. Or. 447, ἥκεις συμφορᾶς εἰς τοὔσχατον. Lucian, iii. 110.

The words παράδειγμα δὲ—διάκειται are confessedly parenthetic; and accordingly the subsequent words καὶ γνῶναι, &c. form a clause in the same sentence ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος τὸ πολύ, ὡς αὐτοῖς διάκειται·) καὶ γνῶναι ὅτι τοῖς μὲν ἄλλοις οἱ πλησιόχωροι περὶ γῆς ὅρων τὰς μάχας ποιοῦνται, ἡμῖν δὲ ἐς πᾶσαν, ἢν νικηθῶμεν, εἰς ὅρος οὐκ ἀντίλεκτος παγήσεται· εἰσελθόντες γάρ, βίᾳ τὰ ἡμέτερα ἕξουσι. 5. τοσούτῳ ἐπικινδυνοwith the foregoing. And though it may seem harsh that the first should be interrogative and the second declarative, that is only in semblance, not in reality; since the formula πῶς οὐ, (as in the case of πῶς οὐ χρή, supra ii. 60, 5.) though interrogative in form, is declarative in sense, as being strongly affirmative. And so in Xen. Mem. iv. 2, 29. iv. 4, 3, and Œcon. xi. 10, and not unfrequently in the instance of πῶς γὰρ οὔ, as also in that of πῶς οὐχὶ in two passages of the Greek Testament, Rom. viii. 32, and 2 Cor. iii. 8. In short, as the note of interrogation is not expressed at ii. 60, so neither perhaps ought it here.

Of the words ὡς αὐτοῖς διάκειται the sense is disputed. Some, as the Scholiast and Gottl., referring the αὐτοῖς to the Athenians, explain the meaning to be, 'how it is treated by them;' and others, as Arnold, 'in what sort of relation it stands towards them,' 'how it stands affected towards them.' But of these two modes of interpretation the former is objectionable on the ground that διακεῖσθαι cannot stand for ὑποκεῖσθαι; and according to the latter, the sentiment arising is at once jejune and unsuitable to the context. I must still adhere to the view of the sense formerly adopted by me, 'how it fares with them' (meaning the Eubœans and other Greeks): a view since supported by the opinion of Dobree, who rightly regards ὡς αὐτοῖς διάκειται as put for ὡς αὐτοὶ διάκεινται or διατίθενται, ('how they are treated,') similarly as ὡδ' ἔχει μοι is used as equivalent to ὧδ' ἔχω. Accordingly διάκειταί μοι may either be taken impersonally (as is not unfrequently ὧδ' ἔχει); or πράγματα may be understood, which is expressed in a passage of Plato, p. 440, a, οὕτως οἴεσθαι καὶ τὰ πράγματα διακεῖσθαι, 'that matters stand thus,' in hoc statu esse. Indeed, in that writer frequent is the use of διάκειμαι for in statu aliquo sum, me habeo, as said of condition: as also in Xenophon, especially with ὡς and οὕτω, to denote a miserable condition. The complete phrase occurs also in a passage of Demosthenes cited in Steph. Thes. in v. διέκειτο οὕτως τὰ πράγματα: and the elliptical one in Xen. An. vii. 3, 17, ἄμεινον ὑμῖν κείσεται, 'matters will stand better for you.'

τοῖς ἄλλοις] 'to others,' meaning 'in the case of others,' or literally 'the others before spoken of,' namely, οἱ ἀστυγείτονες. In the words οἱ πλησιόχ. — ποιοῦνται, 'those who are neighbours have contests about boundaries of territory,' a case is supposed of ordinary occurrence, (to which purpose are the words supra i. 122, 3, cited by Arnold,) and of comparatively small consequence. So in Herodot. v. 49, the Lacedæmonians are counselled περὶ οὔρων σμικρῶν—μάχας ἀναβάλλεσθαι. To this is opposed the contrary (something of great consequence) in ἡμῖν δὲ—παγήσεται, 'but in our case there will be fixed, should we be defeated, but one boundary undisputed, and that extending to the whole.'

ἐς πᾶσαν] scil. γῆν, 'as regards the whole country.' Meaning that the bounds will be so fixed as to embrace the whole, (where there is not, what Bauer imagines, any thing of irony, but merely a bold form of expression such as is frequent in our author,) and consequently the contest is really for the whole. So Herodian, iv. 14, 14, οὐ γαρ περὶ ὅρων γῆς ἡ φιλονεικία, περὶ παντὸς δέ. Hence may be seen the force of the following words of Eurip. Troad. 379. ἔθνησκον, οὐ γῆς ὅρι' ἀποστερούμενοι, Οὐδ' ὑψιπύργου πατρίδος, the deprivation of the boundaries of the country being considered as the loss of the whole. Had the learned editors seen this, they would have refrained from conjectures, though the blending of the two constructions, the accus. and the genit., is harsh; to avoid which, Burges rewrites the passage, even disputing the existence of the regimen with the accus. Both he and Reiske would have forborne, had they remembered that the same harshness (which Burges terms 'ulcus teterrimum') is found in another passage of our author, vi. 91, 7, τὰς τοῦ Λαυρίου τῶν ἀργυρείων μετάλλων προσόδους — εὐθὺς ἀποστερήσονται, μάλιστα δὲ τῆς ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμμάχων προσόδου. The very expression γῆς ὅρια occurs more than once in Plato.

ἕξουσι] 'imperio tenebunt,' as in Xen. Cyr. ii. 1, 2, and Anab. vii. 1, 17. Hist. iii. 2, 2. iv. 8, 3, and often in Homer, where the word is used with an implied notion of force, which is here expressed.

τέραν ἑτέρων τὴν παροίκησιν τῶνδε ἔχομεν. εἰώθασί τε οἱ ἰσχύος που θράσει τοῖς πέλας,—ὥσπερ Ἀθηναῖοι νῦν,—ἐπιόντες τὸν μὲν ἡσυχάζοντα, καὶ ἐν τῇ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον ἀμυνόμενον, ἀδεέστερον ἐπιστρατεύειν, τὸν δὲ ἔξω ὅρων προαπαντῶντα, καὶ, ἢν καιρὸς ᾖ, πολέμου ἄρχοντα, ἧσσον ἑτοίμως κατέχειν. 6. πεῖραν δὲ ἔχομεν ἡμεῖς αὐτοῦ ἐς τοῦσδε· νικήσαντες γὰρ ἐν Κορωνείᾳ αὐτούς, ὅτε τὴν γῆν ἡμῶν στασιαζόντων κατέσχον, πολλὴν ἄδειαν τῇ Βοιωτίᾳ μέχρι τοῦδε κατεστήσαμεν. 7. ὧν χρὴ μνησθέντας ἡμᾶς, τούς τε πρεσβυτέρους ὁμοιωθῆναι τοῖς πρὶν ἔργοις, τούς τε νεωτέρους πατέρων τῶν τότε ἀγαθῶν γενομένων παῖδας πειρᾶσθαι μὴ αἰσχῦναι τὰς προσηκούσας ἀρετάς, πιστεύσαντας δὲ τῷ θεῷ πρὸς ἡμῶν ἔσεσθαι, οὗ τὸ ἱερὸν ἀνόμως τειχίσαντες νέμονται, καὶ τοῖς ἱεροῖς, ἃ ἡμῖν θυσαμένοις καλὰ φαίνεται, ὁμόσε χωρῆσαι τοῖσδε, καὶ δεῖξαι ὅτι, ὧν μὲν ἐφίενται πρὸς τοὺς μὴ ἀμυνομένους ἐπιόντες κτάσθωσαν, οἷς δὲ γενναῖον τήν τε αὑτῶν ἀεὶ ἐλευθεροῦν μάχῃ καὶ τὴν ἄλλων μὴ δουλοῦσθαι ἀδίκως, ἀνανταγώνιστοι ἀπ' αὐτῶν οὐκ ἀπίασιν."

XCIII. Τοιαῦτα ὁ Παγώνδας τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς παραινέσας, ἔπεισεν ἰέναι ἐπὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους. καὶ κατὰ τάχος ἀναστήσας ἦγε τὸν στρατόν, ἤδη γὰρ καὶ τῆς ἡμέρας ὀψὲ ἦν. ‡ ἐπεὶ δὲ προσέμιξεν

5. ἐπικινδυνοτέραν ἑτέρων] Here we have, as Goeller remarks, a condensed form of expression for ἐπικινδυνοτέραν ἑτέρων παροικήσεως τὴν παροίκησιν. With the sentiment in εἰώθασί τε οἱ ἰσχύος—κατέχειν, Arnold compares a kindred one at vi. 34, 7, τοὺς προεπιχειροῦντας—μᾶλλον πεφόβηνται. With ἰσχύος θράσει, 'by the confidence of strength,' I would compare Soph. Phil. 104, δεινὸν ἰσχύος θράσος. Προαπαντᾷν means, 'to meet them before [they reach the borders].' Of this term I have met with no example elsewhere except in Dio Cass. 204, 51. 506, 26. 640, 49. 740, 45.

ἧσσον ἑτοίμως κατέχειν] The sense assigned to this expression in my Translation, namely, 'less ready to meddle with them,' has, I find, since been adopted by Arnold, who adds that the term κατέχειν signifies to lay hold on a man, in order to overpower him. Yet the examples he adduces of this sense from another passage of our author vii. 66, and from Herodot. vi. 129, are far from proving its existence. In the latter passage κατέχων πολλοῦ τοὺς ἄλλους means 'holding the rest quite down,' 'bearing them down,' as we say, overbearing. And so in a passage of Shakspeare it is said, 'Young Laertes overbears your officers.' For πολλοῦ in the above passage I conjecture the true reading to be πολλὸς, used as Herodot. i. 98, πολλὸς ἐνέκειτο, λέγων, and ix. 91, πολλὸς ἦν λισσόμενος. Perhaps, however, it may be accounted for as follows. Κατέχειν signifies literally, 'to hold down,' 'keep down,' as in Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 8, (Thiem.) κατέσχε τὸν κάπρον: also, by a hysteron proteron, to lay hold of in order to keep down: also, to get hold of; though of this latter sense I know no example except in a passage of the New Testament, where it is used in a figurative acceptation, Matth. xxi. 38, ἵνα κατάσχωμεν τὴν κληρονομίαν, 'that we may get hold of his inheritance.' I suspect, however, that it was an agonistic term used of wrestling, at least in the language of common life, and that hence it came to be used in the figurative sense to meddle with.

6. Here comes the above-mentioned proof, ἀπὸ παραδείγματος; for πεῖρα here denotes an experimental proof of any thing, as at i. 138. ii. 41. vi. 11. Ἐς τούσδε, 'as respects those persons.'

7. Now comes the ἐπίλογοι, couched in the form of exhortation, founded on the victory of Coronea, to act accordingly: and the general sense intended is, 'Bearing this in mind, it becomes the descendants of the brave men who conquered at Coronea, to repeat the lesson which their forefathers gave the Athenians; and, assured, as we may be, that the god whose sanctuary the enemy has profaned will guide us to victory, to manfully close with our foes,—and show them that if they attack not the defenceless, but those whose hereditary glory it is to preserve their own freedom and not to enslave others, they must not expect to get off without a struggle.' Such is the general meaning of the words, when freed from certain minor points, which will best be opened out in the course of a detailed explanation.

ὁμοιωθῆναι τοῖς πρὶν ἔργοις] I know not what Bauer can mean by saying (what Poppo seemingly acquiesces in) that τοὺς πρεσβυτ. stands, by metonymy, for τοῖς ἔργοις τῶν πρεσβυτέρων. True it is that the term ὁμοιοῦσθαι is more usually joined with a dative of thing, though one of person is found at ii. 97. v. 103, μηδὲ ὁμοιωθῆναι τοῖς πολλοῖς: and in a passage of the New Testament, Matth. vi. 8, μὴ οὖν ὁμοιωθῆτε αὐτοῖς. But in effect there is here an irregular and imperfectly developed comparison, the full sense intended being, 'it behoves the elderly to evince themselves as being like to what they were before, or to show forth deeds like unto their former deeds.' The same idiom has place in Eurip. Med. 889, Ἀλλ' ἐσμὲν, οἷόν ἐσμεν, οὐκ ἐρῶ κακὸν, Γυναῖκες· οὔκουν χρῆν σ' ὁμοιοῦσθαι κακοῖς, 'to be like unto [their] bad deeds,' meaning, to be like unto them in what is bad. Προσηκούσας is well explained by the Schol. συγγενικάς: and he refers to a passage of Hom. Il. vi. 209, μηδὲ γένος πατέρων αἰσχυνέμεν. The full sense intended is, 'the virtues which become their race.' Similarly in a passage of Plato, p. 110, we have, τὴν προσήκουσαν ἀρετὴν ἑκάστῳ γένει ('by race').

At δεῖξαι ὅτι—κτάσθωσαν there is a certain irregularity, which might, indeed, seem to be satisfactorily accounted for by here (with Goeller) recognising a commixture of two modes of expression, καὶ δεῖξαι ὅτι κτήσονται, and, omitting δεῖξαι ὅτι, barely καὶ κτάσθωσαν. But that is a principle not to be called in unnecessarily; which would be the case here; since, as Bernhardy and Poppo remark, the present passage may best be referred to the rule laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 511, 5, of the imperative used in an independent proposition, as in Plato, p. 800, ἐπανερωτῶ εἰ—κείσθω. Of course, too, this is one of the many instances of the imperative permissive, which expresses a declaration of what may be fit to be done in the situation in which a person is placed. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 511, 5, 1. Of this an instance remarkably in point is found in a passage of St. Paul, 1 Cor. vii. 36, ὃ θέλει ποιείτω,—γαμείτωσαν.

οἷς δὲ γενναῖον] scil. ἐστι. Render, 'but as those whose hereditary glory it is.' The term γενναῖον is well explained by the gloss of the Schol. πάτριον καὶ ἀπὸ γένους; though still better by that of Hesych. συγγενικόν. Compare Hom. Il. v. 253, οὐ γάρ μοι γενναῖον ἀλυσκάζοντι μάχεσθαι. For ἀναγώνιστοι I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing ἀνανταγώνιστοι, both from the authority of the best MSS. being in favour of the latter, and because it is a more forcible term; the sense being, 'uncontended with,' 'without having to struggle with an antagonist.' If ἀναγ. be read, the sense may, indeed, be, 'without a contest;' but I know of no proof that the word was ever used in that acceptation, (for as to the passage that has been adduced from Plato, p. 845, ἀναγ. γίγνεσθαι περὶ ἀρετῆς, it is far from decisive,) the only sense that the word bears being, I believe, 'one who has not fought,' as in Xen. Cyr. i. 5, 7. Ἀνανταγώνιστος is a word used by our author also at ii. 45, and by most of the writers who have imitated him, as Dio Cass., Josephus, Aristides, Philo Judæus, Lucian, Plutarch, and Procopius; though not in the sense it bears here, of which the only example I have met with elsewhere is in Onosand. Strat. p. 108, μετὰ τοῦ ἀκινδύνου τὴν ἄμυναν ἀνανταγώνιστον ἔχων. And as Onosander is an imitator of our author, (as shown by his use there of the phrase μετὰ τοῦ ἀκινδύνου, which is evidently formed on another in a passage of Thucyd. iii. 40, 4, ἐκ τοῦ ἀκινδύνου,) I doubt not that he, in the present passage, read ἀνανταγώνιστοι.

CH. XCIII. 1. ἀναστήσας ἦγε τὸν στρατὸν] The word στρατὸν belongs both to ἀναστ. and to ἦγε; the sense being, 'having set in motion, he led [on] his army.' So ἦγε at v. 7, and ἄξων στρατιὰν, vi. 46; also ἄξειν τὸν στρατὸν, vii. 32, and especially iv. 111, ἀναστήσας τὸν στρατόν. For vulg. καὶ ἐπειδὴ, which is retained by Poppo and Arnold, I have, with Bekker and Goeller, edited ἐπεὶ δὲ, from three MSS. and the early editions; this being one of those cases in which MSS. have far less weight than the proprietas linguæ. And although the MSS. here materially vary, the best agree in presenting ἐπεὶ δὲ, which is by no means to be reconciled with the καί. I suspect that it was foisted in by those who, reading ἐπειδὴ, felt some copulative particle to be ἐγγὺς τοῦ στρατεύματος αὐτῶν, ἐς χωρίον καθίσας ὅθεν, λόφου ὄντος μεταξύ, οὐκ ἐθεώρουν ἀλλήλους, ἔτασσέ τε καὶ παρεσκευάζετο ὡς ἐς μάχην. 2. τῷ δὲ Ἱπποκράτει, ὄντι περὶ τὸ Δήλιον, ὡς αὐτῷ ἠγγέλθη ὅτι "Βοιωτοὶ ἐπέρχονται," πέμπει ἐς τὸ στράτευμα, κελεύων ἐς τάξιν καθίστασθαι, καὶ αὐτὸς οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον ἐπῆλθε, καταλιπὼν ὡς τριακοσίους ἱππέας περὶ τὸ Δήλιον, ὅπως φύλακές τε ἅμα εἶεν, εἴ τις ἐπίοι αὐτῷ, καὶ τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς, καιρὸν φυλάξαντες, ἐπιγένοιντο ἐν τῇ μάχῃ. 3. Βοιωτοὶ δὲ πρὸς τούτους ἀντικατέστησαν τοὺς ἀμυνουμένους· καὶ ἐπειδὴ καλῶς αὐτοῖς εἶχεν, ὑπερεφάνησαν τοῦ λόφου, καὶ ἔθεντο τὰ ὅπλα, τεταγμένοι ὥσπερ ἔμελλον, ὁπλῖται ἑπτακισχίλιοι μάλιστα, καὶ ψιλοὶ ὑπὲρ μυρίους, ἱππῆς τε χίλιοι, καὶ πελτασταὶ πεντακόσιοι. 4. εἶχον δὲ δεξιὸν μὲν κέρας Θηβαῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμοροι αὐτοῖς· μέσοι δὲ Ἀλιάρτιοι, καὶ Κορωναῖοι καὶ wanting; accordingly some supplied καὶ before ἐπειδή, others, δὲ after; and one MS. presents both readings. Of course, ἐπεὶ δὲ is inconsistent with καί. Possibly, however, Thucydides may have written ἐπειδὴ δὲ, which is found in a similar passage, at i. 46, 3, ἐπειδὴ δὲ προσέμιξαν, &c. though there three MSS. have ἐπεὶ δὲ, which, as constituting a far less usual form of expression, is more likely to be genuine.

Of προσέμιξε the sense is simply accessit; as at i. 46. iii. 22. Xen. Cyr. ii. 4, 16. Polyb. i. 19, 3. iii. 42, 1. i. 37, 1. In προσέμιξεν ἐγγὺς we have an expression extremely rare, of which I have met with only two examples elsewhere, Plato, 290, προσμ. ἐγγύτερον, &c.; and 783, προσμίξαντες αὐτοῖς ἔγγυθεν.

2. ὅτι Βοιωτοὶ ἐπέρχονται] In this expression, which has in it something graphic, we have what may remind us of the commencing words of a popular Scottish ballad, 'The Campbells are coming.' For vulg. εἴ τι, before ἐπίοι, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, received εἴ τις, which is strongly supported by the occurrence of the same expression supra iii. 21, εἴ τις—ἐπίοι. It is truly observed by Poppo, that the common reading cannot well be defended by the passage infra vii. 48, ἤν τι βουλόμενον. It probably arose from the inadvertence of careless scribes.

3. ἀμυνουμένους] So I have thought proper to edit, with Bekker in his second edition, (for vulg. ἀμυνομένους,) from the conjecture (one which had also occurred to myself) of Krueger and Dobree, who have adduced examples of the verb as used in the fut. tense from ii. 85, and iv. 126. The present tense, in such a context, admits of no defence. At καλῶς εἶχεν supply πρᾶγμα. Of ὑπερεφάνησαν τοῦ λόφου the sense is simply, 'they made their appearance above the hill;' the expression being graphic. So, further on, ch. 96, we have περιπέμψαντος—ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς—καὶ ὑπερφανέντων αἰφνιδίως, scil. τοῦ λόφου. This use with the genit. is rare, and only adduced by Steph. Thes. in the metaphorical sense, namely, as found in the phrase ὑπερφαίνεσθαι τῶν πολλῶν, 'to overtop the multitude.' Of the word as used in the physical sense, (which is extremely rare,) I have met with only two examples elsewhere, Nicand. Ther. v. 177, Δοιοὶ δ' ἐν σκυνίοισι ὑπερφαίνουσι μετώπου Οἷα τύλοι. Plut. Dion. 39, ὑπερφαινομένων τὰ τείχη, 'overtopping the walls.' At ὥσπερ ἔμελλον I would now, with Krueger and Goeller, supply the word τάσσεσθαι.

4. καὶ οἱ ξύμμοροι αὐτοῖς] Schneider and Poppo best explain this obscure and disputed expression as equivalent to οἱ συντελοῦντες ἐς αὐτούς, 'Bœotios Thebanis contributi et subjecti.' And they remark, that similarly in the Athenian commonwealth the ξυμμορίαι are elsewhere called ξυντέλειαι. Yet that expression is little adapted to illustrate the present; the sense in these two cases being so far different, that in the one the persons who composed the ξυμμορία might be called indifferently either ξύμμοροι, as fellow-sharers in the expenses, or ξυντελεῖς, as fellow-contributors. In the present instance, the persons were called ξύμμοροι, as being fellow-shareholders of the Theban territory; holding certain outlying districts by a sort of feudal subjection to Thebes: on which obscure subject see more in Boeckh's Orchomenus, p. 403; or the note supra ch. 76.

Κωπαιῆς, καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι οἱ περὶ τὴν λίμνην. τὸ δὲ εὐώνυμον εἶχον Θεσπιῆς, καὶ Ταναγραῖοι, καὶ Ὀρχομένιοι. ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ κέρᾳ ἑκατέρῳ οἱ ἱππῆς καὶ ψιλοὶ ἦσαν. ἐπ' ἀσπίδας δὲ πέντε μὲν καὶ εἴκοσι Θηβαῖοι ἐτάξαντο, οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι, ὡς ἕκαστοι ἔτυχον. αὕτη μὲν Βοιωτῶν παρασκευὴ καὶ διάκοσμος ἦν. XCIV. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ οἱ μὲν ὁπλῖται ἐπὶ ὀκτὼ πᾶν τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐτάξαντο, ὄντες πλήθει ἰσοπαλεῖς τοῖς ἐναντίοις, ἱππῆς δὲ ἐφ' ἑκατέρῳ τῷ κέρᾳ. ψιλοὶ δὲ ἐκ παρασκευῆς μὲν ὡπλισμένοι οὔτε τότε παρῆσαν οὔτε ἐγένοντο τῇ πόλει· οἵπερ δὲ ξυνεσέβαλον, ὄντες πολλαπλάσιοι τῶν ἐναντίων, ἄοπλοί τε πολλοὶ ἠκολούθησαν,—ἅτε πανστρατιᾶς ξένων τῶν παρόντων καὶ ἀστῶν γενομένης,—καὶ ὡς τὸ πρῶτον ὥρμησαν ἐπ' οἴκου, οὐ παρεγένοντο, ὅτι μὴ ὀλίγοι. 2. καθεστώτων δὲ ἐς τὴν τάξιν, καὶ ἤδη μελλόντων ξυνιέναι, Ἱπποκράτης ὁ στρατηγὸς, ἐπιπαριὼν τὸ στρατόπεδον τῶν Ἀθηναίων, παρεκελεύετό τε καὶ ἔλεγε τοιάδε.

XCV. "Ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, δι' ὀλίγου μὲν ἡ παραίνεσις γίγνεται, τὸ πέντε καὶ εἴκοσι] It might, indeed, seem little probable that the line should have been 25 deep. But here the line was rather a column, something like the Macedonian and Roman phalanx, which not only admitted, but required, considerable numbers; and was from 16 to 20 or 30. Nay, as Arnold observes, 'the Thebans, in the battle of Leuctra, formed their column 50 deep.' (Xen. Hist. vi. 4, 12.) The cause of the difference in depth of the column among the Athenians or Lacedæmonians, as compared with that of the Bœotians, is well accounted for by that commentator.

Διάκοσμος is by Passow and others regarded as an extremely rare and a highly poetical form of expression for διακόσμησις. But in truth the term is no where found in any poetical writer. And although the verbal is far more frequent, yet διάκοσμος occurs in Plato, Aristotle, and Plutarch. Nay, H. Stephens says, 'accipitur sæpe pro διακόσμησις.' Be that as it may, so far from being a poetical expression, it seems rather to have been one of the inexact terms of common life corresponding to what we express by 'the order of battle.'

CH. XCIV. 1. ὁπλῖται—ἐτάξαντο] 'gravis armaturæ milites totum exercitum suum in octonos digesserunt.' (Poppo.)

ψιλοὶ δὲ ἐκ παρασκευῆς—ὅτι μὴ ὀλίγοι] Render, 'As to light infantry, regularly equipped, there were neither such in the field, nor were there any belonging to the state; as to such as had taken part in the irruption, though far more numerous than the enemy, they had followed the army many of them unarmed,—inasmuch as there was an universal muster of both citizens and foreigners present; and as they had before marched off homeward, they were not at hand, (i. e. to take part in the battle,) except a few.' Compare ch. 90, οἱ ψιλοὶ οἱ πλεῖστοι εὐθὺς ἐχώρουν ἐπ' οἶκον. The meaning intended is, that there were no regularly armed light troops, either then on the field, or belonging to the state. A considerable number, indeed, of such troops, (a number much greater than the enemy's,) had accompanied the invading army; but they were irregularly armed, and not previously trained; nay, many of them unarmed. Such must (as Thirlwall justly supposes) have accompanied the army not for the purpose of fighting, but of working. Accordingly, when battle seemed inevitable, they had moved off as useless, followed by the half-trained and raw ψιλοὶ, who would be of no service on a regular battle-field.

2. ἐπιπαριών] This is best rendered by Poppo juxta incedens; and by Didot, parcourant les rangs. Compare v. 10, 8, ἐπιπαριὼν τῷ δεξιῷ, 'having advanced along the right wing;' where see note.

CH. XCV. In this brief, but spirit-stirring and soldier-like harangue the purpose of the commander was solely to cheer on his troops, by placing before them the advantages of victory, in securing Attica from future annoyance, in invasions, of the ἴσον δὲ πρός †τε τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς ἄνδρας δύναται, καὶ ὑπόμνησιν μᾶλλον ἔχει ἢ ἐπικέλευσιν. 2. παραστῇ δὲ μηδενὶ ὑμῶν ὡς ἐν τῇ ἀλλοτρίᾳ, οὐ προσῆκον, τοσόνδε κίνδυνον ἀναῤῥιπτοῦμεν. ἐν γὰρ τῇ τούτων ὑπὲρ τῆς ἡμετέρας ὁ ἀγὼν ἔσται· καὶ ἢν νικήσωμεν, οὐ μή ποτε ὑμῖν Πελοποννήσιοι ἐς τὴν χώραν ἄνευ τῆς τῶνδε ἵππου ἐσβάλωσιν· ἐν δὲ μιᾷ μάχῃ τήνδε τε προσκτᾶσθε, καὶ ἐκείνην μᾶλλον ἐλευθεροῦτε. 3. χωρήσατε οὖν ἀξίως ἐς αὐτοὺς τῆς τε πόλεως, ἣν ἕκαστος πατρίδα ἔχων πρώτην ἐν τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ἀγάλλεται, καὶ τῶν πατέρων, οἳ, τούσδε μάχῃ κρατοῦντες μετὰ Μυρωνίδου ἐν Οἰνοφύτοις, τὴν Βοιωτίαν ποτὲ ἔσχον."

XCVI. Τοιαῦτα τοῦ Ἱπποκράτους παρακελευομένου, καὶ μέχρι μὲν μέσου τοῦ στρατοπέδου ἐπελθόντος, τὸ δὲ πλέον οὐκέτι φθάσαντος, οἱ Βοιωτοί, παρακελευσαμένου καὶ σφίσιν ὡς διὰ ταχέων καὶ ἐνταῦθα Παγώνδου, παιωνίσαντες ἐπῆσαν ἀπὸ τοῦ λόφου. 2. ἀντεπῆσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ προσέμιξαν δρόμῳ. καὶ ἑκατέρων τῶν στρατοπέδων τὰ ἔσχατα οὐκ ἦλθεν ἐς χεῖρας, ἀλλὰ τὸ αὐτὸ ἔπαθε· ῥύακες γὰρ ἐκώλυσαν. τὸ δὲ ἄλλο καρτερᾷ μάχῃ καὶ ὠθισμῷ

Bœotian cavalry, and by reminding them of their former triumph over the same enemy at Œnophyta.

1. τὸ ἴσον—δύναται] 'it is of equal force [as a longer].' I have placed τε within brackets, because it is vain to attempt defending it, as Goeller and Arnold do, on the ground that it is out of its place: for when put in its place before δύναται, and corresponding to καὶ ὑπόμνησιν ἔχει, it tends not a little to enervate the force of the apposition in τὸ ἴσον δὲ, &c. It is also to be borne in mind, that the καὶ is not copulative, but continuative; and here it has no little force, as serving to introduce a delicately worded clause, intended to render more acceptable the somewhat unwelcome admonition here conveyed. The same qualification is observable in a passage of the New Testament, 2 Pet. i. 12, διὸ οὐκ ἀμελήσω ὑμᾶς ἀεὶ ὑπομιμνήσκειν περὶ τούτων, καίπερ εἰδότας, καὶ ἐστηριγμένους ἐν τῇ παρούσῃ ἀληθείᾳ. But to revert to the τε, I doubt not that γε, saltem, conjectured by Reiske and approved by Poppo, is the true reading.

ἔχει] Meaning, 'contains, carries with it.' The two terms here, παραίνεσις and ἐπικέλευσις, are, by implication, distinguished; the former as denoting a counsel with respect to what ought to be done, and an exhortation to do it; the latter, an urgent requisition, a sort of spurring on, which, it is intimated, they do not need, though the παραίνεσις they may require.

2. παραστῇ δὲ μηδενὶ] A form of expression not unfrequent in the Greek historians who have imitated our author. In οὐ προσῆκον, 'though it is not right [we should],' there is the use of particip. impersonal for genit. absol.; on which see note at vi. 82, 3. On the expression κίνδυνον ἀναῤῥιπτοῦμεν, see note at iv. 85, 4. Of οὐ μή ποτε (which is a stronger expression than οὐ or οὐδέποτε, the full sense is, 'never by any means.' The formula occurs several times in Plato, and always, as here, with the subjunctive, though used in the sense of the fut. indic.; except that the subj. aorist carries with it a somewhat weightier sense, as in a passage of Plato, Phædr. ἕως ἂν τὸ σῶμα ἔχωμεν, καὶ ξυμπεφυρμένη ᾖ ἡμῶν ἡ ψυχὴ μετὰ τοῦ τοιούτου κακοῦ, οὐ μή ποτε κτησώμεθα ἱκανῶς οὗ ἐπιθυμοῦμεν. With which sentiment compare a similar one in a passage of the New Testament, Rom. vii. 24.

3. πρώτην—ἀγάλλεται] See ii. 41.

Ch. XCVI. 2. τὰ ἔσχατα] Meaning, as Kistemacher explains, the cavalry and light-armed, who, as appears from ch. 93 and 94, occupied the extremities of the line of battle. The extremities of each army were, as Bp. Thirlwall observes, kept unemployed by the nature of the ground; being on opposite banks of two rapid brooks, or, according to the literal sense of the term here used, ῥύακες, watercourses or gullies bringing the water from the upland (Mount Messapus, now Kypaἀσπίδων ξυνεστήκει. 3. καὶ τὸ μὲν εὐώνυμον τῶν Βοιωτῶν καὶ μέχρι μέσου ἠσσᾶτο ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ ἐπίεσαν τούς τε ἄλλους ταύτῃ, καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα τοὺς Θεσπιέας. ὑποχωρησάντων γὰρ αὐτοῖς τῶν παρατεταγμένων, καὶ κυκλωθέντων ἐν ὀλίγῳ, οἵπερ διεφθάρησαν Θεσπιέων, ἐν χερσὶν ἀμυνόμενοι κατεκόπησαν· καί τινες καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, διὰ τὴν κύκλωσιν ταραχθέντες, ἡγνόησάν bocuno) down to the sea. Only one of these ῥύακες appears in the map. That called by the ancients Thermodon Deliam seems to have been on a sort of ness near the north side of the embouchure of the Thermaïcus, and about two miles south-east from the present village of Dramisi.

ξυνεστήκει] This may be best rendered pugnam conseruerat, 'engaged in battle:' of which sense (somewhat rare) examples are found in Herodot. vi. 108, συνεστεῶτας Βοιωτοῖσι, and iv. 132. Pol. xiv. 8, 9, συστάντες τοῖς Ῥωμαίοις, and xxx. 7, 3. And as here μάχῃ is added, so at iv. 55, 1, we have ξυνεστῶτες ἀγῶνι. The words καὶ ὠθισμῷ ἀσπίδων are thrown in for the purpose of showing that the engagement was close and determined. So Sil. Ital. iv. 354, 'teritur junctis umbonibus umbo, Pesque pedem premit.' Now in such a case the shield was often used for offensive as well as defensive warfare, namely, to aid in breaking the enemy's ranks; for which it was not ill adapted, since the boss was usually drawn out to a point protruding upwards of half a foot from the rest of the shield. So Livy, xxx. 34, 'hostium aciem Romani alà et umbonibus pulsantes,' &c. Martial, Epigr. iii. 46, 'In turbam incideris, cunctos umbone repellet.' I know not whether the phrase ὠθισμὸς ἀσπίδων, 'pushing with the shield,' be one found elsewhere; but the term ὠθισμὸς, without the adjunct, occurs in Herodot. vii. 225, ὠθισμὸς ἐγένετο πολλὸς, and ix. 62, ἐς ὃ ἀπίκοντο ἐς ὠθισμὸν, where ὠθ. is well explained by Schweigh. to mean, 'conflictus cominus pugnantium, et mutuo sese, veluti in turba hominum, prementium et protrudentium.' Highly illustrative of the thing itself is a passage of Plut. Symp. ii. 5, τῶν μαχομένων πρῶτον ἔργον ἐστὶ τὸ πατάξαι καὶ φυλάξασθαι· δεύτερον δὲ, συμπεσόντας ἤδη καὶ γενομένους ἐν χερσὶν, ὠθισμοῖς τε χρῆσθαι καὶ περιτροπαῖς ἀλλήλων, which has something not a little analogous to a passage of Shakspeare, containing a remarkable union of bold military metaphor, Jul. Cæs. act v. sc. 2, 'One sodaine push gave them the overthrow.' To this use of the shield, as an offensive weapon, there is allusion in an obscure and ill-translated passage of the Old Testament, Job xv. 26, where, in imagery derived from battle, the wicked are represented as 'stretching out their hands against God, running upon Him with the thick bosses of their bucklers:' a lively metaphor to denote the obstinate fury of the battle; and which is also observable in the Arabic adage cited by Schultens, 'he turned against him the boss of his buckler.' And so here I would render buckler, and not bucklers, which would in this case be out of place. The yod seems to have crept in from the carelessness of the scribes, as in many other instances of words ending with the pronominal suffix vau, 'his.' Moreover, as the preceding noun gabbeg, 'bosses,' is in the plural, so the scribes would naturally put the latter, magen, in the plural. The former is very properly put in the plural, since it is probable that the largest bucklers of the ancients had two bosses.

3. καὶ μέχρι μέσου] 'even as far as the middle [of the line],' where the central part, as distinct from the wings, commenced. In the words ὑποχωρησάντων γὰρ αὐτοῖς τῶν παρατεταγμένων, I would, with Bauer, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, regard the αὐτοῖς as to be referred to the Thespians, and as standing for παρ' αὐτοῖς. The sense will thus be, 'those drawn up next to them in the line of battle;' and the general meaning intended may be thus expressed: 'for being exposed by the retreat of those next to them in line, and being hemmed up by the many into a narrow space, the men of the Thespian army who perished were cut off while defending themselves:' where Goeller remarks on the change of subject in the participles ὑποχωρησάντων and κυκλωθέντων. On the phrase κυκλωθέντων ἐν ὀλίγῳ, see note at iv. 32. For ἐν ὀλίγῳ, indeed, one would have expected ἐς ὀλίγον, as at vii. 81, ξυνῆγον ἐς τοῦτο, and iv. 127, ἐς τὸ ἄπορον τῆς ὁδοῦ κυκλοῦνται. But here we have a condensed form of expression, meaning 'to hem in and confine into a small space.'

τε καὶ ἀπέκτειναν ἀλλήλους. 4. τὸ μὲν οὖν ταύτῃ ἠσσᾶτο τῶν Βοιωτῶν, καὶ πρὸς τὸ μαχόμενον κατέφυγε· τὸ δὲ δεξιὸν, ᾗ οἱ Θηβαῖοι ἦσαν, ἐκράτει τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ ὡσάμενοι κατὰ βραχὺ τὸ πρῶτον ἐπηκολούθουν. 5. καὶ ξυνέβη, Παγώνδου περιπέμψαντος δύο τέλη τῶν ἱππέων ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς περὶ τὸν λόφον, ὡς ἐπόνει τὸ εὐώνυμον αὐτῶν, καὶ ὑπερφανέντων αἰφνιδίως, τὸ νικῶν τῶν Ἀθηναίων κέρας,—νομίσαν ἄλλο στράτευμα ἐπιέναι,—ἐς φόβον καταστῆναι· καὶ ἀμφοτέρωθεν ἤδη, ὑπό τε τοῦ τοιούτου καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν Θηβαίων ἐφεπομένων καὶ παραῤῥηγνύντων, φυγὴ καθειστήκει παντὸς τοῦ στρατοῦ τῶν Ἀθηναίων. 6. καὶ οἱ μὲν πρὸς τὸ Δήλιόν τε καὶ τὴν θάλασσαν ὥρμησαν, οἱ δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ Ὠρωποῦ, ἄλλοι δὲ πρὸς Πάρνηθα τὸ ὄρος, οἱ δὲ ὡς ἕκαστοί τινα εἶχον ἐλπίδα σωτηρίας. 7. Βοιωτοὶ δὲ ἐφεπόμενοι ἔκτεινον, καὶ μάλιστα οἱ ἱππῆς, οἵ τε αὐτῶν καὶ οἱ Λοκροὶ, βεβοηθηκότες ἄρτι τῆς τροπῆς γιγνομένης.

4. τὸ μαχόμενον] scil. μέρος, meaning the body that still maintained the combat. The words, a little after, κατὰ βραχὺ τὸ πρῶτον, are not to be separated, but taken together, and construed, not with ὡσάμενοι, but with ἐπηκολούθουν: or rather they seem thrown in by way of denoting the mode of action. And at ὡσάμενοι must be supplied αὐτοὺς, from τῶν Ἀθηναίων. Render, 'and having forced them to give way, (as iv. 35 & 43. vi. 70. Herodot. ix. 25, ὡσάμενοι τὸν ἵππον,) they followed after them, first slowly, and step by step.' With respect to the expression κατὰ βραχὺ, commentators are not agreed whether it is to be referred to time or to space. Goeller takes it to denote both; but wrongly; for neither is here intended. It may rather be supposed to note the manner of action, and to mean, (like pedetentim in Latin,) 'step by step.' And the expression, though far from usual, is here employed from reference being had to both the retreating and the pursuing parties: otherwise κατὰ πόδας would have been used, as at v. 65, ἰέναι κατὰ πόδας αὐτῶν, 'to follow hard at their heels.' They would doubtless not have followed them far, but retired, in order to give help to their own left wing, hard-pressed by the Athenians, had it not been that, in the mean time, an event took place,—as recorded in the next section,—which enabled them to pursue with greater effect by the aid of the detachment of horse sent round the hill, by whose means they were able to press closer upon the retreating enemy, and break their ranks. By the term ξυνέβη, here employed, it is meant to be intimated, that the event of the battle was decided, not by prudence or valour, but by this sort of chance circumstance. The thing is, indeed, not made clear; but the following is the manner in which it took place. The Bœotian general, perceiving the distress of his left wing, had sent two squadrons of cavalry round by the back of the ridge which he had crossed, to its relief, as well as to counteract any attack from the Athenian squadron of horse at Delium. But the victorious wing of the Athenians, on seeing the Theban horse suddenly appear pouncing upon them from the height, was thrown into confusion, and spread it to the whole line; so that the horse were at liberty to join in the pursuit of the retreating wing of the Athenians, break its ranks, and cut it up; while the rest of the line, seized with a panic, were in full flight. On the phrase ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς, see note at iv. 36, 2.

5. ὡς ἐπόνει] quum laborarat; as iv. 59, et al. Ἀμφοτέρωθεν, 'from both causes.' Τοῦ τοιούτου, 'such [a remarkable circumstance as this].' Παραῤῥηγνύντων: not meaning, as Arnold supposes, 'breaking off one part of the line from the other,' (for at the time now spoken of it was already broken off,) but, 'breaking the ranks,' as vi. 70, παρερῥήγνυτο ἤδη τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 482, 16, παρερῥήγνυτό τε καὶ ἐπόνει τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας, and 553, 16. Arrian, E. A. παραῤῥηξάντων τι τῆς φάλαγγος, iii. 14, 2 & 7, and Lucian, tom. ii. 559, παρερῥήγνυτο ἡ φάλαγξ: a metaphor taken from tearing up a robe in strips lengthwise (παρά).

νικτὸς δὲ ἐπιλαβούσης τὸ ἔργον, ῥᾷον τὸ πλῆθος τῶν φευγόντων διεσώθη. 8. καὶ τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ οἵ τε ἐκ τοῦ Ὠρωποῦ καὶ οἱ ἐκ τοῦ Δηλίου, φυλακὴν ἐγκαταλιπόντες, (εἶχον γὰρ αὐτὸ ὅμως ἔτι,) ἀπεκομίσθησαν κατὰ θάλασσαν ἐπ' οἶκου. XCVII. Καὶ οἱ Βοιωτοὶ, τροπαῖον στήσαντες καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν ἀνελόμενοι νεκροὺς, τούς τε τῶν πολεμίων σκυλεύσαντες καὶ φυλακὴν καταλιπόντες, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς τὴν Τάναγραν, καὶ τῷ Δηλίῳ ἐπεβούλευον, ὡς προσβαλοῦντες. 2. ἐκ δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων κήρυξ πορευόμενος ἐπὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς, ἀπαντᾷ κήρυκι Βοιωτῷ, ὃς, αὐτὸν ἀποστρέψας, καὶ εἰπὼν ὅτι οὐδὲν πράξει πρὶν ἂν αὐτὸς ἀναχωρήσῃ πάλιν, καταστὰς ἐπὶ Ἀθηναίους, ἔλεγε τὰ παρὰ τῶν Βοιωτῶν, ὅτι οὐ δικαίως δράσειαν παραβαίνοντες τὰ νόμιμα τῶν Ἑλλήνων· πᾶσι γὰρ εἶναι καθεστηκὸς ἰόντας ἐπὶ τὴν ἀλλήλων ἱερῶν τῶν ἐνόντων ἀπέχεσθαι· Ἀθηναίους δὲ Δήλιον τειχίσαντας ἐνοικεῖν, καὶ ὅσα ἄνθρωποι ἐν βεβήλῳ δρῶσι, πάντα γίγνεσθαι αὐτόθι· ὕδωρ τε, ὃ ἦν ἄφαυστον σφίσι, πλὴν πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ χέρνιβι χρῆσθαι, ἀναspάσαντας ὑδρεύεσθαι. ὥστε ὑπέρ τε τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἑαυτῶν Βοιωτοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τοὺς ὁμωχέτας δαίμονας καὶ τὸν Ἀπόλλω, προαγορεύειν αὐτοὺς, ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀπιόντας, ἀποφέρεσθαι τὰ σφέτερα αὐτῶν. XCVIII. Τοσαῦτα τοῦ κήρυκος εἰπόντος, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, πέμψαντες παρὰ τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς ἑαυτῶν κήρυκα, τοῦ μὲν ἱεροῦ οὔτε ἀδικῆσαι ἔφασαν οὐδὲν, οὔτε τοῦ λοιποῦ ἑκόντες βλάψειν· οὐδὲ γὰρ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐσελθεῖν ἐπὶ τούτῳ, ἀλλ' ἵνα

7. ἐπιλαβούσης stands for καταλαβούσης. See note on ii. 51, 6.

Ch. XCVII. 1. φυλακὴν καταλιπόντες] Namely, not so much to guard the spoils, as to prevent the dead bodies from being removed forcibly for burial; since they had resolved to refuse the usual permission to bury the slain, except at the price of the possession of Delium.

2. καταστὰς ἐπὶ Ἀθηναίους] 'being brought to the Athenians,' 'having come to them.' At τὰ νόμιμα supply ἔθη, expressed in a passage of Demosth. p. 414, 4. Εἶναι καθεστηκὸς, 'that it is the established custom.' So iii. 9, τὸ καθεστὸς—νόμιμον. The words following, ἰόντας—ἀπέχεσθαι, form the subject of the foregoing εἶναι καθεστηκός. At πλὴν πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ χέρνιβι χρῆσθαι, the construction is rightly traced by Poppo as follows: ὃ ἦν ἄφαυστον σφίσι, πλὴν πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ, [ὥστε] χρῆσθαι [αὐτῷ] χέρνιβι. Compare with this a kindred passage of the New Testament, St. Matth. xii. 4, οὓς οὐκ ἐξὸν ἦν αὐτῷ φαγεῖν οὐδὲ τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι μόνοις. Χέρνιψ was the name given to the Pagan holy water, which was usually drawn from a sacred spring, and was, in addition, consecrated for the purification of the participants by having a flaming torch from the fire dipped therein, (so Aristoph. Pax, 959, φέρε δὴ, τὸ δαδίον τόδ' ἐμβάψω λαβών,) when all present were sprinkled with it. In addition to the examples of the word adduced by Duker, I add Pausan. i. 34, 3, οὐδ' ἐπὶ καθαρσίοις ἢ χέρνιβι χρῆσθαι νομίζοντες.

In ἀναspάσαντας we have a somewhat rare use for ἀνιμησαμένους. In either term there is an allusion to the drawing up of the water by a bucket from the well. The expression, a little after, ὁμωχέτας δαίμονας, is explained by Photius τοὺς συννάους θεοὺς, καὶ ὁμορροφίους, and by the Scholiast on the present passage, τοὺς συμμετέχοντας τῶν αὐτῶν ναῶν καὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ἱερῶν. Nearly equivalent to it is ὁμοβωμίους at iii. 59, 2, where see note. Suidas says it was a Bœotian expression. See more in Wachsmuth's Gr. Ant. ii. 2, p. 220, 39.

Ch. XCVIII. 1. οὔτε ἑκόντες βλάψειν] 'would commit no damage that they could avoid.'

τε καὶ ἀπέκτειναν ἀλλήλους. 4. τὸ μὲν οὖν ταύτῃ ἡσσᾶτο τῶν Βοιωτῶν, καὶ πρὸς τὸ μαχόμενον κατέφυγε· τὸ δὲ δεξιόν, ᾗ οἱ Θηβαῖοι ἦσαν, ἐκράτει τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ ὡσάμενοι κατὰ βραχὺ τὸ πρῶτον ἐπηκολούθουν. 5. καὶ ξυνέβη, Παγώνδου περιπεμψαντος δύο τέλη τῶν ἱππέων ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς περὶ τὸν λόφον, ὡς ἐπόνει τὸ εὐώνυμον αὐτῶν, καὶ ὑπερφανέντων αἰφνιδίως, τὸ νικῶν τῶν Ἀθηναίων κέρας,—νομίσαν ἄλλο στράτευμα ἐπιέναι,—ἐς φόβον καταστῆναι· καὶ ἀμφοτέρωθεν ἤδη, ὑπό τε τοῦ τοιούτου καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν Θηβαίων ἐφεπομένων καὶ παραῤῥηγνύντων, φυγὴ καθειστήκει παντὸς τοῦ στρατοῦ τῶν Ἀθηναίων. 6. καὶ οἱ μὲν πρὸς τὸ Δήλιόν τε καὶ τὴν θάλασσαν ὥρμησαν, οἱ δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ Ὠρωποῦ, ἄλλοι δὲ πρὸς Πάρνηθα τὸ ὄρος, οἱ δὲ ὡς ἕκαστοί τινα εἶχον ἐλπίδα σωτηρίας. 7. Βοιωτοὶ δὲ ἐφεπόμενοι ἔκτεινον, καὶ μάλιστα οἱ ἱππῆς, οἵ τε αὐτῶν καὶ οἱ Λοκροὶ, βεβοηθηκότες ἄρτι τῆς τροπῆς γιγνομένης.

4. τὸ μαχόμενον] scil. μέρος, meaning the body that still maintained the combat. The words, a little after, κατὰ βραχὺ τὸ πρῶτον, are not to be separated, but taken together, and construed, not with ὡσάμενοι, but with ἐπηκολούθουν: or rather they seem thrown in by way of denoting the mode of action. And at ὡσάμενοι must be supplied αὐτοὺς, from τῶν Ἀθηναίων. Render, 'and having forced them to give way, (as iv. 35 & 43. vi. 70. Herodot. ix. 25, ὡσάμενοι τὸν ἵππον,) they followed after them, first slowly, and step by step.' With respect to the expression κατὰ βραχὺ, commentators are not agreed whether it is to be referred to time or to space. Goeller takes it to denote both: but wrongly; for neither is here intended. It may rather be supposed to note the manner of action, and to mean, (like pedetentim in Latin,) 'step by step.' And the expression, though far from usual, is here employed from reference being had to both the retreating and the pursuing parties: otherwise κατὰ πόδας would have been used, as at v. 65, ἰέναι κατὰ πόδας αὐτῶν, 'to follow hard at their heels.' They would doubtless not have followed them far, but retired, in order to give help to their own left wing, hard-pressed by the Athenians, had it not been that, in the mean time, an event took place,—as recorded in the next section,—which enabled them to pursue with greater effect by the aid of the detachment of horse sent round the hill, by whose means they were able to press closer upon the retreating enemy, and break their ranks. By the term ξυνέβη, here employed, it is meant to be intimated, that the event of the battle was decided, not by prudence or valour, but by this sort of chance circumstance. The thing is, indeed, not made clear; but the following is the manner in which it took place. The Bœotian general, perceiving the distress of his left wing, had sent two squadrons of cavalry round by the back of the ridge which he had crossed, to its relief, as well as to counteract any attack from the Athenian squadron of horse at Delium. But the victorious wing of the Athenians, on seeing the Theban horse suddenly appear pouncing upon them from the height, was thrown into confusion, and spread it to the whole line; so that the horse were at liberty to join in the pursuit of the retreating wing of the Athenians, break its ranks, and cut it up; while the rest of the line, seized with a panic, were in full flight. On the phrase ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς, see note at iv. 36, 2.

5. ὡς ἐπόνει] quum laborarat; as iv. 59, et al. Ἀμφοτέρωθεν, 'from both causes.' Τοῦ τοιούτου, 'such [a remarkable circumstance as this].' Παραῤῥηγνύντων: not meaning, as Arnold supposes, 'breaking off one part of the line from the other,' (for at the time now spoken of it was already broken off,) but, 'breaking the ranks,' as vi. 70, παρερῥήγνυτο ἤδη τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 482, 16, παρερῥήγνυτό τε καὶ ἐπόνει τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας, and 553, 16. Arrian, E. A. παραῤῥηξάντων τι τῆς φάλαγγος, iii. 14, 2 & 7, and Lucian, tom. ii. 559, παρερῥήγνυτο ἡ φάλαγξ: a metaphor taken from tearing up a robe in strips lengthwise (παρά).

νυκτὸς δὲ ἐπιλαβούσης τὸ ἔργον, ῥᾷον τὸ πλῆθος τῶν φευγόντων διεσώθη. 8. καὶ τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ οἵ τε ἐκ τοῦ Ὠρωποῦ καὶ οἱ ἐκ τοῦ Δηλίου, φυλακὴν ἐγκαταλιπόντες, (εἶχον γὰρ αὐτὸ ὅμως ἔτι,) ἀπεκομίσθησαν κατὰ θάλασσαν ἐπ' οἴκου. XCVII. Καὶ οἱ Βοιωτοὶ, τροπαῖον στήσαντες καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν ἀνελόμενοι νεκροὺς, τούς τε τῶν πολεμίων σκυλεύσαντες καὶ φυλακὴν καταλιπόντες, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς τὴν Τάναγραν, καὶ τῷ Δηλίῳ ἐπεβούλευον, ὡς προσβαλοῦντες. 2. ἐκ δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων κήρυξ πορευόμενος ἐπὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς, ἀπαντᾷ κήρυκι Βοιωτῷ, ὃς, αὐτὸν ἀποστρέψας, καὶ εἰπὼν ὅτι οὐδὲν πράξει πρὶν ἂν αὐτὸς ἀναχωρήσῃ πάλιν, καταστὰς ἐπὶ Ἀθηναίους, ἔλεγε τὰ παρὰ τῶν Βοιωτῶν, ὅτι οὐ δικαίως ὁράσειαν παραβαίνοντες τὰ νόμιμα τῶν Ἑλλήνων· πᾶσι γὰρ εἶναι καθεστηκὸς ἰόντας ἐπὶ τὴν ἀλλήλων ἱερῶν τῶν ἐνόντων ἀπέχεσθαι· Ἀθηναίους δὲ Δήλιον τειχίσαντας ἐνοικεῖν, καὶ ὅσα ἄνθρωποι ἐν βεβήλῳ δρῶσι, πάντα γίγνεσθαι αὐτόθι· ὕδωρ τε, ὃ ἦν ἄφαυστον σφίσι, πλὴν πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ χέρνιβι χρῆσθαι, ἀνασπάσαντας ὑδρεύεσθαι. ὥστε ὑπέρ τε τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἑαυτῶν Βοιωτοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τοὺς ὁμωχέτας δαίμονας καὶ τὸν Ἀπόλλω, προαγορεύειν αὐτοὺς, ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀπιόντας, ἀποφέρεσθαι τὰ σφέτερα αὐτῶν. XCVIII. Τοσαῦτα τοῦ κήρυκος εἰπόντος, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, πέμψαντες παρὰ τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς ἑαυτῶν κήρυκα, τοῦ μὲν ἱεροῦ οὔτε ἀδικῆσαι ἔφασαν οὐδὲν, οὔτε τοῦ λοιποῦ ἑκόντες βλάψειν· οὐδὲ γὰρ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐσελθεῖν ἐπὶ τούτῳ, ἀλλ' ἵνα

7. ἐπιλαβούσης stands for καταλαβούσης. See note on ii. 51, 6.

Ch. XCVII. 1. φυλακὴν καταλιπόντες] Namely, not so much to guard the spoils, as to prevent the dead bodies from being removed forcibly for burial; since they had resolved to refuse the usual permission to bury the slain, except at the price of the possession of Delium.

2. καταστὰς ἐπὶ Ἀθηναίους] 'being brought to the Athenians,' 'having come to them.' At τὰ νόμιμα supply ἔθη. expressed in a passage of Demosth. p. 414, 4. Εἶναι καθεστηκὸς, 'that it is the established custom.' So iii. 9, τὸ καθεστὸς—νόμιμον. The words following, ἰόντας—ἀπέχεσθαι, form the subject of the foregoing εἶναι καθεστηκός. At πλὴν πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ χέρνιβι χρῆσθαι, the construction is rightly traced by Poppo as follows: ὃ ἦν ἄφαυστον σφίσι, πλὴν πρὸς τὰ ἱερὰ, [ὥστε] χρῆσθαι [αὐτῷ] χέρνιβι. Compare with this a kindred passage of the New Testament, St. Matth. xii. 4, οὓς οὐκ ἐξὸν ἦν αὐτῷ φαγεῖν οὐδὲ τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι μόνοις. Χέρνιψ was the name given to the Pagan holy water, which was usually drawn from a sacred spring, and was, in addition, consecrated for the purification of the participants by having a flaming torch from the fire dipped therein, (so Aristoph. Pax, 959, φέρε δὴ, τὸ δᾳδίον τόδ' ἐμβάψω λαβὼν,) when all present were sprinkled with it. In addition to the examples of the word adduced by Duker, I add Pausan. i. 34. 3, οὐδ' ἐπὶ καθαρσίοις ἢ χέρνιβι χρῆσθαι νομίζοντες.

In ἀνασπάσαντας we have a somewhat rare use for ἀνιμησαμένους. In either term there is an allusion to the drawing up of the water by a bucket from the well. The expression, a little after, ὁμωχέτας δαίμονας, is explained by Photius τοὺς συννάους θεοὺς, καὶ ὁμοροφίους, and by the Scholiast on the present passage, τοὺς συμμετέχοντας τῶν αὐτῶν ναῶν καὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ἱερῶν. Nearly equivalent to it is ὁμοβωμίους at iii. 59, 2, where see note. Suidas says it was a Bœotian expression. See more in Wachsmuth's Gr. Ant. ii. 2, p. 220, 39.

Ch. XCVIII. 1. οὔτε ἑκόντες βλάψειν] 'would commit no damage that they could avoid.'

ἐξ αὐτοῦ τοὺς ἀδικοῦντας μᾶλλον σφᾶς ἀμύνωνται. 2. τὸν δὲ νόμον τοῖς Ἕλλησιν εἶναι, ὧν ἂν ᾖ τὸ κράτος τῆς γῆς ἑκάστης, ἤν τε πλέονος ἤν τε βραχυτέρας, τούτων καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ ἀεὶ γίγνεσθαι, τρόποις θεραπευόμενα οἷς ἂν, πρὸς τοῖς εἰωθόσι, καὶ δύνωνται. 3. καὶ γὰρ Βοιωτοὺς καὶ τοὺς πολλοὺς τῶν ἄλλων, ὅσοι ἐξαναστήσαντές τινα βίᾳ νέμονται γῆν, ἀλλοτρίοις ἱεροῖς τὸ πρῶτον ἐπελθόντας, οἰκεῖα νῦν κεκτῆσθαι. 4. καὶ αὐτοὶ εἰ μὲν ἐπὶ πλέον δυνηθῆναι τῆς ἐκείνων κρατῆσαι, τοῦτ' ἂν ἔχειν· νῦν δὲ, ἐν ᾧ μέρει εἰσὶν, ἐκόντες εἶναι ὡς ἐκ σφετέρου οὐκ ἀπέναι. 5. ὕδωρ τε ἐν τῇ ἀνάγκῃ κινῆσαι, ἣν οὐκ αὐτοὶ ὕβρει προσθέσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐκείνους,

2. ὧν ἂν ᾖ—δύνωνται] 'that whosoever shall hold the mastery of any country, whether great or small, theirs shall always be its temples, to be honoured in all such ways, besides the accustomed ones, as they may be able to keep up.' The argument here hinges mainly on the words ἂν καὶ δύνωνται, 'as they may even be able,' meaning that the possessors of a country were only bound to respect the sanctity of the temples according to their ability. And the interposed words, πρὸς τοῖς εἰωθόσι, are merely meant to admit their obligation to treat them, with the same proviso, should they be able, with all the accustomed modes of respect, by not violating the sanctity of their precincts.

3. What is here said is meant to prove and illustrate by example what was before mentioned of the temples of any conquered territory becoming the property of the conquerors. The case of the Bœotians has reference to what is recorded at i. 12.

τὸ πρῶτον] This is to be taken with ἀλλοτρίοις : and of οἰκεῖα νῦν κεκτῆσθαι the sense is, 'now possess them as their own.'

4. εἰ μὲν ἐπὶ πλέον δυνηθῆναι] So Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller righly edit, from all the best MSS., for vulg. δυνηθεῖεν, which may justly be supposed a mere alteration proceeding from those who were not aware of the idiom here existing, by which the infin. instead of the verb finite in oratione obliquâ follows, even after εἰ and other conjunctions ; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 537. Hermann on Vig. p. 832, and the note on ii. 102, ὅτε δὴ ἀλᾶσθαι αὐτόν. Of ὡς ἐκ σφετέρου (scil. μέρους) the full meaning is by Poppo rightly explained to be, 'quum eam [partem agri] suam esse existimarent.'

5. ὕδωρ τε ἐν τῇ ἀνάγκῃ κινῆσαι] Render, 'and that they had meddled with [the] water from compulsion [only],' meaning the compulsion of dire necessity. With which expression, ἐν ἀνάγκῃ, compare Lucian, i. 651, 9, οὐ γὰρ ἐν ἀνάγκῃ μοι ἡ πεῖρα ἐγεγένητο. This, a more forcible expression than ἀνάγκῃ, (which is far from usual,) seems formed on the phrase ἐν ἀνάγκῃ ἔχεσθαι or ξυνέχεσθαι, or δέδεσθαι occurring in Plato, p. 567, ἐν ἀνάγκῃ δέδεται, and 240, ἐν ἀνάγκῃ ξεύξαντες. The expression ὕδωρ κινῆσαι is so unusual, that I have noted no example of it elsewhere. It may, however, be accounted for on the principle that κινεῖν properly signifies 'to move any thing out of the place it was intended to occupy,' and hence, by implication, came to bear the sense 'to meddle with' it, apply it to another use. So χρήματα κινεῖν, found at i. 143. ii. 24. vi. 70, and in a passage of Demosth. 615 & 755. Of this use of κινεῖν to denote meddling with, I have noted only two examples, in Demosth. p. 1119, ὑπολαμβάνειν — τὴν Ἀρχίππην ἠδικηκέναι με καὶ τὸν ἔχινον κεκινηκέναι, and Eurip. Med. 1317, τί τάσδε κινεῖς κἀναμοχλεύεις πύλας; or, as Porson would there read, λόγους. And so we say, 'to move or stir matters that ought to be left ἀκίνητα.' There is also an allusion to it in Appian, t. ii. p. 230, 41, τῶν τε ἀψαύστων ἐκίνει χρημάτων. And in Plato the term sometimes bears the sense attingere.

ἣν οὐκ αὐτοὶ ὕβρει προσθέσθαι] 'which necessity they had not exercised (i. e. used) with levity and insult of the god.' Compare Xen. Anab. v. 5, 9, οὐχ ὕβρει, ἀλλ' ἀνάγκῃ λαμβάνομεν τὰ ἐπιτήδεια. Not quite to the purpose is the passage adduced by Poppo from Eurip. Herc. Fur. 710, προστιθέναι τινὶ ἀνάγκην : the idiom there so far differing from the present, that προστίθεσθαί τινί τι signifies sibi aliquid adjungere, arcessere, &c., as in Eurip. Hec. 742, and Heracl. 147, ἴδια προσθέσθαι κακὰ, and another passage of our author supra i. 78, οἰκεῖον πόνον π. : whence the expression comes to have the sense 'to προτέρους ἐπὶ τὴν σφετέραν ἐλθόντας, ἀμυνόμενοι βιάζεσθαι χρῆσθαι. 6. † πᾶν δ' εἰκὸς εἶναι, ‡ τὸ πολέμῳ καὶ δεινῷ τινι κατειργόμενον, ξύγγνωμόν τι γίγνεσθαι καὶ πρὸς τοῦ θεοῦ· καὶ γὰρ appropriate to oneself, to make one's own ;' and hence, by implication, 'to take up and exercise :' as in Herodot. vii. 229, μῆνιν προσθέσθαι τινί, and Plato, p. 346, ὥστε ἐχθρας ἑκουσίους πρὸς ταῖς ἀναγκαίαις προστίθεσθαι. Hence in the present passage it signifies 'to exercise this necessity' (meaning this right of necessity).

ἀλλ' ἐκείνους—χρῆσθαι] 'but that they had, by first invading their territory, forced them to use it in self-defence.' The construction is stated by Bauer as follows : 'ἀλλὰ βιάζεσθαι (quod pendet ab ἔφασαν init. cap.) χρῆσθαι (scil. τῷ ὕδατι, vel τῇ ἀνάγκῃ, quod sit sequi necessitatem, ei parere, ut tempore uti, νόμῳ χρῆσθαι) ἀμυνόμενοι (primus est casus, quia de semet ipsi loquuntur) ἐκείνους (Thebanos) ἐλθόντας προτέρους ἐπὶ τὴν σφετέραν.' Here, however, the learned commentator ought surely to have placed τῇ ἀνάγκῃ first, as the context certainly requires ; since the term in question is employed, in some measure, for the purpose of explaining προσθέσθαι, the sense intended being, 'they were forced to use this right of necessity ;' where, it may be observed, the word χρῆσθαι is highly significant (for, had not the Thebans by besieging the place excluded them from other water, they would have waved their right) ; as in a passage of the New Testament, I Corinth. ix. 12, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐχρησάμεθα τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ ταύτῃ.

6. πᾶν δ' εἰκὸς—θεοῦ] For vulg. τῷ, that found in the best MSS., the Aug. and the Clar., τὸ, is absolutely necessary to the sense ; while the former would be worse than useless, as being, what Poppo admits it to be, quite unsuitable to a general sentiment. See Rost, Gr. p. 454. Hence, with reason, has τὸ been preferred by Bauer and Goell., and lately edited by Didot. Still adhering, then, to the view of the reading and sense propounded in my Transl., I would render as follows : 'moreover, that it was quite reasonable [to suppose] that what was compulsory in war or any perilous extremity, was somewhat excusable even in the sight of the god.' Now, although there may be something harsh and unusual in the phraseology, yet the sense above assigned, being at once required by the context, and alone to be elicited from the words, may justly be considered free from all reasonable objection. Of the expression εἰκὸς εἶναι, 'to be probable, or reasonable to be supposed,' frequent examples occur in Thucydides and other of the best writers. Something unusual, indeed, is there in this use of πᾶν, as taken for πανὺ or πάντως : but, unless the word itself be a corruption for πανὺ, we may suppose here one of those idioms characteristic of our author, and probably derived from the language of common life : or, possibly, the πᾶν may be in composition with εἰκὸς, though divided (as is not unfrequently the case with compound adjectives in Homer) per tmesin, by the particle δ'. And as there exists the expression πανείκελος, 'altogether likely,' why should there not in like manner πανεικός? For εἰκὸς, though a participle, is, in use, an adjective. And the irregularity in this case would, after all, not be so great as that observable in the use of the word πανίχνιον in Oppian, Cyneg. i. 453, μυξωτῆρσι κύνες δὲ πανίχνια σημήναντο.

Again ; notwithstanding what Poppo urges, there is surely nothing that can justly be objected to in the expression κατειργόμενον ; for, as coerceo in the later Latin writers, and the verb to coerce in our language, bears the sense, not only to restrain, but to constrain, it cannot be doubted that κατείργω was occasionally so used. Nay, I am enabled to adduce positive evidence that it was, having noted as an example Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 2, p. 1039, 10, τὸ δὲ Λατίνων τὸ πλέον ἀπρόθυμον, καὶ ὑπ' ἀνάγκης κατειργόμενον, &c. Similarly in a passage of Herodot. vii. 96 & 139, we have, what nearly approaches to the present, though a more remarkable phrase, ἐξειργεσθαι ἀναγκαίῃ, 'to be constrained by necessity :' and again at ix. 111, ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου ἐξειργόμενος, render, 'lege coactus,' 'constrained by the law ;' namely, with reference to the law restraining him from doing otherwise.

Of ξύγγνωμον thus used in the passive sense to signify excused or excusable, an example occurs also at iii 40, ξύγγνωμον δ' ἔστι τὸ ἀκούσιον. With καὶ πρὸς τοῦ θεοῦ here (of which the sense is, 'even in the estimation of the god') comp. i. 71, 6, οὔτε πρὸς θεῶν οὔτε πρὸς ἀνθρώπων. By the καὶ, even, is implied, what is left to be understood, the sense, 'still more of men.' And the words immediately following, καὶ γὰρ τῶν ἀκουσίων, &c., are meant τῶν ἀκουσίων ἁμαρτημάτων καταφυγὴν εἶναι τοὺς βωμούς, παρανομίαν τε ἐπὶ τοῖς μὴ ἀνάγκῃ κακοῖς ὀνομασθῆναι, καὶ οὐκ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμφορῶν τι τολμῆσασι. 7. τούς τε νεκροὺς πολὺ μειζόνως ἐκείνους ἀντὶ ἱερῶν ἀξιοῦντας ἀποδιδόναι ἀσεβεῖν, ἢ τοὺς μὴ ἐθέλοντας ἱεροῖς τὰ μὴ πρέποντα κομίζεσθαι. 8. σαφῶς τε ἐκέλευον to prove the allegation as regards the god, from the fact, that for involuntary offences the altars of the gods are a refuge; whence it may be inferred, that they hold them as venial. Finally, the next word, παρανομίαν, contains the proof as regards men, and that founded on the circumstance that the very term is named such with reference to those that are bad without necessity, and not to those who dare any thing from the pressure of misfortune or adversity. For examples elsewhere of the terms ὀνομάζειν and ἐπον. τινί τι, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 440, 2, b.

7. τούς τε νεκροὺς—κομίζεσθαι] Here the purpose of the speakers is to retort the charge of impiety on their accusers, the Bœotians. The construction in this passage is as follows: ἐκείνους ἀσεβεῖν πολὺ μειζόνως, ἀξιοῦντας τοὺς νεκροὺς ἀντὶ ἱερῶν, ἢ τοὺς μὴ ἐθέλοντας ἱεροῖς κομίζεσθαι τὰ μὴ πρέποντα. And the sense may be thus expressed: 'also that they were much more guilty of impiety, who asked them to give up the dead bodies at the price of things sacred to the gods, than those who were not disposed to carry off what were unbecoming to them at [the cession of] things sacred,' the temple and its precincts. Such is, I doubt not, the true sense, which is partly obscured by harsh phraseology and contortness of construction. With respect to the latter, the words τοὺς νεκροὺς are (as Bauer saw) taken quite out of regular order, and placed first, by way of making as prominent as possible that which was the principal subject of the sentence,—the unburied corpses withheld by persons professing piety! On the force of the expression μειζόνως see note supra, ch. 19. At ἀξιοῦντας is to be supplied αὐτούς. And the term ἀξ. has the very sense of our verb to ask (derived from ἀξιόω, in that sense), or, as the word was formerly spelt, to axe. Κομίζεσθαι bears the sense sibi conferre, as infra viii. 107: but the great difficulty in the sentence is that which respects τὰ μὴ πρέποντα, which has been by Bekk., Poppo, and Goell. edited, for vulg. τὰ πρέποντα, from the MSS. Cass., Clar., Mosq., Taurin, and the Scholiasts; and very properly, since the latter is capable of no tolerable sense. The editors have, however, not pointed out what sense τὰ μὴ πρέποντα will admit, so suitable as to induce us to adopt, on such slender evidence, the reading in question. I apprehend it to be, 'what were unbecoming to us,' namely, to obtain at such a price, i. e. by bartering our right for things sacred. Of the phrase τὰ μὴ πρέποντα I have noted only one example elsewhere, in Eurip. Busir., frag. 2, Δούλῳ γὰρ οὐχ οἷόν τε τἀληθῆ λέγειν, Εἰ δεσπόταισι μὴ πρέποντα τυγχάνοι, where the term πρέπ. is not well rendered utilia. The full sense intended in the second line is, 'if they (meaning the truths) should happen to be unbefitting their masters [to hear]:' an ellipsis this similar to that in the present passage. As respects the case in point, certain it is that the thing was unbecoming in the Athenians to obtain, since what was improper in the Bœotians to grant, it was surely unbecoming in the Athenians to receive. The Schol. on this passage seems to have had some glimpse of the sense; but that little spark of light was, alas, extinguished by the copyists who have transcribed his words; for, in the supplementum subjoined by the Schol., after the words of our author, τὰ μὴ πρέποντα τοῖς ἱεροῖς, namely, μηδὲ νεκροὺς θεῶν ἀντικαταλλάττεσθαι, for θεῶν ought certainly (though none of the editors have seen that it should) to be read θείων, i. e. 'things divine or sacred;' an expression frequent in Plato and Plutarch. Hence the sense intended in the above gloss will be, 'nor that dead bodies should be bartered for things divine,' or pertaining to the god.

8. σαφῶς τε ἐκέλευον, &c.] Here again the sense is obscure, partly from being imperfectly developed, and partly from a certain harshness of construction and phraseology; but the true import of the words seems to be, as Bauer, Haack, Goeller, Poppo, and Arnold understand them, 'They bid (demanded of) the Bœotians to tell them (i. e. the Athenians) at once, in plain terms, that they were at liberty to bury their dead, not [first] evacuating Bœotia, (for, in fact, they were not now in their country, but in that which they had acquired by force of arms,) but, according to their country's custom, by a σφίσιν εἰπεῖν, μὴ, "ἀπιοῦσιν ἐκ τῆς Βοιωτῶν γῆς," (οὐ γὰρ ἐν τῇ ἐκείνων ἔτι εἶναι, ἐν ᾗ δὲ δορὶ ἐκτήσαντο,) ἀλλά, "κατὰ τὰ πάτρια τοὺς νεκροὺς σπένδουσιν ἀναιρεῖσθαι." XCIX. Οἱ δὲ Βοιωτοὶ ἀπεκρίναντο, 'εἰ μὲν ἐν τῇ Βοιωτίᾳ εἰσὶν, ἀπιόντας ἐκ τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἀποφέρεσθαι τὰ σφέτερα, εἰ δὲ ἐν τῇ ἐκείνων, αὐτοὺς γιγνώσκειν τὸ ποιητέον·' νομίζοντες τὴν μὲν Ὠρωπίαν, ἐν ᾗ τοὺς νεκροὺς (ἐν μεθορίοις τῆς μάχης γενομένης) κεῖσθαι ξυνέβη, Ἀθηναίων κατὰ τὸ ὑπήκοον εἶναι, καὶ οὐκ ἂν αὐτοὺς βίᾳ σφῶν κρατῆσαι αὐτῶν· (οὐδ' αὖ ἐσπένδοντο δῆθεν ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐκείνων·) τὸ δὲ "ἐκ τῆς ἑαυτῶν" εὐπρεπὲς εἶναι ἀποκρίνασθαι "ἀπιόντας καὶ ἀπολαβεῖν ἃ ἀπαιτοῦσιν." ὁ δὲ κήρυξ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἀκούσας, ἀπῆλθεν ἄπρακτος. C. Καὶ οἱ Βοιωτοὶ εὐθὺς μεταπεμψάμενοι ἔκ τε τοῦ Μηλιέως κόλπου ἀκοντιστὰς καὶ σφενδονήτας, καὶ βεβοηθηκότων αὐτοῖς μετὰ τὴν μάχην Κορινθίων τε δισχιλίων ὁπλιτῶν, καὶ τῶν ἐκ Νισαίας truce entered into [for that purpose].' The construction is well stated by Poppo as follows: 'Verba autem τοὺς νεκροὺς ἀναιρεῖσθαι proprie non ex εἰπεῖν pendere existimanda, cui interpositum illis σπένδουσιν satis obstat, sed ex hoc ipso σπένδ. apta sunt, ut ch. 114 legimus, σπείσασθαι δὲ σφίσιν ἐκέλευον ἡμέραν τοὺς νεκροὺς ἀναιρεῖσθαι. Sed simul ad σφίσιν εἰπεῖν eadem aut similia verba supplenda sunt eadem breviloquentia, de qua ad iii. 52, 2. iv. 46, atque alibi, est expositum.' For σπένδουσι, we might rather have expected σπενδομένοις; but we have here an idiom (derived, I doubt not, from the inexact language of common life) with which Bornemann aptly compares the use in Herodian, v. 1, 4, of σπείσαντες for σπεισάμενοι. Better is it to suppose thus a slight deviation from Attic purity, than with Poppo to read σπείσουσι; by which there will arise a sense most forced and nice Sithonia frigidior.

The words οὐ γὰρ ἐν τῇ ἐκείνων ἔτι εἶναι, ἐν ᾗ δὲ δορὶ ἐκτήσαντο, though parenthetical, contain the very pith of the argument, which is (to use the words of Thirlw. Hist. Gr.) that 'the ground they had conquered was no longer to be considered as a part of Bœotia, but, while they held it, as Attic soil; and therefore they could not fairly be called upon to cede it as the condition of recovering their dead.'

CH. XCIX. The Bœotians being thus frustrated in their endeavours to fix a charge of sacrilege on the Athenians, now change their ground, and seek to evade the just request of the Athenians by what Thirlwall (Hist. .Gr.) terms 'a sort of dilemma meant only for the ear, and importing nothing more than that it was their pleasure to reject the application of the Athenians.' Accordingly, wilfully confounding the position of the Athenians at Delium with that of their slain in Oropia (which they acknowledge to belong to Attica), they mean to say, 'If the Athenians were in Bœotia, they must quit it before they could reasonably expect any indulgence from the Bœotians; but if, as they pretended, they were on their own ground, the Bœotians had nothing to do with a matter pertaining to a foreign soil.'

1. αὐτοὺς γιγνώσκειν τὸ ποιητέον] 'they themselves knew what ought to be done;' namely, not to ask for, but to go and take them. Κατὰ τὸ ὑπήκοον, 'in respect to its being in subjection to them,' because it was such.

οὐδ' αὖ ἐσπένδοντο—ἐκείνων] 'neither, on the other hand, would they have made (desired to make) a truce for their own territory,' i. e. what they called such. Of the words following, τὸ δὲ—ἀπαιτοῦσιν, the Schol. observes, that, disposed according to logical order, they would have stood thus: εὐπρεπὲς δὲ εἶναι ἀποκρίνασθαι, ἐκ τῆς Βοιωτῶν ἀπιόντας τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἀπολαβεῖν ἅπερ αἰτοῦσιν. The words are, as Poppo remarks, thrown out of the logical order from certain rhetorical causes; otherwise, the meaning would have been more obvious if the words εὐπρεπὲς εἶναι ἀποκρ. had been placed after ἀπαιτ. The article τὸ belongs to the whole proposition, not to any particular word contained in it; on which idiom see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 280, and Buttm. Gr. § 125, 8, 2.

CH. C. 1. ἐκ τοῦ Μηλιέως κόλπου] Mean-ἐξεληλυθότων Πελοποννησίων φρουρῶν καὶ Μεγαρέων ἅμα, ἐστράτευσαν ἐπὶ τὸ Δήλιον, καὶ προσέβαλον τῷ τειχίσματι, ἄλλῳ τε τρόπῳ πειράσαντες, καὶ μηχανὴν προσήγαγον, ἥπερ εἷλεν αὐτό, τοιάνδε. 2. κεραίαν μεγάλην δίχα πρίσαντες ἐκοίλαναν ἅπασαν, καὶ ξυνήρμοσαν πάλιν ἀκριβῶς ὥσπερ αὐλόν, καὶ ἐπ' ἄκραν λέβητά τε ἤρτησαν ἁλύσεσι, καὶ ἀκροφύσιον ἀπὸ τῆς κεραίας σιδηροῦν ἐς αὐτὸν νεῦον καθεῖτο, καὶ ἐσεσιδήρωτο ἐπὶ μέγα καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου ξύλου·

ing, as Poppo points out, from the confederate Trachinians. By τῶν ἐκ Νισαίας ἐξεληλυθότων Πελοποννησίων φρουρῶν, is, as Duker says, to be understood the late garrison of Nisæa, which had evacuated Nisæa on terms made with the Athenians. See supra ch. 69.

2. κεραίαν] Meaning a pole like a sail-yard. See supra ii. 76, and infra vii. 41. This was the name given to a warlike machine, similar to one thus described in Apollod. Poliorc. p. 21, γίνονται χύτραι, ἢ ὀστράκινοι σιδηραῖς λεπίσι δεδεμένοι ἀπὸ τοῦ πυθμένος, δακτυλιαίῳ τρυπήματι· ἀνεῳγότες οὗτοι πίμπλανται ἄνθρακος λεπτοῦ, καὶ ἔχουσι σύριγγα σιδηρᾶν, εἰς ἣν ἄλλη ἐντίθεται σύριγξ ἀσκώματα ἔχουσα. πῦρ δὲ λαβὼν ὁ ἄνθραξ ἅπτεται ἐμφυσώμενος, καὶ πληγὴν ὁμοίαν ἐργάζεται φλογί, καὶ ἐπεμβαίνει τῷ λίθῳ, καὶ ὀρύσσεται ὄξους ἢ ἄλλου τῶν δριμέων ἐγχεωμένου. To this purpose is also a passage of Herodian, viii. 4. 26, κιρνῶντες θείῳ καὶ ἀσφάλτῳ πίτταν ἑλόντες κοίλοις σκεύεσιν ἐμβαλόντες, λαβὰς ἐπιμήκεις ἔχουσι, with which compare Æneas, Tact. p. 33, seqq. Similar modes of sending forth combustibles into a town are recorded by Agathias, i. 10, 3, and also by Joannes Comeniata, in his account of the siege of Thessalonica by the Saracens, where he says that they blew fire through pipes (πῦρ διὰ τῶν σιφώνων τῷ ἀέρι φυσήσαντες) into the wooden walls of the besieged. The pole employed for this purpose was sawn asunder, and each of the halves hollowed out, and then carefully joined together (for want of instruments for boring), so as to form it into a tube. In which view comp. Dionys. Hal. p. 265, βακτηρίαν ξυλίνην — διατρήσας ὅλην, ὥσπερ αὐλόν.

By ἀκροφύσιον is denoted the end of a pair of bellows, the iron tube through which the wind proceeded, and which was applied to the fire. The only example of the word elsewhere that I have noted is in Dio Cass. 1337, 8. Hesych. explains ἀκροφύσια by τὰ ἀκρὰ τῶν ἀσκῶν ἐν οἷς οἱ χαλκεῖς τὸ πῦρ ἐμφυσοῦσιν, where the word ἀσκῶν serves to illustrate the origin of our term 'a pair of bellows,' which is from the Goth. balgs, skins, blowskins, namely, skins so formed as to inhale air by a lateral orifice, opened and closed with a valve, and serving to propel it through a tube (αὐλοῦ) upon the fire; whence the utensil was called φῦσα, and the top end of it ἀκροφύσιον. Vestiges of the above primitive, φῦσα, or bellows, are yet extant in barbarous and semi-barbarous nations or communities. Thus, Dr. E. D. Clarke, in his Travels, pt. ii. sect. 3, p. 592, mentions the Walachian goldwashers as using 'a bellows made by fixing an iron air-pipe into the skin of the neck of an animal, by fastening wooden handles to that part of it which covered the feet.' And Captain Lyon, in his Travels into Africa, p. 48, describes an iron pipe, to which are attached two skins, which open at the upper end by means of two sticks, having a small leather handle on each. 'The thumb,' he adds, 'is passed through one of these, and the fingers through the other, so that the hand easily opens and shuts the skin; the mouth being closed, the skin is pressed down, and throws a strong blast through the pipe.' So also Capt. Tuckey, Travels in Africa, p. 48, speaks of a blacksmith's bellows as 'composed of two skin bags,' meaning, thereby, balgs, or bellies, of skins.

Of σιδηροῦν, the sense is, 'made of iron;' of which neuter use of the word the only instances I have met with elsewhere are in Pollux, vii. 105, σιδηροῦν νόμισμα, and x. 186, σιδηροῦν στόμωμα καθεῖτο, 'an iron edging was let down.'

ἐσεσιδήρωτο] 'was coated with iron plates.' So Lucian, Pisc. 51, i. 618, (a passage evidently written with a view to the present,) κάθες (τὸ ἄγκιστρον) σιδηρώσας γε πρότερον ἐπὶ πολὺ τῆς ὁρμιᾶς. Posidipp. ap. Athen. 376, ὅς τις θώρακ' ἔχῃ φολιδωτὸν, ἢ δράκοντα σεσιδηρωμένον. Diod. Sic. vol. ix. 208, σεσιδηρωμένα λεπίσι. Dio Cass. 1080, 13, σανίσι σεσιδηρωμέναις. And such is the use of χαλοῦσθαι, and other similar terms.

3. προσῆγον δὲ ἐκ πολλοῦ ἁμάξαις τῷ τείχει, ᾗ μάλιστα τῇ ἀμπέλῳ καὶ τοῖς ξύλοις ᾠκοδόμητο· καὶ ὑπότε εἴη ἐγγύς, φύσας μεγάλας ἐσθέντες ἐς τὸ πρὸς ἑαυτῶν ἄκρον τῆς κεραίας ἐφύσων. 4. ἡ δὲ πνοὴ ἰοῦσα στεγανῶς ἐς τὸν λέβητα, ἔχοντα ἄνθρακάς τε ἠμμένους καὶ θεῖον καὶ πίσσαν, φλόγα ἐποίει μεγάλην, καὶ ἧψε τοῦ τείχους, ὥστε μηδένα ἐπ' αὐτοῦ ἔτι μεῖναι, ἀλλὰ ἀπολιπόντας ἐς φυγὴν καταστῆναι, καὶ τὸ τείχισμα τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ ἁλῶναι. 5. τῶν δὲ φρουρῶν οἱ μὲν ἀπέθανον, διακόσιοι δὲ ἐλήφθησαν. τῶν δὲ ἄλλων τὸ πλῆθος ἐς τὰς ναῦς ἐσβὰν ἀπεκομίσθη ἐπ' οἴκου.

CI. Τοῦ δὲ Δηλίου ἑπτακαιδεκάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ληφθέντος μετὰ τὴν μάχην, καὶ τοῦ ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων κήρυκος οὐδὲν ἐπισταμένου τῶν γεγενημένων ἐλθόντος οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον αὖθις περὶ τῶν νεκρῶν, ἀπέδοσαν οἱ Βοιωτοί, καὶ οὐκέτι ταὐτὰ ἀπεκρίναντο. 2. ἀπέθανον δὲ Βοιωτῶν μὲν ἐν τῇ μάχῃ ὀλίγῳ ἐλάσσους πεντακοσίων, Ἀθηναίων δὲ ὀλίγῳ ἐλάσσους χιλίων καὶ Ἱπποκράτης ὁ στρατηγὸς, ψιλῶν δὲ καὶ σκευοφόρων πολὺς ἀριθμός. 3. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν μάχην ταύτην καὶ ὁ Δημοσθένης ὀλίγῳ ὕστερον, ὡς αὐτῷ τότε πλεύσαντι τὰ περὶ τὰς Σίφας τῆς προδοσίας πέρι οὐ προὐχώρησεν, ἔχων τὸν στρατὸν ἐπὶ τῶν νεῶν, τῶν τε Ἀκαρνάνων καὶ Ἀγραίων, καὶ Ἀθηναίων τετρακοσίους ὁπλίτας, ἀπόβασιν ἐποιήσατο ἐς τὴν Σικυωνίαν. 4. καὶ πρὶν πάσας τὰς ναῦς καταπλεῦσαι βοηθήσαντες οἱ Σικυώνιοι τοὺς ἀποβεβηκότας ἔτρεψαν, καὶ κατεδίωξαν ἐς τὰς ναῦς, καὶ τοὺς μὲν ἀπέκτειναν, τοὺς δὲ ζῶντας ἔλαβον. τροπαῖον δὲ στήσαντες, τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους ἀπέδοσαν. 5. ἀπέθανε δὲ καὶ Σιτάλκης Ὀδρυσῶν βασιλεὺς ὑπὸ τὰς αὐτὰς ἡμέρας τοῖς ἐπὶ Δηλίῳ, στρατεύσας ἐπὶ Τριβαλλοὺς, καὶ νικηθεὶς μάχῃ. Σεύθης δὲ ὁ Σπαραδόκου, ἀδελφιδοῦς ὢν αὐτοῦ, ἐβασίλευσεν Ὀδρυσῶν τε καὶ τῆς ἄλλης Θρᾴκης ἥσπερ καὶ ἐκεῖνος.

CII. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος Βρασίδας, ἔχων τοὺς ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης ξυμμάχους, ἐστράτευσεν ἐς Ἀμφίπολιν τὴν ἐπὶ Στρυμόνι ποταμῷ, Ἀθηναίων ἀποικίαν. 2. τὸ δὲ χωρίον τοῦτο, ἐφ' οὗ νῦν ἡ πόλις ἐστὶν, ἐπείρασε μὲν πρότερον καὶ Ἀριστα γόρας ὁ Μιλήσιος, φεύγων βασιλέα Δαρεῖον, κατοικίσαι, ἀλλὰ ὑπὸ Ἠδώνων ἐξεκρούσθη· ἔπειτα

CH. CI. 5. ὑπὸ τὰς αὐτὰς ἡμέρας τοῖς ἐπὶ Δ.] 'about the same time as that of the things at Delium,' meaning the affair there. A somewhat strange and unusual form of expression. (Bauer.) Of which, however, another example is found at ch. 129, 2, ὑπὸ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον τοῖς ἐν τῇ Λύγκῳ ἐξέπλευσαν.

CH. CII. The scene now changes to the events of Macedonian Thrace, and an account is given of Brasidas's attack on Amphipolis; which is introduced by a brief notice of the origin of this colony, (which was, on account of its wealth, as the great emporium of that part, one of the most valuable possessions of Athens,) and also a description of its situation and other circumstances.

1. τὴν ἐπὶ Στρυμόνι] So called to distinguish it from any other of the same name; for there was at least one in Syria.

2. τὸ δὲ χωρίον—ἐξεκρούσθη] See Diod.

δὲ καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἔτεσι δύο καὶ τριάκοντα ὕστερον, ἐποίκους μυρίους, σφῶν τε αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων τὸν βουλόμενον, πέμψαντες, οἳ διεφθάρησαν ἐν Δραβήσκῳ ὑπὸ Θρᾳκῶν. 3. καὶ αὖθις ἐνὸς δέοντι τριακοστῷ ἔτει ἐλθόντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, Ἄγνωνος τοῦ Νικίου οἰκιστοῦ ἐκπεμφθέντος, Ἠδῶνας ἐξελάσαντες, ἔκτισαν τὸ χωρίον τοῦτο, ὅπερ πρότερον Ἐννέα ὁδοὶ ἐκαλοῦντο. 4. ὡρμῶντο δὲ ἐκ τῆς Ἠιόνος, ἣν αὐτοὶ εἶχον ἐμπόριον ἐπὶ τῷ στόματι τοῦ ποταμοῦ ἐπιθαλάσσιον, τέντε καὶ εἴκοσι σταδίους ἀπέχον ἀπὸ τῆς νῦν πόλεως, ἣν Ἀμφίπολιν Ἄγνων ὠνόμασεν, ὅτι ἐπ' ἀμφότερα περιῤῥέοντος τοῦ Στρυμόνος, διὰ τὸ περιέχειν αὐτήν, τείχει μακρῷ ἀπολαβὼν ἐκ ποταμοῦ ἐς ποταμόν, περιφανῆ ἐς θάλασσάν τε καὶ τὴν ἤπειρον ᾠκισεν. CIII. Ἐπὶ ταύτην οὖν ὁ Βρασίδας, ἄρας ἐξ Ἄρνων τῆς Χαλκιδικῆς, ἐπορεύετο τῷ στρατῷ· καὶ ἀφικόμενος περὶ δείλην ἐπὶ τὸν Αὐλῶνα καὶ Βρομίσκον, ᾗ ἡ Βόλβη λίμνη ἐξίησιν ἐς θάλασσαν, καὶ δειπνο-

Sic. xii. 68. Δραβήσκῳ. The site of this town cannot exactly be fixed; but it was doubtless situated somewhere in the centre of the present plain of Drama, and, probably, where the present town of Drama is marked in some maps. See Dr. Clarke's Travels, vol. iv., and Col. Leake's North. Greece, vol. iii. p. 131, seq.

3. δέοντι] So Haack, Poppo, Bekk., and Goell. edit, from the best MSS., for δέοντος, and very properly; for, as Poppo remarks, 'our author is always observed to accommodate the case of this participle to the greater number' (of which, see examples at ii. 2. vii. 31. and viii. 1); and the same may be said of Herodotus.

ἔκτισαν τὸ χωρίον, &c.] Some interesting circumstances as to the mode by which this third attempt, under Hagnon, became successful, may be learnt from a passage of Polyæn. Strat. vi. 53. The situation fixed on for the new city was well chosen, having a most commanding position, very strong by nature, and capable of being made by art almost impregnable. See Col. Leake, ubi supra.

4. ὅτι ἐπ' ἀμφότερα—ᾠκισεν] Construe: ὅτι, διὰ τὸ, ἀπολαβὼν τειχει μακρῷ, ᾠκισε περιφανῆ ἐς θάλασσάν τε καὶ τὴν ἤπειρον: and render, 'because, as the Strymon runs around both ways, by encircling it, he, taking off the site from river to river, built it so as to be conspicuous both to the seaward and to the landward.' We are not too rigidly to interpret the περι in περιῤῥέοντος. The term is elsewhere used of a city not quite surrounded by water, as Xen. Anab. i. 5, 4, (Thiem.) πόλις περιῤῥέεται ὑπὸ τοῦ M., and Herodian. viii. 2. 16. However, the Strymon might be said popularly to run around the city, because, as appears from what is said by M. Cousinery, and the plans of Hawkins, it did in a great measure surround it. Thus, by the phrase, a little further on, ἐκ ποταμοῦ ἐς ποταμὸν, is meant, 'from one of the two reaches which the river there makes to the other.' The expression ἀπολαβὼν is to be taken as at i. 7. iv. 45.

The position of Amphipolis is correctly marked out by Dobree, as follows: B

And he adds: 'Conjicio in Strymone flexum esse, ita ut collem sive rupem prope cingat, i. e. collem situm esse alicubi in spatio ABCD, et Amphipolin partim in clivo septentrionali, partim in clivo australi sitam; igitur περιφανῆ. Ceterum μακρὸν τεῖχος non urbis mœnia, sed murus, qualis ab Athenis ad Piræum, Megaris, iv. 67. Argis, v. 82.'

CH. CIII. 1. Αὐλῶνα] So called from its situation in the narrow valley through which the lake Bolbe has its exit, by a river of short course, into the sea, passing through the defile between two mountains. See Col. Leake, vol. iii. 169. Gatterer justly supposes no town here to be denoted, but merely a description to be given of the site of Βρομίσκος: a view strongly confirmed by a passage which Duk. has cited from Athenæus; though that writer is not justified in regarding it as a common noun. It is undoubtedly the name of a place, but not of a town. And, although Galen in his book de Sanitate, iii., referred to by Duker, calls it a city, yet I doubt not ποιησάμενος, ἐχώρει τὴν νύκτα. 2. χειμὼν δὲ ἦν, καὶ ὑπένειφεν· ᾗ καὶ μᾶλλον ὥρμησε, βουλόμενος λαθεῖν τοὺς ἐν τῇ Ἀμφιπόλει, πλὴν τῶν προδεδόντων. 3. ἦσαν γὰρ Ἀργιλίων τε ἐν αὐτῇ οἰκήτορες, (εἰσὶ δὲ οἱ Ἀργίλιοι Ἀνδρίων ἄποικοι,) καὶ ἄλλοι, οἳ ξυνέπρασσον ταῦτα, οἱ μὲν Περδίκκᾳ πειθόμενοι, οἱ δὲ Χαλκιδεῦσι. 4. μάλιστα δὲ οἱ Ἀργίλιοι, ἐγγύς τε προσοικοῦντες, καὶ ἀεί ποτε τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ὄντες ὕποπτοι, καὶ ἐπιβουλεύοντες τῷ χωρίῳ, ἐπειδὴ παρέτυχεν ὁ καιρὸς καὶ Βρασίδας ἦλθεν, ἔπραξάν τε ἐκ πλείονος πρὸς τοὺς ἐμπολιτεύοντας σφῶν ἐκεῖ, ὅπως ἐνδοθήσεται ἡ πόλις, καὶ τότε δεξάμενοι αὐτὸν τῇ πόλει, καὶ ἀποστάντες τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐκείνῃ τῇ νυκτὶ κατέστησαν τὸν στρατὸν πρόσω ἐπὶ τὴν γέφυραν τοῦ ποταμοῦ. 5. ἀπέχει δὲ τὸ πόλισμα πλέον τῆς διαβάσεως, καὶ οὐ καθεῖτο τείχη ὥσπερ νῦν, φυλακὴ δέ τις βραχεῖα καθειστήκει· ἣν βιασάμενος ῥᾳδίως ὁ Βρασίδας—ἅμα μὲν τῆς προδοσίας οὔσης, ἅμα δὲ καὶ χειμῶνος ὄντος,—καὶ ἀπροσδόκητος προσπεσών, διέβη τὴν γέφυραν, καὶ τὰ ἔξω τῶν Ἀμφιπολιτῶν οἰκούντων κατὰ πᾶν τὸ χωρίον εὐθὺς εἶχε. CIV. Τῆς δὲ διαβάσεως αὐτοῦ ἄφνω τοῖς ἐν τῇ πόλει γεγενημένης, καὶ τῶν ἔξω πολλῶν μὲν ἁλισκομένων, τῶν δὲ καὶ καταφευγόντων ἐς τὸ τεῖχος, οἱ Ἀμφιπολῖται ἐς θόρυβον μέγαν κατέστησαν, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἀλλήλοις ὕποπτοι ὄντες. 2. καὶ that he meant Bromiscus, which, we may suppose, was sometimes called Αὐλών, from its situation. The site of Bromiscus is, by Col. Leake, thought too uncertain to be fixed. But it may, with something more than probability, be presumed to have been the very point where the road laid down in the ancient Jerusalem Itinerary crosses the river of Bolbe. See Col. Leake, vol. iii. p. 169. 461.

2. χειμὼν ἦν] 'it was foul weather.' See note on iii. 21, 5.

4. ἐπιβουλεύοντες τῷ χωρίῳ] 'laying plans for the seizure of the place.' See note supra iv. 76, fin. And on κατέστησαν, see note supra ch. 79, 5. I have here thought proper to retain vulg. πρόσω (for which I had formerly, with Bekk., edited ποὸ ἔω): 1. because the authority for the other reading is next to none, resting merely on conjecture, as indicated in the margin of only one MS.; 2. because, though ποὸ ἔω might seem appropriate, yet, as Poppo observes, 'temporis notatio satis inest in ἐκείνῃ τῇ νυκτί.' and πρὸ ἔω would overload the sense. As to the reading of Cod. Palat. προὺ ἔως, that arose from a mere error of the scribe in mistaking c for ε, and blending the following ε taken for c. Nor is πρόσω inconsistent with κατέστησε, since it may, as it is by Poppo and Arnold, be rendered deduxerunt, 'they set on forward.' Or there may be a significatio prægnans for 'they brought him forward, and set him down at,' &c.

5. ἀπέχει—πλέον τῆς διαβ.] Render, 'the town is further off than the passage of the river;' though he was only so far distant from it as to be enabled, &c.

οὐ καθεῖτο τείχη] 'walls had not been carried down,' viz. to the Strymon: so v. 52. τειχη καθεῖναι ἐς θάλασσαν. So Livy, l. xxxiv. describes part of Syracuse as 'brachio muri demisso junctum:' and Virg. Æn. iii. 535. 'gemino demittunt brachia muro Turriti scopuli.'

τὰ ἔξω τῶν Ἀμφιπολιτῶν] 'the property of the Amphipolitans, which was outside [of the city].' The words οἰκούντων κατὰ πᾶν τὸ χωρίον are meant to illustrate the thing, and show how there came to be so much property outside,—namely, because the Amphipolitans inhabited up and down over the whole country; with allusion, I imagine, rather to villas such as those about Athens, (see ii. 14, 1.) inhabited by the rich merchants of the place, rather than farm-houses. Compare ii. 16, τῇ οὖν ἐπὶ πολὺ κατὰ τὴν χώραν—οἰκήσει μετεῖχον.

λέγεται Βρασίδαν, εἰ ἠθέλησε μὴ ἐφ' ἁρπαγὴν τῷ στρατῷ τραπέσθαι, ἀλλ' εὐθὺς χωρῆσαι πρὸς τὴν πόλιν, δοκεῖν ἂν ἑλεῖν. 3. νῦν δέ, ὁ μὲν ἱδρύσας τὸν στρατὸν, ἐπὶ τὰ ἔξω ἐπέδραμε, καὶ ὡς οὐδὲν αὐτῷ ἀπὸ τῶν ἔνδον ὡς προσεδέχετο ἀπέβαινεν, ἡσύχαζεν. 4. οἱ δ' ἐναντίοι τοῖς προδιδοῦσι, κρατοῦντες τῷ πλήθει ὥστε μὴ αὐτίκα τὰς πύλας ἀνοίγεσθαι, πέμπουσι μετὰ Εὐκλέους τοῦ στρατηγοῦ, ὃς ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηναίων παρῆν αὐτοῖς φύλαξ τοῦ χωρίου, ἐπὶ τὸν ἕτερον στρατηγὸν τῶν ἐπὶ Θράκης Θουκυδίδην τὸν Ὀλόρου. ὃς τάδε ξυνέγραψεν, ὄντα περὶ Θάσον (ἔστι δὲ ἡ νῆσος Παρίων ἀποικία, ἀπέχουσα τῆς Ἀμφιπόλεως ἡμίσεος ἡμέρας μάλιστα πλοῦν), κελεύοντες σφίσι βοηθεῖν. 5. καὶ ὁ μὲν ἀκούσας, κατὰ τάχος ἑπτὰ ναυσὶν, αἷς ἔτυχον παροῦσαι, ἔπλει, καὶ ἐβούλετο φθάσαι μάλιστα μὲν οὖν τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν, πρίν τι ἐνδοῦναι, εἰ δὲ μὴ, τὴν Ἠιόνα προκαταλαβών. CV. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ ὁ Βρασίδας, δεδιὼς καὶ τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς Θάσου τῶν νεῶν βοήθειαν, καὶ πυνθανόμενος τὸν Θουκυδίδην κτῆσίν τε ἔχειν τῶν χρυσείων μετάλλων ἐργασίας ἐν τῇ περὶ ταῦτα Θράκῃ, καὶ

Ch. CIV. 2. δοκεῖν ἂν ἑλεῖν] 'that he might in all probability have taken it.' Compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. 2212, 15, εἰ μενοῦν μηδὲν ἐπεξήμαρτον ἔτι πρὸς τοῖς εἰρημένοις, δοκοῦσιν ἄν μοι πολὺν διαμεῖναι χρόνον. And so, in the passages adduced by Steph. Thes. 3385, C, we have, δοκῶ μοι ποιήσειν τοῦτο—δοκῶ μοι ἐπιγράψειν—παραλείψειν—ὑπερβήσεσθαι.

4. κρατοῦντες] I have removed the comma which Poppo had placed after πλήθει, because it cuts off the close connexion, as to construction, between κρατοῦντες and ὥστε, of which the sense is, 'obtaining, or bringing about:' an extremely rare idiom, of which I know no example elsewhere, and of which one, and only one, parallel has occurred to me in the synonymous term νικᾶν in a passage of the New Testament, Rev. v. 5, ἐνίκησεν ὁ λεὼν—ἀνοῖξαι τὸ βιβλίον. With τῷ πλήθει (which signifies, 'by force of numbers,' 'by numerical superiority') compare a similar form of expression in Ps. xii. 4, 'not with [rather by] our tongues shall we prevail,' where the Sept. has τὴν γλῶσσαν μεγαλυνοῦμεν: though there, I doubt not, for τὴν γλῶσσαν, ought to be read τῇ γλώσσᾳ. So in 1 Sam. ii. 9, it is said, 'for by strength shall no man prevail.'

For vulg. τὸν, retained by Poppo, I have, with Bekker and Goeller, edited τῶν. This reading, found in five of the best MSS., yields by far the better sense, namely, that 'Eucles and himself were joint governors over the τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης, or parts about Thrace.' Τὸν cannot be right, as yielding a sense contradictory to facts: for surely Thucydides would not be called 'the governor who was in the parts about Thrace;' neither could Eucles be called such. It is evident that Thucydides was (as is implied by the τῶν) colleague with Eucles in the government.

For ἡμίσεος, Bekker and Goeller read, from four MSS., ἡμισείας. I have, with Poppo, retained the common reading, from internal as well as external authority being quite in its favour; since the uncommon form might easily be altered into the common; but not vice versâ. Poppo rightly remarks, that as here we have ἥμισυ ἡμέρας, so elsewhere μέσον ἡμέρας, &c.

Ch. CV. 1. κτῆσιν ἔχειν—ἐργασίας] The meaning is certainly not, what the translators seem to have supposed, that 'Thucydides had possession of the gold-mines'—for that were quite to overlook the term ἐργασίας—but rather, as Gail explains, that 'he held the right or power of working the gold-mines.' And so Heilm. and Poppo understand the expression; though they do not point out how the term κτῆσις comes to have a sense so unusual, not to say unprecedented, elsewhere. It is, I apprehend, founded on that distinction, which we find made by the Greek and Latin jurists, between κτῆσις, possessio (usufruct) and proprietas (complete property). So in the Gloss. Cyrilli in v. κτῆσις, this idiom is noted: κτῆσις τοῦ ἐν ἀλλοτρίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ ὄντος, peculium, meaning ἀπ' αὐτοῦ δύνασθαι ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις τῶν ἠπειρωτῶν, ἠπείγετο προκατασχεῖν, εἰ δύναιτο, τὴν πόλιν, μὴ, ἀφικνουμένου αὐτοῦ, τὸ πλῆθος τῶν Ἀμφιπολιτῶν, ἐλπίσαν ἐκ θαλάσσης ξυμμαχικὸν καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Θράκης ἀγείραντα αὐτὸν περιποιήσειν σφᾶς, οὐκέτι προσχωροῖ. 2. καὶ τὴν ξύμβασιν μετρίαν ἐποιεῖτο, κήρυγμα τόδε ἀνειπών, 'Ἀμφιπολιτῶν καὶ Ἀθηναίων τῶν ἐνόντων τὸν μὲν βουλόμενον ἐπὶ τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ, τῆς ἴσης καὶ ὁμοίας μετέχοντα, μένειν· τὸν δὲ μὴ ἐθέλοντα. ἀπιέναι, τὰ ἑαυτοῦ ἐκφερόμενον, πέντε ἡμερῶν.' CVI. Οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ, ἀκούσαντες, ἀλλοιότεροι ἐγένοντο τὰς γνώμας, ἄλλως τε καὶ βραχὺ μὲν Ἀθηναίων ἐμπολιτεῦον, τὸ δὲ that of which the possession or occupation is given up for a time from him who holds the property. Thus the term possessio is by the jurists (see Facciol. Lex.) explained 'usus quidem agri aut fundi aut ædificii, non ipse ager aut fundus.' In the present instance, then, the property of the soil was vested in some other hands; probably, as Gail supposes, in the state, and Thucydides had the possession on lease for a term of years.

δύνασθαι ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις τῶν ἠπειρωτῶν] I entirely agree with Goeller and Arnold in regarding the conjecture of Bekker and Dobree as worse than useless. Still the exact sense may be questionable. Duker takes the words as equivalent to δυνατὸς ἦν παρ' αὐτοῖς τοῖς πρ. τ. ἠπ. And agreeable to this view is the sense expressed in my Translation: 'had powerful interest with the principal persons.' Yet to this sense Poppo objects on the score that it would require παρὰ, in the place of ἐν, to have been written, as in the phrase at i. 33, τοὺς Κορινθίους δυναμένους παρ' αὐτοῖς. He seems to understand the words to import that 'Thucydides had a power as great as that of the very first persons of the continent.' But that, besides being a sense somewhat jejune, is one not to be extracted from the words without a certain degree of violence, which, indeed, were in the present instance wholly uncalled for; the simple sense here intended being, that 'he had influence among the chief persons,' &c. Thus the phrase in question has a somewhat stronger sense than what would be conveyed by δύνασθαι παρά; though that sense is implied; the meaning being, that 'he had great influence with the principal persons of the continent, as being himself one among them,'—one of their body. So, in our language, the phrase to have interest or influence in means to have influence over; and such is the explanation given in Johnson's Dictionary of the words of Prior, 'Exert, great God, thy interest in the sky,' (meaning with its inhabitants, calites,) an explanation confirmed by the words which follow, 'Gain each kind power, each guardian deity.' This use of ἐν is, indeed, rare: but I have noted at least two examples of it elsewhere, namely, Dio Cass. p. 143, 8, γνοὺς ὅτι μηδὲν οὕτως ἴσχυεν, ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν ὄνομα καὶ τὸν φθόνον, ἐν οἷς ἠδυνήθη ποτὲ, &c. Lucian. t. i. p. 474, δύναται μέγιστον ἐν τοῖς κάτω, 'multumque pollet apud inferos,' or rather, to express the full sense, 'pollet inter et apud.' So in a passage of Sueton. J. Cæsar, 6, we have, 'reges, qui plurimum inter homines pollent.'

περιποιήσειν σφᾶς] 'would preserve them,' 'save the city from capture.' On which see note at iii. 102, 4.

2. ἐπὶ τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ] scil. κτήμασι. 'in the possession of his property.' Τῆς ἴσης καὶ ὁμοίας (scil. πολιτείας) μετέχοντα, 'should participate in the same rights and privileges [with the rest of the citizens].' See note on the phrase at i. 27, 1, ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ καὶ ὁμοίᾳ, and Wachsmuth, Antiq. i. 2, p. 447.

Ch. CVI. 1. ἀλλοιότεροι—τὰς γνώμας] Here we have not merely the use of comparative for positive, (as the Scholiast supposes, who explains by μετεβλήθησαν τὴν προαίρεσιν,) but the comparative has reference to the words ἢ πρότερον or such like, left to be understood; of which idiom examples may be seen in Zosim. i. 12, 3, τοῖς λογισμοῖς ἀλλοιότερος ἦν. Plato, p. 46, εἴ τί μοι ἀλλοιότερος φανεῖται. The word here left to be understood is expressed in a passage of Herodot. vii. 212.

The word ἐμπολιτεῦον, just after, is not a nomin. absolute; but, as Goeller observes, it follows because τὸ ἐμπολιτεῦον is partly inherent in the subject of the foregoing nomin. ἀλλοιότεροι. See note on i. 10. iv. 118. On the use of the neuter here, (with which compare a similar one πλεῖον ξύμμικτον. καὶ τῶν ἔξω ληφθέντων συχνοὶ οἰκεῖοι ἔνδον ἦσαν, καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα, πρὸς τὸν φόβον, δίκαιον εἶναι ‡ ἐλάμβανον, οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι, διὰ τὸ ἄσμενοι ἂν ἐξελθεῖν, ἡγούμενοι οὐκ ἐν ὁμοίῳ σφίσιν εἶναι τὰ δεινά, καὶ ἅμα οὐ προσδεχόμενοι βοήθειαν ἐν τάχει· ὁ δὲ ἄλλος ὅμιλος, πόλεώς τε ἐν τῷ ἴσῳ οὐ στερισκόμενοι, καὶ κινδύνου παρὰ δόξαν ἀφιέμενοι. 2. ὥστε τῶν πρασσόντων τῷ Βρασίδᾳ ἤδη καὶ ἐκ τοῦ φανεροῦ διαδικαιούντων αὐτά, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὸ πλῆθος ἑώρων τετραμμένον, καὶ τοῦ παρόντος Ἀθηin Jos. 835, 9. ὅπουσον ἦν Σύρων ἐμπολιτεῦον, and 834, 20, ἔστι δὲ Σύρων οὐκ ὀλιγον τὸ ἐμπολιτευόμενον,) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 442, 3.

τὸ δὲ πλεῖον ξύμμικτον] See ch. 103, 3, and note. Πρὸς τὸν φόβον: meaning, 'on account of the fear they were in.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 591, β. 8. In the words δίκαιον εἶναι ἐλάμβανον, I have, with Bekker and Goeller, retained vulg. ἐλάμβανον; though Poppo and Arnold have edited ὑπελ., from several of the MSS. The latter has every appearance of being a mere gloss. And certainly had such been originally written, no one would have thought of altering it to ἐλάμβανον. Poppo, indeed, expresses a doubt whether the term λαμβάνειν can be followed by an infinitive, as ὑπολαμβάνειν unquestionably can. But it was, we may suppose, no other than this very doubt that led the early critics to alter ἐλάμβανον to ὑπελ. Again, Poppo, while he admits that λαμβάνειν is found used in this sense, accipere, interpretari, yet objects that it does not so occur followed by an infinitive. And certainly I have not met with any example of this elsewhere: but surely no reason is there why the Greeks should not have said δίκαιον εἶναι λαμβάνειν, as we say 'to take a thing to be good, or just, or right:' an idiom which, though not found in our purest writers, has always been frequent in the language of common life,—as, I doubt not, was λαμβάνειν; which, as such, was, we may suppose, used, together with not a few other similarly familiar terms, by our author.

The term δίκαιον here (as iv. 107) bears the sense 'fair and right,' 'equitable;' with an adjunct notion of moderate or mild; as in a passage of the New Testament, St. Matth. i. 19, δίκαιος ὤν. And such is the use of æquus in Latin, and fair in English.

διὰ τὸ ἄσμενοι ἂν ἐξελθεῖν] Notwithstanding that the ἂν is objected to by Poppo, and seems to have equally displeased the translators, who have almost universally passed it over, no sufficient ground is there for expunging it. It has, indeed, I find, no place in the Cod. Clarend.; but suffice it to say, that the absence in any MS. of a word difficult to be explained, and easy to be dispensed with, as well as easy to be omitted by accident, is always suspicious. Retaining, then, the word in question, we must explain it as best we are able. It would seem that here ἂν and the participle are put, as often elsewhere, for ἂν with a verb in the optative, (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 598.) which is especially observed to be the case in that use of the participle by which, when thus joined with ἂν, there is imparted to even positive assertion a kind of polite softening, as said of what is very likely to happen; as in a passage of Soph. Œd. Col. 761, where ἂν φέρων is well explained by Matthiæ as standing for ἂν φέροις. Here, then, we may render, 'As for the Athenians, they would be glad to get away.'

οὐκ ἐν ὁμοίῳ σφίσιν εἶναι τὰ δεινά] Of these words the sense (obscure from being imperfectly developed) is probably that assigned to them by Haack, Goeller, and Poppo, who interpret 'non perinde atque antea' (namely, before the moderate condition offered by Brasidas, when they would have had the worst to fear). The words, a little after, πόλεώς τε ἐν τῷ ἴσῳ οὐ στερισκόμενοι, which seem to correspond to the foregoing, may be explained, as they are by Goeller, 'quod non perinde atque ante conditiones a Brasida latas civitate privati erant, quum Brasidas conditionem ferret, ut quicunque vellent, æquabilitate juris usi in suarum rerum possessione manerent.'

2. διαδικαιούντων αὐτά] 'fully justifying, maintaining the justice of the proposals made by Brasidas.' Of διαδικαιοῦσθαι I have met with only one example elsewhere, in Dio Cass. 260, 4, τὰ τοῦ Καίσαρος δ., and 472, 90. 222, 75. With τετραμμένον (which the Scholiast explains by μεταβεβλημένον τὴν γνώμην) compare i. 140, 1, πρὸς τὰς ξυμφορὰς τρεπομένας.

ναίων στρατηγοῦ οὐκέτι ἀκροώμενον, ἐγένετο ἡ ὁμολογία, καὶ προσεδέξαντο ἐφ' οἷς ἐκήρυξε. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν τὴν πόλιν τοιούτῳ τρόπῳ παρέδοσαν, ὁ δὲ Θουκυδίδης καὶ αἱ νῆες ταύτῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ὕφε κατέπλεον ἐς τὴν Ἠιόνα. καὶ τὴν μὲν Ἀμφίπολιν Βρασίδας ἅτε εἶχε, τὴν δὲ Ἠιόνα παρὰ νύκτα ἐγένετο λαβεῖν· εἰ γὰρ μὴ ἐβοήθησαν αἱ νῆες διὰ τάχους, ἅμα ἕῳ ἂν εἵχετο. CVII. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο ὁ μὲν τὰ ἐν τῇ Ἠιόνι καθίστατο, ὅπως καὶ τὸ αὐτίκα, ἦν ἐπίῃ ὁ Βρασίδας, καὶ τὸ ἔπειτα ἀσφαλῶς ἕξει, δεξάμενος τοὺς ἐθελήσαντας ἐπιχωρῆσαι ἄνωθεν κατὰ τὰς σπονδάς· 2. ὁ δὲ πρὸς μὲν τὴν Ἠιόνα κατά τε τὸν ποταμὸν πολλοῖς πλοίοις ἄφνω καταπλεύσας, εἴ πως τὴν προὔχουσαν ἄκραν ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους λαβών, κρατοίη τοῦ ἔσπλου, καὶ κατὰ γῆν ἀποπειράσας ἅμα, ἀμφοτέρωθεν ἀπεκρούσθη· τὰ δὲ περὶ τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν ἐξηρτύετο. 3. καὶ Μύρκινός τε αὐτῷ προσεχώρησεν, Ἠδωνικὴ πόλις, Πιττακοῦ τοῦ Ἠδώνων βασιλέως ἀποθανόντος ὑπὸ τῶν Γοάξιος παίδων καὶ Βραυροῦς τῆς γυναικὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ Γαληψὸς οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον, καὶ Οἰσύμη· εἰσὶ δὲ αὗται Θασίων ἀποικίαι. παρὼν δὲ καὶ Περδίκκας εὐθὺς μετὰ τὴν ἅλωσιν, ξυγκαθίστη ταῦτα.

CVIII. Ἐχομένης δὲ τῆς Ἀμφιπόλεως, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς μέγα δέος κατέστησαν, ἄλλως τε καὶ ὅτι ἡ πόλις αὐτοῖς ἦν ὠφέλιμος ξύλων τε ναυπηγησίμων πομπῇ καὶ χρημάτων προσόδῳ, καὶ ὅτι

3. παρὰ νύκτα ἐγένετο λαβεῖν] 'was within a night of taking it:' on which rare and peculiar idiom see Viger and Matthiæ, and also Wessel. and Valcken. on Herodot. ix. 33. With respect to the construction, this is not (as the English version would indicate) ἐγένετο παρὰ νύκτα [τοῦ] λαβεῖν τὴν Ἠ., but [τὸ] λαβεῖν τὴν Ἠ. ἐγένετο [αὐτῷ] παρὰ νύκτα. The word αὐτῷ, here left to be understood, is expressed in another passage infra viii. 33, παρὰ τοσοῦτον ἐγένετο αὐτῷ μὴ περιπεσεῖν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις. In this use παρὰ answers to our word by, denoting exception; the sense being, so to express it, that 'his taking the town happened by [only] a night,' or rather, what were more agreeable to the idiom of our language, (in which the word by is in this use only employed of action not done, but missed,) 'he missed taking the town by a night,' 'he was by, or within, a night of taking it.' Thus in this idiom a general assertion is qualified by a phrase denoting exception; and here it has that force by its marking intermission. Thus the phrase adduced by Arnold, ὁ παρ' ἡμέραν πυρ., signifies 'a fever that attacks by a day,' that intermits its attack by that space of time.

Ch. CVII. 1. ἐπιχωρῆσαι] So I edit, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, from many MSS., for ἀποχ. Of the word as used in this very rare sense concedere, 'to come over to,' I have noted one example elsewhere in Arrian, E. A. ii. 21, 13, ἀπὸ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ἐπὶ τὴν σκηνὴν ἐπεχώρει, where see Ellendt.

2. τὴν προὔχουσαν—τείχους] 'the promontory which juts out from the wall,' namely, like a narrow spit of land. Ἐξηρτύετο, for καθίστατο. See note on ii. 13.

3. Γαληψὸς] The situation of Galepsus (which has been disputed) is by Colonel Leake, North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 178, fixed at the present Eski Cavallo. On the site of Œsyme see Col. Leake's note, ubi supra.

ξυγκαθίστη ταῦτα] 'co-operated in measures for establishing and securing the place.' So v. 52, 2, τὰ ἄλλα ξυγκαθίστη περὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν. Compare Æschyl. Prom. 313, τὸν ξυγκαταστήσαντα τὴν τυραννίδα.

Ch. CVIII. 1. ξύλων ναυπηγησίμων] 'timber for ship-building;' for which Thrace was celebrated, as we find from Theophr. Char. Eth. p. 96, καὶ διδομένης αὐτῷ ἐξαγωγῆς ξύλων (scil. ναυπηγ.) ἀτελοῦς. Similarly in Xen. Hist. v. 2, 16, we have mention of ξύλα ναυπηγήσιμα in Olynthia. The phrase ξύλ. ναυπ. occurs also in Niceph. Hist. p. 33, and Zonar. Hist. iii. 80, 43.

μέχρι μὲν τοῦ Στρυμόνος ἦν πάροδος, Θεσσαλῶν διαγόντων, ἐπὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους σφῶν τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους· τῆς δὲ γεφύρας μὴ κρατούντων,—ἄνωθεν μὲν μεγάλης οὔσης ἐπὶ πολὺ λίμνης τοῦ ποταμοῦ, τὰ δὲ πρὸς Ἠιόνα τριήρεσι τηρουμένων,—οὐκ ἂν δύνασθαι ‡ προσελθεῖν· τότε δὲ † ῥᾴδια ἤδη ‡ ἐνόμιζον γεγενῆσθαι· καὶ τοὺς τῆς δὲ γεφύρας μὴ κρατούντων—οὐκ ἂν δύνασθαι προσελθεῖν] 'but had they not mastered the bridge,—they could not have made their approaches.' The intermediate words, ἄνωθεν μὲν — τηρουμένων, are meant to illustrate the impossibility of getting at the city, which is covered by the Strymon and the Lake, so that there is no practicable approach. Here I have chosen, with Haack and Arnold, to edit προσελθεῖν, from many of the best MSS., instead of vulg. προελθ., which is retained by Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, but admits of no suitable sense; since the subject treated of is not the passage (πάροδος) into Thrace, but the approach (πρόσοδος) to Amphipolis, which formed the key to the other. The infin. here is supposed to depend in construction on some verb to be supplied from the preceding context, as ἤλπισαν from κατέστησαν ἐς δέος. (See note on the term at iv. 3, 2, ξυνεκπλεῦσαι.) This view, however, involves something so harsh, that I prefer to take ἐνόμιζον (for so I read) from the next clause. Τηρουμένων, as Poppo and Goeller are agreed, is in the passive voice, and to be referred, like κρατούντων, to the Lacedæmonians. Render, 'and on the other hand, as to the parts about Eion, they watched [by the Athenian forces].' Poppo aptly compares another passage of our author, ii. 83, τηρεῖν τὸν ἐναντίον. Of the verb thus used in the passive I know of no example elsewhere.

The words following, ἄνωθεν — τοῦ ποταμοῦ, are, as Goeller observes, of doubtful construction; for they may be taken as put, by transposition, for ἄνωθεν μὲν μεγάλης οὔσης λίμνης ἐπὶ πολὺ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, 'there being a great lake extending far up the river.' But since, as Poppo justly urges, the transposition thus supposed is of a most unusual character, and the construction as above laid down involves a needless, and what would be no other than a faulty, ambiguity, it is better, with Portus, Abresch, Haack, Poppo, and Arnold, to join λίμνης with ποταμοῦ; by which the sense will be, 'a great lake formed by the river,' meaning, by its waters spreading, on either side, over the adjacent country, which is at v. 7 described by the designation τὸ λιμνῶδες τοῦ Στρυμόνος. This view of the words is strongly confirmed by the account given by Colonel Leake, (North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 199.) who describes the lake as being nothing more than 'an enlargement of the river, varying in size according to the season of the year, though never reduced to that of the river only, according to its dimensions above and below the lake.' He adds, that 'the inundation is caused by other rivers, and rivulets on either side, from the mountains to the plain.' Thus the whole formed a strong defence against all approaches of an enemy. I would here compare a passage of an anonymous writer cited by Suidas in v. ἀπροσέλευστος (which he explains by ἀπροσπέλαστος): τὸ γὰρ ἐξόπισθεν ἀπρ. ἦν διὰ τὸν παραῤῥέοντα ποταμὸν, answering to what is here meant, namely, the lake and the mountain region which shuts in the plain to the north.

In the next words, τότε δὲ—γεγενῆσθαι, the general sense is clear, but the reading doubtful, and the construction perplexed. According to the common lection, (generally adopted from H. Stephens downwards,) namely, ῥᾴδια ἤδη ἐνομίζετο, there arises a construction intolerably harsh, and, from the want of direct authority existing for ἐνομίζετο, the word is decidedly to be rejected, though I by no means agree with Kistemacher and Poppo, that it should be put within brackets, as a gloss. It may rather be supposed to have proceeded from certain critics who were displeased with the reading ἐνόμιζε,—found in many of the best MSS.,—and who, justly considering ἐνόμιζε as erroneous, thought they should make all right by subjoining το, to which they referred ῥᾳδία. Yet thus a false sense is suggested; since it is not πάροδος, but πρόσοδος or προέλευσις, that is meant. The true reading, I doubt not, is that edited by Bekker, ἐνόμιζον, which is found in at least one MS. and in the margin of another, and doubtless had place in the originals of those excellent MSS. which have ἐνόμιζε. I have edited ῥᾴδια, from the early editions, and those of Haack and the second of Bekker. Accordingly it will be neut. plur. for sing., as in the case of ἀδύνατα εἶναι, frequently used in our author for ἀδύνατον εἶναι: though, considering the harshness thus ξυμμάχους ἐφοβοῦντο μὴ ἀποστῶσιν. ὁ γὰρ Βρασίδας ἔν τε τοῖς ἄλλοις μέτριον ἑαυτὸν παρεῖχε, καὶ ἐν τοῖς λόγοις πανταχοῦ ἐδήλου ὡς ἐλευθερώσων τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐκπεμφθείη. 2. καὶ αἱ πόλεις πυνθανόμεναι, αἱ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὑπήκοοι, τῆς τε Ἀμφιπόλεως τὴν ἅλωσιν καὶ ἃ παρέχεται, τήν τε ἐκείνου πραότητα, μάλιστα δὴ ἐπήρθησαν ἐς τὸ νεωτερίζειν, καὶ ἐπεκηρυκεύοντο πρὸς αὐτὸν κρύφα, ἐπιπαριέναι τε κελεύοντες, καὶ βουλόμενοι αὐτοὶ ἕκαστοι πρῶτοι ἀποστῆναι. 3. καὶ γὰρ καὶ ἄδεια ἐφαίνετο αὐτοῖς, ἐψευσμένοις μὲν τῆς Ἀθηναίων δυνάμεως ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον, ὅση ὕστερον διεφάνη, τὸ δὲ πλέον βουλήσει κρίνοντες ἀσαφεῖ ἢ προνοίᾳ ἀσφαλεῖ· εἰωθότες οἱ ἄνθρωποι, οὗ μὲν ἐπιθυμοῦσιν, ἐλπίδι ἀπερισκέπτῳ διδόναι, ὃ δὲ μὴ προσίενται, λογισμῷ αὐτοκράτορι διωθεῖσθαι. 4. ἅμα δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐν τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς νεωστὶ πεπληγμένων, καὶ τοῦ Βρασίδου ἐφολκὰ καὶ οὐ τὰ ὄντα λέγοντος, (ὡς αὐτῷ ἐπὶ † Νίσαιαν involved, I suspect the true reading to be ῥᾴδιον, as referred to προσελθεῖν. By adopting this lection, we may effectually preserve the close connexion between these words and the next.

2. ἃ παρέχεται] 'which he undertakes [to do],' as iii. 36, where see note, as also note on iii. 54.

3. ἐψευσμένοις τῆς Ἀθηναίων δυνάμεως — διεφάνη] An unusual mode of expressing their great disappointment. The sense here is well expressed in the rendering of Bredow: 'in æstimandis Atheniensium opibus tanto magis falsi sunt, quanto illæ majores postea apparuerunt;' meaning, as Arnold explains, that 'the greatness of the Athenian power was the measure of their error who had looked for its downfal.' The cause of this error in judgment is adverted to in the words which follow, τὸ δὲ πλέον — ἀσφαλεῖ, 'judging [as they did] more by uncertain wish, than by secure foresight;' with which compare iii. 3, 1, μεῖζον μέρος νέμοντες τῷ μὴ βούλεσθαι ἀληθῆ εἶναι. Βουλήσει, voluntate; meaning, 'the wish that any event may be so or so, rather than any sure foresight as to what it will really be.'

The next words, εἰωθότες οἱ ἄνθρωποι—διωθεῖσθαι, are meant to account for this blind folly, on the principle that 'it is one to which men are prone.' Render, 'men being accustomed to give way to a reckless inconsiderate hope as to what they desire—but what they do not relish, to reject by an arbitrary reasoning,' literally, one that will have its way, and will not hear any thing that can be said to the contrary. At διδόναι there is, as often elsewhere, to be supplied, what is expressed at v. 16, the word ἑαυτούς. By ἐλπ. ἀπερισκ. is meant, 'hope that does not look around and consider' probabilities, but regards what is merely hoped for as actual and real. So in Jos. 1236, 16, we have, ἀπερ. ὁρμὴ, and 1216, 27, ἐπήγειρε τὰς διανοίας ἄσκεπτος (read ἀπερίσκεπτος) ἐλπίς. Of διωθεῖσθαι the sense is literally, 'to push aside,' not to admit into the mind as probable. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Jos. Ant. xvii. 6, 3, ἀλλ' ὁποῖα ὄχλος φιλεῖ, δόξῃ (meaning, presumption that the thing will be as we wish) μᾶλλον ἀμαθεῖ ἢ προνοίᾳ ἀσφαλεῖ, where, for ἀμαθεῖ, is undoubtedly to be read ἀσαφεῖ: for, considering the close imitation of our author there intended by Josephus, it is not to be supposed that he would, by writing ἀμαθεῖ, have so completely lost sight of the paronomasia existing in the present between the two terms ἀσαφεῖ and ἀσφαλεῖ.

4. ἐφολκὰ] This, as the Scholiast and Photius say, stands for ἐπαγωγὰ, which is used on the same subject ch. 88. And so Hesych. explains ἐφολκὰ by τὰ ἀγαγεῖν δυνάμενα. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Malchus ap. Corp. Hist. Byz. t. i. p. 125, πολλά τε καὶ ἀπαγωγὰ (read ἐπαγωγὰ) τῷ ἱερεῖ διαλεχθεὶς—καὶ ἕτερα δὲ, ὁπόσα ἦν ἐφολκὰ εἰπών, &c.

ἐπὶ Νίσαιαν] For this we might, with Duker, naturally suppose our author to have written Νισαίᾳ. And so supra iii. 54, we have ἐναυμαχήσαμεν ἐπ' Ἀρτεμισίῳ, and the same construction is found elsewhere in Thucydides. To this, however, it is objected by Poppo, that 'thus either αὐτῷ or τῇ ἑαυτοῦ στρατιᾷ would be superfluous.' Accordingly, retaining τῇ ἑαυτοῦ μόνῃ στρατιᾷ οὐκ ἠθέλησαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ξυμβαλεῖν,) ἐθάρσουν, καὶ ἐπίστευον μηδένα ἂν ἐπὶ σφᾶς βοηθῆσαι. τὸ δὲ μέγιστον, διὰ τὸ ἡδονὴν ἔχον ἐν τῷ αὐτίκα, καὶ ὅτι τὸ πρῶτον Λακεδαιμονίων ὀργώντων ἔμελλον πειράσεσθαι, κινδυνεύειν παντὶ τρόπῳ ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν. 5. ὧν αἰσθόμενοι οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι φυλακὰς, ὡς ἐξ ὀλίγου καὶ ἐν χειμῶνι, διέπεμπον ἐς τὰς πόλεις· ὁ δὲ ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα ἐφιέμενος στρατιάν τε προσαποστέλλειν ἐκέλευε, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν τῷ Στρυμόνι ναυπηγίαν τριήρων παρεσκευάζετο. 6. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τὰ μὲν καὶ φθόνῳ ἀπὸ τῶν πρώτων ἀνδρῶν οὐχ ὑπηρέτησαν αὐτῷ, τὰ δὲ καὶ βουλόμενοι μᾶλλον τούς τε ἄνδρας τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου κομίσασθαι, καὶ τὸν πόλεμον καταλῦσαι.

CIX. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος Μεγαρῆς τά τε μακρὰ τείχη, ἃ σφῶν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι εἶχον, κατέσκαψαν ἑλόντες ἐς ἔδαφος, καὶ Βρασίδας μετὰ τὴν Ἀμφιπόλεως ἅλωσιν, ἔχων τοὺς ξυμμάχους, Νίσαιαν, he would suppose here a sensus prægnans, standing for the one fully expressed at ch. 85, στρατιᾷ τῇδε, ἐπὶ Νίσαιαν ἐμοῦ βοηθήσαντος, οὐκ ἠθέλησαν Ἀθηναῖοι προσμῖξαι. But in this case the αὐτῷ ἐπὶ N. must be regarded as prægnanter dictum for αὐτῷ βοηθήσαντι ἐπὶ N., which would involve something so exceedingly harsh, that rather than resort to such an expedient, I should prefer at once to read, instead of Νίσαιαν, Νισαίᾳ; and, by way of obviating the difficulty started by Poppo, would suppose that τ' has been lost after τῇ.

μηδένα ἂν ἐπὶ σφᾶς βοηθῆσαι] The full sense is, that 'no one would come to the aid of the Athenians against them.' Διὰ τὸ ἡδονὴν ἔχον. Goeller takes this as a confusion of two modes of expression, διὰ τὸ ἡδονὴν ἔχειν, and ἔχον put absolutely, (similarly as ἐξὸν, δῆλον ὄν,) comparing another passage at iv. 63, διὰ τὸ ἤδη φοβεροὺς παρόντας Ἀθηναίους: while Haack and Poppo think that the idiom is one parallel to that at i. 142, ἐν τῷ μὴ μελετῶντι, referring to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 578. Be that as it may, the sense intended is unquestionably that expressed in my Translation, and which has been followed by Poppo, 'because the thing was pleasant to them for the present,' literally, brought pleasure; ἔχον standing for παρέχον. On the term ὀργώντων see note at ii. 21, 3.

5. ὧν αἰσθόμενοι] 'having heard of which matters.' So I read, with Goeller and Bekker, (in his second edition,) from a few MSS., for vulg. αἰσθανόμενοι, which cannot be tolerated, since the Athenians at home are here meant, to whom the present tense would be unsuitable. Ἐφιέμενος is by Dukas and Poppo explained as standing for στείλας μετὰ πάσης ἐφέσεως, 'sending with all earnestness:' a sense sufficiently good, but destitute of proof. Hence I still prefer the sense assigned in my Translation, 'sending in letters or messages.' And though the word thus used absolutely seldom bears the above sense, yet it frequently does when followed by ἐπιστολὰς, &c. This view of the sense is, I find, borne out by the opinion of Dobree, who adduces examples of the absolute use of the term from Soph. Aj. 116 & 112, and refers to his note on Demosth. F. L. p. 433, 21. Finally, I would observe, Hesychius in like manner (probably with a view to the present passage) explains ἐφιέμενος by ἐντελλόμενος, 'sending messages,' viz. both by letter and by word of mouth, making known the present state of things. Compare vii. 10.

6. ἀπὸ τῶν πρώτων ἀνδρῶν] This I would not, with Bauer, regard as standing for the simple genitive, but would rather take the expression to mean 'on the part of,' 'at the hands of,' as at vii. 70, οἶκτον ἀπ' αὐτῶν, &c. Of οὐχ ὑπηρέτησαν αὐτῷ the sense is not that which the translators have assigned, 'did not furnish him [with the aid];' for, in point of fact, they did send him aid, though tardily and scantily. Render, 'they did not subserve his wishes by sending the reinforcements he required.' Or the full meaning intended may be, 'did not supply his necessities;' the latter term being left to be supplied from the context, as in Xen. Cyrop. i. 6, 10, (ed. Thiem.) where at ὑμῖν ὑπηρετήσειν is to be supplied τὰ ἐπιτήδεια or τὰ δέοντα.

στρατεύει ἐπὶ τὴν Ἀκτὴν καλουμένην. 2. ἔστι δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ βασιλέως διορύγματος ἔσω προὔχουσα, καὶ ὁ Ἄθως αὐτῆς ὄρος ὑψηλὸν τελευτᾷ ἐς τὸ Αἰγαῖον πέλαγος. 3. πόλεις δὲ ἔχει Σάνην μὲν, Ἀνδρίων ἀποικίαν, παρ' αὐτὴν τὴν διώρυχα, ἐς τὸ πρὸς Εὔβοιαν πέλαγος τετραμμένην, τὰς δὲ ἄλλας Θύσσον, καὶ Κλεωνὰς, καὶ Ἀκροθώους, καὶ Ὀλόφυξον, καὶ Δῖον· αἳ οἰκοῦνται ξυμμίκτοις ἔθνεσι βαρβάρων διγλώσσων. 4. καί τι καὶ Χαλκιδικὸν ἔνι βραχύ, τὸ δὲ πλεῖστον Πελασγικόν, τῶν καὶ Λῆμνόν ποτε καὶ Ἀθήνας Τυρσηνῶν οἰκησάντων, καὶ Βισαλτικόν, καὶ Κρηστωνικὸν καὶ Ἠδωνες· κατὰ δὲ μικρὰ πολίσματα οἰκοῦσι. 5. καὶ οἱ μὲν πλείους προσεχώρησαν τῷ Βρασίδᾳ, Σάνη δὲ καὶ Δῖον ἀντέστη· καὶ αὐτῶν τὴν χώραν ἐμμείνας τῷ στρατῷ ἐδῄου. CX. Ὡς δ' οὐκ ἐσήκουον, εὐθὺς στρατεύει ἐπὶ Τορώνην τὴν Χαλκιδικὴν, κατεχομένην ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων· καὶ αὐτὸν ἄνδρες ὀλίγοι ἐπήγοντο, ἑτοῖμοι ὄντες τὴν πόλιν παραδοῦναι. καὶ ἀφικόμενος νυκτὸς ἔτι καὶ περὶ ὄρθρον τῷ

CH. CIX. 1. τὴν Ἀκτὴν καλουμένην] On this see Col. Leake's North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 142, seqq. The name in question was given to long promontorial or peninsular tracts like this of Attica, and of Trœzene; because, say the commentators, they consist chiefly of sea-coast. In the present instance, however, I suspect the allusion is not to the sea-coast, but rather to the general form of the projection, as also to that force of the term ἀκτὴ, by which it signified a wedge or cone, (the very form of Attica. So Æschyl. Choëph. 710, ὦ— πότνι' ἀκτὴ Χώματος,) and hence applied to denote the funeral mound of Agamemnon, which was a Δ. Numerous examples might be given of the word ἀκτὴ to signify a peninsular promontory. In fact, ἀκτὴ, sea-shore, and ἀκτὴ, a wedge (or cone), and a promontory, were different words; the former being derived from ἄγω, frango (and signifying lit. the beach, from A.-S. brecan, to break); the latter, as derived from ἄγω, to draw out, or ἄκω, (whence acuo,) signifying to sharpen. In the present instance, the Acte is exactly that conical projection, which our ancestors denoted by a horn or corn, as exemplified by the name Cornwall); for Capt. Slade (Travels in Turkey, vol. ii. 401) describes Mount Athos as an elevated cone (ἀκτὴ) of rock, at the entrance of a long mountainous promontory, 40 miles by 9, united by a low narrow isthmus to the continent of Macedonia. Across this was drawn, what is next mentioned, the king's ditch, the canal cut by Xerxes, for the purpose of carrying his fleet through, without having to double the promontory of Athos; and now called προαύλαξ, with reference to its situation in front of the peninsula. On the remains of which, see Col. Leake's North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 143, seq., and Cousinery's Maced., vol. ii. p. 153, seq.

3. Σάνην] This, I have shown in Transl., ought to be placed on the sea-coast of the Singiticus Sinus. And so I find Col. Leake (North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 144) fixes it at that end of the isthmus which borders the Singitic gulf, on a small eminence, where are yet some remains of the ancient town: a view, I would observe, strongly confirmed by the words of our author, which describe it as situate on the ditch itself, and on a site fronting the sea in the direction of Eubœa. On the respective situations (somewhat uncertain) of the four towns just after mentioned, see Col. Leake, North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 151.

διγλώσσων] 'speaking both languages,' namely, both their own native language and the Greek. So at viii. 85, the ambassador of Tissaphernes is described as δίγλωσσος. And similarly in Arrian, E. A. iii. 6, 9, we have δίγλωσσος ἦν ἐς τὰ βαρβαρικὰ γράμματα: and in Polyæn. vii. 14, 3, ἐπιστήσας ἑρμηνέας διγλώσσους. Diod. Sic. vii. 389, ἀνὴρ δίγ. Such is also the use of bilinguis in Latin; as in a passage of Ennius ap. Fest. bilingues Brutates; and Horace, Sat. i. 10, 29, 'Canusini more bilinguis,' i. e. speaking both Apulian and Greek.

CH. CX. 1. Τορώνην] The site of this place is well fixed by Col. Leake on a rising ground, about a mile and a half above the little land-locked haven of Kupho. See note at v. 2.

στρατῷ, ἐκαθέζετο πρὸς τὸ Διοσκούρειον, ὃ ἀπέχει τῆς πόλεως τρεῖς μάλιστα σταδίους. 2. τὴν μὲν οὖν ἄλλην πόλιν τῶν Τορωναίων καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τοὺς ἐμφρουροῦντας ἔλαθεν· οἱ δὲ πράσσοντες αὐτῷ, εἰδότες ὅτι ἥξοι, καὶ ‡προσελθόντες τινὲς αὐτῶν λάθρα ὀλίγοι, ἐτήρουν τὴν πρόσοδον, καὶ ὡς ᾔσθοντο παρόντα, ἐσκομίζουσι παρ' αὐτοὺς ἐγχειρίδια ἔχοντας ἄνδρας ψιλοὺς ἑπτά, (τοσοῦτοι γὰρ μόνοι ἀνδρῶν εἴκοσι τὸ πρῶτον ταχθέντων οὐ κατέδεισαν ἐσελθεῖν· ἦρχε δὲ αὐτῶν Λυσίστρατος Ὀλύνθιος,) οἳ, διαδύντες διὰ τοῦ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος τείχους, καὶ λαθόντες, τούς τε ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀνώτατα φυλακτηρίου φρουροὺς, οὔσης τῆς πόλεως πρὸς λόφον, ἀναβάντες διέφθειραν, καὶ τὴν κατὰ Καναστραῖον πυλίδα διῆρουν. CXI. Ὁ δὲ Βρασίδας τῷ μὲν ἄλλῳ στρατῷ ἡσύχαζεν ὀλίγον προελθών, ἑκατὸν δὲ πελταστὰς προπέμπει, ὅπως, ὁπότε πύλαι τινὲς ἀνοιχθεῖεν, καὶ τὸ σημεῖον ἀρθείη ὃ ξυνέκειτο, πρῶτοι ἐσδράμοιεν. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν, χρόνου ἐγγιγνομένου, καὶ θαυμάζοντες, κατὰ μικρὸν ἔτυχον ἐγγὺς τῆς πόλεως προσελθόντες· οἱ δὲ τῶν Τορωναίων ἔνδοθεν παρασκευάζοντες μετὰ τῶν ἐσεληλυθότων, ὡς αὐτοῖς ἥ τε πυλὶς διῄρητο, καὶ αἱ κατὰ τὴν ἀγορὰν πύλαι, τοῦ μοχλοῦ διακοπέντος, ἀνεῴγοντο,

2. προσελθόντες] Bekk. reads προελθόντες, from one of the best MSS. and perhaps another or two. But I have chosen, with Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, to retain the common reading; for I agree with Arnold, that our author does not mean to represent them as watching for Brasidas without the city, but within it, after they had once gone to his camp (προσελθόντες), and there concerted their plans with him. Indeed, the words form a sort of parenthetical insertion, illustrative of the thing. They knew that he would come, because that they had already ascertained; and accordingly they patiently awaited his approach before they saw him.

αὐτοὺς] This, I have, with Bekk., edited instead of vulg. αὐτούς; such (as I have shown in Transl.) being required by the general purport of the context. Render, 'bring in to themselves,' i. e. into the city, as at ch. 111, 2, τινὰς—ἐσεκόμισαν, and v. 10. Eurip. Herc. Fur. 242, ἐπειδὰν δ' εἰσκομισθῶσιν πόλει. The words, a little after, διαδύντες διὰ τοῦ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος τείχους, serve to indicate how it was that they got in,—namely, by creeping through some crevice of the wall, which, as we learn from the subsequent narrative, ch. 112, was in a ruinous condition and under repair. Comp. Xen. Hist. iv. 4, 7, (edit. Thiem.) ἄνδρε δύο—διαδύντε διὰ χειμάῤῥου: and Polyb. iv. 57, 8, διαδὺς διά τινος ὑδροῥῥόας. Xen. Hist. iv. 4, 11, διέδυσαν ἄνω. Arrian, E. A. iv. 3, 4, διαδῦναι ἐς τὴν πόλιν. The exact sense expressed may possibly be no more than, 'having made their way into the city by the wall.' But that the meaning intended is, 'having slipt through by some crevice of the wall,' is probable at once from the circumstances of the case; and from a passage of Aristoph. Vesp. 352, where, speaking of the close siege of Scione, (as recorded elsewhere in our author infra iv. 133, and v. 32,) the chorus says, Ἔστιν ὁπὴ δῆθ', ἣν τιν' ἂν ἔνδοθεν οἷός τ' εἶης διορύξαι, Εἶτ' ἐκδῦναι, &c. To which, Philocleon replies, πάντα πέφρακται, κοὐκ ἔστιν ὁπῆς οὐδ' εἰ σέῤῥῳ διαδῦναι.

καὶ λαθόντες] By this is merely designated the secrecy with which their entrance was effected. Φυλακτηρίου means 'a guard-house.' Now this guard was the highest in situation, because the city was built on the ascent of the hill, and consequently the walls rose with the hill; and this watch-house was on the highest part of it, and was seized, as being the strongest post. Πρὸς λόφον, 'towards or in the direction of the hill.'

Ch. CXI. 1. ἡσύχαζεν ὀλίγον προελθών] 'kept quiet, after having advanced a little way.'

2. παρασκευάζοντες] 'qui rem adornabant.' Τοῦ μοχλοῦ. See note on ii. 4.

πρῶτον μὲν κατὰ τὴν πυλίδα τινὰς περιαγαγόντες ἐσεκόμισαν, ὅπως κατὰ νώτου καὶ ἀμφοτέρωθεν τοὺς ἐν τῇ πόλει, οὐδὲν εἰδότας, ἐξαπίνης φοβήσειαν· ἔπειτα τὸ σημεῖόν τε τοῦ πυρὸς, ὡς εἴρητο, ἀνέσχον, καὶ διὰ τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἀγορὰν πυλῶν τοὺς λοιποὺς ἤδη τῶν πελταστῶν ἐσεδέχοντο. CXII. Καὶ ὁ Βρασίδας, ἰδὼν τὸ ξύνθημα, ἔθει δρόμῳ, ἀναστήσας τὸν στρατὸν, ἐμβοήσαντά τε ἀθρόον, καὶ ἔκπληξιν πολλὴν τοῖς ἐν τῇ πόλει παρασχόντα. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν κατὰ τὰς πύλας εὐθὺς ἐσέπιπτον, οἱ δὲ κατὰ δοκοὺς τετραγώνους, αἳ ἔτυχον τῷ τείχει, πεπτωκότι καὶ οἰκοδομουμένῳ, πρὸς λίθων ἀνολκὴν προσκείμεναι. 3. Βρασίδας μὲν οὖν καὶ τὸ πλῆθος εὐθὺς ἄνω καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ μετέωρα τῆς πόλεως ἐτράπετο, βουλόμενος κατ' ἄκρας καὶ βεβαίως ἐλεῖν αὐτήν· ὁ δὲ ἄλλος ὅμιλος κατὰ πάντα ὁμοίως ἐσκεδάννυντο. CXIII. Τῶν δὲ Τορωναίων, γιγνομένης τῆς ἁλώσεως, τὸ μὲν πολὺ, οὐδὲν εἰδὸς, ἐθορυβεῖτο, οἱ δὲ πράσσοντες, καὶ οἷς ταῦτα ἤρεσκε, μετὰ τῶν ἐσελθόντων εὐθὺς ἦσαν. 2. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, (ἔτυχον γὰρ ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ ὁπλῖται καθεύδοντες ὡς πεντήκοντα,) ἐπειδὴ ᾔσθοντο, οἱ μέν τινες ὀλίγοι διαφθείρονται ἐν χερσὶν τὴν πυλίδα] 'the postern;' as distinguished from πύλαι, as θυρὶς from θύραι. So Onosand. p. 118, 3, παρὰ ταῖς πύλαις καὶ πυλίσι μικραῖς: and 125, ὑποβάντες γὰρ ἐντὸς τοῦ τείχους, ἢ πυλίδα διέκοψαν, ἢ πύλην ἀνέῳξαν.

Ch. CXII. 1. ἐμβοήσαντα] So Bekk., Poppo, and Goeller edit, from several of the best MSS., for vulg. ἐμβοήσαντας, which cannot be right, since it would require ἀθρόον to be taken adverbially, contrary, as Poppo shows, to the usage of the early Attic. The sense intended is, 'having all at once set up a shout.'

2. κατὰ δοκοὺς τετραγώνους] 'over [some] square beams,' such as were often used in some of those machines for raising weights, so much in use among the ancients. The same expression occurs also in Plutarch, and ξύλα τετράγ. in Herodot. In the present instance, from what follows, it is plain that these squared beams—answering to what we should call very thick planks—were used for the purpose of forming an inclined plane, from the ground to the top of the dilapidated wall, in order to draw up (πρὸς ἀνολκὴν) those huge slabs, which formed the coping-stones of city walls among the ancients.

3. τὸ πλῆθος] Meaning the bulk of the Lacedæmonian force; as at v. 10. vi. 40, et al. By ὁ ἄλλος ὅμιλος, just after, understand the crowd of irregulars, Macedonian and Thracian, who had joined the army solely for plunder, and of whom mention is made at ch. 104, as acting in the capacity of plunderers. Κατ' ἄκρας καὶ βεβαίως, lit. 'from the top to the bottom, and completely,' as making sure work. A phrase borrowed from Homer, (so in Il. xv. 557, we have, κατ' ἄκρης Ἴλιον αἰπεινὴν ἑλεῖν, and xxiv. 728,) and also found in Herodot. vi. 18, τὴν Μίλητον—αἱρέουσι κατ' ἄκρης. Comp. Virg. Æn. ii. 603, 'sternitque a culmine Trojam.' The usual mode of accounting for the phrase is to suppose, with Sylburg on Etym. Mag. 494, 16, that the taking of the citadel (situated on the highest part of a city) necessarily involved the capture of the whole city, 'cum enim caput, et summitas oppidi occupata sit, de ceteris parum laboratur.' Yet, however true this may be, and quite applicable here, the original allusion in κατ' ἄκρης to signify penitùs seems to have been to the utter destruction of any edifice (by fire or otherwise) when its highest parts tumble down. To this, allusion is found in Virg. Æn. ii. 290, 'ruit alto a culmine Troja,' where it is strange that learned critics should have proposed to read, for alto, altâ. Such surely destroys the elevated character of the expression, with which may be compared a similar one in Shakspeare, Macbeth, iv. 1, 'Though castles topple on their warders' heads.'

Ch. CXIII. 2. ἔτυχον—καθεύδοντες] 'sleeping, or couched for sleep;' as Acts αὐτῶν, τῶν δὲ λοιπῶν οἱ μὲν πεζῇ, οἱ δὲ ἐς τὰς ναῦς, αἳ ἐφρούρουν δύο, καταφυγόντες, διασώζονται ἐς τὴν Λήκυθον τὸ φρούριον, ὃ εἶχον αὐτοί, καταλαβόντες ἄκρον τῆς πόλεως ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν ἀπειλημμένον ἐν στενῷ ἰσθμῷ. 3. κατέφυγον δὲ καὶ τῶν Τορωναίων ἐς αὐτοὺς ὅσοι ἦσαν σφίσιν ἐπιτήδειοι. CXIV. Γεγενημένης δὲ ἡμέρας ἤδη, καὶ βεβαίως τῆς πόλεως ἐχομένης, ὁ Βρασίδας τοῖς μὲν μετὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων Τορωναίοις καταπεφευγόσι κήρυγμα ἐποιήσατο, 'τὸν βουλόμενον, ἐπὶ τὰ ἑαυτοῦ ἐξελθόντα, ἀδεῶς πολιτεύειν,' τοῖς δὲ Ἀθηναίοις κήρυκα † προσπέμψας ἐξιέναι ἐκέλευσεν ἐκ τῆς Ληκύθου ὑποσπόνδους καὶ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἔχοντας, ὡς οὖσης Χαλκιδέων. 2. οἱ δὲ ἐκλείψειν μὲν οὐκ ἔφασαν, σπείσασθαι δὲ σφίσιν ἐκέλευον ἡμέραν τοὺς νεκροὺς ἀνελέσθαι. ὁ δὲ ἐσπείσατο δύο. ἐν ταύταις δὲ αὐτός τε τὰς ἐγγὺς οἰκίας ἐκρατύνατο, καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι τὰ σφέτερα. 3. καὶ ξύλλογον τῶν Τορωναίων ποιήσας ἔλεξε τοῖς ἐν τῇ Ἀκάνθῳ παραπλήσια, ὅτι "οὐ δίκαιον εἴη οὔτε τοὺς πράξαντας πρὸς αὐτὸν τὴν λῆψιν τῆς πόλεως χείρους οὐδὲ προδότας ἡγεῖσθαι· (οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐπὶ δουλείᾳ οὐδὲ χρήμασι πεισθέντας δρᾶσαι τοῦτο, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ ἀγαθῷ καὶ ἐλευθερίᾳ τῆς πόλεως·) οὔτε τοὺς μὴ μετασχόντας οἴεσθαι μὴ τῶν αὐτῶν τεύξεσθαι· ἀφῖχθαι γὰρ οὐ διαφθερῶν οὔτε πόλιν οὔτε ἰδιώτην οὐδένα. 4. τὸ δὲ κήρυγμα ποιήσασθαι τούτου ἕνεκα τοῖς παρ' Ἀθηναίους καταπεφευγόσιν, ὡς ἡγούμενος οὐδὲν χείρους τῇ ἐκείνων φιλίᾳ· οὐδ' ἂν σφῶν πειρασαμένους αὐτοὺς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων δοκεῖν ἧσσον, ἀλλὰ πολλῷ μᾶλλον, ὅσῳ δικαιότερα πράσσουσιν, εὔνους ἂν σφίσι γενέσθαι, ἀπειρίᾳ δὲ νῦν πεφοβῆσθαι. 5. τούς τε πάντας παρασκευάζεσθαι ἐκέλευσεν ὡς βεβαίους τε ἐσομένους ξυμμάχους, καὶ

xii. 6, ἦν κοιμώμενος. Of ἐν χερσὶν the sense is, 'in combat.' And the word αὐτῶν, just after, must be construed with τινες preceding.

αὐτοὶ] ipsi soli, i. e. sine Toronæis. Comp. viii. 95. On the phrase ἀπειλημμένον ἐν, see note at i. 7. iv. 102; and comp. vi. 1, and vii. 8. Of καταλαβόντες ἄκρον τῆς πόλεως ἐς τὴν θάλ., &c. the sense is, 'having occupied a promontory of the city [running] to seaward, intercepted from the mainland by a narrow isthmus.' Thus, Lecythus seems to have been on a peninsula, (like the turriti scopuli of Virg. Æn. iii. 536.) high in the middle, but low at the isthmus, where it connected with the lower part of the city, which was itself built on ground gradually rising to the hill. It obtained its name, I suspect, from the peculiar form of its turritus scopulus, as bearing some rude resemblance to an oil-flask reversed. Such I have already shown to have been the case in the instance of Olpe, iii. 105, seq., where see note.

CH. CXIV. 1. βεβαίως ἐχομένης] See note supra ch. 112.

2. ἐκρατύνατο] lit. 'made them strong,' viz. by the erection of battlements. See supra ch. 69, and infra ch. 115.

3. In this and the two next sections is contained the substance of the speech delivered to the Toronæans, though not worked up into the form thereof. Of this the best explanation is supplied by the similar address made to the Athenians as above.

4 τῇ ἐκείνων φιλίᾳ] 'on account of their friendship for them.' Of the words following, οὐδ' ἂν σφῶν—πεφοβῆσθαι, the sense is, 'nor would they, he thought, after experience of the Lacedæmonians, be less kindly affected to them, but much more so; nay, that it was through inexperience of them that they were now afraid.'

τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦδε ἤδη, ὅ τι ἂν ἁμαρτάνωσιν, αἰτίαν ἔξοντας· τὰ δὲ πρότερα οὐ σφεῖς ἀδικεῖσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐκείνους μᾶλλον ὑπ' ἄλλων κρεισσόνων· καὶ ξυγγνώμην εἶναι, εἴ τι ἡναντιοῦντο." CXV. Καὶ ὁ μέν, τοιαῦτα εἰπὼν καὶ παραθαρσύνας, διελθουσῶν τῶν σπονδῶν, τὰς προσβολὰς ἐποιεῖτο τῇ Ληκύθῳ· οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι ἠμύναντό τε ἐκ φαύλου τειχίσματος, καὶ ἀπ' οἰκιῶν ἐπάλξεις ἐχουσῶν. 2. καὶ μίαν μὲν ἡμέραν ἀπεκρούσαντο· τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ, μηχανῆς μελλούσης προσάξεσθαι αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν ἐναντίων, ἀφ' ἧς πῦρ ἐνήσειν διενοοῦντο ἐς τὰ ξύλινα παραφράγματα, καὶ προσιόντος ἤδη τοῦ στρατεύματος, ᾗ ᾤοντο μάλιστα αὐτοὺς προσκομεῖν τὴν μηχανήν, καὶ ἦν ἐπιμαχώτατον, πύργον ξύλινον ἐπ' οἴκημα ἀντέστησαν, καὶ ὕδατος ἀμφορέας πολλοὺς καὶ πίθους ἀνεφόρησαν, καὶ λίθους μεγάλους, ἄνθρωποί τε πολλοὶ ἀνέβησαν. 3. τὸ δὲ οἴκημα, λαβὸν μεῖζον ἄχθος, ἐξαπίνης κατερράγη, καὶ, ψόφου πολλοῦ γενομένου, τοὺς μὲν ἐγγὺς καὶ ὁρῶντας τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐλύπησε μᾶλλον ἢ ἐφόβησεν· οἱ δὲ ἄποθεν, καὶ μάλιστα οἱ διὰ πλείστου, νομίσαντες ταύτῃ ἐαλωκέναι ἤδη τὸ χωρίον, φυγῇ ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν καὶ τὰς ναῦς ὥρμησαν. CXVI. Καὶ ὁ Βρασίδας ὡς ᾔσθετο αὐτοὺς ἀπολείποντάς τε τὰς ἐπάλξεις, καὶ τὸ γιγνόμενον ὁρῶν, ἐπιφερόμενος τῷ στρατῷ εὐθὺς τὸ τείχισμα λαμβάνει, καὶ ὅσους ἐγκατέλαβε διέφθειρε. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι τοῖς τε πλοίοις καὶ ταῖς ναυσὶ, τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ ἐκλιπόντες τὸ χωρίον, ἐς Παλλήνην διεκομίσθησαν· ὁ δὲ Βρασίδας, (ἔστι γὰρ ἐν τῇ Ληκύθῳ Ἀθηνᾶς ἱερὸν, καὶ ἔτυχε κηρύξας, ὅτε ἔμελλε ‡ προσβάλλειν, τῷ ἐπιβάντι πρώτῳ τοῦ τείχους τριάκοντα μνᾶς ἀργυρίου δώσειν,) νομίσας ἄλλῳ τινὶ τρόπῳ ἢ ἀνθρωπείῳ τὴν ἅλωσιν γενέσθαι, τάς τε τριάκοντα μνᾶς τῇ θεῷ ἀπέδωκεν ἐς τὸ ἱερὸν, καὶ τὴν Λήκυθον καθελὼν καὶ ἀνασκευάσας, τέμενος ἀνῆκεν ἅπαν. 3. καὶ

CH. CXV. 2. καὶ ἦν ἐπιμαχώτατον] scil. τὸ τείχισμα. Render, 'where there was a point most capable of assault.' Comp. Herodot. vi. 133, καὶ τῇ μάλιστα ἔσκε ἑκάστοτε ἐπίμαχον τοῦ τείχεος. Arrian, E. A. iv. 23, 6, ἵνα ἐπιμαχώτατον τοῦ τείχους ἐφαίνετο. A peculiar idiom, of which the above are the only examples I have noted.

CH. CXVI. 2. προσβάλλειν] Bekker edits, from some of the best MSS., βάλλειν, while Poppo and Goeller retain the common reading; and justly; for, while the context absolutely requires the sense to attack, the simple verb is insufficient to express it. The absence of the πρὸς in 7 MSS. arose from its having been eaten away by a worm in some very ancient archetype.

ἀνασκευάσας] On the force of this term the commentators considerably differ in opinion. The most probable sense is that assigned by Goeller and Poppo, 'having removed the furniture and effects.' And so Hesychius explains ἀνασκευάζειν by μετατιθέναι, scil. τὰ σκεύη. In this sense the term occurs supra i. 18, ἀνασκευάζεσθαι, res convasari; and in Xen. Anab. vi. 2, 8, τὰ χρήματα ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν συνῆγον, καὶ τὴν ἀγορὰν εἴσω ἀνεσκεύασαν. Kistem. and Dobree take the sense to be, 'rudera tollens, locum purgans,' having cleared the spot and fitted it for a τέμενος: on which see note at i. 134.

ἀνῆκεν ἅπαν] 'gave the whole up [as consecrated ground].' By thus dedicating so commanding a position to religious purposes, Brasidas seems to have meant, in case Torone should be recovered, to prevent all future use of this site for a fortress against the Lacedæmonians.

ὁ μὲν τὸ λοιπὸν τοῦ χειμῶνος ἃ τε εἶχε τῶν χωρίων καθίστατο, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐπεβούλευε. καὶ τοῦ χειμῶνος διελθόντος, ὄγδοον ἔτος ἐτελεύτα τῷ πολέμῳ.

CXVII. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι ἅμα ἦρι τοῦ ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους εὐθὺς ἐκεχειρίαν ἐποιήσαντο ἐνιαύσιον, νομίσαντες Ἀθηναῖοι μὲν οὐκ ἂν ἔτι τὸν Βρασίδαν σφῶν προσαποστῆσαι οὐδέν, πρὶν παρασκευάσαιντο καθ' ἡσυχίαν, καὶ ἅμα εἰ καλῶς σφίσιν ἔχοι, καὶ ξυμβῆναι τὰ πλείω, Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ ταῦτα τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἡγούμενοι, ἅπερ ἔδεισαν, φοβεῖσθαι, καὶ, γενομένης ἀνακωχῆς κακῶν καὶ ταλαιπωρίας, μᾶλλον ἐπιθυμήσειν αὐτούς, πειρασαμένους, ξυναλλαγῆναί τε καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας σφίσιν ἀπυδόντας σπονδὰς ποιήσασθαι καὶ ἐς τὸν πλείω χρόνον. 2. τοὺς γὰρ δὴ ἄνδρας περὶ πλείονος ἐποιοῦντο κομίσασθαι, ‡ἕως ἔτι Βρασίδας εὐτύχει· καὶ ἔμελλον,—ἐπὶ μεῖζον χωρήσαντος αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀντίπαλα καταστήσαντος,—τῶν μὲν στέρεσθαι, † τοῖς δ' ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου ἀμυνόμενοι κινδυνεύειν † καὶ

CH. CXVII. 1. ἔδεισαν] Several MSS. have ἐδεδίεσαν. I doubt not but that our author wrote ἐδέδισαν, which was, I find, the original reading of the Cod. Clarend. Ἀνακωχῆς κακῶν, 'an intermission or respite from evils.' Poppo adduces the same phrase from a passage of Cantac. iii. 4, and cites also ἀνακωχὴ τῶν δεινῶν from Agath. iv. 1. With τὸν πλείω χρόνον Poppo compares v. 15, περὶ τοῦ πλείονος χρόνου βουλεύεσθαι, and Arnold explains it to mean 'the longer time,' as opposed to the brief interval of a mere truce. So, too, ξυμβῆναι τὰ πλείω, just before.

2. περὶ πλείονος ἐποιοῦντο] 'they made it of greater account [than any military successes they might gain].'

ἕως ἔτι] For vulg. ὡς, I have ventured to edit ἕως, on the conjecture of Reiske, supported by the Scholiast on Aristophanes, and approved by Bekker. The former reading is by Poppo and Goeller admitted to be indefensible: and although no MS. seems to have ἕως, this is one of those minute varieties in which MSS. have very little authority. Hence I doubt not that the ε was absorbed, in pronunciation, by the αι preceding, which was by the Greeks pronounced like the diphthong æ in Latin.

The scope of the next words, καὶ ἔμελλον—κρατήσειν, is to show on what grounds they entertained the feeling they did as to making sure of what was within their reach,—the recovery of their countrymen, and restoration to the blessings of peace. Some uncertainty, indeed, exists as to the exact sense, and that arising from a certain corruption attaching to the words καὶ κρατήσειν. The difficulty mainly rests on τοῖς δὲ—κρατήσειν. Now if we could suppose, with Arnold, that ἀμυνόμενοι stands for μαχόμενοι αὐτοῖς ἵνα ἀμύνωνται αὐτούς, the difficulty, as far as regards τοῖς δ', would be removed. But no proof has been adduced that ἀμυνόμενοι can bear such a sense; for though Poppo cites Cantacuzen to evidence its existence, yet surely examples from such a very late writer are any thing but satisfactory. Wholly unnecessary, indeed, will it be to suppose any such anomaly as the above, if we read, from at least two MSS., τοὺς δ', which, with ἀμυνόμενοι, will signify 'in the exercise of vengeance on them;' namely, with allusion to the prisoners being put to death by the Athenians through indignation at the persevering and implacable enmity of the Lacedæmonians: for such must be meant by the term στέρεσθαι, since they were already deprived of them by their captivity. Ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου and κινδυνεύειν must be conjoined; the sense intended being, 'Nay, they were about (i. e. were likely), after Brasidas had made greater advances [in the career of success], and established an equality [between the contending powers], to be bereaved of those, and to encounter peril, by avenging oneself on these [the Athenians] on terms of equality [only].' It is intimated that, notwithstanding the equality brought about by the successes of Brasidas, there would still be danger to them, though in the exercise of just vengeance for the sacrifice of the prisoners; for, as it is said at iv. 62, τιμωρία οὐκ εὐτυχεῖ δικαίως, ὅτι καὶ ἀδικεῖται. Compare also Xen. Anab. ii. 3, 23, ἀμύνασθαι ἀδικοῦντα, 'to wreak vengeance on the injurer;' and Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 10, (Thiem.) ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου μάχεσθαι. The words which follow are undoubtedly corrupt; for, as to the sense put upon κινδυνεύειν καὶ κρατήσειν, 'they had a good chance of ever being victorious,' it is one not to be wrung from the words without great violence. Of the various conjectures that have been hazarded, as to what may be supposed the true reading, the most probable is that of Poppo, εἰ κρατήσοιεν, according to which the sense will be, 'there would be a hazard whether they should come off victorious.' But so forced and jejune is the sense in question, that I still prefer, as formerly, to read κεἰ κρατήσοιεν; or, if the above crasis be rejected as one unusual in Thucydides, καὶ εἰ, for εἰ καί, 'even though they should come off victorious in the attempt to avenge the death of the prisoners.'

† κρατήσειν. 3. γίγνεται οὖν ἐκεχειρία αὐτοῖς τε καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις ἥδε.

CXVIII. "Περὶ μὲν τοῦ ἱεροῦ καὶ τοῦ μαντείου τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος τοῦ Πυθίου, δοκεῖ ἡμῖν, χρῆσθαι τὸν βουλόμενον ἀδόλως καὶ ἀδεῶς κατὰ τοὺς πατρίους νόμους. τοῖς μὲν Λακεδαιμονίοις ταῦτα δοκεῖ καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις τοῖς παροῦσι· Βοιωτοὺς δὲ καὶ Φωκέας πείσειν φασὶν ἐς δύναμιν προσκηρυκευόμενοι. 2. περὶ δὲ τῶν χρημάτων τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ, ἐπιμελεῖσθαι ὅπως τοὺς ἀδικοῦντας ἐξευρήσομεν, ὀρθῶς καὶ δικαίως, τοῖς πατρίοις νόμοις χρώμενοι καὶ ἡμεῖς

CH. CXVIII. The articles of the truce, contained in this chapter, were either framed, or adopted, at Sparta in a general congress of the Peloponnesian confederates, and were then ratified by the Athenians. The first two articles relate to a subject of material importance, though not immediately connected either with the first occasion of the war or with the motives that gave rise to the truce. The first provides for the free use, by the whole of the Greek nation, of the Delphic temple and oracle, from which the Athenians and their allies had been excluded during the war. (Thirlwall.)

1. In the term ἀδόλως, which often occurs in treaties, either alone or in conjunction with synonymous terms, there seems to be an implied condition, (q. d. 'so that this consultation of the oracle be done bona fide,') for fraud had been, it seems, sometimes exercised by the θεωροί going with the intention either of corrupting the priestess, or falsely reporting the answer of the oracle, for certain sinister purposes.

The words, a little after, τοῖς μὲν — παροῦσι, contain the acceptance of the article by the Lacedæmonians and their allies present; the term δοκεῖ being equivalent to our Agreed to. The subjoined words Βοιωτοὺς—προσκηρυκευόμενοι advert to the allies not present, namely, the Bœotians and Phocians, whom the Lacedæmonians engage (φασὶν) to use their best influence to consent to it.

2. In this second article it seems implied, that the Athenians had either discovered or suspected that a part of the sacred treasures, which had been so many years in the keeping of their enemies, and which at the beginning of the war had been openly treated, in the consultations of the Peloponnesians, as property which they might lawfully borrow for their own uses, had really been embezzled or misapplied. It is stipulated, that the Lacedæmonians and their allies will lend their aid, as far as they have any authority, to detect all such abuses. (Thirlwall.)

The word ἐπιμελεῖσθαι may, as Poppo thinks, be dependent on the foregoing δοκεῖ ἡμῖν. But the infinitive is not unfrequently so used in law-writings containing agreements even where no verb precedes; the sense 'it is agreed' being implied in the very purport of the writing. Τοὺς ἀδικοῦντας. This, as Bredow and Poppo point out, has no reference to any particular individuals who had been guilty of sacrilegiously embezzling the sacred treasures, but is merely meant to prevent any such abuse of the funds in future. Ἐξευρήσομεν has the sense shall find out, detect; though so very rare is the word in this sense, that it seems to have been chiefly one of common life. The nearest approach to it is that use of the term by which it signifies 'to find out any person hidden;' as Hom. Il. xviii. 321, Πολλὰ δέ τ' ἄγκε' ἐπῆλθε μετ' ἀνέρος ἴχνι' ἐρευνῶν, Εἴ ποθεν ἐξεύροι, scil. αὐτὸν, which passage seems to have been in the mind of the Septuagint translators, Job xi. 7, ἢ ἴχνος Κυρίου εὑρήσεις (rather ἐξευρ.). Herodot.

καὶ ὑμεῖς, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων οἱ βουλόμενοι, τοῖς πατρίοις νόμοις χρώμενοι πάντες. περὶ μὲν οὖν τούτων ἔδοξε Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις κατὰ ταῦτα. 3. Τάδε [δὲ] ἔδοξε Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ξυμμάχοις, ἐὰν σπονδὰς ποιῶνται οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῶν μένειν ἑκατέρους, ἔχοντας ἅπερ νῦν ἔχομεν, τοὺς μὲν ἐν τῷ Κορυφασίῳ ἐντὸς τῆς Βουφράδος καὶ τοῦ Τομέως μένοντας, τοὺς δὲ ἐν Κυθήροις μὴ ἐπιμισγομένους ἐς τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, μήτε

v. 33, ἐκέλευσε τοὺς δορυφόρους ἐξευρόντας—τοῦτον δῆσαι.

The terms ὀρθῶς καὶ δικαίως contain an implied condition; q. d. 'so that it be done rightly and justly; not συκοφαντώδως, by a wresting of the law for evil purposes, either to ruin an individual by the process, or to extort money to wave the prosecution.' The words ἡμεῖς καὶ ὑμεῖς are to be referred to ἐξευρήσομεν: for so I have edited, with Bekk. and Goeller, from several MSS., instead of vulg. ὑμεῖς καὶ ἡμεῖς, which has been retained by Poppo, but not on good grounds; the reading ἡμεῖς καὶ ὑμεῖς being, as the learned critic is aware, more in the manner of the ancients; who, in such small matters, did not use the guarded modesty of the moderns, which leads them studiously to eschew egotism; but preferred that plain speaking by which self is placed first in word as it is in deed. The words following, τοῖς πατρίοις νόμοις χρώμενοι, are meant to preclude one mode of injustice, by providing that 'the persons proceeded against for any embezzlement shall be tried by the laws of their own state; as, for instance, that Delphians or Lacedæmonians, &c. are not to be tried by the Athenian laws.' Comp. Isocr. Areopag. ὀρθῶς καὶ νομίμως.

After τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, I have, with Arnold, introduced the words κατὰ ταῦτα—ξυμμάχοις from three MSS.; a number sufficient where the cause of the omission is so obvious as in the present instance. Little doubt is there that in some very ancient archetype the words τοῖς ξυμμάχοις terminated two lines in succession: and the omission in question would not be perceived, because (as Arnold observes) 'the sentence was still intelligible, unless to a very attentive reader.' The sense of the expression is, 'on these terms.'

3. τάδε [δὲ] ἔδοξε—ξυμμάχοις] There is here a repetition of the engagement on the part of the Lacedæmonians, by way of more forcibly introducing the important condition which formed the basis of the article, —namely, that 'the Athenians shall enter into treaty for each of the belligerents to remain in their own territory, holding that which they now respectfully possess,' on the principle of modern times, namely, the uti possidetis.

For αὐτῶν, Poppo edits, from several of the best MSS., αὑτῶν: but no external authority were sufficient to establish the latter; and propriety absolutely requires the former, which is found at ch. 105, τὸν μὲν βουλόμενον ἐπὶ τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ μένειν. In such a case, the pronoun stands for the adjective ἴδιος. The next words serve to determine the boundaries of the territories thus respectively held by the uti possidetis. By τοὺς μὲν it is best to understand, not, with many commentators, the Athenians, but the Lacedæmonians, the name given by the Lacedæmonians to Pylus, was in the hands of the Athenians. (See iv. 3.) By τῆς Βουφράδος and τοῦ Τομέως are supposed to be meant two hills; and these Col. Leake thinks were what are now called Kondozoni and Tavolaki. That by τοῦ Τομέως is designated a hill, is certain from Steph. Byz., who says it was so called from its resemblance to the blade of a shoemaker's knife, with which the soles are cut and pared. That, I doubt not, was the present Kondozoni, though no proof is there that it was. From the article τῆς being prefixed to Βουφράδος, Buphrasia seems to have been a river or rivulet, (either the present R. Kurb or Pesibi,) bounding the possessions of Pylus to the south. It may, however, be, as Puill. Boubl. supposes, the little port of Boidochilia; and if so, this would designate the distance inland that the garrison might go. Βουφρὰς seems a corruption of Βουφορὰς, 'cow with calf.'

By τοὺς δὲ ἐν Κυθήροις understand the Athenians in garrison at Cythera, who are represented as not holding communication with the confederacy—meaning the Lacedæmonian confederacy: τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, as Heilm. and Kistem. observe, standing, as abstr. for concrete; for τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν, i. e. τοὺς ξυμμάχους, as at ii. 9, on which idiom Poppo refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 429, 1. Of μὴ ἐπιμισγομένους, the sense is, 'not holding communication with the Lacedæmonian allies' (meaning the Messenians). The phrase ἐπιμίγνυσθαι ἐς is very unusual; but of ἐπιμιξία ἐς ἀλλήλους an example is found in Arrian, Ind. vii. 1; and ἐπιμίγνυσθαι πρὸς ἀλλήλους occurs in another passage of our author, supra ii. 1; ἐπιμίγνυσθαι πρὸς ἐκείνους καὶ ἐκείνων πρὸς αὐτούς, in Xen. Anab. iii. 5, 16; and Dio Cass. 1188, 19, ἐπιμίγ. πρὸς τοὺς Δ. This was meant to prevent the harbouring of fugitives, whether slaves or freemen.

ἡμᾶς πρὸς αὐτοὺς μήτε αὐτοὺς πρὸς ἡμᾶς, τοὺς δὲ ἐν Νισαίᾳ καὶ Μινῴᾳ μὴ ὑπερβαίνοντας τὴν ὁδὸν τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν † πυλῶν τῶν παρὰ τοῦ Νίσου ἐπὶ τὸ Ποσειδώνιον, ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ Ποσειδωνίου εὐθὺς ἐπὶ τὴν γέφυραν τὴν ἐς Μινῴαν, (μηδὲ Μεγαρέας καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ὑπερβαίνειν τὴν ὁδὸν ταύτην,) καὶ τὴν νῆσον, ἥνπερ ἔλαβον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἔχοντας, μηδὲ ἐπιμισγομένους μηδετέρους μηδετέρωσε· καὶ τὰ ἐν Τροιζῆνι, ὅσαπερ νῦν ἔχουσι, καὶ οἷα ξυνέθεντο πρὸς Ἀθηναίους· 4. καὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ χρωμένους, ὅσα ἂν κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτῶν καὶ κατὰ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους πλεῖν μὴ μακρᾷ νηΐ, ἄλλῳ δὲ κωπήρει πλοίῳ, ἐς πεντακόσια τάλαντα ἄγοντι μέτρα. 5. κήρυκι δὲ καὶ πρεσβείᾳ, καὶ ἀκολούθοις ὁπόσοις μὴ ὑπερβαίνοντας τὴν ὁδὸν—Νίσου] 'not going beyond the road leading from the gates which are in the direction from [the temple] of Nisus to the temple of Neptune, and from thence straight to the bridge [between the mainland].' On the locality, which is far from clear, see Dr. Arnold's Memoir. Though, after all, there is, I think, great reason, with Poppo, to suspect here some deeply-seated corruption, which, if I mistake not, rests on πυλῶν; for so, instead of a capital, I have chosen, with Bekk., Poppo, and Goeller, to write the word, though the capital letter may be nearer the truth; the word, I suspect, concealing some proper name, which, without far more knowledge than we possess of the localities of Nisæa, it were vain to conjecture.

ἔχοντας] This is to be referred to τοὺς ἐν Νισαίᾳ before; there being here, as Goeller shows, a condensed form of expression for καὶ τὴν νῆσον (meaning Minoa), ἥνπερ ἔλαβον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἔχοντας μένειν Ἀθηναίους. I have here followed Poppo and Goeller in editing μηδὲ, instead of the common reading μήτι, which, though found in all the MSS., and retained by Bekk., is quite indefensible. Nor is μηδὲ quite without authority; for, on carefully collating the Cod. Clarend., I found μήτε on rasure. Hence, I doubt not, that that MS. had originally the reading μηδέ.

ξυνέθεντο] Here we may, with Poppo, supply οἱ Τροιζήνιοι, from τὰ ἐν Τροιζῆνι.

4. καὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ—μέτρα] I have here followed the punctuation of Poppo, by which the words καὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ, &c. are connected with Λακεδαιμονίους πλεῖν. By this article it is provided, that 'the Lacedæmonians and their allies, using the sea (i. e. having the use of the sea) so far as along their own coast and that of their allies, may sail, not in a long ship (i. e. ship of war), but in any other vessel rowed by oars, carrying measure up to 500 talents.' The adverb ὅσα has here the same sense as supra ch. 16, 1, ὅσα μὴ ἀποβαίνοντες, where see note. The term μέτρα is here equivalent to our word burden, as said both of the quantity, as to tonnage, a ship will carry, and the capacity, as to measurement, of a ship by which its tonnage is estimated. Thus, with us, registered tonnage (by measurement) somewhat differs from (and is always less than) the actual tonnage in dead weight, which will depend upon the form of the vessel, and be greater as the vessel approaches to a square form. It seems, that in the present case the burden was calculated by measurement. In thus restraining the Lacedæmonians and their allies, not only from all sailing, but even limiting them to row-boats to so low a burden as about 12 tons; 'there was,' as Thirlwall observes, 'a remarkable concession made to the maritime supremacy of Athens, which seems to attribute to her the rightful sovereignty of the sea.'

5. This article is intended to provide for the security of the envoys and their attendants, who should pass to and fro to negotiate a lasting peace, and for the settlements of points at legal issue.

ἂν δοκῇ, περὶ καταλύσεως τοῦ πολέμου καὶ δικῶν ἐς Πελοπόννησον καὶ Ἀθήναζε σπονδὰς εἶναι ἰοῦσι καὶ ἀπιοῦσι, καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν. τοὺς δὲ αὐτομόλους μὴ δέχεσθαι ἐν τούτῳ τῷ χρόνῳ, μήτε ἐλεύθερον μήτε δοῦλον, μήτε ἡμᾶς μήτε ὑμᾶς. δίκας τε διδόναι ὑμᾶς τε ἡμῖν καὶ ἡμᾶς ὑμῖν κατὰ τὰ πάτρια, τὰ ἀμφίλογα δίκῃ διαλύοντας ἄνευ πολέμου. 6. τοῖς μὲν Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις ταῦτα δοκεῖ· εἰ δέ τι ὑμῖν εἴτε κάλλιον εἴτε δικαιότερον τούτων δοκεῖ εἶναι, ἰόντες ἐς Λακεδαίμονα διδάσκετε· οὐδενὸς γὰρ ἀποστήσονται, ὅσα ἂν δίκαια λέγητε, οὔτε οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὔτε οἱ ξύμμαχοι. οἱ δὲ ἰόντες τέλος ἔχοντες ἰόντων, ᾗπερ καὶ ὑμεῖς ἡμᾶς κελεύετε. αἱ δὲ σπονδαὶ ἐνιαυτὸν ἔσονται.

‘ΕΔΟΞΕ ΤΩ͵ ΔΗΜΩ͵.

‘Ἀκάμαντις ἐπρυτάνευε, Φαίνιππος ἐγραμμάτευε, Νικιάδης ἐπεστάτει. Λάκης εἶπε,—τύχῃ ἀγαθῇ τῇ Ἀθηναίων,—ποιεῖσθαι τὴν ἐκεχειρίαν, καθὰ ξυγχωροῦσι Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ δικῶν] Meaning actions at law. Comp. i. 78, τὰ διάφορα δίκῃ λύεσθαι, and i. 77. Τὰ ἀμφίλογα δίκῃ διαλύοντας, ‘deciding the doubtful points by legal adjudication.’

6. κάλλιον] ‘fairer:’ of which sense of the term several examples exist. In οὐδένος ἀποστήσονται we have a very unusual expression, probably one of common life; with which compare a similar one in our own language, ‘will not be against,’ or averse to, will not decline, reject. So Xen. Hist. vii. 5, 19, (Thiem.) κινδύνου μηδενὸς ἀφίστασθαι, ‘to decline no danger.’ Such, too, is the use in Latin of aufugio, refugio, and detrecto, and especially absisto. So Hor. Epist. i. 18, 58, ‘ne te retrahas (‘draw back’) et inexcusabilis abstes,’ ‘stand aloof.’

τέλος ἔχοντες ἰόντων] ‘let them go, having full power, or authority [to act]:’ of which expression Duker cites as an example Hesiod Op. & D. 667, ἐν τοῖς (scil. θεοῖς) γὰρ τέλος ἔστιν ὁμῶς (alike) ἀγαθῶν τε κακῶν τε. But more aptly might he have adduced Plato, p. 985, Θεὸν—τὸν τέλος ἔχοντα τῆς θείας μοίρας, where τέλος stands for κύρος, as at v. 41, τέλος ἔχειν; and v. 46, οἱ τὰ τέλη ἔχοντες, ‘the sovereign authority;’ and also where (as at i. 58, and iv. 15) τέλη is supposed to mean magistrates. And the same is the sense of the expression οἱ ἐν τέλει; though, perhaps, the term authorities (answering to potestates in Latin) would come nearer to the sense. Compare with this similar expressions in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Pet. iii. 22, ὑποταγέντων αὐτῷ ἀγγέλων καὶ ἐξουσιῶν καὶ δυνάμεων. Though, indeed, the ideas of power or authority, and office or ministry, are so linked together, that τέλη sometimes means the latter.

ἔδοξε τῷ δήμῳ] Now comes the form of acceptance and ratification of the above treaty by the Athenians. With this commencement Duker compares the following in Andocid. de Myster. § 96, Ἔδοξε τῇ βουλῇ καὶ τῷ δήμῳ. Αἴαντις ἐπρυτάνευε, Κλεογένης ἐγραμμάτευε, Βοηθὸς ἐπεστάτει. The words τύχῃ ἀγαθῇ τῇ Ἀθηναίων are thrown in, we may suppose, from such having usually formed the introductory words of any motion; and so, on the same principle, Hudson says, the words were (like those in Latin, ‘Quod bonum, faustum felixque sit’) usually prefixed (bene ominandi causâ) to inscriptions set up for the public promulgation of any treaty, or to announce a proclamation. Similarly we subjoin in such cases, God save the King.

On the force of the forensic terms following, ἐπρυτάνευε, ἐγραμμάτευε, and ἐπεστάτει, see Schoemann de Comitiis Athen. p. 131, seq., and Herm. Antiq. Gr. § 127, note 17; Wachsm. Ant. ii. 1, 435. The Laches, who made the motion, was probably the same who commanded the Athenian force in Sicily. See iii. 86. 115. 116. vi. 1, et al. He is again mentioned at v. 45, as one of those chiefly concerned in bringing about the treaty of peace between Lacedæmon and Athens.

*ξύμμαχοι αὐτῶν· (καὶ ὡμολόγησαν ἐν τῷ δήμῳ τὴν ἐκεχειρίαν εἶναι ἐνιαυτόν·) ἄρχειν δὲ τήνδε τὴν ἡμέραν, τετράδα ἐπὶ δέκα τοῦ Ἐλαφηβολιῶνος μηνός. ἐν τούτῳ τῷ χρόνῳ ἰόντας ὡς ἀλλήλους πρέσβεις καὶ κήρυκας ποιεῖσθαι τοὺς λόγους, καθ' ὅ τι ἔσται ἡ κατάλυσις τοῦ πολέμου. ἐκκλησίαν δὲ ποιήσαντας τοὺς στρατηγοὺς καὶ τοὺς πρυτάνεις, πρῶτον περὶ τῆς εἰρήνης βουλεύσασθαι Ἀθηναίους, καθ' ὅ τι ἂν † ἐσίῃ ἡ πρεσβεία περὶ τῆς καταλύσεως τοῦ πολέμου. σπείσασθαι δὲ αὐτίκα μάλα τὰς πρεσβείας ἐν τῷ δήμῳ τὰς παρούσας, ἢ μὴν ἐμμενεῖν ἐν ταῖς σπονδαῖς τὸν ἐνιαυτόν.’”

CXIX. Ταῦτα ξυνέθεντο Λακεδαιμόνιοι, καὶ ‡ ὤμοσαν καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, Ἀθηναίοις καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις μηνὸς ἐν Λακεδαίμονι Γεραστίου δωδεκάτῃ. 2. ξυνετίθεντο δὲ καὶ ἐσπένδοντο Λακεδαι- καὶ ὡμολόγησαν—ἐνιαυτὸν] I have placed these words in a parenthesis, because they form no part of the motion, but merely announce the concurrence of the assembly that the truce should be for a year. Render, ‘and those in the assembly of the people agreed that,’ &c.

ἄρχειν δὲ τήνδε τὴν ἡμέραν] Render, ‘and that it do commence this very day.’

ἐν τούτῳ τῷ χρόνῳ — πολέμου] We have here (as Poppo observes) repeated and ratified by the Athenians what the Lacedæmonians had urged supra § 5, κήρυκι δὲ—θάλασσαν. Of the words further on, καθ' ὅ τι ἂν ἐσίῃ ἡ πρεσβεία—πολέμου, I have in Transl. shown the sense to be, ‘how and in what way the embassy for putting an end to the war may be admitted or received:’ a view, which has, I find, since been adopted by Goeller, and, in a great measure, by Arnold. Poppo, while he approves of the explanation, yet remarks, that ‘thus ἐσίοι (and not ἐσίῃ) should have been written, because it is not said utcunque intret, but we have to supply the conditional enunciation, quo pacto legatio, si advenerit, recipiatur.’ Little doubt is there that our author did write ἐσίοι, which, from the accustomed mode of pronouncing the οι as η, would easily pass into ἐσίῃ. For καθ' ὅτι, I have (as formerly I did in my smaller edition) edited καθ' ὅ τι, equiv. to καθότι; such being required by the sense intended, which is qua ratione, as viii. 67, γνώμην ἐσενεγκεῖν ἐς τὸν δῆμον, καθ' ὅ τι ἄριστα ἡ πόλις οἰκήσεται, and vi. 8. This has, I find, since been adopted by Bekk.

Ch. CXIX. 1. καὶ ὤμοσαν] So I edit, with Poppo and Goell., for vulg. καὶ ὡμολόγησαν, which is retained by Bekk., but wrongly; for thus the καὶ before ξυμμάχοις will have no force; and very little authority exists for ὡμολόγησαν; the MSS. (including, I would observe, the Clarend. and Cant.) almost all having καὶ ὤμοσαν, though they vary as to the position of Λακεδαιμόνιοι. Upon the whole, the reading which I have adopted seems deserving of the preference, as being that from which the others may easily have arisen, by the endeavours of critics to remove a harshness and obscurity occasioned by extreme brevity. The full sense intended to be conveyed is: ‘these things the Lacedæmonians agreed on (composuerunt, pacti sunt) and swore to, as did also the others.’ Comp. Plato, Alcib. ταῦτα συνέθεντο. Xen. Anab. iv. 2, 1, ταῦτα συνθέμενοι. Plato, Epist. 7, ταῦτα ξυνεθέμεθα τότε, and p. 245. Herodot. iii. 157, ἐποίεε τάπερ τῷ Δαρείῳ συνεθήκατο. Ξυντίθ. appears to have been a highly forcible term, to denote the forming of such a solemn covenant as was usually confirmed with an oath. Thus, in Hom. Il. i. 76, we have σὺ δὲ σύνθεο, καί μοι ὄμοσον, which serves to confirm the reading καὶ ὤμοσαν in the present passage. The various readings which exist, may be regarded as merely representing the various modes in which the ancient critics thought the passage should be read; some reading ταῦτα ξυνέθεντο καὶ ὤμοσαν Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξ., or, ταῦτα ξυνέθεντο Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ ὤμοσαν, καὶ ὡμολόγησαν καὶ οἱ ξ., or, again, ταῦτα ξυν. Λακ. καὶ ὡμολ. καὶ οἱ ξ. Of which several modes, the first would, indeed, make the best Greek; but it lies open to the objection, that thus the Lacedæmonians and their subject-allies (for the Bœotians and Phocians were not μονίων μὲν οἵδε, Ταῦρος Ἐχετιμίδα, Ἀθήναιος Περικλείδα, Φιλοχαρίδας Ἐρυξιδαΐδα· Κορινθίων δὲ Αἰνέας Ὠκύτου, Εὐφαμίδας Ἀριστωνύμου· Σικυωνίων δὲ Δαμότιμος Ναυκράτους, Ὀνάσιμος Μεγακλέους· Μεγαρέων δὲ Νίκασος Κεκάλου, Μενεκράτης Ἀμφιδώρου· Ἐπιδαυρίων δὲ Ἀμφίας Εὐπαΐδα· Ἀθηναίων δὲ οἱ στρατηγοί, Νικόστρατος Διτρέφους, Νικίας Νικηράτου, Αὐτοκλῆς Τολμαίου. ἡ μὲν δὴ ἐκεχειρία αὕτη ἐγένετο· καὶ ξυνήεσαν ἐν αὐτῇ περὶ τῶν μειζόνων σπονδῶν διὰ παντὸς ἐς λόγους.

CXX. Περὶ δὲ τὰς ἡμέρας ταύτας αἷς ἐπήρχοντο, Σκιώνη ἐν τῇ Παλλήνῃ πόλις ἀπέστη ἀπ' Ἀθηναίων πρὸς Βρασίδαν. φασὶ δὲ οἱ Σκιωναῖοι Παλληνῆς μὲν εἶναι ἐκ Πελοποννήσου, πλέοντας δ' ἀπὸ Τροίας σφῶν τοὺς πρώτους κατενεχθῆναι ἐς τὸ χωρίον τοῦτο τῷ χειμῶνι ᾧ ἐχρήσαντο Ἀχαιοί, καὶ αὐτοῦ οἰκῆσαι. 2. ἀποστᾶσι δ' αὐτοῖς ὁ Βρασίδας διέπλευσε νυκτὸς ἐς τὴν Σκιώνην, τριήρει μὲν φιλίᾳ προπλεούσῃ, αὐτὸς δὲ ἐν κελητίῳ ἄποθεν ἑφεπόμενος, ὅπως εἴ μέν τινι τοῦ κέλητος μείζονι πλοίῳ περιτυγχάνοι, ἡ τριήρης ἀμύνοι ‡ αὐτῷ· ἀντιπάλου δὲ ἄλλης τριήρους ἐπιγενομένης, οὐ πρὸς τὸ ἔλασσον νομίζων τρέψεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τὴν ναῦν, καὶ ἐν τούτῳ αὐτὸν present) would be put on the same footing, contrary to plain facts. The present reading may be considered as a condensed sort of expression, for ταῦτα ξυνέθεντο Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ ὤμοσαν, αὐτοὶ καὶ οἱ ξ. That the parties did swear to, as well as agree to, the conditions of the truce, is certain from the next words, ξυνετίθεντο καὶ ἐσπένδοντο; for the libations formed only an accompaniment to the sacrifices and other sacred rites by which the engagements were regarded as confirmed by oaths. This is plain from the frequent Homeric phrase, as Il. ii. 124, ὅρκια πιστὰ ταμόντες: and τάμνειν ὅρκια is often equivalent to θῦσαι τὰ ἐπὶ ὅρκῳ σφάγια, as Eustathius explains. Accordingly there was always an oath, either expressed or implied. With ξυνετίθεντο καὶ ἐσπένδοντο, compare Hom. Il. xi. 339, συνθεσίαι καὶ ὅρκια, meaning, by hendiadys, 'engagements bound by oaths.'

CH. CXX. The scene now changes to the coasts of Macedonia and Thrace, where, during the progress of the negociations for the truce, happened an event calculated to disturb the progress of the negociations, and to rekindle the fire of animosity; namely, the revolt of Scione (the principal town in the peninsula of Pallene) from the alliance of Athens, which invited Brasidas within her walls.

1. αἷς ἐπήρχοντο] scil. εἰς ἀλλήλους ἑκάτεροι, 'quibus ultro citroque ibant legati de pace agentes.' (Poppo.) Τοὺς πρώτους, 'the first colonists.' Τῷ χειμῶνι ᾧ ἐχρ. Ἀχ., 'by the tempest which the Achæans experienced.' This is alluded to in Virg. Æn. i. 39, seqq., and xi. 259, seqq. Ἐχρήσαντο is so used also in Demosth. p. 341; and Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1314, 9, χειμῶνι χρησάμενοι.

2. τριήρει—προπλεούσῃ] Poppo rightly refers these datives to the class treated on in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 405, obs. 2, which respects words, denoting an armament by land or sea, or any part of it, as troops or ships, which are generally accompanied by the dat. only, without σὺν, when they constitute an accompaniment, as supra i. 102 & 107. ii. 12 & 21. iii. 96, and Herodot. v. 99. Φιλίᾳ is well explained by Dukas as equivalent to ξυμμαχικῇ, since the vessel was doubtless obtained by Brasidas from his allies, the revolted Chalcidians. By κελήτιον (on which see note at i. 53, 1) is meant a light skiff, attendant on a ship for various purposes, especially to convey messages. So Xen. Hist. i. 6, 37, τῷ δ' Ἐτεονίκῳ ὁ ὑπηρετικὸς κέλης πάντα ἐξήγγειλε. And in Polyæn. i. 38, 4, we have ἐν ὑπηρετικῷ, scil. πλοίῳ: also v. 2, 12, ἐπιβὰς ὑπηρετικῷ.

For αὐτῷ, many MSS. have αὐτῇ; whence Herm. and Poppo read αὐτῇ; while Haack, Goeller, and Poppo, retain αὐτῷ, and very justly; for αὐτῇ admits of no tolerable sense; while to αὐτῷ there is διασώσειν. 3. περαιωθεὶς δὲ, καὶ ξύλλογον ποιήσας τῶν Σκιωναίων, ἔλεγεν ἅ τε ἐν τῇ Ἀκάνθῳ καὶ Τορώνῃ, καὶ προσέτι φάσκων ἀξιωτάτους αὐτοὺς εἶναι ἐπαίνου, οἵτινες, τῆς Παλλήνης ἐν τῷ ἰσθμῷ ἀπειλημμένης ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων Ποτίδαιαν ἐχόντων, καὶ ὄντες οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ νησιῶται, αὐτεπάγγελτοι ἐχώρησαν πρὸς τὴν ἐλευθερίαν, καὶ οὐκ ἀνέμειναν ἀτολμίᾳ ἀνάγκην σφίσι προσγενέσθαι περὶ τοῦ φανερῶς οἰκείου ἀγαθοῦ· σημεῖόν τ' εἶναι τοῦ καὶ ἄλλο τι ἂν αὐτοὺς τῶν μεγίστων ἀνδρείως ὑπομεῖναι, εἰ τεθήσεται κατὰ νοῦν τὰ πράγματα· πιστοτάτους τε τῇ ἀληθείᾳ ἡγήσεσθαι αὐτοὺς Λακεδαιμονίων φίλους, καὶ τἆλλα τιμήσειν. CXXI. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Σκιωναῖοι ἐπήρθησάν τε τοῖς λόγοις, καὶ θαρσήσαντες πάντες ὁμοίως, καὶ οἷς πρότερον μὴ ἤρεσκε τὰ πρασσόμενα, τόν τε πόλεμον διενοοῦντο προθύμως οἴσειν, καὶ τὸν Βρασίδαν τά τ' ἄλλα καλῶς ἐδέξαντο, καὶ δημοσίᾳ μὲν χρυσῷ στεφάνῳ ἀνέδησαν, ὡς ἐλευθεροῦντα τὴν Ἑλλάδα, ἰδίᾳ δὲ ἑταινίουν τε καὶ προσήρχοντο ὥσπερ ἀθλητῇ. 2. ὁ δὲ τό τε παραυτίκα φυλακήν τινα αὐτοῖς ἐγκαταλιπὼν, διέβη πάλιν, καὶ no real objection, since by αὐτῇ may very well be meant 'his boat,'—namely, by that frequent figure of speech by which the ship is put for the crew on board, or the crew for the ship; as, for instance, in a passage of the New Testament, Mark iii. 9, εἶπε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ ἵνα πλοιάριον προσκαρτερῇ (for ὑπηρετήσῃ) αὐτῷ· and iv. 36, παραλαμβάνουσιν αὐτὸν ὡς ἦν ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ· (meaning the aforesaid attendant boat,) καὶ ἄλλα δὲ πλοιάρια ἦν μετ αὐτοῦ, 'with him,' i. e. with his boat.

3. οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ νησιῶται] Not meaning such in reality, but such as not to afford any aid by land. Thus, at ch. 129 & 122, Pallene is considered as an island, and its inhabitants islanders; and that such should revolt against Athens, was thought insulting to her, as the mistress of the seas. Hence, the revolt of Lesbos was thought peculiarly guilty, and worthy of condign punishment. With the expression here, οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ νησιῶται, comp. another infra viii. 5, ὄντων οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ ὥσπερ ἀρχόμενων. So used, the words οὐδὲν ἄλλο are regarded as indeclinable. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 437, note 1: and compare Soph. Aj. 1231, ὅτ' οὐδὲν ὢν, τοῦ μηδὲν ἀντέστης ὕπερ. Jos. Ant. xix. 1, 16, οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ συντυραννοῦντες.

CH. CXXI. 1. δημοσίᾳ χρυσῷ στεφάνῳ ἀνέδησαν] On the crown of honour which then used to be decreed by cities to any distinguished public benefactor, Poppo refers to Taylor's Pref. to Æschin. contr. Ctesiph. vol. iii. p. 361, seq. Reiske. This became much more frequent in after-ages, and was often done to the Roman consuls or emperors, merely by way of adulation. In ἰδίᾳ ἑταινίουν, (scil. αὐτὸν, 'decked him with garlands,') we have the counterpart to δημοσίᾳ—ἀνέδησαν, the former being a public, the latter a private mark of distinction, especially to victors. Comp. Aristoph. Ran. 393, νικήσαντα ταινιοῦσθαι. Xen. Hist. v. 1, 3, ὁ μὲν ἐστεφάνωσεν, ὁ δὲ ἑταινίωσεν. Dio Cass. 108, 29, ταινιώσας τῷ ἀναδήματι. Philostr. Imag. 5, φοιτῶσιν ἐπὶ τὰς θύρας τοῦ σοφοῦ, Ταινίαις αὐτὸν ἀναδήσοντες, καὶ στεφανώσοντες αὐτὸν θάλλου στεφάνῳ. Plutarch, Cæs. 30, οἱ δὲ καὶ στεφάνους ἐπ' αὐτὸν, ὥσπερ ἀθλητὴν, ἀνθοβολοῦντες ἠφίεσαν. The word at length came to be used metaphorically of highly honouring. Comp. Dio Cass. 202, 84, μεγάλως ταινιουμένῳ. So Hesych. explains ταινιουμένῳ by κοσμουμένῳ.

The subsequent expression, προσήρχοντο (scil. αὐτῷ) ὥσπερ ἀθλητῇ, serves to complete the picture of the highest honour, public and private. Προσέρχεσθαι is, like προσιέναι, a term appropriate to denoting the approach to kings or powerful persons, for the purpose of honorary salutation or congratulation. So in Pind. Pyth. iv. 425, (cited by Wasse,) we have, πρὸς δ' ἑταῖροι καρτερὸν ἄνδρα φίλας Ὧρεγον χεῖρας, στεφάνοισί τέ μιν ποίας ἔρεπτον, μειλιχίοις τε λόγοις Ἀγαπάζοντ'. The term ἀθλητὴς denoted one who was victor in any of the public games. Such persons were, as Duker shows, called by the common appellation, ἱερονῖκαι.

ὕστερον οὐ πολλῷ στρατιὰν πλείω ἐπεραίωσε, βουλόμενος μετ' αὐτῶν τῆς τε Μένδης καὶ τῆς Ποτιδαίας ἀποπειρᾶσαι, ἡγούμενος καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους βοηθῆσαι ἂν ὡς ἐς νῆσον, καὶ βουλόμενος φθάσαι· καί τι αὐτῷ καὶ ἐπράσσετο ἐς τὰς πόλεις ταύτας προδοσίας πέρι. καὶ ὁ μὲν ἔμελλεν ἐγχειρήσειν ταῖς πόλεσι ταύταις. CXXII. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ τριήρει οἱ τὴν ἐκεχειρίαν περιαγγέλλοντες ἀφικνοῦνται παρ' αὐτὸν, Ἀθηναίων μὲν Ἀριστώνυμος, Λακεδαιμονίων δὲ Ἀθήναιος. 2. καὶ ἡ μὲν στρατιὰ πάλιν διέβη ἐς Τορώνην· οἱ δὲ τῷ Βρασίδᾳ ἀνήγγελλον τὴν ξυνθήκην, καὶ ἐδέξαντο πάντες οἱ ἐπὶ Θράκης ξύμμαχοι Λακεδαιμονίων τὰ πεπραγμένα. 3. Ἀριστώνυμος δὲ τοῖς μὲν ἄλλοις κατήνει, Σκιωναίους δὲ αἰσθόμενος ἐκ λογισμοῦ τῶν ἡμερῶν ὅτι ὕστερον ἀφεστήκοιεν, οὐκ ἔφη ἐνσπόνδους ἔσεσθαι. Βρασίδας δὲ ἀντέλεγε πολλὰ, ὡς πρότερον, καὶ οὐκ ἀφίει τὴν πόλιν. 4. ὡς δ' ἀπήγγειλεν ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας ὁ Ἀριστώνυμος περὶ αὐτῶν, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι εὐθὺς ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν στρατεύειν ἐπὶ τὴν Σκιώνην. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι πρέσβεις πέμψαντες, παραβήσεσθαι ἔφασαν αὐτοὺς τὰς σπονδὰς, καὶ τῆς πόλεως ἀντεποιοῦντο, Βρασίδᾳ πιστεύοντες, δίκῃ τε ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν περὶ αὐτῆς κρίνεσθαι. 5. οἱ δὲ δίκῃ μὲν οὐκ ἤθελον κινδυνεύειν, στρατεύειν δὲ ὡς τάχιστα, ὀργὴν ποιούμενοι, εἰ καὶ οἱ ἐν ταῖς νήσοις ἤδη ὄντες ἀξιοῦσι σφῶν ἀφίστασθαι, τῇ κατὰ γῆν Λακεδαιμονίων ἰσχύϊ ἀνωφελεῖ πιστεύοντες. 6. εἶχε δὲ καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια περὶ τῆς ἀποστάσεως μᾶλλον ἢ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐδικαίουν· δύο γὰρ ἡμέραις ὕστερον ἀπέστησαν οἱ Σκιωναῖοι. ψήφισμά τ' εὐθὺς ἐποιήσαντο, Κλέωνος γνώμῃ πεισθέντες, Σκιωναίους ἐξελεῖν τε καὶ ἀποκτεῖναι. καὶ τἆλλα ἡσυχάζοντες, ἐς τοῦτο παρεσκευάζοντο.

CXXIII. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ Μένδη ἀφίσταται αὐτῶν, πόλις ἐν τῇ Παλλήνῃ, Ἐρετριέων ἀποικία. καὶ αὐτοὺς ἐδέξατο ὁ Βρασίδας, οὐ νομίζων ἀδικεῖν, ὅτι ἐν τῇ ἐκεχειρίᾳ φανερῶς προσεχώρησαν· ἔστι γὰρ ἃ καὶ αὐτὸς ἐνεκάλει τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις παραβαίνειν τὰς σπονδάς. 2. διὸ καὶ οἱ Μενδαῖοι μᾶλλον ἐτόλμησαν, τήν τε τοῦ Βρασίδου γνώμην ὁρῶντες ἑτοίμην, τεκμαιρόμενοι καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Σκιώνης, ὅτι οὐ προυδίδου, καὶ ἅμα τῶν πρασσόντων σφίσιν ὀλίγων τε ὄντων, καὶ, ὡς τότε ἐμέλλησαν, οὐκέτι ἀνέντων, ἀλλὰ περὶ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς φοβουμένων τὸ κατάδηλον, καὶ καταβιασαμένων παρὰ γνώμην τοὺς πολ-

2. On the term ἀποπειρᾶσαι, see note on the words at ii. 93, τοὺς Ἀθηναίους βοηθῆσαι ἂν ὡς ἐς νῆσον.

Ch. CXXIII. 1. Μένδη] On the site of this place, see Col. Leake's North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 156, seq.

2. καὶ ἅμα τῶν πρασσόντων—πολλοὺς] Of this too briefly worded sentence, the meaning, more fully expressed, is, 'and, moreover, because those of them who were the contrivers of the revolt, being few in number, and having now set about the matter, did not like to abandon it,' &c. Of the rare expression, τὸ κατάδηλον, I have noted an example in Dio Cass. 142, 95. 846, 14. 962, 24. At ἀνέντων, supply πρᾶγμα.

λούς. 3. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι εὐθὺς πυθόμενοι, πολλῷ ἔτι μᾶλλον ὀργισθέντες, παρεσκευάζοντο ἐπ' ἀμφοτέρας τὰς πόλεις. 4. καὶ Βρασίδας, προσδεχόμενος τὸν ἐπίπλουν αὐτῶν, ὑπεκκομίζει ἐς Ὄλυνθον τὴν Χαλκιδικὴν παῖδας καὶ γυναῖκας τῶν Σκιωναίων καὶ Μενδαίων, καὶ τῶν Πελοποννησίων αὐτοῖς πεντακοσίους ὁπλίτας διέπεμψε, καὶ πελταστὰς τριακοσίους Χαλκιδέων, ἄρχοντά τε τῶν ἁπάντων Πολυδαμίδαν. καὶ οἱ μὲν τὰ περὶ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, ὡς ἐν τάχει παρεσομένων τῶν Ἀθηναίων, κοινῇ εὐτρεπίζοντο.

CXXIV. Βρασίδας δὲ καὶ Περδίκκας ἐν τούτῳ στρατεύουσιν ἅμα ἐπὶ Ἀρριβαῖον τὸ δεύτερον ἐς Λύγκον. καὶ ἦγον ὁ μὲν ὢν ἐκράτει Μακεδόνων τὴν δύναμιν, καὶ τῶν ἐνοικούντων Ἑλλήνων ὁπλίτας, ὁ δὲ πρὸς τοῖς αὐτοῦ περιλοίποις τῶν Πελοποννησίων Χαλκιδέας, καὶ Ἀκανθίους, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων κατὰ δύναμιν ἑκάστων. ξύμπαν δὲ τὸ ὁπλιτικὸν τῶν Ἑλλήνων τρισχίλιοι μάλιστα· ἱππῆς δ' οἱ πάντες ἠκολούθουν Μακεδόνων ξὺν Χαλκιδεῦσιν ὀλίγου ἐς χιλίους, καὶ ἄλλος ὅμιλος τῶν βαρβάρων πολύς. 2. ἐσβαλόντες δὲ ἐς τὴν Ἀρριβαίου, καὶ εὑρόντες ἀντεστρατοπεδευμένους αὐτοῖς τοὺς Λυγκηστὰς, ἀντεκαθέζοντο καὶ αὐτοί. 3. καὶ ἐχόντων τῶν μὲν πεζῶν λόφον ἑκατέρωθεν, πεδίου δὲ τοῦ μέσου ὄντος, οἱ ἱππῆς, ἐς αὐτὸ καταδραμόντες, ἱππομάχησαν πρῶτα ἀμφοτέρων· ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ ὁ Βρασίδας καὶ ὁ Περδίκκας, προελθόντων πρότερον ἀπὸ τοῦ λόφου μετὰ τῶν ἱππέων τῶν Λυγκηστῶν ὁπλιτῶν, καὶ ἑτοίμων ὄντων μάχεσθαι, ἀντεπαγαγόντες καὶ αὐτοὶ ξυνέβαλον, καὶ ἔτρεψαν τοὺς Λυγκηστὰς, καὶ πολλοὺς μὲν διέφθειραν, οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ διαφεύγοντες πρὸς τὰ μετέωρα ἡσύχαζον. 4. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο, τροπαῖον

Ch. CXXIV. How it happened that Brasidas was so soon engaged in hostilities against that prince with whom he had so lately formed an amicable connexion, Thucydides does not inform us. Whether Arrhibæus, as Mitford supposes, had contravened or deserted his engagements, or whether, as it is more probable, Brasidas thought it of so much importance to preserve the friendship of Perdiccas as to be induced himself to break with Arrhibæus, is alike uncertain. Both causes doubtless contributed to bring about a repetition of hostilities between Brasidas and Arrhibæus.

1. ὀλίγου ἐς χιλίους] I fully agree with Dr. Arnold, that ὀλίγου cannot be, what it is commonly supposed, an abridgment of ὀλίγου δεῖν. The expression is to be regarded as used adverbially, and may be rendered either, as it is done in my Translation, nearly, or, as it is by Dr. Arnold, almost. Compare infra viii. 35, ὀλίγου εἶλον (τὴν πόλιν). Aristoph. Nub. 720, ὀλίγου φροῦδος γεγένημαι, and Vesp. 829, ὡς ὀλίγου μ' ἀπώλεσας. Hom. Od. xiv. 37, ὀλίγου σε κύνες διεδηλήσαντο. So rare, however, is the use of ὀλίγου as here followed by ἐς, that I have met with no example elsewhere. The word ὀλίγου, however, stands for δι ὀλίγου, 'within a little.' And here it should not be construed with ἐς, but regarded as an adverb, (standing for παρ' ὀλίγον, δι' ὀλίγου or ἐν ὀλίγῳ,) to be taken absolutely, as thrown in merely by way of qualifying and limiting the general and definite assertion, ἱππῆς οἱ πάντες—ἐς χιλίους, tantamount, 'in all, to 1000.' By τῶν βαρβάρων seem meant the barbarous independent tribes between Macedonia and Odrysia, mentioned at ii. 98.

3. τῶν πεζῶν] Meaning, as Dobree points out, the cavalry of each army. The term ἡσύχαζον ('kept quiet') has reference to the safety and security of the refuge they had sought, which enabled them to στήσαντες, δύο μὲν ἢ τρεῖς ἡμέρας ἐπέσχον, τοὺς Ἰλλυριοὺς μένοντες, οἳ ἔτυχον τῷ Περδίκκᾳ μισθοῦ μέλλοντες ἥξειν. ἔπειτα ὁ Περδίκκας ἐβούλετο προϊέναι ἐπὶ τὰς τοῦ Ἀρριβαίου κώμας, καὶ μὴ καθῆσθαι· Βρασίδας δὲ, τῆς τε Μένδης περιορώμενος,—μὴ, τῶν Ἀθηναίων πρότερον ἐπιπλευσάντων, τι πάθῃ,—καὶ ἅμα τῶν Ἰλλυριῶν οὐ παρόντων, οὐ πρόθυμος ἦν, ἀλλὰ ἀναχωρεῖν μᾶλλον. CXXV. Καὶ ἐν τούτῳ, διαφερομένων αὐτῶν, ἠγγέλθη ὅτι καὶ οἱ Ἰλλυριοὶ μετ' Ἀρριβαίου, προδόντες Περδίκκαν, γεγένηνται· ὥστε, ἤδη ἀμφοτέροις μὲν δοκοῦν ἀναχωρεῖν διὰ τὸ δέος αὐτῶν, ὄντων ἀνθρώπων μαχίμων, κυρωθὲν δὲ οὐδὲν ἐκ τῆς διαφορᾶς ὁπηνίκα χρὴ ὁρμᾶσθαι, νυκτός τε ἐπιγενομένης, οἱ μὲν Μακεδόνες καὶ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν βαρβάρων εὐθὺς φοβηθέντες, (ὅπερ φιλεῖ μεγάλα στρατόπεδα ἀσαφῶς ἐκπλήγνυσθαι) καὶ νομίσαντες πολλαπλασίους keep together, and not disperse for flight, as they had in the plain country.

4. καὶ μὴ καθῆσθαι] 'and not to sit [idle];' the word ἀργὸς being here implied, as in Hom. Il. xxiv. 403, Ἀσχαλόωσι γὰρ οἵδε καθήμενοι. Æschyl. Choëph. 916, ἔσω καθημένη. Demosth. p. 43, μέλλοντας καὶ καθημένους. The same idiom, too, has place in the Septuagint, at Numb. xxxii. 6. Jerem. viii. 14.

τῆς Μένδης περιορώμενος] 'being solicitous about.' In οὐ πρόθυμος—μᾶλλον we have a condensed form of expression, in which a word is left to be understood from the implied opposition in οὐκ—ἀλλὰ, namely, προϊέναι, (which is supplied by the Scholiast,) and also πρόθυμος is to be repeated. He was not disposed to go forward, but was desirous rather to retreat out of the country.

CH. CXXV. 1. ὅτι καὶ οἱ, &c.] Three MSS. have not the καὶ, which was accordingly bracketed by Poppo and cancelled by Bekker, though retained by Goeller, and very properly; for internal evidence is quite in its favour; since had it not been originally there, who would have thought of inserting it? And yet it is not without force, importing (as Poppo says) with reference not to οἱ Ἰλλυριοὶ, but to the whole sentence, what in Latin is expressed by adeo. It must always be borne in mind, that external authority for the omission of a word that could very well be dispensed with, in order to be of any weight, ought to be very strong; whereas here it is singularly weak.

μετ' Ἀρριβαίου γεγένηνται] 'were with (i. e. on the side of) Arrhibæus,' 'had become his allies.' Ἀμφοτέροις δοκοῦν ἀναχωρεῖν. On this use of the participle of the impersonal verb δοκεῖ, see Viger, p. 329, sq. Render, 'it seeming good or being determined by both to retreat.' The ὥστε is to be construed with οἱ Μακεδόνες—οἶκον. At κυρωθὲν οὐδὲν there is, as Poppo and Goeller are agreed, the use of nomin. absol. for genit. absol.; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 562. The particle ὁπηνίκα may include together with the time of departure, the mode thereof.

Remarkably similar in nature to the present is a passage supra iv. 68, 2, φοβηθέντες, νομίσαντες, &c.; and by εὐθὺς φοβηθέντες here is denoted the immediate cause of the departure, namely, the sudden impulse of fear; and by νομίσαντες, &c. the ground of that fear, which was the supposition that those who were coming against them were more in number than they were, and all but at hand. The interposed words ὅπερ φιλεῖ—ἐκπλήγνυσθαι are meant to be illustrative of the sudden fear just mentioned, by expressing that 'such sudden panics, from no definite cause, all great armies are accustomed to feel.' With respect to the construction here, the relative ὅπερ is to be referred to the matter just spoken of (namely, sudden alarm); and the words ἀσαφῶς ἐκπλήγνυσθαι are (as Goeller observes) subjoined as an exegetical apposition to explain what was meant by the ὅπερ, as in another passage infra vii. 80, οἷον φιλεῖ πᾶσι στρατοπέδοις —φόβοι καὶ δείματα ἐγγίγνεσθαι. Comp. also viii. 22, στρατεύονται—Ἑλλήσποντον, and see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 476. Notwithstanding, however, the addition for explanation-sake in the present passage, yet, as Poppo remarks, some verb is left to be μὲν ἢ ἦλθον ἐπιέναι, ὅσον δὲ οὔπω παρεῖναι, καταστάντες ἐς αἰφνίδιον φυγὴν ἐχώρουν ἐπ' οἴκου· καὶ τὸν Περδίκκαν τὸ πρῶτον οὐκ αἰσθανόμενον, ὡς ἔγνω, ἠνάγκασαν πρὶν τὸν Βρασίδαν ἰδεῖν (ἄποθεν γὰρ πολὺ ἀλλήλων ἐστρατοπεδεύοντο) προαπελθεῖν. 2. Βρασίδας δὲ ἅμα τῇ ἕῳ, ὡς εἶδε τοὺς Μακεδόνας προκεχωρηκότας, τούς τε Ἰλλυριοὺς καὶ τὸν Ἀρριβαῖον μέλλοντας ἐπιέναι, ξυναγαγὼν καὶ αὐτὸς ἐς τετράγωνον τάξιν τοὺς ὁπλίτας, καὶ τὸν ψιλὸν ὅμιλον ἐς μέσον λαβών, διενοεῖτο ἀναχωρεῖν. 3. ἐκδρόμους δὲ, εἴ πῃ προσβάλλοιεν αὐτοῖς, ἔταξε τοὺς νεωτάτους· καὶ αὐτὸς, λογάδας ἔχων τριακοσίους, τελευταῖος, γνώμην εἶχεν, ὑποχωρῶν, τοῖς τῶν ἐναντίων πρώτοις προσκεισομένοις ἀνθιστάμενος ἀμύνεσθαι. 4. καὶ, πρὶν τοὺς πολεμίους ἐγγὺς εἶναι, ὡς διὰ ταχέων παρεκελεύσατο τοῖς στρατιώταις τοιάδε.

CXXVI. "Εἰ μὲν μὴ ὑπώπτευον, ἄνδρες Πελοποννήσιοι, ὑμᾶς

understood, as ξυμβαίνειν or γίγνεσθαι, or ποιεῖν, which is expressed in another case, v. 70, ὅπερ φιλεῖ τὰ μεγάλα στρατόπεδα ποιεῖν. With respect to ἀσαφῶς, this reading has been properly edited by Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, on the authority of three MSS., the Scholiast, Valla, and T. Mag., and further borne out by the very nature of the thing; since, as Duker observes, those panic fears, &c. befal armies not σαφῶς, but ἀσαφῶς, i. e. from no apparent cause sufficient to account for them; of which an instance presents itself at vii. 80. Examples of the word—which is extremely rare—are found supra iv. 20. Dio Cass. 422, 12. Xen. de Venat. iii. 10, (where it is said of dogs,) μεταθέουσι γὰρ ('change their course') αἱ μὲν ἀσαφῶς, αἱ δὲ πολὺ ὑπολαμβάνουσαι, δοξάζουσαι δὲ ἕτεραι, in which passage the terms ὑπολαμβάνειν and δοξάζειν differ as genus and species.

The word further on, ἠνάγκασαν, is not to be understood of any compulsion by physical force, or the terror on the part of the Macedonian troops, but of that moral compulsion by which, when no other prudent course lies open, a person is said to be forced to do a thing.

πρὶν τὸν Βρασίδαν ἰδεῖν] The Scholiast and the older commentators take ἰδεῖν as here bearing the sense colloqui, by an Atticism, of which they adduce examples from Lucian, Dial. M. 9, and a passage of the New Testament, Luke viii. 20, ἰδεῖν σε, with which compare another in St. Matth. xii. 46, αὐτῷ λαλῆσαι. Duker, however, rejects the idea of Atticism in this case; and, I admit, on good grounds; not indeed as based on the reason he alleges, that 'in the word ἰδεῖν, as also in ἐντυγχάνειν, there is a figure of speech by which the antecedent is put instead of the consequent,' but because the idiom in question is found in Greek the furthest removed from Attic, and is observable both in the Latin visere, the Fr. voir, and the Eng. to see.

2. τετράγωνον τάξιν] 'a hollow square' (equivalent to πλαίσιον at vii. 78). See Onosand. Strat. p. 33, seqq. and Schwebel there.

3. ἐκδρόμους] Of this word, which is rare, an example occurs in Xen. Hist. iv. 5, 16, where we have οἱ ἔκδρομοι joined with οἱ ἱππεῖς. So also in Dio Cass. p. 516, 56, the word is used of light cavalry: and among the Romans the excursores answered to our light infantry skirmishers. Considering, however, that Brasidas was so circumstanced, that his policy was to keep his troops together, and not send out skirmishers; and, moreover, taking into account the absence here of the article,—it is, I think, best, with Poppo, to suppose that these troops (consisting, we may imagine, of the youngest and most active of the heavy-armed) were placed as a reserve within the hollow square, and so disposed as to run out at certain intervals when it was needful to act on the offensive by repelling attack.

The words καὶ αὐτὸς are, as Poppo observes, to be regarded as transposed, and to be referred to διενοεῖτο ἀναχωρεῖν preceding. Construe: καὶ αὐτὸς γνώμην εἶχεν, τελευταῖος ὑποχωρῶν, λογάδας ἔχων τρ. ἀμύνεσθαι ἀνθιστάμενος τοῖς πρώτοις προσκεισομένοις τῶν ἐναντίων.

CH. CXXVI. We have here a truly

τῷ τε μεμονῶσθαι, καὶ ὅτι βάρβαροι οἱ ἐπιόντες καὶ πολλοί, ἔκπληξιν ἔχειν, οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως διδαχὴν ἅμα τῇ παρακελεύσει ἐποιούμην· νῦν δὲ, πρὸς μὲν τὴν ἀπόλειψιν τῶν ἡμετέρων καὶ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν ἐναντίων βραχεῖ ὑπομνήματι καὶ παραινέσει τὰ μέγιστα πειράσομαι πείθειν. 2. ἀγαθοῖς γὰρ εἶναι ὑμῖν προσήκει τὰ πολέμια οὐ διὰ ξυμμάχων παρουσίαν ἑκάστοτε, ἀλλὰ δι' οἰκείαν ἀρετὴν, καὶ μηδὲν πλῆθος πεφοβῆσθαι ἑτέρων, οἵ γε μηδὲ ἀπὸ πολιτειῶν τοιούτων ἥκετε ἐν αἷς οὐ πολλοὶ ὀλίγων ἄρχουσιν, ἀλλὰ πλειόνων μᾶλsoldier-like exhortation, similar to that of Phormio supra ii. 89, and one imitated from the present in Jos. Bell. iii. 10, 2, and certain harangues in modern times, especially those addressed by Napoleon to his men in like critical conjunctures. This is peculiarly characterized as brief, pithy, and coming at once to the point, attaining its end not by any of the artificial aids of stilted rhetorical display, but simply by an appeal such as—coming from the brave, and addressed to the brave—never fails to be at once responded to, breathing a generous confidence by the simple exhibition of that cool determination with which the truly courageous are always ready to meet peril. Accordingly the troops are here encouraged to rely on their own tried valour and discipline, and to contemn the empty terrors of barbarian assailants.

1. This section contains what is, in effect, the proem, though destitute of that which, by the rules of rhetoric, would constitute the form thereof; and it is, with admirable judgment, taken from the peculiar circumstances in which the hearers stand, and without which no address, in the way of exhortation or admonition, would have been necessary.

ἔκπληξιν ἔχειν] for ἐκπλήσσεσθαι. The words following, οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως — ἐποιούμην, are pregnant with meaning, though, for delicacy's sake, expressed with much brevity; all idea of incitement being as much as possible kept out of sight. By the expression placed before τῇ παρακελεύσει, namely, διδαχὴν, is meant the instructing them as to their real situation, as regarded the weakness and want of discipline of their enemy, and their own strength of skill and courage. With respect to the words following, πρὸς μὲν τὴν ἀπόλειψιν—ἐναντίων, there were, as observes Arnold, 'three things which alarmed the soldiers: 1. their being abandoned by their allies; 2. the superior numbers of the enemy; and, 3. that those enemies were barbarians. To the 1st Brasidas replies briefly; the 3rd particular he notices more at large, from the words βαρβάρους δὲ (sect. 3, init.) to the end of the speech.' Of πρὸς τὴν ἀπόλειψιν the sense is, 'on account of this desertion.' In the words βραχεῖ ὑπομνήματι καὶ παραινέσει there is contained the same delicate address as in διδαχὴν ἅμα τῇ παρακελεύσει, the former expression being intended to soften the effect of the latter. Compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 346, 40, βραχείᾳ διδαχῇ—μᾶλλον δὲ ὑπομνήσει.] μηδὲν πλῆθος πεφοβῆσθαι ἑτέρων] Compare ii. 88, μηδένα ὄχλον π. νεῶν ὑποχωρεῖν, and Tyrtæus, frag. ii. 3, μηδ' ἀνδρῶν πλῆθος δειμαίνετε, μηδὲ φοβεῖσθε.

2. ἀγαθοῖς—ὑμῖν προσήκει] Compare with this what is similarly said by Phormio of the Lacedæmonians: ᾧ μάλιστα πιστεύοντες προσέρχονται, ὡς προσῆκον σφίσιν ἀνδρείοις εἶναι.

οἵ γε μηδὲ—ἐν αἷς οὐ πολλοί, &c.] The difficulty here existing is certainly not to be removed either by cancelling the οὐ, or by reading, instead of οὐ, οἱ. The former expedient is too arbitrary, and does but cut the knot; and the second is forbidden by the absence of the article thrice in the words of the same clause. Hence better is it to acquiesce in the opinion of Heilm. and Poppo, that the οὐ arose from the negligence of the writer, who did not consider that μηδὲ had before occurred. With this they compare a similar, though more excusable, instance of negligence infra v. 22.

The force of the argument here (not so much conclusive, as serving to soothe the pride and vanity of the hearers) is, that 'they ought not to be disheartened by the abandonment of their allies, and the superior numbers of their foes, since they belonged to a state that had been founded by the valour of the few, who had thus gained, and still maintained, their dominion over the many!' This was true in point of fact, since, as Goeller observes, 'Spartæ paucitas Doriensium et Heraclidarum multitudini Helotarum et Periœcorum imperabat.' See Mueller's Dor. vol. ii. p. 21.

λον ἐλάσσους, οὐκ ἄλλῳ τινὶ κτησάμενοι τὴν δυναστείαν, ἢ τῷ μαχόμενοι κρατεῖν. 3. βαρβάρους δὲ, οὓς νῦν ἀπειρίᾳ δέδιτε, μαθεῖν χρὴ ἐξ ὧν τε προηγώνισθε τοῖς Μακεδόσιν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἀφ' ὧν ἐγὼ εἰκάζω τε καὶ ἄλλων ἀκοῇ ἐπίσταμαι, οὐ δεινοὺς ἐσομένους.

The next words, οὐκ ἄλλῳ—μαχόμενοι κρατεῖν, in which there is an allusion to the mode by which they acquired their dominion, (namely, by the utter subjugation of the original inhabitants of Peloponnesus,) contain what is meant tacitly to stir up the minds of the hearers; the general meaning intended being, that, 'as they gained their dominion by the sword, they can alone maintain it by the sword.'

3. ἐξ ὧν προηγώνισθε τοῖς Μακεδόσιν αὐτῶν] These words involve a certain perplexity, which is best removed by Goeller, who explains the sense to be, 'from the trial which you have previously had by contest with those of them who are Macedonians;' meaning, the Lyncestians, whom they had fought with and defeated three days before, (see ch. 124,) and who were regarded as Macedonians, (see ii. 99,) and, consequently, barbarians; for, that the Macedonians were, by the other nations of Greece, then reckoned among barbarians, there is every reason to suppose. And that they continued to be so reckoned down to the time of king Philip, is, as Heilm. observes, certain from the oration of Demosthenes περὶ παραπρεσβείας. Thus (as Dukas notices) 'the speaker divides the barbarians into two parts,—the Macedonian barbarians, with whom they had already fought, and the Illyrian ones, with whom they were going to fight; from the former of whom they might judge of the latter.'

With respect to the idiom in τοῖς Μακ. αὐτῶν, it is, as Poppo says, parallel to that in the words infra v. 15, οἱ Σπαρτιᾶται αὐτῶν. The ὧν following, is, as Poppo explains, for ἐκείνων ἅ; and this form of expression, ἃ προηγώνισθε, is to be explained on the same principle as that by which the Greeks say, ἀγῶνα ἀγωνίζεσθαι. Comp. also διαγωνίζεσθαι ταῦτα, in Xen. Cyr. i. 2, 12.

For εἰκάζω, several of the best MSS. have εἰκάζων, which is edited by Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold; while Bekker retains the common reading, which I have also thought proper to do, (as I formerly had done in my smaller edition of Thucydides,) since, otherwise, the word εἰκάζων must have referred to it the dat. ἀκοῇ ἄλλων; which would be doing violence to the construction, by which the two half clauses of the clause, kept distinct by means of the τε καὶ, cannot be intermixed. Moreover, the union of εἰκάζων ἄλλων ἀκοῇ is forbidden by the plain fact, that the conjecture which Brasidas and his troops had to form as to the Illyrians, was not from the report of others, but from what they had themselves learnt from their late experience of the conterminous barbarians, the Lyncestians. Not to say, that to speak of conjecturing any thing by report of others, or even knowing by conjecture, involves something like an absurdity. Accordingly, ἀκοῇ is, I believe, never joined with εἰκάζω, but not unfrequently with ἐπίσταμαι, and its synonymes; e. gr. supra i. 4. Antiph. p. 137 & 138. Plato, p. 94. Finally, thus the construction would involve a harshness not to be borne out by any parallel one in our author. Hence, far more probable is it that εἰκάζων was a mistake of the copyists, (who not unfrequently confound the participle pres. and the verb ind. pres. 1st person,) than that Thucydides should have written what violates every principle of grammatical construction, and perverts his own meaning, which evidently was to represent Brasidas saying of the Illyrian barbarians, 'from what I both myself conjecture, (from my experience of their fellow-barbarians,) and know (fully understand) by the report of others.' This opposition between conjecture and knowledge (or certain intelligence) is by no means unfrequent in the Greek writers, being found not only in the philosophers, (as Plato, p. 98. 105. 425. Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 9. Anab. i. 6, 11, & i. 10, 10. Mem. iii. 6, 11, & 5, 6.) but also in ordinary writers, as Demosth. p. 207, 12, ἐγὼ δὲ οἶδα, ὅσῳ ἂν ἐκ λογισμοῦ τις σκοπῶν εἰκάσαι. Æschin. p. 76, 26, οὐκ εἰκάζων, ἀλλ' ἀκριβῶς, and Pollux, ix. 150. 151, where to εἰδέναι, γιγνώσκειν, and ἐπίστασθαι are opposed, as contrary terms, εἰκάζειν, τεκμαίρεσθαι, &c. So also in another passage of our author himself, vi. 92, we have, ὅσῳ τὰ μὲν Ἀθηναίων οἶδα, τὰ δ' ὑμέτερα ᾔκαζον.

Such are my reasons for rejecting the reading εἰκάζων, and adopting εἰκάζω; which, indeed, I should scarcely have thought it necessary thus fully to state, but for the remark of Poppo, that I had (in before giving it the preference) 'chosen rather to speak as a matter of opinion,

4. καὶ γὰρ ὅσα μὲν τῷ ὄντι ἀσθενῆ ὄντα τῶν πολεμίων δόκησιν ἔχει ἰσχύος, διδαχὴ ἀληθὴς προσγενομένη περὶ αὐτῶν ἐθάρσυνε μᾶλλον τοὺς ἀμυνομένους· οἷς δὲ βεβαίως τι πρόσεστιν ἀγαθὸν, μὴ προειδώς τις ἂν αὐτοῖς τολμηρότερον προσφέροιτο. 5. οὗτοι δὲ τὴν μέλλησιν μὲν ἔχουσι τοῖς ἀπείροις φοβεράν· καὶ γὰρ † πλήθει ὄψεως δεινοί, καὶ βοῆς μεγέθει ἀφόρητοι, ἥ τε διὰ κενῆς ἐπανάσεισις τῶν ὅπλων than to prove and establish.' In point of fact, Poppo himself pronounces (with true German ἐποχή) that 'he scarcely doubts but that εἰκάζω is the true reading.'

The term which follows, ἐπίσταμαι, must, from the nature of the thing, have the qualified sense intelligo; for otherwise the two terms ἐπίστασθαι and εἰδέναι, like our verb to know, can, in strictness, only mean, as Johnson defines, 'to perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.'

4. ὅσα μὲν—διδαχὴ ἀληθὴς προσγενομένη, &c.] Of this sentence the general meaning is clear, namely, 'for truly such points of the enemy as, being really weak, have a show of strength, tend, after a true knowledge of them, to rather embolden their opponents; but as to those who possess any sure advantage, he alone, who knows it not beforehand, will very courageously engage with them.' Here, however, the construction is harsh, and we may best, with Poppo, regard it as presenting a confusion of two constructions of the verb. The former clause is, as Goeller observes, of the same nature with that at i. 22, 1, χαλεπὸν τὴν ἀκρίβειαν, &c. where we have a change of construction, for τούτων τῶν λεχθέντων τὴν ἀκρ. αὐτὴν διαμ. χαλ. ἦν. And in either place, as Poppo observes, 'the apodosis ought to begin from the demonstrative οὗτοι, or in the protasis εἴ τινα ought to be said.' With respect to the latter clause, one should, as Goeller observes, have rather expected, οἷς δὲ βεβαίως τι πρόσεστιν ἀγαθὸν, τούτοις μὴ προειδώς τις ἂν τολμ. προσφέροιτο: but our author wrote αὐτοῖς, as though εἰ δέ τισι βεβαίως τι πρόσεστιν ἀγαθὸν, &c. had preceded.

5. What was before said generally, is now applied to the particular case before them. And the sense here intended is, 'Thus those [before you] have, indeed, their impending attack terrific to such as are unacquainted with, or who have had no trial of, them.' Such seems to be the import of the expression τὴν μέλλησιν. Goeller, indeed, interprets it minas, and refers to the union of the word with ἀπειλαῖς at the end of the chapter, and to a similar use at 1, 69: but to expound a word by another with which it has not the most remote connexion, is not so much interpretation, as the substitution of a plain word for a recondite term. And, as to the use of the word at the end of the chapter, it can bear no such sense there, (since the term ἀπειλαῖς is subjoined,) but must have that above assigned. Finally, at i. 69, it signifies cunctatio.

The words following, καὶ γὰρ πλήθει—ἀπειλῆς, are illustrative of the terrific nature of their approach: and here some difficulty exists in the expression πλήθει ὄψεως δεινοί, which cannot well be taken, according to the opinion of some, as standing for ὄψει πλήθους δεινοί, still less, according to that of others, for ὄψει πολλῇ: but ὄψεως must, as it is taken by Duker, stand for τῆς θέας, 'by the numerosity of their appearance;' or, as Bred., Haack, and Poppo explain, 'multitudine, quæ conspectui offertur.' And they refer, as illustrative of the use of the genit. of subst. put for adject., to their notes on ii. 42, 2; and compare another passage supra iv. 34, τῇ ὄψει—πολλαπλάσιοι φαινόμενοι, as they might also to a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 367, 7, ὄψεως δεινότητι. After all, however, I am inclined to suspect that πλήθει is corrupt, and that, for this, our author wrote τῷ ἀήθει. So in Arrian, E. A. i. 9, 7, we have καὶ αὐτὴ (meaning, the attack of the Bœotians and Arcadians on Sparta) τῷ ἀήθει τῆς ὄψεως μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ ἀκριβείᾳ τῶν κινδύνων αὐτοὺς—ἐφόβησεν, where, I doubt not, the writer had this passage of Thucydides in mind. Certain it is that Dio Cass. had it in view, p. 321, 27, ταῦτα ἐτάραττεν αὐτούς· συνεπελάβετο δὲ σφίσι τοῦ φόβου καὶ ἡ ὄψις αὐτὴ τῆς πόλεως δεινὴ καὶ ἀήθης. It is true that τὸ ἄηθες is a rare expression, but it is, besides the above passage of Arrian, found in Hdian. ii. 11, 10, ἐταράττοντο τῷ ἀήθει τοῦ πράγματος, and Ælian, V. H. v. 1, τὸ ἄηθες τῶν σιτίων. That Arrian and Dio Cass. had ἀήθει in their copies, I doubt not; and how easily τῷ ἀήθει might be mistaken for τῷ πλήθει, is obvious, since an abbreviation of τῷ is not unlike a ἔχει τινὰ δήλωσιν ἀπειλῆς· προσμῖξαι δὲ, τοῖς ὑπομένουσιν αὐτὰ οὐχ ὁμοῖοι. οὔτε γὰρ τάξιν ἔχοντες αἰσχυνθεῖεν ἂν λιπεῖν τινα χώραν βιαζόμενοι, ἥ τε φυγὴ καὶ ἡ ἔφοδος αὐτῶν, ἴσην ἔχουσα δόξαν τοῦ καλοῦ, ἀνεξέλεγκτον καὶ τὸ ἀνδρεῖον ἔχει· (αὐτοκράτωρ δὲ μάχη μάλιστ' ἂν καὶ πρόφασιν τοῦ σώζεσθαί τινι πρεπόντως πορίσειε·) τοῦ τε ἐς χεῖρας ἐλθεῖν πιστότερον τὸ ἐκφοβῆσειν ἡμᾶς ἀκινδύνως ἡγοῦνται· ἐκείνῳ γὰρ ἂν πρὸ τούτου ἐχρῶντο. 6. σαφῶς τε πᾶν

ϖ, and the letters Α and Λ are continually interchanged. It is scarcely necessary to add, how much more suitable is the sense arising from τῷ ἀήθει. The uncommonness of their appearance it was that made them seem formidable. And in accordance with this are the circumstances which follow, of the wild and loud shouting, and empty brandishing of their weapons. As regards the former of which, compare Xen. Anab. i. 7, 4. Herodot. vii. 211, 13. Onosand. p. 93, καὶ γὰρ ὄψις (scil. ἀήθης vel φοβερὰ) καὶ βοή, &c. By the term ἐπανάσεισις is denoted, 'a shaking aloft at,' intimating a threat. In διὰ κενῆς we have a phrase for an adject., as in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 163, 10, ἡ διὰ κενῆς ἐμπίπτουσα προδοσίας δόκησις. Comp. also a passage of Liv. xxi. 28, and vii. 10, armorum agitatio rara.

προσμῖξαι δὲ—ὁμοῖοι] 'but to engage withal, they are not, to those who endure these terrors, answerable to their show.' By αὐτὰ understand the terror-working circumstances just mentioned. Comp. Xen. Anab. i. 7, 4, τὸ μὲν γὰρ πλῆθος πολὺ, καὶ κραυγῇ πολλῇ ἐπίασιν· ἂν δὲ ταῦτα ἀνασχῆσθε, κ. τ. λ., and Liv. xxxviii. 17, where of the Gauls it is said, among other circumstances, 'cantus ineuntium prœlium, et ululatus, et tripudia, et quatientium scuta in patrium quemdam modum horrendus armorum crepitus:' and it is added, 'omnia (answering to αὐτὰ here) de industriâ composita ad terrorem.' Imitated from the above passages are the noble lines of Milton, Parad. bk. i. 668, 'and fierce with grasped arms Clash'd on the sounding shields the din of war, Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heaven.'

οὔτε γὰρ τάξιν ἔχοντες—τὸ ἀνδρεῖον ἔχει] These words serve to illustrate the real weakness and inefficacy of this barbaric force, as being devoid of that sort of honour which is the soldier's best security from giving way. It is scarcely necessary to remark, that to yield any post assigned was, both by the Greeks and the Romans, accounted dishonourable to the soldier.

The negative οὔτε may be supposed (as it is by Poppo) to apply to the whole sentence; the words τάξιν ἔχοντες αἰσχυνθεῖεν forming, as Arnold observes, one compound idea, to the whole of which the neg. applies equally. In ἥ τε φυγὴ καὶ ἡ ἔφοδος, there is no reason, with Goeller, to suppose an allusion to the Parthian mode of fighting while flying, 'fuga versisque sagittis.' All that is meant is, that 'both attack and flight have with them an equal appearance (i. e. carried with it the same notion) of the honourable: and thus (it is added) it leaves valour untested by proof.' Evidently imitated from these are the words of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 2186, 11, φιλοτιμία κενὴ τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ καλοῦ τῆς δόξης ἐνώκουσα. Of the expression τοῦ καλοῦ τῆς δόξης, I have observed no example elsewhere. On the expression ἀνεξέλεγκτον, see note at i. 21.

The words αὐτοκράτωρ δὲ—πορίσειε are parenthetical; those before, from ἡ ἔφοδος, &c. to ἔχει, connecting with τοῦ τε ἐς χεῖρας, &c., and the sense being, 'moreover, an engagement carried on by each combatant at his own will and pleasure would especially afford to any one a specious pretext of providing for his own safety.' On the term αὐτοκράτωρ see note supra ch. 108. The expression πρεπόντως is exactly parallel to our decently.

The words following, τοῦ τε—ἔχρωντο, supply the counterpart to ἥ τε φυγὴ—ἔχει preceding, as follows, 'since flight is as honourable as attack, valour has no test; and, indeed, they think the attempting to frighten us without danger, safer (lit. more to be relied on) than to come to close quarters.' The future is here used for the present, as expressive of endeavour; on which, Poppo refers to Bernhardy's Syntax, p. 366. On the ellipsis of ἄλλως, I have before treated more than once.

6. This section presents what may be called the ἐπίλογοι, or conclusion, (though without the usual form thereof,) in which is first pointed out the inference that may be drawn from the above; (q. d. 'thus you see clearly, that what at first seemed terrific in them is, in fact, slight; [only] scaring through the medium of the sight τὸ προϋπάρχον δεινὸν ἀπ' αὐτῶν ὁρᾶτε ἔργῳ μὲν βραχὺ ὄν, ὄψει δὲ καὶ ἀκοῇ κατασπέρχον. ὃ ὑπομείναντες ἐπιφερόμενον, καὶ ὅταν καιρὸς ᾖ, κόσμῳ καὶ τάξει αὖθις ὑπαγαγόντες, ἔς τε τὸ ἀσφαλὲς θᾶσσον ἀφίξεσθε, καὶ γνώσεσθε τὸ λοιπὸν ὅτι οἱ τοιοῦτοι ὄχλοι τοῖς μὲν τὴν πρώτην ἔφοδον δεξαμένοις ἄποθεν ἀπειλαῖς τὸ ἀνδρεῖον μελλήσει ἐπικομποῦσιν. οἳ δ' ἂν εἴξωσιν αὐτοῖς, κατὰ πόδας τὸ εὔψυχον ἐν τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ ὀξεῖς ἐνδείκνυνται."

and hearing;') and then is subjoined, in conclusion, a short ὑπόμνημα, or rather what has the force thereof without the form; being an intimation of the sure result of resoluteness and disciplined steadiness, — namely, that 'they will sooner come out of danger, and will, for the future, hold cheap such sort of enemies as these.'

Of κατασπέρχον the sense, variously laid down, is, by the Schol. and Port., explained to be, incutere terrorem, to scare. To which signification Poppo objects, on the ground of its not being found in the lexicons; and explains the import of the term to be urgere, as in Dio Cass. 292, 30, καὶ ὅ τε ἄνεμος ἰσχυρῶς κατέσπερχε. Yet the reason for rejecting the former sense is insufficient, since numerous senses of words fully authorized and established are yet not found in even the best lexicons. And as to the passage adduced from Dio Cass., it is not to the present purpose, since there κατέσπερχε bears the sense impruit, irruit, as in Hom. Il. xiii. 334, ὡς δ' ὅθ' ὑπὸ λιγέων ἀνέμων σπέρχωσιν ἄελλαι. Here, indeed, so little suitable is the sense urgere, that it may well be asked why κατασπέργω should not bear the only one agreeable to the context, terrorem incutere. The primary sense of σπέρχω is, I believe, to prick, or goad; which may well be the case; since the word is not derived (as Lennep and Scheid suppose it to be) from σπέρω, σπέω, πέω, agito; nor (according to Dammius) from σπέω (i. e. ἕπω) and ἔρχω, ire facio; but from the old northern word, price-an, to prick; the inceptive being here, as not unfrequently, lost, and the other, as often, transposed. That the word meant to prick, is plain from Hom. Il. xxiii. 430, ἐλαυνε, κέντρῳ ἐπισπέρχων, whence the expression in Aristoph. Ach. 1188, λυστὰς ἐλαύνων, καὶ κατασπέρχων δορί. But the term was also used figuratively of the stimulus to action of any of the more violent passions, (so Shakspeare has, 'goaded by most sharp occasions,') especially fear; as in Jos. Bell. iv. 3, 4, ἀνθρώπῳ κατασπερχομένῳ τοῖς ὑπὲρ τοῦ ζῆν φόβοις, where the dat. is, as here, a dative of instrument; the terrific being here supposed to violently assail, through the medium of the senses of sight and hearing. Finally, as to Poppo's argument, that the signification in question ('to prick with fear') is one not found, that at once falls to the ground; for, in effect, the signification is found in the best of the ancient lexicons, namely, that of Hesychius, who explains κατασπερχόμενος by καταπλησσόμενος. And that our Scholiast explains by καταπλήττεται, is a proof that the ancient interpreters so understood the word.

ἄποθεν ἀπειλαῖς τὸ ἀνδρεῖον μελλήσει ἐπικομποῦσιν] The difficulty involved in these words is mainly attributable to the condensed brevity of this biting sarcasm; the point of which would have been destroyed by greater expansion. The full sense intended is, I apprehend, 'they vaunt (i. e. ostentatiously display) their courage, while delaying [to approve it in fight] at a distance by threats only.' And so Dio Cass. must certainly have understood the passage, who, at p. 213, almost transcribes it as follows: οἷά που οἱ πολλοὶ τῶν βαρβάρων ἐν ταῖς ἀπειλαῖς πᾶν τὸ φοβερὸν διακενῆς ἐπικομποῦσιν, 'vaunting all their terrors in empty threats,'— namely, as opposed to ἐν ἔργῳ, just before. The expression, a little after, μελλήσει, Dio has passed over, doubtless from not comprehending its force. It is best viewed as an additional circumstance thrown in, by a single term, placed, as it were, parenthetically, and therefore not needing the copula;—an idiom this, so far from unusual in our author, that it is strange Poppo should here have failed to recognise it.

οἳ δ' ἂν εἴξωσιν—ἐνδείκνυνται] Render, 'but to those who give way to them, they are keen enough, in security, to show forth their courage by chasing them hard at their heels.' This view of the sense, formerly propounded by me in my Transl. and smaller edition of Thucydides, has since, I find, been confirmed by the opinion of Dobree, who renders, 'instantes ipsorumque vestigia persequentes,' comparing other passages of our author, supra iii. 98,

CXXVII. Τοιαῦτα ὁ Βρασίδας παραινέσας, ὑπῆγε τὸ στράτευμα. οἱ δὲ βάρβαροι, ἰδόντες, πολλῇ βοῇ καὶ θορύβῳ προσέκειντο, νομίσαντες φεύγειν τε αὐτόν, καὶ καταλαβόντες διαφθείρειν. 2. καὶ ὡς αὐτοῖς αἵ τε ἐκδρομαὶ, ὅπη προσπίπτοιεν, ἀπήντων, καὶ αὐτὸς, ἔχων τοὺς λογάδας, ἐπικειμένους ὑφίστατο, τῇ τε πρώτῃ ὁρμῇ παρὰ γνώμην ἀντέστησαν, καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν ἐπιφερομένους μὲν δεχόμενοι ἠμύνοντο, ἡσυχαζόντων δὲ, αὐτοὶ ὑπεχώρουν, τότε δὴ τῶν μετὰ τοῦ Βρασίδου Ἑλλήνων ἐν τῇ εὐρυχωρίᾳ οἱ πολλοὶ τῶν βαρβάρων ἀπέσχοντο, μέρος δέ τι καταλιπόντες αὐτοῖς ἐπακολουθοῦν προσβάλλειν, οἱ λοιποὶ χωρήσαντες δρόμῳ ἐπί τε τοὺς φεύγοντας τῶν Μακεδόνων, οἷς ἐντύχοιεν, ἔκτεινον, καὶ τὴν ἐσβολὴν,—ἥ ἐστι μεταξὺ δυοῖν λόφοιν στενὴ ἐς τὴν Ἀρριβαίου,—φθάσαντες προκατέλαβον, εἰδότες οὐκ οὖσαν ἄλλην τῷ Βρασίδᾳ ἀναχώρησιν. καὶ προσιόντος αὐτοῦ ἐς αὐτὸ ἤδη τὸ ἄπορον τῆς ὁδοῦ, κυκλοῦνται ὡς ἀπολῃψόμενοι. CXXVIII. Ὁ δὲ, γνοὺς, προεῖπε τοῖς μεθ' αὐτοῦ τριακοσίοις, ὃν ᾧετο μᾶλλον ἂν ἑλεῖν τῶν λόφων, χωρήσαντας πρὸς αὐτὸν δρόμῳ ὡς τάχιστα ἕκαστος δύναται, ἄνευ τάξεως, πειρᾶσαι ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἐκκροῦσαι τοὺς ἤδη ἐπόντας βαρβάρους, πρὶν πολλοὺς—κατὰ πόδας αἱροῦντες ἄνθρωποι ποδώκεις, and v. 64, & viii. 17. Here a certain word is left to be understood, which, I apprehend, not, as formerly, to be αἱροῦντες, (for that were surely too arbitrary an ellipsis,) but rather, what I now prefer to supply, ἐλαύνοντες. which is expressed in a passage of Herodot. ix. 89, 4, κατὰ πόδας ἐμεῦ ἐλαύνων, 'driving hard at my heels.'

CH. CXXVII. 1. ὑπῆγε τὸ στράτευμα] 'drew off the army.' By the ὑπὸ it is also implied that this was done pedetentim. Of which sense of the word, examples are not unfrequent in the historians.

νομίσαντες — διαφθείρειν] 'thinking that he was fleeing, and that they should come up and destroy him;' διαφθείρειν, as Poppo says, standing for διαφθερεῖν; which, he adds, is not unfrequently the case after verbs of thinking. See his Proleg. I. i. p. 154.

2. αἱ ἐκδρομαὶ] Meaning, as the Schol. explains, οἱ τεταγμένοι πρὸς τὸ ἐκτρέχειν, namely, the parties of ἐκδρομοι mentioned at ch. 125. On which use of abstract for concr., see Poppo, Proleg. I. i. p. 259.

τὴν ἐσβολήν] 'the pass:' on which, see note at iii. 112. Τὸ ἄπορον τῆς ὁδοῦ, 'that part of the way which was the most difficult of approach.'

CH. CXXVIII. 1. μεθ' αὐτοῦ] For this, Poppo edits, from several of the best MSS., μετ' αὐτοῦ; while Bekk. and Goeller retain the common reading, which Poppo, finally, with reason, pronounces more correct.

ἐπόντας] The common reading, and that of all the MSS., is ἐπιόντας, which has been retained by Bekk., but not on good grounds. It yields a sense so little suitable, as to be quite inadmissible; whereas ἐπόντας, which has been edited by Poppo, presents an excellent sense, namely, τοὺς ἤδη ἐπόντας, 'those who had already taken post there,' or, were upon it. And though this reading merely rests on conjecture, yet here, so slight is the difference between ἐπιόντας and ἐπόντας, that the authority of MSS. is, in such a case, of little weight. Finally, if the authority of names be thought of any importance, that cannot well be urged in favour of the common reading, since Bekk., who has here retained that reading, has at ch. 131, where the very same phrase occurs, (namely, ἐκκροῦσαι τοὺς ἐπ. scil. τῷ λόφῳ,) chosen to edit ἐπόντας, though all the MSS. there have ἐπιόντας: an inconsistency in the one case, such as quite to neutralize his authority in the other. Of ἐπεῖναι in this sense, which is extremely rare, (insomuch that no example has been adduced by either Poppo or Dobree,) I have noted the occurrence in a passage of Herodot. viii. 118, ἐπὶ τοῦ καταστρώματος ἐπεόντων συχνῶν Περσέων, 'a multitude of Persians who occupied the deck;' for, that such is καὶ τὴν πλείονα κύκλωσιν σφῶν αὐτόσε προσμῖξαι. 2. καὶ οἱ μέν, προσπεσόντες, ἐκράτησάν τε τῶν ἐπὶ τοῦ λόφου, καὶ ἡ πλείων ἤδη στρατιὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων ῥᾷον πρὸς αὐτὸν ἐπορεύοντο· οἱ γὰρ βάρβαροι καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν, τῆς τροπῆς αὐτοῖς ἐνταῦθα γενομένης σφῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ μετεώρου, καὶ ἐς τὸ πλεῖον οὐκέτ' ἐπηκολούθουν, νομίζοντες καὶ ἐν μεθορίοις εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἤδη, καὶ διαπεφευγέναι. 3. Βρασίδας δὲ ὡς ἀντελάβετο τῶν μετεώρων, κατὰ ἀσφάλειαν μᾶλλον ἰὼν, αὐθημερὸν ἀφικνεῖται ἐς Ἄρνισσαν πρῶτον τῆς Περδίκκου ἀρχῆς. 4. καὶ αὐτοὶ ὀργιζόμενοι οἱ στρατιῶται τῇ προαναχωρήσει τῶν Μακεδόνων, ὅσοις ἐνέτυχον κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν ζεύγεσιν αὐτῶν βοεικοῖς, ἢ εἴ τινι σκεύει ἐκπεπτωκότι, (οἷα ἐν νυκτερινῇ καὶ φοβερᾷ ἀναχωρήσει εἰκὸς ἦν ξυμβῆναι,) τὰ μὲν ὑπολύοντες κατέκοπτον, τῶν δὲ οἰκείωσιν ἐποιοῦντο. 5. ἀπὸ τούτου τε πρῶτον Περδίκκας Βρασίδαν τε πολέμιον ἐνόμισε, καὶ ἐς τὸ λοιπὸν Πελοποννησίων τῇ μὲν γνώμῃ δι' Ἀθηναίους οὐ ξύνηθες μῖσος εἶχε, τῶν δὲ ἀναγκαίων ξυμφόρων διαναστὰς, ἔπρασσεν ὅτῳ τρόπῳ τάχιστα τοῖς μὲν ξυμβήσεται, τῶν δὲ ἀπαλλάξεται.

the sense there (though it has not been perceived by the translators) is certain. Compare a passage of our author supra i. 49, 1, πολλοὺς ὁπλίτας ἔχοντες—ἐπὶ τῶν καταστρωμάτων.

πρὶν τὴν πλείονα κύκλωσιν σφῶν αὐτόσε προσμῖξαι] i. e. as the Schol. and Kistem. explain, πρὶν τοὺς πλείους τῶν κυκλοῦν τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους μελλόντων παρεῖναι, for the σφῶν must, as Kistem. shows, be referred to the Lacedæmonians. The movements in this affair are, by Arnold, partly well stated, and partly misconceived. That the pass was a gorge between two high and steep hills, is very true, and had been before pointed out by Mitford. But the object of the barbarians in lining the hills on both sides, was not merely to effect, together with the closing upon his rear, the surrounding of him: for, in that case, the other extremity of the gorge ought to have been secured. It may rather be supposed, that they meant to make an united attack on the Lacedæmonians while passing through the gorge, both by launching darts at them and missiles of every kind, sticks or stones, and even by hurling down rocks;—a mode by which the mountaineers of Switzerland and the Tyrol have often annihilated powerful armies. Yet, after Brasidas had, by this well-contrived manœuvre, dislodged the enemy from, and seized one of the two hills, their intentions were quite frustrated.

3. Ἄρνισσαν] On the position of this town, and also of the pass, called at iv. 68, ἡ ἐσβολὴ τῆς Λύγκου, see Col. Leake's North. Gr. iv. 13, seq.

4. αὐτοί] Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, take the word to bear the sense 'sponte, non jussi a Brasida.' But so little likely were it that a remarkably moderate and discreet general would himself order such an outrage on his allies, that it is absurd to even glance at it hypothetically; not to mention that the very uniting of words so far asunder, as αὐτοὶ and κατέκοπτον, would involve an intolerable harshness. The learned editors above mentioned would certainly not have broached what yields a sense so harsh and jejune, had they not mistaken the construction, which is, καὶ οἱ στρατιῶται αὐτοὶ ὀργιζόμενοι τῷ πρ. 'And the soldiers themselves, [as well as their general, Brasidas,] irritated by the retreat of the Macedonians before them.' The same use of αὐτοὶ occurs at v. 22, 1.

ζεύγεσι — βοεικοῖς] 'teams of draught oxen.' The expression occurs also in Xen. Anab. vii. 5, 1; and, as appears from Etym. Mag., was not confined to two, but included more cattle. Σκεύει here denotes, according to its original sense, any 'article for use,' whether of furniture or of dress. See my Lex. Nov. Test. in voc.

5. ἐς τὸ λοιπὸν—εἶχε] Render, 'and henceforward he conceived a hatred to the Peloponnesians, which, by reason of the dislike he bore the Athenians, was not congenial to his mind:' for here τῇ γνώμῃ is to be joined with οὐ ξύνηθες. We may suppose, too, that there is here an allusion to his hatred to the Athenians being such as he habitually entertained, and such as had accordingly become inveterate.

Of the words following, τῶν δὲ ἀναγκαίων ξυμφόρων διαναστὰς, the sense

CXXIX. Βρασίδας δὲ, ἀναχωρήσας ἐκ Μακεδονίας ἐς Τορώνην, καταλαμβάνει Ἀθηναίους Μένδην ἤδη ἔχοντας, καὶ αὐτοῦ ἡσυχάζων, ἐς μὲν τὴν Παλλήνην ἀδύνατος ἤδη ἐνόμιζεν εἶναι διαβὰς τιμωρεῖν, τὴν δὲ Τορώνην ἐν φυλακῇ εἶχεν. 2. ὑπὸ γὰρ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον τοῖς ἐν τῇ Λύγκῳ ἐξέπλευσαν ἐπί τε τὴν Μένδην καὶ τὴν Σκιώνην οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ὥσπερ παρεσκευάζοντο, ναυσὶ μὲν πεντήκοντα, ὧν ἦσαν δέκα Χῖαι, ὁπλίταις δὲ χιλίοις ἑαυτῶν, καὶ τοξόταις ἑξακοσίοις, καὶ Θρᾳξὶ μισθωτοῖς χιλίοις, καὶ ἄλλοις τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμμάχων πελτασταῖς· ἐστρατήγει δὲ Νικίας ὁ Νικηράτου, καὶ Νικόστρατος ὁ Διϊτρέφους. 3. ἄραντες δὲ ἐκ Ποτιδαίας ταῖς ναυσὶ, καὶ σχόντες κατὰ τὸ Ποσειδώνιον, ἐχώρουν ἐς τοὺς Μενδαίους. οἱ δὲ, αὐτοί τε καὶ Σκιωναίων τριακόσιοι βεβοηθηκότες, Πελοποννησίων τε οἱ ἐπίκουροι, ξύμπαντες δὲ ἑπτακόσιοι ὁπλῖται, καὶ Πολυδαμίδας ὁ ἄρχων αὐτῶν, ἔτυχον ἐξεστρατοπεδευμένοι ἔξω τῆς πόλεως ἐπὶ λόφου καρτεροῦ. 4. καὶ αὐτοῖς Νικίας μὲν, Μεθωναίους τε ἔχων εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν ψιλοὺς, καὶ λογάδας τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὁπλιτῶν ἑξήκοντα, καὶ τοὺς τοξότας ἅπαντας, κατὰ ἀτραπόν τινα τοῦ λόφου πειρώμενος προσβῆναι, καὶ τραυματιζόμενος ὑπ' αὐτῶν, οὐκ seems best taken, as it is by Reiske, Goeller, and Poppo, to be, 'departing from his natural interests, however necessary.' Yet surely the mere idea of departure were here too weak. The one here intended would rather seem to be, 'starting away, or receding from, waving, his necessary interest.' The same metaphor is found in Ps. lxxviii. 58, (Prayer-Book Vers.) 'fall away, starting aside, (i. e. receding from their covenant engagements,) like a broken (rather warped) bow,' which deceives the archer: the genit. here being like that noticed in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 354, 8, as used with ὑπανίστασθαί τινος, 'to retire from a place.'

CH. CXXIX. 2. τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμμάχων] 'of the allies of that part of the country,' namely, of maritime Thrace: compare iii. 7, and Aristoph. Eq. 321.

3. κατὰ τὸ Ποσειδώνιον] I agree with Dobree, that we are not by this to understand the promontory of Posidium, (noticed in Livy, xliv. 11, and elsewhere,) but a temple of Neptune, which stood upon it. Thus the promontory, it would seem, took its name from the temple, it being regarded as sacred to the God. Dobree is right in fixing this temple near Mende, which itself has been shown by Col. Leake to have been situated near Cape Posidium on the south-west side. The temple was, I imagine, situated on a slight projection, somewhat less than two miles from the cape; and certainly between that and Sane Mende itself was, as we learn from Pausanias, on rising ground, (which terminates in a lofty steep hill, on which the Mendæans, Scionæans, and Peloponnesians took post on this occasion,) and was probably not much more than a mile from the sea on either side of the cape, and had probably two ports, with small towns attached. The Hellenic remains which Col. Leake observed on the shore near Cape Posidhi, and to the east of it, are probably those of the port which fronted Scione. Those he speaks of on the heights (by which he means, I apprehend, the high rising ground) above are those of Mende, or Cassandra, which, on its decay, succeeded to it; and was afterwards itself removed to the corner of the hill, and is now called Nea Cass.

4. κατὰ ἀτραπόν τινα τοῦ λόφου] 'by a certain path of the hill,' probably one out of sight, on the rear of the enemy, (as in the affair at Sphacteria,) and therefore supposed to be unguarded; which turned out to be erroneous.

τραυματιζόμενος] The Scholiast explains this by βαλλόμενος: a gloss with reason ἠδυνήθη βιάσασθαι· Νικόστρατος δὲ, ἄλλῃ ἐφόδῳ ἐκ πλείονος παντὶ τῷ ἄλλῳ στρατοπέδῳ ἐπιὼν τῷ λόφῳ, ὄντι δυσπροσβάτῳ, καὶ πάνυ ἐθορυβήθη, καὶ ἐς ὀλίγον ἀφίκετο πᾶν τὸ στράτευμα τῶν Ἀθηναίων νικηθῆναι. 5. καὶ ταύτῃ μὲν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, ὡς οὐκ ἐνέδοσαν οἱ Μενδαῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀναχωρήσαντες ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο, καὶ οἱ Μενδαῖοι, νυκτὸς ἐπελθούσης, ἐς τὴν πόλιν ἀπῆλθον.

CXXX. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι, περιπλεύσαντες ἐς τὸ πρὸς Σκιώνης, τό τε προάστειον εἷλον, καὶ τὴν ἡμέραν ἅπασαν ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν, οὐδενὸς ἐπεξιόντος· ἦν γάρ τι καὶ στασιασμοῦ ἐν τῇ πόλει· οἱ δὲ τριακόσιοι τῶν Σκιωναίων τῆς ἐπιούσης νυκτὸς ἀπεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἶκου. 2. καὶ τῇ ἐπιγιγνομένῃ ἡμέρᾳ Νικίας μὲν τῷ ἡμίσει τοῦ στρατοῦ προϊὼν ἅμα ἐς τὰ μεθόρια, τῶν Σκιωναίων τὴν rejected by Poppo. Yet though that interpretation be manifestly false, the common one is not certainly true; for Nicias's being wounded (of which we hear nothing afterwards) need not have hindered his forces from making their way. Hence I am inclined to think that τραυμ. is here to be taken in a figurative sense, like sauciatus in Latin, and shattered in English, as said of troops that are in an attack routed with loss. So Glover, Athen. xviii. 'rout and carnage sweep That scatter'd wing before th' Oïlean swords.' As to the somewhat magisterial dictum of Poppo, 'τραυματίζειν de hominibus positum semper τιτρώσκειν significat,' such positive assertions are more easily pronounced than maintained. Considering that τραῦμα frequently bears the sense a defeat, strange were it that τραυματίζειν should never have been used in the sense to defeat. That the word was sometimes so used, may justly be concluded from such passages as Hom. Il. xii. 65, ἔνθ' οὔπως ἐστὶ καταβήμεναι, οὐδὲ μάχεσθαι Ἱππεῦσι· στεῖνος γάρ, ὄθι τρώσεσθαι δἰω, i. e., as Heyne explains, 'angustia loci, in quâ vereor ne turba impedita cladem acceptura sit.' And so the Schol. B. ἐλαττώσεσθαι· Ἴωνες γὰρ τὰς τροπὰς τρώματα καλοῦσι.

ἐφόδῳ] aditu, 'approach,' as in Hdian. v. 5, 5, οὕτω γὰρ ᾤετο διαφόροις ἐφόδοις ἀφυλάκτως αὐτοῖς ἐπιπλεύσεσθαι.

ἐκ πλείονος] scil. διαστήματος, 'further about.' Πάνυ ἐθορυβήθη, 'was even thrown into utter disorder,' namely, by the ranks being broken through the vehemence of the repulse. The ἐς before ὀλίγον stands, as often, for παρ'.

CH. CXXX. 1. τὸ πρὸς Σκιώνης] 'that [part] of Mende which was situated between Cape Posidium and Scione. By the προάστειον is, I apprehend, to be understood the little town on the port, which was a suburb to Mende, (as Leith is to Edinburgh,) and was taken because it was doubtless unwalled. Στασιασμοῦ, 'civil dissension.'

2. ἅμα] Poppo confesses that he knows not what to do with this useless particle. Yet useless though it would seem, it is not on that account to be cancelled. The MSS. all attest its existence; and surely so plain a word could scarcely have been corrupted in all of them. Hence it would seem, that the error is not in the word itself, but in its position. One good MS. at least has ἅμα προϊὼν, which I believe our author wrote. Thus ἅμα will connect with τῷ ἡμίσει τοῦ στρατοῦ, as Dukas, I find, takes it. Poppo, indeed, objects that thus the sense arising is languid. Yet this will by no means be the case if we suppose ἅμα to signify together with, as implying that those that go with him follow his guidance, are under his command. Compare Polyb. x. 18, 1, Μάγωνα καὶ τοὺς ἅμ' αὐτῷ Καρχηδονίους. This idiom (probably then confined to the language of common life) may be traced up to, and its principle accounted for from, Homer, who not unfrequently thus uses ἅμα with a dative of person, denoting that the persons going with any one are understood to be under his command: of which one example must suffice—Odyss. xi. 370, Εἴ τινας ἀντιθέων ἑτάρων ἴδες, οἵ τοι ἅμ' αὐτῷ (read αὐτῷ, standing for σεαυτῷ. See Pors. on Xen. Anab. p. 541) Ἴλιον εἰς ἅμ' ἕποντο, where the repetition, somewhat remarkable, may be accounted for from the principle that there is here a blending of two modes of expression, 'to go with' any one, and 'to follow with' him, γῆν ἐδῄου, Νικόστρατος δὲ τοῖς λοιποῖς κατὰ τὰς ἄνω πύλας, ᾗ ἐπὶ Ποτιδαίας ἔρχονται, προσεκάθητο τῇ πόλει. 3. ὁ δὲ Πολυδαμίδας, (ἔτυχε γὰρ ταύτῃ τοῖς Μενδαίοις καὶ ἐπικούροις ἐντὸς τοῦ τείχους τὰ ὅπλα κείμενα,) διατάσσει τε ὡς ἐς μάχην, καὶ παρῄνει τοῖς Μενδαίοις ἐπεξιέναι. 4. καί τινος αὐτῷ τῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ δήμου ἀντειπόντος κατὰ τὸ στασιωτικὸν, ὅτι 'οὐκ ἐπέξεισιν, οὐδὲ δέοιτο πολεμεῖν,' καὶ, ὡς ἀντεῖπεν, ἐπισπασθέντος τῇ χειρὶ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ καὶ θορυβηθέντος, ὁ δῆμος εὐθὺς ἀναλαβὼν τὰ ὅπλα, περιοργὴς ἐχώρει

i. e. to be in his suite. Such is not unfrequently the sense of ἅμα ἕπεσθαι in Homer.

τὰς ἄνω πύλας] So called, I imagine, from their being on a high situation as compared with the rest; for the whole town was, as I have said, situated on rising ground.

3. τὰ ὅπλα κείμενα] In my Translation and smaller edition I explained ὅπλα to mean statio militaris; in which sense the term occurs also at i. 111. iii. 1. Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 4. By Poppo and Arnold, however, it is taken here, as at viii. 69. Xen. Anab. ii. 2, 20. iii. 1, 3, to denote the place where the arms were piled: according to which latter view, κεῖσθαι will be, as it is regarded by Poppo, equivalent to τεθεῖσθαι. Yet so to take the word involves a certain harshness; and κεῖσθαι is a term adapted rather to suggest the idea of reposita, 'laid up for use,' as it is explained by Kistemacher. Unless the sense of κεῖσθαι be tortured, it cannot be understood to denote an open space where the arms were piled and parade held. Nor, on the other hand, does it seem to have meant castra, but rather something between one and the other, namely, what the French call a place d'armes, which includes both an open space for a parade and an open building where the arms are placed ready for immediate use, and which, as a guard is always mounted ready for use, may also be called a guard-house.

4. κατὰ τὸ στασιωτικὸν] 'in a factious or party spirit;' being, it appears, himself a democrat. Ἀντεῖπεν: meaning, (by a signif. prægnans, as in a similar passage supra i. 69.) 'declaring in contradiction to this requisition, that they will not go forth.' The words following, οὐδὲ δέοιτο πολεμεῖν, are by Arnold supposed to mean, 'nor did the city want to go to war:' a version which he supports with much ingenuity. But such is the harshness thereby incurred in this change of person, that I prefer to refer these words, as the former, to the same subject as οὐκ ἐπέξεισιν, namely, all the Mendæans of the democratical party; the people at large, according to the sense assigned by Poppo, 'non oportere pugnare, non opus esse bello.'

ἐπισπασθέντος] 'being seized hold of;' the full sense of ἐπισπάσασθαι being 'to lay hold of in order to drag to one, and haul away.' So Suidas, on the expression ἐπισπασάμενος τῆς κομῆς τούτου, explains by ἐφελκύσας. And so Lucian ap. Steph. Thes. Ἕλκει — πάνυ βιαίως ἐπισπώμενος. Of θορυβηθέντος the sense has been variously explained. By Portus it is rendered 'turbatus;' by Hobbes, 'molested.' In my Translation I have rendered it 'shaken;' a version parallel to that of Levêque, 'concusso:' but, as Poppo observes, 'proof is wanting that the word ever bore that sense.' Accordingly, I now prefer to render (employing a very old term in our language, though now confined to the phraseology of common life,) 'being hustled,' i. e. pushed and shoved off by those near; for the word 'to hustle,' (which is derived from the Dutch 'hutselen,' 'to shake together') means 'to shake persons together in confusion,' by pushing or crowding upon them; which seems to be the very sense intended to be expressed by θορυβηθέντος here, which is very well adapted to convey this meaning, since θόρυβος (whatever be its derivation) I believe to have primarily signified a mixing of things or persons together, or the things or persons so mixed. Whence the verb θορυβεῖσθαι came to have the sense 'to be hustled or thronged upon;' which, in the present instance, was done by those of the aristocratical party.

For vulg. περὶ ὀργῆς, I have, with Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, edited περιοργὴς, for which, besides the three MSS. adduced by the above editors, I am enabled to subjoin the evidence of the Cod. Cantab.; and to the authorities cited by Valla and Photius and others, supplied by Suidas and Dio Cass. 199, 47. 758, 39. Niceph. Hist. l. ii., passages which (evi-ἐπί τε Πελοποννησίους καὶ τοὺς τὰ ἐναντία σφίσι μετ' αὐτῶν πράξαντας. 5. καὶ προσπεσόντες τρέπουσιν, ἅμα μὲν μάχῃ αἰφνιδίῳ, ἅμα δὲ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τῶν πυλῶν ἀνοιγομένων φοβηθέντων· ὡρήθησαν γὰρ ἀπὸ προειρημένου τινὸς αὐτοῖς τὴν ἐπιχείρησιν γενέσθαι. 6. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐς τὴν ἀκρόπολιν,—ὅσοι μὴ αὐτίκα διεφθάρησαν,—κατέφυγον, ἥπερ καὶ τὸ πρότερον αὐτοὶ εἶχον· οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, (ἤδη γὰρ καὶ ὁ Νικίας, ἐπαναστρέψας, πρὸς τῇ πόλει ἦν,) ἐσπεσόντες ἐς τὴν Μένδην πόλιν, ἅτε οὐκ ἀπὸ ξυμβάσεως ἀνοιχθεῖσαν, ἀπάσῃ τῇ στρατιᾷ, ὡς κατὰ κράτος ἑλόντες διήρπασαν· καὶ μόλις οἱ στρατηγοὶ κατέσχον ὥστε μὴ καὶ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους διαφθείρεσθαι. 7. καὶ τοὺς μὲν Μενδαίους μετὰ ταῦτα πολιτεύειν ἐκέλευον ὥσπερ εἰώθεσαν, αὐτοὺς κρίναντας ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς, εἴ τινας ἡγοῦνται αἰτίους εἶναι τῆς ἀποστάσεως· τοὺς δ' ἐν τῇ ἀκροπόλει ἀπετείχισαν ἑκατέρωθεν τείχει ἐς θάλασσαν, καὶ φυλακὴν ‡ ἐπεκαθίσαντο. ἐπειδὴ δὲ τὰ περὶ τὴν Μένδην κατέσχον, ἐπὶ τὴν Σκιώνην ἐχώρουν. CXXXI. Οἱ δὲ, ἀντεπεξελθόντες, αὐτοὶ καὶ Πελοποννήσιοι, ἱδρύθησαν ἐπὶ λόφου καρτεροῦ πρὸ τῆς πόλεως, ὃν dently written with a view to the present) show that the authors read here περιοργής.

5. φοβηθέντων] supply αὐτῶν. Ἀπὸ προειρημένου τινὸς, 'from some preconcerted [plan].'

6. ἐπαναστρέψας] i. e. 'having returned from his devastation of the Scionæan territory, to the siege of Mende.' Πρὸς τῇ πόλει, 'close upon the city.'

7. ἐπεκαθίσαντο] Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, edit ἐπικαθίσταντο. But I have chosen, with Haack and Bekk., to retain the common reading: for had ἐπικαθίσταντο been originally written, one cannot imagine how it should have been altered to so uncommon a form as ἐπεκαθίσαντο: whereas the contrary would be by no means improbable. Thus, for instance, in a passage of Polyb. xii. 16, 10, we have καθιστάντων in the common text; while the true reading, as edited by Schweigh., is undoubtedly that of some of the best MSS. καθισάντων. As to what Poppo affirms, that we never read καθίζω φυλακὴν, but perpetually καθίστημι,—that, in a writer like Thucydides, only serves to increase our suspicion of the reading which Poppo has introduced, especially as it is not found in any one MS.; for, as to two of the worst having ἐπεκαθίσαντο, that, as is plain from the augment, was a mere error of the scribes. Again; as to Poppo's grammatical reason, that καθίζομαι has always a reflexive force, and that its aorist is καθεζόμην or ἐκαθεζόμην, not ἐκαθισάμην—even that may admit of some question. But, at any rate, why may we not read ἐπικαθείσαντο? For the correctness of that form is unquestionable; though, from its comparative unfrequency, it has, in various instances, been tampered with. Thus, in a passage of Eurip. Hippol. 31, the corrupt reading καθίσατο is found in most of the MSS. and the common text; for which that found in the best MSS., καθείσατο, has been restored by Musgrave and Markland, as indeed the metre demands. In Eurip. Hel. 1534, ὁ δὲ πλάτην καθίστατο is retained even in Matthiæ's edition; yet it was merely a conjectural emendation of Barnes for καθίσατο, which is found in the early editions, and probably had place in most of the MSS. He ought rather, however, to have edited καθείσατο, which is mentioned, though doubtingly, by Musgrave. But to revert to Poppo's argument, that καθίζω φυλακὴν is no where found—not to say that such were too bold an assertion even for a Porson—in fact, it does occur (or what amounts to the same thing) in a passage of Herodot. i. 89, 4, κάτισον τῶν δορυφόρων ἐπὶ πάσῃσι τῇσι πύλῃσι φυλάκους. And so καθίζειν στρατιὰν in Polyb. ix. 26, 4, and ix. 3, 7; and καθιζειν ἐνέδραν in Plutarch i. 107, E. 1036, E. For in the last two passages ought to be read καθίσαντες, instead of καθιστάντες, inadvertently retained in the text.

Ch. CXXXI. 1. ἐπὶ λόφου καρτεροῦ πρὸ τῆς πόλεως] This hill was doubtless εἰ μὴ ἔλοιεν οἱ ἐναντίοι, οὐκ ἐγίγνετο σφῶν περιτείχισις. 2. προσβαλόντες δ' αὐτῷ κατὰ κράτος οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ μάχῃ ἐκκρούσαντες τοὺς ἐπόντας, ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντό τε, καὶ ἐς τὸν περιτειχισμὸν, τροπαῖον στήσαντες, παρεσκευάζοντο. 3. καὶ αὐτῶν οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον ἤδη ἐν ἔργῳ ὄντων, οἱ ἐκ τῆς ἀκροπόλεως ἐν τῇ Μένδῃ πολιορκούμενοι ἐπίκουροι, βιασάμενοι παρὰ θάλασσαν τὴν φυλακὴν, νυκτὸς ἀφικνοῦνται, καὶ διαφυγόντες οἱ πλεῖστοι τὸ ἐπὶ τῇ Σκιώνῃ στρατόπεδον, ἐσῆλθον ἐς αὐτήν.

CXXXII. Περιτειχιζομένης δὲ τῆς Σκιώνης, Περδίκκας, τοῖς τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγοῖς ἐπικηρυκευσάμενος, ὁμολογίαν ποιεῖται πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους διὰ τὴν τοῦ Βρασίδου ἔχθραν περὶ τῆς ἐκ τῆς Λύγκου ἀναχωρήσεως, εὐθὺς τότε ἀρξάμενος πράσσειν. 2. καὶ—ἐτύγχανε γὰρ τότε Ἰσχαγόρας ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος στρατιὰν μέλλων πεζῇ πορεύσειν ὡς Βρασίδαν—ὁ δὲ Πέρδικκας, ἅμα μὲν κελεύοντος τοῦ Νικίου, ἐπειδὴ ξυνεβεβήκει, ἔνδηλόν τι ποιεῖν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις βεβαιότητος πέρι, ἅμα δ' αὐτὸς οὐκέτι βουλόμενος Πελοποννησίους ἐς τὴν αὐτοῦ ἀφικνεῖσθαι, παρασκευάσας τοὺς ἐν Θεσσαλίᾳ ξένους, χρώμενος ἀεὶ τοῖς πρώτοις, διεκώλυσε τὸ στράτευμα καὶ τὴν παρασκευὴν, ὥστε μηδὲ πειρᾶσθαι Θεσσαλῶν. 3. Ἰσχαγόρας μέντοι καὶ Ἀμεινίας καὶ Ἀριστεὺς αὐτοί τε ὡς Βρασίδαν ἀφίκοντο, ἐπιδεῖν πεμψάντων Λακεδαιμονίων τὰ πράγματα, καὶ τῶν ἠβώντων αὐτῶν παρανόμως ἄνδρας ἐξῆγον ἐκ Σπάρτης, ὥστε τῶν πόλεων ἄρχοντας an offset from the ridge which runs down the middle of Pallene, from Potidæa to Cape Canastræum.

ὃν εἰ μὴ—περιτείχισις] 'unless they should take this, a circumvallation of them (i. e. the enemy) was not possible.' The construction here, which is perplexed and accordingly disputed, is by Poppo best regarded as a negligence of diction, by which one form of expression runs into another. 'Proprie enim (says Poppo) Thucydides in verbis ὃν εἰ—ἕλοιεν ita incepit, ut si hæc e mente Scionæorum dicturus οὐ γίγνεσθαι ἂν σφῶν περιτείχισιν (ἐνόμιζον) perrecturus esset; sed hanc sententiam miscuit cum altera ὃν εἰ μὴ ᾖρουν οἱ ἐναντίοι, οὐκ ἐγίγνετο σφῶν περιτείχισις.' With respect to the thing itself, it cannot be quite understood without a knowledge of the exact site of Scione, which is by no means clear. Col. Leake (on what grounds he does not say) fixes it two miles inland, at the present village of Celendrino. But this is forbidden by the words towards the end of the chapter, βιασάμενοι παρὰ θάλασσαν. Whence it is plain that Scione was situated near the sea,—probably where the present village of Posidhi is laid down in Col. Leake's map.

2. For vulg. ἐπιόντας, I have, with Bekk., Poppo, and Goeller, edited ἐπόντας. Still, though the former is supposed to be the reading of all the MSS., yet the latter, on careful collation, I find to have formerly had place in the Cod. Clarend.

Ch. CXXXII. 1. εὐθὺς τότε ἀρξάμενος πράσσειν] 'having then first begun to practise (i. e. hold correspondence with them).'

2. καὶ—ἐτύγχανε Βρασίδαν] I have followed Poppo in affixing here the lines denoting a hypoparenthesis; by which the sense is not a little cleared. Strange is it that Dobree should have stumbled at the δὲ, and wished it away; for, as Poppo long ago showed, of the use of δὲ in the apodosis after a parenthesis, an example occurs at i. 11. viii. 29, and elsewhere. Βεβαιότητος πέρι, 'for security's sake,' as a pledge of his intentions. Παρασκευάσας, 'having brought them to that mind.'

3. παρανόμως] i. e. contrary to the usages of Sparta. Had it really been illegal, it could not have been in a country καθιστάναι, καὶ μὴ τοῖς ἐντυχοῦσιν ἐπιτρέπειν. καὶ Κλεαρίδαν μὲν τὸν Κλεωνύμου καθίστησιν ἐν Ἀμφιπόλει, Πασιτελίδαν δὲ τὸν Ἡγησάνδρου ἐν Τορώνῃ.

CXXXIII. Ἐν δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει Θηβαῖοι Θεσπιέων τεῖχος περιεῖλον, ἐπικαλέσαντες Ἀττικισμὸν, βουλόμενοι μὲν καὶ ἀεὶ, παρεστηκὸς δὲ ῥᾷον ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἐν τῇ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους μάχῃ ὅ τι ἦν αὐτῶν ἄνθος ἀπολώλει. 2. καὶ ὁ νεὼς τῆς Ἥρας τοῦ αὐτοῦ θέρους ἐν Ἄργει κατεκαύθη, Χρυσίδος τῆς ἱερείας λύχνον τινὰ θείσης ἡμμένον πρὸς τὰ στέμματα, καὶ ἐπικαταδαρθούσης, ὥστε ἔλαθεν ἀφθέντα πάντα καὶ καταφλεχθέντα. 3. καὶ ἡ Χρυσὶς μὲν εὐθὺς τῆς νυκτὸς, δείσασα τοὺς Ἀργείους, ἐς Φλιοῦντα φεύγει· οἱ δὲ ἄλλην ἱέρειαν, ἐκ τοῦ νόμου τοῦ προκειμένου, κατεστήσαντο Φαεινίδα ὄνομα. ἔτη δὲ Χρυσὶς τοῦ πολέμου τοῦδε ἐπέλαβεν ὀκτὼ καὶ ἕνατον ἐκ μέσου, ὅτε ἐπεφεύγει. 4. καὶ ἡ Σκιώνη τοῦ θέρους ἤδη τελευτῶντος περιετετείχιστό τε παντελῶς, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐπ' αὐτῇ φυλακὴν καταλιπόντες ἀνεχώρησαν τῷ ἄλλῳ στρατῷ.

CXXXIV. Ἐν δὲ τῷ ἐπιόντι χειμῶνι τὰ μὲν Ἀθηναίων καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων ἡσύχαζε διὰ τὴν ἐκεχειρίαν, Μαντινῆς δὲ καὶ Τεγεᾶται καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἑκατέρων ξυνέβαλον ἐν Λαοδικίῳ τῆς Ὀρεσθίδος, καὶ νίκη ἀμφιδήριτος ἐγένετο· κέρας γὰρ ἑκάτεροι τρέψαντες τὸ καθ' αὑτοὺς, τροπαιά τε ἀμφότεροι ἔστησαν, καὶ σκῦλα ἐς Δελφοὺς ἀπέπεμψαν. διαφθαρέντων μέντοι πολλῶν ἑκατέροις, καὶ ἀγχωμάλου τῆς μάχης γενομένης, καὶ ἀφελομένης νυκτὸς τὸ ἔργον, οἱ Τεγεᾶται μὲν ἐπηυλίσαντό τε, καὶ εὐθὺς ἔστησαν τροπαῖον, Μαντινῆς δὲ ἀπεχώρησάν τε ἐς Βουκολίωνα, καὶ ὕστερον ἀντέστησαν.

CXXXV. Ἀπεπείρασε δὲ τοῦ αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος καὶ ὁ Βρασίδας τελευτῶντος, καὶ πρὸς ἔαρ ἤδη, Ποτιδαίας. προσελθὼν γὰρ νυκτὸς, καὶ κλίμακα προσθεὶς, μέχρι μὲν τούτου ἔλαθε· (τοῦ γὰρ κώδωνος like Sparta, where the laws were always held supreme. Arnold regards this as a great and most destructive innovation, leading to a change of constitution from aristocracy to oligarchy; and evidently attributes the blame, in this instance, to the Ephors; but we may rather suppose, with Bishop Thirlwall, that the thing was done advisedly, and with a good intent. 'The Ephors (says he) probably perceived, and Brasidas himself may have suggested, that the service was one which required the energy of the prime of life, rather than the tardy prudence of a more advanced age.'

μὴ τοῖς ἐντυχοῦσιν ἐπιτρέπειν] 'not to permit the government to such as chanced to have charge of them,' namely, those to whom it had been committed on the cities first passing over to the Lacedæmonians.

For vulg. Ἐπιτελίδαν, I have, with Arnold, edited Πασιτελίδαν, on the conjecture of Dobree, who shows the necessity for so reading, by the occurrence of the name Πασιτ. thrice in v. 3.

CH. CXXXIII. 1. ὅ τι ἦν αὐτῶν ἄνθος ἀπολώλει] 'the flower of their youth had perished.' So Æschyl. Pers. 257, τὸ Περσῶν δ' ἄνθος οἴχεται πεσόν. Eurip. Here. Fur. 875, ἀπυκείρεται σὸν ἄνθος. Dio Cass. 473, 31, πᾶν ὅ,τι περ ἄνθος αὐτῶν ἔφθειραν. Joseph. 856, 12, ὅ,τι καὶ ἄνθος ἦν ἀπώλετο. Themist. 61, E. καὶ ὅ,τι ἄνθος Ἑλλήνων.

CH. CXXXV. 1. τοῦ γὰρ κώδωνος—ἐγένετο] Render, 'for when the bell had been carried past, the ladder was immediately planted at the vacant space, before he who had delivered it had returned.' In these words there is an allusion to a certain obscure point of classical antiquities, of which we should otherwise have been ignorant,—namely, a mode of keeping up the watchfulness of the sentinels stationed up and down the battlements of a fortress, by a bell being passed from one to another all round the walls, until it came back to the place where it had been delivered by the officer of the watch. The nearest approach to this custom is found in that mentioned by Æneas, Tact. ch. 22, who says, that a truncheon was thus handed round from one sentinel to another, so that if the next sentinel were off his post, the truncheon was to be carried to the officer of the guard, in order to the discovery of the desertion of his post. Yet the two are in some measure distinct; the watch-bell being used only in war, or on extraordinary occasions, in order to test the wakefulness of the sentinels; the truncheon, in times of peace and no danger, (so Æneas says, ἀκινδύνως καὶ εἰρηναίων ὄντων,) to ascertain that the sentinels were at their posts; for they were found at certain times and on certain occasions to desert them. See supra iii. 22, 5. As to the custom of the officer of the guard carrying a bell, and trying therewith the watchfulness of his sentinels,—adverted to by Plut. Arat. 7. the Schol. on Aristoph. Av. 843 & 1160. Hesych. in v. κωδωνοφορῶν, and Etym. Mag. in v. διεκωδώνισεν, —this is of another kind; merely relating to this trial of watchfulness as applied by the officer of the guard himself on any individual he chose, not that of the sentinels one on another all round. The expression here, τὸ διάκενον, is equiv. to τὸ διὰ μέσου κενὸν, or τὸ ἐν μέσῳ κενὸν, as the Schol. on v. 71 explains; and has reference to space, equiv. to the double of that between one sentinel and another, being constantly left vacant, when any sentinel left his post to deliver the bell, after first trying his vigilance, to the next.

παρενεχθέντος, οὕτως ἐς τὸ διάκενον, πρὶν ἐπανελθεῖν τὸν παραδιδόντα αὐτὸν, ἡ πρόσθεσις ἐγένετο·) ἔπειτα μέντοι, εὐθὺς αἰσθομένων, πρὶν προσβῆναι, ἀπήγαγε πάλιν κατὰ τάχος τὴν στρατιὰν καὶ οὐκ ἀνέμεινεν ἡμέραν γενέσθαι. 2. καὶ ὁ χειμὼν ἐτελεύτα, καὶ ἕνατον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα τῷδε ὃν Θουκυδίδης ξυνέγραψεν.

ΘΟΥΚΥΔΙΔΟΥ

ΞΥΓΓΡΑΦΗΣ Ε.

I. ΤΟΥ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους αἱ μεν ἐνιαύσιοι σπονδαὶ διελέλυντο μέχρι Πυθίων· καὶ ἐν τῇ ἐκεχειρίᾳ Ἀθηναῖοι Δηλίους ἀνέστησαν ἐκ Δήλου, ἡγησάμενοι κατὰ παλαιάν τινα αἰτίαν οὐ καθαροὺς ὄντας ἱερῶσθαι, καὶ ἅμα ἐλλιπὲς σφίσιν εἶναι τοῦτο τῆς καθάρσεως, ᾗ πρότερόν μοι δεδήλωται ὡς ἀνελόντες τὰς θήκας τῶν τεθνεώτων ὀρθῶς ἐνόμισαν ποιῆσαι. καὶ οἱ μὲν Δήλιοι Ἀτραμύττιον Φαρνάκου δόντος αὐτοῖς ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ ᾤκησαν, οὕτως ὡς ἕκαστος ὥρμητο.

Ch. I. 1. ἀνέστησαν] A term denoting forcible removal. See note on iv. 54. Ἱερῶσθαι, 'were accounted sacred;' for we are to bear in mind the distinction pointed out by the ancient lexicographers, with reference to this passage,—namely, between ἱεροῦσθαι, 'to be held sacred,' and ἱερᾶσθαι, 'to discharge the priestly office.'

καὶ ἅμα ἐλλιπὲς — ποιῆσαι] Of this awkwardly-worded sentence the meaning appears to be as follows: 'And, moreover, that this expedient was wanting to them for its purification, in addition to that wherein, by digging up the coffins of the dead, (as has been before related,) they thought they effected it rightly.' Poppo remarks, 'Quod Goell. hic et ad viii. 52. Græcos, ubi participium cum verbo finito diversi regiminis conjungatur, eo casu uti, quem participium postulet, doceat, potius sic exprimendum esse, ut nomen, ubi ex duobus verbis diversos casus adsciscentibus pendeat, soli priori accommodari asseveremus, recte disputat Arn. Vid. Matth. Gr. Gr. § 428, 2. Sed ne ea quidem constare lex est. Vide annot. ad vi. 87.' The conjecture of Bened. and Dobree for ᾗ, ἣν, though supported by the authority of the Cod. Clarend., tends to destroy the Thucydidean character that would otherwise here prevail.

Ἀτραμύττιον] So Bekker and Goeller edit, from several MSS., for Ἀτραμύττειον, which is retained by Poppo, though he grants that the other is perhaps preferable. I would add that it is confirmed by Pausan. iv. 27, 5, who has this passage in view; as also by Xen. Anab. vii. 8, 8. The common reading, however, is supported by Hdot. vii. 42, and Polyæn. vii. 26, though the latter uses only one τ; which spelling is confirmed by the coins, which have Ἀδραμύτιον, and by the derivation of the name, which, as we learn from Aristot. ap. Steph. Byz., is from Atramytis, son of Alyattus and brother of Crœsus.

οὕτως ὡς ἕκαστος ὥρμητο] Of these words the sense, strangely mistaken by the commentators, seems to be simply, 'just as each was inclined [to accept of the offer];' for, I apprehend, the words do not (as they have been supposed) refer to ᾤκησαν, but to δόντος, it being meant

II. Κλέων δὲ, Ἀθηναίους πείσας, ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης χωρία ἐξέπλευσε μετὰ τὴν ἐκεχειρίαν, Ἀθηναίων μὲν ὁπλίτας ἔχων διακοσίους καὶ χιλίους καὶ ἱππέας τριακοσίους, τῶν δὲ ξυμμάχων πλείους, ναῦς δὲ τριάκοντα. 2. σχὼν δὲ ἐς Σκιώνην πρῶτον, ἔτι πολιορκουμένην, καὶ προσλαβὼν αὐτόθεν ὁπλίτας τῶν φρουρῶν, κατέπλευσεν ἐς τὸν † Κολοφωνίων λιμένα, τῶν Τορωναίων ἀπέχοντα οὐ πολὺ τῆς πόλεως. 3. ἐκ δ' αὐτοῦ,—αἰσθόμενος ὑπ' αὐτομόλων ὅτι οὔτε Βρασίδας ἐν τῇ Τορώνῃ, οὔτε οἱ ἐνόντες ἀξιόμαχοι εἶεν,—τῇ μὲν στρατιᾷ τῇ πεζῇ ἐχώρει ἐς τὴν πόλιν, ναῦς δὲ περιέπεμψε δέκα ἐς τὸν λιμένα περιπλεῖν. 4. καὶ πρὸς τὸ περιτείχισμα πρῶτον that Pharnaces gave them leave to go and live here, just where any one pleased, and as long as he pleased; or, in other words, that he did not give up the town to them to go there in a body, but merely to live or sojourn there as private refugees. Supposing the words, however, to refer, as they possibly may, to ᾤκησαν, then the sense may be expressed, 'just as each had purposed [to go] there or elsewhere.' Compare iv. 74, ἵνα περ—τὸ πρῶτον ὥρμητο, 'according as the purposes and plans of each might induce him to go and live there, or any where else in preference.'

Ch. II. 2. τὸν Κολοφωνίων λιμένα] For Κολοφωνίων Col. Leake (North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 119.) would read Κωφῶν. I should rather prefer Κωφωνῶν, derived from κωφῶν, (answering to Latin surdaster,) the existence of which word is attested by its derivative ἐθελοκώφων in Ecclesiasticus xix. 26. Or, as the place is now called Κύφων, may we not read Κυφωνῶν, meaning 'persons condemned to wear the crook or clog,' according to the gloss of Hesychius, κυφωνῶν· ὀλεθρίων? Thus the appellation will be parallel to that compared by Arnold, of the Thieves' Harbour (ὁ φωρῶν λιμήν), or rather Pirates' Harbour, near Athens. Torone was situated nearly in the same manner as Mende, (on which see supra iv. 123, note,) namely, so as to have, though inland, a communication with two ports; while Corcyra had a similar communication with three ports.

3. οὔτε—οὔτε] So I have chosen, with Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, to read, instead of οὐδὲ—οὔτε, which, though found in all the MSS., cannot be right; the sense being, that 'neither was Brasidas in Torone, nor were the forces in garrison equal to its defence;' a sense which absolutely requires οὔτε — οὔτε, and cannot admit οὐδὲ—οὔτε. It is observable that the same error by which οὔτε—οὔτε has been mistaken for οὐδὲ—οὔτε, has also crept into all the MSS. in another passage, iii. 42, and been removed by the recent editors.

ἀξιόμαχοι] Equivalent to ἱκανοὶ πρὸς μάχην. Of this absolute use (occurring also at iv. 57, ὡς οὐκ ἐνόμιζον ἀξ. εἶναι) examples are rare, though such are found in Herodot. vii. 236. Appian, ii. 167. 889. Dio Cass. p. 190. 244. 292, but only in the sense 'to be a match for any one,' which properly requires the dative after it, (as v. 62.) or πρὸς and the accus.: whereas here the sense intended is, viribus par esse ad pugnam, 'to be in a condition to fight or resist.' ἐς τὸν λιμένα περιπλεῖν] Since a port cannot well be sailed round, nor were the ships sent for that purpose, but rather to circumnavigate the promontory which separates the two harbours, so as to go from one to the other,—I have thought proper, with Poppo and Goeller, to receive the ἐς, which had been inserted, on conjecture, by Bekker in his second edition, especially as it is strongly confirmed by the words, a little further on, αἱ νῆες—ἐς τὸν λιμένα περιπεμφθεῖσαι. Compare also supra iii. 81, τὰς ναῦς περιπλεῦσαι κελεύσαντες, meaning, 'to coast around the promontory' which separated the port of the Agora from the Hyllaic port. Xen. An. i. 2, 21, τριήρεις περιπλεούσας ἀπὸ Ἰωνίας εἰς Κιλικίαν, and vii. 1, 13, περ. εἰς τὴν ἀκρόπολιν. It is observable that the word ἐς is elsewhere occasionally found omitted by the scribes; as in another passage of Thucydides, viii. 38, διαβεβηκότες ἐς τὴν Χίον, where ἐς, though left out in all the MSS., cannot be dispensed with. So again in Herodot. iv. 118, the reading of all the copies is, ἐπεί τε τάχιστα διέβη τήνδε τὴν ἤπειρον. But, considering the occurrence just before of the words διαβέβηκε ἐς τήνδε τὴν ἤπειρον, I doubt not that the word ἐς has there been lost after η; it being scarcely allowable, with Valla and ἀφικνεῖται, ὃ προσπεριέβαλε τῇ πόλει ὁ Βρασίδας, ἐντὸς βουλόμενος ποιῆσαι τὸ προάστειον, καὶ διελὼν τοῦ παλαιοῦ τείχους, μίαν αὐτὴν ἐποίησε πόλιν. III. Βοηθήσαντες δὲ ἐς αὐτὸ Πασιτελίδας τε ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος ἄρχων καὶ ἡ παροῦσα φυλακή, προσβαλόντων τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἠμύνοντο. καὶ ὡς ἐβιάζοντο, καὶ αἱ νῆες ἅμα περιέπλεον ἐς τὸν λιμένα περιπεμφθεῖσαι, δείσας ὁ Πασιτελίδας μὴ αἵ τε νῆες φθάσωσι λαβοῦσαι ἔρημον τὴν πόλιν, καὶ, τοῦ τειχίσματος ἁλισκομένου, ἐγκαταληφθῇ, ἀπολιπὼν αὐτό, δρόμῳ ἐχώρει ἐς τὴν πόλιν. 2. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι φθάνουσιν, οἵ τε ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν ἐλόντες τὴν Τορώνην, καὶ ὁ πεζὸς ἐπισπόμενος αὐτοβοεὶ κατὰ τὸ διῃρημένον τοῦ παλαιοῦ τείχους ξυνεσπεσών. καὶ τοὺς μὲν ἀπέκτειναν τῶν Πελοποννησίων καὶ Τορωναίων εὐθὺς ἐν χερσὶ, τοὺς δὲ ζῶντας ἔλαβον, καὶ Πασιτελίδαν τὸν ἄρχοντα. 3. Βρασίδας δὲ ἐβοήθει μὲν τῇ Τορώνῃ, αἰσθόμενος δὲ καθ' ὁδὸν ἐαλωκυῖαν, ἀνεχώρησεν, ἀποσχὼν τεσσαράκοντα μάλιστα σταδίους μὴ φθάσαι ἐλθών. 4. ὁ δὲ Κλέων καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τροπαιά τε ἔστησαν δύο, τὸ μὲν κατὰ τὸν λιμένα, τὸ δὲ πρὸς τῷ τειχίσματι, καὶ τῶν Τορωναίων γυναῖκας μὲν καὶ παῖδας ἠνδραπόδισαν, αὐτοὺς δὲ, καὶ Πελοποννησίους, καὶ εἴ τις ἄλλος Χαλκιδέων ἦν, ξύμπαντας ἐς ἑπτακοσίους, ἀπέπεμψαν ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας· καὶ αὐτοῖς τὸ μὲν Πελοποννήσιον ὕστερον ἐν ταῖς γενομέναις σπονδαῖς ἀπῆλθε, τὸ δὲ ἄλλο ἐκομίσθη ὑπ' Ὀλυνθίων, ἀνὴρ ἀντ' ἀνδρὸς λυθείς. 5. εἷλον δὲ καὶ Πάνακτον Ἀθηναίων ἐν μεθορίοις τεῖχος Βοιωτοὶ ὑπὸ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον προδοσίᾳ. 6. καὶ ὁ μὲν Κλέων φυλακὴν καταστησάμενος τῆς Τορώνης, ἅρας περιέπλει τὸν Ἄθων ὡς ἐπὶ τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν.

IV. Φαίαξ δὲ ὁ Ἐρασιστράτου τρίτος αὐτὸς, Ἀθηναίων πεμπόν-

Schweigh., to regard διέβη τὴν as equivalent to διέβη ἐς τήν: for ἐς, when it denotes the terminus ad quem, or the end of action, is too significant to admit of being left understood. In another passage of our author, infra viii. 92, 3, ἀπὸ τῆς Λᾶς αἱ νῆες ἤδη περιπεπλευκυῖαι, καὶ ὁρμισάμεναι ἐς τὴν Ἐπίδαυρον, where the full sense intended is, 'having sailed round from Las to Epidaurus, and taken anchorage there,' all the MSS. have ἐς.

4. ὃ προσπεριέβαλε τῇ πόλει—πόλιν] This περιτείχισμα was a new wall wherewith Brasidas had taken in part of the suburb which extended to the principal port, so as to bring it within the same περίβολος. In order to effect this, he broke down part of the old one in the direction of the suburb, and built to it a new wall, which he carried downwards so as to make it one wall, enclosing one common city. Accordingly the Schol. explains, ᾧ περιέβαλε τὸ πρότερον, καὶ συνῆψε κατὰ τὴν διαίρεσιν τὸ καινὸν πρὸς τὸ παλαιὸν, ὥστε ἓν τὸ πᾶν γενέσθαι.

Ch. III. 2. αὐτοβοεί] Krueger and Goeller connect this with ἑλόντες, supposing a transposition. So great, however, is the harshness thus involved, that it is better, with Haack and Poppo, to construe it with ξυνεσπεσών, by which the sense will be, primo clamore, 'on the first onset,' (see note on ii. 81, 3.) as at viii. 73, χειρωθῆναι—αὐτοβοεί.

3. ἀποσχὼν—ἐλθών] 'Quum stadia—abfuisset, quo minus adventu suo præveniret urbis occupationem.' (Haack and Poppo.) Render, 'so as not to be able to arrive and prevent its capture.'

Ch. IV. The scene now changes to Sicily and Italy, and in this and the next chapter is narrated an embassy of Phæax των, ναυσὶ δύο ἐς Ἰταλίαν καὶ Σικελίαν πρεσβευτὴς ὑπὸ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον ἐξέπλευσε. 2. Λεοντῖνοι γὰρ, ἀπελθόντων Ἀθηναίων ἐκ Σικελίας μετὰ τὴν ξύμβασιν, πολίτας τε ἐπεγράψαντο πολλοὺς, καὶ ὁ δῆμος τὴν γῆν ἐπενόει ἀναδάσασθαι. 3. οἱ δὲ δυνατοὶ, αἰσθόμενοι, Συρακοσίους τε ἐπάγονται, καὶ ἐκβάλλουσι τὸν δῆμον. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐπλανήθησαν ὡς ἕκαστοι· οἱ δὲ δυνατοὶ, ὁμολογήσαντες Συρακοσίοις, καὶ τὴν πόλιν ἐκλιπόντες καὶ ἐρημώσαντες, Συρακούσας ἐπὶ πολιτείᾳ ᾤκησαν. 4. καὶ ὕστερον πάλιν αὐτῶν τινὲς, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἀρέσκεσθαι, ἀπολιπόντες ἐκ τῶν Συρακουσῶν, Φωκέας τε, τῆς πόλεως τι τῆς Λεοντίνων χωρίον καλούμενον καταλαμβάνουσι, καὶ Βρικιννίας, ὃν ἔρυμα ἐν τῇ Λεοντίνῃ. καὶ τῶν τοῦ δήμου τότε ἐκπεσόντων οἱ πολλοὶ ἦλθον ὡς αὐτοὺς, καὶ καταστάντες ἐκ τῶν τειχῶν ἐπολέμουν. 5. ἃ πυνθανόμενοι οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, τὸν Φαίακα πέμπουσιν, εἴ πως, πείσαντες τοὺς σφίσιν ὄντας αὐτόθι ξυμμάχους, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους, ἢν δύνωνται, Σικελιώτας κοινῇ, ὡς Συρακοσίων δύναμιν περιποιουμένων, ἐπιστρατεῦσαι, διασώσειαν τὸν δῆμον τῶν Λεοντίνων. 6. ὁ δὲ Φαίαξ, ἀφικόμενος, τοὺς μὲν Καμαριναίους πείθει καὶ Ἀκραγαντίνους, ἐν δὲ Γέλᾳ ἀντιστάντος αὐτῷ τοῦ πράγματος, οὐκέτι ἐπὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἔρχεται, αἰσθόμενος οὐκ ἂν πείθειν αὐτούς, ἀλλ' ἀναχωρήσας διὰ τῶν Σικελῶν ἐς Κατάνην, καὶ ἅμα ἐν τῇ παρόδῳ καὶ ἐς τὰς Βρικιννίας ἐλθὼν καὶ παραθαρσύνας, ἀπέπλει. V. Ἐν δὲ τῇ παρακομιδῇ τῇ ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν καὶ πάλιν ἀναχωρήσει καὶ ἐν τῇ Ἰταλίᾳ τισὶ πόλεσιν ἐχρημάτισε περὶ φιλίας τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ Λοκρῶν ἐντυγχάνει τοῖς ἐκ Μεσσήνης ἐποίκοις from Athens to those parts, for the purpose of keeping up the interest of Athens, as opposed to that of Syracuse.

2. πολίτας ἐπεγράψαντο—ἀναδάσασθαι] Render, 'they both entered on the list many new citizens, and the people were devising measures to make division of the lands.' The admission of many new citizens would, as Dr. Arnold shows, naturally lead to a redivision of the state lands; and the two things were, he observes, the usual accompaniments of a revolution. The noun ἀναδασμὸς is one frequent on this subject; while the verb ἀναδάζομαι is found only elsewhere in Plut. i. 44 & 85. 800. 1044. The proper signification of ἀναδάσασθαι is, 'to partition out among,' as Dio Cass. 528, 19, and 542, 40; and such seems to be the sense here intended.

3. ἐπὶ πολιτείᾳ] 'on condition of having the rights of citizenship;' as iv. 5. v. 31. vi. 31.

4. διὰ τὸ μὴ ἀρέσκεσθαι] 'because they were dissatisfied.' Of this absolute use of the word I know no other example. One should rather have expected the addition of τῇ καταστάσει, as at i. 68, and in Hdot. ix. 66, οὐκ ἀρεσκόμενος τοῖσι πρήγμασι, 'discontented with things [as they are];' and iii. 34, οὐκ ἀρεσκόμενος τῇ κρίσει, 'dissatisfied with the judgment.'

ἀπολιπόντες ἐκ τῶν Συρακουσῶν] The full sense is, 'departing from and abandoning Syracuse.' Poppo remarks, that both Herodotus and Xenophon use ἀπολείπειν in the sense abire patriâ relictâ. And they refer to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 518, a.

Φωκέας] A certain quarter of the demolished city of Leontini, so called, we may suppose, from some elevated position of great natural strength. Of Bricinnia the situation cannot be fixed: but from what follows, it appears to have been further inland than Phoceæ. The persons in question were joined by the expelled populace, and then both together καταστάντες ἐκ τῶν τειχῶν ἐπολέμουν, taking post there, carried on war (i. e. with the Syracusans) from the strongholds just mentioned.

ἐκπεπτωκόσιν, οἳ μετὰ τὴν τῶν Σικελιωτῶν ὁμολογίαν, στασιασάντων Μεσσηνίων, καὶ ἐπαγαγομένων τῶν ἑτέρων Λοκρούς, ἔποικοι ἐξεπέμφθησαν· καὶ ἐγένετο Μεσσήνη Λοκρῶν τινὰ χρόνον. 2. τούτοις οὖν ὁ Φαίαξ ἐντυχὼν †τοῖς κομιζομένοις οὐκ ἠδίκησεν· ἐγεγένητο γὰρ τοῖς Λοκροῖς πρὸς αὐτὸν ὁμολογία ξυμβάσεως πέρι πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους. 3. μόνοι γὰρ τῶν ξυμμάχων, ὅτε Σικελιῶται ξυνηλλάσσοντο, οὐκ ἐσπείσαντο Ἀθηναίοις· οὐδ' ἂν τότε, εἰ μὴ αὐτοὺς κατεῖχεν ὁ πρὸς Ἰτωνέας καὶ Μελαίους πόλεμος, ὁμόρους τε ὄντας καὶ ἀποίκους. καὶ ὁ μὲν Φαίαξ ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας χρόνῳ ὕστερον ἀφίκετο.

VI. Ὁ δὲ Κλέων ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς Τορώνης τότε περιέπλευσεν ἐπὶ τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν, ὁρμώμενος ἐκ τῆς Ἠιόνος, Σταγείρῳ μὲν προσβάλλει, Ἀνδρίων ἀποικίᾳ, καὶ οὐχ εἷλε, Γαληψὸν δὲ τὴν Θασίων ἀποικίαν λαμβάνει κατὰ κράτος. 2. καὶ πέμψας ὡς Περδίκκαν πρέσβεις, ὅπως παραγένοιτο στρατιᾷ κατὰ τὸ ξυμμαχικόν, καὶ ἐς τὴν Θρᾴκην ἄλλους παρὰ Πολλὴν τῶν Ὀδομάντων βασιλέα, ‡ἄξοντα μισθοῦ Θρᾳκας ὡς πλείστους, αὐτὸς ἡσύχαζε περιμένων

Ch. V. 2. τοῖς] I have here placed an obelus, because I doubt not that the word is corrupt. Considering that the article can have no place here—and yet τοῖς must be supposed to stand for something—I conjecture the true reading to be ὡς κομ., for ὡς ἐκομίζοντο, 'as they were on their passage [thither].'

ἐγεγένητο γὰρ — ὁμολογία ξυμβάσεως πέρι] 'Observa vocabulum ὁμολογία, quod plerumque, ut iv. 54, 132, al. idem est atque ξύμβασις, hic ab eo nomine distingui, ipsam actionem τοῦ ὁμολογεῖν magis quam quod Bloomf. vult, conditiones prævias (Præliminarien) significans. Hæc pax (ξύμβασις) cujus conditiones inter Locros et Phæacem convenerant, etsi, antequam rata esset, populo Athen. erat comprobanda; Phæax tamen ab armis jam recessit.' (Poppo.) In his Appendix the learned commentator adds, that the same words are used by a writer cited by Suidas in Δημήτριος. So sometimes the terms ὁμολογίαι and ξυνθῆκαι are distinguished. See Vales. on Hippocrat.

Ch. VI. 1. ὁρμώμενος ἐκ τῆς Ἠιόνος] i. e. using it as his sally-post or seat of war, and basis of future operations. See note on iii. 31.

2. κατὰ τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν] for κατὰ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, 'according to the conditions of his alliance;' there being here, as Haack says, reference to the ὁμολογία mentioned at iv. 132. On this use of τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν see note at ii. 32.

Πολλὴν] So Bekker and Goeller edit, from three of the best MSS., supported by three others (which have Πολλὴν), instead of vulg. Πόλλην, which is retained, though on insufficient grounds, by Poppo. For vulg. τῶν, eight MSS. have τὸν, which is adopted by Bekker and Goeller; while the former is retained by Poppo, and very properly; for while Ὀδομάντων can scarcely dispense with the article, βασιλέα is better without it, since notoriety cannot be meant to be denoted in the case of a person so little known: whereas the Odomantes were well known, being a tribe famous for being always ready, like the Switzers in modern Europe, to take pay with any power that might choose to employ them. To which an allusion is found in Aristoph. Ach. 144, Ὀδομάντων στρατὸς Τούτοις ἐὰν δραχμὰς δύο τις μισθὸν διδῷ, Καταπελτάσονται τὴν Βοιωτίαν ὅλην: whence we learn the pay they received, and the kind of force they formed, namely, Peltastæ, or middle-armed.

Instead of vulg. ἄξαντα, ἄξοντα has been, though on slender authority from MSS., received by Bekker and Goeller; and very properly; since the first-mentioned form, besides being bad, yields no tolerable sense; whereas ἄξοντα, considered as standing for ὃς ἄξειν ἔμελλε, is perfectly suitable. To the objection urged by Dr. Arnold, that no previous arrangements appear to have been made, it may be replied, that the non-mention of the arrangement will by no means prove its non-existence. Nothing is more frequent ἐν τῇ Ἠιόνι. 3. Βρασίδας δὲ, πυνθανόμενος ταῦτα, ἀντεκάθητο καὶ αὐτὸς ἐπὶ τῷ Κερδυλίῳ· ἔστι δὲ τὸ χωρίον τοῦτο Ἀργιλίων, ἐπὶ μετεώρου πέραν τοῦ ποταμοῦ, οὐ πολὺ ἀπέχον τῆς Ἀμφιπόλεως, καὶ κατεφαίνετο πάντα αὐτόθεν, ὥστε οὐκ ἂν ἔλαθεν αὐτόθεν ὁρμώμενος ὁ Κλέων τῷ στρατῷ· ὅπερ προσεδέχετο ποιήσειν αὐτὸν, ἐπὶ τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν, ὑπεριδόντα σφῶν τὸ πλῆθος, τῇ παρούσῃ στρατιᾷ ἀναβήσεσθαι. 4. ἅμα δὲ καὶ παρεσκευάζετο Θρᾳκάς τε μισθωτοὺς πεντακοσίους καὶ χιλίους, καὶ τοὺς Ἤδωνας πάντας παρακαλῶν, πελταστὰς καὶ ἱππέας· καὶ Μυρκινίων καὶ Χαλκιδέων χιλίους πελταστὰς εἶχε πρὸς τοῖς ἐν Ἀμφιπόλει. 5. τὸ δ' ὁπλιτικὸν ξύμπαν ἠθροίσθη δισχίλιοι μάλιστα, καὶ ἱππῆς Ἕλληνες τριακόσιοι. τούτων Βρασίδας μὲν ἔχων ἐπὶ Κερδυλίῳ ἐκάθητο ἐς πεντακοσίους καὶ χιλίους, οἱ δ' ἄλλοι ἐν Ἀμφιπόλει μετὰ Κλεαρίδου ἐτετάχατο.

VII. Ὁ δὲ Κλέων τέως μὲν ἡσύχαζεν, ἔπειτα ἠναγκάσθη ποιῆσαι ὅπερ ὁ Βρασίδας προσεδέχετο. 2. τῶν γὰρ στρατιωτῶν ἀχθομένων μὲν τῇ ἕδρᾳ, ἀναλογιζομένων δὲ τὴν ἐκείνου ἡγεμονίαν,—πρὸς οἵαν ἐμπειρίαν καὶ τόλμαν μετὰ οἵας ἀνεπιστημοσύνης καὶ μα-in our author than the omission of minute particulars like the present; though these are nevertheless afterwards glanced at, as if they had been previously mentioned.

3. τῷ Κερδυλίῳ] A lofty hill rising by several steps to a top of conical form, and of sufficient force (about half a mile in diameter) to hold the army of Brasidas encamped thereon. It is situated on the right bank of the Strymon, near to its mouth, and the top of the hill is about two miles from Amphipolis, the site of which is, from its far lower elevation, placed entirely under the view of a spectator placed on the top of the Kerdylium. To which purpose our author adds, κατεφαίνετο πάντα αὐτόθεν. See the plan by Col. Leake in the Appendix.

By the first αὐτόθεν understand Kerdylium; by the second, Eion.

ὅπερ προσεδέχετο] On the construction here, see note at iv. 125. Πλῆθος here, as at iv. 10, (where see note,) is used of fewness of numbers.

Ch. VII. 1. τέως ἡσύχαζεν] No reason is there, with Mitford, to blame Cleon for somewhat delaying; since he was continually expecting reinforcements, being induced to put his army in motion without having determined what to do. He was, however, compelled by the factious discontents of his army, to do that which Brasidas was expecting he would do,—namely, make a movement on Amphipolis, as if to carry it by a coup de main.

2. ἀχθομένων τῇ ἕδρᾳ] 'discontented at the delay.' Compare Herodot. ix. 41, περιημέκτεε τῇ ἕδρῃ. In either passage the word ἕδρα stands for καθέδρα, used as elsewhere in our author supra ii. 18, where see note. The word ἡγεμονίαν, a little after, is to be taken in a sarcastic sense, to denote 'want of generalship,' q. d. 'the army reflecting what a fine general they had got.' The words following, πρὸς οἵαν ἐμπειρίαν —γενήσοιτο, are exegetical of τὴν ἐκείνου ἡγεμονίαν preceding. Render, 'with how great ignorance and cowardice it would be exercised against how great skill and courage.' No little elegance is there in this use of οἷος, especially when employed in antithesis, as infra vii. 75, 6, ἀπὸ οἵας λαμπρότητος καὶ αὐχήματος τοῦ πρώτου ἐς οἵαν τελευτὴν καὶ ταπεινότητα ἀφῖκτο, where Duker quotes Casaubon as saying that the formula ἐξ οἵων—ἐς οἷα was one employed by the Greeks to denote the greatest change of fortune. But, in effect, it was also used to denote equal disparity of any kind, in any condition or quality whatsoever. Nor is it confined to the use of the prepositions ἀπὸ or ἐκ and ἐς: it is found with others, or even one preposition, as in Dio Cass. 321, 18, ἐξ οἵων οἷος ἐγένετο. Soph. Ant. 942, οἷα πρὸς οἵων ἀνδρῶν πάσχω. and Œd. R. 1046, συμφορὰς οἵας οἷος ὢν ἐλαύνεται, or even without a preposition, as in Eurip. Alc. 142, οἵας οἷος ὢν ἁμαρτάνεις, and Dio Cass. 1009, 92, οἵους ὄντας ὑμᾶς οἷοι ὄντες (αὐτοὶ) ἠδικήκασι.

λακίας γενήσοιτο, καὶ οἴκοθεν ὡς ἄκοντες αὐτῷ ξυνῆλθον,—αἰσθόμενος τὸν θροῦν, καὶ οὐ βουλόμενος αὐτοὺς διὰ τὸ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ καθημένους βαρύνεσθαι, ἀναλαβὼν ἦγε. 3. καὶ ἐχρήσατο τῷ τρόπῳ, ᾧπερ καὶ ἐς τὴν Πύλον εὐτυχήσας ἐπίστευσέ τι φρονεῖν· ἐς μάχην μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲ ἤλπισέν οἱ ἐπεξιέναι οὐδένα, κατὰ θέαν δὲ μᾶλλον ἔφη ἀναβαίνειν τοῦ χωρίου, καὶ τὴν μείζω παρασκευὴν περιέμενεν, οὐχ ὡς τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ, ἢν ἀναγκάζηται, περισχήσων, ἀλλ' ὡς κύκλῳ περιστὰς βίᾳ αἱρήσων τὴν πόλιν. 4. ἐλθών τε καὶ καθίσας ἐπὶ λόφου καρτεροῦ πρὸ τῆς Ἀμφιπόλεως τὸν στρατὸν, αὐτὸς ἐθεᾶτο τὸ λιμνῶδες τοῦ Στρυμόνος καὶ τὴν θέσιν τῆς πόλεως ἐπὶ ‡ τῇ ‡ Θράκῃ ὡς ἔχοι. ἀπιέναι τε ἐνόμιζεν, ὁπόταν βούληται, ἀμαχεί·

In the words καὶ οἴκοθεν — ξυνῆλθον ('and that they had gone from home unwillingly') there is thrown in another circumstance as serving to increase their discontent: where ὡς is transposed, as elsewhere i. 68. iii. 88. In διὰ τὸ—βαρύνεσθαι there is, as Poppo, Haack, and Goeller are agreed, a sort of commixture of two modes of expression, ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ καθημένους and διὰ τὸ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ καθῆσθαι. Compare iv. 63. In ἀναλαβὼν ἦγε, of which the full sense is, 'he drew them forth and led them forward,' there is a customary term on this subject. See note on iii. 81, 2.

3. καὶ ἐχρήσατο—φρονεῖν] These words are, I think, best understood, as they are by Haack, of the temper and habits of mind of Cleon. And the sense is well expressed by the version of that commentator: 'iis moribus utebatur, quibus quum adversus Pylum rem feliciter gessisset, aliquid se sapere opinabatur.' The temper of mind alluded to is, as the Schol. and Dukas point out, the rash and self-confident spirit, overweening contempt of his enemy, and blind reliance on his own talent.

Of ἐς τὴν Πύλον the sense is not 'at Pylus,' but 'against Pylus;' the ἐς, as Poppo remarks, being put because by the name our author did not hesitate to call, not the castle occupied by the Athenians, but the whole of the neighbouring region, where, in strict propriety, he ought rather to have advanced against Sphacteria. Κατὰ θέαν, 'in the way of observation or reconnoitring;' on which force of κατὰ see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 581, 6, and Herm. on Vig. note 401.

οὐχ ὡς τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ, ἢν ἀναγκάζηται, περισχήσων] Of these somewhat obscure words I have in my Translation and smaller edition explained the sense to be, 'not with the intention of securely overpowering the enemy, should he be compelled to fight; but with the view of blockading the city and taking it by storm:' a view of the sense which has, I find, since been borne out by the united opinion of Dobree, Arnold, and Poppo. Of the term περιέχειν the full meaning is, 'so to come round and hem in any persons as to have the upper hand over them.' Compare viii. 105, τῷ ἔργῳ πολὺ περισχόντες. Τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ stands for ἐν τῷ ἀσφ., 'in, or with, security,' without risk. As to the sense assigned by Portus, Dukas, and Haack, 'firmissimo copiarum præsidio,' that needs proof, and here could not be brought in without some violence. Of κύκλῳ περιστὰς the sense is, either by encircling it around, or disposing bodies of men around it, as at Sphacteria, iv. 32, 3. Compare infra viii. 108, περιστήσας τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ: and Hdian. vii. 10, 13, περιστήσαντες αὐτοῖς ξιφηφόρους: and Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 1, περιέστησε πᾶν τὸ στράτευμα περὶ τὴν πόλιν. Considering, however, that the second aorist is used, (which has almost a neuter sense,) the former rendering is preferable, and is supported by a passage of Herodot. i. 43, περιστάντες αὐτὸ (τὸ θηρίον) κύκλῳ, and Xen. Anab. iv. 7, 1, ἀθρόως περιστῆναι τὸ χωρίον. Cleon's intention was to dispose various divisions of troops around the city, who should assault the wall in various parts contemporaneously, and thus carry the place by storm.

4. ἐπὶ λόφου καρτεροῦ] Namely, the hill to the west of Amphipolis, and distinctly visible in the Plan. Τὸ λιμνῶδες τοῦ Στρυμόνος. See note on iv. 108. I have, in deference to the united authority of Haack, Bekker, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, received τῇ Θράκῃ, from many of the best MSS., instead of vulg. τὴν Θράκην: though I greatly doubt whether the latter be not the true reading. The sense cannot be, as Dobree explains it, 'against Thrace,' καὶ γὰρ οὐδὲ ἐφαίνετο οὔτ' ἐπὶ τοῦ τείχους οὐδεὶς οὔτε κατὰ πύλας ἐξήει, κεκλημέναι τε ἦσαν πᾶσαι. ὥστε καὶ μηχανὰς ὅτι † οὐ † κατῆλθεν ἔχων, ἁμαρτεῖν ἐδόκει· ἐλεῖν γὰρ ἂν τὴν πόλιν διὰ τὸ ἔρημον. VIII. Ὁ δὲ Βρασίδας εὐθὺς ὡς εἶδε κινουμένους τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, καταβὰς καὶ αὐτὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ Κερδυλίου ἐσέρχεται ἐς τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν. 2. καὶ ἐπέξοδον μὲν καὶ ἀντίταξιν οὐκ ἐποιήσατο πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, δεδιὼς τὴν αὐτοῦ παρασκευὴν, καὶ νομίζων ὑποδεεστέρους εἶναι, οὐ τῷ πλήθει, (ἀντίπαλα γάρ πως ἦν,) ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀξιώματι· meaning the Thracians; for no war against that country could have been then in the mind of Cleon. The sense can only be, 'Thraciam versus,' 'Thrace-ward,' (as at iv. 102, ἐς τὴν ἤπειρον,) whether with reference to the present or the future, is uncertain; but perhaps both: for its situation was most commanding, especially as regarded the passage to Thrace; it being (as Col. Leake points out) situated at the only convenient passage across the maritime ridge of the mountains between the passes of Aulon and Neapolis, and the centre of many roads to different quarters. The dative here were capable of no suitable sense; and the authority of MSS., in so minute a case as this, is inconsiderable; since in almost all the MSS. which are said to have τῇ Θρᾴκῃ, the iota subscript is generally adscript; and in the ancient archetypes it would be almost universally so.

οὐ κατῆλθεν ἔχων] I have obelized οὐ κατῆλθεν, because the words are capable of no tolerable sense: for as to that assigned by Poppo and Goeller, 'had descended from the hill he occupied,'—little likely is it that he should have taken the battering-engines up the hill, since he had gone thither rather to reconnoitre than to encamp. Again, as to the meaning by some affixed to the common reading, that 'he had arrived without engines,'—that, as Arnold observes, would require us to assign to the words a different order,—namely, κατῆλθεν οὐκ ἔχων. Nor is it likely that so powerful an expedition, sent to retake Amphipolis and the other cities which had lately fallen into the hands of the Lacedæmonians, should have been sent without engines for the purpose in question. There cannot be a doubt that he had brought engines, and that, until he should find a use for them, he had left them at Eion, his head-quarters. See ch. 6, 1. The sense intended is plainly, 'insomuch that he even conceived he had done wrong, that he had come up without the scaling-machines;' for here Haack and Bekker justly suppose the true reading to be οὐκ ἀνῆλθεν ἔχων, which is confirmed by the reading of four MSS., οὐκ ἀπῆλθεν, evidently a mere slip of the copyist; for ἀν and ἀπ' are very frequently confounded. The term in question is one quite suitable; since the road from Eion to the hill adverted to (about six miles distant) is a rising ground. Cleon might well regret that he had not brought them up from thence; for as to the present purpose, they were as useless as if they had been at Athens. Even Poppo, I find, now gives the preference to ἀνῆλθεν.

CH. VIII. 2. δεδιὼς] The term, when used, as here, with the accusative, denotes not so much fear as distrust.

ὑποδεεστέρους] For this Poppo edits, from conjecture, ὑποδεέστερος, which has also been received by Goeller; while Haack and Bekker retain the common reading; and rightly; for as to what Poppo urges, that ὑποδεέστερος is recommended by its perspicuity, and accords with the consuetudo linguæ,—such reasons, in a writer like Thucydides, have very little weight, especially when opposed by the unanimous authority of all the MSS. for the common reading, thus uniting external to internal evidence; for the latter is quite in favour of the common reading. Moreover, ὑποδεεστέρους (scil. αὐτοὺς) is perfectly justifiable, since παρασκευὴ is a noun of multitude, like δύναμις, and our force for forces: and therefore may have a word adapted to it in the plural. As it often denotes an armament, (compare vi. 31.) so it may very well bear the sense exercitus, 'an army,' as it does in Xen. Ag. i. 13, and Hist. iii. 4, 11, and v. 2, 15, Thiem. ἐλάττω δύναμιν τῆς βασιλέως παρασκευῆς, where δύναμις and παρασκευὴ are considered as equivalent the one to the other. Again, as δύναμις often bears the sense forces, (meaning soldiers,) so may παρασκευή. Accordingly in ὑποδεεστέρους we have the figure πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον.

ἀντίπαλα] Supply τὰ στρατεύματα or τὰ πλήθη from the subject-matter. Ἀξιώματι, meaning literally, consequence or weight. Καθαρὸν ἐξῆλθε, i. e. had gone forth the very élite, or flower of the Athenian force; being, it may be supposed, drafted from the best corps, and so consisting, according to Athenæus, (as cited by Poppo on ch. 1,) ἐξ ἐπιλέκτων ἀνδρῶν. Of the expression τὸ καθαρὸν τοῦ στρατοῦ, meaning flos exercitus, I have in my Translation given several examples. It is one used by the best prose-writers, from Herodotus to Procopius. (See note supra iv. 133.) Supposing the allusion to be to the ore of precious metals purified from all dross, which has been previously drawn off,—we may, in this view, compare the similar expression occurring at vi. 31, τὸ πεζὸν χρηστοῖς καταλόγοις ἐκκριθέν, where see note. In either passage there is implied a casting out of all persons that were not full citizens, and even of those a rejection of such as served in any inferior kind of service.

(τῶν γὰρ Ἀθηναίων ὅπερ ἐστράτευε, καθαρὸν ἐξῆλθε, καὶ Λημνίων καὶ Ἰμβρίων τὸ κράτιστον·) τέχνῃ δὲ παρεσκευάζετο ἐπιθησόμενος. 3. εἰ γὰρ δείξειε τοῖς ἐναντίοις τό τε πλῆθος, καὶ τὴν ὅπλισιν, ἀναγκαίαν οὖσαν, τῶν μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ, οὐκ ἂν ἡγεῖτο μᾶλλον περιγενέσθαι, ἢ ἄνευ προόψεώς τε αὐτῶν καὶ † μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄντος

τέχνῃ] Meaning, the craft and contrivance of stratagem.

3. τὸ πλῆθος] This is to be construed with τῶν μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ, the full sense being, 'For if he should show to the enemy both the [small] number and the manner, which was sorry, in which they were armed.' Ὅπλισιν. Hobbes renders armour. But surely the term must denote arms as well as armour. In fact, it here denotes equipment generally for combat; literally, mode of arming, ἡ τῆς ὁπλίσεως θέσις, as Plato expresses it, p. 24. And so in a passage, perhaps written with a view to the present, of Arrian, E. A. iv. 1, 2, we have, φύσεώς τε τῆς χώρας τῆς Σκυθικῆς, καὶ πλήθους αὐτῶν, καὶ νομαίων, καὶ ὁπλίσεων ἥν τινα ἔχοντες στέλλονται ἐς τὰς μάχας, where for ὁπλίσεων ought to be read (from almost all the MSS.) ὁπλίσεως, i. e. mode of arming themselves, or being armed,—a sense formed on the primitive signification, the act of arming. Also, for νομαίων, read, from the best MS., σωμάτων, 'slaves.'

ἀναγκαίαν] Meaning what is done from necessity and on the spur of the occasion, as opposed to what is done after due preparation. Compare vi. 37, ἐξ ἀναγκαίας παρασκευῆς. The exact force of the word, —which, as here used, answers to our vulgar expression, make-shift, — is well illustrated by the gloss of Suidas, ἀναγκαία τράπεζα· ἡ εὐτελὴς καὶ πενιχρά: also by that of the Scholiast here, εὐτελῆ καὶ οὐκ ἐκ παρασκευῆς. To this purpose is also a passage of Porphyr. de Abstin. ἀφθονίαν εἰ τῆς τροφῆς πάντα (scil. animalia) ἐκέκτητο, οὔτε πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἔσχον ἂν ἀγρίως· ταύτης γὰρ χάριν, καίτοι ἀναγκαίας καὶ εὐτελοῦς οὔσης, αἵ τε ἔχθραι καὶ αἱ φιλίαι, καὶ τόπου ἕνεκα, where the words καὶ τόπου are, with reason, considered by Kuster as corrupt; though he attempts not to remove the corruption. If I am not mistaken, the author wrote κοὐ τρόπου ἕνεκα, 'and not as respects plan of action or disposition.' How frequently καὶ and κοὐ, and τρόπος and τόπος, are interchanged, is well known. Hence, too, may be emended a passage of Eurip. Iph. Aul. 724, καλῶς τ' ἀναγκαίως τε, συνενέγκαι δ' ὅμως, where, for καλῶς τ' ἀναγκαίως τε, I would read κακῶς γ', (incommodè) ἀναγκαίως τε. Not quite to the present purpose is the seemingly parallel phrase in Hom. Od. xxiv. 498, καὶ πολιοί περ ἐόντες, ἀναγκαῖοι πολεμισταί. That is rather to be regarded as nearly allied to one found in Plut. i. 912, C, ἀναγκαία βρῶσις, i. e. food which must be eaten for want of other aliment, as ἀναγκαῖοι πολεμισταί, warriors that must be resorted to for want of better. Had Dr. Clarke, on the above passage of Homer, perceived this, he would not have compared the expression of Lucan, 'fortis virtute coactâ,' which surely tends to cast a slur on the valour of hoary warriors the furthest from what the poet could intend. Censurable, too, is the version of Pope there, 'Trembling with warmth the hoary heroes stand,' as spoiling the beautiful picture of the poet, who means thus to depict these warriors as, though old, yet utiles bello, and able to say, with Mezentius in Virg. Æn. ix. 610, 'nec tarda senectus Debilitat vires animi, mutatque vigorem. Canitiem galeâ premimus.'

ἢ ἄνευ προόψεως—καταφρονήσεως] A certain difficulty embarrasses this passage, too great, I fear, to be ever cleared away. Various attempts to this effect have been made both in the way of subtle interpretation and ingenious conjectural emendation, but with little success; insomuch that I can only say, in the words of a distinguished critic, 'me quod fugiam habere, quod sequar non habere—citius quid non sit, quam quid sit, dicturum.' Upon the whole, however, I agree with Poppo in preferring the method of exposition adopted by Goeller. That commentator recognises here a condensed form of expression, which, fully developed, would run thus: μᾶλλον γὰρ ἡγεῖτο περιγενέσθαι ἄνευ προόψεως καὶ μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄντος οὔσης καταφρονήσεως, ἢ εἰ δείξειε τό τε πλῆθος καὶ τὴν ὅπλισιν ἀναγκαίαν οὖσαν τῶν μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ, &c. And he aptly compares with ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄντος here certain similar phrases, such as ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς at vi. 34. Certainly the sense thus arising is very good, since, as Poppo observes, 'vana et sola opinatione confisa hostium despicientia subito horum impetu in consternationem vertitur'—εἰ ἴδοιεν παρὰ γνώμην τολμήσαντας, τῷ ἀδοκήτῳ μᾶλλον ἂν καταπλαγεῖεν ἢ τῇ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς ξυνάμει (ut vi. 34). But, as the learned commentator remarks, there still remains the same grammatical difficulty as to the supplying of οὔσης, which, in the present position, were harsh, and indeed unprecedented. And, after expressing his dissatisfaction at all the methods of elucidation hitherto proposed, he adds, 'Vos qui hæc legitis, ut difficultatem quæ negatio parat, felicius expediatis, impense opto.' As the least violent and most effectual mode of removing the difficulty, I would propose, for the μὴ, to read δὴ (or ἦ δὴ), by which, as καταφρονήσεως will then depend on ἄνευ repeated, it will not be necessary to suppose an ellipsis of οὔσης. The δὴ will allude to the former contempt they have felt for them,—a contempt proceeding from ignorance of them, and founded on the opinion that they kept out of sight from fear. Opposed to which is the contempt on real grounds, from a sight of their slender force and paltry equipments. How easily ΔΗ or ΗΔΗ might, in the copies, pass into ΜΗ, it is scarcely necessary to observe. On the term προόψεως, 'previous view of them,' see note at iv. 29.

4. προστάξας] 'having committed,' namely, as a charge. Οὐκ ἂν νομίζων, &c. 'thinking that he should never again take them so alone and separate, if the reinforcements should chance to arrive.' Ἐπίνοιαν φράσαι, 'to open out his counsel, or plan of action:' on which sense of ἐπίνοια see my Lex. New Test. on the word.

καταφρονήσεως. 4. ἀπολεξάμενος οὖν αὐτὸς πεντήκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν ὁπλίτας, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους Κλεαρίδᾳ προστάξας, ἐβουλεύετο ἐπιχειρεῖν αἰφνιδίως, πρὶν ἀπελθεῖν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, οὐκ ἂν νομίζων αὐτοὺς ὁμοίως ἀπολαβεῖν αὖθις μεμονωμένους, εἰ τύχοι ἐλθοῦσα αὐτοῖς ἡ βοήθεια. ξυγκαλέσας δὲ τοὺς πάντας στρατιώτας, καὶ βουλόμενος παραθαρσῦναί τε καὶ τὴν ἐπίνοιαν φράσαι, ἔλεγε τοιάδε.

IX. "Ἄνδρες Πελοποννήσιοι, ἀπὸ μὲν οἵας χώρας ἥκομεν, ὅτι ἀεὶ διὰ τὸ εὔψυχον ἐλευθέρας, καὶ ὅτι Δωριῆς μέλλετε Ἴωσι μάχεσθαι, ὧν εἰώθατε κρείσσους εἶναι, ἀρκείτω βραχέως δεδηλωμένον· τὴν δὲ ἐπιχείρησιν ᾧ τρόπῳ διανοοῦμαι ποιεῖσθαι, διδάξω, ἵνα μὴ τό [τε] κατ' ὀλίγον καὶ μὴ ἅπαντας κινδυνεύειν, ἐνδεὲς

Ch. IX. 1. ἀπὸ οἵας—ἐλευθέρας] Compare a kindred passage supra i. 84, 1, where see note. Ἀρκείτω βραχέως δεδηλωμένον. For ἀρκείτω many of the best MSS. have ἀρκεῖ τὸ, which reading might be supported by a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 197, 2, ἀρκεῖ τε ὡς φιλοσόφοις περὶ αὐτῶν ἐλέχθη. But the common reading is sufficiently borne out by another passage of our author, supra ii. 62, ἀρκείτω μὲν ὑμῖν, &c., and by Æschyl. Agam. 1285.

ἵνα μὴ—παράσχῃ] 'in order that the running the risk of battle by a small part at a time, and not all together, may not, seeming deficient, (i. e. insufficient for the purpose,) occasion timidity [to you], dishearten you.' Compare Lucian, t. i. p. 398, πᾶν ἐδόκει ἐνδεὲς (scil. εἶναι). Herodot. vii. 48, ἐνδεέστερα φαίνεται τὰ ἡμέτερα. I have followed Bekker and Goeller in placing τε within brackets, because it can have no place here, and has been vainly defended by Arnold. The word, which is in three MSS. not found, probably proceeded from the margin, where it had served to denote a var. lect. τε for τό. And indeed some even of the best MSS. have τῷ for τό. But that is forbidden φαινόμενον, ἀτολμίαν παράσχῃ. 2. τοὺς γὰρ ἐναντίους εἰκάζω καταφρονήσει τε ἡμῶν, καὶ οὐκ ἂν ἐλπίσαντας ὡς ἂν ἐπεξέλθοι τις αὐτοῖς ἐς μάχην, ἀναβῆναί τε πρὸς τὸ χωρίον, καὶ νῦν ἀτάκτως κατὰ θέαν τετραμμένους ὀλιγωρεῖν. 3. ὅστις δὲ τὰς τοιαύτας ἁμαρτίας τῶν ἐναντίων κάλλιστα ἰδὼν, καὶ ἅμα, πρὸς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ δύναμιν, τὴν ἐπιχείρησιν ποιεῖται μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς μᾶλλον καὶ ἀντιπαραταχθέντος, ἢ ἐκ τοῦ πρὸς τὸ παρὸν ξυμφέροντος, πλεῖστ' ἂν ὀρθοῖτο. καὶ τὰ κλέμματα ταῦτα καλλίστην δόξαν ἔχει, ἃ τὸν πολέμιον μάλιστ' ἄν τις ἀπατήσας, τοὺς φίλους μέγιστ' ἂν ὠφελήσειεν. 4. ἕως οὖν ἔτι ἀπαράσκευοι θαρσοῦσι, καὶ τοῦ ὑπαπιέναι πλέον ἢ τοῦ μένοντος, ἐξ ὧν ἐμοὶ φαίνονται, τὴν διάνοιαν ἔχουσιν, ἐν τῷ ἀνειμένῳ αὐτῶν τῆς γνώμης, καὶ πρὶν by the construction, which is, ἵνα μὴ τὸ κινδυνεύειν κατ' ὀλίγον καὶ μὴ ἅπαντας παράσχῃ ἀτολμίαν. Of κινδυνεύειν the sense is here, as at iii. 5, to risk a battle. Κατ' ὀλίγον signifies 'by a few at a time,' as at iv. 10, 4, κατ' ὀλίγον μαχεῖται.

2. καταφρονήσει ἡμῶν] 'by contempt of us.' Here indeed καταφρονοῦντας ἡμῶν would have been more regular in construction; the full sense intended being, that 'their enemies, both as despising them, and as not expecting that any one would go forth to battle, have both ascended to the place [they occupy], and are disorderly occupied in viewing the prospect, and off their guard.' Of τετραμμένους κατὰ the sense is not, as it has been explained by some, ἐσκεδασμένους, but occupied about, as at ii. 65, τραπέσθαι καθ' ἡδονάς. Plutarch, ii. p. 637, τρέπονται καθ' ἡδονὰς πρὸς ἄλληλα. Herodot. v. 11, κατὰ τὰ εἴλοντο ἐτράποντο. For the prepos. κατὰ, more usual in this case is πρὸς, or ἐπὶ, or ἐς. The word ἀτάκτως is to be taken with τετραμμένους, the sense being, that they were gaping about in a disorderly manner. Very rare is it to find the participle τετραμμένος thus accompanied by an adverb. An instance, however, occurs in Xen. Hier. ix. 7, τοῖς εἰς τοῦτο τῶν πολιτῶν ἐρρωμένως τρεπομένοις. Also in Plato, p. 553, πρὸς χρηματισμὸν τραπόμενος γλίσχρως, where, as in the present passage of Thucydides, the adverb serves to denote manner of action. Rare, too, is this absolute use of ὀλιγωρεῖν, 'to be negligent, or off one's guard.'

3. ὅστις δὲ—ὀρθοῖτο] Before he opens out what he means to do, in order to profit by their blunder, Brasidas adverts in a general way to the duty of a good general in such a case, and that couched in the form of a military maxim—thus: 'Now he who has but discovered such sort of blunders in the enemy, and withal, according to his power, makes his attack, not so much openly and of set purpose, as according to what is advantageous to him for the present, he will for the most part be successful.' Compare supra iii. 30, and Polyb. iii. 81, 10, διόπερ, εἴ τις δύναιτο συννοεῖν τὰ περὶ τοὺς πέλας ἁμαρτήματα, —τάχιστ' ἂν τῶν ὅλων κατακρατοίη.

In καὶ τὰ κλέμματα—ὠφελήσειεν we have another military maxim, importing that 'those stratagems are in most repute whereby any one having most deceived the enemy, may in the greatest degree benefit his friends.' Κλέμματα, furta belli, 'stratagems.' Ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς, ex aperto, for προφανῶς. At ἀντιπαραταχθέντος repeat ἐκ τοῦ, or supply στρατοπέδου, the sense being, 'in battle-array.'

4. The above maxims are now applied to the case in point. Ἕως οὖν ἔτι ἀπαράσκευοι, 'while, then, they are yet unpreparedly confident,' &c. In τοῦ μένοντος we have the use of partic. for subst., as at vi. 24, τὸ ἐπιθυμοῦν τοῦ πλοῦ: and iii. 10, τῷ διαλλάσσοντι τῆς γνώμης: and vii. 68, τῆς γνώμης τὸ θορυβούμενον. With the present compare a similar passage in Dionys. Hal. p. 163, 5, φυγῆς μᾶλλον ἢ ἀλκῆς προνοουμένους.

ἐξ ὧν ἐμοὶ φαίνονται] 'Ad subjectum, ut sæpe Græci δοκοῦσιν, ἐοίκασι, retulit, ubi nos impersonaliter loquimur. Cf. Elmsl. ad Eur. Her. v. 681, et Pflugk. ad Med. v. 337. infra v. 75, 113.' (Poppo.)

ἐν τῷ ἀνειμένῳ—τὴν δόξαν] Of these words the meaning, which is far from obvious, seems to be, 'amidst the remissness of their mind, and before their opinion is set in order [as to what they shall rather do]:' where, in the expression τῷ ἀνειμένῳ τῆς γνώμης, there is reference ξυνταχθῆναι μᾶλλον τὴν δόξαν, ἐγὼ μὲν ἔχων τοὺς μετ' ἐμαυτοῦ, καὶ φθάσας, ἢν δύνωμαι, προσπεσοῦμαι ξυμπαντὶ κατὰ μέσον τὸ στράτευμα· σὺ δὲ, Κλεαρίδα, ὕστερον, ὅταν ἐμὲ ὁρᾷς ἤδη προσκείμενον, καὶ κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς φοβοῦντα αὐτούς, τοὺς μετὰ σεαυτοῦ, τούς τ' Ἀμφιπολίτας καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ξυμμάχους, ἄγων, αἰφνιδίως τὰς πύλας ἀνοίξας ἐπεκθεῖν, καὶ ἐπείγεσθαι ὡς τάχιστα ξυμμῖξαι. ἐλπὶς γὰρ μάλιστα αὐτοὺς οὕτω φοβηθῆναι· τὸ γὰρ ἐπιὸν ὕστερον δεινότερον τοῖς πολεμίοις τοῦ παρόντος καὶ μαχομένου. 5. καὶ αὐτός τε ἀνὴρ ἀγαθὸς γίγνου, ὥσπερ σε εἰκὸς ὄντα Σπαρτιάτην, καὶ ὑμεῖς, ὦ ἄνδρες ξύμμαχοι, ἀκολουθήσατε ἀνδρείως, καὶ νομίσατε εἶναι τοῦ καλῶς πολεμεῖν τὸ ἐθέλειν, καὶ [τὸ] αἰσχύνεσθαι, καὶ τοῖς ἄρχουσι πείθεσθαι· καὶ τῇδε ὑμῖν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἢ ἀγαθοῖς γενομένοις ἐλευθερίαν τε ὑπάρχειν, καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων ξυμμάχοις κεκλῆσθαι, ἢ Ἀθηναίων τε δούλοις,—ἢν τὰ ἄριστα, ἄνευ ἀνδραποδισμοῦ ἢ θανατώσεως, πράξητε,—καὶ δουλείαν χαλεπωτέραν ἢ πρὶν εἴχετε, τοῖς to that remiss carelessness which they entertained, thinking of nothing so little as battle. The expression is one so rare, that I have met with nothing like it elsewhere. To determine its precise force, it is necessary to carefully examine the context. Now, as by γνώμης, just before, is denoted the mind, i. e. the will, affections, and disposition, so by τὴν δόξαν here is evidently meant the opinion, resolve, as to the doing of any thing. Ξυνταχθῆναι bears the sense constitui, 'to be made up;' as we say, 'to make up one's mind,' answering to constituere in Latin. So, too, our phrase, 'to be disposed to do a thing,' implies the mind's being set or arranged with the doing of the thing. Now it is in this framing or arranging of the mind that consists the readiness of the soldier for battle; when he has fully made up his mind, he will fight. Hence if a general can destroy or relax this readiness in the enemy's army, the men are half-beaten. To which purpose is a passage of Xen. Hist. vii. 5, 22, cited by Arnold, where Epaminondas at Mantinea having made the enemy believe he would not engage in battle that day, thereby, as Xenophon says, ἔλυσε τῶν πλείστων πολεμίων τὴν ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς πρὸς μάχην παρασκευὴν, 'destroyed the preparedness for battle in the souls of the enemy.'

Finally, by μᾶλλον is here merely denoted the bent of the determination, by which we do one thing rather than another.

σὺ δὲ, Κλεαρίδα, &c.] In ἐπεκθεῖν and ἐπείγεσθαι there is said to be the use of infin. for imperat.; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 546. Yet in such a case some verb of exhortation in the imper. is left to be supplied from the context. With the sentiment at τὸ γὰρ ἐπιὸν—μαχομένου, Duker compares a similar one in Æneas, Pol. ch. 38; and more than one might be adduced from Onosander.

5. τοῦ καλῶς πολεμεῖν, &c.] 'that the parts of an honourable soldiery are [these]: promptitude, and a sense of shame, (what we should call a feeling of honour,) and obedience to commanders.' With the term αἰσχύνεσθαι compare ii. 42, αἰσχυνόμενοι ἐν ἔργῳ, where see note. The τὸ here is in several of the best MSS. not found; and Bekker is of opinion that it ought to be cancelled. Certain it is that internal as well as external evidence is against the word, which is not needed here any more than at πείθεσθαι, though it could not be dispensed with at ἐθέλειν, since the sense there intended is, 'the being willing,' 'the will to serve.' Of ὑμῖν—ὑπάρχειν, &c. the sense is, 'there is offered or held out to you either freedom, and to be called allies of the Lacedæmonians, or slaves of the Athenians.' Of the words ἢν τὰ ἄριστα πράξητε, which are in some measure parenthetical, the sense is, 'even if ye fare the best, and escape slavery or being put to death.' Imitated from which are the words of Dionys. Hal. Ant. iv. 58, p. 780, fin. οἵας πείσονται σφαγὰς καὶ ἀνδραποδισμοὺς προσδοκώντων· εἰ δὲ τὰ κράτιστα πράξειαν, δουλείας τε καὶ χρημάτων ἀφαιρέσεις. Here the words καὶ δουλειαν χαλεπωτέραν ἢ πρὶν εἴχετε are closely connected with δούλοις εἶναι, and δὲ λοιποῖς Ἕλλησι κωλυταῖς γενέσθαι ἐλευθερώσεως. 6. ἀλλὰ μή τε ὑμεῖς μαλακισθῆτε, ὁρῶντες περὶ ὅσων ὁ ἀγών ἐστιν, ἐγώ τε δείξω οὐ παραινέσαι οἷός τε ὢν μᾶλλον τοῖς πέλας, ἢ καὶ αὐτὸς ἔργῳ ἐπεξελθεῖν."

X. Ὁ μὲν Βρασίδας, τοσαῦτα εἰπών, τήν τε ἔξοδον παρεσκευάζετο αὐτός, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους μετὰ τοῦ Κλεαρίδα καθίστη ἐπὶ τὰς Θρᾳκίας καλουμένας τῶν πυλῶν, ὅπως, ὥσπερ εἴρητο, ἐπεξίοιεν. 2. τῷ δὲ Κλέωνι, φανεροῦ γενομένου αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ Κερδυλίου καταβάντος, καὶ ἐν τῇ πόλει, ἐπιφανεῖ οὔσῃ ἔξωθεν, περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν τῆς Ἀθηνᾶς θυομένου, καὶ ταῦτα πράσσοντος, ἀγγέλλεται (προὐκεχωρήκει γὰρ τότε κατὰ τὴν θέαν), ὅτι ἥ τε στρατιὰ ἅπασα φανερὰ τῶν πολεμίων ἐν τῇ πόλει, καὶ ὑπὸ τὰς πύλας ἵππων τε πόδες πολλοὶ καὶ ἀνθρώπων ὡς ἐξιόντων ὑποφαίνονται. 3. ὁ δὲ ἀκούσας ἐπῆλθε· καὶ ὡς εἶδεν, οὐ βουλόμενος μάχῃ διαγωνίσασθαι πρὶν οἱ καὶ τοὺς βοηθοὺς ἥκειν, καὶ οἰόμενος φθήσεσθαι ἀπελθών, σημαίνειν τε ἅμα ἐκέλευεν the word δουλείαν is subjoined just as though δουλεύειν had preceded.

6. This section contains the conclusion, which deals in urgent exhortation. Render, 'but do you, on your part, not shrink from the combat, as I, on mine, will evince myself as not more ready to exhort others, than also myself in action to execute [what I enjoin].' Similar addresses, by way of apostrophe, to an individual, while haranguing an army, are found in Xen. Cyr. ii. 4, 24. v. 3, 42, and 4, 19. vi. 3, 33. Pausan. iv. 21, 7. Closely imitated from the present is a passage of Lucian, t. iii. 272, 58, ὥστε, ὦ Λυκῖνε, αὐτός τε ἀνὴρ ἀγαθὸς γίγνου, καὶ τοῖς μετὰ σαυτοῦ, &c. And something very similar occurs in Plut. Timol. 7, init. Here I have written μή τε, in order to make the construction the clearer, since the τε—τε here is equivalent to μὲν—δὲ, 'on the one hand—on the other.' Compare vi. 34, 4, ὃ ἐγώ τε—ὑμεῖς τε, where Poppo refers to Kuhner's Gr. § 722, 4.

Ch. X. 1. τὴν ἔξοδον παρεσκευάζετο] 'prepared [to make] the sally.' Compare Xen. Hist. v. 4, 35, παρεσκευάζετο εἰς τὴν ἔξοδον.

τὰς Θρᾳκίας καλουμένας τῶν πυλῶν] 'those of the gates that were called the Thracian.'

2. καταβάντος—θυομένου] 'as he was descending from—as he was sacrificing.' Καὶ ταῦτα πράσσοντος, 'and as he was doing what has been above narrated,' i. e. making preparations of all kinds for the sally. Ἐπιφανεῖ οὔσῃ ἔξωθεν, 'plain from without,' at least on the east side.

καὶ ὑπὸ τὰς πύλας—ὑποφαίνονται] Meaning, 'and that under the gates are visible, to any one peeping down, many feet of horses and men as going forth,' i. e. ready to go forth. It is not necessary to suppose, with Mitford, that those who discerned the feet had gone close up to the gates, so as to peep in: for, as it is observed by Mr. Hawkins, (cited in Arnold,) 'the middle of the road might be worn so hollow as to have admitted an opening of several inches under the gates, so that the feet might easily have been seen at some distance off.' Poppo remarks, that ὑπὸ τὰς πύλας ὑποφαίνονται stands for ὑποφαίνονται, ὅταν ὑποβλέπῃ τις ὑπὸ τὰς πύλας, just as ὑπ' αὐγὰς ὁρᾶν τι occurs in Eurip. Hec. 1144. This, however, involves something too artificial and far-fetched; not to say that no reason is there to think that they went so near as to look under the gates. It is sufficient to take the ὑπὸ here as standing for κάτω, as in Hom. Od. xvii. 409, θρῆνυν ἑλὼν ὑπέφηνε τραπέζῃ Κείμενον, where Eustathius well explains by ὑποκάτω ἔφηνεν. And to this idiom Suidas alludes when he says, ὑποφαίνεται χαμόθεν· ἐπιφαίνεται ὑψόθεν. Compare Plut. Camill. i. 148, B, ὁ γὰρ τόπος ἐφ' ᾧ βεβηκὼς ἐννυκτομάχησε πρὸς τοὺς κέλτους, ὑπεφαίνετο τῆς ἀγορᾶς (for κάτω τῆς ἀγορᾶς) ἀπὸ τοῦ Καπιτωλίου.

3. ἐπῆλθε] 'he went to,' namely, the place, the scene of action. Οἰόμενος φθήσεσθαι ἀπελθών, 'thinking he should anticipate [them] by getting off.' Compare iii. 89, φθ. ἀναδραμόντες: and vi. 97, ἀναχώρησιν, καὶ παρήγγειλε τοῖς ἀπιοῦσιν ἐπὶ τὸ εὐώνυμον κέρας, ὥσπερ μόνον οἷόν τ' ἦν, ὑπάγειν ἐπὶ τῆς Ἠιόνος. 4. ὡς δ' αὐτῷ ἐδόκει †σχολὴ γίγνεσθαι, αὐτὸς ἐπιστρέψας τὸ δεξιὸν καὶ τὰ γυμνὰ πρὸς τοὺς πολεμίους δοὺς, ἀπῆγε τὴν στρατιάν. 5. κἀν τούτῳ Βρασίδας, ὡς ὁρᾷ τὸν καιρὸν, καὶ τὸ στράτευμα τῶν Ἀθηναίων κινούμενον, λέγει τοῖς μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅτι "Οἱ ἄνδρες ἡμᾶς οὐ μένουσι· δῆλοι δὲ τῶν τε δοράτων τῇ κινήσει καὶ τῶν κεφαλῶν· οἷς γὰρ ἂν τοῦτο γίγνηται, οὐκ εἰώθασι μένειν τοὺς φθάνει ἀναβάς: and vii. 15, φθήσονται ὑμᾶς. The context here rather requires φθήσεσθαι, which Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller have edited instead of vulg. ὀφθήσεσθαι, though only from a few MSS., including (I would add) the Clarend. and Cantab.

παρήγγειλε—Ἠιόνος] Render, 'he gave orders to those departing, to draw off towards Eion, moving on their left wing, as indeed was alone possible.' The nature of the thing (which has not been well understood by translators and commentators) may be sufficiently comprehended by bearing in mind that the Athenian army had been drawn up in line fronting the city, to make a great show and terrify the Amphipolitans. Now, when such an army has to retreat in the direction of either of its wings, the line of battle becomes a column of march (compare the phrase ἐπὶ κέρως εἶναι in Xen.) by all simultaneously turning to the right-about-face, or to the left-about-face, when the whole column steps together, and marches either on its former right or left. See ii. 90, and the notes. In the present case, the left-about was the only practicable direction; for that led to Eion, and this evolution must necessarily commence at the extreme left. These movements, however, in a very long column, were perilous, as giving an enemy the power of attacking on the right, which was the unguarded side of Grecian soldiers. In the present case, indeed, there seems to have been some cause of delay, which would involve additional danger. From the nature of the ground it should seem that the line could not be readily formed into a marching column, but had first to be broken up, and drawn off in narrow files; an operation which occasioned the delay noticed by Cleon; and the ἀταξία mentioned at § 6, but of which his ignorance did not enable him to know the cause. Under these circumstances, he adopted an expedient for hastening forward his left wing, namely, by turning his right wing, in the manner above mentioned, i. e. to the left-about-face, which consequently made the right hands of his men front the enemy.

The above view (first propounded in my Translation and smaller edition) has since been adopted by Arnold as substantially correct. He has well observed in addition, that 'the right wing should have kept their position, and faced the enemy, in order to cover the retreat of the left and the centre.' But it is sufficient to say, that Cleon's order to the right wing to abandon its position so prematurely, and move towards its left, changed the line of battle into a column of march, and, of course, caused it to be cut up, by exposing the unshielded side to the enemy's missiles.

On the term ὑπάγειν, 'to draw off,' see note at iv. 127.

4. σχολὴ γίγνεσθαι] 'to be a delay.' Of σχολὴ in this sense, in the nominative, I know of no other example: though not unfrequent is the expression σχολὴ γίγνεταί τινι or ἐστι. I suspect that, for σχολὴ, our author wrote σχολῇ, which has place in the Cod. Ar. and Palat.; and is, I found on collation, written above in the Cod. Clarend. Thus the sense will be, 'but as [the thing] (meaning the evolution) seemed to him to be done tardily.' So σχολῇ is used at i. 142, and iii. 46. The term ἐπιστρέφω here bears the same sense as at ii. 90, where of a line of ships moving on one of its wings, it is said, ἀπὸ σημείου ἑνὸς ἄφνω ἐπιστρέψαντες τὰς ναῦς μετωπηδὸν ἔπλεον. The contrary movement here directed by Cleon, is called in Polyb. xi. 22, 11, ἐπιστρέφειν ἐπὶ δόρυ. Both in Ælian and Arrian Tact. we have frequently the term ἐπιστροφὴ, sometimes δεξιὰ ἐπιστροφὴ, at others ἐς ἀριστερὰν ἐπιστροφή. There was also another movement called the ἡ παντελὴς ἐπιστροφὴ, which was a complete face-about. See Arrian, Tact. p. 84, ed. Blancard. With the phrase γυμνὰ δοὺς (where δοὺς stands for παρέχων) compare Lesbon. p. 172, τὰ γυμνὰ (see note on iii. 23.) τοῖς πολεμίοις δεῖξαι, ἐν οἷς τιτρώσκεσθαι ἀνάγκη.

ἐπιόντας. ἀλλὰ τάς τε πύλας τις ἀνοιγέτω ἐμοὶ ἃς εἴρηται, καὶ ἐπεξίωμεν ὡς τάχιστα θαρσοῦντες." 6. καὶ ὁ μὲν, κατὰ τὰς ἐπὶ τὸ σταύρωμα πύλας καὶ τὰς πρώτας τοῦ μακροῦ τείχους τότε ὄντος ἐξελθὼν ἔθει δρόμῳ τὴν ὁδὸν ταύτην εὐθεῖαν, ᾗπερ νῦν κατὰ τὸ καρτερώτατον τοῦ χωρίου ἰόντι τροπαῖον ἕστηκε· καὶ προσβαλὼν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις πεφοβημένοις τε ἅμα τῇ σφετέρᾳ ἀταξίᾳ, καὶ τὴν τόλμαν αὐτοῦ ἐκπεπληγμένοις, κατὰ μέσον τὸ στράτευμα, τρέπει. 7. καὶ ὁ Κλεαρίδας, ὥσπερ εἴρητο, ἅμα κατὰ τὰς Θρακίας πύλας ἐπεξελθὼν τῷ στρατῷ ἐπεφέρετο. ξυνέβη τε τῷ ἀδοκήτῳ καὶ ἐξαπίνης ἀμφοτέρωθεν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους θορυβηθῆναι· 8. καὶ τὸ μὲν εὐώνυμον κέρας αὐτῶν, τὸ πρὸς τὴν Ἠιόνα, ὅπερ δὴ καὶ προκεχωρήκει, εὐθὺς ἀπορραγὲν ἔφυγε. καὶ ὁ Βρασίδας, ὑποχωροῦντος ἤδη αὐτοῦ, ἐπιπαριὼν τῷ δεξιῷ τιτρώσκεται· καὶ πεσόντα αὐτὸν οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι οὐκ αἰσθάνονται, οἱ δὲ πλησίον ἄραντες ἀπήνεγκαν. 9. τὸ δὲ δεξιὸν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἔμενε [τε] μᾶλλον, καὶ ὁ μὲν Κλέων, ὡς τὸ πρῶτον οὐ διενοεῖτο μένειν, εὐθὺς φεύγων, καὶ καταληφθεὶς ὑπὸ Μυρκινίου πελταστοῦ, ἀποθνήσκει· οἱ δὲ αὐτοῦ συστραφέντες ὁπλῖται ἐπὶ τὸν λόφον τόν τε Κλεαρίδαν ἠμύνοντο, καὶ δὶς ἢ τρὶς προσβαλόντα, καὶ οὐ πρότερον ἐνέδοσαν πρὶν ἥ τε Μυρκινία καὶ ἡ Χαλκιδικὴ ἵππος καὶ οἱ πελτασταὶ περιστάντες καὶ ἐσακοντίζοντες αὐτοὺς ἔτρεψαν. 10. οὕτω δὲ τὸ στράτευμα πᾶν ἤδη τῶν Ἀθηναίων φυγὸν, χαλεπῶς καὶ πολλὰς ὁδοὺς τραπόμενοι κατὰ ὄρη, ὅσοι

5. τὰς πύλας τις ἀνοιγέτω ἐμοὶ] The τις and the ἐμοὶ have both force and elegance, as in a passage of the Old Testament, Psalm cxviii. 19, ἀνοίξατέ μοι πυλὰς, and another of Eurip. Or. 1577, ἀνοιγέτω τις δῶμα. Whether the μοι in this case be ever quite redundant, is more than I know; for as to the passages adduced by Mitchell on Aristoph. Ach. 405, to exemplify the redundancy, they are far from establishing its existence. In the passage of Aristophanes, and also in that of Hom. Od. vi. 199, and Herodot. viii. 68, the μοι signifies, 'oblige me by doing so or so,' thus serving to soften the harshness of command.

6. τὰς ἐπὶ τὸ σταύρωμα—μακροῦ τείχους] See the remarks on the topography of Amphipolis in the Appendix.

7. ἀμφοτέρωθεν] 'from both sides,' namely, the quarter in which Brasidas made his attack, and that in which Clearidas, who, it seems, assailed the right wing in the rear. I agree with Poppo, that to take ἐξαπίνης as an adjective would involve no little harshness, and indeed would at least require the presence of the article τῷ. With reason, too, is he inclined to construe ἐξαπίνης with θορυβηθῆναι, comparing supra iv. 36, ἐξαπίνης ἀναφανεὶς τῷ ἀδοκήτῳ ἐξέπληξε. To his opinion, however, that the καὶ before ἐξαπίνης is to be cancelled, I can by no means accede. Considering that the word is found in all the MSS., it must surely be retained, as indeed it very well may, since the construction is, ξυνέβη τε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους καὶ ('even') ἀμφοτέρωθεν ἐξαπίνης θορ.

8. προκεχωρήκει] 'was in advance [of the rest of the line].' Ἀπορραγὲν ἔφυγε, 'broke away from the centre and fled.' Of ἐπιπαριὼν τῷ δεξιῷ, the sense is best expressed by Dobree, 'transiens ad,' (a signification which the word also bears at iv. 94, and vi. 17. vii. 76.) and by Arnold, 'advancing along towards,' i. e. advancing along the line to reach the right wing, as doubtless intending to co-operate with Clearidas in his attack thereon. This circumstance of his advancing along the enemy's line serves to account for Brasidas's being wounded, since he would thus be much exposed to missiles.

μὴ διεφθαρησαν ἢ αὐτίκα ἐν χερσὶν ἢ ὑπὸ τῆς Χαλκιδικῆς ἵππου καὶ τῶν πελταστῶν, οἱ λοιποὶ ἀπεκομίσθησαν ἐς τὴν Ἠιόνα. 11. οἱ δὲ τὸν Βρασίδαν ἄραντες ἐκ τῆς μάχης, καὶ διασώσαντες ἐς τὴν πόλιν ἔτι ἔμπνουν ἐσεκόμισαν· καὶ ᾔσθετο μὲν ὅτι νικῶσιν οἱ μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ, οὐ πολὺ δὲ διαλιπὼν ἐτελεύτησε. καὶ ἡ ἄλλη στρατιὰ ἀναχωρήσασα μετὰ τοῦ Κλεαρίδου ἐκ τῆς διώξεως, νεκρούς τε ἐσκύλευσε, καὶ τροπαῖον ἔστησε. XI. Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα τὸν Βρασίδαν οἱ ξύμμαχοι πάντες, ξὺν ὅπλοις ἐπισπόμενοι, δημοσίᾳ ἔθαψαν ἐν τῇ πόλει πρὸ τῆς νῦν ἀγορᾶς οὔσης· καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν οἱ Ἀμφιπολῖται, περιέρξαντες αὐτοῦ τὸ μνημεῖον, ὡς ἥρωί τε ἐντέμνουσι, καὶ τιμὰς δεδώ-

CH. XI. 1. ἔθαψαν ἐν τῇ πόλει] An honour very rarely conferred among the ancients; the usual burying-place being outside of the city walls. Poppo remarks, that the founders of colonies were always interred in the forum; and considering that the Amphipolitans had proclaimed Brasidas as their founder, it was no more than might be expected that they should inter him πρὸ τῆς ἀγορᾶς, 'in front of the forum,' in its most conspicuous part.

περιέρξαντες αὐτοῦ τὸ μνημεῖον] On this custom it is observed by Casaubon on Suet. Ner. 33, 'Semper monumenta suorum sepiebant veteres; tenuiores quidem maceria aut humili aliqua levique materia, honestiores vero lorica e silice vel saxo aut marmore.'

ὡς ἥρωί ἐντέμνουσι] The force of ἐντέμνουσι has been disputed: but it is now generally admitted that it cannot stand (as Levêque and Gail supposed) for ἐντέμ. τέμενος, 'cut off and appropriated by consecration a piece of ground:' though it is not to be denied that when fanes or sacella were founded to the honour or worship of heroes, τεμένη were usually appropriated. Nor is the explanation of the Schol. and some of the commentators, ἐναγίσματα προσφέρειν, though supported by the gloss of Hesychius, ἐντέμνουσι· τοῖς ἥρωσιν ἐναγίζουσιν, to be entirely approved of, notwithstanding that in Hdot. ii. 44, we have ὡς ἥρωϊ ἐναγίζουσιν, where, as also in Pausan. ii. 11, 7, and Pollux, iii. 102, there seems a distinction made between θύειν as applied to gods, and ἐναγίζειν as applied to heroes: for in Aristot. Eth. v. 7, the term θύειν is used of the offerings made to Brasidas. And just after θυσίας occurs; though whether it is meant of Brasidas, or of the gods, is uncertain. Here, however, we have not ἐναγίζουσι, but ἐντέμνουσι: and that the terms were ever quite synonymous, has never been proved. That the honour paid to heroes might often consist only in offering the ἐναγίσματα, or inferiæ, cannot be doubted; but that it sometimes consisted in the offering of a victim in sacrifice, is unquestionable. Compare Herodot. v. 47, ἐπὶ τοῦ τάφου αὐτοῦ ἡρῷον ἱδρυσάμενοι, θυσίῃσι αὐτὸν ἱλάσκονται. Plut. Sol. 9, ἐντεμεῖν σφάγια Περιφήμῳ καὶ Κυγχρεῖ τοῖς ἥρωσιν, and elsewhere in Plutarch the expression ἐντέμνειν occurs several times in the sense sacrificare. Also in Philostr. Heroic. xix. 14, 15, we have ἐντέμνοντες καὶ ἐναγίζοντες: where the above honours are united. By Steph. in his Thes., indeed, the term ἐντέμνειν is explained 'incisas, seu cæsas, mactatasque hostias immolare;' and so other lexicographers. But this is making no distinction between ἐντέμνειν and σφάζειν: whereas that a difference did exist between the two terms, is certain from the Scholiast on Apollon. Rhod. i. 587, on the words in question: ἔντομα μήλων· ἔντομα δὲ, τὰ σφάγια κυρίως τὰ τοῖς νεκροῖς ἐναγιζόμενα, διὰ τὸ ἐν τῇ γῇ αὐτῶν ἀποτέμνεσθαι τὰς κεφαλάς. οὕτω γὰρ θύουσι τοῖς χθονίοις.—τοῖς δὲ οὐρανίοις ἄνω ἀναστρέφοντες τὸν τράχηλον σφάζουσιν: which Arnold explains to mean, that 'offerings to the dead, or to the powers beneath the earth, had their heads cut off so as to fall on the ground, by a blow on the back of the neck;' while σφάζειν, jugulare, 'to cut or stick in the throat,' adds he, 'denotes the manner of sacrificing a victim to the gods of heaven, holding back the head that it might look upwards in its death.' Yet how this sense can be elicited from the words as they stand, I see not. Some word has, I suspect, been lost, such as καταπιπτούσας, which occurs in Xen. Cyr. iv. 5, 17, ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς καταπίπτοντες. Little satisfactory, however, is this mode of accounting for the preposition. The ἐν, I would say, has reference to the mode in which the action was done; and as σφάζειν meant κασιν ἀγῶνας καὶ ἐτησίους θυσίας, καὶ τὴν ἀποικίαν ὡς οἰκιστῇ προσέθεσαν, καταβαλόντες τὰ Ἀγνώνεια οἰκοδομήματα, καὶ ἀφανίσαντες εἴ τι μνημόσυνόν που ἔμελλεν αὐτοῦ τῆς οἰκίσεως περιέσεσθαι, νομίσαντες τὸν μὲν Βρασίδαν σωτῆρά τε σφῶν γεγενῆσθαι, καὶ ἐν τῷ παρόντι ἅμα τὴν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ξυμμαχίαν, φόβῳ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, θεραπεύοντες, τὸν δὲ Ἄγνωνα, κατὰ τὸ πολέμιον τῶν Ἀθηναίων, οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως σφίσι ξυμφόρως οὐδ' ἂν ἡδέως τὰς τιμὰς ἔχειν. 2. καὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἀπέδοσαν. ἀπέθανον δὲ Ἀθηναίων μὲν περὶ ἑξακοσίους, τῶν δ' ἐναντίων ἑπτά, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἐκ παρατάξεως, ἀπὸ δὲ τοιαύτης ξυντυχίας καὶ προεκφοβήσεως τὴν μάχην μᾶλλον γενέσθαι. 3. μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἀναίρεσιν οἱ μὲν ἐπ' οἴκου jugulare, 'to stick a knife into the throat,' ἐντέμνειν properly signified 'to perforate and divide' any thing in two, by driving in a sharp instrument and boring into it, (as in Dio Cass. 1023, 23, ἐντ. τὴν φλέβα,) thus answering to the Latin incidere venam. Compare also Lucian, i. 132, λῖνον ἐντ., and Pliny, 'palmis inciditur in medullam.' It would seem that in sacrifices of this kind to the dead, or the gods below ground, the head was struck off, by a sharp instrument like a chisel being driven into the back, by which the head necessarily fell on the ground.

On reconsideration of the present subject, I finally accede to the opinion of Poppo, that the honours here paid to Brasidas are not to be distinguished as though part of them were rendered to him in quality of ἥρως, and part as οἰκιστὴς—the honours seem all ascribed to him as ἥρως: though considering that the οἰκιστὴς was regarded in the light of a ἥρως, they may belong to both indifferently. So in Hdot. vi. 38, we have, τελευτήσαντι (Μιλτιάδῃ) Χερσονησῖται θύουσι, ὡς νόμος οἰκιστῇ, καὶ ἀγῶνα ἱππικόν τε καὶ γυμνικὸν ἐπιστᾶσι, where θύουσι is used in a popular acceptation, though, we see, ἐντέμνουσι would have been more appropriate. So, too, Eustath. on Hom. Od. says that the term ἔντομα was used of victims sacrificed to the dead; ἱερεῖα, of those sacrificed to the gods. Perhaps those ἔντομα differed from the ἱερεῖα chiefly in this, that the one were merely propitiatory, the other expiatory. Consequently there would be nothing that arrogated the observances due to the gods only. Nor are we to suppose (as some seem to have done) that this offering of the ἔντομα occurred only once, at the funeral. It was doubtless repeated at the annual holiday, or feast of commemoration. Thus in the case of Miltiades, who received the same honour as Brasidas from the Chersonesians, we have in Herodot. vi. 38, the term θύουσι. And that they were in the case of Brasidas repeated, and continued to the time of Aristotle, is certain from a passage of that writer, Eth. v. 10, where, by way of illustrating the νομικὸν as opposed to the φυσικὸν, he says, οἷον τὸ θύειν Βρασίδῃ. And when we bear in mind that Aristotle resided, for a great part of his life, only a few miles from Amphipolis, we cannot doubt what is attested by such a witness. It is observed by Bp. Thirlwall, that 'the tribute of respect thus paid by offering sacrifices at his tomb, may appear the less extravagant, since even his enemies thought him worthy to be compared to Achilles.' (See Plato, Conv. p. 221.) But it might have occurred to the learned historian, that such was not likely to be the case; and that some allowance must be made for the high-flown rhetorical phraseology so common in that writer; and which, when stating any thing like facts, requires the decorations of poetic figure to be translated into the language of common life.

προσέθεσαν] scil. αὐτῷ: meaning, 'made it over to him.' Of this making over of any city to any one as if the founder, several examples may be seen in my note in Translation.

οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως—τιμὰς ἔχειν] Of these words the sense is well expressed by Bauer and Poppo: 'non ita eum habiturum hos honores, ut ipsis [æque] aut utile esset aut suave (vel volentibus); non ex ipsorum utilitate aut voluptate (vel voluntate) laturum porro; neque utile jam nec jucundum ipsis amplius fore, ut hosce honores haberent Hagnoni:' meaning, in other words, for Hagnon to have his honour, would not be equally for their profit or pleasure.

ἀπέπλευσαν, οἱ δὲ μετὰ τοῦ Κλεαρίδου τὰ περὶ τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν καθίσταντο.

XII. Καὶ ὑπὸ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους τοῦ θέρους τελευτῶντος Ῥαμφίας, καὶ Αὐτοχαρίδας, καὶ Ἐπικυδίδας, Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης χωρία βοήθειαν ἦγον ἐνακοσίων ὁπλιτῶν, καὶ ἀφικόμενοι ἐς Ἡράκλειαν τὴν ἐν Τραχῖνι, καθίσταντο ὅ τι αὐτοῖς ἐδόκει μὴ καλῶς ἔχειν. 2. ἐνδιατριβόντων δὲ αὐτῶν, ἔτυχεν ἡ μάχη αὕτη γενομένη, καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

XIII. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος εὐθὺς μέχρι μὲν Πιερίου τῆς Θεσσαλίας διῆλθον οἱ περὶ τὸν Ῥαμφίαν, κωλυόντων δὲ τῶν Θεσσαλῶν, καὶ ἅμα Βρασίδου τεθνεῶτος, ᾧπερ ἦγον τὴν στρατιάν, ἀπετράποντο ἐπ' οἴκου, νομίσαντες οὐδένα καιρὸν ἔτι εἶναι, τῶν τε Ἀθηναίων ἧσσῃ ἀπεληλυθότων, καὶ οὐκ ἀξιόχρεων αὐτῶν ὄντων δρᾶν τι ὧν κἀκεῖνος ἐπενόει. 2. μάλιστα δὲ ἀπῆλθον εἰδότες τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, ὅτε ἐξῆεσαν, πρὸς τὴν εἰρήνην μᾶλλον τὴν γνώμην ἔχοντας. XIV. Ξυνέβη τε εὐθὺς μετὰ τὴν ἐν Ἀμφιπόλει μάχην καὶ τὴν Ῥαμφίου ἀναχώρησιν ἐκ Θεσσαλίας, ὥστε πολέμου μὲν μηδὲν ἔτι ἅψασθαι μηδετέρους, πρὸς δὲ τὴν εἰρήνην μᾶλλον τὴν γνώμην εἶχον· οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι, πλεγέντες ἐπὶ τῷ Δηλίῳ, καὶ δι' ὀλίγου

Ch. XIII. 1. Πιερίου] See Col. Leake's North. Greece, vol. iv. p. 503. At οὐδένα καιρὸν ἔτι εἶναι we may, with Poppo, supply ἄγειν τὴν στρατιὰν from the foregoing context. For ἔτι εἶναι Bekker, from three MSS., edits εἶναι ἔτι. I have, however, preferred, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the common reading.

ἧσσῃ ἀπεληλυθότων] 'having gone (or, as we say, come) off with defeat,' i. e. been defeated. The τε — καὶ here seems to stand for μὲν—δὲ (as τε—τε infra vi. 34, and elsewhere); and I would render, 'inasmuch as, on the one hand, the Athenians had gone off defeated; and, on the other, they themselves being not in possession of forces competent to effect aught of what he had meditated.' Such is, I am persuaded, the sense to be assigned to οὐκ ἀξιόχρεων — ἐπενόει: these words containing the reason alleged by them for their turning back,—namely, that they were not a force sufficient to carry out any of the plans Brasidas had meditated. Of this sense of ἀξιόχρεως, which is rare, I have, however, noted examples in Herodot. iv. 126, εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἀξιόχρεος δοκέεις εἶναι σεωυτῷ τοῖσι ἐμοῖσι πρήγμασι ἀντιωθῆναι. Demosth. p. 36, 5, οὐδενὸς τῶν ἄλλων ὄντος ἀξιόχρεω περὶ τῶν πρωτείων ὑμῖν ἀντιτάξασθαι. Polyb. ii. 46, 3, ἀξ. ἀνταγωνιστής: and iv. 3, 3, νομίζοντες ἀξιοχρεωτέρους εἶναι σφᾶς πρὸς τὸ πολεμεῖν αὐτοῖς Ἀχαιοῖς, for so Schweigh. has edited, from conjecture, for vulg. ἀξιωτέρους, the sense arising from which, 'satis sibi virium rati sunt,' is any thing but suitable. And why he did not rather emend by ἀξιοχρέους, I cannot imagine; especially as he confesses he does not see the force of the comparative. Little doubt is there that Polybius in the above passage had in mind this of our author: of which, had Schweigh. been aware, he certainly would not have hesitated to edit ἀξιοχρέους. Finally, though I have met with no instance elsewhere of the word as used of persons, yet not unfrequently does it occur in the historians with δύναμις, φυλακὴ, φρουρὰ, στρατόπεδα, and other terms implying persons.

Ch. XIV. 1. ξυνέβη—ὥστε πολέμου μὲν μηδὲν ἔτι ἅψασθαι—εἶχον] There is here no little of irregularity in the construction,—first, as regards the use, seemingly redundant, of ὥστε after ξυνέβη: on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 531, obs. 2. Secondly, as regards the harsh transition, partaking of the nature of an anacoluthon, from the infin. ἅψασθαι to the indic. εἶχον: on which see Herm. on Vig. note 352, 6. Of this examples are adduced by Poppo from Xen. Anab. iv. 2, 15, ὥστε θαυμαστὸν πᾶσι γενέσθαι, καὶ ὑπώπτευον, and other writers. This Attic phrase, πολέμου ἅψασθαι, (which occurs also at ii. 17, and αὖθις ἐν Ἀμφιπόλει, καὶ οὐκ ἔχοντες τὴν ἐλπίδα τῆς ῥώμης πιστὴν ἔτι, ἧπερ οὐ προσεδέχοντο πρότερον τὰς σπονδὰς, δοκοῦντες τῇ παρούσῃ εὐτυχίᾳ καθυπέρτεροι γενήσεσθαι· (καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἅμα † ἐδεδίεσαν σφῶν, μὴ, διὰ τὰ σφάλματα ἐπαιρόμενοι, ἐπὶ πλέον ἀποστῶσι, μετεμέλοντό τε ὅτι μετὰ τὰ ἐν Πύλῳ, καλῶς παρασχὼν, οὐ ξυνέβησαν·) 2. οἱ δ' αὖ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, παρὰ γνώμην μὲν ἀποβαίνοντος σφίσι τοῦ πολέμου, ἐν ᾧ ᾤοντο ὀλίγων ἐτῶν καθαιρήσειν τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων δύναμιν, εἰ τὴν γῆν τέμνοιεν, περιπεσόντες δὲ τῇ ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ξυμφορᾷ, οἵα οὔπω γεγένητο τῇ Σπάρτῃ, καὶ λῃστευομένης τῆς χώρας ἐκ τῆς Πύλου καὶ Κυθήρων, αὐτομολούντων τε τῶν Εἱλώτων, καὶ ἀεὶ προσδοκίας οὔσης μή τι καὶ οἱ ὑπομένοντες, τοῖς ἔξω πίσυνοι, πρὸς τὰ παρόντα σφίσιν, ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερον, νεωτερίσωσι. 3. ξυνέβαινε δὲ καὶ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους αὐτοῖς τὰς τριακονταέτεις σπονδὰς ἐπ' ἐξόδῳ εἶναι, καὶ ἄλλας οὐκ ἤθελον σπένδεσθαι οἱ Ἀργεῖοι, εἰ μή τις αὐτοῖς τὴν Κυνουρίαν γῆν ἀποδώσει· ὥστ' ἀδύνατα εἶναι ἐφαίνετο Ἀργείοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις ἅμα viii. 2. Dionys. Hal. 2175, 7. Dio Cass. 292, 60. 548, 84. Plut. ii. 54, et al.) may be best rendered by the Latin aggredi, or capessere pugnam, or bellum, 'to meddle with war,' just as we say, 'to meddle with edge-tools.'

οὐκ ἔχοντες τὴν ἐλπίδα τῆς ῥώμης πιστὴν ἔτι] The full sense is, 'not having the hope of strength (meaning power and pre-eminence) [they once entertained] any longer assured,' 'not feeling that assured hope they once did;' namely, that sort of confident assurance which is apt to be inspired by strength, as if it were always to last. Of this expression, πιστὴ ἐλπὶς, an example occurs supra iii. 40: and ῥώμη, in this very rare sense, to denote a state in which men, or bodies of men in society, flourish in power and prosperity, also occurs infra vii. 63, εὐτυχούσης ῥώμης, and Plut. i. 259, ῥώμη πραγμάτων, 'a flourishing state of affairs.' The metaphor seems founded on a comparison with the state of a body flourishing in strength and health, since power and prosperity, whether in states or individuals, is, as it were, their state of health and vigour. So in Plato, p. 243, we have, ἐκφανὴς ἐγένετο ἡ τῆς πόλεως ῥώμη, and 135, E. τὴν τῆς πόλεως ὁρῶν ῥώμην: and supra iv. 18, ῥώμη πόλεως, where there is a conjoint notion of power and prosperity, which may be expressed by our term wealth, as formerly used to denote external prosperity. I have retained vulg. ἐδεδίεσαν, though there can be no doubt that ἐδέδισαν, which Goeller edits here and at iv. 55, is the true reading.

2. τοῖς ἔξω] Meaning, as Poppo explains, 'iis qui extra sunt,' 'foras abierunt,' 'digressi sunt;' in which sense the term occurs also at iv. 66, where the same persons are called οἱ φυγάδες and οἱ ἔξω. With respect to the term πίσυνος, it is reckoned by Suidas among the several glosses, or peculiar expressions, in our author; but in fact it is found in the best writers from Homer to Agathias. With πρὸς τὰ παρόντα σφίσιν, 'upon the present posture of affairs,' compare iv. 80. μή τι, πρὸς τὰ παρόντα, νεωτερίσωσι.

3. I have followed Bekker and Goeller in editing τριακονταέτεις, instead of τριακοντούτεις, (which Poppo has adopted,) from its being not only supported by the authority of two of the best MSS. (the Vat. and Clarend.) but further confirmed by certain others, and even the common reading τριακονταετεῖς, which merely differs from the above as to the accent. Again, internal evidence is quite in favour of τριακονταέτεις, since the old uncontracted forms were very prevalent in the early Attic Greek, though afterwards altered by scribes to the contracted forms of the later Greek.

ἐπ' ἐξόδῳ] 'on the point of expiring:' a phrase frequent in the historians who have imitated our author. I have followed Poppo and Goeller in retaining vulg. Κνουρίαν, for which Bekker edits, from some two or three MSS., Κυνοσουρίαν. See note on iv. 56.

ὥστ' ἀδύνατα εἶναι ἐφαίνετο] Arnold thinks there is here a remarkable condensation of the reasoning; which, when πολεμεῖν. τῶν τε ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ πόλεων ὑπώπτευόν τινας ἀποστήσεσθαι πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους· ὅπερ καὶ ἐγένετο. XV. Ταῦτ' οὖν ἀμφοτέροις αὐτοῖς λογιζομένοις ἐδόκει ποιητέα εἶναι ἡ ξύμβασις, καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, ἐπιθυμίᾳ τῶν ἀνδρῶν τῶν ἐκ τῆς νήσου κομίσασθαι· ἦσαν γὰρ οἱ Σπαρτιᾶται αὐτῶν πρῶτοί τε καὶ † ὁμοίως σφίσι ξυγγενεῖς. 2. ἤρξαντο μὲν οὖν καὶ εὐθὺς μετὰ τὴν ἅλωσιν αὐτῶν πράσσειν, ἀλλ' οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ‡ οὔπω ἤθελον, εὖ φερόμενοι, ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ καταλύεσθαι. σφαλέντων δὲ αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τῷ Δηλίῳ, παραχρῆμα οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι γνόντες νῦν μᾶλλον ἂν ἐνδεξομένους, ποιοῦνται τὴν ἐνιαύσιον ἐκεχειρίαν, ἐν ᾗ ἔδει ξυνιόντας καὶ περὶ τοῦ πλείονος χρόνου βουλεύεσθαι. XVI. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ καὶ ἡ ἐν Ἀμφιπόλει ἧσσα τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐγεγένητο, καὶ ἐτεθνήκει Κλέων τε καὶ Βρασίδας, οἵπερ ἀμφοτέρωθεν μάλιστα ἠναντιοῦντο τῇ εἰρήνῃ,—ὁ μὲν διὰ τὸ εὐτυχεῖν τε καὶ τιμᾶσθαι ἐκ τοῦ πολεμεῖν, ὁ δὲ, γενομένης ἡσυχίας, καταφανέστερος νομίζων ἂν εἶναι κακουργῶν, καὶ ἀπιστότερος διαβάλλων,—τότε δὲ οἱ † ἐν † ἑκατέρᾳ τῇ πόλει developed, is as follows: 'So that as they thought it impossible to maintain a war at once against Athens and Argos, they were disposed to make peace with Athens.' But in reality there is no attempt at reasoning at all, and no condensation. Here, as elsewhere, we have merely a harsh brevity, by the suppression of the words ὥστε πρὸς τὴν εἰρήνην μᾶλλον τὴν γνώμην εἶχον, which, though they had occurred at the beginning of the chapter, ought, for clearness, to have been here repeated.

CH. XV. 1. ἐπιθυμίᾳ τῶν ἀνδρῶν—κομίσασθαι] 'by desire of recovering the men from the island,' meaning the men who were taken from the island: on which idiom see notes on iv. 108, and v. 24. Poppo aptly compares a passage of Plato, Crit. 14, οὐδ' ἐπιθυμία σε ἄλλης πόλεως οὐδ' ἄλλων νόμων ἔλαβεν εἰδέναι.

καὶ ὁμοίως σφίσι ξυγγενεῖς] Considering the almost absolute impossibility of extracting any tolerable sense out of ὁμοίως, little doubt is there that Bekker's conjecture, ὁμοίοις, presents the true reading. Thus the sense will be, 'related to those who were like unto them,' meaning the principal persons.

2. οὔπω] I have now chosen, with Bekker, to receive this from several of the best MSS., instead of vulg. οὔπως, retained by Poppo and Goeller; the former yielding by far the preferable sense. On the phrase εὖ φερόμενοι, just after, see note at ii. 60; and on ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ, further on, see note at i. 27.

CH. XVI. 1. ὁ μὲν διὰ—διαβάλλων] Here is explained the cause of the strong feeling against the peace in the leading persons of the two states, while the people at large were strongly inclined to it; namely, from selfish motives in both these individuals, though in the one, of finer alloy, in the other, of the basest metal; the latter thinking that after peace had taken place, he should be more liable to be detected in his roguery. So Aristophanes, Eq. 800, cited by Poppo, makes the sausage-seller say to Cleon, 'You are therefore opposed to peace in order that the people ὑπὸ τοῦ πολέμου καὶ τῆς ὁμίχλης ἃ πανουργεῖς μὴ καθορᾷ σου.'

In the words καὶ ἀπιστότερος διαβάλλων, (of which the sense is, 'and be less credited when calumniating,' i. e. in his calumnies,) there is an allusion to the weapon with which Cleon assailed his political adversaries,—namely, that of calumny. To which Diodotus adverts supra iii. 42, when he says, εὖ δὲ διαβαλὼν ἐκπλῆξαι ἂν τοὺς ἀντεροῦντας.

At τότε δὲ, as Poppo points out, we have the commencement of the apodosis answering to the protasis a little before. After this I have, with Haack, Goeller, and Poppo, inserted, from four MSS., the words οἱ ἐν, as the context seems to require. Bekker, however, has not ventured to receive them; and indeed so difficult is it to imagine how they should have been in the bulk of the MSS. omitted, that I suspect the true reading has yet to be dis-σπεύδοντες τὰ μάλιστα τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, Πλειστοάναξ τε ὁ Παυσανίου βασιλεὺς Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ Νικίας ὁ Νικηράτου, πλεῖστα τῶν τότε εὖ φερόμενος ἐν στρατηγίαις, πολλῷ δὴ μᾶλλον προεθυμοῦντο, Νικίας μὲν βουλόμενος, ἐν ᾧ ἀπαθὴς ἦν καὶ ἠξιοῦτο, διασώσασθαι τὴν εὐτυχίαν, καὶ ἐς τε τὸ αὐτίκα πόνων πεπαῦσθαι καὶ αὐτὸς, καὶ τοὺς πολίτας παῦσαι, καὶ τῷ μέλλοντι χρόνῳ καταλιπεῖν ὄνομα, ὡς οὐδὲν σφήλας τὴν πόλιν διεγένετο, νομίζων ἐκ τοῦ ἀκινδύνου τοῦτο ξυμβαίνειν, καὶ ὅστις ἐλάχιστα τύχῃ αὐτὸν παραδίδωσι, τὸ δὲ ἀκίνδυνον τὴν εἰρήνην παρέχειν· Πλειστοάναξ δὲ, ὑπὸ τῶν ἐχθρῶν διαβαλλόμενος περὶ τῆς καθόδου, καὶ ἐς ἐνθυμίαν τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἀεὶ προβαλλόμενος ὑπ' αὐτῶν, ὁπότε τι πταίσειαν, ὡς διὰ τὴν ἐκείνου κάθοδον παρανομηθεῖσαν ταῦτα ξυμβαίνοι. 2. τὴν γὰρ πρόμαντιν τὴν ἐν Δελφοῖς ἐπητιῶντο αὐτὸν πεῖσαι μετ' Ἀριστοκλέους τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ ὥστε χρῆσαι Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐπὶ πολὺ τάδε θεωροῖς ἀφικνουμένοις, "Διὸς υἱοῦ ἡμιθέου τὸ σπέρμα ἐκ τῆς ἀλλοτρίας ἐς τὴν ἑαυcovered. Possibly it may be τότε δ' οἱ ἑκατέρας τῆς πόλεως. The οἱ in this case might easily be absorbed in the preceding δ'; and when the c or ς came to be, as often, mistaken for an iota adscript, the ἐν would easily creep in from the margin, and the τῆς πόλεως would, of course, be accommodated to ἑκατέρᾳ.

πλεῖστα εὖ φερόμενος ἐν στρατηγίαις] 'because he had never sustained any signal defeat,' and consequently was, as we learn from vi. 17, termed εὐτυχής. Καὶ ἠξιοῦτο, 'was held in honour.' Διεγένετο, 'had gone through [his course].' See my Lex. N. T. in voc. Ἐκ τοῦ ἀκινδύνου, 'from the undangerous [course].' Before ὅστις following supply ἐκείνῳ, which, Poppo observes, 'in ipso ὅστις ab ὃς discernendo (cf. Matth. Gr. Gr. § 483, 6.) inest.' See note on ii. 44.

ἐς ἐνθυμίαν—ὑπ' αὐτῶν] 'quum Lacedæmoniorum animis ab illis quasi religio semper objiceretur.' (Portus.) Ἐνθυμία signifies serious reflection, and here denotes that sort of scrupulous reflection or dwelling on any thing which is engendered by superstition. And hence may be emended a passage of Dio Cass. p. 195, 2, imitated from this: καὶ ἐπιθειάζοντες, καὶ ἐς ἐνθύμιον αὐτοῦ προβάλλοντος, where read, for αὐτοῦ, αὐτὸν, scil. Κικέρωνα. Προβάλλεσθαι signifies 'to be put forward,' and is often used of a thing put forward as a pretext; though sometimes (as here and in the above passage of Dio Cass.) of a person held out as the cause of any disaster. Of ἐς ἐνθυμίαν the full sense is, 'by way of [infusing] a feeling of religious scruple.'

2. τὸ σπέρμα] Meaning 'the offspring.' Of the word as used in this sense, (which is not unfrequent in the Old and New Testament writers,) the present is, I believe, one of the few examples to be found in the classical writers: though others occur in Eurip. Med. 798. (ex emend. Elmsl.) Soph. Trach. 303. Æschyl. Suppl. 147. 157. The use in question is, as Poppo remarks, 'one peculiar, and confined to poetic language, with which that of an oracle well agrees.' And that the answer of the oracle was itself, according to custom, couched in verse, there can be little doubt. And though Plutarch de Pyth. Orac. vii. 586 (Reiske), attempts to prove, from the present passage and another supra i. 118, that oracles, even in ancient times, were sometimes delivered in prose; nevertheless we must remember that the oracles were often, though essentially poetic, yet not preserved in the verse-like form, or occasionally the substance only repeated, as was manifestly the case with the two given in these passages of Thucydides.

Added to this peculiar use of σπέρμα is that of ἀναφέρειν in the sense reducere, 'to bring back;' of which very rare use the only examples besides the present that I have met with, are found in Aristot. Met. iii. ἐπεὶ πάντα ἀναφέρεται πρὸς τὸ πρῶτον, and (though there the word is used in a metaphorical sense) Plut. i. 462, E. ἀναφέρω παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ, 'I bring back an answer from the god,' and i. 783, ἀναφέρει τῶν ἀναφέρειν· εἰ δὲ μὴ, ἀργυρέᾳ εὐλάκᾳ εὐλάξειν·" 3. χρόνῳ δὲ προτρέψαι τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, φεύγοντα αὐτὸν ἐς Λύκαιον διὰ τὴν ἐκ τῆς Ἀττικῆς ποτε μετὰ δώρων δοκοῦσαν ἀναχώρησιν, καὶ ἥμισυ τῆς οἰκίας τοῦ ἱεροῦ τότε τοῦ Διὸς οἰκοῦντα φόβῳ τῶν Λακεδαι- με, 'brings me back,' viz. to mind. The more usual term in such a case is κατάγειν.

In the phrase which follows, ἀργυρέᾳ εὐλάκᾳ εὐλ., 'they would plough with a silver ploughshare,' there is not, what the Schol. supposes, a covert way of saying that there would be a famine, corn being bought at a very dear rate; which would involve something not a little frigid and forced. It is sufficient to regard this as a quaint and out-of-the-way mode of conveying a certain threat in case of disobedience; and the phrase in question may be compared with that in our own language, 'to pay dear for any thing,' meaning to buy it at too dear a rate by suffering severely for it. The form εἰ δὲ μὴ, like our 'or else,' here, as often, serves to introduce a threat of punishment for disobedience. Those, then, who should plough with a silver ploughshare, would certainly buy their corn at a dear rate, would pay dear for it, repent their purchase. Accordingly we have here an agricultural allusion, very suitably addressed to an agricultural people. I know not any thing entirely parallel to this in the ancient writers; for as to the saying of Augustus, reported by Sueton. Octav. Cæs. c. 25, (which Bauer here compares,) 'aureo hamo piscari,' there we have only a quaint mode of expressing the pursuit of petty advantage at a great hazard.

3. Λύκαιον] This is supposed by Colonel Leake, Mor. ii. p. 313, sq. to be the mountain with three peaks called by the names Diophorti, Karyatiko, and Tetrazi. For δοκοῦσαν, a little after, Haack and Poppo edit, from several MSS., δόκησιν, while Bekker and Goeller retain the common reading; and on good grounds; for δόκησιν has every appearance of being a mere error of the scribes, or a false alteration suggested by δώρων, as seeming to be, though, as will be seen, not really, required by the context. It may be supposed that the reading μετὰ δώρων δοκήσεως, found in some MSS., proceeded from certain critics who stumbled at μετὰ δώρων δοκοῦσαν, and, as is plain from the annotation of the Scholiast, wished thus to remove a harshness. Certainly not a shadow of proof is there that the term δόκησις, as used for δοχὴ, ever existed, much less in the age of Thucydides. Thus internal evidence is decidedly in favour of δοκοῦσαν; which has, moreover, the greater appearance of being the true reading, from its being, as Arnold suggests, 'more agreeable to the caution of Thucydides to say that a man was considered to have been bribed, than to assert that he had been bribed.' Such, too, is, as Duker shows, the way in which he speaks of the thing, supra ii. 21, δόξαντι χρήμασι πεισθῆναι τὴν ἀναχώρησιν. The sense, then, may be thus expressed: 'because of the retreat formerly from Attica, which was thought [to have taken place] for gifts received.' Such is the use of μετὰ to signify 'on account of,' at vii. 57, μετὰ μισθοῦ, and elsewhere in the best writers.

Of the words following, ἥμισυ τῆς οἰκίας —οἰκοῦντα, the sense is, as Dobree renders, 'habitantem in ædibus, quarum dimidia pars erat in Jovis luco.' The Scholiast makes the thing clear by saying, τοῦ δὲ τόπου καθ' ὃν ᾠκοδόμησε τὴν οἰκίαν, τὸ μὲν ἥμισυ ἦν ἱερὸν, τὸ δὲ ἥμισυ βέβηλον. The reason for the expedient was, as Arnold says, that 'he might be in the sanctuary at a moment's notice, and yet be able to perform some of the common offices of life without preparation.' See iv. 97, 2. To descend, however, to the rationale of this singular kind of expression, it may be regarded as a highly-condensed one, which, when fully evolved, will stand thus: 'living, as to half of his house, on ground which formed part of the sacred precincts.' This use of the genit. τοῦ ἱεροῦ, is like that found at i. 134, οἴκημα ὃ ἦν τοῦ ἱεροῦ, 'which belonged to the sacred precinct:' and ii. 4, οἴκημα ὃ ἦν τοῦ τείχους. The τότε is to be construed with οἰκοῦντα; a transposition found also at iii. 87, 4, and elsewhere.

For τῶν several of the best MSS. have τῷ, which was edited by Haack, Bekker, and Goeller (in his 1st edition); while Poppo and Goeller (in his 2nd edition) retain the common reading; and rightly; since it is strongly established by two passages of our author elsewhere, v. 11, φόβῳ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, and i. 26, δέει τῶν Κερ. Far more probable is it that the scribes should have mistaken the ν for an iota adscript, than that our author should have used an idiom which here would be not a little harsh.

μονίων, ἔτει ἑνὸς δέοντι εἰκοστῷ τοῖς ὁμοίοις χοροῖς καὶ θυσίαις καταγαγεῖν, ὥσπερ ὅτε τὸ πρῶτον, Λακεδαίμονα κτίζοντες, τοὺς βασιλέας καθίσταντο. XVII. Ἀχθόμενος οὖν τῇ διαβολῇ ταύτῃ, καὶ νομίζων ἐν εἰρήνῃ μὲν οὐδενὸς σφάλματος γιγνομένου, καὶ ἅμα τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων τοὺς ἄνδρας κομιζομένων, κἂν αὐτὸς τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἀνεπίληπτος εἶναι, πολέμου δὲ καθεστῶτος, ἀεὶ ἀνάγκην εἶναι τοὺς προὔχοντας ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμφορῶν διαβάλλεσθαι, προὐθυμήθη τὴν ξύμβασιν. 2. καὶ τόν τε χειμῶνα τοῦτον ἦσαν ἐς λόγους, καὶ πρὸς τὸ ἔαρ ἤδη παρασκευή τε προεπανεσείσθη ἀπὸ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, περιαγγελλομένη κατὰ πόλεις ὡς ‡ ἐπὶ τειχισμὸν, ὅπως οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι μᾶλλον ἐσακούοιεν· καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἐκ τῶν συνόδων, ἅμα πολλὰς δικαιώσεις προενεγκόντων ἀλλήλοις, ξυνεχωρεῖτο ὥστε, ἃ ἑκάτεροι πολέμῳ

Ch. XVII. 1. ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμφορῶν διαβάλλεσθαι] 'would incur censure from calamities.' Προὐθυμήθη τὴν ξύμβασιν, 'he strove to bring about,' 'zealously furthered the peace.' Compare v. 39, and viii. 90, προθ. τὴν ὀλιγαρχίαν.

2. παρασκευὴ — τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων] Meaning that 'an armament was openly held out [against the Athenians] on the part of the Lacedæmonians;' or, according to the literal sense, 'was openly shaken aloft by the Lacedæmonians;' there being here a metaphor derived from brandishing any weapon aloft at a person for the sake of terrifying him. So iv. 126, ἐπανάσεισις τῶν ὅπλων. Thus the real sense intended is, 'the Lacedæmonians threatened an armament against them.' I have followed Portus and the commentators generally in rendering the προ by palam; though I am inclined to think that it is merely used like the προ in προτείνω at Eurip. Andr. 428, and Her. 21, in προσείω at Ælian, V. H. xii. 23, τὰ ξίφη πρ., and another passage of our author vi. 86, πρ. φόβον,—namely, in the sense forward or out, which is nearly equivalent to at. And so intentare in Latin, e. g. Livy, vi. 27, 7, 'Hernicis Prænestinis jam intentari arma.' On this use of προ see note at i. 17. Of παρασκευὴ to signify an armament or military expedition, other examples occur at ii. 23. iii. 45. 62. vi. 31. With περιαγγελλομένη here, of which the sense is, 'proclaimed,' or 'ordered,' by messengers sent round, compare ii. 10, περιήγγελλον στρατιὰν, where see note.

For vulg. ὡς ἐπιτειχισμὸν, I have, with Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, edited ὡς ἐπὶ τειχισμόν: and to the authority for it adduced from the Cod. Græv. I am enabled to add that of the Cod. Clarend. Poppo has shown that τειχισμὸς is used not only, as at viii. 34, to denote the erecting of a fortification with the view of blockading a city, but also of erecting any fort in an enemy's territory, ἐπὶ τῇ χώρᾳ, in order to annoy the country; in which case it stands for ἐπιτειχισμὸς, which is the more usual term, though in most instances only when τῇ χώρᾳ is added, as at i. 122, ἐπιτειχισμὸν τῇ χώρᾳ, for τειχισμὸν ἐπὶ τῇ χώρᾳ. Also Arrian, E. A. i. 24, 11. iv. 27, 11, φρούριον ἐπιτετειχισμένον τῇ χώρᾳ. Of its use without the addition an example occurs at vii. 19, ἐργαλεῖα ἡτοίμαζον ἐς τὸν ἐπιτειχισμὸν, and another in Xen. Hist. v. 1, 2, (edit. Thiem.) ἀκούσας ταῦτα περὶ τοῦ ἐπιτειχισμοῦ. Moreover, as τειχισμὸς is sometimes, as in Demosth. p. 325, put for τειχοποιΐα, so it may not only bear the sense wall-building, but, considering that the word τεῖχος is used indifferently for a wall or a fort, also fort-building, the building of a fort. And in this sense τειχισμὸς occurs in Plut. vol. i. 121, d.

πολλὰς δικαιώσεις προενεγκόντων ἀλλήλοις] 'Quum sibi invicem multas postulationes tanquam justas protulissent.' (Wyttenb. ap. Pop.) So the Scholiast explains δικ. by αἰτήματα δίκαια. The term δικαίωσις simply signifies demand at i. 141, but here demand of right, the demanding a thing as a right: of which sense, not a little rare, an example elsewhere occurs in Dio Cass. 296, 24, (a passage evidently imitated from the present,) προτεινάμενοι πολλὰς δικαιώσεις: and in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 225, 10, Ἀνίσταται δὲ ἐκ τούτου μείζων τῆς προτέρας ἔρις, ἑκατέρου ('each party') τὸ πλέον ἔχειν ἀφανῶς διωκομένου· τὸ δὲ μὴ μεῖον (scil. ἔχειν) ἀναφανδὸν, ἀπὸ δικαιώσεως τοιᾶσδ' ('from a demand of right of the following kind') ἐπισυνάπτοντος, where, for διωκομένου, read, with Steph., δὴ ὀρεγομένου, or rather πη ὀρεγ. (which seems to have been suggested by a passage of our author here evidently had in view by Dionys.) Also, for ἐπισυνάπτοντος, read ἐπισυνάγοντος, as taken in the sense concluding, inferring, proving, (what is otherwise expressed by συμπεραίνοντος,) according to the dialectical sense of the word found not merely in the dialecticians, as Sext. Empiricus, but also in other writers, as Lucian, ii. 25, οὕτω συνάγων οἰκεῖον εἶναι ἰατρῷ ἱστορίαν συγγράφειν, 'hac ratione colligens, concludens.'

ἔσχον, ἀποδόντας τὴν εἰρήνην ποιεῖσθαι, Νίσαιαν δ' ἔχειν Ἀθηναίους, (ἀνταπαιτούντων γὰρ Πλάταιαν οἱ Θηβαῖοι ἔφασαν οὐ βίᾳ, ἀλλ' ὁμολογίᾳ, αὐτῶν προσχωρησάντων, καὶ οὐ προδόντων, ἔχειν τὸ χωρίον, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τῷ αὐτῷ τρόπῳ τὴν Νίσαιαν,) τότε δὴ παρακαλέσαντες τοὺς ἑαυτῶν ξυμμάχους οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, καὶ ψηφισαμένων, πλὴν Βοιωτῶν, καὶ Κορινθίων, καὶ Ἠλείων, καὶ Μεγαρέων, τῶν ἄλλων ὥστε καταλύεσθαι (τούτοις δὲ οὐκ ἤρεσκε τὰ πρασσόμενα), ποιοῦνται τὴν ξύμβασιν, καὶ ἐσπείσαντο πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους καὶ ὤμοσαν, ἐκεῖνοί τε πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, τάδε.

XVIII. "Σπονδὰς ἐποιήσαντο Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι κατὰ τάδε, καὶ ὤμοσαν κατὰ πόλεις. περὶ μὲν τῶν ἱερῶν τῶν κοινῶν, θύειν, καὶ ἰέναι, καὶ μαντεύεσθαι, καὶ θεωρεῖν κατὰ τὰ πάτρια τὸν βουλόμενον, καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν ἀδεῶς. 2. τὸ δ' ἱερὸν καὶ τὸν νεὼν τὸν ἐν Δελφοῖς τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος καὶ Δελφοὺς αὐτονόμους εἶναι, καὶ αὐτοτελεῖς, καὶ αὐτοδίκους, καὶ αὐτῶν

Ch. XVIII. 1. τῶν ἱερῶν τῶν κοινῶν] Meaning the temples common to all the nations of Greece, as those of Delphi, Olympia, Nemea, and the Isthmia, where the four great common festivals, with games, &c. were celebrated. See Arnold, and Morus on Isocr. Paneg. ch. 48, referred to by Poppo. The word ἰέναι is not, as it has been thought, superfluous, since thus καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν would have no meaning; but, united with those words, it provides for the security of persons on their way to the temples in question for the purposes mentioned.

2. αὐτονόμους, καὶ αὐτοτελεῖς, καὶ αὐτοδίκους] By αὐτονόμους is clearly meant independent, not subject to the laws of any nation that might claim power over them, as the Phocians always did: but of αὐτοτελεῖς and αὐτοδίκους the sense is not so certain. Αὐτοτελὴς may, Poppo and Arnold think, have reference to revenue, (similarly as ἀτελὴς, ἰσοτελὴς, and συντελὴς.) and mean, 'themselves receiving and disbursing all state revenues.' And this view I find supported by Stob. Ecl. Phys. t. ii. 54, τέλος—τὸ ἀνάλωμα—καθ' ὃ λέγεταί τις αὐτοτελὴς καὶ εὐτελής. But it may be taken de summa imperandi potestate, by which a state has itself the τέλος or authority, and is not under the jurisdiction of another, and liable to pay contributions on that account. Such is the frequent use of the word in Dio Cass., and especially in 685, 69. 922, 51, μήτε αὐτόδικος μήτε αὐτοτελὴς, where it is evident the writer had this passage in mind. And so Joseph. p. 853, μετ' αὐτοτελοῦς τῆς διανοίας ἐν αὐτοδίκῳ τῇ πατρίδι, (a passage also plainly written with a view to the present,) and p. 620, πολιτείας αὐτοτελοῦς. So also αὐτοτελὴς in Polyb. iii. 4, 4 & 95. vi. 18, 7, as said of one who is independent of any other; and the expression in Hesych. αὐτοτελὴς δίκη, 'independent judgment,' or judgment from which there is no appeal. This, too, the Scholiast certainly means when he explains αὐτοτελεῖς by αὐτοτελεῖς αὐτοὺς, καὶ μὴ αὐτοῖς συντελοῦντας· on which sense of συντελ. see note on ii. 15, and iv. 76. With respect to αὐτοδίκους, that plainly means 'those who have justice in their own hands, and are not obliged to seek it of any other state.' Compare i. 77, ἐλασσούμενοι γὰρ ἐν ταῖς ξυμβολαίαις πρὸς τοὺς ξυμμάχους δίκαις, καὶ παρ' ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ἐν τοῖς ὁμοίοις νόμοις ποιήσαντες τὰς κρίσεις. And so the Scholiast on the present passage:

καὶ τῆς γῆς τῆς ἑαυτῶν, κατὰ τὰ πάτρια. 3. ἔτη δὲ εἶναι τὰς σπονδὰς πεντήκοντα Ἀθηναίοις καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις τοῖς Ἀθηναίων καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίων, ἀδόλους καὶ ἀβλαβεῖς, καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν. 4. ὅπλα δὲ μὴ ἐξέστω ἐπιφέρειν ἐπὶ πημονῇ, μήτε Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐπ᾽ Ἀθηναίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους, μήτε Ἀθηναίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐπὶ Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους, μήτε τέχνῃ μήτε μηχανῇ μηδεμιᾷ. ἢν δέ τι διάφορον ᾖ πρὸς ἀλλήλους, δικαίῳ χρήσθων καὶ ὅρκοις, καθ᾽ ὅ,τι ἂν ξύνθωνται. 5. ἀποδόντων δὲ Ἀθηναίοις Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι Ἀμφίπολιν. ὅσας δὲ πόλεις παρέδυσαν Λακεδαιμόνιοι Ἀθηναίοις, ἐξέστω ἀπιέναι ὅποι ἂν βούλωνται, αὐτοὺς καὶ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἔχοντας· τὰς δὲ πόλεις φερούσας τὸν φόρον τὸν ἐπ᾽ Ἀριστείδου αὐτονόμους εἶναι. ὅπλα δὲ μὴ ἐξέστω ἐπιφέρειν Ἀθηναίους μηδὲ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐπὶ κακῷ, ἀποδιδόντων τὸν φόρον, ἐπειδὴ αἱ σπονδαὶ ἐγένοντο. εἰσὶ δὲ αἵδε, Ἄργιλος, Στάγειρος, Ἄκανθος, Σκῶλος, Ὄλυνθος, Σπάρτωλος. ξυμμάχους δ᾽ εἶναι μηδετέρων, μήτε Λακεδαιμονίων μήτε Ἀθηναίων· ἢν δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι πείθωσι τὰς πόλεις, βουλομένας ταύτας ἐξέστω ξυμμάχους ποιεῖσθαι αὐτοὺς Ἀθηναίους. Μηκυβερναίους δὲ, καὶ Σαναίους, καὶ Σιγγαίους, οἰκεῖν τὰς πόλεις τὰς ἑαυτῶν, καθάπερ Ὀλύνθιοι καὶ Ἀκάνθιοι. ἀποδόντων δὲ Ἀθηναίοις Λακεδαιμόνιοι αὐτόδικοι ἄνθρωποι οἱ παρ᾽ αὐτοῖς δίκας διδόντες καὶ λαμβάνοντες, καὶ μὴ ὑπ᾽ ἄλλων κρινόμενοι· ἐν αὐτοῖς τὴν διαφορὰν δίκῃ λύοντες, καὶ μὴ μετάγοντες αὐτὴν εἰς ὑπερορίους ἀνθρώπους. So also the verb αὐτοδικεῖν in Poll. viii. 24. On the subject itself of a state αὐτόδικος, (or sovereign,) and one not so, but ξυντελὴς as to another, see Arnold.

3. ἀδόλους καὶ ἀβλαβεῖς] 'without any guile or wrong done to them:' a common form of expression in treaties. See note on iv. 118.

4. μήτε τέχνῃ μήτε μηχανῇ μηδεμιᾷ] A usual form of expression in treaties, as v. 47. Demosth. p. 1350. Xen. Anab. iv. 5, 16. vii. 2, 8. For δικαίῳ Duker and Haack would read, from some MSS., δίκαις, which they think was read by the Scholiast; while Goeller, Poppo, and Bekker retain δικαίῳ, and very properly; since evidence both external and internal is in its favour. No proof is there that the Scholiast read δίκαις, but much more reason is there to suppose that he read δικαίῳ, to which his gloss, κρίσει δικαίᾳ, is far more suitable than to δίκαις. And how easily the catch-word might in this, as in various other instances, be corrupted, from a false text, it is scarcely necessary to observe. The Scholiast rightly explains the word to mean, as does also Goeller, jure. And with reason may we ask, with the commentator just mentioned, why our author should not once, or rarely, use δικαίῳ in the sense jure? Arnold, indeed, objects that thus the article cannot be omitted; and hence he would read δίκαις. But he forgets that δικαίῳ is here not an adjective, but a substantive, and therefore does not require the article, nay, scarcely admits of it, δικαίῳ being not unfrequently used (as δικαιώματι often is) to denote justification, or literally, 'pleading one's cause judicio,' as i. 41. v. 97. vi. 80. And so at iii. 54, we have, παρεχόμενοι—ἃ ἔχομεν δίκαια. Nor is this use rare in other of the best writers, as Eurip. Iph. A. 810, τοὐμὸν δίκαιον ἐμὲ λέγειν χρεών: and Plut. ii. 719, b, δίκαιον, ἴσον. Nay, it is as old as Homer himself. So Od. xviii. 413, and xx. 322, οὐκ ἂν δή τις ἐπὶ ῥηθέντι δικαίῳ—χαλεπαίνοι, where δικαίῳ is put generically for δικαίοις. Finally, so in Eurip. Bacch. 672, we have, τοῖς γὰρ δικαίοις οὐχὶ θυμοῦσθαι χρεών.

Here the term χράομαι bears, as often, the sense 'to employ,' 'to resort to.

καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι Πάνακτον. 6. ἀποδόντων δὲ καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι Λακεδαιμονίοις Κορυφάσιον, καὶ Κύθηρα, καὶ Μεθώνην, καὶ Πτελεὸν, καὶ Ἀταλάντην, καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας ὅσοι εἰσὶ Λακεδαιμονίων ἐν τῷ δημοσίῳ ‡ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἢ ἄλλοθί που ὅσης Ἀθηναῖοι ἄρχουσιν ἐν δημοσίῳ· καὶ τοὺς ἐν Σκιώνῃ πολιορκουμένους Πελοποννησίων ἀφεῖναι, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ὅσοι Λακεδαιμονίων ξύμμαχοι ἐν Σκιώνῃ εἰσὶ, καὶ ὅσους Βρασίδας ἐσέπεμψε, καὶ εἴ τις τῶν ξυμμάχων τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ἐν Ἀθήναις ἐστὶν ἐν τῷ δημοσίῳ, ἢ ἄλλοθί που ἧς Ἀθηναῖοι ἄρχουσιν ἐν δημοσίῳ. 7. ἀποδόντων δὲ καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι οὔστινας ἔχουσιν Ἀθηναίων καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων, κατὰ ταὐτά. 8. Σκιωναίων δὲ, καὶ Τορωναίων, καὶ Σερμυλίων, καὶ εἴ τινα ἄλλην πόλιν ἔχουσιν Ἀθηναῖοι, Ἀθηναίους βουλεύεσθαι περὶ αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων πόλεων ὅ τι ἂν δοκῇ αὐτοῖς. 9. ὅρκους δὲ ποιήσασθαι Ἀθηναίους πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους κατὰ πόλεις. ὀμνύντων δὲ τὸν ἐπιχώριον ὅρκον ἑκάτεροι τὸν μέγιστον ἐξ ἑκάστης πόλεως. ὁ δ᾽ ὅρκος ἔστω ὅδε, 'Ἐμμενῶ ταῖς

6. Πτελεὸν] Besides other towns bearing this name, there was one on the sea-coast of Pthiotis in Thessaly, and another mentioned by Strabo as being on the borders of Messenia and Elis. Since we cannot account for the Athenians holding the former, the latter may be supposed the one here meant. This (probably situated on some peninsular promontory, such as that of Cyparissias) the Athenians, it seems, had occupied, as they afterwards did another similarly-situated place on the Laconian coast. See vii. 26. And from the time when they occupied Coryphasium, they made frequent descents on the Peloponnesian coast, and probably occupied more or less permanently, several,—and among them this Pteleum. Dr. Arnold, indeed, objects that the order of the places is against this supposition; and he agrees with Poppo in regarding the word as corrupt. But surely it were little probable that the name should have been accidentally corrupted into a real name of a place. Hence more likely is it that our author introduced the name out of its geographical order, than that the name should in all the known MSS. be corrupted into a real name of a place so little known as Pteleum.

For vulg. τῷ Ἀθηναίων, I have, with Haack and Poppo, edited, on the authority of several MSS. (to which I am enabled to add that of the Clarend. and Cantab.) τῶν Ἀθηναίων, since internal evidence is quite in favour of the latter, and the Atticism is one frequent in our author, though often destroyed by the scribes.

9. τὸν ὅρκον—τὸν μέγιστον] This expression has before occurred at iv. 86. With respect to the thing itself, there were, as Duker and Goeller show, various kinds of oaths, differing merely in their forms or writing. The most binding were those which they swore by their children, or those by which they devoted themselves and their children to curses, if they swore falsely.

I have followed Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker, in adopting the conjecture of F. Portus, ἐμμενῶ, instead of vulg. ἐμμένω, which, though found in all the MSS., is indefensible; and indeed, in such minutiæ as the present, MSS. have little or no authority. Thus, for instance, in another passage, ch. 47, Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker agree in editing, for vulg. ἐμμένω τῇ ξυμμαχίᾳ καὶ οὐ παραβήσομαι, ἐμμενῶ τῇ, &c. And in Herodot. ix. 106, πίστει τε καταλαβόντες καὶ ὁρκίοισι ἐμμένειν τε καὶ ἀποστήσεσθαι, Schaefer, as Wesseling had already approved, edited ἐμμενεῖν. But were it not that the future tense in those passages immediately follows, the present would be equally correct, as appears from a passage of Eurip. Phœn. 1256, Ἐπὶ τοῖσδε δ᾽ ἐσπείσαντο, κἀν μεταιχμίοις Ὅρκους συνῆψαν ἐμμένειν (scil. ἐν τοῖσδε) στρατηλάται. In passages, however, like the one before us, where the first person is used in a form of solemn engagement, which shall bind the conduct as to the future, the future tense is demanded by propriety. And vain were it to adduce such passages as that of Plato, p. 39, τῷ ξυνθήκαις καὶ ταῖς σπονδαῖς ταῖσδε δικαίως καὶ ἀδόλως.' ἔστω δὲ Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις κατὰ ταὐτὰ ὅρκος πρὸς Ἀθηναίους, τὸν δὲ ὅρκον ἀνανεοῦσθαι κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ἀμφοτέρους. στήλας δὲ στῆσαι Ὀλυμπιάσι, καὶ Πυθοῖ, καὶ Ἰσθμῷ, καὶ ἐν Ἀθήναις ἐν πόλει, καὶ ἐν Λακεδαίμονι ἐν Ἀμυκλαίῳ. εἰ δέ τι τιμήματι ἐμμένω, and p. 50, a. ἐμμένομεν οἷς ὡμολογήσαμεν, since the action, namely, of accepting a proposed agreement, is present. Finally, so in Aristoph. Ach. 199, we have, ταύτας (scil. σπονδὰς) δέχομαι καὶ σπένδομαι, κάκπίομαι.

τὸν δὲ ὅρκον ἀνανεοῦσθαι κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν] This arose partly from the feeling that all laws and public acts required to be solemnly confirmed from time to time, to prevent them from becoming obsolete, and partly lest the succeeding magistrates might think themselves not bound by the acts of their predecessors, unless they themselves undertook the obligation. From a passage in an ancient treaty cited by Wasse, it appears that when the oaths were not renewed every year, the treaty was at least read every year in the presence of the parties, ten days' notice being given previous to the reading thereof.

In ἀνανεοῦσθαι τὸν ὅρκον we have the use of the middle voice in an active sense, i. e. simply as a deponent. This use, however, is rare in the case of the present tense; though I have noted examples elsewhere in Eurip. Hel. 728. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 661, 2, νόμους ἀν. Dio Cass. 287, 34. 709, 66. 727, 74.

στήλας στῆσαι] 'to fix columns.' On this custom of inscribing public engagements (as treaties, &c.) on pillars, either by cutting the letters thereon, or by fastening brazen plates engraved, see Wachsmuth, Ant. Gr. vol. ii. 2, p. 238. That Ἰσθμοῖ, instead of Ἰσθμῷ, is the true reading, is now generally agreed, and with reason; since as Πυθοῖ is, in effect, an old form of the dative of Πυθῶ, (occurring in Hom. Il. ix. 405, Πυθοῖ ἔνι, and Od. viii. 80.) so Ἰσθμοῖ will be the old dative for Ἰσθμῷ. In either case ἐν is left understood, which is expressed in a passage of Simonides, frag. lxvii. 3, Ὀλυμπίᾳ δὶς, ἐν δὲ Πυθῶνι τρία, Δύο δ' ἐν Ἰσθμοῖ, πεντέδεκ' ἐν Νεμέᾳ. But the form Ἰσθμῷ is also found in Simonides, frag. lxxi. 5, Ἰσθμῷ δ' ἐν ζαθέῳ, where, for Ἰσθμῷ, the true reading might be supposed to be Ἰσθμοῖ, were not the former (found in all the MSS.) confirmed by a passage of Pind. Olymp. vii. 147, κλειᾷ τ' ἐν Ἰσθμῷ (for so it is in all the MSS. there) Τετράκις εὐτυχέων: whence we may suppose that the form Ἰσθμοῖ was indeed in general use among the best writers, but that the form Ἰσθμῷ was sometimes employed in the language of common life, such as we might expect in treaties drawn up by plain and business-like persons. Hence admitting the possibility that Ἰσθμῷ may be genuine, I have accordingly removed the obelus I had formerly affixed. Similarly in a passage of Hom. Od. xi. 187, we have, πατὴρ δὲ σὸς αὐτόθι μίμνει Ἀγρῷ, where may be seen an instance of a noun, as in the case of οἶκοι used for ἐν οἴκῳ, though without assuming the form.

The ἐν before Ἀθήναις, not found in most of the best MSS. (and, I would add, absent also from the Cod. Venet. and Cantab.) has been cancelled by Haack, but retained by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, though by the two last-mentioned editors placed in brackets. For the presence of the word no confirmation can be needed; though indeed of the preposition thus used with Ἀθήναις I am only enabled to adduce two examples, in Pind. Ol. vii. 151, καὶ κρανααῖς ἐν Ἀθάναις, and xiii. 53, ἐν Ἀθάναισι. As respects its absence, of which Poppo asks how it can be defended, certainly I have never met with one example of the preposition not used with Ἀθήναις, and very rarely with other similar names, (as in the passages of Pindar and Simonides above cited,) and then only when the preposition had preceded, and may therefore be supposed to be understood. Yet even were it otherwise, examples from poets, hampered as they necessarily were by metre, would not decide such a point as this. And as to the prose writers, the custom varies in different datives of this kind, as Μαραθῶνι, i. 73, and ἐν Μαραθῶνι, ii. 34; but in Ἀθήναις it does not appear that the preposition was ever omitted. And those who chose to leave it out could have recourse to the form Ἀθήνῃσι, used at v. 25 & 47. Moreover, the ἐν here is confirmed by a kindred passage at ch. 23, 4, στήλην στῆσαι — ἐν Ἀθήναις ἐν πόλει. Under these circumstances I have not only retained the ἐν, but removed the brackets. The preposition was, I doubt not, originally withdrawn from the passage by certain critics who thus wished to remove a tautology: though one, we may ἀμνημονοῦσιν ὁποτεροιοῦν καὶ ὅτου πέρι, λόγοις δικαίοις χρωμένοις εὔορκον εἶναι ἀμφοτέροις ταύτῃ μεταθεῖναι ὅπῃ ἂν δοκῇ ἀμφοτέροις, Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις.

XIX. "Ἄρχει δὲ τῶν σπονδῶν ἔφορος Πλειστόλας, Ἀρτεμισίου suppose, wiser than the rest, seeing that this procedure would occasion the introduction of a very unusual, if not unprecedented, form,—accordingly, in order to get rid of the difficulty, wrote Ἀθήνῃσι, since that, being an adverb, rejects the ἐν, while Ἀθήναις, it appears, absolutely requires it. Finally, I would observe, the ἐν is demanded by the words which follow, where we have the similar use of ἐν Λακεδαίμονι ἐν Ἀμυκλαίῳ.

πόλει] Meaning the city proper, namely, the citadel, then so called κατ' ἐξοχήν, as we learn from ii. 15. And so it is not unfrequently denominated in Aristophanes. By Ἀμυκλαίῳ is denoted the famous temple of Apollo at Amyclæ, near Sparta; on which see Pausan. Lacon. ch. 18. Polyb. v. 19. Strabo, viii. 6, 2, and especially Philostr. Vit. Ap. iii. 14. Now the temple might be said to be ἐν Λακεδαίμονι, since, according to Polybius, it was only twenty stadia distant; which confirms Col. Leake's position of Amyclæ at Aia Kyriaki, 2½ miles from Sparta, especially as it is placed almost beyond doubt by an inscription there seen by Col. Leake, in which the letters AMY follow the name ΔΕΞΙΜΑΧΟΥ. See more in his Morea, vol. i. p. 135—147. In addition to what he has said, I would observe that Philostratus mentions the temple as among the most ancient in Greece, e. g. the temple of Minerva Polias, that of Apollo and Bacchus at Delos: and he is of opinion that they were set up by the Indians, i. e. by Indian artists. This is not impossible, nay, is confirmed by what Pausanias says, that the statue of Apollo Amyclæ was a work of the rudest and most ancient kind, and resembled, with the exception of the face, hands, and feet, a column of brass forty or fifty feet high. From a passage of Theopompus in Athen. vi. 232, it appears that the face of the statue was coated over with a plating of gold, and that the gold was purchased of Crœsus, king of Lydia, about A. C. 535.

ὁποτεροιοῦν] 'alteruter,' 'utercunque.' A rare word, of which two examples elsewhere occur in Xen. Cyrop. iii. 2, 21, κἂν ἀδικῶσιν ὁποτεροιοῦν, 'whichever party;' and Sympos. viii. 18. The words καὶ ὅτου πέρι are meant to further explain the τι ἀμνημονοῦσιν preceding, (as in a similar instance supra iv. 16, ὅ τι δ' ἂν παραβαί-νωσι καὶ ὁτιοῦν, for καὶ καθ' ὁτιοῦν.) Render, 'But if either party forget any thing, even as to any matter whatever;' καὶ ὅτου standing for καὶ ὁτουοῦν, an idiom admitted and illustrated with examples by Poppo. In this case, though the ουν may be, strictly speaking, necessary, it is sometimes omitted, and especially where, as here, it has already just occurred with a similar word. I have said necessary, as far as strict propriety goes, — though even Hermann on Soph. Aj. 179, only expresses a doubt as to the propriety of ὅτου for ὁτουοῦν. But surely grammatical nicety is not to be sought in a document like this, worded in the language of common life, according to which there is no doubt that ὅστις was used for ὅστις οὖν. As to the objection of Poppo, that 'we should thus have expected καὶ ὁτιοῦν,' that is quite groundless; since the subjects of τι and ὅτου are different.

I have here followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, in editing, for vulg. εἰ τοῦ, ὅτου, on the authority of one MS., and that not the worst, to which I am enabled to add that of the Cant. and Clarend. pr. manu, afterwards altered to οἱ τοῦ.

In εἶναι, a little after, we have that use of infin. for finite verb in the future, ('to be' standing for 'shall be,') which is common in law-writings of every age and country.

At εὔορκον εἶναι may, as Poppo directs, be supplied τοῦτο. By μεταθεῖναι is denoted the altering in any way, especially by adding or subtracting any thing. Compare ch. 29, 2, προσθεῖναι καὶ ἀφελεῖν, and Apocalypse, xxii. 18, 19, ἐάν τις ἐπιτιθῇ — καὶ ἐάν τις ἀφέλῃ, &c. (where though two chief kinds of alteration are mentioned, all others must be understood as implied.) Joseph. c. Apion. i. 8, where, on the subject of the purity of the Scriptures of the Old Testament, the writer cautiously employs all the three terms: τοσούτου γὰρ αἰῶνος ἤδη παρῳχηκότος, οὔτε προσθεῖναί τις οὐδὲν, οὔτε ἀφελεῖν αὐτῶν, οὔτε μεταθεῖναι τετόλμηκεν.

CH. XIX. 1. ἄρχει — Πλειστόλας] Render, 'The period at which Pleistolas was ephor at Sparta, commenced this treaty;' meaning, that it then began to be in force with the commencement of his ephorship. Compare supra iv. 118, ἄρχειν μηνὸς τετάρτῃ φθίνοντος, ἐν δὲ Ἀθήναις ἄρχων Ἀλκαῖος, Ἐλαφηβολιῶνος μηνὸς ἕκτῃ φθίνοντος. 2. ὤμνυον δὲ οἵδε καὶ ἐσπένδοντο, Λακεδαιμονίων μὲν Πλειστόλας, Δαμάγητος, Χίονις, Μεταγένης, Ἄκανθος, Δαΐθος, Ἰσχαγόρας, Φιλοχαρίδας, Ζευξίδας, Ἄντιππος, Τέλλις, Ἀλκινίδας, Ἐμπεδίας, Μηνᾶς, Λάφιλος· Ἀθηναίων δὲ οἵδε, Λάμπων, Ἰσθμιόνικος, Νικίας, Λάχης, Εὐθύδημος, Προκλῆς, Πυθόδωρος, Ἄγνων, Μυρτίλος, Θρασυκλῆς, Θεογένης, † Ἀριστοκράτης, Ἰώλκιος, Τιμοκράτης, Λέων, Λάμαχος, Δημοσθένης."

XX. Αὗται αἱ σπονδαὶ ἐγένοντο τελευτῶντος τοῦ χειμῶνος ἅμα ἦρι, ἐκ Διονυσίων εὐθὺς τῶν ἀστικῶν αὐτόδεκα ἐτῶν διελθόντων, καὶ ἡμερῶν ὀλίγων παρενεγκουσῶν, ἢ ὡς τὸ πρῶτον ἡ ἐσβολὴ ἡ ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν καὶ ἡ ἀρχὴ τοῦ πολέμου τοῦδε ἐγένετο. 2. σκοπείτω δέ τις κατὰ τοὺς χρόνους, καὶ μὴ τῶν ἑκασταχοῦ ἢ ἀρχόντων ἢ ἀπὸ τιμῆς τινος τὴν ἀπαρίθμησιν τῶν ὀνομάτων ἐς τὰ προγεγενημένα τήνδε τὴν ἡμέραν: and see Boeckh, Inscr. vol. i. p. 877, referred to by Poppo. The above, which is the sense laid down in my Translation, has since, I find, been adopted by Goeller.

2. For Λάμφιλος, I have, with Pop., edited Λάφιλος, since the former, though found in all the MSS., and retained by Haack and Bekker, is, as Heilm. and Poppo have seen, not a Greek form. Moreover, Λάφιλος is found in every MS., except one of the worst, in the parallel passage at xxiv. 1. Again, for vulg. Θεαγένης, I have, with Göll. and Arnold, edited Θεογένης, while Poppo retains the former, but not on good grounds, since this is a case in which the authority of MSS. has no great weight. Moreover, internal evidence is in favour of the latter, it being certain that Θεογένης might easily be altered into the more common Θεαγένης, but not vice versâ.

Moreover, I have followed Goell. and Pop. in editing, from the parallel passage at ch. 24, Ἀριστοκράτης instead of the common reading Ἀριστοκοίτης, which, though retained by Bekker, is manifestly barbarous. The individual in question is doubtless the Aristocrates mentioned at viii. 9.

CH. XX. 1. ἐκ Διονυσίων ἀστικῶν] One of the four festivals sacred to Dionysus, consisting of τὰ ἀρχαῖα or Ληναῖα, (on which see note at ii. 15.) τὰ ἀστικὰ or κατ' ἄστυ, otherwise called τὰ μεγάλα, τὰ Ληναῖα, and τὰ κατ' ἀγρούς. (Hudson and Poppo.) See more in Wachsmuth, Antiq. The Dionysia ἀστικὰ were celebrated in spring, and commenced, say Boeckh and Wachsmuth, about the twelfth of March.

ἡμερῶν ὀλίγων παρενεγκουσῶν] Meaning, as Schneid., Goeller, Poppo, and Arnold are agreed, 'with a variation of a few days under or over from the day on which the invasion took place.' But how παρεν. can yield the sense over or under, is far from clear. The verb has plainly an intransitive sense, and may mean, 'to come (literally, be brought) in παρά, by or in addition to.' That Dio Cass. so took it, is probable from a passage, evidently imitated from the present, at p. 360, 2, where, speaking of the reform of the Calendar by Julius Cæsar, he says, ἑπτὰ καὶ ἑξήκοντα ἡμέρας ἐμβαλὼν, ('having intercalated,') ὅσαιπερ ἐς τὴν ἀπαρτιλογίαν παρέφερον, 'which were brought in to make up the complete sum of days.' Comp. Herodot. vii. 29, ἵνα—ᾗ τοι ἀπαρτιλογίη ὑπ' ἐμέο πεπληρωμένη. Haack and Poppo, indeed, take παρενεγκουσῶν as standing for διενεγκουσῶν, 'with a difference of only a few days' (viz. over or under); though they have not established this sense on any proof. Such, however, they might have adduced from a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 27, p. 73, Reiske, τούτων ἡ γλῶσσα ὀλίγον παραφέρει, for διαφέρει. I am inclined to give the preference to this last-mentioned view, as yielding the most suitable sense; and would further observe, that in the above passage of Dio Cass. παρέφερον may bear a sensus prægnans; the import of the words, more fully expressed, being, 'which days differed [from the required number], and required to be brought in, to make up the complete number.'

2. σκοπείτω δέ τις—μᾶλλον] Of this passage the general sense is clear; though the difficulty is how to elicit it from the words σημαινόντων πιστεύσας μᾶλλον. οὐ γὰρ ἀκριβές ἐστιν, οἷς καὶ ἀρχομένοις καὶ μεσοῦσι, καὶ ὅπως ἔτυχέ τῳ, ἐπεγένετό τι. 3. κατὰ θέρη δὲ καὶ χειμῶνας ἀριθμῶν, ὥσπερ γέγραπται, εὑρήσει, ἐξ ἡμισείας ἑκατέρου τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ τὴν δύναμιν ἔχοντος, δέκα μὲν θέρη, ἴσους δὲ χειμῶνας τῷ πρώτῳ πολέμῳ τῷδε γεγενημένους.

XXI. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ, (ἔλαχον γὰρ πρότεροι ἀποδιδόναι ἃ εἶχον,) τούς τε ἄνδρας εὐθὺς τοὺς παρὰ σφίσιν αἰχμαλώτους ἀφίεσαν, καὶ πέμψαντες ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης πρέσβεις Ἰσχαγόραν, καὶ Μηνᾶν, καὶ Φιλοχαρίδαν, ἐκέλευον τὸν Κλεαρίδαν τὴν Ἀμφίπολιν παραδιδόναι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους τὰς σπονδάς, ὡς εἴρητο ἑκάστοις, δέχεσθαι. 2. οἱ δ' οὐκ ἤθελον, νομίζοντες οὐκ ἐπιτηδείας εἶναι· οὐδὲ ὁ Κλεαρίδας παρέδωκε τὴν πόλιν, χαριζόμενος τοῖς Χαλκιδεῦσι, λέγων ὡς οὐ δυνατὸς εἴη βίᾳ ἐκείνων παραδιδόναι. 3. ἐλθὼν δὲ αὐτὸς κατὰ τάχος μετὰ πρέσβεων αὐτόθεν, ἀπologησόμενός τε ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα, ἣν κατηγορῶσιν οἱ περὶ τὸν Ἰσχαγόραν ὅτι οὐκ ἐπείθετο, καὶ ἅμα βουλόμενος εἰδέναι εἰ ἔτι μετακινητὴ εἴη ἡ ὁμολογία, ἐπειδὴ εὗρε κατειλημμένας, αὐτὸς as they stand, and especially to reduce these words to any regular construction. The point is, I think, best handled by Poppo, in the following annotation and rendering: 'Nos τῶν post ὀνομάτων, ubi interire facile potuit, excidisse, τῶν ἑκασταχοῦ—τινὸς ex ὀνομάτων, hoc ex ἀπαρ., denique ἀπαρ. ex superiore κατὰ pendere rati, hoc modo verba exprimimus: spectet autem aliquis secundum tempora, et non [secundum] eorum, qui singulis in civitatibus aut magistratus gerunt aut aliquo honore funguntur, enumerationem nominum, quæ rerum ante gestarum notæ sint, magis (aut potius) fidem habens.' That τῶν has been lost after ὀνομάτων, there is no doubt. With respect to the expression σημαινόντων, of which the sense is by no means clearly developed, in my smaller edition I explained the words ἢ τῶν ὀνομάτων—σημαινόντων to signify, 'by, or from, any names which serve as a mark in respect to past events:' a view of the sense which has since been adopted by Dr. Arnold. Σημαίνειν in this sense, as used for σημεῖον εἶναι, and followed by ἐς, also occurs in Appian, ii. 817, ἔδοξε τοῦτο εἰς τὰ μέλλοντα σημῆναι, and Dio Cass. lx. 35, ἐς τοῦτο—ἔδοξε σημῆναι. See note on ii. 8, 3. The expression τῶν ἀπὸ τιμῆς τινος σημαιν. has reference to those offices of honour and revenue which, as well as those of rule and government, served to give name to years. Thus at ii. 22, the priesthood of Chrysis at Argos is mentioned with the ephoralty of Ainesias at Sparta, and the archonship of Pythodorus at Athens, as marking the first year of the Peloponnesian war. Thus the persons in question were said to be ἐπώνυμοι τοῖς ἔτεσι, as giving their names to the years.

The datives, a little after, οἷς ἀρχομένοις, &c., are, as Poppo observes, datives of time, or else those treated of by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 562, 2. Of καὶ ὅπως ἔτυχέ τῳ the sense is, 'or as it should chance to any one,' viz. to be at the beginning, middle, or end, or at any intermediate period of their magistracy or office.

3. ἐξ ἡμισείας ἑκατέρου—ἔχοντος] The construction is well traced by Dobree as follows: ἑκατέρου ἔχοντος ἐξ ἡμισείας τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ. Here, as at ii. 97. vi. 86, δύναμις bears the sense sum. And so Goeller renders: 'da jede von beiden Jahreszeiten (ἑκατέρου) zur Hälfte (ἐξ ἡμισείας) das Jahr ausmacht.' The sense may be literally expressed, 'holding the sum of the year in half [measure],' being equivalent to its half.

CH. XXI. 1. τοὺς ἄλλους] Meaning, as Duker and Poppo explain, the other Lacedæmonian generals appointed as governors in the various towns which had joined the Lacedæmonian confederacy, and which are adverted to at iv. 132.

3. μετακινητὴ] for δυνατὴ μετακινηθῆναι, 'admitting of alteration.'

κατειλημμένας] literally, 'made fast and sure,' namely, by the oaths sworn, which held them fast. So iv. 86, 1, ὅρκοις καταλαβὼν τὰ τέλη. With this ὁμο- μὲν, πάλιν πεμπόντων τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, καὶ κελευόντων μάλιστα μὲν καὶ τὸ χωρίον παραδοῦναι, εἰ δὲ μὴ, ὁπόσοι Πελοποννησίων ἔνεισιν ἐξαγαγεῖν, κατὰ τάχος ἐπορεύετο. XXII. Οἱ δὲ ξύμμαχοι ἐν τῇ Λακεδαίμονι αὐτοὶ ἔτυχον ὄντες, καὶ αὐτῶν τοὺς μὴ δεξαμένους τὰς σπονδὰς ἐκέλευον οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ποιεῖσθαι. οἱ δὲ, τῇ αὐτῇ προφάσει ἥπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον ἀπεώσαντο, οὐκ ἔφασαν δέξασθαι, ἢν μή τινας δικαιοτέρας τούτων ποιῶνται. 2. ὡς δ' αὐτῶν οὐκ ἐσήκουον, ἐκείνους μὲν ἀπέπεμψαν, αὐτοὶ δὲ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ξυμμαχίαν ἐποιοῦντο, νομίζοντες ἥκιστα ἂν σφίσι τούς τε Ἀργείους,—ἐπειδὴ οὐκ ἤθελον, Ἀμπελίδου καὶ Λίχου ἐλθόντων, ἐπισπένδεσθαι, νομίσαντες αὐτοὺς ἄνευ Ἀθηναίων οὐ δεινοὺς εἶναι,—καὶ τὴν ἄλλην Πελοπόννησον μάλιστ' ἂν ἡσυχάζειν· πρὸς γὰρ ἂν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, εἰ ἐξῆν, χωρεῖν. παρόντων οὖν πρέσβεων ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ γενομένων λόγων, ξυνέβησαν· καὶ ἐγένοντο ὅρκοι καὶ ξυμμαχία ἥδε κατὰ τάδε.

XXIII. "Ξύμμαχοι ἔσονται Λακεδαιμόνιοι πεντήκοντα ἔτη. 2. ἢν δέ τινες ἴωσιν ἐς τὴν γῆν πολέμιοι τὴν Λακεδαιμονίων, καὶ κακῶς ποιῶσι Λακεδαιμονίους, ὠφελεῖν Ἀθηναίους Λακεδαιμονίους λογία κατ. compare the expression in a passage of the Old Testament, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5: 'He hath made with me a covenant ordered (rather fixed, custoditam, made fast) and sure.'

Ch. XXII. 1. αὐτοί] Here there is no necessity, with Krueger, to read αὐτοῦ, nor ought the word to be interpreted, as it is by Arnold, 'of their own accord;' for, as Poppo remarks, it appears from v. 17 and 27, that the allies had not come of their own accord, but been convoked. The term here simply signifies, by an emphasis, themselves, viz. as well as the Lacedæmonian magistrates. So at iv. 28, we have, καὶ αὐτοὶ ὀργιζόμενοι οἱ στρατιῶται, i. e. themselves as well as their general Brasidas.

2. νομίζοντες ἥκιστα ἂν σφίσι — ἡσυχάζειν] Here, as in certain other passages of our author, the sense, however evident, is embarrassed by anacoluthon, increased by a certain confusion of parenthetical matter (ἐπειδὴ — εἶναι) with matter not parenthetical, and finally the omitting to make the resumptive words correspond with the foregoing. In such a case, to attempt — as the commentators have done —to make out a regular construction is not so much to explain, as to recast the sentence anew, and, in short, to do what the writer would probably have done, had he lived to bestow the same care on this book which he had on the first three or four, and more or less on the sixth and seventh.

Ch. XXIII. The wording of these articles is, like that of the foregoing treaties, not a little rude and anomalous; this, like former treaties, having been, it appears, drawn up by plain men of business, matter-of-fact persons, with little power of language, and who employed the phrases which had been doubtless in use from the earliest times.

1. After Λακεδαιμόνιοι Æm. Port. would insert καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι. But this is little necessary; since, if the articles in question were, as they seem to have been, drawn up by the Athenian ambassadors, or prepared at Athens and by them taken over to Sparta, the insertion will by no means be wanted.

2. In ἤν τινες ἴωσιν ἐς we have a phrase usual in treaties, and occurring in Æschin. p. 66, 30 & 44. Of the use (somewhat rare) of ὠφελεῖν, a little after, as said of the aid afforded by any ally, I have noted examples in Xen. Anab. v. 1, 12, ὅπως ὠφελοῦντες (οἱ σύμμαχοι) καὶ ὠφελῶνται, and Plato, Ep. vi. ἀλλήλους ὠφελεῖν.

For Λακεδαιμονίους two MSS. and T. Mag. have Λακεδαιμονίοις. But internal evidence is decidedly against the latter reading, which has every appearance of having merely arisen from a wish on τρόπῳ ὁποίῳ ἂν δύνωνται ἰσχυροτάτῳ κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν. ἢν δὲ δηώσαντες οἴχωνται, πολεμίαν εἶναι ταύτην τὴν πόλιν Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ κακῶς πάσχειν ὑπὸ ἀμφοτέρων, καταλύειν δὲ ἅμα ἄμφω τὼ πόλεε. ταῦτα δ' εἶναι δικαίως καὶ προθύμως καὶ ἀδόλως. 3. καὶ ἤν τινες ἐς τὴν Ἀθηναίων γῆν ἴωσι πολέμιοι, καὶ κακῶς ποιῶσιν Ἀθηναίους, ὠφελεῖν Λακεδαιμονίους τρόπῳ ὅτῳ ἂν δύνωνται ἰσχυροτάτῳ κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν. ἢν δὲ δηώσαντες οἴχωνται, πολεμίαν εἶναι ταύτην τὴν πόλιν Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ κακῶς πάσχειν ὑπ' ἀμφοτέρων, καταλύειν δὲ ἅμα ἄμφω τὼ πόλεε. ταῦτα δ' εἶναι δικαίως καὶ προθύμως καὶ ἀδόλως. 4. ἢν δὲ ἡ δουλεία ἐπανιστῆται, ἐπικουρεῖν Ἀθηναίους Λακεδαιμονίοις παντὶ σθένει κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν. 5. ὀμοῦνται δὲ ταῦτα οἵπερ καὶ τὰς ἄλλας σπονδὰς ὤμνυον ἑκατέρων. ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν Λακεδαιμονίους μὲν ἰόντας ἐς Ἀθήνας πρὸς τὰ Διονύσια, Ἀθηναίους δὲ ἰόντας ἐς Λακεδαίμονα πρὸς τὰ Ὑακίνθια. στήλην δὲ ἑκατέρους στῆσαι, τὴν μὲν ἐν Λακεδαίμονι παρ' Ἀπόλλωνι ἐν Ἀμυκλαίῳ, τὴν δὲ ἐν Ἀθήναις ἐν πόλει παρ' Ἀθηνᾷ. 6. ἢν δέ τι δοκῇ Λακε-

the part of certain ancient critics to soften the harshness of two accusatives concurring: and for this very reason, indeed, has Schaefer proposed to cancel the word; though rashly; since such niceties as this, of the concurrence of the same cases, would be little heeded by persons such as those who framed this treaty; not to say that the accusative alone was, I suspect, used where the verb bears this sense, answering to that of juvare aliquem armis, &c. in Latin. As to the expression ἂν δύνωνται —κατὰ τὸ δυνατὸν, this has been referred to the case of pleonasm treated of in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 636. But in effect it is no more a pleonasm than our idiomatic expression, 'in whatever manner they possibly can.' It is rather a stronger mode of expression, similar to that a little further on, παντὶ σθένει κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν.

3. In ἄμφω τὼ πόλεε we have an idiom (treated on by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 436, 1.) by which a feminine in the dual is often accompanied by the masculine. With the expression προθύμως καὶ ἀδόλως, 'with good will, and without guile,' Wasse compares a similar one in a treaty in Polyb. vii. 9, μετὰ πάσης προθυμίας—ἄνευ δόλου —ἐσόμεθα πολέμιοι τοῖς πρὸς Καρχηδονίους πολεμοῦσι.

4. ἡ δουλεία] Abstract for concrete, 'the serfs.' Compare Dio Cass. 779, 93, ἥ τε δουλεία — ἐπετράπη, 'was put in charge.' Plato, Legg. vi. p. 623, ἡ Ἡρακλεώτων δουλεία. Aristot. Pol. ii. 5. Hegesand. ap. Athen. 572, κατεχομένης τῆς πόλεως δουλείᾳ. And so the Latin servitium for servi, as in Cic. Verr. vii. 4, 'cœptum esse in Sicilia moveri servitium suspicor.' The singular is used by way of denoting the persons as a class or body. Accordingly T. Mag. in v. explains δουλεία by τὸ ἄθροισμα τῶν δούλων: and Pollux, iii. 75, by τὸ πλῆθος τῶν οἰκέτων. Consequently it is proper to keep distinct the passages where the plural is used, as in Eurip. Bacch. 802, δουλεύοντα δουλείαις ἐμαῖς. The same applies to the Latin servitia; e. g. Cic. pro Cœl. 'servitia ad cædem —incitavit.' Yet thus the sense intended is only, 'a number of slaves,' and the article, while necessary in the former case, is in the latter inadmissible; so that in the passage of Heges. above adduced, I would, for δουλείᾳ, read τῇ δουλείᾳ. The same idiom is found in the instance of Εἰλωτεία as used for the Helots (found in Aristot.); δούλευμα, in Eurip. Ion, 748, used for δοῦλαι; ξυγγένεια often used for ξυγγενεῖς; and ὑπηρεσία for ὑπηρέται in a passage of our author supra i. 143, and in Isocr. Paneg. ch. 39.

5. τὰ Διονύσια] See note supra ch. 20. Τὰ Ὑακίνθια. See Wachsm. Ant. ii. 2, p. 258.

In παρ' Ἀπόλλωνι and παρ' Ἀθηνᾷ we may suppose left to be understood, the statue of each deity.

δαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις προσθεῖναι καὶ ἀφελεῖν περὶ τῆς ξυμμαχίας, ὅ,τι ἂν δοκῇ, εὔορκον ἀμφοτέροις εἶναι."

XXIV. Τὸν δὲ ὅρκον ὤμνυον Λακεδαιμονίων μὲν οἵδε, Πλειστοάναξ, Ἄγις, Πλειστόλας, Δαμάγητος, Χίονις, Μεταγένης, Ἄκανθος, Δαΐθος, Ἰσχαγόρας, Φιλοχαρίδας, ‡ Ζευξίδας, Ἄντιπος, Ἀλκινάδας, Τέλλις, Ἐμπεδίας, Μηνᾶς, Λάφιλος, Ἀθηναίων δὲ Λάμπων, Ἰσθμιόνικος, Λάχης, Νικίας, Εὐθύδημος, Προκλῆς, Πυθόδωρος, Ἄγνων, Μυρτίλος, Θρασυκλῆς, Θεαγένης, Ἀριστοκράτης, Ἰώλκιος, Τιμοκράτης, Λέων, Λάμαχος, Δημοσθένης.

Αὕτη ἡ ξυμμαχία ἐγένετο μετὰ τὰς σπονδὰς οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον· καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου ἀπέδοσαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, καὶ τὸ θέρος ἦρχε τοῦ ἐνδεκάτου ἔτους. ταῦτα δὲ τὰ δέκα ἔτη ὁ πρῶτος πόλεμος ξυνεχῶς γενόμενος γέγραπται.

XXV. Μετὰ δὲ τὰς σπονδὰς καὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, αἳ ἐγένοντο μετὰ τὸν δεκαετῆ πόλεμον ἐπὶ Πλειστόλα μὲν ἐν Λακεδαίμονι ἐφόρου, Ἀλκαίου δ' ἄρχοντος Ἀθήνῃσι, τοῖς μὲν δεξαμένοις αὐτὰς εἰρήνη ἦν· οἱ δὲ Κορίνθιοι καὶ τῶν ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ πόλεών τινες διεκίνουν τὰ πεπραγμένα, καὶ εὐθὺς ἄλλη ταραχὴ καθίστατο τῶν ξυμμάχων πρὸς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα. 2. καὶ ἅμα καὶ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, προϊόντος τοῦ χρόνου, ὕποπτοι ἐγένοντο, ἔστιν ἐν οἷς οὐ ποιοῦντες ἐκ τῶν ξυγκειμένων ἃ εἴρητο. 3. καὶ ἐπὶ ἓξ ἔτη μὲν καὶ δέκα μῆνας ἀπέσχοντο μὴ ἐπὶ τὴν ἑκατέρων γῆν στρατεῦσαι, ἔξωθεν δὲ μετ' ἀνακωχῆς οὐ βεβαίου ἔβλαπτον ἀλλήλους τὰ μάλιστα· ἔπειτα μέντοι καὶ ἀναγκασθέντες λῦσαι τὰς μετὰ τὰ δέκα ἔτη σπονδάς, αὖθις ἐς πόλεμον φανερὸν κατέστησαν. XXVI. Γέγραφε δὲ καὶ ταῦτα ὁ αὐτὸς Θουκυδίδης Ἀθηναῖος ἐξῆς ὡς ἕκαστα ἐγένετο κατὰ θέρη καὶ χειμῶνας, 6. προσθεῖναι καὶ ἀφελεῖν] See note supra ch. 18, 3.

Ch. XXIV. 1. Ζευξίδας] I have, in deference to the united authority of the editors, retained Ζευξίδας, which is found in all the MSS. at ch. 19; though I suspect that Ζευξίλας, which is here found in almost all the best MSS., is the true name. We may easily account for the λας being changed into δας, from the circumstance of the preceding and following names ending in δας: and indeed ΔΑΣ and ΛΑΣ are so much alike in MSS., that external authority has in such a case very little weight, while that of internal evidence is considerable; which latter is all in favour of Ζευξίλας, a name, I apprehend, derived from ζεύγνυμι and ἴλας, a band, and possibly of the same nature as Ζευξίδαμος, one who, to use the words of the prophet Hosea, (xi. 4.) 'draws the people with the cords of a man,' i. e. with the motives which sway the heart of a man: and thus Ζευξίλας will denote, 'one who draws the cords.' Supposing, however, Ζευξίδας to be genuine, we must consider it as falling under that class of names which have the form of patronymics, without the force thereof, as in the instances of Σιμωνίδης for Σίμων, Ἀγνωνίδης for Ἄγνων: and so, in like manner, Ζευξίδας for Ζεύξας.

Ch. XXV. 1. διεκίνουν τὰ πεπραγμένα] literally, 'disturbed (threw into confusion) what had been done.' Compare Dio Cass. 608, 9, διεκίνει ὡς ἕκαστα. Plutarch, i. 839. ii. 63. 454. 722, διακινεῖν τι.

μέχρι οὗ τήν τε ἀρχὴν κατέπαυσαν τῶν Ἀθηναίων Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, καὶ τὰ μακρὰ τείχη καὶ τὸν Πειραιᾶ κατέλαβον. ἔτη δὲ ἐς τοῦτο τὰ ξύμπαντα ἐγένετο τῷ πολέμῳ ἑπτὰ καὶ εἴκοσι. 2. καὶ τὴν διὰ μέσου ξύμβασιν εἴ τις μὴ ἀξιώσει πόλεμον νομίζειν, οὐκ ὀρθῶς δικαιώσει. τοῖς τε γὰρ ἔργοις ὡς διῄρηται, ἀθρείτω, καὶ εὑρήσει οὐκ εἰκὸς ὂν εἰρήνην αὐτὴν κριθῆναι, ἐν ᾗ οὔτε ἀπέδοσαν πάντα, οὔτ' ἀπεδέξαντο ἃ ξυνέθεντο, ἔξω τε τούτων πρὸς τὸν Μαντινικὸν καὶ Ἐπιδαύριον πόλεμον καὶ ἐς ἄλλα ἀμφοτέροις ἁμαρτήματα ἐγένοντο, καὶ οἱ ἐπὶ Θράκης ξύμμαχοι οὐδὲν ἧσσον πολέμιοι ἦσαν, Βοιωτοί τε ἐκεχειρίαν δεχήμερον ἦγον. 3. ὥστε ξὺν τῷ πρώτῳ πολέμῳ τῷ δεκαετεῖ, καὶ τῇ μετ' αὐτὸν ὑπόπτῳ ἀνακωχῇ, καὶ τῷ ὕστερον ἐξ αὐτῆς πολέμῳ, εὑρήσει τις τοσαῦτα ἔτη, λογιζόμενος κατὰ τοὺς χρόνους, καὶ ἡμέρας οὐ πολλὰς παρενεγκούσας, καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ χρησμῶν τι ἰσχυρισαμένοις μόνον δὴ τοῦτο ἐχυρῶς ξυμβάν. 4. ἀεὶ γὰρ ἔγωγε

Ch. XXVI. 1. κατέλαβον] For this, Duker, Goeller, and Poppo are inclined to read, from one or two MSS., κατέβαλον, adducing in support of that reading two passages of Xen. Hist. ii. 2, 20, and Plutarch, Lys. 14. But even from these it certainly appears that the Lacedæmonians and their allies did not beat down the long walls,—that being done by the Athenians themselves. Consequently the expression κατέβαλον could not be justified; whereas κατέλαβον is perfectly suitable, so that it be interpreted to signify, as it may, 'they captured,' i. e. were masters of the long walls: for by being able to dictate to the Athenians their demolition, they had them in their power, if not possession. And vain were it to justify κατέβαλον on the principle 'quod facit per alium, facit per se,' since that were only suitable to poetry, and any thing but allowable in the plain prose of history.

2. τοῖς ἔργοις—ἀθρείτω] 'let him consider how it was distinguished by its works,' meaning the facts of the case. Such appears to be the true import of these words, (which have been not a little misunderstood by the commentators,) according to the view of the sense propounded in my smaller edition, which has since been adopted by Dr. Arnold, who adduces, as examples of this signification of διαιρεῖσθαι, two passages of Herodot. vii. 47 & 103. But, as Poppo observes, there the sense intended is merely distinctè explicare, describere; though he might more aptly have adduced as examples of the use of διαιρεῖσθαι for διορίζεσθαι, Dio Cass. 230, 30, διῃρημένων, 'defined, marked out.' Aristot. Pol. vii. and Plato, p. 950, εὖ τοῖς λόγοις καὶ ταῖς δόξαις διαιροῦνται τοὺς ἀμείνονας τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ τοὺς χείρονας. Finally, the above interpretation may the more easily be admitted, considering that the ideas of dividing and distinguishing are nearly allied with those of defining and characterizing, by which a person or thing is shown to be so or so; for by the expression to distinguish is denoted not only the setting apart or describing by peculiar qualities, but the characterizing or expressing the character of any person or thing, by showing the peculiar qualities which make it what it is.

The τε here has answering to it the τε after ἔξω, the τε—τε being equivalent to μὲν—δὲ, as at vi. 34. The general meaning intended is, 'on the one hand the peace was no peace at all,—its stipulations being unfulfilled; and, on the other, the spirit of the treaty was infringed respecting matters uninvolved in the treaty.' The ἔξω before τούτων stands for ἄνευ, 'apart from,' 'besides.' Ἁμαρτήματα: meaning infringements of the treaty.

3. παρενεγκούσας] See note supra ch. 20. Of the words following, καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ — ξυμβὰν, the sense is, as Poppo expresses it, 'atque iis qui ex oraculis (ὡρμημένοι ἀπὸ τῶν χρησμῶν) aliquid affirmarunt exitu comprobatum esse invenierit.' Render, 'who laid any stress on oracles;' literally, 'who affirmed any thing for certain, on the strength of oracles.' In this sense ἰσχυρίζεσθαι occurs also at iii. 44. iv. 23 & 68. viii. 49, 4, where see notes. Ἐχυρῶς ξυμβὰν, i. e. 'happened with any sure or certain [conformity thereto].'

μέμνημαι, καὶ ἀρχομένου τοῦ πολέμου καὶ μέχρι οὗ ἐτελεύτησε, προφερόμενον ὑπὸ πολλῶν ὅτι τρὶς ἐννέα ἔτη δέοι γενέσθαι αὐτόν. 5. ἐπεβίων δὲ διὰ παντὸς αὐτοῦ, αἰσθανόμενός τε τῇ ἡλικίᾳ, καὶ προσέχων τὴν γνώμην, ὅπως ἀκριβές τι εἴσομαι· καὶ ξυνέβη μοι φεύγειν τὴν ἐμαυτοῦ ἔτη εἴκοσι μετὰ τὴν ἐς Ἀμφίπολιν στρατηγίαν, καὶ, γενομένῳ παρ' ἀμφοτέροις τοῖς πράγμασι, — καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον τοῖς Πελοποννησίων διὰ τὴν φυγήν, — καθ' ἡσυχίαν τι αὐτῶν μᾶλλον αἰσθέσθαι. 6. τὴν οὖν μετὰ τὰ δέκα ἔτη διαφοράν τε καὶ ξύγχυσιν τῶν σπονδῶν καὶ τὰ ἔπειτα ὡς ἐπολεμήθη ἐξηγήσομαι.

5. Our historian now interposes by-the-by a brief notice respecting the peculiar means of information that he enjoyed, especially at the period of the war which he is now entering upon. In αἰσθανόμενος τῇ ἡλικίᾳ we have a form of expression very unusual, and consequently not a little obscure; which is best explained by Haack to mean, 'integris ad cognoscendum sensibus, valens per ætatem,' i. e. in other words, 'at a time of life when one is fully in possession of the knowing and judging faculties.' Compare i. 71, πρὸς ἀνθρώπων τῶν αἰσθανομένων.

By the next words it is expressed, that he had not only the faculties necessary to attain to a knowledge and judgment, but used them with an application of mind to his object. In προσέχων τὴν γνώμην, 'attended to the thing,' we have a phrase occurring also at i. 54, 2, and vii. 23: and to this are to be referred the words of the Scholiast, παρακολουθῶν πᾶσι, — words suggested by the expression occurring in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke, i. 3, παρηκολουθηκότι ἄνωθεν πᾶσιν.

ὅπως ἀκριβές τι εἴσομαι] 'in order that I might know something certain,' i. e. attain to some certain knowledge. Of the words γενομένῳ παρ' ἀμφοτέροις τοῖς πράγμασι, the sense, which is obscurely developed, has accordingly been not a little disputed. Arnold remarks, that 'if γενομένῳ refers, as seems probable, to the period of his exile, the παρὰ cannot denote personal presence, since Thucydides could not have been personally present at Athens, or with the armies.' He would therefore take the preposition in a metaphorical acceptation, and πράγμασι in the sense sides; by which the expression παρὰ τοῖς πράγμ. γεν. will express only a close and accurate knowledge. But, as Poppo remarks, that view of the sense would require πρὸς or ἐν, instead of παρά: and, in effect, would do violence to the words; for where is πράγματα ever found to signify sides or parties? Again, it is at once forbidden by the circumstance, that αὐτῶν, just after, can only refer to πράγμασι, and that, as understood in the sense rebus gestis, τοῖς πραχθεῖσι. Finally, why, I would ask, should we confine the expression γενομένῳ παρ' ἀμφοτέροις τοῖς πράγμασι to the period of his exile? Certainly we are not compelled so to do. If it be extended to the whole period of the war, all difficulty will at once vanish. We may suppose, then, that Thucydides, after having stated that his great object, and that to which he devoted his close attention, was to acquire an accurate knowledge of the events of the war,—then proceeds to intimate that he has had peculiar means of information, since it happened that, by reason of his twenty years' exile, and his having been conversant with the affairs of both [parties], the Peloponnesians not less than the Athenians, on account of his banishment he was enabled καθ' ἡσυχίαν τι αὐτῶν μᾶλλον αἰσθέσθαι, 'to attain to the better knowing leisurely any thing of those affairs.' By the term αἰσθέσθαι is denoted the result of perception by the internal sense, in the acquirement of knowledge; as in Xen. Cyr. viii. 4, and Hist. v. 2, 2. Eurip. Phœn. 141, πῶς αἰσθάνει σαφῶς τάδε; and the phrase καθ' ἡσυχίαν, 'at leisure,' which occurs also at vii. 38 and 73, refers chiefly to the period of his exile, when his release from all public business gave him the power to spend his time as he chose. No necessity is there to read, what Poppo has conjectured, ἀμφοτέρως, instead of ἀμφοτέροις, since, as Krueger has shown, the idiom here is parallel to that at vii. 63, of ἑτέρας used for ἑτέρων, and at vii. 17, of σφετέραν for σφῶν. Thus the expression may be regarded as equivalent to ἀμφοτέρων, i. e. both the belligerent powers. Now Thucydides might be said to be conversant with the affairs of both, though not at the same time. His knowledge of the affairs of the Peloponnesians must have been almost entirely acquired during his exile, when resident in countries which formed part of the Lacedæmonian confederation; as also by his long residence, and, doubtless, personal communication with many leading persons of the Lacedæmonian confederation, by which he was placed in a situation similar to that of Alcibiades. See vi. 92, 5.

XXVII. Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ αἱ πεντηκοντούτεις σπονδαὶ ἐγένοντο καὶ ὕστερον αἱ ξυμμαχίαι, καὶ αἱ ἀπὸ τῆς Πελοποννήσου πρεσβεῖαι, αἵπερ παρεκλήθησαν ἐς αὐτά, ἀνεχώρουν ἐκ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι ἐπ' οἴκου ἀπῆλθον, Κορίνθιοι δὲ ἐς Ἄργος τραπόμενοι πρῶτον, λόγους ποιοῦνται πρός τινας τῶν ἐν τέλει ὄντων Ἀργείων, ὡς χρὴ, ἐπειδὴ Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὐκ ἐπ' ἀγαθῷ, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ καταδουλώσει τῆς Πελοποννήσου σπονδὰς καὶ ξυμμαχίαν πρὸς Ἀθηναίους τοὺς πρὶν ἐχθίστους πεποίηνται, ὁρᾶν τοὺς Ἀργείους ὅπως σωθήσεται ἡ Πελοπόννησος, καὶ ψηφίσασθαι τὴν βουλομένην πόλιν τῶν Ἑλλήνων, ἥτις αὐτόνομός τέ ἐστι καὶ δίκας ἴσας καὶ ὁμοίας δίδωσι, πρὸς Ἀργείους ξυμμαχίαν ποιεῖσθαι, ὥστε τῇ ἀλλήλων ἐπιμαχεῖν· ἀποδεῖξαι δὲ ἄνδρας ὀλίγους ἀρχὴν αὐτοκράτορας, καὶ μὴ πρὸς τὸν δῆμον τοὺς λόγους εἶναι, τοῦ μὴ καταφανεῖς γίγνεσθαι τοὺς μὴ πείσαντας τὸ πλῆθος. ἔφασαν δὲ πολλοὺς προσχωρήσεσθαι μίσει τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν Κορίνθιοι διδάξαντες ταῦτα, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἴκου. XXVIII. Οἱ δὲ τῶν Ἀργείων ἄνδρες, ἀκούσαντες, ἐπειδὴ ἀνήνεγκαν τοὺς λόγους ἔς τε τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὸν δῆμον, ἐψηφίσαντο Ἀργεῖοι, καὶ ἄνδρας εἵλοντο δώδεκα πρὸς οὓς τὸν βουλόμενον τῶν Ἑλλήνων ξυμμαχίαν ποιεῖσθαι, πλὴν Ἀθηναίων καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων· τούτων δὲ μηδετέροις ἐξεῖναι ἄνευ τοῦ δήμου τοῦ Ἀργείων σπείσασθαι. 2. ἐδέξαντό τε ταῦτα οἱ Ἀργεῖοι μᾶλλον, ὁρῶντες τόν τε τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων σφίσι πόλεμον ἐσόμενον (ἐπ' ἐξόδῳ γὰρ πρὸς αὐτοὺς αἱ σπονδαὶ ἦσαν), καὶ ἅμα ἐλπίσαντες τῆς Πελοποννήσου ἡγήσεσθαι. κατὰ γὰρ τὸν χρόνον τοῦτον ἥ τε Λακε-

6. ὡς ἐπολεμήθη] See note on i. 1, 1.

Ch. XXVII. 2. δίκας ἴσας καὶ ὁμοίας δίδωσι] This expression, διδόναι δίκας ἴσας καὶ ὁμοίας, (with which compare, at ch. 59, 2, δίκας δοῦναι καὶ δέξασθαι ἴσας καὶ ὁμοίας, and ch. 79,) is nearly equivalent to αὐτόδικος εἶναι. Haack remarks, 'Indicatur his verbis juris vicissitudo et æqualitas, (in other words, as Arnold explains, the being ready and able to give just satisfaction, according to the common law of Greece, for any injuries it may commit) quam potentiores civitates, Athenienses atque Lacedæmonios, præstaturos et accepturos esse non poterat expectari.' On ξυμμαχίαν—ἐπιμαχεῖν, see note at i. 44.

τοῦ μὴ καταφανεῖς—πλῆθος] "Ινα μὴ φωραθῶσιν ὑπὸ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων οἱ συνθέμενοι τοῖς Ἀργείοις. (Schol.) Ita iv. 22, Lacedæmonii illos ξυνέδρους ideo voluerunt constitui, μὴ ἐς τοὺς ξυμμάχους διαβληθῶσι εἰπόντες καὶ οὐ τυχόντες. (Poppo.)

Ch. XXVIII. 1. ποιεῖσθαι] I would here, with Poppo, supply ἐψηφίσαντο from the preceding, and that for the reason which he subjoins: 'quod ibi absolute dictum est populiscitum fecerunt, unde hic decernendi notio repetenda.' I have followed Bekker and Goeller in editing τοῦ before Ἀργείων, from some of the best MSS. (confirmed by another passage of our author supra iv. 78.) instead of the common reading τῶν, which has been retained by Poppo, though internal evidence is quite against it.

2. τὸν πόλεμον—ἐσόμενον] i. e. 'perceiving that the war [which they expected] of the Lacedæmonians with them would take place.'

δαίμων μάλιστα δὴ κακῶς ἤκουσε, καὶ ὑπερώφθη διὰ τὰς ξυμφοράς, οἵ τε Ἀργεῖοι ἄριστα ἔσχον τοῖς πᾶσιν, οὐ ξυναράμενοι τοῦ Ἀττικοῦ πολέμου, ἀμφοτέροις δὲ μᾶλλον ἔνσπονδοι ὄντες, ἐκκαρπωσάμενοι. 3. οἱ μὲν οὖν Ἀργεῖοι οὕτως ἐς τὴν ξυμμαχίαν προσεδέχοντο τοὺς ἐθέλοντας τῶν Ἑλλήνων. XXIX. Μαντινῆς δ' αὐτοῖς καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι αὐτῶν πρῶτοι προσεχώρησαν, δεδιότες τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους. τοῖς γὰρ Μαντινεῦσι μέρος τι τῆς Ἀρκαδίας κατέστραπτο ὑπήκοον, ἔτι τοῦ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους πολέμου ὄντος, καὶ ἐνόμιζον οὐ περιόψεσθαι σφᾶς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ἄρχειν, ἐπειδὴ καὶ σχολὴν ἦγον· ὥστε ἄσμενοι πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους ἐτράποντο, πόλιν τε μεγάλην νομίζοντες, καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις ἀεὶ διάφορον, δημοκρατουμένην τε, ὥσπερ καὶ αὐτοί. 2. ἀποστάντων δὲ τῶν Μαντινέων, καὶ ἡ ἄλλη Πελοπόννησος ἐς θροῦν καθίστατο, ὡς καὶ σφίσι ποιητέον τοῦτο, νομίσαντες πλέον τέ τι εἰδότας μεταστῆναι αὐτούς, καὶ τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ἅμα δι' ὀργῆς ἔχοντες, ἐν ἄλλοις τε, καὶ ὅτι ἐν ταῖς ἀμφοτέροις δὲ μᾶλλον ἔνσπονδοι ὄντες, ἐκκαρπωσάμενοι] Arnold and Goeller render, 'had made their profit from both [parties];' thus supplying the word ἀμφοτέρους from ἀμφοτέροις, and comparing a passage of Demosth. p. 700, τῶν ὑμῶν ἐκκαρπωσαμένων, 'who have made their harvest out of you.' For the above, however, (which does violence to the context,) I prefer to supply αὐτοῦ, scil. τοῦ Ἀττικοῦ πολέμου: a view, I would observe, borne out by the δὲ, and which is besides more agreeable to facts; for while the above sense of making a harvest of, by plundering, (as found in the above passage of Demosth., and also Philostr. Vit. Sophist. xxv. 9.) were little agreeable thereto; on the other hand, it might truly be said that the Argives had profited or reaped benefit from both, directly and indirectly;—from the former, as disposing of what they had to sell to the belligerents at a high price; from the latter, inasmuch as by their preserving their territory uninjured, and the population undiminished by war, they continually rose in the scale of comparative strength, as the belligerents fell; who had been wasting it in a ruinous contest. Of ἐκκαρπώσασθαι in the above sense, I have noted an example in Dio Cass. 147, 73, τὴν ἑκατέρου φιλίαν ἐκκαρπώσεσθαι, 'would profit by the friendship of either party.'

CH. XXIX. 1. καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι αὐτῶν] Namely, consisting of a few neighbouring cantons, the Parrhasii, forming part of a petty confederation governed by Mantinea.

Μέρος τι τῆς Ἀρκαδίας. Supposed to be the territory of the Parrhasii, which they were subsequently obliged to abandon. See ch. 33. The expression κατέστραπτο ὑπήκοον falls under the rule in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 446, 2, that the adjective often contains, not a definition in itself belonging to the substantive, but an extension of the idea contained in the verb; or it may be considered as the consequence and effect of the verb, as Hom. Il. ii. 416, δαῖξαι—ῥωγαλέον, and Æschyl. Ag. 1258, εὔφημον—κοίμησον στόμα, i. e. κοίμησον στόμα ὥστε εὔφημον εἶναι. All the examples, however, adduced by Matthiæ in exemplification of the above rule are from poets; and the idiom itself has a poetic air.

2. ἐς θροῦν καθίστατο] literally, 'was put into muttering,' i. e. the expression of secret discourse. Compare iv. 67, 2, τὸν θροῦν αἰσθόμενοι. Dionys. Hal. vi. 57, θροῦς—ἐνέπεσε τῇ βουλῇ. In this sense the words following usually contain the substance of the muttering, as here, ὡς καὶ σφίσι ποιητέον τοῦτο. So, too, γογγυσμὸς in a passage of the New Testament, John vii. 12, where see my note. In πλέον τι εἰδότας we have a brief mode of expression for, 'as knowing something more than they themselves did.' Compare vii. 49, ὑπάνοια μή τι καὶ πλέον εἰδὼς ὁ N. ἰσχυρίζηται, and Appian, Bell. Civ. v. 63, (cited by Poppo,) τί πλέον εἰδέναι.

μεταστῆναι] 'had gone over,' viz. to the Argive alliance. Compare i. 35, 5, τοὺς μεταστάντας.

σπονδαῖς ταῖς Ἀττικαῖς ἐγέγραπτο εὔορκον εἶναι προσθεῖναι καὶ ἀφελεῖν ὅ τι ἂν ἀμφοῖν τοῖν πολέοιν δοκῇ, Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις. 3. τοῦτο γὰρ τὸ γράμμα μάλιστα τὴν Πελοπόννησον διεθορύβει, καὶ ἐς ὑποψίαν καθίστη, μὴ μετὰ Ἀθηναίων σφᾶς βούλωνται Λακεδαιμόνιοι δουλώσασθαι· δίκαιον γὰρ εἶναι πᾶσι τοῖς ξυμμάχοις γεγράφθαι τὴν μετάθεσιν. ὥστε φοβούμενοι οἱ πολλοὶ ὥρμηντο πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους καὶ αὐτοὶ ἕκαστοι ξυμμαχίαν ποιεῖσθαι. XXX. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ, αἰσθόμενοι τὸν θροῦν τὸν ἐν τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ καθεστῶτα, καὶ τοὺς Κορινθίους διδασκάλους τε γενομένους, καὶ αὐτοὺς μέλλοντας σπείσασθαι πρὸς τὸ Ἄργος, πέμπουσι πρέσβεις ἐς τὴν Κόρινθον, βουλόμενοι προκαταλαβεῖν τὸ μέλλον, καὶ ἠτιῶντο τήν τε ἐσήγησιν τοῦ παντὸς, καὶ εἰ Ἀργείοις σφῶν ἀποστάντες ξύμμαχοι ἔσονται· παραβήσεσθαί τε ἔφασαν αὐτοὺς τοὺς ὅρκους, καὶ ἤδη ἀδικεῖν ὅτι οὐ δέχονται τὰς Ἀθηναίων σπονδάς·

3. γράμμα] 'clause, or head,' of the article. By μετάθεσιν is here meant, right of altering the treaty.

CH. XXX. 1. τὸν θροῦν τὸν—καθεστῶτα] The words τὸν θροῦν αἰσθόμενοι have already occurred at iv. 66, where see note. Render, 'perceiving the muttering that prevailed in Greece:' though indeed the term θροῦς may here bear the sense stir or tumult; literally, seditious uproar. Τὸν καθεστῶτα, 'which was on foot,' 'which had arisen.' Compare ii. 65, ἐπεὶ ὁ πόλεμος κατέστη. By διδασκάλους are denoted figuratively, 'the prime movers of the matter,' the suggesters or instigators: of which metaphorical sense of διδάσκαλος examples are also found in Æschyl. Theb. 570, τὸν πόλεως ταράκτορα Μέγιστον Ἄργει τῶν κακῶν διδάσκαλον, and Eum. 554, γένοιτ' ἂν ὀρθῶς πράγματος διδάσκαλος. Æschin. p. 24, 28, εἰσηγητὴς καὶ διδάσκαλος ἔργων. So also in a passage of Plato, in Axioch., we have διδάσκαλοι τῶν ἔργων. Parallel, too, is the use in Latin of magister for suasor, impulsor, author and instigator, as in Senec. Thyest. 311, 'sæpe in magistrum scelera redierunt sua;' where magister is used absolutely, as διδ. here. Τὸ μέλλον, 'the future event,' meaning the accession of Corinth to the confederacy of Argos.

ᾐτιῶντο τὴν ἐσήγησιν τοῦ παντὸς] 'they charged them with the originating of the whole affair.' Of this use (exceedingly rare) of the accus. of thing instead of accus. of person and thing, in verbs of criminating, examples occur elsewhere in Xen. Cyr. viii. 2, 7, οὐκ οἶδ' ὅ τι ἄν τις αἰτιάσαιτο μᾶλλον, ἢ ὅτι ἤθελεν εὐεργετεῖν. Plato, p. 231, οὔτε τὰς πρὸς τοὺς προσήκοντας διαφορὰς αἰτιάσασθαι. Plut. t. ii. 676. 702. 722. 734. 907. In εἰ—ἔσονται we have a refined mode of speaking, by which εἰ is used with the infin., as said of things not merely probable, but of which there is little or no doubt. Or, to use the words of Matthiæ, 'it is a softening form of expression, with only a show (not the reality) of uncertainty:' in which case the εἰ is, as often, for ὅτι. Answering to this is in Latin the use of quod, or that of the accus. with the inf. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 617, 2, where several examples are subjoined. Verbs of wondering have most frequently the εἰ thus followed by some tense indic. for ὅτι, though the same has place in the case of verbs of other kinds, especially such as express the passions of the mind; e. g. verbs of fearing, thinking hard, (δεινὸν ποιεῖσθαι, infra vi. 61.) envying, and, as here, accusing or blaming. So Eurip. Orest. 1075, ἐν μὲν πρῶτά σοι μομφὴν ἔχω (for μέμφομαι) Εἰ ζῇν με χρῄζειν, σοῦ θανόντος, ἥλπισας. Finally, it is observable that this idiom is almost invariably found with the past tenses, very rarely, as here, with the fut.; though an example of that occurs in Æschin. p. 537, οὐκ ἀγαπᾷ, εἰ μὴ δίκην δέδωκεν, ἀλλ' εἰ μὴ καὶ χρυσῷ στεφάνῳ στεφανωθήσεται. The sense, then, here intended may be expressed thus: 'they censured both their origination of the whole matter, and that they should revolt from them, and become allies to the Argives.'

παραβήσεσθαι—ὅρκους] Of these words the full sense is, 'and that [should they do so] they would transgress the oaths [of εἰρημένον, 'κύριον εἶναι ὅ τι ἂν τὸ πλῆθος τῶν ξυμμάχων ψηφίσηται, ἢν μή τι θεῶν ἢ ἡρώων κώλυμα ᾖ.' 2. Κορίνθιοι δὲ, παρόντων σφίσι τῶν ξυμμάχων, ὅσοι οὐδ' αὐτοὶ ἐδέξαντο τὰς σπονδὰς (παρεκάλεσαν δὲ αὐτοὺς αὐτοὶ πρότερον), ἀντέλεγον τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, ἃ μὲν ἠδικοῦντο, οὐ δηλοῦντες ἄντικρυς, ὅτι οὔτε Σόλλιον σφίσιν ἀπέλαβον παρ' Ἀθηναίων οὔτε Ἀνακτόριον, εἴ τέ τι ἄλλο ἐνόμιζον ἐλασσοῦσθαι, πρόσχημα δὲ ποιούμενοι τοὺς ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης μὴ προδώσειν· ὀμόσαι γὰρ αὐτοῖς ὅρκους ἰδίᾳ τε, ὅτε μετὰ Ποτιδαιατῶν τὸ πρῶτον ἀφίσταντο, καὶ ἄλλους ὕστερον. 3. οὔκουν παραβαίνειν τοὺς τῶν ξυμμάχων ὅρκους ἔφασαν, οὐκ ἐσιόντες ἐς τὰς τῶν Ἀθηναίων σπονδάς. θεῶν γὰρ πίστεις ὀμόσαντες ἐκείνοις, οὐκ ἂν εὐορκεῖν προδιδόντες αὐτούς. εἰρῆσθαι δ' ὅτι, 'ἢν μὴ θεῶν ἢ ἡρώων κώλυμα ᾖ·' φαίνεσθαι οὖν σφίσι κώλυμα θεῖον τοῦτο. 4. καὶ περὶ μὲν τῶν παλαιῶν ὅρκων τοσαῦτα εἶπον· περὶ δὲ τῆς ‡ Ἀργείας ξυμμαχίας μετὰ τῶν φίλων βουλευσάμενοι ποιήσειν ὅ τι ἂν δίκαιον ᾖ. 5. καὶ οἱ μὲν Λακεδαιμονίων πρέσβεις ἀνεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἴκου.

alliance which they had taken to them].' On the idiom contained in εἰρημένον, (which signifies, 'it being provided,') see note at i. 140, 2. With κύριον εἶναι, ratum esse, 'to be valid, fixed, effective, authorized, to have the force of a law,' compare Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 6, ὅ τι νικήσῃ, ἐν τῷ κοινῷ, τοῦτο κύριον εἶναι τῶν πόλεων ('in the cities'). Plato, p. 889, τότε κύρια ἕκαστα εἶναι. Demosth. ap. Schol. ad Hermog. p. 106, πῶς οἷόν τε τὰ αὐτὰ κύρια καὶ μὴ κύρια εἶναι. Demosth. 700, 8, νόμος εἰ κύριος γενήσεται, 'rata habeatur.' Dio Cass. 384, 21, κύρια ἔξειν, and 434, 4, et al. κύρια ταῦτα τηρεῖται.

2. Σόλλιον] So I read, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, for vulg. Σόλειον, because such is required by the consent of all the MSS. at iii. 95, and several at ii. 30; while the rest have Σόλιον, which Bekker adopts, inconsistently, since here he edits Σόλλειον, from several of the best MSS. But MSS., in a case like this, have far less authority than the usage of the best writers, and the double λ is supported by the authority of Steph. Byz. in voc., where the λλ is required by the order of the letters. Since all the MSS. have Σόλλιον at iii. 95, it may seem strange that none should have it here. Probably, on careful collation, some would be found to have it. Thus, on examination, I have found it to have place in the Cod. Clar.

Of this obscure town (a colony of Corinth, and doubtless on the sea-coast) the situation is fixed at the small port of Stavro Limiona in Acarnania, midway between the bays of Kandili and Tragamisti.

εἴ τε—ἐλασσοῦσθαι] 'and in whatever other matter they thought themselves aggrieved or injured.' Compare i. 77, 3, ἤν τι—καὶ ὁπωσοῦν ἐλασσωθῶσιν. With the words following, πρόσχημα — προδώσειν, 'making as a pretext [for this], that they would not betray those in Thrace,' or their Thracian allies, compare Herodot. vii. 157, πρόσχημα ποιεύμενος ὡς ἐπ' Ἀθήνας ἐλαύνει. Plato, p. 316, πρόσχημα ποιεῖσθαι—τοὺς μὲν ποιησιν, &c.

4. The reading here is doubtful. The common lection Ἀργείων, found in above two-thirds of the MSS., has been retained by Bekker; while that of the remaining MSS. (including some of the best and Valla,) Ἀργείας, has been edited by Haack and Poppo, whom I have thought proper to follow in preference, because the latter is the more Attic form of expression, (as might be shown by several examples from the Attic writers, especially the poets,) and was less likely to have undergone alteration than Ἀργείων, which, being a plainer form, and being found in the case of Ἀθηναίων, just before, at ch. 32, 40, and 45, and τὴν Βοιωτῶν ξυμμαχίαν at ch. 46, was, it seems, here introduced; not, however, by careless scribes, but by erring critics. On the other hand, little likely was Ἀργείας to have come from the scribes; which, though rare, is nearly allied to ταῖς σπονδαῖς ταῖς Ἀττικαῖς at ch. 29, and τὰς Ἀττ. σπονδὰς at ch. 36.

ἔτυχον δὲ παρόντες ἐν Κορίνθῳ καὶ Ἀργείων πρέσβεις, οἳ ἐκέλευον τοὺς Κορινθίους ἰέναι ἐς τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, καὶ μὴ μέλλειν· οἱ δὲ ἐς τὸν ὕστερον ξύλλογον αὐτοῖς τὸν παρὰ σφίσι προεῖπον ἥκειν. XXXI. Ἦλθε δὲ καὶ Ἠλείων πρεσβεία εὐθύς, καὶ ἐποιήσαντο πρὸς Κορινθίους ξυμμαχίαν πρῶτον· ἔπειτα ἐκεῖθεν ἐς Ἄργος ἐλθόντες, καθάπερ προείρητο, Ἀργείων ξύμμαχοι ἐγένοντο· διαφερόμενοι γὰρ ἐτύγχανον τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις περὶ Λεπρέου. 2. πολέμου γὰρ γενομένου ποτὲ πρὸς Ἀρκάδων τινὰς Λεπρεάταις, καὶ Ἠλείων παρακληθέντων ὑπὸ Λεπρεατῶν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν ἐπὶ τῇ ἡμισείᾳ τῆς γῆς, καὶ λυσάντων τὸν πόλεμον, Ἠλεῖοι τὴν γῆν νεμομένοις αὐτοῖς τοῖς Λεπρεάταις τάλαντον ἔταξαν τῷ Διὶ τῷ Ὀλυμπίῳ ἀποφέρειν. 3. καὶ μέχρι τοῦ Ἀττικοῦ πολέμου ἀπέφερον· ἔπειτα παυσαμένων διὰ πρόφασιν τοῦ πολέμου, οἱ Ἠλεῖοι ἐπηνάγκαζον· οἱ δ' ἐτράποντο πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους. καὶ δίκης Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐπιτραπείσης, ὑποτοπήσαντες οἱ Ἠλεῖοι μὴ ἴσον ἔξειν, ἀνέντες τὴν ἐπιτροπὴν, Λεπρεατῶν τὴν γῆν ἔτεμον. 4. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι

5. τὸν ὕστερον—ἥκειν] 'to come to them at the latter meeting, to be held with them,' the latter of the two meetings which they had fixed for the consideration of so important an affair.

CH. XXXI. 1. Λεπρέου] A town of considerable magnitude, of which the site is fixed by Dodwell, Gell, and Leake at some ruins about a mile and a half from Strobitza, and four miles from the sea-coast. The acropolis is still traceable, with square towers,—one almost entire,—and two whole gates yet remaining.

2. ἐπὶ τῇ ἡμισείᾳ τῆς γῆς] 'on condition of having the half of the territory,' viz. in property or sovereignty: on which force of ἐπὶ with dat. denoting condition, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 585, β. Of the words following, Ἠλεῖοι τὴν γῆν—ἀποφέρειν, the purpose is to point at the nature of this sovereignty,—implying, as it almost always did, the property itself of the land,—by showing that the Eleans did (what it was perhaps previously understood that they should not do) disturb the present possessors of the land, but merely, as the Athenians did in the case of the Lesbians, (iii. 50.) and the Cytherians, (iv. 57.) put upon them a certain tax, to be paid as rent to the treasury of Jupiter at Olympia. In the case, however, of the Lesbians, it was a real rent, however moderate; in that of the Cytherians and the Lepreans, it was rather a quit-rent or acknowledgment as a sign of sovereignty. In ἀποφέρειν and ἀποφορὰ we have, as Dr. Arnold observes, words used peculiarly to express the payment of rent, whether from a tenant to his landlord, or from a subject to his sovereign, or from a conquered people to their conquerors. (See my note on St. Matth. xxi. 33.) Yet notwithstanding, the right in question might be exercised harshly, making the payment a rack-rent, or mildly, making it merely a quit-rent, as it must have been in the present case, inasmuch as the territory of Lepreum was, as we learn from Scylax and Strabo, both extensive and fertile. Of this sense of τάσσειν, to rate or tax, I have before treated more than once; as also on νέμεσθαι, as denoting occupation and usufruct, not property. This use of νέμεσθαι (frequent in Herodotus) has place especially in the phrase διδόναι νέμεσθαι, which occurs again in the next chapter.

3. διὰ πρόφασιν τοῦ πολέμου] For as the war would bring other burdens with it, they might think it a reason to shield off this. At ἐπηνάγκαζον is to be supplied ἐπὶ τοῦτο, as in Aristoph. Plut. 523. 533. 799, and in other passages of the best writers. The imperfect tense here (as in the case of ἐπεβούλευον at iii. 5, 4.) denotes action begun or contemplated, but not consummated. The sense is literally, 'they were compelling them to it,' 'using means for compulsion;' or, to render freely, with Hobbes, 'would have compelled.' Δίκης Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐπιτραπείσης, 'the cause being referred to their decision as umpires,' agreeably to the proviso in the treaty referred to at ch. 79, 3. Ἀνέντες τὴν ἐπιτροπὴν, 'having thrown up the οὐδὲν ἧσσον ἐδίκασαν αὐτονόμους εἶναι Λεπρεάτας, καὶ ἀδικεῖν Ἠλείους· καὶ, ὡς οὐκ ἐμμεινάντων τῇ ἐπιτροπῇ, φρουρὰν ὑπλιτῶν ἐσέπεμψαν ἐς Λέπρεον. 5. οἱ δὲ Ἠλεῖοι, νομίζοντες πόλιν σφῶν ἀφεστηκυῖαν δέξασθαι τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, καὶ τὴν ξυνθήκην προφέροντες, ἐν ᾗ εἴρητο, ἃ ἔχοντες ἐς τὸν Ἀττικὸν πόλεμον καθίσταντό τινες, ταῦτα ἔχοντας καὶ ἐξελθεῖν, ὡς οὐκ ἴσον ἔχοντες, ἀφίστανται πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους, καὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, ὥσπερ προείρητο, καὶ οὗτοι ἐποιήσαντο. 6. ἐγένοντο δὲ καὶ οἱ Κορίνθιοι εὐθὺς μετ' ἐκείνους, καὶ οἱ ἐπὶ Θράκης Χαλκιδῆς, Ἀργείων ξύμμαχοι. 7. Βοιωτοὶ δὲ καὶ Μεγαρῆς τὸ αὐτὸ λέγοντες ἡσύχαζον, περιορώμενοι ὑπὸ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, καὶ νομίζοντες σφίσι τὴν Ἀργείων reference.' Budæus (Comm. Gr.) quotes as from Demosthenes the cognate phrase ἀφεῖναι τὴν ἐπιτροπήν. Of this apparently forensic phrase (parallel to that in our language, 'to waive a right or arbitration') I have met with no example elsewhere, though a very similar use of ἀνιέναι may be noticed in Plutarch, t. i. 871, γνώμην ἀν., repudiare, and a passage of the New Testament, Ephes. vi. 9, ἀνιέντες τὴν ἀπειλήν, 'letting go,' repudiating threats (or threatening language). Compare also Cic. de Off. ch. 25, 'Iracundia repudianda est.' The corresponding law-term in Latin was repudiare, as in the phrase 'repudiare fidei commissum.' Thus here we may Latinize by compromisso repudiato.

5. τὴν ξυνθήκην προφέροντες, &c.] 'alleging the compact, in which it was declared that whatever places any parties should be in possession of when they engaged in the Attic war, those they should have at the close of it.' The word προφέρειν is here used in a forensic sense, as equivalent to παρέχεσθαι, and answering to allegare or proferre in Latin, 'to bring forward, produce, allege in the way of proof or apology:' and so the phrase προφέρειν τὰ δικαιώματα, with which compare proferre testimonia in C. Nepos, Timoth. 4. The only example adduced in Steph. Thes. (ed. Valp.) of this signification, is a passage of Xen. Œc. xiv. 6, where the term is used of laws alleged to prove persons to be just. Of this idiom, which is indeed rare, I know of no other examples except the passages of Polyb. referred to in Schweigh. Lex. Pol. Compare also Ælian, V. H. viii. 12, ταὐτὴν ἀπολογίαν προεφέρετο.

But, to turn from words to things, the allegation here made seems, as Bp. Thirlwall says, to refer to the fundamental preliminary agreement, which Thucydides describes, ch. 17, in very different terms—ξυνεχωρεῖτο ὥστε ἃ ἑκάτεροι πολέμῳ ἔσχον, ἀποδόντας τὴν εἰρήνην ποιεῖσθαι. Otherwise we must suppose that the Peloponnesian confederates had given each other a guarantee to this effect before the war.

7. τὸ αὐτὸ λέγοντες] 'holding the same language [as the other],' 'being of the same mind.' So in the New Testament, 1 Corinth. i. 10, παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς—ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες, and Jos. Ant. xviii. 9, 9. Of the words following, περιορώμενοι ὑπὸ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, the meaning has been mistaken by almost all the translators and expositors. In my smaller edition I explained it to be, 'being watched over by the Lacedæmonians,' 'being carefully observed by them:' a view of the sense which has since been adopted by Dukas, who compares another passage of our author, iv. 124, τῆς Μένδης περιωρώμενος, 'watching carefully over [the safety of] Mende.' And this interpretation Dr. Arnold would, he says, be ready to adopt, could he find any instance in Thucydides of περιορᾶσθαι being used in a passive sense. But to this it is replied by Poppo, that 'since our author has said not only περιορᾶσθαι for περισκοπεῖν, but at iv. 71, περιϊδεῖν in an active sense, no reason is there why he should not have taken περιορῶμαι passively for περιβλέπομαι, color.' If this should appear unsatisfactory, we may be allowed to conjecture that Thucydides wrote περιεωραμένοι. The ε might easily, as in many other instances it has been, be omitted; and then the a would as easily pass into ω. Still some doubt may, after all, exist as to the exact sense of the word. And though it be true that, as Arnold and Poppo observe, the Bœotians certainly were not despaired of by the Lacedæmonians,—yet difficult would it be to show that they had been, as Poppo explains the words to mean, 'studiosè δημοκρατίαν, αὐτοῖς ὀλιγαρχουμένοις, ἧσσον ξύμφορον εἶναι τῆς Λακεδαιμονίων πολιτείας.

XXXII. Περὶ δὲ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους τοῦ θέρους τούτου Σκιωναίους μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι ἐκπολιορκήσαντες, ἀπέκτειναν τοὺς ἡβῶντας, παῖδας δὲ καὶ γυναῖκας ἠνδραπόδισαν, καὶ τὴν γῆν Πλαταιεῦσιν ἔδοσαν νέμεσθαι· Δηλίους δὲ κατήγαγον πάλιν ἐς Δῆλον, ἐνθυμούμενοι τάς τε ἐν ταῖς μάχαις ξυμφορὰς, καὶ τοῦ ἐν Δελφοῖς θεοῦ χρήσαντος. 2. καὶ Φωκῆς καὶ Λοκροὶ ἤρξαντο πολεμεῖν. 3. καὶ Κορίνθιοι καὶ Ἀργεῖοι, ἤδη ξύμμαχοι ὄντες, ἔρχονται ἐς Τεγέαν, ἀποστήσοντες Λακεδαιμονίων, ὁρῶντες μέγα μέρος ὂν, καὶ, εἰ σφίσι προσγένοιτο, νομίζοντες ἅπασαν ἂν ἔχειν Πελοπόννησον. 4. ὡς δὲ οὐδὲν ἂν ἔφασαν ἐναντιωθῆναι οἱ Τεγεᾶται Λακεδαιμονίοις, οἱ Κορίνθιοι μέχρι τούτου προθύμως πράσσοντες, ἀνεῖσαν τῆς φιλονεικίας, καὶ ὠρρώδησαν μὴ οὐδεὶς σφίσιν ἔτι τῶν ἄλλων προσχωρῇ. 5. ὅμως δὲ ἐλθόντες ἐς τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς, ἐδέοντο σφῶν τε καὶ observati et culti.' But, as Bp. Thirlwall observes, 'both they and the Megarians might think they had been slighted and neglected, both in the terms of the peace, and in the preference which had been given to the Athenian alliance.' Hence I would, with him, understand the word in the sense slighted, neglected, and ill-treated: a signification which the word bears elsewhere in Thucydides (as i. 25.) and in other of the best authors, e. g. Plutarch, t. ii. 61. 148. 989. 947, and Plato, p. 781, (where we have this very passive form used in a passive sense,) τὸ περὶ τὰς γυναῖκας ἀκοσμήτως περιορώμενον. So, too, Hesych. explains περιορᾷν by ὑπερορᾷν.

The next words, καὶ νομίζοντες—πολιτείας, advert to the other reason for keeping quiet,—namely, that the presiding of a democratical state like Argos would be less suited to their oligarchical constitution than the Lacedæmonian polity.

CH. XXXII. 1. ἔδοσαν νέμεσθαι] 'gave it for occupation,'—namely, as distinguished from property. See note supra ch. 31, 1. Of the words, a little after, ἐνθυμούμενοι τάς τε ἐν ταῖς μάχαις ξυμφορὰς, the full sense is, 'calling to mind, making them a matter of serious consideration;' as infra vii. 18, 2. Xen. Cyr. i. 1, 3. iv. 1, 2. Anab. ii. 5, 2. Hist. iv. 2, 6, and Isocr. p. 15, ἐνθ. τοὺς κινδύνους.

3. μέγα μέρος ὄν] 'that it forms a considerable portion [of the Peloponnesian confederacy].' See ii. 20, and note.

4. ἀνεῖσαν τῆς φιλονεικίας] 'abated of their eagerness or ardour,'—namely, for the new confederacy. The word φιλονεικία properly denotes eagerness of contention, a striving for the love of strife; though sometimes, as here, the notion of strife is lost, and there is merely conveyed that of zeal and earnestness (studium) in prosecuting any pursuit; of which latter use (though rare) I have noted, as examples elsewhere, Polyb. iv. 49, 2, πᾶσαν προσενέγκασθαι φιλονεικίαν, εἰς τὸ διαλῦσαι—τὸν πόλεμον, 'to employ every exertion,' &c. Plato, p. 860, φιλονεικίας ἢ φιλοτιμίας ἕνεκα, where I should be inclined to think the words ἢ φιλοτιμίας a gloss, considering that φιλονεικία is thus used for φιλοτιμία, studium, did I not find the words placed, in the corresponding member of an antithetic clause, in Plutarch, t. i. 381, F. Dio Chrys. p. 499 & 500, and similarly followed by ζῆλος in Plutarch, t. ii. 91. Thus the latter term is merely subjoined for explanation-sake. Accordingly in Xen. de Venat. vi. 22, on the subject of dogs following the hare by his footmarks, it is said, ἵνα μὴ, ὑπὸ φιλονεικίας, ὑπερβάλλωσι τὰ ἴχνη, ('go beyond or past the footmarks,' as just before, § 22, ἐὰν μὴ πρὸς αὐτοῖς ὦσι τοῖς ἴχνεσι, ἀλλ' ὑπερβάλλωσι,) where the recent editors have done wrong in altering the reading of Leuncl. and Wells, φιλονεικίας, to φιλοτιμίας, which, however it may be supported by superior authority of MSS., is manifestly a mere gloss. Such is the use of φιλόνεικος in Xen. Mem. ii. 6, 5, and of φιλονεικέω several times in the same writer.

Ἀργείων γίγνεσθαι ξυμμάχους, καὶ τἆλλα κοινῇ πράσσειν· τάς τε δεχημέρους ἐπισπονδάς, αἳ ἦσαν Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Βοιωτοῖς πρὸς ἀλλήλους, οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον γενόμεναι [τούτων] τῶν πεντηκονταετίδων σπονδῶν, ἐκέλευον οἱ Κορίνθιοι τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς ἀκολουθήσαντας Ἀθήναζε, καὶ σφίσι ποιῆσαι, ὥσπερ Βοιωτοὶ εἶχον, μὴ δεχομένων δὲ Ἀθηναίων ἀπειπεῖν τὴν ἐκεχειρίαν, καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν μὴ σπένδεσθαι ἄνευ αὐτῶν. 6. Βοιωτοὶ δὲ, δεομένων τῶν Κορινθίων, περὶ μὲν τῆς Ἀργείων ξυμμαχίας ἐπισχεῖν αὐτοὺς ἐκέλευον· ἐλθόντες δὲ Ἀθήναζε μετὰ Κορινθίων οὐχ εὕροντο τὰς δεχημέρους σπονδάς, ἀλλ' ἀπεκρίναντο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι Κορινθίοις εἶναι σπονδάς, εἴπερ Λακεδαιμονίων εἰσὶ ξύμμαχοι. 7. Βοιωτοὶ μὲν οὖν οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ἀπεῖπον τὰς δεχημέρους, ἀξιούντων καὶ αἰτιωμένων Κορινθίων ξυνθέσθαι σφίσι· Κορινθίοις δὲ ἀνακωχὴ ἄσπονδος ἦν πρὸς Ἀθηναίους.

XXXIII. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ τοῦ αὐτοῦ θέρους πανδημεὶ ἐστράτευσαν, Πλειστοάνακτος τοῦ Παυσανίου Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλέως ἡγουμένου, τῆς Ἀρκαδίας ἐς Παῤῥασίους, Μαντινέων ὑπηκόους ὄντας, κατὰ στάσιν ἐπικαλεσαμένων σφᾶς, ἅμα δὲ καὶ τὸ ἐν Κυψέλοις τεῖχος ἀναιρήσοντες, ἢν δύνωνται, ὃ ἐτείχισαν Μαντινῆς καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐφρούρουν, ἐν τῇ Παῤῥασικῇ κείμενον, ἐπὶ τῇ Σκιρίτιδι τῆς

5. δεχημέρους ἐπισπονδὰς] See note supra ch. 26. The rare term ἐπισπονδὴ (which is from ἐπισπένδεσθαι) is here used by way of intimating succession one after another, these temporary ten-days' truces needing the ceremony of the σπονδὴ to be repeated one time after another. In ἄνευ αὐτῶν we have a negligent expression, such as has before occurred at iv. 29, and v. 40, borrowed from the inexact language of common life, for which strict propriety would rather require ἄνευ σφῶν.

6. οὐχ εὕροντο] 'did not obtain (non impetrabant) [their request];' a sense of εὑρίσκεσθαι found also at i. 58, and in Xenophon and other of the best writers.

7. ἀξιούντων καὶ αἰτιωμένων] Of these words the full sense is, as Portus explains, 'although they required them so to do, and with expostulation urged that so they had engaged to do:' and thus they are interpreted by Poppo and Goeller. The irregularity may, however, best be adjusted by regarding καὶ αἰτιωμένων as an expression thrown in by way of intimating that the demand was made with expostulation, crimination, and vehement complaint, as to the wrong meditated: and so expostulo in Latin signifies properly, 'vehementer postulo aliquid, querela aut criminatione addita;' but when joined with a verb of requiring or demanding, (as here, ἀξιοῦσθαι,) it has merely the sense of criminating, and sometimes without any such an adjunct. Accordingly there is here a sort of hendiadys, as in Cic. Tusc. Disp. v. 5, 'expostulare et queri.'

ἀνακωχὴ ἄσπονδος] Meaning, as Dr. Arnold explains, 'a mere agreement in words, not ratified by the solemnities of religion:' nearly equivalent, as Poppo says, to the tacitæ induciæ of Livy, ii. 19 and 64. xxiii. 46, implying a sort of tacit agreement to abstain from hostilities. Compare Justin, vi. 7, 'Neutris quidquam hostile facientibus, cum, quasi tacito consensu, induciæ essent.'

CH. XXXIII. 1. τῆς Ἀρκαδίας ἐς Παῤῥασίους] Render, 'against the Parrhasians of Arcadia,' meaning the city of the Parrhasians in Arcadia. The genitive is used as though the name of a place had followed, and not that of the inhabitants. The name of the city itself was Parrhasia, of which mention is made in Hom. Il. ii. 610. Xen. Hist. vii. 1. Steph. Byz. and other writers.

ἐπικαλεσαμένων] scil. τῶν Παῤῥασίων: a peculiar use of the genitive absolute, on which see Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, p. 121. On the site of Parrhasia, see my note in Translation, and Colonel Leake's Morea, vol. ii. 321.

Λακωνικῆς. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν Λακεδαιμόνιοι τὴν γῆν τῶν Παῤῥασίων ἐδῄουν, οἱ δὲ Μαντινῆς τὴν πόλιν Ἀργείοις φύλαξι παραδόντες, αὐτοὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν ἐφρούρουν· ἀδύνατοι δ' ὄντες διασῶσαι τό τε ἐν Κυψέλοις τεῖχος καὶ τὰς ἐν Παῤῥασίοις πόλεις, ἀπῆλθον. 3. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ τούς τε Παῤῥασίους αὐτονόμους ποιήσαντες, καὶ τὸ τεῖχος καθελόντες, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἴκου.

XXXIV. Καὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ θέρους, ἤδη ἠκόντων αὐτοῖς τῶν ἀπὸ Θράκης μετὰ Βρασίδου ἐξελθόντων στρατιωτῶν, οὓς ὁ Κλεαρίδας μετὰ τὰς σπονδὰς ἐκόμισεν, οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐψηφίσαντο τοὺς μὲν μετὰ Βρασίδου Εἵλωτας μαχεσαμένους ἐλευθέρους εἶναι, καὶ οἰκεῖν ὅπου ἂν βούλωνται· καὶ ὕστερον οὐ πολλῷ αὐτοὺς μετὰ τῶν Νεοδαμωδῶν ἐς Λέπρεον κατέστησαν, κείμενον ἐπὶ τῆς Λακωνικῆς καὶ τῆς Ἠλείας, ὄντες ἤδη διάφοροι Ἠλείοις· 2. τοὺς δ' ἐκ τῆς νήσου ληφθέντας σφῶν, καὶ τὰ ὅπλα παραδόντας, δείσαντες μή τι, διὰ τὴν Κυψέλοις] This is by Goeller and Leake with reason supposed to designate what is sometimes called Basilis on the Alpheus, so named by its founder Cypselus, as being the royal residence and capital of Arcadia, though sometimes called Cypsela from its founder. On the situation of Σκίριτις see Col. Leake's Morea, vol. iii. p. 28.

CH. XXXIV. 1. τῶν ἀπὸ Θράκης—ἐξελθόντων] An enallage of preposition involving a brief mode of speaking (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 596). In the words καὶ οἰκεῖν ὅπου ἂν βούλωνται there is contained, as Goeller points out, what belongs to the idea of complete freedom,—namely, that now they had liberty to inhabit where they pleased, whereas formerly they had been confined to certain spots which they could not leave.

τῶν Νεοδαμωδῶν] literally, 'new-commoners,' meaning the class of persons similar to, but distinct from, that of the Helots, called Neodamodes, on which see Müller's Dor. ii. p. 45, or the extract from thence in the notes of Goeller and Arnold. Those commentators are agreed that the Neodamodes formed a class distinct from the Helots; and that the latter rose to the class of the former in the next generation, so that the son of an enfranchised Helot became a Neodamode, as the son of the Roman libertus (a freedman) was a libertinus. Perhaps, however, it was only the grandson of a freed Helot that became a Neodamode.

ἐπὶ τῆς Λακωνικῆς καὶ τῆς Ἠλείας] literally, 'at the Lacedæmonian and Elean territories,'—namely, at that point where they abut on one another, so that the district of Lepreum had the Lacedæmonian territory lying on the one side, and the Elean on the other. Ἐπὶ has here the force of our preposition at as used in definitions of place,—a force usually implying proximity, (as in Herodot. v. 92, ἑστεῶτες ἐπὶ τῶν θυρέων,) and in the present instance that of abutment upon. Thus it is not, as Goeller imagines, 'equivalent to saying that Lepreum was on the confines of Laconia and Elis,' (as at ii. 18, we have, ἡ Οἰνόη οὖσα ἐν μεθορίοις τῆς Ἀττικῆς καὶ Βοιωτίας,) for it might have been so, and yet not occupied the situation which it did,—abutting both on Laconia and Elis, and consequently being a shield to Laconia against the attacks of Elis, as Cynuria was against that of Argolis.

2. There is here narrated another measure of state-policy,—namely, the disfranchisement of the prisoners taken by surrender at Sphacteria, and now returned home. Here, however, no little perplexity has been occasioned by mingling together what ought to have been kept distinct,—namely, the transaction itself, and the reasons of the transaction. Now the ἀτιμία, or disfranchisement, being one of an unusual kind, is described by our historian as being not merely a disqualification for giving suffrage, or holding any office of state, but also from forming any ordinary contracts as to the holding or disposing of property, or the exercise of any right at law connected therewith, at least in their own name: on which and other lesser kinds of ἀτιμία at Athens, see Schoemann de Comit. Athen. p. 79. Meier de Bonis Damnatorum, p. 101, seqq. and other works ξυμφορὰν νομίσαντες ἐλασσωθήσεσθαι, καὶ ὄντες ἐπίτιμοι, νεωτερίσωσιν, ἤδη καὶ ἀρχάς τινας ἔχοντας, ἀτίμους ἐποίησαν, ἀτιμίαν δὲ τοιάνδε ὥστε μήτε ἄρχειν, μήτε πριαμένους τι ἢ πωλοῦντας κυρίους εἶναι. ὕστερον δὲ αὖθις χρόνῳ ἐπίτιμοι ἐγένοντο.

XXXV. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους καὶ Θύσσον τὴν ἐν τῇ Ἄθῳ † Δικτηδιῆς εἷλον, Ἀθηναίων οὖσαν ξύμμαχον.

referred to by Goeller. The words δείσαντες μή τι, διὰ τὴν ξυμφορὰν νομίσαντες ἐλασσωθήσεσθαι, νεωτερίσωσιν, must be kept distinct. Render, 'fearing lest they should break the public tranquillity by attempts at revolution, as thinking they should be on a worse footing by reason of the misfortune which had befallen them:' for, as the surrendering with arms in their hands was regarded as contrary to the spirit of the martial law, they might expect to be lowered in the estimation of their countrymen, and consequently would come off with the worst. Bp. Thirlwall thinks 'the precaution taken against this danger strange, since it is not clear how this seemingly unjust severity could be expected to prevent them from forming designs against the state.' Certainly not; but it made them almost powerless to disturb the public tranquillity. And the fear lest they should attempt political innovation, though probably confined to the common people, was not, considering what had taken place in the case of Corcyra, wholly chimerical, since the calamities which befel that unfortunate country had been occasioned by the return of the Corcyræan prisoners from Corinth. As to the penalty itself, though seemingly unjust and severe, it might be meant, in such a case, rather as mercy. It was doubtless, as Bp. Thirlwall supposes, 'intended as an expiation of their offences, so that when they recovered their former rank (which in due time they did), they might once more lift up their heads among their equals, without reproach.' Only one difficulty remains to be cleared away—and that is as regards the words καὶ ὄντες ἐπίτιμοι and ἤδη καὶ ἀρχάς τινας ἔχοντας, which are not meant, as Poppo understands them, to assign two causes for exciting the persons in question to sedition,—for they would have the opposite effect,—but to state the grounds on which the disfranchisement was decreed; namely, that these persons were eligible to all the honours and offices of the state, and consequently might attain power which they might abuse. Of ὄντες ἐπίτιμοι the sense is, 'they being eligible to honours.' Or the καὶ before ὄντες may be merely meant to introduce the sense, that they were even eligible to honours, just as at vii. 53, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐπιβοηθήσαντες, καὶ δείσαντες περὶ ταῖς ναυσὶν, ἐς μάχην κατέστησαν, &c., where the καὶ might equally seem needless.

CH. XXXV. 1. Δικτηδιῆς] For this, Poppo and Goeller edit Διῆς, on the conjecture of Gatterer, confirmed, they think, by another passage of our author ch. 82, where Διῆς is edited by them for vulg. Δικτιδιῆς. Bekker, in each passage, edits Δικτιδιῆς, which, however, seems open to this fatal objection,—not that it is, as Bp. Thirlwall says, unintelligible, but that such a people as the Dictidians are no where else mentioned either in Thucydides or in any other writer. And if we should suppose that the name Δικτιδιῆς, or Δικτυδιῆς, might be only another name for Διῆς, or the inhabitants of Dium, a well-known city of the peninsula of Athos, iv. 109, we have to encounter almost as great a difficulty another way,—namely, how to account for the Dians going to war with and taking a city in the Athenian alliance, from which, if Διῆς be the true reading at v. 82, they did not revolt till four years afterwards, and three years before the present period it had resisted all the attacks of Brasidas. Yet if Δικτιδιῆς or Διῆς be rejected, we are left to conjecture the true reading. Poppo proposes to read Χαλκιδῆς or οἱ Χαλκιδῆς, which Bp. Thirlwall thinks the most probable conjecture. But how then, it may be asked, are we enabled to account for so perpetually occurring a name as Χαλκιδῆς being mistaken for one so uncommon as Δικτιδιῆς? Accordingly I would prefer to read Διῆς, or Δικτηδιῆς, and suppose the name Δικτηδιῆς only another name for Διῆς. The prefix δικτη, as we learn from Steph. Byz., Etym. Mag., and Zonaras, denotes both a mountain, as one in Crete, and a mountainous promontory, as one in Libya: and if Dium was, as I believe it to have been, situated where Col. Leake places it, the prefix δικτη may have reference to the very striking promontory on which Dium (at the present day Port Platy) was situated; with reference to which Δῖον was, it seems, sometimes, by way of distinction from six or seven other cities of the same name, called Δικτη or Δικτι Δῖον, and its inhabitants Δικτηδιῆς:—not, however, I suspect, in the age of Thucydides; consequently we may regard the Δικτη as having arisen from some Scholiast, and thus may account for the recurrence of the reading Δικτηδιῆς at v. 82. Under these circumstances I have, in consideration of the united authority of the MSS., here edited Δικτηδιῆς, though at v. 82 I have edited Διῆς, as found in the best MSS.; not, however, doubting that Thucydides here wrote Διῆς. As to the argument that this would suppose the Dians to have revolted from Athens four years before Thucydides relates them to have done,—that may be rebutted by supposing this attack and capture of Thyssos by the Dians to have proceeded from some private dispute between the two towns, which were only seven or eight miles apart, and not as implying any abandonment of the Athenian alliance. And the Athenians, it seems, thought it best to connive at this unjustifiable violence, rather than run the hazard of throwing so important a city as Dium into the arms of the Chalcidians. The reading which I have adopted, Δικτηδιῆς, is found in the best MSS. (as also, I would notice, the Cod. Clarend.) and the reading Δικτυδιῆς, found in several others, confirms it, that being merely an error of the scribes for Δικτηδ. If any objection should be made to the junctura in Δικτηδιῆς, it may be removed by supposing vulg. Δικτιδιῆς to be the most correct mode of writing, though it be not what Thucydides really wrote.

2. τὴν οὐκ-ἀπόδοσιν] 'the non-restoration.' On this idiom see note at i. 137.

3. τὴν γὰρ Ἀμφίπολιν—οὐκ ἀποδεδώκεσαν] Render, 'For the Lacedæmonians, to whose turn it fell to be the first to make restitution of Amphipolis and the other places [to be restored], had not given [them] up;' or, 'for the Lacedæmonians, &c. had not given up Amphipolis and the other places [to be restored].' Παρεῖχον, sistebant, exhibebant; παρέχειν signifying, 'to hold [out] any thing or person towards any one,' as showing it or him to be this or that. Now the Lacedæmonians had engaged that their allies in Thrace and elsewhere should accept the treaty of peace, and therefore they were bound παρέχειν αὐτούς, to produce or bring them forward in that quality, which they had failed to do. Ἄνευ ξυγγραφῆς: meaning, '[though] without a written engagement [binding the parties so to do].' The word ξυγγραφὴ signifies properly aliquid compositum, something reduced to writing, whether a contract, or engagement, or a bond: and the term was used both of single persons and, as here, of two parties to a mutual stipulation under bond. In this forensic sense it is frequent in the Orators. As to what Dr. Arnold says, that 'in such a written agreement was usually stipulated the penalty to be incurred by either party on its violation,'—it would be difficult to prove that such was the case. At all events the term ξυγγραφὴ cannot of itself mean a bond under penalty; nor was the present a case that well admitted of it. All that we may suppose here intended to be understood is, that the Lacedæmonians evinced their insincerity by failing to pledge themselves further than their word, which they never hesitated to break.

At ἐσιόντας is to be supplied, from the subject-matter, ἐς τὰς σπονδάς.

4. ὑπετόπευον] So Bekker and Goeller edit, for vulg. ὑπώπτευον, which is evidently a mere gloss. Ὑποτοπεύω is, indeed, a rare form, yet not unprecedented elsewhere, since it is found in the best MSS. at viii. 76. And to the evidence of the MSS. adduced as having it, I am enabled

2. Καὶ τὸ θέρος τοῦτο πᾶν ἐπιμιξίαι μὲν ἦσαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Πελοποννησίοις, ὑπώπτευον δὲ ἀλλήλους εὐθὺς μετὰ τὰς σπονδὰς οἵ τε Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι κατὰ τὴν τῶν χωρίων ἀλλήλοις οὐκ-ἀπόδοσιν. 3. τὴν γὰρ Ἀμφίπολιν πρότεροι λαχόντες οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἀποδιδόναι καὶ τἆλλα οὐκ ἀποδεδώκεσαν· οὐδὲ τοὺς ἐπὶ Θράκης παρεῖχον ξυμμάχους τὰς σπονδὰς δεχομένους, οὐδὲ Βοιωτούς, οὐδὲ Κορινθίους, λέγοντες ἀεὶ ὡς μετ' Ἀθηναίων τούτους, ἢν μὴ θέλωσι, κοινῇ ἀναγκάσουσι· χρόνους τε προὔθεντο ἄνευ ξυγγραφῆς, ἐν οἷς χρὴ τοὺς μὴ ἐσιόντας ἀμφοτέροις πολεμίους εἶναι. 4. τούτων οὖν ὁρῶντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐδὲν ἔργῳ γιγνόμενον, ὑπετόπευον τοὺς restitution of Amphipolis and the other places [to be restored], had not given [them] up;' or, 'for the Lacedæmonians, &c. had not given up Amphipolis and the other places [to be restored].' Παρεῖχον, sistebant, exhibebant; παρέχειν signifying, 'to hold [out] any thing or person towards any one,' as showing it or him to be this or that. Now the Lacedæmonians had engaged that their allies in Thrace and elsewhere should accept the treaty of peace, and therefore they were bound παρέχειν αὐτούς, to produce or bring them forward in that quality, which they had failed to do. Ἄνευ ξυγγραφῆς: meaning, '[though] without a written engagement [binding the parties so to do].' The word ξυγγραφὴ signifies properly aliquid compositum, something reduced to writing, whether a contract, or engagement, or a bond: and the term was used both of single persons and, as here, of two parties to a mutual stipulation under bond. In this forensic sense it is frequent in the Orators. As to what Dr. Arnold says, that 'in such a written agreement was usually stipulated the penalty to be incurred by either party on its violation,'—it would be difficult to prove that such was the case. At all events the term ξυγγραφὴ cannot of itself mean a bond under penalty; nor was the present a case that well admitted of it. All that we may suppose here intended to be understood is, that the Lacedæmonians evinced their insincerity by failing to pledge themselves further than their word, which they never hesitated to break.

At ἐσιόντας is to be supplied, from the subject-matter, ἐς τὰς σπονδάς.

4. ὑπετόπευον] So Bekker and Goeller edit, for vulg. ὑπώπτευον, which is evidently a mere gloss. Ὑποτοπεύω is, indeed, a rare form, yet not unprecedented elsewhere, since it is found in the best MSS. at viii. 76. And to the evidence of the MSS. adduced as having it, I am enabled Λακεδαιμονίους μηδὲν δίκαιον διανοεῖσθαι, ὥστε οὔτε Πύλον ἀπαιτούντων αὐτῶν ἀπεδίδοσαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου δεσμώτας μετεμέλοντο ἀποδεδωκότες, τά τε ἄλλα χωρία εἶχον, μένοντες ἕως σφίσι κἀκεῖνοι ποιήσειαν τὰ εἰρημένα. 5. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ τὰ μὲν δυνατὰ ἔφασαν πεποιηκέναι· τοὺς γὰρ παρὰ σφίσι δεσμώτας ὄντας Ἀθηναίων ἀποδοῦναι, καὶ τοὺς ἐπὶ Θράκης στρατιώτας ἀπαγαγεῖν, καὶ εἴ του ἄλλου ἐγκρατεῖς ἦσαν· Ἀμφιπόλεως δὲ οὐκ ἔφασαν κρατεῖν ὥστε παραδοῦναι, Βοιωτοὺς δὲ πειράσεσθαι καὶ Κορινθίους ἐς τὰς σπονδὰς ἐσαγαγεῖν, καὶ Πάνακτον ἀπολαβεῖν, καὶ Ἀθηναίων ὅσοι ἦσαν ἐν Βοιωτοῖς αἰχμάλωτοι, κομιεῖν. 6. Πύλον μέντοι ἠξίουν σφίσιν ἀποδοῦναι· εἰ δὲ μή, Μεσσηνίους ‡ γε καὶ τοὺς Εἵλωτας ἐξαγαγεῖν, ὥσπερ καὶ αὐτοὶ τοὺς ἀπὸ Θράκης, Ἀθηναίους δὲ φρουρεῖν τὸ χωρίον αὐτούς, εἰ βούλονται. 7. πολλάκις δὲ καὶ πολλῶν λόγων γενομένων ἐν τῷ θέρει τούτῳ, ἔπεισαν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ὥστε ἐξαγαγεῖν ἐκ Πύλου Μεσσηνίους καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους, Εἵλωτάς τε καὶ ὅσοι ἠτομολήκεσαν ἐκ τῆς Λακωνικῆς· καὶ κατῴκισαν αὐτοὺς ἐν Κρανίοις τῆς Κεφαλληνίας. 8. τὸ μὲν οὖν θέρος τοῦτο ἠσυχία ἦν καὶ ἔφοδοι παρ' ἀλλήλους.

XXXVI. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος (ἔτυχον γὰρ Ἔφοροι ἕτεροι, καὶ οὐκ ἐφ' ὧν αἱ σπονδαὶ ἐγένοντο, ἄρχοντες ἤδη, καί τινες αὐτῶν καὶ ἐναντίοι σπονδαῖς) ἐλθουσῶν πρεσβειῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ξυμμαχίδος, καὶ παρόντων Ἀθηναίων καὶ Βοιωτῶν καὶ Κορινθίων, καὶ πολλὰ ἐν ἀλλήλοις εἰπόντων, καὶ οὐδὲν ξυμβάντων, ὡς ἀπῆσαν ἐπ' οἴκου, τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς καὶ Κορινθίοις Κλεόβουλος καὶ Ξενάρης,—οὗτοι to add that of the Clarend. and Cantab. On the idiom in μετεμέλοντο ἀποδεδωκότες, (Ang. 'they repented having given back,) see Matth. Gr. Gr. p. 1088. By τὰ ἄλλα χωρία understand Methone, Pteleum, Atalante, and Cythera.

6. I have followed Bekker and Goeller in editing γε instead of vulg. τε, on the conjecture of Reiske, approved by Poppo, though not admitted by him into the text, because not found in the MSS. Yet this is one of those cases in which the authority of MSS. is outweighed by the proprietas linguæ: for here, while τε could scarcely be justified, γε is required by the εἰ δὲ μή. Dr. Arnold, indeed, pronounces that 'the change is not necessary; although, if the MS. authorities were equal, we might think it the preferable reading.' But this is surely a vain scrupulosity de lanâ caprinâ, and scarcely to be expected in one who had declared in his Preface, that 'his increased acquaintance with the MSS. of Thucydides had greatly lessened his respect for their authority,—so that he should not scruple to alter the text, in spite of them, wherever grammatical propriety might require or sanction the correction.'

7. I have (as in Translation) placed a comma after ἄλλους, the words Εἵλωτάς τε καὶ ὅσοι, &c. being added for the purpose of explaining what was meant by τοὺς ἄλλους, namely, persons composed both of the Helots and such as had run away from their masters in Laconia, though not Helots; meaning, as Arnold has well seen, the domestic and personal slaves of the Spartans.

8. ἔφοδοι] 'communications, intercourse,' as at i. 6.

CH. XXXVI. 1. πολλὰ ἐν ἀλλήλοις εἰπόντων] Compare viii. 76, παραινέσεις ἄλλας ἐποιοῦντο ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς. For Ξενάρης, Bekker edits, from three MSS., Ξενάρκης. But I have chosen, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the common reading, since, in a point so uncertain as this, external authority is all in all, and the number οἵπερ τῶν Ἐφόρων ἐβούλοντο μάλιστα διαλῦσαι τὰς σπονδάς,—λόγους ποιοῦνται ἰδίους, παραινοῦντες ὅτι μάλιστα ταὐτά † τε γιγνώσκειν, καὶ πειρᾶσθαι Βοιωτοὺς, Ἀργείων γενομένους πρῶτον αὐτοὺς ξυμμάχους, αὖθις μετὰ Βοιωτῶν Ἀργείους Λακεδαιμονίοις ποιῆσαι ξυμμάχους· οὕτω γὰρ † ἥκιστα ἀναγκασθῆναι Βοιωτοὺς ἐς τὰς Ἀττικὰς σπονδὰς ἐσελθεῖν· ἐλέσθαι γὰρ Λακεδαιμονίους πρὸ τῆς Ἀθηναίων ἔχθρας καὶ διαλύσεως τῶν σπονδῶν Ἀργείους σφίσι φίλους καὶ ξυμμάχους γενέσθαι. τὸ γὰρ Ἄργος ἀεὶ ἠπίσταντο ἐπιθυμοῦντας and weight of MSS. must decide. Λόγους ποιοῦνται ἰδίους, 'make private representations,' 'hold private communications.' Three MSS. have, for ἰδίους, ἰδίᾳ: but this is evidently a mere correction of some half-learned critic, who wished to introduce more Attic Greek; though indeed ἰδίους is sufficiently good Greek. Comp. Plato, p. 739, τὸ λεγόμενον ἴδιον, and 83, ἔσχε λόγον ἴδιον, and 289, οἳ τοῖς ἰδίοις λόγοις οἷς αὐτοὶ ποιοῦσιν οὐκ ἐπίστανται χρῆσθαι. Eurip. Hec. 978, ἰδιόν τι πρός σε βούλομαι εἰπεῖν, and El. 633, λέξω ἴδιον τοῦτο. Plut. t. ii. 977, ἴδιος λόγος ἔσται περὶ τούτου, and ii. 59, ἴδιος ἔσται λόγος: and so ἴδιος in Hom. Od. iii. 82, and iv. 914, as opposed to δημόσιος. So here the private overtures thus made are tacitly opposed to the public conferences before held.

For vulg. ταῦτα, I have received the conjecture of Reiske, ταὐτά: the former (which has been retained by Bekker) cannot be right, the sense intended being, as Bredow explains, 'Ephori instabant legatis Bœotorum et Corinthiorum ut idem vellent et idem nollent,' meaning, 'to act in close concert, pursue the same line of policy;' literally, 'to decide on the same things.' Goeller aptly compares the expression at ch. 31, τὸ αὐτὸ λέγοντες, 'holding the same language,' 'being of the same mind.' The τε, immediately after, I have obelized, because this particle is here inadmissible. The true reading, I doubt not, is γε, which is found in the Cod. A., and, as I ascertained on careful examination, formerly had place in the Cod. Clar. How often that particle occurs in conjunction with μάλα and μάλιστα in the best Attic writers, is well known, and in all cases it has an intensive force. Rarely is it, as here, separated from μάλιστα, though as an instance of this elsewhere, I have noted Plato, Phæd. p. 303, Heind. πάντων γέ που μάλιστα.

Again, the ἥκιστα, further on, I have obelized, because there can be no doubt that the true reading is, as Poppo has pointed out, ἥκιστ' ἄν, and that for the reasons by him assigned, namely, '1. quia in οὕτως latet sententia conditionalis; 2. particula hic ideo necessaria ne hujus infinitivi ex supplendo ἔλεγον suspensi eandem ac superiorum rationem esse opinemur.' Cf. vi. 72, οὕτω γὰρ μᾶλλον ἂν στέγεσθαι. How easily ἄν might be lost here and at vi. 24, is obvious.

ἐλέσθαι γὰρ—γενέσθαι] Meaning that the Lacedæmonians esteemed the friendship and alliance of Argos above the enmity of Athens and the dissolution of the treaty. This view of the sense (laid down in my Translation) was, I find, adopted also by Dobree, who explains, 'Pluris enim facturos Lacedæmonios Argivorum societatem quam Atheniensium inimicitiam, i. e. magis illam cupere quam hanc metuere. Similiter ch. 69, prop. init. ὑπὲρ ἀρχῆς ἅμα καὶ δουλείας,' &c. So also Poppo states the general meaning to be, 'Lacedæmonios, etiamsi periculum iis sit ne in Atheniensium odium incurrant, his inimicitiis posthabitis Argivorum amicitiam esse expetituros.' Thus it is meant,—as Bp. Maltby expresses the sense,—that 'they would choose that alliance even at the risk [rather, cost] of incurring the enmity of the Athenians.' Goeller thinks that the collocation of the words directs that καλῶς should be construed with φίλιον γενέσθαι, not, as one of the Scholiasts proposes, with ἠπίσταντο. Thus, he adds, at ii. 7, our author uses βεβαίως as here καλῶς. But Dr. Arnold remarks, 'Does it not rather mean, by fair and honourable means, without making unworthy sacrifices to gain it, such as the surrender of Cynuria to them?' Agreeable to this view is the sense long ago expressed by me in my Translation, where I have rendered, 'on any fair or honourable terms;' a sense which I consider entitled to the preference, especially from its being strongly supported by the passage adduced by Dr. Arnold infra ch. 41, where it is said of the same persons, ἐπεθύμουν τὸ Ἄργος πάντως φίλιον ἔχειν, i. e. by any means, τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους καλῶς σφίσι φίλιον γενέσθαι, ἡγούμενοι τὸν ἔξω Πελοποννήσου πόλεμον ῥᾴω ἂν εἶναι. 2. τὸ μέντοι Πάνακτον ἐδέοντο Βοιωτοὺς ὅπως παραδῶσι Λακεδαιμονίοις, ἵνα ἀντ' αὐτοῦ Πύλον, ἣν δύνωνται, ἀπολαβόντες, ῥᾷον καθιστῶνται Ἀθηναίοις ἐς πόλεμον. XXXVII. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Βοιωτοὶ καὶ Κορίνθιοι, ταῦτα ἐπεσταλμένοι ἀπό τε τοῦ Ξενάρους καὶ Κλεοβούλου, καὶ ὅσοι φίλοι ἦσαν αὐτοῖς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, ὥστε ἀπαγγεῖλαι ἐπὶ τὰ κοινά, ἑκάτεροι ἀνεχώρουν. 2. Ἀργείων δὲ δύο ἄνδρες τῆς ἀρχῆς τῆς μεγίστης ἐπετήρουν ἀπιόντας αὐτοὺς καθ' ὁδόν, καὶ ξυγγενόμενοι, ἐς λόγους ἦλθον, εἴ πως οἱ Βοιωτοὶ σφίσι ξύμμαχοι γένοιντο, ὥσπερ Κορίνθιοι on any terms: a signification which the word bears not unfrequently, and of which examples occur elsewhere, in Plato, 313, πάντως συνεστέον Πρωταγόρᾳ, and 228, ὅπερ πάντως ποιῆσαι. Polyb. xxv. 5, 9, πάντη δὲ πάντως βουλόμενοι λῦσαι τὸν πόλεμον, and xxx. 17, 3, πάντη πάντως βουλόμενοι ταπεινοῦν αὐτόν. So also in the Epistle of Agesilaus ap. Plut. we have, Νικίαν, εἰ μὲν οὐκ ἀδικεῖ, ἄφες· εἰ δὲ ἀδικεῖ, ἡμῖν ἄφες, πάντως δὲ ἄφες. (Gall. quoi qu'il en soit.) 1 Corinth. ix. 22, ἵνα πάντως ('by all means, at whatever cost') τινὰς σώσω. Xen. Cyr. ii. 1, 13, παντὶ τρόπῳ δεῖ τῶν ἀνδρῶν θήγειν πάντως τὸ φρόνημα.

ἡγούμενοι, &c.] There is here no little anomaly involved in this peculiar use of the nominative; to account for, though not to justify, which, we may either suppose, with Duk. and Goeller, that ἡγούμενοι is to be referred, not, as it is commonly done, to ἐπιθυμοῦντας, (thus involving an enallage of case,) but to ἠπίσταντο,—that being referred to the Lacedæmonian magistrates which properly belonged to the people. With respect to the scarcely less remarkable anomaly existing in the next words, ἐδέοντο Βοιωτοὺς ὅπως παραδῶσι Λακ., the best mode of treating it is to suppose, with Goeller, that as δέομαι has here the sense of αἰτεῖν, to require or request, so it takes the construction of that verb, an accusative. So rare, indeed, is this peculiar form of expression, (which Goeller pronounces unheard of,) that I know only one instance of it elsewhere, in Xen. Anab. vii. 7, 14, ὅτι δέοιτο ὑμᾶς ἡ στρατιὰ συναναπράξαι, where, instead of vulg. ὑμῶν, ὑμᾶς is found in the best MSS., though, from its rarity, unheeded by the editors. It is true that the strangeness in question is here increased by the verb being followed, not by an infinitive, but by ὅπως and the subjunctive. But the latter is, in effect, equivalent to the former (similarly as in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke, xxiii. 23, αἰτούμενοι αὐτὸν σταυρωθῆναι is well rendered in the Vulg. 'postulantes, ut crucifigeretur,' and in our English version, 'requiring that he should be crucified,' and also by the Syriac, 'that he would crucify him,' according to the reading σταυρῶσαι). This sort of idiom, however rare in Greek, is by no means unfrequent in English; thus, for instance, it is said in the Marriage Service of our Church, 'I require you both, that ye do now confess it.' Yet it may be regarded as a somewhat stronger form of expression, though probably it was confined (like many other similar forms) to the language of common life; and it must be borne in mind, that the phraseology of this whole chapter is very rough and neglected.

CH. XXXVII. 1. ταῦτα ἐπεσταλμένοι] 'being charged with these instructions or overtures.' For, as it is pointed out in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 490 & 424, the object, which was in the gen. or dat. with the active, may become the subject of the passive; as i. 126, οἱ ἐπιτετραμμένοι τὴν φυλακήν.

2. τῆς ἀρχῆς τῆς μεγίστης] Meaning probably those Ἀρτῦναι (lit. Arrangers) spoken of at ch. 47, and similar in office to the Ἁρμοσταὶ at Sparta, whose magistracy must have been of the highest kind, from their being presidents of the council.

εἴ πως—γένοιντο] literally, 'if by any means the Bœotians might become allies to them.' In this use of εἴ πως (found also in Hom. Il. xxii. 196. Od. ix. 317, εἴ πως τισαίμην. Arrian, E. A. i. 2, 6. ii. 23, 4. Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 1. iv. 1, 6, and also in another passage of our author supra iii. 4, πέμπουσιν εἴ πως πείσειαν,) where εἴ πως bears the sense qua ratione, 'by what means,' there is an ellipsis of πειρῶμαι: so that the general sense here intended is, 'they entered into conversation [with them] as to the means by which the Bœotians,' &c.

4. ἐς τὰ ὁμοῖα σπεύδειν] literally, 'hastened to the same things,' 'had the same objects in view.' In this very metaphorical sense (answering to that which festino bears in Latin) to denote the bent of mind on any object, the word occurs in Xen. Cyr. i. 3, 4, εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ ἡμῖν σπεύδετε. Plut. t. ii. p. 881, E. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ σπεύδει, and i. 549, F. εἰς τὸ αὐτό τινι σπ. Æschyl. Prom. 192, εἰς ἀρθμὸν ἐμοὶ καὶ φιλότητα Σπεύδων σπεύδοντί ποθ' ἥξει. Eurip. Ion 509, σπ. εἰς τὰ πράγματα. Hesiod, Op. 14, εἰς ἄφενον σπεύδοντ'. Compare also an expression of the Old Testament, Prov. xxviii. 22, 'He who hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye,' σπεύδει πλουτεῖν ἀνὴρ βάσκανος. Likewise the Horatian phrase, (Epist. i. 16, 68.) festinare in re augenda, and Juven. Sat. xiv. 178, 'Quis metus aut pudor est unquam properantis avari?'

5. τὰ εἰρημένα προκαλούμενοι] 'hortantes ad ea perficienda [de quibus dictum erat].' Compare ii. 72. This ellipsis is one frequent in Thucydides and other Attic writers, (e. g. Aristoph. Eq. 792.) though sometimes the preposition εἰς or ἐπὶ is expressed, as iv. 19 & 43.

CH. XXXVIII. 1. τῷ δεομένῳ] 'the party in need of it.' Τὸ αὐτὸ ἐποίουν, 'acted in concert.' Compare supra ch. 36, ταὐτὰ γιγνώσκειν.

2. ταῖς τέσσαρσι βουλαῖς] On this—which is a matter involved in no little obscurity—see Klutz and Boeckh, cited by Poppo, and Kortuem cited by Goeller.

3. οὐ προσδέχονται τὸν λόγον] 'do not accept, embrace, entertain, approve the proposal.' Compare iii. 15, προσδ. τοὺς λόγους. Plato, p. 561, λόγον οὐ πρ. Pol. i.

καὶ Ἠλεῖοι καὶ Μαντινῆς· νομίζειν γὰρ ἂν, τούτου προχωρήσαντος, ῥᾳδίως ἤδη καὶ πολεμεῖν καὶ σπένδεσθαι καὶ πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους, εἰ βούλοιντο, κοινῷ λόγῳ χρωμένους, καὶ εἴ τινα πρὸς ἄλλον δέοι. 3. τοῖς δὲ τῶν Βοιωτῶν πρέσβεσιν ἀκούουσιν ἤρεσκε· κατὰ τύχην γὰρ ἐδέοντο τούτων ὧνπερ καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος αὐτοῖς φίλοι ἐπεστάλκεσαν. καὶ οἱ τῶν Ἀργείων ἄνδρες, ὡς ᾔσθοντο αὐτοὺς δεχομένους τὸν λόγον, εἰπόντες ὅτι πρέσβεις πέμψουσιν ἐς Βοιωτούς, ἀπῆλθον. 4. ἀφικόμενοι δὲ οἱ Βοιωτοί, ἀπήγγειλαν τοῖς Βοιωτάρχαις τά τε ἐκ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος καὶ τὰ ἀπὸ τῶν ξυγγενομένων Ἀργείων· καὶ οἱ Βοιωτάρχαι ἠρέσκοντό τε καὶ πολλῷ προθυμότεροι ἦσαν, ὅτι ἀμφοτέρωθεν ξυνεβεβήκει αὐτοῖς, τούς τε φίλους τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων τῶν αὐτῶν δεῖσθαι, καὶ τοὺς Ἀργείους ἐς τὰ ὁμοῖα σπεύδειν. 5. καὶ οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον πρέσβεις παρῆσαν Ἀργείων τὰ εἰρημένα προκαλούμενοι· καὶ αὐτοὺς ἀπέπεμψαν ἐπαινέσαντες τοὺς λόγους οἱ Βοιωτάρχαι καὶ πρέσβεις ὑποσχόμενοι ἀποστελεῖν περὶ τῆς ξυμμαχίας ἐς Ἄργος. XXXVIII. Ἐν δὲ τούτῳ ἐδόκει πρῶτον τοῖς Βοιωτάρχαις, καὶ Κορινθίοις, καὶ Μεγαρεῦσι, καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ Θρᾴκης πρέσβεσιν, ὁμόσαι ὅρκους ἀλλήλοις, ἢ μὴν ἔν τε τῷ παρατυχόντι ἀμύνειν τῷ δεομένῳ, καὶ μὴ πολεμήσειν τῳ, μηδὲ ξυμβήσεσθαι ἄνευ κοινῆς γνώμης· καὶ οὕτως ἤδη τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς καὶ Μεγαρέας, τὸ γὰρ αὐτὸ ἐποίουν, πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους σπένδεσθαι. 2. πρὶν δὲ τοὺς ὅρκους γενέσθαι, οἱ Βοιωτάρχαι ἐκοίνωσαν ταῖς τέσσαρσι βουλαῖς τῶν Βοιωτῶν ταῦτα, αἵπερ ἅπαν τὸ κῦρος ἔχουσι, καὶ παρῄνουν, γενέσθαι ὅρκους ταῖς πόλεσιν, ὅσαι βούλονται ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ σφίσι ξυνομνύναι. 3. οἱ δ' ἐν ταῖς βουλαῖς τῶν Βοιωτῶν ὄντες οὐ προσδέχονται τὸν λόγον, δεδιότες μὴ ἐναντία Λακεδαιμονίοις ποιήσωσι, τοῖς ἐκείνων ἀφεστῶσι Κορινθίοις ξυνομνύντες· οὐ γὰρ εἶπον αὐτοῖς οἱ Βοιωτάρχαι τὰ ἐκ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος, ὅτι τῶν τε Ἐφόρων Κλεόβουλος καὶ Ξενάρης καὶ οἱ φίλοι παραινοῦσιν Ἀργείων πρῶτον καὶ Κορινθίων γενομένους ξυμμάχους, ὕστερον μετὰ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων γίγνεσθαι, οἰόμενοι τὴν βουλήν, κἂν μὴ εἴπωσιν, οὐκ ἄλλα ψηφιεῖσθαι ἢ ἃ σφίσι προδιαγνόντες παραινοῦσιν. 4. ὡς δὲ ἀντέστη τὸ πρᾶγμα, οἱ μὲν Κορίνθιοι καὶ οἱ ἀπὸ Θρᾴκης πρέσβεις ἄπρακτοι ἀπῆλθον, οἱ δὲ Βοιωτάρχαι, μέλλοντες πρότερον, εἰ ταῦτα ἔπεισαν, καὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν πειράσεσθαι πρὸς Ἀργείους ποιεῖν, οὐκέτι ἐσήνεγκαν περὶ Ἀργείων ἐς τὰς βουλάς, οὐδὲ ἐς τὸ Ἄργος τοὺς πρέσβεις οὓς ὑπέσχοντο ἔπεμπον, ἀμέλεια δέ τις ἐνῆν καὶ διατριβὴ τῶν πάντων.

XXXIX. Καὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ χειμῶνι τούτῳ Μηκύβερναν Ὀλύνθιοι, Ἀθηναίων φρουρούντων, ἐπιδραμόντες εἷλον.

Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα (ἐγίγνοντο γὰρ ἀεὶ λύγοι τοῖς τε Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις περὶ ὧν εἶχον ἀλλήλων) ἐλπίζοντες οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, εἰ Πάνακτον Ἀθηναῖοι παρὰ Βοιωτῶν ἀπολάβοιεν, κομίσασθαι ἂν αὐτοὶ Πύλον, ἦλθον ἐς τοὺς Βοιωτοὺς πρεσβευόμενοι, καὶ ἐδέοντο σφίσι Πάνακτόν τε καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίων δεσμώτας παραδοῦναι, ἵνα ἀντ' αὐτῶν Πύλον κομίσωνται. 2. οἱ δὲ Βοιωτοὶ οὐκ ἔφασαν ἀποδώσειν, ἢν μὴ σφίσι ξυμμαχίαν ἰδίαν ποιήσωνται, ὥσπερ Ἀθηναίοις. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ, εἰδότες μὲν ὅτι ἀδικήσουσιν Ἀθηναίους, εἰρημένον ἄνευ ἀλλήλων μήτε σπένδεσθαί τῳ μήτε πολεμεῖν, βουλόμενοι δὲ τὸ Πάνακτον παραλαβεῖν, ὡς τὴν Πύλον ἀντ' αὐτοῦ κομιούμενοι,—καὶ ἅμα τῶν ξυγχέαι σπευδόντων τὰς σπονδὰς προθυμουμένων τὰ ἐς Βοιωτούς,—ἐποιήσαντο τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, τοῦ χειμῶνος τελευτῶντος

16, 6. ii. 9, 9, τοὺς ὑπὲρ εἰρήνης λόγους πρ. Herodot. i. 48, τὸ ἐκ Δελφῶν (oraculum) προσεδέξατο. Plut. t. ii. p. 145. In the words οἰόμενοι τὴν βουλὴν—παραινοῦσιν, there is no doubt that, as Arnold observes, προδιαγνόντες refers to the Bœotians, and expresses their previous sanction of the measure, without which it could not have been laid before the councils. But 'to this view,' he adds, 'there is a certain difficulty in the circumstance of the dative referring to another subject than what just precedes it.' In effect, however, it refers to the object of the verb ψηφιεῖσθαι, as though the words οὐκ ἄλλα ψηφιεῖσθαι were put into the mouths of the councillors. and were equivalent to οὐκ ἄλλα φήσειν ψηφιεῖσθαι. See iv. 14. i. 44. v. 15, and notes.

4. ἀντέστη τὸ πρᾶγμα] 'the affair did not succeed.' Compare v. 4, ἀντιστάντος αὐτῷ τοῦ πράγματος, and here αὐτοῖς is left understood. The rationale of the phrase is, (as Steph. in his Thes. points out,) that 'a thing not succeeding is repugnant to our desires'—crosses our purposes, or (as our authors say) crosses us. With ἐνῆν διατριβὴ, 'a delay was interposed,' compare viii. 9, διατριβῆς ἐγγιγνομένης.

CH. XXXIX. 2. ξυγχέαι σπευδόντων τὰς σπονδὰς] Compare supra ch. 26, ξύγχυσις τῶν σπονδῶν, and the Virgilian 'confundere (for violare) fœdus.' Προθυμουμένων τὰ ἐς Βοιωτούς, 'being zealous for,' eagerly desiring, earnestly furthering. By τὰ ἐς Βοιωτούς (scil. πράγματα) understand the affairs respecting a treaty with the Bœotians. So τὰ πρὸς Ἀργείους ch. 46.

ἤδη καὶ πρὸς ἔαρ· καὶ τὸ Πάνακτον εὐθὺς καθῃρεῖτο. καὶ ἐνδέκατον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα.

XL. Ἅμα δὲ τῷ ἦρι εὐθὺς τοῦ ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους οἱ Ἀργεῖοι, ὡς οἵ τε πρέσβεις τῶν Βοιωτῶν, οὓς ἔφασαν πέμψειν, οὐχ ἵκοντο, τό τε Πάνακτον ᾑσθοντο καθαιρούμενον, καὶ ξυμμαχίαν ἰδίαν γεγενημένην τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, ἔδεισαν μὴ μονωθῶσι, καὶ ἐς Λακεδαιμονίους πᾶσα ἡ ξυμμαχία χωρήσῃ· 2. τοὺς γὰρ Βοιωτοὺς ᾤοντο πεπεῖσθαι ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων τό τε Πάνακτον καθελεῖν καὶ ἐς τὰς Ἀθηναίων σπονδὰς ἐσιέναι, τούς τε Ἀθηναίους εἰδέναι ταῦτα· ὥστε οὐδὲ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους ἔτι σφίσιν εἶναι ξυμμαχίαν ποιήσασθαι, πρότερον ἐλπίζοντες ἐκ τῶν διαφορῶν,—εἰ μὴ μείνειαν αὐτοῖς αἱ πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους σπονδαί,—τοῖς γοῦν Ἀθηναίοις ξύμμαχοι ἔσεσθαι. 3. ἀπορούντες οὖν ταῦτα οἱ Ἀργεῖοι, καὶ φοβούμενοι μὴ Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Τεγεάταις, Βοιωτοῖς καὶ Ἀθηναίοις ἅμα πολεμῶσι, πρότερον οὐ δεχόμενοι τὰς Λακεδαιμονίων σπονδὰς,—ἀλλ' ἐν φρονήματι ὄντες τῆς Πελοποννήσου ἡγήσεσθαι,—ἔπεμπον,

Of καθῃρεῖτο the sense is not, as Poppo renders, 'was destroyed,' but, 'was being (i. e. begun to be) demolished,' viz. by the Bœotians. Compare ch. 40, ᾑσθοντο καθαιρούμενον, i. e. being in the course of demolition. At any rate the demolition was effected; for, in order to prevent any further annoyance from this border fortress, the Bœotians, instead of surrendering it into the hands of the Lacedæmonians, chose to destroy it.

CH. XL. 1. ἵκοντο] Poppo remarks, that 'this form is rare in Attic prose, though frequent in Herodot. and Agath.' But, it may be asked, is not the prose of Plato (who uses this form several times) Attic? As to Herodotus, it does not occur once in that author, because he uses the compound ἀπικ. The form in question was indeed almost confined to the poets, (as Homer and Sophocles, who often use it,) though it was not rejected by those, like Plato and Agathias, who occasionally employ poetical forms, which even Thucydides sometimes does. As to the reading here of several MSS., ἥκοντο, it is evidently a mere alteration of the critics, like that in the common text in a passage of Xen. Anab. v. 1, ἥκοιντο, where Zeune and Schneider should not have edited ἀφίκοιντο, that being plainly a mere gloss on, what is doubtless the true reading, ἵκοιντο, which is noticed as a var. lect. in Leunclave's Appendix, and is confirmed by the occurrence of ἵκοιο in a passage of Plato, p. 44, 6.

2. ἐκ τῶν διαφορῶν] Meaning, 'on the score of the differences which subsisted between the Lacedæmonians and Athenians.' This view of the sense, propounded by me in my Translation, has since been adopted by Goeller in his second edition.

3. ἀπορούντες ταῦτα] 'at a loss about these matters:' a construction which, though rare and little known to editors, occurs in Herodot. iv. 179, ἀπ. τὴν ἐξαγωγήν. iii. 4, ἀπ. τὴν ἔλασιν. Eurip. Iph. 537, ἀπ. τάδε. Lucian, iii. 505, ταὐτὸν ἀπ. Xen. i. 3, 7. Hist. vi. 1, 4.

In the words following, πρότερον οὐ δεχόμενοι τὰς Λακεδαιμονίων σπονδὰς, is simply pointed out the fact, that they had previously rejected the overtures of treaty made them by the Lacedæmonians; and the subsequent words, ἀλλ' ἐν φρονήματι ὄντες τῆς Πελοποννήσου ἡγήσεσθαι, contain, I apprehend, an intimation by-the-by of the spirit which dictated their refusal,—namely, pride, which made them fancy they might give law to Peloponnesus. A certain difficulty, however, involves the expression ἐν φρονήματι ὄντες τῆς Π. ἡγήσεσθαι, which is one not easy to be reduced to the usual rules of correct composition. We may, with Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, regard the expression as a condensed one, for ἐν φρονήματι ὄντες καὶ ἐλπίζοντες τῆς Π. ἡγήσεσθαι, as at iii. 83, καταφρονοῦντες (i. e. διὰ καταφρόνησιν πεποιθότες) κἂν προαισθέσθαι (in the note on which passage I have adduced other examples of this idiom with καταφρ.). And according to this view of the expression, Dr. Arnold renders, 'proudly thinking to become the leading state in Peloponnesus.' Yet how this sense, however apt, can be elicited from the words, I see not. And it only increases the difficulty to assign to φρονήματι, as is done by the Scholiast and the commentators in general, the sense pride. Why, I would ask, should we not explain it temper of mind or disposition (what we should express by spirit); a sense which the word not unfrequently bears in the best ancient writers, as Herodot. ix. 7, ἐξεμάθετε τὸ ἡμέτερον φρόνημα σαφέως, ὅτι οὐδαμὰ προδώσομεν τὴν Ἑλλάδα. viii. 144, ἐξεπιστάμενοι τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὸ φρόνημα, ὅτι, &c. Soph. Ant. 176, ἀμήχανον δὲ παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἐκμαθεῖν ψυχήν τε καὶ φρόνημα καὶ γνώμην, besides various passages of Sophocles, Æschylus, Euripides, and Plato, and Æl. V. Hist. xiv. 29, τὸ Λακωνικὸν φρ. Assigning, then, this sense in the present passage, we may render, 'yea, being of a spirit or disposition of mind [to think] they should give the law to Peloponnesus:' a sense, I would observe, certainly intended by Valla, when he rendered, 'Sed [rather imo] animum Peloponneso imperandi habuissent;' and also by the Scholiasts, who explain ἐν φρονήματι ὄντες by φροντιζοντες, an expression to denote 'turning in their thoughts,' 'figuring to themselves in mind that they should give laws to Peloponnesus.' Still there remains a certain awkwardness, (and that the principal one,) namely, as resting in the term ἡγήσεσθαι, and also in the ellipsis of αὐτοὺς and the omission of ἐλπίζοντες: in consequence of which, I would venture to conjecture that our author wrote ἐν φρονήματι ὄντες τοῦ Πελ. ἡγήσεσθαι, 'being of the spirit or disposition so as to give law to Peloponnesus,' τοῦ standing, as often, for ὥστε.

ὡς ἐδύναντο τάχιστα, ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα πρέσβεις Εὔστροφον καὶ Αἴσωνα, οἳ ἐδόκουν προσφιλέστατοι αὐτοῖς εἶναι, ἡγούμενοι, ἐκ τῶν παρόντων κράτιστα πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους σπονδὰς ποιησάμενοι, ὅπη ἂν ξυγχωρῇ, ἡσυχίαν ἔχειν. XLI. Καὶ οἱ πρέσβεις ἀφικόμενοι

οἳ ἐδόκουν προσφιλέστατοι αὐτοῖς εἶναι] 'who were thought to be most agreeable or acceptable to them, (i. e. to have most interest with,) [the Lacedæmonians in power,] by their personal interest or political connexions.' Compare i. 92, προσφ. ὄντες—αὐτοῖς ἐτύγχανον, and vii. 86, οἱ Λακεδ. ἦσαν αὐτῷ προσφιλεῖς. Herodot. i. 163, προσφιλέες ἐγένοντο τῷ βασιλέϊ. The word is frequent in Plato, Xenophon, and others of the best Attic writers.

ἡγούμενοι — ἡσυχίαν ἔχειν] Of these words the sense has been variously explained by interpreters, according to the mode of punctuation adopted. To place, as some do, a comma after κράτιστα, would require, for the words as they stand, (ἐκ τῶν παρόντων,) rather ὡς ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, and, besides the violence done to the construction, would produce a sense very feeble. The words ἐκ τῶν παρόντων and κράτιστα must be construed together; κράτιστα being taken adverbially (as is often κάλλιστα) to signify, 'in the best manner,' 'on the best terms.' On the idiom contained in ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, 'according to existing circumstances,' see note at iv. 7. The main difficulty, however, in this case centers in ὅπη ἂν ξυγχωρῇ, which words, Poppo observes, if taken with σπονδὰς ποιησάμενοι, will be redundant after ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, and if with ἡσυχίαν ἔχειν, will be unsuitable; for certainly they cannot mean, as they are understood by Hobbes, Portus, and Bredow, 'howsoever the world went,' or matters fell out; since surely the Argives could not be said to be undisturbed under any circumstances that might turn out. The words must be taken with what precedes, not with what follows; nor will any redundancy thus be involved, especially if, with Bauer, we render, 'quocunque [tandem] modo pacti convenire res potuisset,' or, with Arnold, 'however it might be concluded.' Poppo, indeed, objects that no proof is adduced of ξυγχωρεῖ thus used impersonally. But this use has place in the lexicons, and must therefore exist in the Greek writers, though I know of no example elsewhere except Xen. de Re Eq. ix. 11, ἀλλὰ (δεῖ) εἰς τὸ δυνατὸν, καὶ ἀναπαύειν ἐν τῷ τοιούτῳ (scil. τῷ θορυβώδει) καὶ ἄριστα καὶ δεῖπνα, εἰ συγχωροίη (si fieri liceat) προσφέρειν, where, indeed, Zeune edited, from the margin of one MS., ἐγχωροίη: but most uncritically. It is true that ἐγχωρεῖ, licet, possibile est, is the usual term; but συγχ. is by no means unprecedented, and when so used has the very sense of ἐγχωρεῖ for οἷόν τε or δυνατόν ἐστι. Thus here ὅπη ἂν ξυγχωρῇ bears the sense 'quantum liceat, quantum fieri possit,' as in Synes. cited by Steph. Thes. γράφε οὖν ὁσάκις ἂν ἐγχωρῇ, which proves that ξυγχωρήσῃ need not, as Poppo supposes, be here read. And the sense thus yielded will be by no αὐτῶν λόγους ἐποιοῦντο πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, ἐφ' ᾧ ἂν σφίσιν αἱ σπονδαὶ γίγνοιντο. 2. καὶ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ἠξίουν δίκης ἐπιτροπὴν σφίσι γενέσθαι, ἢ ἐς πόλιν τινὰ ἢ ἰδιώτην, περὶ τῆς Κυνουρίας γῆς, ἧς ἀεὶ πέρι διαφέρονται, μεθορίας οὔσης (ἔχει δὲ ἐν αὐτῇ Θυρέαν καὶ Ἀνθήνην πόλιν, νέμονται δ' αὐτὴν Λακεδαιμόνιοι)· ἔπειτα δ', οὐκ ἐώντων Λακεδαιμονίων μεμνῆσθαι περὶ αὐτῆς, ἀλλ', εἰ βούλονται σπένδεσθαι ὥσπερ πρότερον, ἑτοῖμοι εἶναι, οἱ Ἀργεῖοι πρέσβεις τάδε ὅμως ἐπηγάγοντο τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ξυγχωρῆσαι, ἐν μὲν τῷ παρόντι σπονδὰς ποιήσασθαι ἔτη πεντήκοντα, ἐξεῖναι δ' ὁποτεροισοῦν προκαλεσαμένοις, μήτε νόσου οὔσης μήτε πολέμου Λακεδαίμονι καὶ Ἄργει, διαμάχεσθαι περὶ τῆς γῆς ταύτης, ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερόν ποτε, ὅτε αὐτοὶ ἑκάτεροι ἠξίωσαν νικᾶν, διώκειν δὲ μὴ ἐξεῖναι περαιτέρω τῶν πρὸς Ἄργος καὶ Λακεδαίμονα ὅρων. 3. τοῖς δὲ Λακεδαιμονίοις τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἐδόκει μωρία εἶναι ταῦτα· ἔπειτα, (ἐπεθύμουν γὰρ τὸ Ἄργος πάντως φίλιον ἔχειν) ξυνεχώρησαν ἐφ' means redundant, or, as is the sense assigned by Bauer, Matthiæ, and Arnold, languid.

Finally, ἡγούμενοι is not well rendered by Portus existimantes, by Arnold thinking, and by Hobbes, 'being in cogitation:' nor is the import of ἡσυχίαν ἔχειν well conveyed by 'se quietos futuros;' a sense which would require ἥξειν rather than ἔχειν, and which then would not tally with existimantes. Render, 'reckoning to live in peace and quiet,' i. e. 'quietem habere, belli malis et metu vacari,' as in Xen. Cyr. vii. 2, 7, and ἡσ. ἄγειν in Herodot. i. 161. According to the idiom of our own language, we should express this sense by, 'reckoning upon living in peace and quiet.' At any rate the fut. tense is unnecessary, since the sense reckoning or calculating upon an event implies that it is future.

CH. XLI. 2. ἠξίουν — γενέσθαι] 'demanded that they might have a reference for arbitration.' Goeller refers to Pausan. ii. 38. On νέμονται see note on iv. 56. For ἀλλ'—ἑτοῖμοι εἶναι, Goeller observes, strict propriety would require ἀλλ' ἑτοίμων εἶναι φασκόντων, but that the nomin. was employed, as though there had gone before ἐπειδὴ οὐκ—Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἀλλ' ἔφασαν [ἑτοῖμοι εἶναι]; of which idiom many examples are adduced by Lobeck on Phryn. p. 755.

ὥσπερ—ὅτε, &c.] Namely, the period (about A. C. 555) when 300 Spartans and Argives contested for the possession of Cynuria with the same condition as that here mentioned; which was, that the victorious party should not pursue the vanquished beyond the borders of the disputed territory. By the words αὐτοὶ ἑκάτεροι ἠξίωσαν νικᾶν it is signified that each party claimed the victory; a sense of ἀξίωσ found at i. 43, and elsewhere. On the circumstances and the grounds of the claim, see Herodot. i. 82. Pausan. ii. 38, 5, and Ov. Fast. ii. 665.

3. ἐδόκει μωρία εἶναι] Here μωρία does not simply stand for adj. μωρὰ (according to the idiom, found also in our own language, by which folly stands for foolish); the full sense intended being, that 'the things proposed to be done were all a piece of folly,' a foolish affair. Accordingly this comes under the rule laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 439, of 'demonstrative pronouns being not in the gender of the subst. to which they refer, but in the neuter, provided the idea of the substantive in the abstract be considered one really as a thing or matter.' The idiom, however, as regards μωρία, is so rare, that I know of only one example elsewhere,—namely, in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Corinth. ii. 14, οὐ δέχεται τὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ Θεοῦ, μωρία γὰρ αὐτῷ ἐστι. Of another kind is the expression in Herodot. i. 146. (and which has place also in Demosth. 128. 10. 397.) that answering to the French c'est une folie de dire cela, and our 'it is a folly to do so.'

I have followed Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, in reading, instead of φίλον, φίλιον, from three of the best MSS.; the latter being found in all the MSS. but four of the worst in the parallel passage at ch. 36; and indeed I scarcely know any example of φίλον in the neuter for φίλιον in any Attic writer not a poet; for as to οἷς ἠξίουν, καὶ ξυνεγράψαντο. ἐκέλευον δ' οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι πρὶν τέλος τι αὐτῶν ἔχειν ἐς τὸ Ἄργος πρῶτον ἐπαναχωρήσαντας αὐτοὺς δεῖξαι τῷ πλήθει, καὶ ἢν ἀρέσκοντα ᾖ, ἥκειν ἐς τὰ Ὑακίνθια τοὺς ὅρκους ποιησομένους. Καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀνεχώρησαν. XLII. Ἐν δὲ τῷ χρόνῳ τούτῳ, ᾧ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ταῦτα ἔπρασσον, οἱ πρέσβεις τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, Ἀνδρομέδης καὶ Φαίδιμος καὶ Ἀντιμενίδας, οὓς ἔδει τὸ Πάνακτον καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας τοὺς παρὰ Βοιωτῶν παραλαβόντας Ἀθηναίοις ἀποδοῦναι, τὸ μὲν Πάνακτον ὑπὸ τῶν Βοιωτῶν αὐτῶν καθῃρημένον εὗρον, ἐπὶ προφάσει ὡς ἦσάν ποτε Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Βοιωτοῖς ἐκ διαφορᾶς περὶ αὐτοῦ ὅρκοι παλαιοὶ μηδετέρους οἰκεῖν τὸ χωρίον, ἀλλὰ κοινῇ νέμειν· τοὺς δ' ἄνδρας οὓς εἶχον αἰχμαλώτους Βοιωτοὶ Ἀθηναίων, παραλαβόντες οἱ περὶ τὸν Ἀνδρομέδην ἐκόμισαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις καὶ ἀπέδοσαν, τοῦ τε Πανάκτου τὴν καθαίρεσιν ἔλεγον αὐτοῖς, νομίζοντες καὶ τοῦτο ἀποδιδόναι· πολέμιον γὰρ οὐκέτι ἐν αὐτῷ Ἀθηναίοις οἰκήσειν οὐδένα. 2. λεγομένων δὲ τούτων, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι δεινὰ ἐποίουν, νομίζοντες ἀδικεῖσθαι ὑπὸ Λακεδαι-

Xen. Cyr. v. 3, 19, φίλον τοῦτο τὸ χωρίον τοῖς ἐνθάδε καταλιπεῖν, I suspect the true reading there to be φίλιον, which word occurs at § 23, and indeed so the person who corrected the MS. Guelph. to the manifestly false φίλων must have meant.

On the expression τέλος ἔχειν, used for κύριον εἶναι, see note at iv. 118, 6.

Ch. XLII. 1. κοινῇ νέμειν] Meaning, as the Scholiast explains, κοινὴν νομὴν ἔχειν ἐν αὐτῇ, 'to be a common pasture for the use of both countries.'

νομίζοντες καὶ τοῦτο ἀποδιδόναι] 'thinking that this too is restoring it.' As illustrative of which force of καὶ, Poppo offers the rendering, 'non solum si integrum Panacton redderent, sed etiam si dirutum nunciarent.' Yet I see not how, if such be the sense, the article could have been dispensed with: and I have little doubt but that it has been lost in the text, being absorbed by the το preceding.

2. δεινὰ ἐποίουν] Bredow remarks, that 'the active form is rare, the middle one δεινὰ ποιεῖσθαι being far more usual.' It is, however, not so rare but that, besides a passage adduced by him from Andocides, it is found in Herodot. ii. 21. iii. 14. v. 41. vii. 1. ix. 33. Aristoph. Ran. 1093. Nub. 388. 583. Plut. t. ii. 1125, δεινὰ ποιεῖν ὁμολογοῦσι. Dobree here explains δεινὰ ἐποίουν by ἐχαλέπαινον, adding that the import of the expression is not indignabantur; for that would require rather ἐποιοῦντο, which occurs at vi. 60. 'Dicitur (continues he) δεινὸν vel δεινὰ ποιεῖσθαι, sed ut puto tantum δεινὰ ποιεῖν non δεινά:' a distinction certainly better founded than the one which he makes in the present passage, and repeats at p. 179, between ποιεῖν and ποιεῖσθαι, remarking, 'Δεινὸν vel δεινὰ ποιεῖσθαι est indignari, δεινὰ ποιεῖν est tumultuari; illud ἀγανακτεῖν vel ὀργίζεσθαι, hic χαλεπαίνειν,' meaning that the former denotes the venting indignation in words; the latter, the feeling it in heart: a view confirmed by a passage of Herodot. iii. 14, κλαιόντων καὶ δεινὰ ποιεόντων, and, I apprehend, by the present, where the word is, as the Schol. explains it, equivalent to ἐδεινοπάθουν, 'they complained bitterly [of these things].' Comp. also Herodot. ii. 121, τὸν δὲ βασιλέα—δεινὰ ποιέειν, and v. 41; and Lucian, p. 236, ἐβόα Δημ. καὶ δεινὰ ἐποίει. Had Musgrave been aware of this, he would not in a passage of Appian, t. i. 765, 90, have proposed to alter δεινὰ ποιοῦσαι to δεινοπαθοῦσαι; a conjecture forbidden by the fact adverted to by Plutarch, Lucull. ch. 19,—whom Appian here follows,—that the persons in question did vent their indignation in loud complaints.

The above distinction, however, though generally, does not universally hold good. Thus, for instance, in Lucian de Sacrif. 1, fin. δεινὰ ποιοῦσαν καὶ σχετλιάζουσαν, the phrase δεινὰ ποιοῦσαν cannot mean 'venting the feeling of indignation in words,' since Diana is there described as μόνη. The sense is besides fixed by the adjunct σχετλιάζουσαν, which the Schol. well explains by ἀγανακτοῦσαν. And in another passage of Aristoph. Nub. 583, τὰς ὀφρῦς ξυνήγομεν κἀποιοῦμεν δεινά· βροντὴ δ' ἐρράγη δι' ἀστραπῆς, the phrase can μονίων τοῦ τε Πανάκτου τῇ καθαιρέσει, ὃ ἔδει ὀρθὸν παραδοῦναι, καὶ πυνθανόμενοι ὅτι καὶ Βοιωτοῖς ἰδίᾳ ξυμμαχίαν πεποίηνται, φάσκοντες πρότερον κοινῇ τοὺς μὴ δεχομένους τὰς σπονδὰς προσαναγκάσειν. τά τε ἄλλα ἐσκόπουν ὅσα ἐξελελοίπεσαν τῆς ξυνθήκης, καὶ ἐνόμιζον ἐξηπατῆσθαι· ὥστε χαλεπῶς πρὸς τοὺς πρέσβεις ἀποκρινάμενοι ἀπέπεμψαν.

XLIII. Κατὰ τοιαύτην δὴ διαφορὰν ὄντων τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, οἱ ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις αὖ βουλόμενοι λῦσαι τὰς σπονδὰς εὐθὺς ἐνέκειντο. 2. ἦσαν δὲ ἄλλοι τε καὶ Ἀλκιβιάδης ὁ Κλεινίου, ἀνὴρ ἡλικίᾳ μὲν ὢν ἔτι τότε νέος, ὡς ἐν ἄλλῃ πόλει, ἀξιώματι δὲ προγόνων τιμώμενος· ᾧ ἐδόκει μὲν καὶ ἄμεινον εἶναι πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους μᾶλλον χωρεῖν, οὐ μέντοι ἀλλὰ καὶ φρονήματι φιλονεικῶν ἠναντιοῦτο, ὅτι Λακεδαιμόνιοι διὰ Νικίου καὶ Λάχητος only mean ὠργιζόμεθα, since the thunder (here denoting the indignation vented in words) always comes after the flash of lightning, here denoting the flash of indignation which precedes the burst of anger.

ὃ ἔδει ὀρθὸν παραδοῦναι] 'what it was agreed on to deliver up standing:' of which very rare sense of ὀρθὸς an example occurs elsewhere in Herodot. ix. 13, ἐμπρήσας τὰς Ἀθήνας, καὶ εἴ κου τι ὀρθὸν ἦν τῶν τειχέων—καταβαλών.

Ch. XLIII. 1. οἱ ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις αὖ, &c.] Here αὖ, as Levêque observes, is used, as often in the tragic poets, in the sense 'on their part.' The statesmen at Athens are opposed to those at Sparta, similarly as Cleobulus and Xenares. Of the term ἐνέκειντο (on which see note at iv. 22.) the sense is, 'were urgent in pressing the matter.' The gloss of the Schol., πιστοὶ ἦσαν πειθοντες, contains a palpable corruption in πιστοὶ, for which Duk. would read πολλοὶ, and Abresch πυστοί: conjectures, these, equally removed from probability. I confidently propose to read ἐπεῖκται, impulsores, incitatores; a word not unusual in the later writers, and on which see Suidas and Du Cange's Gloss. Græc. The two words might easily be confounded, especially in contractions.

2. Ἀλκιβιάδης] An extraordinary person, singularly formed to set the world in a flame, and who, though only now mentioned for the first time by Thucydides, henceforward became the most conspicuous person in the history of his age.

νέος ὡς ἐν ἀλλῃ πόλει] Meaning that he would have been regarded as yet too young for legislation, in any other state; with allusion chiefly to Lacedæmon. He was not too young at Athens; for he must have been at this time upwards of 33, and the age then regarded as the lowest for the senatorial office was 30. (See Xen. Mem. i. 2, 35.) On this sense of ὡς see note at iv. 84, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 628. Οὐ μέντοι ἀλλὰ καί. The full sense is, 'not, however, on this account only, but also [because he thought it better].' Φρονήματι φιλονεικῶν ἠναντιοῦτο, literally, 'acted in opposition, showed this opposition in a spirit of contention arising from pride.' In φρονήματι φιλονεικῶν we have indeed a very unusual expression, and one therefore best to be explained by the context. The purpose of the phrase is evidently to advert to the moving principle of this opposition to the opinions and wishes of the great body of his countrymen, (including Nicias,) namely, an obstinate, wilful disposition, that seeks to have its own way in every thing. By the term φρονήματι is intimated the origin thereof,—namely, in pride. This sense of φιλόνεικος, corresponding to the use of the Latin pervicax, is mentioned in Steph. Thes., though unaccompanied by any example; though such are found, and that on the subject of this very individual,—as in Plato, p. 336, Ἀλκιβιάδης δὲ ἀεὶ φιλόνεικός ἐστι πρὸς ὃ ἂν ὁρμήσῃ, 'as to any thing on which he may be bent.' Compare also Plut. p. 694, ὁρμ. πρός τι, and a passage of the New Testament, 1 Corinth. xi. 16, εἰ δέ τις δοκεῖ φιλόν. εἶναι, literally, 'an oppositionist,' one who delights in opposing and resisting lawful authority.

The next words, ὅτι Λακεδαιμόνιοι, &c., point at the cause of this opposition to the Lacedæmonian alliance,—namely, that his pride was wounded by the Lacedæmonians having shown neglect of him. Thus it is ἔπραξαν τὰς σπονδάς, αὐτὸν κατά τε τὴν νεότητα ὑπεριδόντες, καὶ κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν προξενίαν ποτὲ οὖσαν οὐ τιμήσαντες· ἢν, τοῦ πάππου ἀπειπόντος, αὐτὸς, τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου αὐτῶν αἰχμαλώτους θεραπεύων, διενοεῖτο ἀνανεώσασθαι. 3. πανταχόθεν τε νομίζων ἐλασσοῦσθαι, τό τε πρῶτον ἀντεῖπεν, οὐ βεβαίους φάσκων εἶναι Λακεδαιμονίους, ἀλλ' ἵνα Ἀργείους σφίσι σπεισάμενοι ἐξέλωσι, καὶ αὖθις ἐπ' Ἀθηναίους μόνους ἴωσι, τούτου ἕνεκα σπένδεσθαι αὐτούς· καὶ τότε, ἐπειδὴ ἡ διαφορὰ ἐγεγένητο, πέμπει εὐθὺς ἐς Ἄργος ἰδίᾳ, κελεύων ὡς τάχιστα ἐπὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν προκαλουμένους ἥκειν μετὰ Μαντινέων καὶ Ἠλείων, ὡς καιροῦ ὄντος, καὶ αὐτὸς ξυμπράξων τὰ μάλιστα. XLIV. Οἱ δὲ Ἀργεῖοι, ἀκούσαντες τῆς τε ἀγγελίας, καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἔγνωσαν οὐ μετ' Ἀθηναίων πραχθεῖσαν τὴν τῶν Βοιωτῶν ξυμμαχίαν, ἀλλ' ἐς διαφορὰν μεγάλην καθεστῶτας αὐτοὺς πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, τῶν μὲν ἐν Λακεδαίμονι πρέσβεων, οἳ σφίσι περὶ τῶν σπονδῶν ἔτυχον ἀπόντες, ἠμέλουν, πρὸς δὲ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους μᾶλλον τὴν γνώμην εἶχον, νομίζοντες πόλιν τε σφίσι φιλίαν ἀπὸ παλαιοῦ, καὶ δημοκρατουμένην ὥσπερ καὶ αὐτοί, καὶ δύναμιν μεγάλην ἔχουσαν τὴν κατὰ θάλασσαν ξυμπολεμήσειν σφίσιν, ἢν καθιστῶνται ἐς πόλεμον. 2. ἔπεμπον οὖν εὐθὺς πρέσβεις ὡς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους περὶ τῆς ξυμμαχίας· ξυνεπρεσβεύοντο δὲ καὶ οἱ Ἠλεῖοι καὶ Μαντινῆς. 3. Ἀφίκοντο δὲ καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων πρέσβεις κατὰ τάχος, δοκοῦντες ἐπιτήδειοι εἶναι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, Φιλοχαρίδας καὶ Λέων καὶ Ἔνδιος, δείσαντες μὴ τήν τε ξυμμαχίαν ὀργιζόμενοι πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους ποιήσωνται, καὶ ἅμα Πύλον ἀπαιτήσοντες ἀντὶ Πανάκτου, καὶ περὶ τῆς Βοιωτῶν ξυμμαχίας ἀπολογησόμενοι, ὡς οὐκ ἐπὶ κακῷ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐποιήσαντο. XLV. Καὶ λέγοντες ἐν τῇ βουλῇ περί τε τούτων, καὶ ὡς αὐτοκράτορες ἥκουσι περὶ πάντων ξυμβῆναι τῶν δια-

meant, that 'while he acted from honest conviction in opposing the Lacedæmonians and urging the Argive alliance, the moving principle of his conduct in the affair was wounded pride as regarded the Lacedæmonians, and a wilful oppositionist spirit as regarded Nicias, Laches, and their party.'

κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν προξενίαν ποτὲ οὖσαν οὐ τιμήσαντες] Render, 'and not showing him the respect due to the ancient tie of προξενία which had subsisted between his family and Sparta:' where the κατά, as Dr. Arnold points out, signifies literally, 'in proportion to,' 'in a degree answerable to,' as ii. 62, οὐ κατὰ τὴν τῶν οἰκιῶν χρείαν. On the subject of προξενία see note at ii. 29.

3. ἐλασσοῦσθαι] The term here signifies either to be ill-treated, aggrieved, to come off with worse than he ought, or to be slighted, spurned, ἀτιμᾶσθαι, as the Schol. Lugd. explains; in which sense the word occurs in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 38, ἠλαττοῦτο τὸ Ἀρκαδικὸν, and iii. 4, 10, (edit. Th.) Σπιθριδάτην ἐλαττούμενόν τι ὑπὸ Φαρναβάζου. Of the words ἀλλ' ἵνα Ἀργείους σφίσι σπεισάμενοι ἐξέλωσι, which are, from extreme brevity, obscure, the full sense is, as Duk. and Abresch well saw, 'nay, that they (the Lacedæmonians) had made the treaty with them only that they might subdue the Argives, and then [be at liberty to] proceed against the Athenians alone.'

CH. XLIV. 1. οὐ μετὰ] Said, as Abresch and Poppo are agreed, per meiosin, for 'against the violence of;' nearly equivalent to ἄνευ, on which see note at iv. 78.

φόρων, τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην ἐφόβουν, μὴ καὶ ἢν ἐς τὸν δῆμον ταῦτα λέγωσιν, ἐπαγάγωνται τὸ πλῆθος, καὶ ἀπωσθῇ ἡ Ἀργείων ξυμμαχία. 2. μηχανᾶται δὲ πρὸς αὐτοὺς τοιόνδε τι ὁ Ἀλκιβιάδης· τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους πείθει, πίστιν αὐτοῖς δοὺς, ἢν μὴ ὁμολογήσωσιν ἐν τῷ δήμῳ αὐτοκράτορες ἥκειν, Πύλον τε αὐτοῖς ἀποδώσειν, (πείσειν γὰρ αὐτὸς Ἀθηναίους, ὥσπερ καὶ νῦν ἀντιλέγειν,) καὶ τἄλλα ξυναλλάξειν. 3. βουλόμενος δὲ αὐτοὺς Νικίου τε ἀποστῆσαι, ταῦτα ἔπρασσε, καὶ ὅπως ἐν τῷ δήμῳ διαβαλὼν αὐτοὺς ὡς οὐδὲν ἀληθὲς ἐν νῷ ἔχουσιν, οὐδὲ λέγουσιν οὐδέποτε ταὐτά, τοὺς Ἀργείους καὶ Ἠλείους καὶ Μαντινέας ξυμμάχους ποιήσῃ. καὶ ἐγένετο οὕτως. 4. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐς τὸν δῆμον παρελθόντες, καὶ ἐπερωτώμενοι οὐκ ἔφασαν, ὥσπερ ἐν τῇ βουλῇ, αὐτοκράτορες ἥκειν, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐκέτι ἠνείχοντο, ἀλλὰ τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον καταβοῶντος τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, ἐσήκουόν τε, καὶ ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν εὐθὺς παραγαγόντες τοὺς Ἀργείους καὶ τοὺς μετ' αὐτῶν ξυμμάχους ποιεῖσθαι· σεισμοῦ δὲ γενομένου πρίν τι ἐπικυρωθῆναι, ἡ ἐκκλησία αὕτη ἀνεβλήθη. XLVI. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἐκκλησίᾳ ὁ Νικίας, καίπερ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων αὐτῶν ἠπατημένων, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐξηπατημένος περὶ τοῦ μὴ αὐτοκράτορας ὁμολογῆσαι ἥκειν, ὅμως τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἔφη χρῆναι φίλους μᾶλλον γίγνεσθαι, καὶ ἐπισχόντας τὰ πρὸς Ἀργείους πέμψαι ἔτι ὡς αὐτούς, καὶ εἰδέναι ὅ τι διανοοῦνται, λέγων ἐν μὲν τῷ σφετέρῳ καλῷ ἐν δὲ τῷ ἐκείνων ἀπρεπεῖ τὸν πόλεμον ἀναβάλλεσθαι· σφίσι μὲν γὰρ εὖ ἑστώτων τῶν πραγμάτων, ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἄριστον εἶναι διασώσασθαι τὴν εὐπραγίαν, ἐκείνοις δὲ δυστυχοῦσιν ὅτι τάχιστα εὕρημα εἶναι διακινδυνεῦσαι. 2. ἔπεισέ τε πέμψαι πρέσβεις, ὧν καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν, κελεύσοντας Λακεδαιμονίους,

CH. XLV. 2. ὥσπερ καὶ νῦν ἀντιλέγειν] 'Tu sicut nunc contradicere soleret interpretare, et quemadmodum ante ad πείσειν supplendum ἀποδοῦναι Πάνακτον, ita hic supple μὴ ἀποδοῦναι. De infinitivo vide Matth. Gr. Gr. § 538, et supra ad ch. 44.' (Poppo.)

3. Νικίου ἀποστῆσαι] 'to detach them from the party of Nicias.' Ὡς οὐδὲν ἀληθὲς—ταὐτά, 'as having nought of truth in their hearts, and never saying the same things in their words;' i. e. representing them as evidently false and prevaricating, παλιμβόλους.

4. σεισμοῦ δὲ γενομένου — ἀνεβλήθη] The reason for this, as Poppo points out, was, that an earthquake was reckoned among the ἐνοσημείαι, (on which see Schoem. de Comit. Ath. p. 448.) and was therefore always regarded as a sign or warning to desist from any enterprise about to be begun. See ch. 50, and viii. 6. It is, however, often satirized by Aristophanes as an anile superstition. See Concion. 791, and Acharn. 170.

CH. XLVI. 1. λέγων ἐν — ἀναβάλλεσθαι] Here, as Poppo points out, λέγω stands, as often, for jubeo (see note at iii. 15, 1); the sense being, 'dicens quum ipsi statu uterentur bono, illi autem ignominioso, se recte bellum dilaturos esse.' With ἐν καλῷ here compare the same phrase at ch. 59, where see note.

σφίσι μὲν γὰρ—διακινδυνεῦσαι] Render, 'for as their own affairs were in a good state, it was best for them to preserve their prosperity as long as possible; but for them [the Lacedæmonians], who were in a discreditable posture, it would be their interest to put things to the greatest hazard.' By εὕρημα εἶναι is meant, that 'it is clear gain.' See note on ii. 44, 4.

ἔπραξαν τὰς σπονδάς, αὐτὸν κατά τε τὴν νεότητα ὑπεριδόντες, καὶ κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν προξενίαν ποτὲ οὖσαν οὐ τιμήσαντες· ἦν, τοῦ πάππου ἀπειπόντος, αὐτὸς, τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου αὐτῶν αἰχμαλώτους θεραπεύων, διενοεῖτο ἀνανεώσασθαι. 3. πανταχόθεν τε νομίζων ἐλασσοῦσθαι, τό τε πρῶτον ἀντεῖπεν, οὐ βεβαίους φάσκων εἶναι Λακεδαιμονίους, ἀλλ' ἵνα Ἀργείους σφίσι σπεισάμενοι ἐξέλωσι, καὶ αὖθις ἐπ' Ἀθηναίους μόνους ἴωσι, τούτου ἕνεκα σπένδεσθαι αὐτούς· καὶ τότε, ἐπειδὴ ἡ διαφορὰ ἐγεγένητο, πέμπει εὐθὺς ἐς Ἄργος ἰδίᾳ, κελεύων ὡς τάχιστα ἐπὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν προκαλουμένους ἥκειν μετὰ Μαντινέων καὶ Ἠλείων, ὡς καιροῦ ὄντος, καὶ αὐτὸς ξυμπράξων τὰ μάλιστα. XLIV. Οἱ δὲ Ἀργεῖοι, ἀκούσαντες τῆς τε ἀγγελίας, καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἔγνωσαν οὐ μετ' Ἀθηναίων πραχθεῖσαν τὴν τῶν Βοιωτῶν ξυμμαχίαν, ἀλλ' ἐς διαφορὰν μεγάλην καθεστῶτας αὐτοὺς πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, τῶν μὲν ἐν Λακεδαίμονι πρέσβεων, οἳ σφίσι περὶ τῶν σπονδῶν ἔτυχον ἀπόντες, ἠμέλουν, πρὸς δὲ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους μᾶλλον τὴν γνώμην εἶχον, νομίζοντες πόλιν τε σφίσι φιλίαν ἀπὸ παλαιοῦ, καὶ δημοκρατουμένην ὥσπερ καὶ αὐτοί, καὶ δύναμιν μεγάλην ἔχουσαν τὴν κατὰ θάλασσαν ξυμπολεμήσειν σφίσιν, ἢν καθιστῶνται ἐς πόλεμον. 2. ἔπεμπον οὖν εὐθὺς πρέσβεις ὡς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους περὶ τῆς ξυμμαχίας· ξυνεπρεσβεύοντο δὲ καὶ οἱ Ἠλεῖοι καὶ Μαντινῆς. 3. Ἀφίκοντο δὲ καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων πρέσβεις κατὰ τάχος, δοκοῦντες ἐπιτήδειοι εἶναι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, Φιλοχαρίδας καὶ Λέων καὶ Ἔνδιος, δείσαντες μὴ τήν τε ξυμμαχίαν ὀργιζόμενοι πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους ποιήσωνται, καὶ ἅμα Πύλον ἀπαιτήσοντες ἀντὶ Πανάκτου, καὶ περὶ τῆς Βοιωτῶν ξυμμαχίας ἀπολογησόμενοι, ὡς οὐκ ἐπὶ κακῷ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐποιήσαντο. XLV. Καὶ λέγοντες ἐν τῇ βουλῇ περί τε τούτων, καὶ ὡς αὐτοκράτορες ἥκουσι περὶ πάντων ξυμβῆναι τῶν δια-

meant, that 'while he acted from honest conviction in opposing the Lacedæmonians and urging the Argive alliance, the moving principle of his conduct in the affair was wounded pride as regarded the Lacedæmonians, and a wilful oppositionist spirit as regarded Nicias, Laches, and their party.'

κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν προξενίαν ποτὲ οὖσαν οὐ τιμήσαντες] Render, 'and not showing him the respect due to the ancient tie of προξενία which had subsisted between his family and Sparta:' where the κατὰ, as Dr. Arnold points out, signifies literally, 'in proportion to,' 'in a degree answerable to,' as ii. 62, οὐ κατὰ τὴν τῶν οἰκιῶν χρείαν. On the subject of προξενία see note at ii. 29.

3. ἐλασσοῦσθαι] The term here signifies either to be ill-treated, aggrieved, to come off with worse than he ought, or to be slighted, spurned, ἀτιμᾶσθαι, as the Schol. Lugd. explains; in which sense the word occurs in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 38, ἠλαττοῦτο τὸ Ἀρκαδικὸν, and iii. 4, 10, (edit. Th.) Σπιθριδάτην ἐλαττούμενόν τι ὑπὸ Φαρναβάζου. Of the words ἀλλ' ἵνα Ἀργείους σφίσι σπεισάμενοι ἐξέλωσι, which are, from extreme brevity, obscure, the full sense is, as Duk. and Abresch well saw, 'nay, that they (the Lacedæmonians) had made the treaty with them only that they might subdue the Argives, and then [be at liberty to] proceed against the Athenians alone.'

CH. XLIV. 1. οὐ μετὰ] Said, as Abresch and Poppo are agreed, per meiosin, for 'against the violence of;' nearly equivalent to ἄνευ, on which see note at iv. 78.

φόρων, τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην ἐφύβουν, μὴ καὶ ἢν ἐς τὸν δῆμον ταῦτα λέγωσιν, ἐπαγάγωνται τὸ πλῆθος, καὶ ἀπωσθῇ ἡ Ἀργείων ξυμμαχία. 2. μηχανᾶται δὲ πρὸς αὐτοὺς τοιόνδε τι ὁ Ἀλκιβιάδης· τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους πείθει, πίστιν αὐτοῖς δοὺς, ἢν μὴ ὁμολογήσωσιν ἐν τῷ δήμῳ αὐτοκράτορες ἥκειν, Πύλον τε αὐτοῖς ἀποδώσειν, (πείσειν γὰρ αὐτὸς Ἀθηναίους, ὥσπερ καὶ νῦν ἀντιλέγειν,) καὶ τἄλλα ξυναλλάξειν. 3. βουλόμενος δὲ αὐτοὺς Νικίου τε ἀποστῆσαι, ταῦτα ἔπρασσε, καὶ ὅπως ἐν τῷ δήμῳ διαβαλὼν αὐτοὺς ὡς οὐδὲν ἀληθὲς ἐν νῷ ἔχουσιν, οὐδὲ λέγουσιν οὐδέποτε ταὐτά, τοὺς Ἀργείους καὶ Ἠλείους καὶ Μαντινέας ξυμμάχους ποιήσῃ. καὶ ἐγένετο οὕτως. 4. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐς τὸν δῆμον παρελθόντες, καὶ ἐπερωτώμενοι οὐκ ἔφασαν, ὥσπερ ἐν τῇ βουλῇ, αὐτοκράτορες ἥκειν, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐκέτι ἠνείχοντο, ἀλλὰ τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον καταβοῶντος τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, ἐσήκουόν τε, καὶ ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν εὐθὺς παραγαγόντες τοὺς Ἀργείους καὶ τοὺς μετ' αὐτῶν ξυμμάχους ποιεῖσθαι· σεισμοῦ δὲ γενομένου πρίν τι ἐπικυρωθῆναι, ἡ ἐκκλησία αὕτη ἀνεβλήθη. XLVI. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἐκκλησίᾳ ὁ Νικίας, καίπερ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων αὐτῶν ἠπατημένων, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐξηπατημένος περὶ τοῦ μὴ αὐτοκράτορας ὁμολογῆσαι ἥκειν, ὅμως τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἔφη χρῆναι φίλους μᾶλλον γίγνεσθαι, καὶ ἐπισχόντας τὰ πρὸς Ἀργείους πέμψαι ἔτι ὡς αὐτούς, καὶ εἰδέναι ὅ τι διανοοῦνται, λέγων ἐν μὲν τῷ σφετέρῳ καλῷ ἐν δὲ τῷ ἐκείνων ἀπρεπεῖ τὸν πόλεμον ἀναβάλλεσθαι· σφίσι μὲν γὰρ εὖ ἑστώτων τῶν πραγμάτων, ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἄριστον εἶναι διασώσασθαι τὴν εὐπραγίαν, ἐκείνοις δὲ δυστυχοῦσιν ὅτι τάχιστα εὕρημα εἶναι διακινδυνεῦσαι. 2. ἔπεισέ τε πέμψαι πρέσβεις, ὧν καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν, κελεύσοντας Λακεδαιμονίους,

CH. XLV. 2. ὥσπερ καὶ νῦν ἀντιλέγειν] 'Tu sicut nunc contradicere soleret interpretare, et quemadmodum ante ad πείσειν supplendum ἀποδοῦναι Πάνακτον, ita hic supple μὴ ἀποδοῦναι. De infinitivo vide Matth. Gr. Gr. § 538, et supra ad ch. 44.' (Poppo.)

3. Νικίου ἀποστῆσαι] 'to detach them from the party of Nicias.' Ὡς οὐδὲν ἀληθὲς—ταὐτὰ, 'as having nought of truth in their hearts, and never saying the same things in their words;' i. e. representing them as evidently false and prevaricating, παλιμβόλους.

4. σεισμοῦ δὲ γενομένου—ἀνεβλήθη] The reason for this, as Poppo points out, was, that an earthquake was reckoned among the διοσημεῖαι, (on which see Schoem. de Comit. Ath. p. 448.) and was therefore always regarded as a sign or warning to desist from any enterprise about to be begun. See ch. 50, and viii. 6. It is, however, often satirized by Aristophanes as an anile superstition. See Concion. 791, and Acharn. 170.

CH. XLVI. 1. λέγων ἐν—ἀναβάλλεσθαι] Here, as Poppo points out, λέγω stands, as often, for jubeo (see note at iii. 15, 1); the sense being, 'dicens quum ipsi statu uterentur bono, illi autem ignominioso, se recte bellum dilaturos esse.' With ἐν καλῷ here compare the same phrase at ch. 59, where see note.

σφίσι μὲν γὰρ—διακινδυνεῦσαι] Render, 'for as their own affairs were in a good state, it was best for them to preserve their prosperity as long as possible; but for them [the Lacedæmonians], who were in a discreditable posture, it would be their interest to put things to the greatest hazard.' By εὕρημα εἶναι is meant, that 'it is clear gain.' See note on ii. 44, 4.

εἴ τι δίκαιον διανοοῦνται, Πάνακτόν τε ὀρθὸν ἀποδιδόναι, καὶ Ἀμφίπολιν, καὶ τὴν Βοιωτῶν ξυμμαχίαν ἀνεῖναι, ἢν μὴ ἐς τὰς σπονδὰς ἐσίωσι, καθάπερ εἴρητο ἄνευ ἀλλήλων μηδενὶ ξυμβαίνειν. 3. εἰπεῖν τε ἐκέλευον, ὅτι καὶ σφεῖς, εἰ ἐβούλοντο ἀδικεῖν, ἤδη ἂν Ἀργείους ξυμμάχους πεποιῆσθαι, ὡς παρεῖναί γ' αὐτοὺς αὐτοῦ τούτου ἕνεκα. εἴ τέ τι ἄλλο ἐνεκάλουν, πάντα ἐπιστείλαντες, ἀπέπεμψαν τοὺς περὶ τὸν Νικίαν πρέσβεις. 4. καὶ ἀφικομένων αὐτῶν, καὶ ἀπαγγειλάντων τά τε ἄλλα, καὶ τέλος εἰπόντων ὅτι, "εἰ μὴ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν ἀνήσουσι Βοιωτοῖς μὴ ἐσιοῦσιν ἐς τὰς σπονδάς, ποιήσονται καὶ αὐτοὶ Ἀργείους καὶ τοὺς μετ' αὐτῶν ξυμμάχους," τὴν μὲν ξυμμαχίαν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι Βοιωτοῖς οὐκ ἔφασαν ἀνήσειν, ἐπικρατούντων τῶν περὶ τὸν Ξενάρη τὸν Ἔφορον ταῦτα γίγνεσθαι, καὶ ὅσοι ἄλλοι τῆς αὐτῆς γνώμης ἦσαν, τοὺς δὲ ὅρκους, δεομένου Νικίου, ἀνενεώσαντο· ἐφοβεῖτο γὰρ μὴ πάντα ἀτελῆ ἔχων ἀπέλθῃ, καὶ διαβληθῇ,—ὅπερ καὶ ἐγένετο,—αἴτιος δοκῶν εἶναι τῶν πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους σπονδῶν. 5. ἀναχωρήσαντός τε αὐτοῦ, ὡς ἤκουσαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐδὲν ἐκ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος πεπραγμένον, εὐθὺς δι' ὀργῆς εἶχον, καὶ νομίζοντες ἀδικεῖσθαι, (ἔτυχον γὰρ παρόντες οἱ Ἀργεῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, παραγαγόντος Ἀλκιβιάδου) ἐποιήσαντο σπονδὰς καὶ ξυμμαχίαν πρὸς αὐτοὺς τήνδε.

XLVII. "Σπονδὰς ἐποιήσαντο ἑκατὸν Ἀθηναῖοι ἔτη καὶ Ἀργεῖοι καὶ Μαντινῆς καὶ Ἠλεῖοι, ὑπὲρ σφῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων ὧν ἄρχουσιν ἑκάτεροι, ἀδόλους καὶ ἀβλαβεῖς, καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν. ὅπλα δὲ μὴ ἐξέστω ἐπιφέρειν ἐπὶ πημονῇ μήτε Ἀργείους καὶ Ἠλείους καὶ Μαντινέας καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐπὶ Ἀθηναίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ὧν ἄρχουσιν Ἀθηναῖοι, μήτε Ἀθηναίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐπὶ Ἀργείους καὶ Ἠλείους καὶ Μαντινέας καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους, τέχνῃ μηδὲ μηχανῇ μηδεμιᾷ.

"Κατὰ τάδε ξυμμάχους εἶναι Ἀθηναίους καὶ Ἀργείους καὶ Ἠλείους καὶ Μαντινέας ἑκατὸν ἔτη.

3. ὅτι καὶ σφεῖς — πεποιῆσθαι] 'se quoque societatem jam facturos fuisse.' (Portus.) On this use of ὅτι before infinitive, Poppo refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 539, 1.

4. τὴν ξυμμαχίαν — Βοιωτοῖς] The annotation here of Duker is worthy of attention: but I rather agree with Dr. Arnold, that 'Βοιωτοῖς depends on ἀνήσουσι, if they would not give up to the Bœotians their alliance.' Ἐπικρατούντων—γίγνεσθαι, 'quum evicissent, ut hæc fierent.'

Cн. XLVII. 1. ἀδόλους καὶ ἀβλαβεῖς] See note on iv. 118, and v. 18, 3. Ἐπὶ πημονῇ. See note on v. 18, 1.

τέχνῃ μηδὲ μηχανῇ μηδεμιᾷ] 'Pro his etiam μήτε τέχνῃ μήτε μηχανῇ μηδεμιᾷ, ut v. 18, 3, ubi vid. adnot., dici potuit; at solœca, quod in altero nomine oratio non insurgit, essent verba μήτε τέχνῃ μηδὲ μηχανῇ μηδεμιᾷ. Plane legitime dictum μὴ ἐξέστω ἐπιφέρειν τέχνῃ μηδὲ μηχανῇ. Οὔτε et μήτε omnino non conjungunt, sed distinguunt et opponunt; οὐδὲ et μηδὲ sive semel sive bis positæ conjungunt. Vide F. Franke de usu part. οὐδὲ et οὔτε. Rintel. 1833.' (Poppo.)

"Ἤν πολέμιοι ἴωσιν ἐς τὴν γῆν τὴν Ἀθηναίων, βοηθεῖν Ἀργείους καὶ Ἠλείους καὶ Μαντινέας Ἀθήναζε, καθ' ὅτι ἂν ἐπαγγέλλωσιν Ἀθηναῖοι, τρόπῳ ὁποίῳ ἂν δύνωνται ἰσχυροτάτῳ κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν. ἢν δὲ δηώσαντες οἴχωνται, πολεμίαν εἶναι ταύτην τὴν πόλιν Ἀργείοις καὶ Μαντινεῦσι καὶ Ἠλείοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ κακῶς πάσχειν ὑπὸ πασῶν τῶν πόλεων τούτων· καταλύειν δὲ μὴ ἐξεῖναι τὸν πόλεμον πρὸς ταύτην τὴν πόλιν μηδεμιᾷ τῶν πόλεων, ἢν μὴ ἁπάσαις δοκῇ. βοηθεῖν δὲ καὶ Ἀθηναίους ἐς Ἄργος καὶ Μαντίνειαν καὶ Ἦλιν, ἢν πολέμιοι ἴωσιν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν τὴν Ἠλείων ἢ τὴν Μαντινέων ἢ τὴν Ἀργείων, καθ' ὅτι ἂν ἐπαγγέλλωσιν αἱ πόλεις αὗται, τρόπῳ ὁποίῳ ἂν δύνωνται ἰσχυροτάτῳ κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν. ἢν δὲ δηώσαντες οἴχωνται, πολεμίαν εἶναι ταύτην τὴν πόλιν Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Ἀργείοις καὶ Μαντινεῦσι καὶ Ἠλείοις, καὶ κακῶς πάσχειν ὑπὸ πασῶν τούτων τῶν πόλεων· καταλύειν δὲ μὴ ἐξεῖναι τὸν πόλεμον πρὸς ταύτην τὴν πόλιν, ἢν μὴ ἁπάσαις δοκῇ ταῖς πόλεσιν.

"Ὅπλα δὲ μὴ ἐᾶν ἔχοντας διϊέναι ἐπὶ πολέμῳ διὰ τῆς γῆς τῆς σφετέρας αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων ὧν ἂν ἄρχωσιν ἕκαστοι, μηδὲ κατὰ θάλασσαν, ἢν μὴ ψηφισαμένων τῶν πόλεων ἁπασῶν τὴν δίοδον εἶναι, Ἀθηναίων καὶ Ἀργείων καὶ Μαντινέων καὶ Ἠλείων.

"Τοῖς δὲ βοηθοῦσιν ἡ πόλις ἡ πέμπουσα παρεχέτω μέχρι μὲν τριάκοντα ἡμερῶν σῖτον, ἐπὴν ἔλθῃ ἐς τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἐπαγγείλασαν βοηθεῖν, καὶ ἀπιοῦσι κατὰ ταὐτά· ἢν δὲ πλέονα βούλωνται χρόνον τῇ στρατιᾷ χρῆσθαι, ἡ πόλις ἡ μεταπεμψαμένη διδότω σῖτον, τῷ μὲν ὁπλίτῃ καὶ ψιλῷ καὶ τοξότῃ τρεῖς ὀβολοὺς Αἰγιναίους τῆς ἡμέρας ἑκάστης, τῷ δ' ἱππεῖ δραχμὴν Αἰγιναίαν.

"Ἡ δὲ πόλις ἡ μεταπεμψαμένη τὴν ἡγεμονίαν ἐχέτω, ὅταν ἐν τῇ αὐτῆς ὁ πόλεμος ᾖ· ἢν δέ που δόξῃ ταῖς πόλεσι κοινῇ στρατεύεσθαι, τὸ ἴσον τῆς ἡγεμονίας μετεῖναι πάσαις ταῖς πόλεσιν.

"Ὁμόσαι δὲ τὰς σπονδὰς Ἀθηναίους μὲν ὑπέρ τε σφῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων, Ἀργεῖοι δὲ καὶ Μαντινῆς καὶ Ἠλεῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι τούτων κατὰ πόλεις ὀμνύντων. ὀμνύντων δὲ τὸν ἐπιχώριον ὅρκον ἕκαστοι τὸν μέγιστον κατὰ ἱερῶν τελείων. ὁ δὲ ὅρκος ἔστω κατὰ ἱερῶν τελείων] By ἱερῶν τελείων some learned critics have understood victims ὁλοκλήρων κατὰ τὴν ἡλικίαν καὶ μὴ λελωβημένα, such as are called in Hom. Il. i. 315, τεληέσσας ἑκατόμβας. But, as Duk. observes, this was no more than all victims in sacrifice were expected to be, according to Aristotle, as cited in Athen. xv. 5, and Lucian de Sacrif. p. 336. And he agrees with Budæus and Hudson, that the expression ἱερὰ τέλεια designated among the Greeks what were called by the Romans 'majores et eximiæ hostiæ,' and which the shorter Schol. on Hom. Il. i. 65, calls τελείας θυσίας. Arnold adduces in illustration a passage of Herodot. i. 183, where τὰ τέλεα τῶν προβάτων are opposed to τὰ γαλαθηνά, as in the Latin writers hostiæ majores are distinguished from hostiæ lactentes. Compare also Plato, p. 834, πώλοις τε ἀβόλοις (meaning, 'which have not cast their first teeth') καὶ τελείων τε καὶ ἀβόλων τοῖς μέσοις. Ælian, V. Hist. vii. 13, ὡσπεροῦν πῶλοι πρὸς τὸν τέλειον

ὧδε· ‘Ἐμμενῶ τῇ ξυμμαχίᾳ κατὰ τὰ ξυγκείμενα δικαίως καὶ ἀβλαβῶς καὶ ἀδόλως, καὶ οὐ παραβήσομαι τέχνῃ οὐδὲ μηχανῇ οὐδεμιᾷ.’ ὀμνύντων δὲ Ἀθήνῃσι μὲν ἡ βουλὴ καὶ αἱ ἔνδημοι ἀρχαὶ, ἐξορκούντων δὲ οἱ Πρυτάνεις· ἐν Ἄργει δὲ ἡ βουλὴ καὶ οἱ ὀγδοήκοντα καὶ οἱ Ἀρτῦναι, ἐξορκούντων δὲ οἱ ὀγδοήκοντα· ἐν δὲ Μαντινείᾳ οἱ Δημιουργοὶ καὶ ἡ βουλὴ καὶ αἱ ἄλλαι ἀρχαὶ, ἐξορκούντων δὲ οἱ Θεωροὶ καὶ οἱ Πολέμαρχοι· ἐν δὲ Ἤλιδι οἱ Δημιουργοὶ καὶ οἱ τὰ τέλη

(scil. ἵππον). Pausan. t. ii. 33, ἵπποι τέλειοι, i. e. full-grown. And so τέλειος is used to denote maturity or fulness of growth in the expression τέλειος ἀνὴρ (as opposed to child or stripling) in Pol. v. 29, 2. Appian, i. 630, 87, and 606, 91. Xen. Cyr. i. 2, 4, and 5, 11. Æl. V. Hist. xiii. 1, τελείας γυναῖκας, ‘justæ ætatis ac staturæ.’ See more on the term τέλειος in my note on a passage of the New Testament, Eph. iv. 13. Finally, this very expression κατὰ ἱερῶν τελ. ὀμνύναι occurs in Andoc. p. 48, and Demosth. 1365, 17. And, with allusion to this, Lucian, Tim. 7, and Philop. 21, uses the phrase καθ' ἱερῶν τελείων ἑστιάζειν, which passages show that the article was here rightly cancelled, from many MSS., by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller. On the force here of the prep. κατὰ, which bears the sense super, ‘over,’ see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 581. On ἐμμενῶ see note on ch. 18, 9.

By αἱ ἔνδημοι ἀρχαὶ are meant, as Dukas, Poppo, and Arnold are agreed, the principal home magistrates (as the archons, secretaries, and γραμματεῖς), as opposed to the στρατηγοὶ, who held office among the foreign-state allies. So Duker compares in Æschin. p. 45, R. ἀρχὴν—μήτ' ἔνδημον, μήτε ὑπερόριον, and Arnold adduces from Arist. Pol. iii. 10, τὰ ἔνδημα καὶ τὰ ὑπερόρια (scil. πράγματα). Also Didot, from Xen. Anab. vii. 1, 34, τὰ οἴκοι τέλη, ‘the home magistrates.’

οἱ ὀγδοήκοντα] Respecting these,—of whom nothing certain is known,—the reader is referred to Wachsm. Ant. Gr. i. 2, p. 88. I have in my Translation expressed it as my opinion that the Council of Eighty was an aristocratical body, holding the same position as the Chamber of Peers in France with respect to the Senate, and that the Artynæ just after subjoined were the Presidents of that Council: a view, I find, since adopted by Dr. Arnold, and which has something to countenance it in the fact,—mentioned by Goeller,—that, as appears from Plut. Quæst. Græc. 1., in the Dorian constitution of Epidaurus there were certain state-officers called Ἀρτῦναι, chosen out of the whole body of the Senate, doubtless meant to act as presidents, or a sort of committee, probably with a power, among others, similar to that of the Caput of the University of Cambridge. Finally, some confirmation to the opinion may be deduced from the derivation of the word, which comes from the verb ἀρτύνω, to arrange, prepare, set in order, (so Hom. Il. ii. 55, τοὺς ὄγε συγκαλέσας, πυκινὴν ἠρτύνετο βουλήν. See also Pind. Nem. viii. 20.) as the Spartan magistrates called Ἁρμοσταὶ were so denominated from the verb ἁρμόζω.

I have followed Poppo and Goeller in editing οἱ instead of vulg. αἱ, which, though retained by Bekker, is really, as Poppo has shown, indefensible. As to the weakness of the former in external authority, (though I find it to have been the original reading of the Cod. Clarend.) that is fully balanced by its preponderance in internal evidence; since easily may we account for the change of οἱ into αἱ by the scribes (namely, from the circumstance of their regarding ἀρτῦναι as a common noun, not as a name of office); but not vice versâ.

On the subject of the Δημιουργοὶ, just after spoken of, even less is known than on that of the Ἀρτῦναι. The term was one to denote state-officers in the despatch of public business; though of what kind is far from clear. In Demosth. p. 280, 3, and Pol. xxiv. 5, 16. Livy, xxi. 22, the δημιουργοὶ are mentioned as the chief magistrates in Achaia; and in Plut. t. ii. 807, and i. 1047, as chief magistrates in the Peloponnesian states; and, again, in Pseudo-Phalaris, Ep. ii. as magistrates at Delphi. And, as we learn from what follows, there were some also at Elis. But of the δημιουργοὶ at Mantinea we have no where else any mention. The Θεωροὶ, like the Pythii at Sparta, were, as Goeller shows from Müller and Dissen., ‘a sacred college which had the care of all oracles that concerned the state, and the general superintendence of religious matters throughout the state.’ Of the Πολέμαρχοι mention is made more than once in Polyb. As to the nature of their office, nothing ἔχοντες καὶ οἱ ἑξακόσιοι, ἐξορκούντων δὲ οἱ Δημιουργοὶ καὶ οἱ Θεσμοφύλακες. ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τοὺς ὅρκους Ἀθηναίους μὲν ἰόντας ἐς Ἦλιν καὶ ἐς Μαντίνειαν καὶ ἐς Ἄργος, τριάκοντα ἡμέραις πρὸ Ὀλυμπίων, Ἀργείους δὲ καὶ Ἠλείους καὶ Μαντινέας ἰόντας Ἀθήναζε, δέκα ἡμέραις πρὸ Παναθηναίων τῶν μεγάλων. τὰς δὲ ξυνθήκας τὰς περὶ τῶν σπονδῶν καὶ τῶν ὅρκων καὶ τῆς ξυμμαχίας ἀναγράψαι ἐν στήλῃ λιθίνῃ, Ἀθηναίους μὲν ἐν πόλει, Ἀργείους δὲ ἐν ἀγορᾷ ἐν τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος τῷ ἱερῷ, Μαντινέας δὲ ἐν τοῦ Διὸς τῷ ἱερῷ, ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ. καταθέντων δὲ καὶ Ὀλυμπιάσι στήλην χαλκῆν κοινῇ Ὀλυμπίοις τοῖς νυνί. ἐὰν δέ τι δοκῇ ἄμεινον εἶναι ταῖς πόλεσι ταύταις, προσθεῖναι πρὸς τοῖς ξυγκειμένοις. ὅ τι [δ'] ἂν δόξῃ ταῖς πόλεσιν ἁπάσαις κοινῇ βουλευομέναις, τοῦτο κύριον εἶναι.”

XLVIII. Αἱ μὲν σπονδαὶ καὶ αἱ ξυμμαχίαι οὕτως ἐγένοντο· καὶ αἱ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ Ἀθηναίων οὐκ ἀπείρητο τούτου ἕνεκα οὐδ' ὑφ' ἑτέρων. 2. Κορίνθιοι δὲ, Ἀργείων ὄντες ξύμμαχοι, οὐκ ἐσῆλθον ἐς αὐτὰς, ἀλλὰ καὶ γενομένης πρὸ τούτου Ἠλείοις καὶ Ἀργείοις καὶ Μαντινεῦσι ξυμμαχίας, τοῖς αὐτοῖς πολεμεῖν καὶ εἰρήνην ἄγειν, οὐ ξυνώμοσαν, ἀρκεῖν δ' ἔφασαν σφίσι τὴν πρώτην γενομένην ἐπιμαχίαν, ἀλλήλοις βοηθεῖν, ξυνεπιστρατεύειν δὲ μηδενί. 3. οἱ μὲν Κορίνθιοι οὕτως ἀπέστησαν τῶν ξυμμάχων, καὶ πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους πάλιν τὴν γνώμην εἶχον.

XLIX. Ὀλύμπια δ' ἐγένετο τοῦ θέρους τούτου, οἷς Ἀνδροσθένης Ἀρκὰς παγκράτιον τὸ πρῶτον ἐνίκα· καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τοῦ ἱεροῦ ὑπὸ Ἠλείων εἴρχθησαν, ὥστε μὴ θύειν μηδ' ἀγωνίζεσθαι, οὐκ certain is known. They were probably, as Heilm. supposes, not generals, but general superintendents, or directors of military affairs, similarly as at Athens the third Archon was called the Polemarchos. With respect to the οἱ τὰ τέλη ἔχοντες, these are by Arnold supposed to designate some particular council who exercised the sovereign authority as a sort of council of administration; while Poppo regards the words as equivalent to οἱ ἅπαν τὸ κῦρος ἔχοντες at ch. 58. Compare with the present the expression τέλος ἔχοντες at iv. 118, 6, where see note.

Finally, the θεσμοφύλακες (answering to the θεσμοθέται and νομοφύλακες) were not civil jurists only, but divine also. So in Diod. Sic. v. 67, by θεσμοφύλακες and θεσμοθέται are to be understood, οἱ τὰ πρὸς τοὺς θεοὺς ὅσια καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων νόμους διαφυλάττοντες. The ἐν after ἀναγράψαι is used with allusion to the letters being cut in or engraven. This inscribing of treaties on pillars of stone is facetiously alluded to by Aristoph. Lysist. 511, and Ach. 727. Av. 1050 & 1054. The δ' after ὅ τι I am now induced, with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, to regard as an interpolation; the construction, as Dr. Arnold points out, being, ἐὰν δέ τι δοκῇ προσθεῖναι, ὅ τι ἂν δόξῃ—τοῦτο κύριον εἶναι.

CH. XLIX. 1. οἷς Ἀνδροσθένης—ἐνίκα] ‘in which Androsthenes was the victor (carried off the prize) for the first time.’ On this use of the imperfect, where one should have expected the aorist, Poppo in his Prol. i. p. 155, observes, that ‘non sæpius nec diutius vincebat, sed semel vicit. Refertur tamen hæc sententia ad priorem, ideoque tempori relativo locus, et simul effectus victoriæ (ut honor quo victor fruebatur) ita permanere significatur.’

ἐκτίνοντες τὴν δίκην αὐτοῖς, ἣν ἐν τῷ Ὀλυμπιακῷ νόμῳ Ἠλεῖοι κατεδικάσαντο αὐτῶν, φάσκοντες †σφᾶς ἐπὶ Φύρκον τε τεῖχος ὅπλα ἐπενεγκεῖν, καὶ ἐς Λέπρεον αὐτῶν ὁπλίτας ἐν ταῖς Ὀλυμπιακαῖς σπονδαῖς ἐσπέμψαι. ἡ δὲ καταδίκη δισχίλιαι μναῖ ἦσαν, κατὰ τὸν ὁπλίτην ἕκαστον δύο μναῖ, ὥσπερ ὁ νόμος ἔχει. 2. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ, πρέσβεις πέμψαντες, ἀντέλεγον μὴ δικαίως σφῶν καταδεδικάσθαι, λέγοντες μὴ ἐπηγγέλθαι πω ἐς Λακεδαίμονα τὰς σπονδὰς, ὅτ' ἐσέπεμψαν τοὺς ὁπλίτας. 3. Ἠλεῖοι δὲ τὴν παρ' αὐτοῖς ἐκεχειρίαν ἤδη ἔφασαν εἶναι (πρώτοις γὰρ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἐπαγγέλλουσι), καὶ ἡσυχαζόντων σφῶν καὶ οὐ προσδεχομένων, ὡς ἐν σπονδαῖς, αὐτοὺς λαθεῖν ἀδικήσαντας. 4. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ὑπελάμβανον οὐ χρεὼν εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἐπαγγεῖλαι ἔτι ἐς Λακεδαίμονα, εἰ ἀδικεῖν γε ἤδη ἐνόμιζον αὐτοὺς, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς νομίζοντας τοῦτο δρᾶσαι, καὶ ὅπλα οὐδαμόσε ἔτι αὐτοῖς ἐπενεγκεῖν. Ἠλεῖοι δὲ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ Ὀλυμπιακῷ νόμῳ] 'by virtue of, or agreeably to, the Olympic law' (meaning the law which regulated all proceedings that regarded the Olympic festival): of which sense, rightly assigned to the ἐν by Poppo, examples are adduced in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 577, from Plato, p. 920, and Thucyd. vii. 67, and i. 77, ἐν τοῖς ὁμοίοις νόμοις τὰς κρίσεις ποιεῖν.

With respect to the word σφᾶς, a little after, I am of opinion that it is, notwithstanding the strenuous endeavours made to defend it by Bauer and Arnold, untenable. Quite inadmissible are the methods propounded by them, as proceeding on the precarious principle of taking for granted either (as is done by Blume) a supposed confounding of the uses of the pronouns σφᾶς and αὐτοὺς, or (as by Arnold) a very harsh anacoluthon, by which our author is supposed to have written σφᾶς before he had fixed on the particular verb on which it was to depend. Surely far better is it to suppose, with Goeller and Poppo, that σφᾶς is a mistake of the scribes for σφῶν; which is, indeed, the more probable from the circumstance that in manuscript character the two words are exceedingly similar.

With respect to the construction, σφῶν ἐπὶ Φύρκον τε τεῖχος is by Goeller compared with σφῶν ἐπὶ τὸν Πειραῖα: and so, just after, Λέπρεον αὐτῶν. The conjecture, indeed, proceeds on the supposition that Phyrcus was a fort belonging to the Eleans. But although nothing certain be known about the matter, it is more probable that it was not. As to the place itself, it is no where else mentioned in the classical writers, except that when Hesych. explains φύρκος by τεῖχος, and φύρκορ (Doricè for φύρκος) by ὀχύρωμα, he has preserved the common name, from which the appellation was formed; and probably this φύρκος was only a dialectical variety of the common form πύργος.

With respect to the site of this Fort Phyrcus, it certainly was not, as Poppo supposes, at Phryxa, near Olympia; for that would surely be much too far off. It was probably at the present Fort Kleidi, which is laid down in the map of Lapie and Wyld at a commanding position on a projecting promontory of the mountain, about nine miles N.NE. from the site of old Lepreum. That it was not far from Lepreum, is clear from the context. We may suppose it to have been in the territory of Elis, though on the very borders of the district of Lepreum; forming the Derbeni or pass from Triphylia into Lepreatis.

2. σφῶν καταδεδικάσθαι] On the nature of the construction, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 490. Μὴ ἐπηγγέλθαι τὰς σπονδάς: meaning, that 'the Olympic holy-day or festival had not been proclaimed,' as was regularly done by the Eleian heralds called σπονδοφόροι. The sense of the whole passage, from Λακεδαιμόνιοι to ἐπενεγκεῖν, (which is not a little perplexed and obscure,) is best expressed by Heilm. and Coray as follows: 'Lacedæmonii vero missis legatis contradicebant, negantes se juste condemnatos, ac dicentes Lacedæmoni nondum denunciatas fuisse inducias, quo tempore suos milites armatos (in arces Phyrcum et Lepreum) immiserint. Elei λόγου εἴχοντο, ὡς μὲν οὐκ ἀδικοῦσι μὴ ἂν πεισθῆναι· εἰ δὲ βούλονται σφίσι Λέπρεον ἀποδοῦναι, τό τε αὐτῶν μέρος ἀφιέναι τοῦ ἀργυρίου, καὶ ὃ τῷ θεῷ γίγνεται αὐτοὶ ὑπὲρ ἐκείνων ἐκτίσειν. L. Ὡς δ' οὐκ ἐσήκουον, αὖθις τάδε ἠξίουν, Λέπρεον μὲν μὴ ἀποδοῦναι, εἰ μὴ βούλονται, †ἀναβάντες δὲ ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν τοῦ Διὸς τοῦ Ὀλυμπίου, ἐπειδὴ προθυμοῦνται χρῆσθαι τῷ ἱερῷ, ἀπομόσαι ἐναντίον τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἢ μὴν ἀποδώσειν ὕστερον τὴν καταδίκην. 2. ὡς δὲ οὐδὲ ταῦτα ἤθελον, Λακεδαιμόνιοι μὲν εἴργοντο τοῦ ἱεροῦ, θυσίας καὶ ἀγώνων, καὶ οἴκοι ἔθυον, οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι Ἕλληνες ἐθεώρουν, vero inducias apud se jam fuisse dicebant, quippe qui sibi primis has inducias indicere solerent (et deinde exteris); ac se quiescentes (securos), neque tale quid exspectantes, utpote induciarum tempore, a Lacedæmoniis clam injuria affectos esse. Lacedæmonii contra respondebant Eleos non amplius oportuisse inducias Lacedæmoniis fieri putabant [si factam esse putarent seu putavissent]; sed inducias denunciasse, quod hoc non factum putarent.' Render, 'The Lacedæmonians, however, sent ambassadors representing in reply, that they were unjustly condemned in that fine, and alleging that the festival truce had not yet been proclaimed [at Lacedæmon] when they sent off the troops [against Fort Phyrcos and Lepreum]. But the Eleans alleged that the truce was already on foot (for they proclaim it first in their own territory); and that it was while they themselves were in quiet security, and not expecting [any such thing] as in a time of truce, that those surprised and did them the injury.' But the Lacedæmonians replied, that 'it was not any longer incumbent on them to proclaim the truce at Lacedæmon, if they then thought that injury had been done them by the Lacedæmonians, but that they had so proclaimed the truce because they thought that it had not been done, and that they had borne no arms against them after they had received the message of the truce.'

4. ὑπελάμβανον] This is best explained by the Schol. Lugd. ἐκ διαδοχῆς ἀπεκρίνοντο, 'they rejoined,' literally, alleged in answer; a sense of ὑπολαμβάνω almost confined to the phrase ὑπολαβὼν εἶπε or ἔφη, though found in Plato, p. 338, ταύτῃ ὑπολαμβάνεις, ᾗ ἂν κακουργήσαις μάλιστα τὸν λόγον.

ὡς μὲν—πεισθῆναι] 'that they could not be persuaded that those had not injured them.' I have followed Goeller and Bekker in reading, for vulg. αὐτῶν, what the context rather requires, αὐτῶν. Of ὃ τῷ θεῷ γίγνεται the sense is, 'what falls or is due to the god.'

CH. L. 1. ἀναβάντες] For ἀναβάντες, Bekker has, solely on conjecture, edited ἀναβάντας. And indeed in a matter so minute the authority of MSS. is so slender, that I should have been inclined to follow Bekker in so editing, were it not that internal evidence is in favour of ἀναβάντες; for, had the accus. been the original reading, who, it may be asked, would have altered it to the nominative? Hence I have chosen, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the common reading; the use of the nomin. being doubtless, as Poppo shows, occasioned by the occurrence of the verbs βούλονται and προθυμοῦνται, just as at ch. 41, ἀλλ' εἰ βούλονται ἑτοῖμοι εἶναι the nom. ἑτοῖμοι took its rise from βούλονται before. The point, however, is one not so certain but that I have thought proper to affix an obelus.

ἀπομόσαι — ἀποδώσειν] The Scholiast and Abresch here explain ἀπομόσαι by δι' ὅρκου κυρῶσαι, 'to make assurance of any thing by oath.' And Dobree regards the term as equivalent to ἐπομόσαι. But why, then, it may be asked, was not ἐπομόσαι here used, considering that it was the term commonly employed in such a case? Not, I think, as Arnold is of opinion,—from the tendency of the oath being exculpatory, (and therefore deprecating the severity of the law,) but because ἀπομόσαι is a stronger term than ἐπομόσαι, (see Hom. Od. ii. 377.) being indeed required by ἢ μήν. And so in Hom. Od. xv. 436, we have, ἀπώμννον (scil. ποιεῖν) ὡς ἐκέλευεν. See also xii. 303. x. 345. xviii. 58, and compare Æschin. p. 20, 27.

2. Here the words θυσίας καὶ ἀγώνων are illustrative of εἴργ. τοῦ ἱεροῦ. Similarly a little before, ch. 49, we had τοῦ ἱεροῦ εἴρχθησαν, ὥστε μὴ θύειν μήδ' ἀγωνίζεσθαι. By ἐθεώρουν it is meant that they partook in the sacred ceremonies, as sacrificants and ἀγωνισταὶ, were not mere πλὴν Λεπρεατῶν. 3. ὅμως δὲ οἱ Ἠλεῖοι, δεδιότες μὴ βίᾳ θύσωσι, ξὺν ὅπλοις τῶν νεωτέρων φυλακὴν εἶχον· ἦλθον δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ Ἀργεῖοι καὶ Μαντινῆς, χίλιοι ἑκατέρων, καὶ Ἀθηναίων ἱππῆς, οἳ ἐν Ἄργει ὑπέμενον τὴν ἑορτήν. 4. δέος δ' ἐγένετο τῇ πανηγύρει μέγα μὴ ξὺν ὅπλοις ἔλθωσιν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἐπειδὴ καὶ Λίχας ὁ Ἀρκεσιλάου Λακεδαιμόνιος ἐν τῷ ἀγῶνι ὑπὸ τῶν ῥαβδούχων πληγὰς ἔλαβεν, ὅτι, νικῶντος τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ ζεύγους, καὶ ἀνακηρυχθέντος Βοιωτῶν δημοσίου κατὰ τὴν οὐκ-ἐξουσίαν τῆς ἀγωνίσεως, προελθὼν ἐς τὸν ἀγῶνα, ἀνέδησε τὸν ἡνίοχον, βουλόμενος spectators, as the Lacedæmonians (such of them as, like Lichas, attended) must have been.

3. ξὺν ὅπλοις] literally, 'with arms in their hands,' armati, as σὺν τοῖς ὅπλοις in Xen. Cyr. vii. 4, 5 and 7. Anab. iii. 2, 4. iv. 3, 6, and σὺν ὅπλοις ἐλθεῖν in Xen. Hist. vii. 4, 35. Eurip. Phœn. 514. Ion 1292. Iph. Aul. 754.

4. καὶ Λίχας] Render, 'even Lichas.' It is thus implied that he was a person of great consequence: and that he was really such, is shown by Poppo, Prol. i. 2, 116, and Ruhnk. on Xen. Mem. i. 2, 61.

ὑπὸ τῶν ῥαβδούχων πληγὰς ἔλαβεν] It is debated among the critics, whether by ῥαβδούχων be denoted the lictors, i. e. beadles, or the Ἑλληνοδίκαι or ἀγωνοθέται. Bredow and Siebelis adopt the latter view, which they support from the Scholiast on Aristoph. Pac. 733, and Paus. vi. 2, 1, μαστιγοῦσιν αὐτὸν οἱ Ἑλλανοδίκαι. But, as it is remarked by Valckn. on Herodot. viii. 59, 'what these august judges are said to have done is only to be understood as having been done by their orders, through the instrumentality of their lictors.' Moreover, the word ῥαβδοφόρος is never, I believe, used in the sense βραβευτὴς or ἀγωνοθέτης, (that being confined to ῥαβδοῦχος or ῥαβδονόμος,) but only in the sense lictor. So the author of the Etym. Mag. p. 72, 12, (cited by Valckn.) says, Ἀλυτάρχης, ὁ ἐν τῷ Ὀλυμπιακῷ ἀγῶνι εὐκοσμίας ἄρχων· Ἠλεῖοι γὰρ τοὺς ῥαβδοφόρους ἢ μαστιγοφόρους ἀλύτας καλοῦσιν. The phrase ὑπὸ τῶν ῥαβδ. πληγὰς ἔλαβε may mean either simply, 'he received stripes at the hands of the lictors,' or 'received a whipping from them.' Compare Xen. Laced. vi. 2, παῖς πληγὰς λαβὼν ὑπ' ἄλλου, and Cyrop. i. 3, 14, ἐπὶ μίᾳ δίκῃ πληγὰς ἔλαβον. But the former is the more probable sense; and we may suppose the meaning to be, that 'the lictors used stripes to drive Lichas from the course,' where, as being a mere spectator, he had no right to be. Thus πληγὰς ἔλαβε stands simply for ἐῤῥαπίζετο, the term, in a similar case, used in Herodot. viii. 59, ἐν τοῖσι ἀγῶσι οἱ προεξανιστάμενοι ῥαπίζονται. And at vii. 35, that writer uses together, as synonymous, ῥαπίζειν and ἐπικέσθαι μάστιγι πληγάς. Mitford, indeed, remarks that 'the manner in which Lysias tells the story, would rather lead us to suppose that Lichas was formally condemned to receive a public flagellation, which was inflicted accordingly:' and that the phrase will bear this sense, is certain. But whether Lysias meant that, or not, the thing itself is incredible; and the statement of Lysias will only furnish another instance of what Dr. Arnold adverts to at ch. 52, 'the inveterate habits of exaggeration which led the rhetoricians and rhetorical orators to falsify every fact they touched on.' Neither, again, will the words of our author bear such a sense, notwithstanding what Mitford says, who, with little regard to consistency, assigns to the words the sense, 'struck Lichas in the presence of the assembly;' as though the words of Thucydides could bear either of two meanings so opposite to each other. The blows and stripes inflicted on Lichas, to drive him from the course, were, as being an ignominious chastisement, abundantly sufficient for the purpose in view,—namely, to maintain order, by keeping mere spectators from coming on the course. And that, in point of fact, all that the lictors did in the case of Lichas was to drive him off the course with strokes of their rods, is attested by Xen. Hist. iii. 2, 21, who, in narrating the story, says, μαστιγοῦντες αὐτὸν, ἄνδρα γέροντα, ἐξήλασαν.

On the idiom in τὴν οὐκ-ἐξουσίαν τῆς ἀγωνίσεως, see note at i. 137; and on the rare word ἀγώνισις, see my note on Rom. ix. 21. Τὸν ἀγῶνα: meaning, according to the use of the term in Hom. Od. viii. 260, et al. the course. The reference in δηλῶσαι ὅτι ἑαυτοῦ ἦν τὸ ἅρμα· ὥστε πολλῷ δὴ μᾶλλον ἐπεφόβηντο πάντες, καὶ ἐδόκει τι νέον ἔσεσθαι. οἱ μέντοι Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἠσύχασάν †τε, καὶ ἡ ἑορτὴ αὐτοῖς οὕτω διῆλθεν. 5. ἐς δὲ Κόρινθον μετὰ τὰ Ὀλύμπια Ἀργεῖοί τε καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἀφίκοντο, δεησόμενοι αὐτῶν παρὰ σφᾶς ἐλθεῖν. καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων πρέσβεις ἔτυχον παρόντες· καὶ, πολλῶν λόγων γενομένων, τέλος οὐδὲν ἐπράχθη· ἀλλὰ, σεισμοῦ γενομένου, διελύθησαν ἕκαστοι ἐπ' οἶκου. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

LI. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος Ἡρακλεώταις τοῖς ἐν Τραχῖνι μάχη ἐγένετο πρὸς Αἰνιᾶνας καὶ Δόλοπας καὶ Μηλιέας, καὶ Θεσσαλῶν τινας. 2. προσοικοῦντα γὰρ τὰ ἔθνη ταῦτα τῇ πόλει πολέμια ἦν· οὐ γὰρ ἐπ' ἄλλῃ τινὶ γῇ ἢ τῇ τούτων τὸ χωρίον ἐτειχίσθη· καὶ εὐθύς τε καθισταμένῃ τῇ πόλει ἠναντιοῦντο, ἐς ὅσον ἐδύναντο φθείροντες, καὶ τότε τῇ μάχῃ ἐνίκησαν τοὺς Ἡρακλεώτας, καὶ Ξενάρης ὁ †Κνίδιος Λακεδαιμόνιος ἄρχων αὐτῶν ἀπέθανε, διεφθάαὐτοῖς, further on, is obscure and disputed. Arnold supposes it to belong to πάντες. But to this it is objected by Poppo, that the particles τε, καὶ prove that each member pertains to the Lacedæmonians, and that the sense will thus be, 'so passed off the festival to the Lacedæmonians,' meaning that they suffered it to so pass; a sense this so jejune and difficult to be elicited from the words, that I should prefer, with Dr. Arnold, to refer them to πάντες; and as to the objection advanced by Poppo, that may very well be removed by altering the τε, which can here have no force, into δέ, which (I would observe) was formerly the reading of the Cod. Clarend., and which certainly would here yield a sense most suitable,—namely, that the Lacedæmonians, however, kept quiet at least; though they doubtless resented the affront, and, as we find from Pausan. iii. 8, 2, and v. 4, 5, revenged it by annual irruptions into the territory of Elis, until they reduced the Eleans to restore the privileges taken away, to abandon all rule over the neighbouring subject-cantons, and to disembattle their city walls. However, the reference in αὐτοῖς cannot be to πάντες, which is not sufficiently prominent to be the object of reference; for πάντες is not the real nominative to ἐπεφόβηντο, that being the pronoun (αὐτοὶ) latent in the verb, 'they were all of them afraid:' where the plural is used because τῇ πανηγύρει, here referred to, is a noun of multitude, as in a passage of the New Testament, Hebr. xii. 23, μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων πανηγύρει. So ὁ λαὸς is used with a verb in the plural in another passage of the New Testament, Acts iii. 10, πᾶς ὁ λαὸς ἐπλήσθησαν θάμβους. The sense may be thus expressed: 'so passed off the festival to the assembled multitude.'

5. σεισμοῦ γενομένου] See note supra ch. 45.

CH. LI. 1. Αἰνιᾶνας] These are by Herodotus called Ἐνιῆνες. See l. vii. 132 and 198: though indeed in those passages some good MSS. have Αἰνιῆνες. And the Æ is, moreover, supported by Pausan. x. 8, 2, and x. 22, 5. Scylax, 14 & 24. Max. Tyr. Diss. 28, 4. 2, 58, and Eurip. Iph. Aul. 267. This tribe inhabited part of the valley of the Sperchius, to the east of Heraclea. They had, we may suppose, a town called *Æ*nia, which is, indeed, laid down by Arrowsmith; though, perhaps, on uncertain data.

2. ὁ Κνίδιος] Little probable is it that the Lacedæmonians should have committed the government of so important a city to a foreigner. It is the united opinion of Heilm., Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, that Κνίδιος is the genitive of the proper name Κνίδις, formed, Arnold observes, like Γόαξις, Γοάξιος, iv. 107: and he supposes the termination -ιος to have been here employed rather than -ιδος, for the purpose of avoiding the recurrence of the two deltas. But the principle of euphony will surely not apply to ἴγδις, which makes ἴγδιδος, and Μηδὶς, Μηδίδος, νίειδις, νίειδίδος, and ῥοδὶς, ῥοδίδος; while ἄρδις makes ἄρδιος. As to Γόαξις, Γοάξιος, adduced by Arnold from iv. 107, all nouns in ξις make ιος or εως, never, I believe, ρησαν δὲ καὶ ἄλλοι τῶν Ἡρακλεωτῶν. καὶ ὁ χειμὼν ἐτελεύτα καὶ δωδέκατον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα.

LII. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους, εὐθὺς ἀρχομένου, τὴν Ἡράκλειαν, ὡς μετὰ τὴν μάχην κακῶς ἐφθείρετο, Βοιωτοὶ παρέλαβον, καὶ Ἡγησιππίδαν τὸν Λακεδαιμόνιον, ὡς οὐ καλῶς ἄρχοντα, ἐξέπεμψαν. δείσαντες δὲ παρέλαβον τὸ χωρίον, μὴ, Λακεδαιμονίων τὰ κατὰ Πελοπόννησον θορυβουμένων, Ἀθηναῖοι λάβωσι. Λακεδαιμόνιοι μέντοι ὠργίζοντο αὐτοῖς.

2. Καὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ θέρους Ἀλκιβιάδης ὁ Κλεινίου, στρατηγὸς ὢν Ἀθηναίων, Ἀργείων καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων ξυμπρασσόντων, ἐλθὼν ἐς Πελοπόννησον μετ' ὀλίγων Ἀθηναίων ὁπλιτῶν καὶ τοξοτῶν, καὶ τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμμάχων παραλαβών, τά τε ἄλλα ξυγκαθίστη περὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, διαπορευόμενος Πελοπόννησον τῇ στρατιᾷ, καὶ Πατρέας τε τεῖχη καθεῖναι ἔπεισεν ἐς θάλασσαν, καὶ αὐτὸς ἕτερον διενοεῖτο ἰδος. Hence, then, we may suspect some corruption to rest on the word, only to be removed by better MSS.

Ch. LII. 1. οὐ καλῶς ἄρχοντα] 'not governing rightly.' Compare iii. 93, οὐ καλῶς ἐξηγούμενοι.

2. στρατηγὸς ὢν Ἀθηναίων] 'being state-general of the Athenians,' i. e. one of the ten state-generals. Ξυμπρασσόντων stands for βοηθούντων, 'aiding or co-operating with them.' So Hesych. explains συμπράξαι by βοηθῆσαι. Compare Xen. Mem. ii. 4, 6, τὰ μὲν (partim) συναναλίσκων, τὰ δὲ συμπράττων. At τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμμάχων παραλαβὼν there is, as Bauer observes, a Thucydidean brevity of expression for τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμμάχων παραλαβὼν (τινας) αὐτόθεν.

τὰ ἄλλα ξυγκαθίστη περὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν] 'co-operated in the other measures for putting the affairs of the confederacy on a secure footing.' Compare iv. 107, ξυγκαθίστη ταῦτα. Of διαπορευόμενος Πελοπόννησον the sense is, 'traversing Peloponnesus,' 'going up and down in all directions,' as in Xen. Anab. iii. 3, 3, διαπ. τὴν χώραν. With the expression τεῖχη καθεῖναι ἐς θάλασσαν, 'to carry down (dimittere) walls to the sea-coast,' compare another supra iv. 103, καθεῖτο τείχη. The purpose of the thing (related also in Plut. Alcib. 15.) was, by connecting the city with its port, as Nisæa was with Megara, to bring the former into connexion with any Athenian force that came by sea. On the antiquity and present state of Patræ, see Colonel Leake's Morea, vol. ii. p. 123—148.

ἕτερον] Here must be supplied, from the context, τεῖχος; though in what sense, is the question. Smith, Poppo, and Bp. Thirlwall understand by it munitionem, a fort; while Portus and Hobbes explain it to mean wall: what is doubtless the true sense; for as τεῖχος must be supplied from τείχη preceding, so also ἕτερον cannot but limit τεῖχος to the same sense as that which the word had borne before. In justification of my remark in Translation, (impugned, I find, by Poppo,)—namely, that 'hence it is clear that Rhium was not built close to the sea,'—I would observe that there is every probability that the castle of Rhium (then, doubtless, in existence, and not needing to be built by Alcibiades,) was even then at some distance from the sea; for the present inner castle, as appears from the description of Col. Leake, (Morea, vol. ii. 148.) occupied the very site of the ancient castle of Rhium, and is 250 yards from the sea; a broad level being thus interposed between the shore and the outer wall, where boats might land and escalade the fortress. And although the sea may have gradually retreated, yet it is probable that even in the time of Alcibiades there was a sufficiently broad space between the shore and the walls of the fortress to allow of an attack by escalade; to prevent which, and to bring this important stronghold into complete communication with an Athenian naval force, was one purpose of Alcibiades's project. The chief one was doubtless to command the entrance to the gulf of Corinth, of which the castle of Rhium would form the key, (as the castles of Gibraltar and Ceute to the Mediterranean,) and thus obstruct the commerce of Corinth, Sicyon, &c. Only one wall was proposed to be τειχίσαι ἐπὶ τῷ Ῥίῳ τῷ Ἀχαϊκῷ. Κορίνθιοι δὲ καὶ Σικυώνιοι, καὶ οἷς ἦν ἐν βλάβῃ τειχισθὲν, βοηθήσαντες διεκώλυσαν.

LIII. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους Ἐπιδαυρίοις καὶ Ἀργείοις πόλεμος ἐγένετο, προφάσει μὲν περὶ τοῦ θύματος τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος τοῦ ‡ Πυθαέως· ὃ, δέον ἀπαγαγεῖν, οὐκ ἀπέπεμπον ὑπὲρ † Βοταμίων built,—not, as in the case of Patræ, two; because, from the small size of this circular fort, one wall would be sufficient; though, of course, it would be a double wall, like that of circumvallation around Platæa, described at iii. 22, as made continuous, so as to form as it were one thick wall, having battlements both ways. And accordingly it is spoken of popularly and familiarly as a τεῖχος, in like manner as we occasionally apply the term a fortification to a fortified wall with double parapets connecting two fortified points.

οἷς ἦν ἐν βλάβῃ τειχισθὲν] Dobree would read, for ἦν ἐν, ἦν ἄν; assigning as a reason for this change, that unless ἄν be subjoined, there ought to be written τειχιζόμενον, as κτιζόμενον at i. 100, οἷς πολέμιον ἦν τὸ χωρίον—κτιζόμενον. Considering, however, that the fortification could not have been injurious to them while building, but only when built, τειχισθὲν is surely the proper word, and ought by all means to be retained. And supposing the ἂν to have originally had place here, how, it may be asked, came it to be omitted in all the MSS.? The word is, in effect, unnecessary; the sense being, 'and [those] to whom, when built, it had been injurious:' and so the Latin erat and our were. Comp. Xen. Mem. ii. 7, 10, εἰ μὲν τοίνυν αἰσχρόν τι ἔμελλον ἐργάσασθαι, θάνατον ἀντ' αὐτοῦ προαιρετέον ἦν. Examples also of this omission of ἂν occur in two passages of our author, i. 37 and 38, though only with εἰ. The present, however, falls under the head, touched on in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 508, obs. 1, of ἦν found in definite statements, not dependent on any supposition. Compare Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1209, ἐν ἴσῳ γὰρ ἦν τόδε, 'that had been on the square (right and just).' Xen. Anab. vii. 7, 40, αἰσχρὸν γὰρ ἦν τὰ μὲν ἐμὰ διαπεπρᾶχθαι, τὰ δὲ ἐκείνων περιϊδεῖν ἐμὲ κακῶς ἔχοντα (where Schneider causelessly conjectures ἂν ἦν). Soph. Œd. Tyr. 1368. Xen. Hist. ii. 3, 41. In all those instances, however, there is an implied supposition; which may also be the case here; though it is very faint, and the imperf. is used without ἂν in order to represent the result as certain. So viii. 86, ὡρμημένων τῶν ἐν Σάμῳ Ἀθηναίων πλεῖν ἐπὶ σφᾶς αὐτούς, ἐν ᾧ (scil. τῷ πλεῖν) σαφέστατα Ἰωνίαν καὶ Ἑλλήσποντον εὐθὺς εἶχον οἱ πολέμιοι, 'had (i. e. would have) got possession of;' where Schneider is for inserting ἄν. In ἐν βλάβῃ we have a phrase for the adj. βλαβεροί, as in the case of ἐν εὐμαρεῖ ἐστι used for εὐμαρές ἐστι, and other passages which may be seen in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 577. This I should scarcely have thought it necessary to point out, had not Dobree stumbled at the idiom, and, most uncritically, conjectured the true reading to be οἷς ἦν βλάβῃ.

Ch. LIII. 1. προφάσει] 'by way of excuse.' Comp. supra iii. 86, ἔπεμψαν τῆς οἰκειότητος προφάσει, and a passage of the New Testament, St. Matth. xxiii. 13, καὶ προφάσει μακρὰ προσευχόμενοι. For this we have the fuller expression ἐπὶ προφ. at iv. 80, and iv. 42, and occasionally elsewhere in the other Attic writers, both prose and verse. Hence no need is there to here read, for προφάσει, πρόφασιν; though that is found at v. 80, (but only as an apposition: see note there,) and in another passage infra vi. 33, πρόφασιν μὲν Αἰγεσταίων ξυμμαχίᾳ, τὸ δὲ ἀληθὲς, &c.

For vulg. Πυθέως I have, with Poppo, adopted the conjecture of Wessel. on Diod. Sic. xii. 78, Πυθαέως (supported as it is by a passage of Pausan. ii. 35 & 36. iii. 11); since the former, retained by Bekker, is quite indefensible. Goeller edits Πυθαιέως, from the conjecture of Valckn. (Epist. ad Roev. p. 74.) but that form and Πυθαιῶς proposed by Dobree are, I apprehend, of later Atticism.

δέον ἀπαγαγεῖν] cum oportuisset, 'though it behoved them to render or furnish.' Of this absolute use of δέον, for δεῆσαν, though rare, I have noted the following examples in Plato, p. 25, ἦν δέον ἡμᾶς ξυναγαγεῖν οὐ ξυνηγάγομεν, and 241, τότε δέον ἐκτίνειν—ἄλλος γεγονὼς λέληθε. Dio Cass. 387. 433. 673. The phrase ἀπάγειν θῦμα Abresch seems to have thought equivalent to ἀπάγειν θυσίαν, 'to offer sacrifice;' but here the term ἀπάγειν merely bears the sense 'to render,' deliver up any thing as due; a sense also found in a passage of the New Testament, Rom. xii. 7: and so δασμὸν ἀπάγειν in Xen.

Ἐπιδαύριοι—κυριώτατοι δὲ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἦσαν Ἀργεῖοι—ἐδόκει δὲ καὶ ἄνευ τῆς αἰτίας τὴν Ἐπίδαυρον τῷ τε Ἀλκιβιάδῃ καὶ τοῖς Ἀργείοις

Cyr. ii. 4, 12. iii. 1, 6, and φόρον ἀπάγειν in Aristoph. Ach. 643, and Vesp. 707, as also the phrase φόρον or δασμὸν ἀποδοῦναι. And the Epidaurians did not sacrifice, but only render up, the animal to the Argives, for sacrifice to the god. Here the ἀπο has reference, not, as Poppo imagines, to the fulness of the payment made, but to its being made out of something else, as a certain proportion of the whole, by the same allusion as that which subsists in the word δασμὸς, which signifies, 'rendered as an acknowledgment of right to the whole.' In ἀπέπεμπον, just after, the ἀπο simply serves to recognise the payment being made as due from the Epidaurians. Finally, so in a passage of the Old Testament, Numb. xviii. 9, we have, 'This shall be thine of the most holy things [reserved] from the fire,' namely, as a δασμὸς therefrom, of which part was burned with fire, and the residue from the fire was reserved, and rendered to the Levites. Thus, in the present instance, this θῦμα was a sort of quit-rent paid from the Epidaurians to the Argives, (who had the management of the temple of Apollo Pythæus at Argos,) on the ground of something held, as it were, from the god. Argos (as observes Müller, Dor. i. 153.) had enjoyed, as the head of a confederacy of the adjoining states, both a political and religious supremacy,—of which the latter (as Dr. Arnold points out) survived the former, and hence the Argives still retained the management of the temple of Apollo Pythæus, to whom offerings were due from the several states of the confederacy, just as they were sent by the several states of Latium to the common temple of Jupiter Latiarius on the Alban mount. It is, however, impossible to speak with any certainty on this subject without knowing the ground of the claim, which, though especially adverted to in the next words, ὑπὲρ Βοταμίων, must, from our imperfect acquaintance with ancient customs, be necessarily obscure;—an obscurity, it would seem, increased by corruption of the text; for no other than inexplicable is the common reading Βοταμίων, which, while retained by Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold, has been by Haack and Poppo altered to παραποταμίων, from the conjecture of Wesseling. In my smaller edition I retained vulg. Βοταμίων, though I held it to be corrupt, and proposed to read, instead of it, Βοτανίων. This, however, is objectionable on the ground of yielding a sense little suitable. Several objections, too, may be urged against παραποταμίων, which, though singly, not very weighty, yet together must forbid its reception. Strong is the current of internal evidence against it; for how, it may be asked, could παρα in this case have been omitted? Moreover, the sense yielded by that reading, even that assigned to it by Poppo, 'river-side districts,' is not sufficiently definite for an appellative. It is true, the Greeks were often engaged in disputes about boundaries, sometimes fixed by rivers or rivulets; and sometimes, when the limit was not quite fixed, a river-side tract became debateable. And a passage is adduced by Poppo from Diod. Sic. xii. 82, where a territory of that kind is called ἡ παραποταμία, not γῆ ἀμφισβητήσιμος. This debateable strip of land is ingeniously fixed by Poppo as follows: 'Prope Lessam, ubi fines agrorum Epidauriorum et Argivorum fuisse ex Paus. ii. 26, 1, novimus, in Mülleri tabula Peloponnesi duo rivuli conspiciuntur; alter in Argolicum sinum influens, qui agros illos ab hac parte disterminat; alter prope ipsam urbem Epidaurum in Saronicum.' Thus the victim was a sort of quit-rent due to the Argives for the occupation of the strip of land in question: and of such a sort of quit-rent paid, for a valuable property, we had an example supra ch. 31. It cannot be doubted but that the custom then prevailed for debateable portions of border land to be adjudged to neither of the two parties claiming, but permitted to be occupied for pasturage (which would not bring together much population) on agreement of certain rent to be applied to some public benefit common to both, whether civil or religious, though generally the latter. Yet such debateable border lands would seem, in the nature of the thing, to have been scarcely ever on the side of rivers, since in such a case that would imply the possession of a strip of land on the other side. In some cases, however, the strip in question being considered debateable, it was agreed by both countries to belong to neither, but to be occupied (for pasturage) by one of the two, (generally the one on its own side of the river,) at a certain rent to be paid for a purpose common to both. Could we, therefore, regard παραποταμίων προσλαβεῖν, ἣν δύνωνται, τῆς τε Κορίνθου ἕνεκα ἡσυχίας, καὶ ἐκ τῆς Αἰγίνης βραχυτέραν ἔσεσθαι τὴν βοήθειαν, ἢ Σκύλλαιον περιπλεῖν, τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις. παρεσκευάζοντο οὖν οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ὡς αὐτοὶ ἐς τὴν Ἐπίδαυρον διὰ τοῦ θύματος τὴν ἔσπραξιν ἐσβαλοῦντες. LIV. Ἐξεστράτευσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι κατὰ τοὺς αὐτοὺς as the true reading, it might be explained in this way. But as no authority for it exists, and internal evidence is against it, I have chosen still to retain vulg. Βοταμίων,—not, however, because I think, with Arnold, that 'it may have some meaning peculiar and technical, of which we are wholly ignorant,' (for that is taking too much for granted,) but because it seems better to retain the above, however corrupt, until some MSS. hitherto uncollated present some clue to the true reading. Meanwhile I venture to propose the following conjecture, Βοτανόμων, 'the Beeve-pastures,' a certain district so called. Now the article in this case would not be requisite, because βουνόμον, in the neuter, would be a noun, and when used as an appellative, would reject it. The term βουνόμος, 'bobus pascendis accommodatus,' occurs in Soph. El. 180, ὁ τὰν Κρίσαν Βούνομον ἔχων ἀκτάν. And so Hesych. βουνομαί· ἑλώδεις λέγονται: meaning that 'marsh lands are called βουνομαί, as fitted to fatten bullocks.' Accordingly βοτανόμος is similar to βουνόμος, and we may compare Αἰγονόμος, Οἰονόμος, Μηλονόμος, Ἱπποσόμος, &c. Finally, this reading derives strong confirmation from the reading of three MSS., Βοταμένων; for we can scarcely doubt that the scribes had Βοτανόμων in their originals; and probably so had Valla, while rendering pascuis, which word gives a tolerable sense, though not the whole sense of Βοτανόμων.

The words following, κυριώτατοι δὲ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἦσαν Ἀργεῖοι, are parenthetical; for the apodosis to προφάσει μὲν is at ἐδόκει δέ; which, however, is not a regular apodosis, namely, one of statement as well as phrase. That would have required τῷ δὲ ἀληθεῖ or τὸ δὲ ἀληθὲς, as at vi. 33, πρόφασιν μὲν—τὸ δὲ ἀληθὲς, &c. See note on ch. 52 & 80. However, there is, properly speaking, no apodosis. With this expression κυριώτατοι τοῦ ἱεροῦ, 'were entirely masters of the temple,' 'had complete power over it,' compare Xen. Laced. x. 2, θεὶς τοὺς γέροντας κυρίους τοῦ ἀγῶνος, and Cyr. viii. 5, 11, τοὺς γεραιτέρους—οἵπερ τῶν μεγίστων κύριοί εἰσι, and Laced. xiii. 10, τούτου μὲν κύριος βασιλεύς.

ἐδόκει δὲ καὶ ἄνευ τῆς αἰτίας, &c.] In the use of ἐδόκει there is, as Bauer remarks, a dilogia; the term first bearing the sense placebat, and then, as taken with βραχυτέραν ἔσεσθαι, a little after, videbatur. Poppo compares a similar use in Tacit. Hist. ii. 7, init., where from placuit is to be fetched putabant. In ἄνευ τῆς αἰτίας the article has the force of the pronoun demonstrative, as at ii. 7; the sense being, 'independently of this ground of complaint or charge of wrong;' meaning the charge in question. Here the mild term αἰτία is used in preference to a stronger. Compare Soph. Trach. 361, ἔγκλημα μικρὸν αἰτίαν θ' ἑτοιμάσας, ἐπιστρατεύει πατρίδα τὴν ταύτης. Epidaurus had been until of late a branch of the ancient Argolis, and, though now dismembered, might claim to be regarded as friendly. The distinction between αἰτία and a stronger term is plain from i. 69, αἰτία μὲν γὰρ φίλων ἀνδρῶν ἐστὶν ἁμαρτανόντων, κατηγορία δὲ ἐχθρῶν ἀδικησάντων.

τῆς Κορίνθου ἕνεκα ἡσυχίας] Not meaning, according to the explanation offered by Arnold and approved by Poppo, 'to insure the neutrality of Corinth;' but, 'for the sake of [producing] quietness on the part of Corinth,' that there might be no breach of the peace on that side; since Corinth would, as having her territory open to attack on the side of Epidaurus, be slow to engage in hostilities with Argos and Athens: where ἡσυχία is equivalent to ἡσυχάζειν, 'to keep quiet,' engage in no hostilities, ἡσυχίαν ἄγειν. See note on iii. 71, 1. In βραχυτέραν ἔσεσθαι τὴν βοήθειαν we have a brief form of expression, importing that the passage by which assistance would come, would be shorter.

CH. LIV. 1. ἐξεστράτευσαν] Render, 'had gone on an expedition;' namely, about the very time when the Argives made, or were just going to make, their irruption into Epidaurus. The object of the expedition was doubtless to make a diversion in favour of Epidaurus; the Lacedæmonians having, it seems, obtained intelligence of the design of the Argives to invade Epidaurus.

χρόνους πανδημεὶ ἐς Λεῦκτρα τῆς ἑαυτῶν μεθορίας πρὸς τὸ Λύκαιον, Ἄγιδος τοῦ Ἀρχιδάμου βασιλέως ἡγουμένου· ἤδει δὲ οὐδεὶς ὅποι στρατεύουσιν, οὐδὲ αἱ πόλεις ἐξ ὧν ἐπέμφθησαν. 2. ὡς δ' αὐτοῖς τὰ διαβατήρια θυομένοις οὐ προὐχώρει, αὐτοί τε ἀπῆλθον ἐπ' οἴκου καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις περιήγγειλαν μετὰ τὸν μέλλοντα, (Καρνεῖος δ' ἦν μὴν, ἱερομήνια Δωριεῦσι,) παρασκευάζεσθαι ὡς στρατευσομένους. 3. Ἀργεῖοι δ', ἀναχωρησάντων αὐτῶν, τοῦ πρὸ τοῦ Καρνείου μηνὸς ἐξελθόντες τετράδι φθίνοντος, καὶ ἄγοντες τὴν ἡμέραν ταύτην, Λεῦκτρα] On the site of this city the reader is referred to Col. Leake's Morea, vol. ii. p. 322, who thinks 'it should be sought for south of Londára, towards the sources of the Gatheatas, and the passage which leads from the head of its valley across the Taygetic range, into the vale of the Eurotas.' Yet thus the plain would not have been, as Thucydides here describes it, τῆς ἑαυτῶν μεθορίας. And we are not permitted here to take the term in a qualified sense, since the διαβατήρια, or border-passing sacrifices, just afterwards mentioned, were never offered up except at the very borders. Hence I am still of opinion, as formerly, that the site of Leuctra is at the present Palæo-Chorio, about two miles south-west from Londára.

In πρὸς τὸ Λυκαῖον the prep. πρὸς bears the sense towards, denoting direction to any object as the end of action. They proceeded to Leuctra towards Lycæum as their object, whither they were bound. Lycæum was a steep mountain in the south-west corner of Arcadia, mentioned by Strabo, corresponding to the present Mount Dhioforte, a lofty mountain with a peaked summit, about thirteen miles from Leuctra, and affording a very commanding position to take up, in order, it should seem, to overawe the Arcadian states, and be ready to attack Argolis, if necessary, from which they were only about thirty miles distant.

ἤδει δὲ οὐδεὶς ὅποι στρατεύουσιν] The kings had, among their other prerogatives, (detailed in Herodot. vi. 56—59.) not only the power of carrying war to whatever quarter they chose, and leading the army back when they chose, but also that of keeping to themselves the destination of any expedition they might set on foot.

αἱ πόλεις] Meaning both the allied or subject states, and also, it is probable, those of the Periœci.

2. ὡς τὰ διαβατήρια θυομένοις οὐ προὐχώρει] 'since the sacrifices offered before crossing the border did not prove favourable,' οὐ καλὰ ἐφαίνετο, as the Scholiast explains. In the words of the next chapter, οὐδ' ἐνταῦθα τὰ διαβατήρια αὐτοῖς ἐγένετο, and at ch. 116, ὡς αὐτοῖς τὰ διαβατήρια ἱερὰ οὐκ ἐγένετο, we have the full form of expression, for the present incomplete one. Compare Xen. Anab. vi. 4, 21, ἴσως ἂν τὰ ἱερὰ μᾶλλον προχωροίη ἡμῖν. Xenophon also has the expression σωτήρια θύειν, and at Anab. vi. 5, 2, ἐθύετο ἐπεξόδια, where Schneider, from not bearing in mind the idiom in question, has altered ἐπεξόδια into ἐπ' ἐξόδῳ, a mere gloss. On the subject of these border-passing sacrifices, see Valckn. on Herodot. vii. 132, and Wachsm. Ant. Gr. vol. ii. 1, p. 398, 126.

Καρνεῖος δ' ἦν μὴν, ἱερομήνια Δωριεῦσι] This Doric month, answering to the Attic Μεταγειτνίων (see Plut. Nic. 28.) and our July and August, was so called, as consisting chiefly of the Καρνεῖα or holy-days sacred to Apollo: on which subject Gottleb. refers to Meurs. on Callim. Hym. ad Apoll. p. 59. See also Eurip. Alc. 60. Demetr. Saps. ap. Athen. p. 141, E. and F. This was regarded as a sort of holyday month, because almost wholly composed of these and other holydays; the intervals being so few and brief, that the whole was regarded as sacred to Apollo, so that no war could lawfully be commenced during that period; though, if it had been already commenced, it might be carried on, at least on such days as were not holy.

3. καὶ ἄγοντες—καὶ ἐδήουν] Of this too briefly worded and obscurely expressed sentence, the meaning is best traced by Goeller as follows: 'sed agmen ducentes die quarto a fine Hecatombei, tum hoc die tum per omne tempus usque ad initium Carneorum, i. e. per decem fere dies, Epidauriorum agrum incursione vastabant.' He adds, that throughout the Carneian holydays the Argives abandoned warfare, since those days were sacred to all the Dorians.

πάντα τὸν χρόνον ἐσέβαλλον ἐς τὴν Ἐπιδαυρίαν καὶ ἐδήουν. 4. Ἐπιδαύριοι δὲ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐπεκαλοῦντο· ὧν τινες οἱ μὲν τὸν μῆνα προὐφασίσαντο, οἱ δὲ καὶ ἐς μεθορίαν τῆς Ἐπιδαυρίας ἐλθόντες, ἡσύχαζον. LV. Καὶ καθ' ὃν χρόνον ἐν τῇ Ἐπιδαύρῳ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ἦσαν, ἐς Μαντίνειαν πρεσβεῖαι ἀπὸ τῶν πόλεων ξυνῆλθον, Ἀθηναίων παρακαλεσάντων. καὶ, γιγνομένων λόγων, Εὐφαμίδας ὁ Κορίνθιος οὐκ ἔφη τοὺς λόγους τοῖς ἔργοις ὁμολογεῖν· σφεῖς μὲν γὰρ περὶ εἰρήνης ξυγκαθῆσθαι, τοὺς δ' Ἐπιδαυρίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους καὶ τοὺς Ἀρ-

For vulg. ἐσέβαλον I have, with Poppo and Goeller, edited, from three MSS., ἐσέβαλλον: for the aorist cannot here well be admitted; while the imperf. is highly suitable, as expressing the continuance of the action during that whole period.

4. ὧν τινες—ἡσύχαζον] Meaning, 'of whom some, making the sacred month a pretext, remained inactive; while others, having advanced even to the borders of Epidaurus, kept quiet [remaining where they were].' The former, it seems, were allies situated the furthest off, and they excused themselves by saying that there would not be time for them to reach the scene of action before the sacred month commenced: the latter were allies nearer at hand, but who, it seems, did not venture to enter Epidauria until the other allies came up. The first-mentioned persons, when called on for aid, kept still and made no movement; the others, after moving, kept still, remained inactive, attempting nothing against the enemy. Of ἡσυχάζειν in this latter use, (constituting something of a diluvia,) examples occur supra iii. 71, 2, ἡσυχάζοντες, and vii. 11, ἡσυχάζομεν. Dr. Arnold, indeed, attributes their ἡσυχία to a superstitious motive,—as if they could not perform the διαβατήρια successfully. This view, however, merely proceeds on the supposition, ingeniously propounded by him, that the sacredness of the month Carneius extended to the last three days of the preceding month; or that some other great festival took place on those days. But that is wholly devoid of proof. And moreover, if those three days were likewise sacred, so that a Dorian army could not cross its own frontiers during them, why, it may be asked, would the near-at-hand allies, as the Corinthian and Phliasian ones, have advanced to the borders, when they could not pass them? Again, the above view would compel us to regard τὴν ἡμέραν ταύτην πάντα τὸν χρόνον as equivalent to ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν ταύτην; which would involve no little harshness; for why, it may be asked, should not our author have so written, if such was his meaning? It may be urged, too, that Epidauria is so contiguous to Argolis, as to preclude the idea of a long day's march for the Argive forces who made the irruption into Epidaurus.

CH. LV. 1. οὐκ ἔφη τοὺς—ὁμολογεῖν] 'denied that their works agreed with their words.' This idiom οὐ φάναι, negare, is found in the best Attic writers, especially Xenophon. As respects the sentiment here expressed, of 'words agreeing with works,' it has, says Abresch, 'been imitated by various writers.' Yet in the case of thoughts so little recondite, imitation is surely out of the question, and we may rather suppose that this was a mode of speaking adopted from the schools of philosophy, wherein actions were held (figuratively) to speak as well as words. Accordingly the sense, literally expressed, will be, that 'their actions did not speak the same language with their words.' This use of ὁμολογεῖν to denote the speaking the same words or language as another, though rare, is no other than the primary and original force, and is found in the somewhat further removed one congruere, consentire, in Hdot. i. 142, αὗται δὲ αἱ πόλιες τῇσι πρότερον λεχθείσῃσι ὁμολογέουσι κατὰ γλῶσσαν οὐδέν, and ii. 18. vi. 54. The Latin writers similarly employ the term congruere, and sometimes (which is more to the purpose here) concinere, equivalent to συμφωνεῖν, as in Cic. de Nat. D. i. 7, re concinere cum aliquo, verbis discrepare: in which case there is a musical metaphor, taken from singing in tune, or rather in time, while part-singing. So we say, by a similar metaphor, to chime in with, i. e. to answer or correspond to.

In σφεῖς μὲν—ξυγκαθῆσθαι. τοὺς δ' Ἐπιδαυρίους—ἀντιτετάχθαι we have a forcible mode of pointing out the inconsistency of conduct in states professing to wish for peace. Ξυγκαθῆσθαι is a customary term to denote sitting in common council, for the purpose of deliberating on any matter, as in Xen. Anab. v. 7, 13, and γείους μεθ' ὅπλων ἀντιτετάχθαι· διαλῦσαι οὖν πρῶτον χρῆναι ‡ ἀφ' ἑκατέρων ἐλθόντας τὰ στρατόπεδα, καὶ οὕτω πάλιν λέγειν περὶ τῆς εἰρήνης. 2. καὶ πεισθέντες ᾤχοντο, καὶ τοὺς Ἀργείους ἀπήγαγον ἐκ τῆς Ἐπιδαυρίας. ὕστερον δὲ ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ ξυνελθόντες, οὐδ' ὡς ἐδυνήθησαν ξυμβῆναι· ἀλλ' οἱ Ἀργεῖοι πάλιν ἐς τὴν Ἐπιδαυρίαν ἐσέβαλλον καὶ ἐδῄουν. 3. ἐξεστράτευσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐς Καρύας· καὶ ὡς οὐδ' ἐνταῦθα τὰ διαβατήρια αὐτοῖς ἐγένετο, ἐπανεχώρησαν. 4. Ἀργεῖοι δὲ, τεμόντες τῆς Ἐπιδαυρίας ὡς τὸ τρίτον μέρος, ἀπῆλθον ἐπ' οἶκου. καὶ Ἀθηναίων αὐτοῖς χίλιοι ἐβοήθησαν ὁπλῖται, καὶ Ἀλκιβιάδης στρατηγός· πυθόμενοι [δὲ] τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ἐξεστρατεῦσθαι· καὶ ὡς οὐδὲν ἔτι αὐτῶν ἔδει, ἀπῆλθον. καὶ τὸ θέρος οὕτω διῆλθεν.

LVI. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος Λακεδαιμόνιοι, λαθόντες Ἀθηναίους, φρουρούς τε τριακοσίους καὶ Ἀγησιππίδαν ἄρχοντα κατὰ θάλασσαν ἐς Ἐπίδαυρον ἐσέπεμψαν. 2. Ἀργεῖοι δ' ἐλθόντες παρ' Ἀθηναίους ἐπεκάλουν ὅτι, γεγραμμένον ἐν ταῖς σπονδαῖς 'διὰ τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἑκάστους μὴ ἐᾷν πολεμίους διϊέναι,' ἐάσειαν κατὰ θάλασσαν

Hist. ii. 4, 14, ξυγκ. ἐν τῷ ξυνεδρίῳ, and vii. 3, 5. Such, too, seems to be the import of consido in Ov. Met. xiii. 1, 'Consedere duces et vulgi stante coronâ.' Compare also Xen. Anab. v. 7, 13, ἡμεῖς οἱ στρατηγοὶ—συγκαθήμενοι. There may, however, be a tacit opposition between the one party sitting, doing nothing but talking; the other acting, in deeds of mutual hostility. So in Cic. Ep. ad Attic. ii. 4, we have, 'in otio consederit,' and in Eurip. Bacch. 765, Ἐκφέρετέ μοι δεῦρ' ὅπλα· σὺ δὲ παῦσαι λέγων.

ἀφ' ἑκατέρων, &c.] For ἀφ', Poppo and Goeller edit, from two MSS., ἐφ'; but on grounds so slender, that I have chosen, with Haack, Dobree, and Bekker, to retain the common reading: and I agree with Dobree, that 'the sense intended is, that some from both parties should first go and part the two contending armies,'—namely, the Argives and the Epidaurians, including their allies the Corinthians, &c. Of course ἄνδρας is here, as often, to be understood. According to the reading ἐφ', a very harsh construction would arise, and a very forced sense be produced. As to the objection urged by Goeller to ἀφ', as understood in the above sense,—namely, that 'if Thucydides so spoke, he spoke parum definitè, non more suo,' it is of no force; for nothing is more common in our author than the use of such a condensed form of expression as the present, by which two phrases are blended into one; and by which, of course, there is occasioned a seeming want of definiteness. Supposing, however, ἐφ' to be the true reading, the preposition may be understood to mean, 'of both [parties] appointed on both sides,' as in the phrase ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, &c.

3. Καρύας] A town probably so named from the abundance of καρύαι or walnut-trees about it. See Xen. Hist. v. 25, 27. Paus. ii. 38. iii. 10. Polyb. xvi. 37. Livy, xxxiv. 26; from which writers we learn that the place was sacred to Diana (who had there a splendid temple) and the Nymphs. There was also a statue of Diana in an open space, where the Lacedæmonian virgins every year held a dance peculiar to the country, and the dances were called Caryatides, whence the use of the term in ancient architecture. The above authorities coincide in placing the town somewhere between Sellasia and the Tegeatic frontier. Probably its situation was, as Col. Leake supposes, nearer to the latter than the former, —perhaps not far from the present khan of Krevata. The town was on the borders, and therefore a fit place to celebrate the border-sacrifices.

At τὰ διαβατήρια αὐτοῖς ἐγένετο supply καλὰ, and see note supra ch. 53.

4. ἐξεστρατεῦσθαι] Abresch, Bredow, Haack, and Arnold take the sense to be, 'had left the field,' ended their expedition, and were returned home.

παραπλεῦσαι· καὶ εἰ μὴ κἀκεῖνοι ἐς Πύλον κομοῦσιν ἐπὶ Λακεδαιμονίους τοὺς Μεσσηνίους καὶ Εἵλωτας, ἀδικήσεσθαι αὐτοί. 3. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ, Ἀλκιβιάδου πείσαντος, τῇ μὲν Λακωνικῇ στήλῃ ὑπέγραψαν, ὅτι 'οὐκ ἐνέμειναν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τοῖς ὅρκοις,' ἐς δὲ Πύλον ἐκόμισαν τοὺς ἐκ Κρανίων Εἵλωτας λῃΐζεσθαι· τὰ δ' ἄλλα ἡσύχαζον. 4. τὸν δὲ χειμῶνα τοῦτον πολεμούντων Ἀργείων καὶ Ἐπιδαυρίων, μάχη μὲν οὐδεμία ἐγένετο ἐκ παρασκευῆς, ἐνέδραι δὲ καὶ καταδρομαὶ, ἐν αἷς ὡς τύχοιεν ἑκατέρων τινὲς διεφθείροντο. 5. καὶ τελευτῶντος τοῦ χειμῶνος, πρὸς ἔαρ ἤδη, κλίμακας ἔχοντες οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ἦλθον ἐπὶ τὴν Ἐπίδαυρον, ὡς ἐρήμου οὔσης διὰ τὸν πόλεμον, βίᾳ αἱρήσοντες· καὶ ἄπρακτοι ἀπῆλθον. καὶ ὁ χειμὼν ἐτελεύτα, καὶ τρίτον καὶ δέκατον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα.

LVII. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους μεσοῦντος Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ὡς αὐτοῖς οἵ τε Ἐπιδαύριοι, ξύμμαχοι ὄντες, ἐταλαιπώρουν, καὶ τἆλλα ἐν τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ τὰ μὲν ἀφεστήκει, τὰ δ' οὐ καλῶς εἶχε, νομίσαντες, εἰ μὴ προκαταλήψονται ἐν τάχει, ἐπὶ πλέον χωρήσεσθαι αὐτὰ, ἐστράτευον αὐτοὶ καὶ οἱ Εἵλωτες πανδημεὶ ἐπ' Ἄργος, ἡγεῖτο δὲ Ἄγις ὁ Ἀρχιδάμου Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλεύς. 2. ξυνεστράτευον δ' αὐτοῖς Τεγεᾶται καὶ ὅσοι ἄλλοι Ἀρκάδων Λακεδαιμονίοις ξύμμαχοι ἦσαν. οἱ δ' ἐκ τῆς ἄλλης Πελοποννήσου ξύμμαχοι καὶ οἱ ἔξωθεν ἐς Φλιοῦντα ξυνελέγοντο, Βοιωτοὶ μὲν πεντακισχίλιοι ὁπλῖται, καὶ τοσοῦτοι ψιλοὶ, καὶ ἱππῆς πεντακόσιοι, καὶ ἄμιπποι ἴσοι, Κορίνθιοι δὲ δισχίλιοι ὁπλῖται, οἱ δ' ἄλλοι ὡς ἕκαστοι, Φλιάσιοι δὲ πανστρατιᾷ, ὅτι ἐν τῇ ἐκείνων ἦν τὸ στράτευμα.

5. τελευτῶντος τοῦ χειμῶνος, πρὸς ἔαρ ἤδη] Compare supra ch. 39, and intra 81. Ὡς ἐρήμου οὔσης, scil. ἀνθρώπων.

Ch. LVII. 1. οὐ καλῶς εἶχε] An elegant litotes for κακῶς εἶχε, 'were ill-disposed towards them.' Ἐπὶ πλέον χωρήσεσθαι αὐτὰ, sc. τὰ κακὰ, (to be supplied from the preceding,) 'that the evils would proceed to a greater height.' Compare 2 Tim. ii. 16, ἐπὶ πλεῖον προκόψουσιν ἀσεβείας.

2. Φλιοῦντα] A city, as we learn from Pausanias, abounding in magnificent temples and other public edifices attesting its wealth, which arose from the exuberant fertility of its territory, a rich valley (probably in former times a lake) of about eight miles square, abounding in corn, wine, and oil, and hence called by Homer ἐρατεινή. Indeed its very appellation attests this, the name being rightly derived by Steph. Byz. from φλίω or φλέω, 'to flow, to be abundant;' whence φλεών, 'an abundance of fruits.' So in a passage of the Old Testament, Jerem. xlix. 4, we have, 'Wherefore gloriest thou in thy flowing valley?' And similarly Canaan is in Scripture described as a 'land that floweth with milk and honey.' Such, too, is the sense borne by fluo in Latin; though only as said of the fruits, as vines and olives. And similarly in a passage of Columella, iii. 2, we have, 'Græculæ vites minus fluunt,' and, a little before, 'vitis cujus gustus pretiosus fluit:' with which compare a parallel expression of Beaumont and Fletcher, False One, act iii. scene 2, 'shall bless the land by my rich flow.' In fact, φλιοὺς (contr. from φλιοεῖς) was doubtless early in use as an adjective in the sense flowing, equivalent to φλιάσιος, found in the name of one of the Lacedæmonian months, so called from the fruits of the earth being then most abundant. The site of Phlius has been fixed by Col. Leake at the present Polyfengo, where there are many remains of ancient buildings, the walls of the city proper and of the acropolis being yet in most parts traceable.

LVIII. Ἀργεῖοι δὲ, προαισθόμενοι τό τε πρῶτον τὴν παρασκευὴν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἐς τὸν Φλιοῦντα, βουλόμενοι τοῖς ἄλλοις προσμῖξαι, ἐχώρουν, τότε δὴ ἐξεστράτευσαν καὶ αὐτοί. ἐβοήθησαν δ' αὐτοῖς καὶ Μαντινῆς, ἔχοντες τοὺς σφετέρους ξυμμάχους, καὶ Ἠλείων τρισχίλιοι ὁπλῖται. 2. καὶ προϊόντες ἀπαντῶσι τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐν Μεθυδρίῳ τῆς Ἀρκαδίας. καὶ καταλαμβάνουσιν ἑκάτεροι λόφον· καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀργεῖοι ὡς μεμονωμένοις τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις παρεσκευάζοντο μάχεσθαι, ὁ δὲ Ἄγις, τῆς νυκτὸς ἀναστήσας τὸν στρατὸν, καὶ λαθὼν, ἐπορεύετο ἐς Φλιοῦντα παρὰ τοὺς ἄλλους ξυμμάχους. 3. καὶ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι, αἰσθόμενοι, ἅμα ἕῳ ἐχώρουν, πρῶτον μὲν ἐς Ἄργος, ἔπειτα, ᾗ προσεδέχοντο μετὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους καταβήσεσθαι, τὴν κατὰ Νεμέαν ὁδόν. 4. Ἄγις δὲ ταύτην μὲν, ἣν προσεδέχοντο, οὐκ ἐτράπετο· παραγγείλας δὲ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀρκάσι καὶ Ἐπιδαυρίοις ἄλλην ἐχώρησε χαλεπὴν, καὶ κατέβη ἐς τὸ Ἀργείων πεδίον· καὶ Κορίνθιοι καὶ Πελληνῆς

Ch. LVIII. 2. Μεθυδρίῳ τῆς Ἀρκαδίας] In my note in Eng. Transl. I have shown from a passage of Pausan. vii. 36, that the site of this important city of Arcadia should be fixed nearly at the confluence of the river Tragus and a rivulet; an allusion to which situation may be found in the name itself, which signifies 'between the borders' (like μετὰ χερσὶν, often occurring in Homer); similarly as Amphipolis derived its name from its being almost encircled by the river Strymon. Thus it is said by Pausanias, ὠνομάσθη μὲν δὴ Μεθύδριον ὅτι κολωνός ἐστιν ὑψηλὸς Μαλοιτᾶ τε ποταμοῦ καὶ Μυλάοντος. Compare the term Μεθυδριὰς γύμφη in Steph. Thes. This site between the forks of a river was a favourite one in ancient times, and is alluded to in the corresponding Latin, confluentes, &c. The angle thus formed was by our British ancestors denominated a Kirn or Horn, as in the case of the English towns Cirencester, Horncastle, &c. In this view of the site of the place (which now bears the name Palatia), Colonel Leake and Müller, I find, entirely coincide. The latter, however, need not have stumbled at the expression in the above passage, κολωνὸς ὑψηλὸς, and endeavoured to justify it from the site being considerably above the level of the sea. It is sufficient to say that all terms denoting size are to be understood comparatively and with modification: and here the term κολωνὸς, of course, forbids us to think of a mountain, suggesting merely the idea of a little round hill such as our ancestors called a knoll. This κολωνὸς was probably at the confluence of the two rivers, and purely the work of art. Thus in Herodot. iv. 92, κολωνὸς denotes tumulus manu factus.

2. λαθὼν] 'having concealed [his decampment],' 'having silently decamped.' As the position taken up by the Argives and their allies was meant to prevent the junction of the Lacedæmonians with their northern allies at Phlius; so the movement now made by the Argives and their allies was one from Argos, for the defence of their territory, which they saw would now be invaded by the combined forces of Lacedæmon and her allies. This invasion they expected would take place by the road leading from Nemea into the plain of Argos. They therefore, after having reached the plain of Argos, proceeded to take up a position to block up that road, the only way (as Mitford observes) by which a numerous army could well pass the mountains dividing Argolis from Phliasia and Corinthia.

4. We have now an account given of the able generalship by which Agis rendered the enemy's measures ineffectual. His plan was to distract the enemy's attention by dividing his forces into three divisions, and invading their territory at three separate points. He himself with one division penetrated by a pass over Mount Lyceum into the Argive plain; another took the way by Nemea; and the third went by a steep road and came into the plain from the north. By the way designated as τὴν κατὰ Νεμέαν, Müller καὶ Φλιάσιοι ὄρθιον ἑτέραν ἐπορεύοντο· τοῖς δὲ Βοιωτοῖς καὶ Μεγαρεῦσι καὶ Σικυωνίοις εἴρητο τὴν ἐπὶ Νεμέας ὁδὸν καταβαίνειν, ᾗ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι καθῆντο, ὅπως, εἰ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ἐπὶ σφᾶς ἰόντες ἐς τὸ πεδίον βοηθοῖεν, ἐφεπόμενοι τοῖς ἵπποις χρῷντο. 5. καὶ ὁ μὲν, οὕτω διατάξας, καὶ ἐσβαλὼν ἐς τὸ πεδίον, ἐδῄου Σάμινθόν τε καὶ ἄλλα.

LIX. Οἱ δὲ Ἀργεῖοι, γνόντες, ἐβοήθουν ἡμέρας ἤδη ἐκ τῆς Νεμέας, καὶ περιτυχόντες τῷ Φλιασίων καὶ Κορινθίων στρατοπέδῳ, τῶν μὲν Φλιασίων ὀλίγους ἀπέκτειναν, ὑπὸ δὲ τῶν Κορινθίων αὐτοὶ οὐ πολλῷ πλείους διεφθάρησαν. 2. καὶ οἱ Βοιωτοὶ καὶ οἱ Μεγαρῆς καὶ οἱ Σικυώνιοι ἐχώρουν, ὥσπερ εἴρητο αὐτοῖς, ἐπὶ τῆς Νεμέας, καὶ τοὺς Ἀργείους οὐκέτι κατέλαβον· ἀλλὰ καταβάντες, ὡς ἑώρων τὰ ἑαυτῶν δῃούμενα, ἐς μάχην παρετάσσοντο. ἀντιπαρεσκευάζοντο δὲ καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι. 3. ἐν μέσῳ δὲ ἀπειλημμένοι ἦσαν οἱ Ἀργεῖοι· ἐκ μὲν γὰρ τοῦ πεδίου οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι εἶργον τῆς πόλεως καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτῶν, καθύπερθε δὲ Κορίνθιοι καὶ Φλιάσιοι καὶ Πελληνῆς, τὸ δὲ πρὸς Νεμέας Βοιωτοὶ καὶ Σικυώνιοι καὶ Μεγαρῆς. ἵπποι δὲ αὐτοῖς οὐ παρῆσαν· οὐ γάρ πω οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, μόνοι τῶν ξυμμάχων, ἦκον. 4. τὸ μὲν οὖν πλῆθος τῶν Ἀργείων καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων οὐχ οὕτω δεινὸν τὸ παρὸν ἐνόμιζον, ἀλλ' ἐν καλῷ ἐδόκει ἡ μάχη ἔσεσθαι, καὶ τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ἀπειληφέναι ἐν τῇ αὐτῶν τε understands 'viam Contoporiam per Tretum ferentem.' The second, described as χαλεπὴ, is, as Col. Leake shows, by Mount Lyrcus and the neighbouring valleys. See Col. Leake's Morea, vol. ii. p. 415. By ὄρθιον is meant straight and steep, as opposed to winding. Compare Arrian, E. A. i. 1, 11, ὅποτε καταφέροιντο κατὰ τοῦ ὀρθίου, i. e. the steep. Xen. An. i. 2, 21, ὁδὸς ὀρθία. Ælian, V. H. xiii. 32, ὀρθία ἄνοδος. Hesiod, Op. & D. 288, μακρὸς δὲ καὶ ὄρθιος οἶμος ἐπ' αὐτήν.

5. Σάμινθον] Supposed by Col. Leake (Morea, vol. ii. p. 215) to have been at Kutzopódhi. He thinks the road pursued by Agis was taken for the purpose of cutting off the Argives who were on the Tretus, or the road from Nemea, from retreating upon their city.

Ch. LIX. 1. οὐ πολλῷ πλείους] 'in not much greater numbers.'

2. ἀλλὰ καταβάντες] 'but they (i. e. the Argives) having descended;' for another subject is taken up at καταβάντες.

4. ἐν καλῷ] 'in a favourable position,' viz. for them. The phrase is one frequent in Xenophon and other of the best writers, both prose and verse, as Aristoph. Thesm. 292, and Conc. 321. Theocr. Id. xv. 72. Eurip. Heracl. 966. On the thing itself, see supra ch. 46, and infra ch. 60.

There is, as Bauer remarks, a variation of construction between ἐδόκει ἡ μάχη ἐν καλῷ εἶναι and τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ἀπειληφέναι, where ἐδόκουν (i. e. ἐνόμιζον) is to be supplied from ἐδόκει, on which the accus. τοὺς Λακεδ. cannot depend. Render, 'they thought that they had intercepted, or caught, the Lacedæmonians in their territory and near their city.' Compare Polyb. iii. 92, 4, ἐν καλῷ τοὺς πολεμίους ἀπειληφέναι. Arrian, E. A. i. 5, 20. iv. 27, 5, ἐν δυσχωρίᾳ ἀπολ. Plato, 219, ἐν κακῷ ἀπολ. Bp. Thirlwall understands by this, that they thought the Lacedæmonians were cooped up between the army and their city. But that is a sense at variance with facts, and indeed not to be elicited from the words. The learned prelate seems to have stumbled at ἀπειλ.; though he would not have done so, had he borne in mind that the term does not always signify strictly to hem in; sometimes it bears simply the sense deprendere, to catch any one at any place, as ch. 39. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1875, 9, χωρὶς ἑκάστους ἀπολ. Lucian, t. ii. 164, ἀλλήλους ἀπειληφότες. And so in the above passages of Plato and Arrian, and often in Dio Cass.

καὶ πρὸς τῇ πόλει. 5. τῶν δὲ Ἀργείων δύο ἄνδρες, Θράσυλλός τε, τῶν πέντε στρατηγῶν εἷς ὢν, καὶ Ἀλκίφρων, πρόξενος Λακεδαιμονίων, ἤδη τῶν στρατοπέδων ὅσον οὐ ξυνιόντων, προσελθόντε Ἄγιδι διελεγέσθην μὴ ποιεῖν μάχην· ἑτοίμους γὰρ εἶναι Ἀργείους δίκας δοῦναι καὶ δέξασθαι ἴσας καὶ ὁμοίας, εἴ τι ἐπικαλοῦσιν Ἀργείοις Λακεδαιμόνιοι, καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν εἰρήνην ἄγειν σπονδὰς ποιησαμένους. LX. Καὶ οἱ μὲν ταῦτα εἰπόντες τῶν Ἀργείων ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν, καὶ οὐ τοῦ πλήθους κελεύσαντος, εἶπον· καὶ ὁ Ἄγις, δεξάμενος τοὺς λόγους, αὐτὸς,—καὶ οὐ μετὰ τῶν πλειόνων οὐδὲ αὐτὸς βουλευσάμενος, ἀλλὰ ἢ ἐνὶ ἀνδρὶ κοινώσας τῶν ἐν τέλει ξυστρατευομένων,—σπένδεται τέσσαρας μῆνας, ἐν οἷς ἔδει ἐπιτελέσαι αὐτοὺς τὰ ῥηθέντα· καὶ ἀπήγαγε τὸν στρατὸν εὐθύς, οὐδενὶ φράσας τῶν ἄλλων ξυμμάχων. 2. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι εἵποντο μὲν, ὡς ἠγεῖτο, διὰ τὸν νόμον· ἐν αἰτίᾳ δ' εἶχον κατ' ἀλλήλους πολλῇ τὸν Ἄγιν, νομίζοντες ἐν καλῷ παρατυχὸν σφίσι ξυμβαλεῖν, καὶ πανταχόθεν αὐτῶν ἀποκεκλῃμένων καὶ ὑπὸ ἱππέων καὶ πεζῶν, οὐδὲν δράσαντας ἄξιον τῆς παρασκευῆς ἀπιέναι. 3. στρατόπεδον γὰρ δὴ τοῦτο κάλλιστον Ἑλληνικὸν τῶν μέχρι τοῦδε ξυνῆλθεν· ὤφθη δὲ μάλιστα ἕως ἔτι ἦν ἀθρόον ἐν Νεμέᾳ, ἐν ᾧ Λακεδαιμόνιοί τε πανστρατιᾷ ἦσαν, καὶ

5. τῶν πέντε στρατηγῶν] Meaning the Five principal generals: a number probably (as Arnold thinks) originating in the five lochi, or brigades, spoken of at ch. 72. On πρόξενος see note at ii. 29. Ὅσον οὐ ξυνιόντων, 'all but engaging in battle.' In Ἄγιδι διελεγέσθην μὴ ποιεῖν μάχην we have a very recondite construction, though nearly allied to that of διαλέγομαί σοι ταῦτα found in Xen. Mem. ii. 10, 1, οἶδα δὲ καὶ Διοδώρῳ αὐτὸν τοιάδε διαλεχθέντα, and i. 6, 1, ἃ πρὸς Ἀντιφῶντα διελέχθη: also in Hom. Il. xi. 407, Τίη μοι ταῦτα φίλος διελέξατο θυμός; Thus it is equivalent to the plainer phrase to converse on any thing with another. Hence it is not necessary to supply, as might be imagined, ὥστε or εἰς τὸ for τοῦ or περὶ τοῦ.

Of the phrase, just after, μάχην ποιεῖν, an example occurs also at iv. 91. Poppo observes, that the active voice is confined to the general; the middle one, ποιεῖσθαι, to the army: and he adds, 'Duces rectè dicuntur μάχην ποιεῖν, et milites μάχην ποιεῖσθαι, quum illi auctores, ut pugna fiat:' a distinction, I apprehend, quite just; and so our old English phrase 'to do battle,' for 'to engage in combat;' where the combatants are alone adverted to, not the commanders. Whence may be properly understood and explained the expression of Shakspeare, to do any one to death; which does not simply mean, as Johnson supposes, to put to death, but to slay in combat. On δίκας — ὁμοίας see note supra ch. 27, 1.

Ch. LX. 1. αὐτὸς] This is explained by the commentators as put for μόνος, solus: a use found in the best writers from Homer downwards. Yet this is one of those cases where the idea of distinction rather than that of what is alone, is meant to be prominent, as in Hom. Il. xiii. 729, ἀλλ' οὔπως ἅμα πάντα δυνήσεαι αὐτὸς ἐλέσθαι. Ἄλλῳ μὲν γὰρ, &c. So here αὐτὸς, as distinguished from οἱ πλείονες, signifies 'of himself,' 'by his own authority,' at his sole discretion. By τῶν ἐν τέλει ξυστρατευομένων, literally, 'comrades in office,' are meant the polemarchs, the two ephori who used to accompany the king on foreign service, and others mentioned by Müller, Dor. vol. ii. p. 240.

2. διὰ τὸν νόμον] This, as we learn from ch. 66, directed that every thing in war should be done under his command. See note on ch. 54, and Müller, ii. p. 104, 3. On the expression παρατυχὸν see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 564.

3. ἕως ἔτι ἦν ἀθρόον ἐν Νεμέᾳ] We have nothing expressly said in Thucydides about this union of the three bodies into

Ἀρκάδες, καὶ Βοιωτοὶ, καὶ Κορίνθιοι, καὶ Σικυώνιοι, καὶ Πελληνῆς, καὶ Φλιάσιοι, καὶ Μεγαρῆς,—καὶ οὗτοι πάντες λογάδες ἀφ' ἑκάστων,—ἀξιόμαχοι δοκοῦντες εἶναι οὐ τῇ Ἀργείων μόνον ξυμμαχίᾳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄλλῃ ἔτι προσγενομένῃ. 4. τὸ μὲν οὖν στρατόπεδον οὕτως ἐν αἰτίᾳ ἔχοντες τὸν Ἄγιν, ἀνεχώρουν τε καὶ διελύθησαν ἐπ' οἴκου ἕκαστοι. 5. Ἀργεῖοι δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ ἔτι ἐν πολλῷ πλείονι αἰτίᾳ εἶχον τοὺς σπεισαμένους ἄνευ τοῦ πλήθους, νομίζοντες κἀκεῖνοι, μὴ ἂν σφίσι ποτὲ κάλλιον παρασχὸν, Λακεδαιμονίους διαπεφευγέναι· πρός τε γὰρ τῇ σφετέρᾳ πόλει, καὶ μετὰ πολλῶν καὶ ἀγαθῶν ξυμμάχων τὸν ἀγῶνα ἂν γίγνεσθαι. 6. τόν τε Θράσυλλον, ἀναχωρήσαντες, ἐν τῷ Χαράδρῳ,—οὗπερ τὰς ἀπὸ στρατείας δίκας, πρὶν ἐσιέναι, which the army had been divided; but we may suppose, as the Scholiast suggests, that after the armistice the two other bodies united with that at Nemea, and then evacuated Argolis by the road to Phlius; which was indeed the only really practicable route for a large force. For καὶ ἄλλῃ Bekker conjectures the true reading to be κἂν ἀλ. But there is, as Poppo remarks, no sufficient reason for the change, since the participle may be resolved into ἤτις προσγένοιτο, and thus the particle be needless. I would further observe, that the καὶ could not, in this case, well be dispensed with; the full sense of the words being, 'but also a match for yet another [such confederacy] after being added [to the first].'

5. μὴ ἂν σφίσι—παρασχὸν] 'though an opportunity more favourable to them [for battle] would never offer itself.' See note at i. 120.

6. ἐν τῷ Χαράδρῳ] I would render, not, as does Dr. Arnold, 'in the bed of the Charadrus,' but 'at the place called Charadrus;' so denominated, as being a κόλπος formed by the bed of the rivulet Charadrus, nearly at its confluence with the Inachus. The rivulet was so named as being a mere torrent, or watercourse; its bed being chiefly dry in summer. So Hom. Il. iv. 454, κοίλης ἔντοσθε χαράδρης, and another passage of our author supra iii. 98, κατὰ χαράδραν. In Xen. Hist. iv. 2, 15, it is called Χαράδρα, an Attic form, for the Doric Χάραδρος. It is (as Colonel Leake attests, Morea, p. 364) called Rheuma (τὸ Ῥεῦμα τοῦ Ἄργους); and he says, that 'when it contains any water, it flows over a wide gravelly bed.' Yet as the bed of a torrent, even when dry, would be no very fit place to hold an assembly of the people of Argolis, so I am inclined to think that the place where they assembled was called Charadrus as being a part of the χαράδρα forming the course of the rivulet, a deep narrow valley, or glen, along which the Charadrus takes nearly the whole of its course. (See the maps of Colonel Leake and Lapie.) Now in some point of this natural χαράδρα, or long κόλπος (hollow valley), was situated this place called Charadrus, probably forming a sort of natural amphitheatre highly fitted to the purpose of a national assembly: a view confirmed by the circumstance of a similar place being (as Dr. Arnold shows) chosen for a similar purpose by the Latins, namely, the Caput Aquae Ferentinae; a deep glen used by them as the scene of their national assemblies.

In τὰς ἀπὸ στρατείας δίκας we have a condensed form, for τὰς τῶν ἀπὸ στρατείας γενομένων ἐπελθόντων, similarly as in a passage of the Greek Testament, St. Mark vii. 4, we have, ἀπὸ ἀγορᾶς, scil. γενόμενοι or ἐλθόντες, where the philological commentators have adduced various examples both of the elliptical and of the complete phrase. The idiom appears to have been common to the best writers from Homer downwards.

For vulg. στρατιᾶς I have, with Poppo and Goeller, edited, from two MSS. (to which I am enabled to add the Cod. Clarend. primâ manu) στρατείας; for the former, though retained by Bekker, is really quite indefensible. As to the reading of the MSS. Cass. and Aug., ἀποστρατείας, that, unless it were a mere error of the scribes in putting together two distinct words, evidently proceeded from the conjecture of certain critics who did not perceive the force of the ἀπὸ, and accordingly conjectured ἀποστρατείας, but wrongly; for that word was, as well as ἀποστρατεύομαι, unknown to the earlier and purer writers, and could only bear what were a sense here little apt,—namely, that of discharge from military service.

κρίνουσιν,—ἤρξαντο λεύειν. ὁ δὲ καταφυγὼν ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν, περιγίγνεται· τὰ μέντοι χρήματα ἐδήμευσαν αὐτοῦ.

LXI. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο, Ἀθηναίων βοηθησάντων χιλίων ὁπλιτῶν καὶ τριακοσίων ἱππέων, ὧν ἐστρατήγουν Λάχης καὶ Νικόστρατος, οἱ Ἀργεῖοι (ὅμως γὰρ τὰς σπονδὰς ὤκνουν λῦσαι πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους) ἀπιέναι ἐκέλευον αὐτούς, καὶ πρὸς τὸν δῆμον οὐ προσῆγον, βουλομένους χρηματίσαι, πρὶν ἢ Μαντινῆς καὶ Ἠλεῖοι (ἔτι γὰρ παρῆσαν) κατηνάγκασαν δεόμενοι. 2. καὶ ἔλεγον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, Ἀλκιβιάδου πρεσβευτοῦ παρόντος, ἔν τε τοῖς Ἀργείοις καὶ ξυμμάχοις ταῦτα, ὅτι 'οὐκ ὀρθῶς αἱ σπονδαὶ ἄνευ τῶν ἄλλων ξυμμάχων καὶ γένοιντο, καὶ νῦν (ἐν καιρῷ γὰρ παρεῖναι σφεῖς) ἅπτεσθαι χρῆναι τοῦ πολέμου.' 3. καὶ, πείσαντες ἐκ τῶν λόγων τοὺς ξυμμάχους, εὐθὺς ἐχώρουν ἐπὶ Ὀρχομενὸν τὸν Ἀρκαδικὸν πάντες πλὴν Ἀργείων· οὗτοι δὲ, ὅμως καὶ πεισθέντες, ὑπελείποντο πρῶτον, ἔπειτα δ' ὕστερον καὶ οὗτοι ἦλθον. 4. καὶ προσκαθεζόμενοι, τὸν Ὀρχομενὸν πάντες ἐπολιόρκουν, καὶ προσβολὰς ἐποιοῦντο, βουλόμενοι ἄλλως τε προσγενέσθαι σφίσι, καὶ ὅμηροι ἐκ τῆς Ἀρκαδίας ἦσαν αὐτόθι ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων κείμενοι. 5. οἱ δὲ Ὀρχομένιοι, δείσαντες τήν τε τοῦ τείχους ἀσθένειαν καὶ τοῦ στρατοῦ τὸ πλῆθος, καὶ, ὡς οὐδεὶς αὐτοῖς ἐβοήθει, μὴ προαπόλωνται, ξυνέβησαν ὥστε ξύμμαχοί τε εἶναι, καὶ ὁμήρους σφῶν τε αὐτῶν δοῦναι Μαντινεῦσι, καὶ οὓς κατέθεντο Λακεδαιμόνιοι, παραδοῦναι. LXII. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο, ἔχοντες ἤδη τὸν Ὀρχομενὸν, ἐβουλεύοντο οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἐφ' ὅ τι χρὴ πρῶτον ἰέναι τῶν λοιπῶν. καὶ Ἠλεῖοι μὲν ἐπὶ Λέπρεον ἐκέλευον, Μαντινῆς δὲ ἐπὶ Τέγεαν· καὶ προσέθεντο οἱ Ἀργεῖοι καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι τοῖς Μαντινεῦσι. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἠλεῖοι, ὀργισθέντες ὅτι οὐκ ἐπὶ Λέπρεον ἐψηφίσαντο, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἴκου· οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι ξύμμαχοι παρεσκευάζοντο ἐν τῇ Μαντινείᾳ ὡς ἐπὶ Τέγεαν ἰόντες. καί τινες ἤρξαντο λεύειν] 'We have (as Bp. Blomfield remarks on the words of Æschyl. Ag. 1606, δημορρίφεῖς λευσίμους ἀράς) frequent mention in the ancient writers of this punishment of stoning, which was one resorted to by the populace when moved by sudden indignation.' (See Hom. Il. iii. 56. Soph. Aj. 254. Eurip. Ion, 1240. Æschyl. Theb. 183. Demosth. de Cor. § 6.) And to this there is allusion in a passage of the Old Testament, Exod. viii. 23, 'Will the people not stone us?' See also Acts xiv. 19. Stoning had been of old a punishment denounced by law, and legally executed on persons guilty of blasphemy, incest, and other atrocious crimes. But as the crimes in question roused public indignation and detestation, so the execution of it, both among the Jews and Gentiles, was often taken in hand by the people, by a sort of irregular proceeding similar to that of the judicium zeli (or rebels-beating) among the Jews. That there was a marked distinction between the two kinds of stoning, the legal and the irregular, has been proved, and the subject illustrated by Wachsm. Ant. Gr. vol. ii. 1, p. 437. As to the present case, Dr. Arnold views the proceedings in the Charadrus as arbitrary and irregular, and thinks that 'for that reason these military courts were held without the city, because, within its walls, the ordinary law, with its forms and privileges, would have resumed its authority.' Such a notion, however, involves great improbability. The proceeding itself, as far as regarded the popular trial, was not, it would seem, irregular; and therefore could not need to be held in a by-place, out of the reach of laws. But such a proceeding was likely to issue in some conduct such as the law could not warrant, as in the case of the judicium zeli among the Jews. And since stoning, as a legal punishment, was often permitted to be inflicted by the people themselves, so when the people, as we should say, took the law into their own hands, it was a sort of punishment which they would be likely to resort to. The irregularity, in the present case, consisted in this, that the people had the right to hold judgment on the conduct of those who had returned from a campaign; but not to pronounce sentence, much less to execute it. That was doubtless left to the Five στρατηγοί, of whom mention is made in the preceding chapter.

τὸν βωμὸν] This is not well rendered 'an altar,' rather 'the altar,' namely, that which had been attached to the army, and been used for the religious ceremonies performed before battle and on other occasions.

Ch. LXI. 1. ὅμως] 'nevertheless,' i. e. though they were dissatisfied with the truce: an elliptical use of ὅμως not unfrequent, especially where γὰρ precedes. See supra iv. 96, and other passages adduced by Poppo, Proleg. i. 290.

πρὸς τὸν δῆμον οὐ προσῆγον] 'did not introduce them (meaning Laches and Nicostratus) to the people,' to have an audience: a sense of προσάγω found in Xen. Hist. iv. 5, 6, and iii. 4, 8. Cyr. i. 4, 24. Χρηματίσαι, 'to do business with them,' i. e. to address them on matters of common interest to both. See note at i. 87. Κατηνάγκασαν δεόμενοι, 'compelled them by entreaty,' viz. by the force of the moral compulsion of earnest entreaty. Such is the use of the simple verb in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke, xiv. 23, ἀνάγκασον εἰσελθεῖν, where see my note.

2. ἔλεγον—παρόντος] In the words πρεσβευτοῦ παρόντος is certainly included also the circumstance that Alcibiades spoke (to the following purport) in quality of ambassador. Compare infra viii. 36, καὶ ἄλλας ἔτι θηραμένους παρόντος (i. e. present ambassador) ἐποίουν. Otherwise, indeed, why was he sent as ambassador, if not to be the organ of communicating the wishes of the Athenians to the Argives? Nor will the plural in ἔλεγον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι and πείσαντες avail to disprove this; for the Athenian generals present with the ambassador Alcibiades made the latter their spokesman, just as, in another passage supra iii. 52, Astymachus and Lacon are mentioned as procuratores or agents to plead for the Platæans, and accordingly there is the use of the plural ἔλεγον τοιάδε, though only one of them actually spoke.

At οὐκ ὀρθῶς—καὶ γένοιντο, Bauer supposes a transposition of καὶ, (which should otherwise have come in before αἱ σπονδαὶ,) while Dr. Arnold thinks there is a confusion of construction for ὅτι καὶ αἱ σπονδαὶ οὐκ ὀρθῶς—γένοιντο. But thus the καὶ would have no force; and why the transposition should have been made, we should be quite at a loss to imagine. It may rather be supposed, that the καὶ is in its right place, as connected with the verb; the sentiment being, that 'the treaty would even have been not rightly made without the concurrence of the other allies.' Alcibiades' argument was, that 'the truce thus formed was invalid, and in reality null and void.' The expression οὐκ ὀρθῶς has respect to the clause in the treaty of alliance between Athens, Argolis, Elis, and Mantinea, supra ch. 47, which was, that 'it should not be lawful for any one of those states to lay aside war against any state that shall invade the territory of any one of the allies, unless it shall meet the approbation of all.'

The commentators remark on the variation of construction in χρῆναι, by the transition from the opt. to the infin., comparing a passage supra i. 87, εἶπον ὅτι σφίσι μὲν δοκοῖεν ἀδικεῖν οἱ Ἀθ., βούλεσθαι δὲ καὶ, &c., and others elsewhere. But they have failed to bear in mind, that in these two passages the use of the optative could not well have been continued, from the latter clause containing a more positive assertion than the optative in oratione obliquâ (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 529) could have supplied.

The νῦν, a little after, corresponds to the τότε implied in γένοιντο ('were made'): and here αὐτοὺς is to be supplied, which is alluded to in the tacit opposition in σφεῖς; q. d. 'They themselves were at hand to give them timely aid, and they ought to apply themselves vigorously to the war.' With ἅπτεσθαι τοῦ πολέμου, 'capessere bellum,' compare viii. 11. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 217, 7. Dio Cass. 548, 84.

5. καὶ οὓς κατέθεντο] Didot shows, from ch. 33, that the hostages whom the Spartans had deposited, for security, at Orchomenus, were the Parrhasians of Arcadia.

Ch. LXII. 1. προσέθεντο τοῖς Μαντ.] A popular or familiar form of expression for προστ. τῇ γνώμῃ τῶν M., as vi. 50, προσέθετο τῇ Ἀλκιβιάδου γνώμῃ.

αὐτοῖς καὶ αὐτῶν Τεγεατῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει ἐνεδίδοσαν τὰ πράγματα.

LXIII. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ, ἐπειδὴ ἀνεχώρησαν ἐξ Ἄργους τὰς τετραμήνους σπονδὰς ποιησάμενοι, Ἄγιν ἐν μεγάλῃ αἰτίᾳ εἶχον, οὐ χειρωσάμενον σφίσιν Ἄργος, παρασχὸν καλῶς, ὡς οὔπω πρότερον αὐτοὶ ἐνόμιζον· ἀθρόους γὰρ τοσούτους ξυμμάχους καὶ τοιούτους οὐ ῥᾴδιον εἶναι λαβεῖν. 2. ἐπειδὴ δὲ καὶ περὶ Ὀρχομενοῦ ἠγγέλλετο ἐαλωκέναι, πολλῷ δὴ μᾶλλον ἐχαλέπαινον, καὶ ἐβούλευον εὐθὺς ὑπ' ὀργῆς, παρὰ τὸν τρόπον τὸν ἑαυτῶν, ὡς χρὴ τήν τε οἰκίαν

2. I have followed Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker in cancelling the τῶν before Τεγεατῶν; almost all the best MSS. being without the word. Ἐνεδίδοσαν τὰ πράγματα. Duker supposes ἐνδιδόναι to bear here, as at iv. 76 & 89, and vii. 48, the sense of betraying; while Bauer assigns to it simply that of delivering up, (what is otherwise expressed by παρεδίδοσαν,) without any idea of betrayal. Dr. Arnold explains the expression to mean, 'giving up to them the government of Tegea;' comparing another passage of our author, iv. 89, ὡς τῷ Ἱπποκράτει τὰ ἐν τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς ἐνεδίδοτο. And he adds, that 'at iv. 103 & 104, the terms ἐνδιδόναι and προδιδόναι are both employed with reference to the same thing, —namely, the surrender of Amphipolis; though the former expresses more the notion of yielding, giving up, whether from treachery or otherwise; the latter, the giving up secretly or treacherously.' It is plain that ἐνδιδόναι is a general term that can never of itself mean more than 'to give up,' surrender. In this sense it frequently occurs in Arrian, Xenophon, and other good writers, and can never signify to betray except from the force of the context; of which examples are somewhat rare; though Timæus, Lex., places προδοῦναι as the first signification of the word. Certainly it bears this sense in Xen. Hist. vii. 4, 14, ἔλαβον δὲ Μαργανέας, ἐνδόντων τινῶν, where Æm. Portus observes, 'rem turpem velari verbo honesto, cum propriè dicendum fuerit προδόντων.' Compare also a passage in the Ages. ii. 18, ὡς ἐνδιδομένης τῆς πόλεως, for προδιδομένης. Plut. Alcib. 22. In another passage of our author supra iv. 66, βουλόμενοι ἐνδοῦναι τὴν πόλιν, scil. αὐτοῖς, the signification to betray is not necessary to be supposed. The term may there simply be taken to signify to give up, surrender the city to them: and such I believe to be the sense infra vii. 48, and perhaps iv. 76. Finally, this principle (adverted to by Æmil. Portus) will apply to two passages of Xen. Hist. vii. 4, 14, and Ages. ii. 18, and in all cases where the persons are speaking of themselves. They will call the thing 'giving up' or surrendering the city; while the rest of the citizens will call it betraying the city; to betray being 'to give up a city, or country, or army, to the enemy, by breach of trust.' Now here the persons are not speaking of themselves; nor can we imagine that the historian meant to veil a base act under a specious name. Yet we may suppose that our author here chose to use the expression which the persons in question employed in speaking of their own conduct. They called it merely the giving up of the state-affairs, or the public polity of the state, into the hands of the Argives and Athenians. And so I would understand two passages at iv. 89, and vii. 48, 2, καὶ ἦν γάρ τι καὶ ἐν ταῖς Συρακούσαις βουλόμενον τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τὰ πράγματα ἐνδοῦναι. Now the phrase τὰ πράγματα ἐνδοῦναί τινι was, from its indefiniteness, very convenient for veiling the baseness of the action. And the opinion of the historian on the action is here, and at vii. 48, intimated by the καὶ, even; q. d. 'even those within the city, who ought to have been true to their trust.' Moreover, the action is spoken of as done (it being said 'they had given up') because it was concluded on and determined: a point I should scarcely have thought it necessary to notice, but for the mistaken explanation of Dr. Arnold, 'they were disposed to give up;' which sense, besides being any thing but suitable, would require rather ἐνεδίδουν.

Ch. LXIII. 1. At οὐ ῥᾴδιον εἶναι is to be repeated ἐνόμιζον from the preceding context. The simple verb λαβεῖν stands here, as often in the New Testament, (see my Lex. N. T. in voc. ii. 1.) for καταλαβεῖν or εὑρεῖν.

2. παρὰ τὸν τρόπον τὸν ἑαυτῶν] So at i. 132, it is said of the Spartans, χρώμενοι τῷ τρόπῳ ᾧπερ εἰώθασιν ἐς σφᾶς αὐτούς.

αὐτοῦ κατασκάψαι, καὶ δέκα μυριάσι δραχμῶν ζημιῶσαι. 3. ὁ δὲ παρητεῖτο μηδὲν τούτων δρᾶν·—ἔργῳ γὰρ ἀγαθῷ ῥύσεσθαι τὰς αἰτίας μὴ ταχεῖς εἶναι περὶ ἀνδρὸς Σπαρτιάτου—βουλεῦσαί τι ἀνήκεστον. And to this purpose it is said by Dukas, that 'the Spartans never acted or counselled under the influence of anger,' ἀλλὰ βραδέως καὶ μεθ' ἡσυχίας ἐν ἀταραξίᾳ ψυχῆς. In τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ κατασκάψαι is denoted a punishment of oriental origin, of which frequent mention occurs in the Old Testament, and which was likewise one in use among the Romans.

3. παρητεῖτο (scil. αὐτοὺς) μηδὲν τούτων δρᾶν] 'earnestly entreated them (literally, 'by deprecations urged them') to do nothing of the kind:' of which sense of παραιτεῖσθαι (somewhat rare) I have noted an example elsewhere in Xen. Mem. ii. 2, 14, τοὺς θεοὺς παραιτήσῃ συγγνώμονάς σοι εἶναι. And Steph. in Thes. adduces examples of the construction παραιτοῦμαί σε τοῦτο ποιεῖν, which is one found also in a passage of Menander, where we have παραιτοῦμαί σε συγγνώμην ἔχειν, and in Plato, 320, Προμηθέα παραιτεῖται —νεῖμαι. Herodot. ap. Steph. Thes. συγγνώμην παραιτέετο τὸν θεὸν αὐτῷ σχεῖν τῶν ῥηθέντων. Polyb. frag. Hist. 52, παρῃτήσατο τοὺς πρ. ἐκπέμψαι πρεσβευτάς. For this we have the more condensed construction παραιτοῦμαί σε τοῦτο in Plato, p. 27, 241. Of the construction παραιτοῦμαί σε μὴ ποιεῖν (which is exceedingly rare) I have noted only, as examples elsewhere, Plato, p. 387, παραιτησόμεθα Ὅμηρον μὴ χαλεπαίνειν, and Demosth. p. 533, παραιτήσομαι δ' ὑμᾶς μὴ ἄχθεσθαι. Of the ellipsis of the pronoun (which is extremely rare) the present is the only example known to me; for in a passage of Herodot. iv. 146, παραιτήσαντο — ἐσελθεῖν ἐς τὴν ἐρκτήν, there is, in effect, no such ellipsis, since the pronoun is there not wanted; the sense being, 'they sought permission to enter.' And, again, in Polyb. iv. 18, παρῃτήσαντο τὴν τῶν Αἰτωλῶν ἀσέβειαν, καὶ τὸ μηδὲν παθεῖν ἀνήκεστον, it is likewise unnecessary: and the difficulty there complained of will disappear if we suppose a dilogia in the use of παρ. as applied to the two clausulæ; the sense being in the former, to avert by supplication; in the latter, to obtain by supplication, as in Herodot. i. 24. iv. 146, et al. On the original sense and ratio significationis of this difficult term, see my Lex. N. T. in voc.

ῥύσεσθαι τὰς αἰτίας στρατευσάμενος] For ῥύσεσθαι Dobree would read λύσεσθαι, which he confirms from the expression ἀπολύσεσθαι αἰτίαν at ch. 75 and elsewhere. Yet such will only serve to show that Thucydides might have here written λύσεσθαι, not that he did so write. That he did not, is plain not only from external testimony, but internal evidence; for if he had written λύσεσθαι, how came so plain a reading to be changed into so difficult a one as ῥύσεσθαι? But, though difficult, it is not inexplicable. The term, however, does not bear, as Poppo supposes, the sense of σώζειν; and vain is it that he appeals to the words of Diodorus, διὰ τῶν καλῶν ἔργων διασώσασθαι τὴν ἁμαρτίαν. Where do we ever meet with the form σώσασθαι? In fact, the word διασώσασθαι is a blunder in Poppo's transcript for διορθώσασθαι, and διορθ. τὴν ἁμαρτίαν (with which compare διορθ. τὰ ἀγνοούμενα in Demosth. 1463, 18) does not ill represent the sense; though it changes the metaphor in ῥύσασθαι τὴν αἰτίαν, which is one taken from purging oneself from a charge by removing it from us, showing that it does not attach to us. Now, in the present instance, this Agis would do by bravery in action. Of the word as used in this very rare sense 'to remove from one,' (so Schol. ἀπολύσειν,) I have noted an example in Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1383, ταῦτα πάντα κατθανοῦσα ('by dying') ῥύσομαι, 'shall remove all these evils by my death.' And so Soph. Œd. Tyr. 313, ῥῦσαι δὲ πᾶν μίασμα τοῦ τεθνηκότος. Nearly approaching to this use is that in the Latin redimere, by which faults are said to be redeemed or compensated by virtues, and thus the charges of these faults are removed from the persons. So in Seneca, Contr. iv. præf. 'redimebat vitia virtutibus.'

For στρατευσάμενος several of the best MSS. have στρατευσόμενος. But besides that the form is so rare, that I know of no other example except in Plato, p. 129; nay, I doubt whether this would be good Greek, or good sense: for surely the crimination of cowardice could not be wiped away by being about to make a new expedition, but by having made it. Hence στρατευσάμενος is decidedly preferable; though the form στρατεύσασθαι is so rare, that I have found it no where else, except in Xen. Ag. ii. 31, and Hist. vii. 1, 8 and 28. Ag. vi. 3. The participle does not signify, as Haack and Goeller explain, 'simul ac profectus fuerit,' but has the στρατευσάμενος·—ἢ τότε ποιεῖν αὐτοὺς ὅ τι βούλονται. 4. οἱ δὲ τὴν μὲν ζημίαν καὶ τὴν κατασκαφὴν ἐπέσχον, νόμον δὲ ἔθεντο ἐν τῷ παρόντι, ὃς οὔπω πρότερον ἐγένετο αὐτοῖς· δέκα γὰρ ἄνδρας Σπαρτιατῶν προσείλοντο αὐτῷ ξυμβούλους, ἄνευ ὧν μὴ κύριον εἶναι ἀπάγειν στρατιὰν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως. LXIV. Ἐν τούτῳ δ' ἀφικνεῖται αὐτοῖς ἀγγελία παρὰ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἐκ Τεγέας ὅτι, εἰ μὴ παρέσονται ἐν τάχει, ἀποστήσεται αὐτῶν Τέγεα πρὸς Ἀργείους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους, καὶ ὅσον οὐκ ἀφέστηκεν. 2. ἐνταῦθα δὴ βοήθεια τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων γίγνεται αὐτῶν τε καὶ τῶν Εἰλώτων πανδημεὶ ὀξεῖα, καὶ οἷα οὔπω πρότερον. 3. ἐχώρουν δὲ ἐς Ὀρέσθειον τῆς Μαιναrare use of expressing the means of the action denoted by the verb with which it is conjoined, as in Xen. Cyr. iii. 2, 25, λῃζόμενοι ζῶσιν, 'by plundering,' and Mem. iii. 5, 16, προαιροῦνται μᾶλλον οὕτω κερδαίνειν ἀπ' ἀλλήλων, ἢ συνωφελοῦντες αὐτούς, 'by helping each other.' Here, then, we may render, 'by making an expedition.' And in such a case the participle aor. 1 has no note of time. Compare Xen. Ag. ii. 31, στρατευσάμενος τὸν μισέλληνα —χειροῦται.

4. ἐπέσχον] 'deferred,' as at vii. 33, where see note. Ἐν τῷ παρόντι, 'in præsentiâ.' Not meaning, however, that the law was made for this one expedition only; for it extended beyond, though not to the whole of the war. Of προσείλοντο the full sense is, 'chose and appointed [as colleagues] to him;' προσαιρεῖσθαι signifying to choose and appoint any one as colleague, either to oneself, as principal, (compare iv. 29, 1. Herodot. ix. 10, πρ. ἑαυτῷ τινα. Xen. Laced. xv. 5, and Cyr. i. 5, 5 & 7. Plut. Cam. ἵππαρχον αὐτῇ προσ. Demosth. 1360, κοινὸν αὐτοῖς προσαιροῦνται,) or to another, as said of the election and appointment of officers or magistrates by the public voice, as in the present passage and at vii. 16, αὐτῷ τῶν αὐτοῦ ἐκεῖ δύο προσείλοντο. Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 27. ii. 1, 11, and Œcon. ix. 14. Hippag. i. 8, ἡ πόλις—προσαιρεῖται τῷ ἱππάρχῳ συνεργοὺς φυλάρχους. On these ξύμβουλοι see Wachsm. and Müller.

μὴ κύριον εἶναι] On this phrase see note at ii. 24.

Ch. LXIV. 1. παρὰ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων] 'from their partisans,' meaning the party friendly to the Lacedæmonians.

2. βοήθεια] Meaning a force coming in aid to, as in Xen. Anab. ii. 3, 11, βοήθειαν ἔχων ἀφικόμην. Pol. i. 44, 4, and 45, 1, ἀνεβόα τις· Βοήθεια! and xiii. 8, 5. I have followed Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing, for vulg. οἷα (or ὡς), οἵα, from several MSS. (to which I am enabled to add Cod. Clarend.); for the neuter plural can here have no place, whereas the nomin. sing. fem. is quite suitable, and occurs at v. 14, τῇ ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ξυμφορᾷ. οἵα οὔπω γεγένητο τῇ Σπάρτῃ. As to the reading ὡς, it is evidently a mere gloss.

3. Ὀρέσθειον] So I edit, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, from several of the best MSS., for vulg. Ὀρέστιον, as Ὀρεσθίδος for vulg. Ὀρεστίδος at iv. 134: though that spelling would seem supported by Herodot. ix. 11. Eurip. Orest. 1663, and Elect. 1274. It is observable, however, that Ὀρεσθ. is found in certain MSS. in the above passages. Moreover, the σθ is supported by Steph. Byz. and Pausanias, (whose Ὀρεσθάσιον is the same place as Ὀρεσθ. or Ὀρεστ.) and is more likely to have been the original spelling, afterwards altered to Ὀρεστ. From Pausan. viii. 3, 1, it appears that Ὀρεσθ. was the original name, derived from Ὀρεσθεύς, son of Lycaon, but afterwards altered to Ὀρεστ., from Orestes, son of Agamemnon. So difficult, however, is it to alter the name of a place, that we may suppose that in the time of Herodotus and Thucydides Ὀρεσθ. was the prevailing spelling. Dr. Arnold, indeed, speaks as if he suspected that Euripides in the above passages wrote Ὀρέστειον. But that is impossible; since the words preceding, σὲ δ' αὖ χρεών, Ὀρέστα—κεκλήσεται δὲ σῆς φυγῆς ἐπώνυμον, compel us to read at Eur. Orest. 1663, Ἄζᾶσιν Ἀρκάσιν τ' Ὀρέστειον καλεῖν. With respect to the site, it is supposed by Col. Leake (Morea, vol. ii. 319) to have occupied the summit of Mount Tzimbaree, (on which, he says, there are still some remains of an Hellenic fortress,) which lies to the right of the road from Megalopolis to Asea, in the part where it crossed the ridge between Hæmonia and Athenæum λίας· καὶ τοῖς μὲν Ἀρκάδων σφετέροις οὖσι ξυμμάχοις προεῖπον ἀθροισθεῖσιν ἰέναι κατὰ πόδας αὐτῶν ἐς Τέγεαν, αὐτοὶ δὲ μέχρι μὲν τοῦ Ὀρεσθείου πάντες ἐλθόντες, ἐκεῖθεν δὲ τὸ ἕκτον μέρος σφῶν αὐτῶν ἀποπέμψαντες ἐπ' οἴκου,—ἐν ᾧ τὸ πρεσβύτερόν τε καὶ τὸ νεώτερον ἦν,—ὥστε τὰ οἴκοι φρουρεῖν, τῷ λοιπῷ στρατεύματι ἀφικνοῦνται ἐς Τέγεαν. καὶ οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἀπ' Ἀρκάδων παρῆσαν. 4. πέμπουσι δὲ καὶ ἐς τὴν Κόρινθον καὶ Βοιωτοὺς καὶ Φωκέας καὶ Λοκροὺς, βοηθεῖν κελεύοντες κατὰ τάχος ἐς Μαντίνειαν. ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν ἐξ ὀλίγου τε ἐγίγνετο, καὶ οὐ ῥᾴδιον ἦν, μὴ ἀθρόοις, καὶ ἀλλήλους περιμείνασι, διελθεῖν τὴν πολεμίαν· (ξυνέκλῃε γὰρ διὰ μέσου·) ὅμως δὲ ἠπείγοντο. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ ἀναλαβόντες τοὺς παρόντας Ἀρκάδων ξυμμάχους, ἐσέβαλον ἐς τὴν Μαντινικήν, καὶ στρατοπεδευσάμενοι πρὸς τῷ Ἡρακλείῳ, ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν. LXV. Οἱ δὲ Ἀργεῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ὡς εἶδον αὐτοὺς, καταλαβόντες χωρίον ἐρυμνὸν καὶ δυσπρόσοδον, παρετάξαντο ὡς ἐς μάχην. 2. καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι εὐθὺς αὐτοῖς ἐπῆεσαν· καὶ μέχρι μὲν λίθου καὶ ἀκοντίου βολῆς ἐχώρησαν· ἔπειτα, τῶν πρεσβυτέρων τις Ἄγιδι ἐπεβόησεν, ὁρῶν πρὸς χωρίον καρτερὸν ἰόντας σφᾶς, ὅτι 'διανοεῖται κακὸν κακῷ ἰᾶσθαι,' δηλῶν τῆς ἐξ Ἄργους ἐπαιτίου ἀναχωρήσεως τὴν παροῦσαν ἄκαιρον προθυμίαν ἀνάληψιν βουλομένην εἶναι. 3. ὁ τὸ νεώτερον] Meaning that portion which was under the age to bear arms,—namely, 20 years old. See Müller's Dor. vol. ii. p. 231, seq.

4. ἐξ ὀλίγου] scil. χρόνου, 'sudden and unexpected.' Μὴ ἀθρόοις, καὶ ἀλλήλους περιμείνασι. Render, 'unless collected in a body, and after having waited for each other.' In ξυνέκλῃε γὰρ διὰ μέσου, a little after, we have a condensed form of expression, of which the full sense is, 'for by lying between them [and their destination] it closed up communication with it.' So Portus renders, 'nam in medio [situs, transitum illis] præcludebat.'

Ch. LXV. 1. χωρίον ἐρυμνὸν] Meaning a situation strong by nature, as opposed to one that has been made so by art. Comp. Xen. Anab. v. 5, 2, χωρία ἐρυμνὰ, and v. 7, 18. Dio Cass. 211. 231. 525. ἐπ' ἐρυμνῶν χωρίων. Pol. i. 30, 8, ἐρυμνοὶ τόποι καὶ δύσβατοι, and iii. 83, 1. iv. 57, 2, λόφος ἐρ.: and so τὰ ἐρυμνὰ in Arrian, Ind. xxxvi. 8. Here, then, is denoted a strong position difficult of approach; probably, as Col. Leake supposes, 'the hills immediately above Mantinea to the eastward, the part of which near the southern side of the walls of Mantinea was, as we learn from Pausanias, called Alesium.'

2. τῶν πρεσβυτέρων τις] Not meaning one of the elder officers of the army, as Mitford supposes; but one of the elderly soldiers. In κακὸν κακῷ ἰᾶσθαι we have a pithy saying, frequent in the best writers from Herodotus downwards, and in such common use as to have almost become proverbial. According to the Scholiast on Thucydides, it was originally applied to Orestes, ὅστις τὸν τοῦ πατρὸς θάνατον τῷ τῆς μητρὸς φόνῳ ἐθεράπευσε. As to the Homeric one, κακὸν κακῷ ἐστήρικτο, it is of a different nature; though it may have suggested the present, the point being the same. The term ἰᾶσθαι here has reference to ῥύσεσθαι τὰς αἰτίας supra ch. 63.

The word ἐπαίτιος, a little after, has the passive sense censured, as in Hom. Il. i. 335, οὔτι μοι ὔμμες ἐπαίτιοι. Ἀνάληψιν is equivalent to θεραπείαν, reparationem. See Wakef. on Eurip. Ion, 438. In βουλομένην Duker and Poppo recognise an elegant prosopopœia. But they might as well seek a prosopopœia in the phrases τί αὐτῷ βούλεται ἡ λύρα; τί βούλονται αὐτῷ αἱ κύλικες; and others in Steph. Thes., as Lucian, t. i. 26, καὶ εἴ γε σοι τοῦτο βούλεται ὁ Προμηθεύς: parallel to which is also the frequent use of the δὲ, εἴτε καὶ διὰ τὸ ἐπιβόημα, εἴτε καὶ αὐτῷ ἄλλο τι, ἢ κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, δόξαν ἐξαίφνης, πάλιν τὸ στράτευμα κατὰ τάχος, πρὶν ξυμμῖξαι, ἀπῆγε. 4. καὶ ἀφικόμενος πρὸς τὴν Τεγεᾶτιν, τὸ ὕδωρ ἐξέτρεπεν ἐς τὴν Μαντινικὴν, περὶ οὗπερ, ὡς τὰ πολλὰ βλάπτοντος ὑποτέρωσε ἂν ἐσπίπτῃ, Μαντινῆς καὶ Τεγεᾶται πολεμοῦσιν. ἐβούλετο δὲ τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ λόφου, βοηθοῦντας ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ ὕδατος ἐκτροπὴν, ἐπειδὰν πύθωνται, καταβιβάσαι τοὺς Ἀργείους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους, καὶ ἐν

Latin velle in the sense to mean or signify. And similarly rendering here, as we very well may, 'meaning or meant to be a retrieval of,' &c., who would ever think of a prosopopœia? In fact, these are rather matters of grammar than sentiment; and accordingly there is no breach of the rule which confines the use of βούλεσθαι to rational agents.

3. ἄλλο τι, ἢ κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ] Meaning, as Poppo explains, 'aliud quiddam, quam quod congruens erat [superiori ejus opinioni].' On the phrase ἄλλο τι δόξαν see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 564.

4. τὸ ὕδωρ ἐξέτρεπεν ἐς τὴν Μαντινικὴν] Owing to the obscurity necessarily resulting from our very imperfect acquaintance with the country, this passage has been very ill understood by commentators on Thucydides. This obscurity I was in my Translation enabled to a certain degree to remove, by a reference to the following minute chorographical sketch in Pausan. viii. 7, 1: ὑπερβάλλοντα δὲ ἐς τὴν Μαντινικὴν διὰ τοῦ Ἀρτεμισίου, πέδιον ἐκδέξεταί σε Ἀργὸν καλούμενον, καθάπερ γε καὶ ἔστι· τὸ γὰρ ὕδωρ τὸ ἐκ τοῦ θειοῦ κατερχόμενον ἐς αὐτὸ ἐκ τῶν ὀρῶν ἀργὸν εἶναι τὸ πεδίον ποιεῖ, ἐκώλυέ τε οὐδὲν αὐτὸ πεδίον τοῦτο εἶναι λίμνην, εἰ μὴ τὸ ὕδωρ ἠφανίζετο ἐς χάσμα γῆς· ἀφανισθὲν δὲ ἐνταῦθα ἄνεισι κατὰ τὴν Δεινήν: and viii. 5. viii. 13, 3. xiv. 1 & 3. xxii. 6, and xxiii. 6. And I was enabled to further illustrate the passage by a reference to what Sir W. Gell says, Trav. p. 145, who speaks of a double and forked rivulet between Tripolitza and Piali, and mentions a subterranean hiatus hereabouts, into which the rivulets of the plain (of Mantinea) terminate. Also from what Mr. Dodwell says, vol. ii. 423, who affirms that 'the waters of the Ophis and of the Artemisium would together inundate the plain, were they not absorbed by a chasm through which they find a natural vent.' Since that time no little further light has been thrown on this still obscure point by Col. Leake, Morea, vol. iii. p. 44, who informs us, that 'the plain of Mantinea is a high table-land, much above the level of the valleys on the sea-coast, though surrounded by high mountains, in respect to which it is itself a low plain; insomuch that the streams which flow into it from the mountains have no outlet but through the mountains themselves; and that the streams which flow into these appear again at a considerable distance in the valleys at a lower level nearer the coast.' And further, that 'these, now called zerethra or katavóthra, (as they were in the time of Strabo; see viii. 6, 4.) are numerous in Arcadia.' The learned traveller further informs us, that the plain is such a dead level, that there is not in some parts sufficient slope to carry off the waters of the mountain-torrents, and that the land would be flooded, unless trenches were made to draw off the water into one or other of the above katavóthra, or swallows. Thus the waters of the neighbourhood of Mantinea were usually carried off by the katavóthra at the southern extremity of the plain in the territory of Tegea. But Agis, on this occasion, turned them in the opposite direction, on which side the katavóthra were smaller, and the drainage consequently less effectual, so as to occasion a partial overflow. Hence no wonder is it that the diversion of the streams should have been, as we find, often the subject of contention between the Tegeans and the Mantineans, both then and afterwards, as denoted by the expression of our author, πολεμοῦσιν. When Thucydides says that 'the diversion would do great harm whichever way it was turned,' we may suppose that the operation was, as long as the two cities of Mantinea and Tegea were at peace, regulated in some such way as to be best for their mutual advantage; but when at war, it served as a ready means of offence and injury; which was, there is reason to think, 'so great, that Agis might reasonably expect (as, from what follows, we find he did) that the enemy would even abandon their strong position, and give battle on even ground.' The place to which Agis went to turn off the waters, is justly τῷ ὁμαλῷ τὴν μάχην ποιεῖσθαι· 5. καὶ ὁ μὲν, τὴν ἡμέραν ταύτην μείνας αὐτοῦ περὶ τὸ ὕδωρ, ἐξέτρεπεν· οἱ δ' Ἀργεῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον καταπλαγέντες τῇ ἐξ ὀλίγου αἰφνιδίῳ αὐτῶν ἀναχωρήσει, οὐχ εἶχον ὅ τι εἰκάσωσιν· εἶτα, ἐπειδὴ ἀναχωροῦντες ἐκεῖνοί τε ἀπέκρυψαν, καὶ σφεῖς ἡσύχαζον καὶ οὐκ ἐπηκολούθουν, ἐνταῦθα τοὺς ἑαυτῶν στρατηγοὺς αὖθις ἐν αἰτίᾳ εἶχον, τό τε πρότερον καλῶς ληφθέντας πρὸς Ἄργει Λακεδαιμονίους ἀφεθῆναι, καὶ νῦν ὅτι ἀποδιδράσκοντας οὐδεὶς ἐπιδιώκει, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἡσυχίαν οἱ μὲν σώζονται, σφεῖς δὲ προδίδονται. 6. οἱ δὲ στρατηγοὶ ἐθορυβήθησαν μὲν τὸ παραυτίκα, ὕστερον δὲ ἀπάγουσιν αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ λόφου, καὶ προελθόντες ἐς τὸ ὁμαλὸν, ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο, ὡς ἰόντες ἐπὶ τοὺς πολεμίους.

LXVI. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἵ τε Ἀργεῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ξυνετάξαντο, ὡς ἔμελλον μαχεῖσθαι, ἢν περιτύχωσιν· οἵ τε Λακεδαιμόνιοι supposed by Col. Leake to be Nestane; and the purpose of the action was doubtless to divert the water from the plain southward of the point of Nestane into the plain of Argon, situated north of the same projection.

5. τῇ ἐξ ὀλίγου αἰφνιδίῳ—ἀναχωρήσει] Duk., Abresch, Bauer, Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Dobree are agreed in regarding αἰφνιδίῳ as a marginal gloss on ἐξ ὀλίγου, from the Scholiast, at ch. 64, explaining ἐξ ὀλίγου by ἐξαίφνης, and at ch. 66, δι' ὀλίγου by the same. And as the Scholiast here understands ἐξ ὀλίγου of time (supplying καιροῦ), it is thought he could scarcely have had αἰφνιδίῳ in his copy. That, however, is far from certain. He may have regarded ἐξ ὀλίγου αἰφνιδίῳ as a pleonasm, such as those adduced by Poppo in his Prol. i. 1, p. 191, and in his note on i. 58. And certain it is that ἐξ ὀλίγου is almost always in our author used of time; though it is used of place at ii. 91, τὴν ἐξ ὀλίγου ἀντεξόρμησιν, and it may be so taken here. Accordingly, Portus observes that ἐξ ὀλίγου may be supposed to allude to the words, a little before, μεχρὶ μὲν λίθου καὶ ἀκοντίου βολῆς ἐχώρησαν, as αἰφνιδίῳ answers to κατὰ τάχος at § 3. But the expression ἐξ ὀλίγου is, I believe, no where else used of place or space, except at ii. 91, and there it means, 'from a situation a little distance off,' which would be unsuitable to an action like ἀναχώρησις; and to suppose the above allusion, is so harsh, that I prefer to take the phrase of time. And in effect, there is, properly speaking, no pleonasm at all, ἐξ ὀλίγου literally signifying, 'after a short space of time [during which they had remained drawn up in line of battle].' But what has continued only a short space may be expected to continue longer; and consequently its change into any other action is unexpected and sudden. Hence in all the above passages there is an implied notion of suddenness, which is here expressed: and accordingly ἐξ ὀλίγου αἰφνιδίῳ is not a pleonasm, but a stronger expression. Under these circumstances I have, with Bekker, left αἰφ. without the brackets, which had been placed by Haack, Poppo, and Goeller.

ἐκεῖνοί τε ἀπέκρυψαν] scil. αὐτοὺς, meaning τοὺς Ἀργείους, as Duk. points out, adducing a passage written with a view to the present, in Lucian, Ver. Hist. ii. 38, ἐφεύγομεν ἀπολιπόντες αὐτοὺς μαχομένους. ἐπεὶ δ' ἀπεκρύψαμεν αὐτοὺς, ᾠόμεθα τοὺς τραυματίας. In like manner, he adds, 'those at sea and out of sight of land are said ἀποκρύπτειν τὴν γῆν; and hence the metaphor seems to be derived.' Bauer aptly compares Virg. Æn. iii. 291, 'Phæacum abscondimus arcem.' And so the opposite phrase aperire terram occurs in Virg. Æn. iii. 205 & 275.

καλῶς ληφθέντας] i. e. as we should say, 'fairly caught.'

6. ἐθορυβήθησαν] 'were thrown into consternation.' Of the word in this sense (which is somewhat rare), examples are found supra iii. 22. vii. 3. viii. 50. Plato, p. 640. 275. 518. This use was probably derived from—what Thucydides and Plato much deal in—the language of common life.

CH. LXVI. 1. ὡς ἔμελλον μαχεῖσθαι]

ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕδατος πρὸς τὸ Ἡράκλειον πάλιν ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ στρατόπεδον ἰόντες, ὁρῶσι δι' ὀλίγου τοὺς ἐναντίους ἐν τάξει τε ἤδη πάντας, καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ λόφου προεληλυθότας. 2. μάλιστα * δ' οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἐς ὃ ἐμέμνηντο, ἐν τούτῳ τῷ καιρῷ ἐξεπλάγησαν. διὰ βραχείας γὰρ μελλήσεως ἡ παρασκευὴ αὐτοῖς ἐγίγνετο· καὶ εὐθὺς ὑπὸ σπουδῆς καθίσταντο ἐς κόσμον τὸν ἑαυτῶν, Ἄγιδος τοῦ βασιλέως ἕκαστα ἐξηγουμένου κατὰ τὸν νόμον. 3. βασιλέως γὰρ ἄγοντος, ὑπ' ἐκείνου πάντα ἄρχεται, καὶ τοῖς μὲν πολεμάρχοις αὐτὸς φράζει τὸ δέον, οἱ δὲ τοῖς λοχαγοῖς, ἐκεῖνοι δὲ τοῖς πεντηκοντῆρσιν, αὖθις δ' οὗτοι τοῖς ἐνωμοτάρχαις, καὶ οὗτοι τῇ ἐνωμοτίᾳ. 4. καὶ αἱ παραγγέλσεις, ἤν τι βούλωνται, κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ χωροῦσι, καὶ ταχεῖαι ἐπέρχονται· σχεδὸν γάρ τι πᾶν, πλὴν ὀλίγου, τὸ στρατόπεδον τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ἄρχοντες ἀρχόντων εἰσί, καὶ τὸ ἐπιμελὲς τοῦ δρωμένου

'eo modo quo pugnaturi erant.' (Poppo.) Ἦν περιτύχωσιν, scil. αὐτοῖς, (namely, the Lacedæmonians,) 'if they should chance to meet with them.' Ἐν τάξει—προεληλυθότας. The Argives were probably drawn up across the plain, in front of the city of Mantinea, and the Lacedæmonians in a parallel line to the southward of them, between the city and the opening between Scope and Nestane, which formed the boundary of the Mantinici.

2. I have ventured to receive δ' οἱ instead of the reading δή, which is objectionable on the ground of its leaving the sentence without a copula; though the asyndeton cannot be thought of. This reading, justly preferred by Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, as supplying the wanting copula and the article, which could not well be dispensed with, I have not been deterred from receiving by the slenderness of authority from MSS., since the οἱ might, in dictation, easily pass into η by what is called itacism.

ὑπὸ σπουδῆς καθίσταντο ἐς κόσμον τὸν ἑαυτῶν] literally, 'put or threw themselves into their ranks under the influence of haste;' the ὑπὸ here denoting, like præ in Latin, the actuating principle, in mental cause or disposition of mind, which sets the physical powers to work. Of course this use is formed figuratively from that by which ὑπὸ denotes the physical cause or occasion of any thing. See on both these uses Matthæi and Kuhner's Gr. in voc., of whose examples those most to the present purpose are Soph. Trach. 519, ἦν ὑπ' ἀγνοίας ὁρᾷς, præ ignorantiâ. Poppo is of opinion that ὑπὸ σπουδῆς is equivalent to σπουδῇ, κατὰ σπουδὴν (see iii. 33. viii. 107); but though these phrases are synonymous, they are not quite equivalent, any more than our from hurry and in a hurry. The term σπουδὴ here denotes promptitude and zeal, implying rapidity.

3. ὑπ' ἐκείνου πάντα ἄρχεται] Meaning that here, in the disposition of the forces for battle, the king exercised absolute authority, uncontrolled by any council. The next words, καὶ τοῖς μὲν πολεμάρχοις, &c., are meant to exemplify the mode in which this authority was exercised. Render, 'and accordingly he makes known what must be done to the polemarchs, and they to the lochagi; those to the pentecontors, they again to the enomotarchs, and they to the enomotiæ.' Compare Onosand. p. 89, (a passage evidently written with a view to the present,) δεῖ δὲ τοῖς πρώτοις ἡγεμόσιν εἰπεῖν, ἐκείνους δὲ ἀπαγγεῖλαι τοῖς μετ' αὐτούς, εἶτα τούτους τοῖς κατόπιν, εἶτα ἐξῆς ἄχρι τῶν τελευταίων. On the force of the terms πολεμάρχοις, λοχαγοῖς, πεντηκοντῆρσιν, ἐνωμοτάρχαις, and ἐνωμοτίᾳ, and on the general subject of the military system of the Lacedæmonians, see Müller's Dor. ii. p. 231. Wachsm. Ant. Gr. ii. 1, p. 383. Manso, Spart. i. 2, p. 225, seqq. Hermann's Ant. Gr. § 292, and other authorities referred to in Poppo's notes.

4. κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ] 'in the same order,' namely, by transmission from the king to the lowest officers. Τὸ ἐπιμελὲς τοῦ δρωμένου, literally, 'the care of what is being done.' Of which very rare use of τὸ ἐπιμελὲς I have met with no other example elsewhere except in Joseph. Ant. xvi. 7, 3.

πολλοῖς προσήκει. LXVII. Τότε δὲ κέρας μὲν εὐώνυμον Σκιρῖται αὐτοῖς καθίσταντο, ἀεὶ ταύτην τὴν τάξιν, μόνοι Λακεδαιμονίων, ἐπὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν ἔχοντες· παρὰ δ' αὐτοῖς οἱ ἐπὶ Θράκης Βρασίδειοι στρατιῶται, καὶ Νεοδαμώδεις μετ' αὐτῶν· ἔπειτ' ἤδη Λακεδαιμόνιοι αὐτοὶ ἐξῆς καθίστασαν τοὺς λόχους, καὶ παρ' αὐτοὺς Ἀρκάδων Ἡραιῆς, μετὰ δὲ τούτους Μαινάλιοι, καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ δεξιῷ κέρᾳ Τεγεᾶται καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων ὀλίγοι, τὸ ἔσχατον ἔχοντες, καὶ οἱ ἱππῆς αὐτῶν ἐφ' ἑκατέρῳ τῷ κέρᾳ. 2. Λακεδαιμόνιοι μὲν οὕτως ἐτάξαντο· οἱ δ' ἐναντίοι αὐτοῖς, δεξιὸν μὲν κέρας Μαντινῆς εἶχον, ὅτι ἐν τῇ ἐκείνων τὸ ἔργον ἐγίγνετο, παρὰ δ' αὐτοὺς οἱ ξύμμαχοι Ἀρκάδων ἦσαν, ἔπειτα Ἀργείων οἱ χίλιοι λογάδες, οἷς ἡ πόλις ἐκ πολλοῦ ἄσκησιν τῶν

Ch. LXVII. 1. Σκιρῖται] These were, as Müller says, the inhabitants of the district Scirītis, on the extreme frontier of Laconia, bordering on that of Parrhasia in Arcadia. They had, he adds, rights and duties defined by certain compacts, and their manner of fighting was Arcadian. This, indeed, might well be supposed, considering that they were, as Hesych. informs us, of Arcadian extraction. Nay, as we find from Steph. Byz., the Scīritis was formerly part of Arcadia; though on the inhabitants forming a close connexion with Laconia, it came to be considered part of that country; and being a frontier province, and of great natural strength, it was as it were a shield to Laconia on that side; and accordingly the people were encouraged to warlike pursuits by the grant of great immunities and privileges, similarly as the inhabitants of the present military frontiers on the border-lands of Austria and Russia.

Notwithstanding what Müller says, I am still, as formerly, of opinion that these were heavy-armed; for otherwise how could they have held a post, and that an important one, in the line of battle? See Xen. Rep. Laced. xii. 3, and Cyr. iv. 2, 1. Wachsm. Ant. Gr. ii. 1, p. 379, and especially Col. Leake's Morea, vol. iii. p. 28, where the situation of Scīritis is accurately described as 'consisting of those rugged and barren hills rising in one part to a considerable height, which occupy the triangular space contained between the upper Eurotas westward and the passes eastward, through which leads the direct road from Tegea to Sparta.' Dr. Arnold is of opinion, that the name itself, Scīritis, expresses the wild rugged nature of the country; the signification of σκειρὸς or σκίρος, from which it is derived, being hard and rugged, as in Tabulæ Heracl. σκίρου καὶ ἀῤῥήκτου γῆς: yet there by σκίρον is rather denoted white earth, like our pipe clay. That σκίρος or σκίῤῥος signifies hard, is true; but it bears that sense only as said of a tumour, and not that of rugged, as said of the face of a country: and I suspect the name to have been derived rather from σκεῖρος, which word is explained by Hesych. as equivalent to ἄλσος, ὕρμος. And so he adds, σκείρα or σκεῖρα· χωρία ὕλην ἔχοντα εὐθετοῦσαν εἰς φρύγανα: and this view is confirmed by the spelling of Hesych. Σκειρίτης λόχος. Thus σκεῖρος would mean what in old English is denoted by the Weald or Woodland district, — not meaning a forest, but a country abounding in thickets, growing brush-wood, with occasionally stunted trees, and mostly hilly, very much like what our Epping Forest formerly was. It is true that Col. Leake speaks of the country as rugged and hilly, but says nothing of woodland. And no wonder; since many parts of England called the wealds, from their being formerly woodland, are now in most parts quite bare of trees.

αὐτοῖς καθίσταντο] Here αὐτοῖς stands, as Bauer remarks, for αὐτῶν: and καθίσταντο is, as Poppo observes, of the passive voice, the sense being, 'die Scīriten stellen sich als ihr linker Flügel auf.' By οἱ ἐπὶ Θράκης Βρασίδειοι are meant, the soldiers who had served under Brasidas in Thrace. On Νεοδαμώδεις see note supra ch. 34. Παρ' αὐτούς, juxta eos, 'alongside of those.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 588, 4. Ἐφ' ἑκατέρῳ τῷ κέρᾳ. This was the usual place of the cavalry. See Eurip. Suppl. 660. Xen. Hist. iii. 2, 16. See more in note at iv. 93.

2. οἱ χίλιοι λογάδες] These differed little or nothing from the regular soldiers of modern times. The expression, just after, ἐκ πολλοῦ, can only refer to the period when, by the reverses of the Lacedæmonians, the Argives began to enterἐς τὸν πόλεμον δημοσίᾳ παρεῖχε, καὶ ἐχόμενοι αὐτῶν οἱ ἄλλοι Ἀργεῖοι, καὶ μετ' αὐτοὺς οἱ ξύμμαχοι αὐτῶν, Κλεωναῖοι καὶ Ὀρνεᾶται, ἔπειτα Ἀθηναῖοι ἔσχατοι τὸ εὐώνυμον κέρας ἔχοντες, καὶ ἱππῆς μετ' αὐτῶν οἱ οἰκεῖοι.

LXVIII. Τάξις μὲν ἥδε καὶ παρασκευὴ ἀμφοτέρων ἦν· τὸ δὲ στρατόπεδον τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων μεῖζον ἐφάνη. 2. ἀριθμὸν δὲ γράψαι, ἢ καθ' ἑκάστους ἑκατέρων ἢ ξύμπαντας, οὐκ ἂν ἐδυνάμην ἀκριβῶς· τὸ μὲν γὰρ Λακεδαιμονίων πλῆθος διὰ τῆς πολιτείας τὸ κρυπτὸν ἠγνοεῖτο, τῶν δ' αὖ διὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπειον κομπῶδες ἐς τὰ tain hopes of recovering their ancient sway in Peloponnesus. In fact, it is expressly stated in Diod. Sic. xii. 75, that at that period they selected the youngest, and strongest, and wealthiest of their citizens, whom they discharged from all other public business, and, supplying with support at the public charge, directed them continually to attend to military exercises. Bp. Thirlwall, indeed, understands our author to mean, that the Thousand had been long instituted. Yet, since he supposes, agreeably to the view above propounded, that the corps was instituted when the Argives began to cherish hopes of recovering their ancient rank in Peloponnesus, this is surely equivalent to admitting that it was of comparatively recent institution; for it was only since the reverses of Lacedæmon during the last four years, that the Argives had entertained such hopes. Accordingly we must understand the expression ἐκ πολλοῦ in a very qualified sense to signify jamdudum, 'for some time;' a sense which it is found to bear not unfrequently in the best writers; e. g. Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 19, Thiem. αἱ ἐκ πολλοῦ παρεσκευασμέναι πλεονεξίαι, 'already prepared.' Aristoph. Nub. 914, θρασὺς εἰ πολλοῦ, where, for εἰ πολλοῦ, I would propose to read εἰ 'κ πολλοῦ, according to which the sense will be, 'you are already become bold.' Such is also the use of jam diu in Latin: and similarly πάλαι in Greek and olim in Latin, though properly signifying 'a long time ago,' are not unfrequently used in the sense lately: the reason for which is, that such terms as denote time indefinite, being comparative terms, admit of the greatest latitude of sense.

Κλεωναῖοι] The site of Cleonæ is by Col. Leake fixed at a small hamlet eight miles north from Mycenæ, even yet called Clenes. The only remains, he adds, of Cleonæ, are some Hellenic foundations around a small height upon which are the supporting walls of several terraces. It is, however, quite evident, that the hamlet is not on the site of Cleonæ, though the Hellenic ruins may, and probably are, since in Dodwell, Trav. vol. ii. p. 206, mention is made of a circular and insulated hill, (what was, we may suppose, the ancient citadel,) which seems to have been completely covered with buildings. 'On the side of the hill,' he adds, 'are six ancient terrace-walls, rising one above another, on which the houses and streets were situated.' That this was the site of Cleonæ, is confirmed by the circumstance of its corresponding so exactly to the graphic description given in a few words by Statius, namely, 'ingenti turritæ mole Cleonæ.' Indeed Dodwell says the place is called Clugna.

Ὀρνεᾶται] The exact site of Ὀρνεαὶ has not yet been fixed; but Col. Leake (Morea, vol. iii. p. 350, seq.) has ably shown, from a variety of evidence, that it could not have been more than four or five miles from Phlius, and that it lay on nearly a line from Argos to Phlius.

Ch. LXVIII. 1. It is truly observed by Bp. Thirlwall, that 'our author has described the engagement which ensued with a minuteness such as indicates that he was either himself present, or had access to some peculiarly accurate information. Nay, in the words τὸ στρατόπεδον τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων μεῖζον ἐφάνη, the eye-witness seems to speak:' otherwise the sense may be supposed to be, that the superiority of force appeared to the eye to be on the side of the Lacedæmonians.

2. διὰ τῆς πολιτείας τὸ κρυπτὸν] 'because of the secrecy habitually observed by the Lacedæmonians in their polity or management of public affairs:' on which subject see Müller, Dorians, vol. ii. p. 124. In διὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπειον κομπῶδες we have the somewhat unusual addition of another adjective to one put in the neuter for a substantive. Compare i. 37, τὸ εὐπρεπὲς ἄσπονδον, and vi. 34, τὸ ξυνηθὲς ἤσυχον. Of the expression τὸ κομπῶδες (which is οἰκεῖα πλήθη ἠπιστεῖτο. ἐκ μέντοι τοιοῦδε λογισμοῦ ἔξεστί τῳ σκοπεῖν τὸ Λακεδαιμονίων τότε παραγενόμενον πλῆθος. 3. λόχοι μὲν γὰρ ἐμάχοντο ἑπτὰ ἄνευ Σκιριτῶν, ὄντων ἑξακοσίων, ἐν δὲ ἑκάστῳ λόχῳ πεντηκοστύες ἦσαν τέσσαρες, καὶ ἐν τῇ πεντηκοστύϊ ἐνωμοτίαι τέσσαρες. τῆς τε ἐνωμοτίας ἐμάχοντο ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ ζυγῷ τέσσαρες· ἐπὶ δὲ βάθος ἐτάξαντο μὲν οὐ πάντες ὁμοίως, ἀλλ' ὡς λοχαγὸς ἕκαστος ἐβούλετο, ἐπὶ πᾶν δὲ κατέστησαν ἐπὶ ὀκτώ. παρὰ δὲ ἅπαν, πλὴν Σκιριτῶν, τετρακόσιοι καὶ δυοῖν δέοντες πεντήκοντα ἄνδρες ἡ πρώτη τάξις ἦν.

LXIX. Ἐπεὶ δὲ ξυνιέναι ἔμελλον ἤδη, ἐνταῦθα καὶ παραινέσεις καθ' ἑκάστους ὑπὸ τῶν οἰκείων στρατηγῶν τοιαίδε ἐγίγνοντο· Μαντινεῦσι μέν, ὅτι ὑπέρ τε πατρίδος ἡ μάχη ἔσται, καὶ ὑπὲρ ἀρχῆς ἅμα καὶ δουλείας, τὴν μὲν μὴ, πειρασαμένοις, ἀφαιρεθῆναι, τῆς δὲ μὴ αὖθις πειρᾶσθαι· Ἀργείοις δὲ, ὑπὲρ τῆς τε παλαιᾶς ἡγεμονίας, καὶ τῆς ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ ποτὲ ἰσομοιρίας, μὴ διὰ παντὸς στερισκομένους somewhat rare) examples might be adduced from Dionysius, Polybius, Plutarch, and Pollux.

3. ζυγῷ] 'line.' In this military sense the word occurs in Polyb. xviii. 12, 5, and 13, 2. iii. 81. ii. 69. Polyæn. ii. 10, 1.

Ch. LXIX. 1. ξυνιέναι] 'to meet together [in combat].' Compare Hom. Il. xiv. 393, οἱ δὲ ξύνισαν μεγάλῳ ἀλαλήτῳ. The term, however, is usually followed by some adjunct subjoined for explanation-sake, as Hom. Il. vi. 120, συνίτην μάχεσθαι, and xvi. 476, τὼ δ' αὖτις συνίτην ἐριδος πέρι: and such is the not unfrequent use of ἔριδι συν. in Homer; and so Polyb. x. 7, 6. v. 54, 1, εἰς μάχην συν. Parallel, too, is the use of congredi in Latin, both absol., as Quint. Curt. vi. 1, and with the adjunct prælio, &c. Finally, with the present compare the expression supra iv. 96, 2, ξυνειστήκει.

τὴν μὲν — πειρᾶσθαι] 'in order that they might not be deprived of the one, after experience of it, nor again experience the other.' At πειρασαμένοις (which is to be referred to Μαντινεῦσι) supply αὐτῆς, scil. ἀρχῆς, meaning the rule over the surrounding cities over which Mantineia was mistress, as Thebes over the other Bœotian cities. See v. 29.

The words ὑπὲρ τῆς παλαιᾶς ἡγεμονίας —ἰσομοιρίας have reference, Haack supposes, to ancient and fabulous times; and he refers to Diod. Sic. xii. 75. In my Translation I have pointed out that the words have reference to two things and two periods:—1. the dominion exercised by the Argives in Peloponnesus from the heroic ages down to the Trojan war; 2. to that equal share of influence and authority with the Lacedæmonians which they enjoyed in, after, and up to the Persian. Both these are referred to in Herodot. vii. 148, seq., and the distinction of the two periods is quite marked in the words of ch. 148, καί τοι κατά γε τὸ δίκαιον γίνεσθαι τὴν ἡγεμονίην ἐωυτῶν, (namely, that which the Argives enjoyed in the age of Agamemnon,) ἀλλ' ὅμως σφι (at the time of the Persian war) ἀποχρᾶν κατὰ τὸ ἥμισυ ἡγεομένοισι.

To the above view Poppo, I find, entirely accedes. By Dr. Arnold the ἡγεμονία in question is referred to the times of the Pelopidæ; and the ἰσομοιρία, to the period spoken of by Herodot. i. 82, when the Argives were masters of the eastern coast of Laconia, and contended on equal terms for the possession of Thyria. Of these two views the former is any thing but well founded; and the latter may be pronounced rather specious than solid: not to say that, as Goeller remarks, the term ἰσομοιρία cannot bear the sense 'contending on equal terms.' Nor can ἰσομοιρία refer, as Dr. Arnold seems to imagine, to the equal share of Peloponnesus possessed by the Argives; for there was never a time when that could be said to have place. It is plain that ἰσομοιρία must, like the conjunct term ἡγεμονία, supremacy, be taken figuratively to denote an equal share of influence and authority, as in Xen. Cyr. ii. 2, 13, ὁμότιμοι ὤκνουν τὴν τοῦ ὄχλου ἰσομοιρίαν, and Apoll. 21, μὴ μόνον ἰσομοιρίας τυγχάνειν — ἀλλὰ καὶ προτετιμῆσθαι. Dio Cass. 23, 81. 663, 94: and during the period in question, the Argives had, from ἀνέχεσθαι, καὶ ἄνδρας ἅμα ἐχθροὺς καὶ ἀστυγείτονας ὑπὲρ πολλῶν ἀδικημάτων ἀμύνασθαι· τοῖς δὲ Ἀθηναίοις, καλὸν εἶναι μετὰ πολλῶν καὶ ἀγαθῶν ξυμμάχων ἀγωνιζομένους μηδενὸς λείπεσθαι, καὶ ὅτι, ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ Λακεδαιμονίους νικήσαντες, τήν τε ἀρχὴν βεβαιοτέραν καὶ μείζω ἕξουσι, καὶ οὐ μή ποτέ τις αὐτοῖς ἄλλος ἐς τὴν γῆν ἔλθῃ. 2. τοῖς μὲν Ἀργείοις καὶ ξυμμάχοις τοιαῦτα παρῃνέθη· Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ καθ' ἑκάστους τε, καὶ μετὰ τῶν πολεμικῶν νόμων, ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ὧν ἠπίσταντο τὴν παρακέλευσιν τῆς μνήμης ἀγαθοῖς οὖσιν ἐποιοῦντο, εἰδότες ἔργων ἐκ πολλοῦ μελέτην various causes, perhaps equal weight and influence in Peloponnesus with the Lacedæmonians, though not an equal portion of territory; similarly as, in these days, the weight and influence of Prussia in Germany is nearly equal to that of Austria, though the territory it holds therein is of much less extent.

μὴ διὰ παντὸς στερισκομένους ἀνέχεσθαι] literally, 'not to bear being for ever deprived thereof.' On this use of the partic. for infin. after verbs of permitting, attending, persevering, &c., and which take along with them not an object to which they refer, so much as the sphere of their activity,—see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 550, and Kuhn, Gr. § 686 (Jelf): and compare infra vi. 16, and Hom. Il. v. 895, ἀλλ' οὐ μάν σ' ἔτι δηρὸν ἀνέξομαι ἀλγε' ἔχοντα.

In the words following, ἄνδρας ἅμα ἐχθροὺς καὶ ἀστυγείτονας, there is an allusion to the political maxim then prevalent in Greece, (divided as it was into many petty states,) that the borderers on each state were its natural enemies, and accordingly most to be guarded against. Compare supra iv. 92, Ἀθηναίους δὲ, καὶ προσέτι ὁμόρους ὄντας, πολλῷ μάλιστα δεῖ. Πρός τε γὰρ τοὺς ἀστυγείτονας πᾶσι τὸ ἀντίπαλον καὶ ἐλεύθερον καθίσταται: and vi. 88, κατὰ τὸ ὅμορον διάφοροι, which two passages have allusion to the almost perpetual difference between neighbouring states. Compare also supra i. 15, 3, κατὰ ἀλλήλους δὲ μᾶλλον οἱ ἀστυγείτονες ἐπολέμουν.

καὶ οὐ μή ποτε — ἔλθῃ] Cam. marg. Steph. ἐπέλθῃ. E. Mosqu. [Ven.] ἔλθοι. Optativum post οὐ μὴ ob præcedens ὅτι fortasse aliquis desideret, sicut Sophocl. scripsit Phil. 611, ἐθέσπισεν τἀπὶ Τροίας πέργαμα ὡς οὐ μή ποτε πέρσοιεν. Conf. Matth. p. 990, adn. 3, 'Sed ita futuri optativus requireretur. Vulgarem autem particularum οὐ μὴ structuram nonnunquam etiam post ὅτι servari docet Plut. De cap. ex inimic. util. p. 352, E, ἀλλὰ μεῖζον καὶ κιλλιστον, ὅτι, τῷ δικαίῳ χρῆσθαι καὶ πρὸς ἐχθροὺς ἐθισθέντες, οὐδέποτε μὴ προσενεχθῶμεν ἀδίκως καὶ πανούργως τοῖς συνήθεσι καὶ φίλοις.' (Poppo.) Add, iv. 95, οὐ μή ποτε — ἐσβάλωσιν. Dr. Arnold here recognises the frequent mixture of the oratio recta and obliqua. Οὐ μὴ ἔλθῃ, he adds, does not depend upon ὅτι, but is in the mood and tense that the speaker himself would have used, namely, 'No other invader will ever attack us.' Here we have the use of the aor. subjunct. for the future, as in Soph. Phil. 103, οὐ μὴ πίθηται.

2. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ καθ' ἑκάστους — ἐποιοῦντο] The grammatical construction of this perplexed sentence has been variously laid down, but best, I apprehend, by Poppo and Haack as follows: ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἀγαθοῖς οὖσιν, ἐποιοῦντο τὴν παρακέλευσιν τῆς μνήμης (scil. τοῦ μεμνῆσθαι) ἐκείνων ὧν ἠπίσταντο (i. e. τῆς μελέτης αὐτῶν). Dr. Arnold observes, that παρακέλευσις τῆς μνήμης is quite equivalent to ὑπόμνησις at iv. 95. The sense of the words is well expressed by Goeller as follows: 'Lacedæmonii vero tum singuli singulos, tum una cantu bellico invicem se monuerunt, ut eorum, quæ didicissent, pro fortitudine sua meminissent.' The full meaning intended is, 'and now the Lacedæmonians, individually, one amongst another, both by words and with the music of their war-tunes, addressed one to another the exhortation of remembrance to such as were brave, respecting that which they were well aware of,—that long-continued practice of deeds is more efficacious than any well-conceived admonition of words for the nonce.' On the expression μελέτη,—by which is denoted that practical study of a thing which carries with it use and exercise,—compare Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 55, θαυμάζοιμ' ἄν, εἴ τι πλέον ἂν ὠφελήσειε λόγος καλῶς ῥηθεὶς εἰς ἀνδραγαθίαν. The best commentary on this whole passage is supplied by a very similar one at iv. 126, init.

Of νόμος in this sense, to denote tune, an πλείω σώζουσαν ἢ λόγων δι' ὀλίγου καλῶς ῥηθεῖσαν παραίνεσιν. LXX. Καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἡ ξύνοδος ἦν· Ἀργεῖοι μὲν καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἐντόνως καὶ ὀργῇ χωροῦντες, Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ βραδέως καὶ ὑπὸ αὐλητῶν πολλῶν ‡ νόμῳ ἐγκαθεστώτων, οὐ τοῦ θείου χάριν, ἀλλ' ἵνα example occurs in Xen. Anab. v. 4, where it is said of the Monoscœi rushing to battle, ἅμα ἐχόρευον νόμῳ τινὶ ᾄδοντες. Compare also a passage of Lucian, ii. 273, 95, where the Lacedæmonians are represented as going to battle πρὸς αὐλὸν καὶ ῥυθμὸν, καὶ εὔτακτον ἔμβασιν ποδός: and Plut. Lycurg. ch. 22, where it is said that 'Lycurgus bid the pipers play the Castorœan tune, and himself set off with the ἐμβατηρίου παιᾶνος.' On the subject of these νόμοι πολεμικοί, meaning military tunes or airs, both vocal and instrumental, see Plut. de Vit. Pud. § 15. The Scholiast says they were hortatory, (perhaps many of them written by Tyrtæus,) and were called ἐμβατήρια: and so Hesych. Thus they were like our marches, except that the latter are purely instrumental. Even, however, when instrumental, they might be hortatory, and were meant to rouse up the courage, and, as the poet says, 'to be spirit-stirring, and provoke to arms.' With respect to the custom itself, it is plain from Athen. p. 517, that the Lacedæmonians borrowed it from the Cretans. And that it prevailed among the Lydians, we learn from passages of Herodotus, Polybius, and Pausanias, adduced in my Translation with Notes.

CH. LXX. 1. ξύνοδος ἦν] I have here chosen to place a colon, (in preference to the period of Duk. and Bauer, or the comma of Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller,) such being fully borne out by several examples of this idiom adduced in Poppo, Prol. i. 1, 109, and Poppo's note on iv. 23, 2, as Herodot. viii. 74, πολλὰ ἐλέγετο περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν· οἱ μὲν—Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ, &c. Notwithstanding what Bauer urges, ξύνοδος certainly signifies 'the engagement,' or conflict, as in Bacis ap. Herodot. ix. 43. Xen. Anab. i. 10, 3, and elsewhere. Of ἐντόνως the sense is, 'intentis viribus,' 'summâ suâ virium contentione, omnibus nervis,' as in Dio Cass. 546, 100. Plut. Syll. 21. Pomp. 46. Arat. 7. Eurip. Cycl. 605, λήψεται τὸν τράχηλον ἐντόνως: and such is the use of the adj. ἔντονος in Plut. tom. viii. 483, ἔσχεν ὁ ἀγὼν ἐντονωτάτην ἅμιλλαν, and Eurip. Belleroph. frag. xxii. 1, νεών τι δρᾷν ἔντονοι χέρες. In all these instances there is an allusion to the effect of corporeal exertion, whereby the nerves are required to be strung for the effect: and in marching (as denoted by χωροῦντες) this is especially necessary, since, as the poet says, 'Has not wise nature strung the legs and feet with firmest nerves?' Compare also Herodot. vii. 53, ἀντέχεσθαι τοῦ πολέμου ἐντ. Moreover, as the term ἐντόνως respects the powers of the body, so does ὀργῇ the passions of the mind, which set the physical powers to work; and it may be rendered impetu, vehementer, 'impetuously:' in which sense the word occurs supra i. 140. iii. 42. i. 31, ὀργῇ φέρειν τὸν πόλεμον. Appian, ii. 460, 82, ἐπελθὼν αὐτῷ σὺν ὀργῇ. Pausan. x. 21, 2, ὀργῇ καὶ θυμῷ ἐπὶ τοὺς ἐναντίους ἐχώρουν. Arrian, E. A. i. 8. 14, ὀργῇ ἐχώρουν. Hence it is not necessary, with A. Gellius and Heringa, to read, for ὀργῇ, ὁρμῇ; though these two words are sometimes confounded; as in a passage of Joseph. Bell. Jud. iv. 3, 12, ἀνειληφότων ὀργὴν ἰσχυροτέραν τῶν ὅπλων, where the reading ὁρμὴν is evidently a mere gloss.

ὑπὸ αὐλητῶν πολλῶν, &c.] Here the ὑπὸ has the force treated of in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 592, and Kuhn. Gr. § 639, 4, (Jelf's,) by which it denotes an intermediate cause under the guidance or co-operation of which any thing happens, and is especially said of the accompaniment of musical instruments, by which the action is regulated. So Herodot. i. 17, ἐστρατεύετο ὑπὸ συρίγγων. Hom. Il. xviii. 492, ὑπὸ συρίγγων—ἕστασαν ἰακχάν, where our under or to will not ill express the sense.

Here it is not easy to determine which is the true reading,—vulg. νόμῳ, or, what is found in most of the best MSS., and has been edited by Haack and Poppo, νόμου. According to the latter, the sense will be, ad cantum multorum tibicinum, 'to the tune of many pipers:' and so in Pausan. iii. 17, 5, cited by Poppo, it is said that the Lacedæmonians sallied forth to battle not with trumpets, but πρός τε αὐλῶν μέλη καὶ ὑπὸ λύρας καὶ κιθάρας κρούσμασιν. That writer probably read in the passage of our author, which he there evidently had in view, νόμου: and in this sense, to denote tune, the word occurs (besides the passages above adduced) in Æschyl. Theb. 954, and Plat. p. 72, 2, κιθαρῳδικῆς ᾠδῆς — λεγομένων νόμων προοίμια. Aristoph. Pax, 1160, νόμον ᾠδὴν ᾄδειν, and Ran. 1282, νόμοι κιθαρῳδικοί.

ὁμαλῶς μετὰ ῥυθμοῦ βαίνοντες προέλθοιεν, καὶ μὴ διασπασθείη αὐτοῖς ἡ τάξις, ὅπερ φιλεῖ τὰ μεγάλα στρατόπεδα ἐν ταῖς προσόδοις ποιεῖν. LXXI. Ξυνιόντων δ' ἔτι, Ἄγις ὁ βασιλεὺς τοιόνδε ἐβουλεύσατο δρᾶσαι. τὰ στρατόπεδα ποιεῖ μὲν καὶ ἅπαντα τοῦτο, ἐπὶ τὰ δεξιὰ κέρατα αὐτῶν ἐν ταῖς ξυνόδοις μᾶλλον ἐξωθεῖται, καὶ περιίσχουσι κατὰ τὸ τῶν ἐναντίων εὐώνυμον ἀμφότεροι τῷ δεξιῷ, διὰ τὸ, φοβου-

Pol. iv. 20, 9, οἱ φιλόξενοι νόμοι. Plut. vi. 522, R, νόμοι αὐλητικοί. Finally, the same was evidently read by our poet Milton, who, by an imitation of the present expression, has in his Parad. Lost, i. 550, 'they move In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood Of flutes and soft recorders:' and so did plainly Aulus Gellius, who says, 'Thucydides Lacedæmonios—tibiarum modulis in prœliis usos esse refert.' By νόμου, however, they certainly meant, not tune, but modulo, or measure, with reference to the number of notes in a bar, and the kind thereof, whether triplets or otherwise, according to which the steps in dancing are regulated. Similarly in a passage of Spenser's Fairie Queen we have, 'And to the measures of the melodies Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet:' and so the Scholiast on Pindar says, νόμος ὁ κιθαρῳδικός· τρόπος τῆς μελῳδίας ἁρμονίαν ἔχων τακτὴν καὶ ῥυθμὸν ὡρισμένον: and supposing νόμου to be the true reading, such may justly be regarded as the right sense; for as to that of tune, it is somewhat feeble and jejune. After all, however, νόμῳ (which is retained by Bekker and Goeller) is probably the true reading; for the sense tune, strain, or measure is so implied, as not to need being expressed; while, if νόμου be read, ἐγκαθεστώτων will require some adjunct; for the construction quite forbids it to be taken with οὐ τοῦ θείου χάριν. As to Poppo's argument against reading νόμῳ and joining it with ἐγκαθεστώτων,—namely, that it needs no such additament,—that has little force; for ἐγκαθεστώτων, in effect, needs some additament; and this want νόμῳ is well fitted to supply; for as it is said in Xen. de Laced. Rep. xiii. 8, νόμος αὐλεῖν πάντας τοὺς παρόντας αὐλητάς. Suffice it to add, that the word is one highly significant and perfectly suitable; since such matters as that in question were at Sparta strictly regulated by law. The pipers were there by law ordered to station themselves in certain places of the front line. Nay, the exercise of the profession itself was regulated by law; insomuch that, from a passage of Herodot. vi. 60, referred to by Dr. Arnold, we learn that these pipers were a distinct caste, equally with the heralds; no stranger being allowed to exercise their profession.

By the words, just after, οὐ τοῦ θείου χάριν, it is meant to be denoted, that this was done, as A. Gellius expresses the sense, 'non ex aliquo ritu religionum (literally, rei divinæ) gratiâ,' i. e. not on account of any religious purpose, as though the flautists played hymns to the gods: of which use (not a little rare) of τὸ θεῖον I have noted examples elsewhere in Eurip. Sisyph. frag. i. 16, τὸ θεῖον εἰσηγήσατο, and Iph. T. 572. Frag. Incert. 120, 20. Hel. 13. Dio Cass. 253, μήτε τοῦ θείου (religionis) ἔτι φροντίσαι. Jos. Ant. v. 3, 2. xvii. 2, 4. Pausan. ix. 25, 7. In another passage supra iii. 82, 7, our author uses the fuller expression τῷ θείῳ νόμῳ.

καὶ μὴ διασπασθείη αὐτοῖς ἡ τάξις] 'and lest the order [of their ranks] should be broken.' Compare Arrian, E. A. ii. 10, 4, τοῦ μὴ διασπασθῆναί τι τῆς φάλαγγος. On the studious care of the Lacedæmonians to keep their ranks unbroken, see Pausan. iv. 8, 1. Of προσόδοις the sense is 'advances, approaches,' as Hdot. vii. 212, ταύτῃσι τῇσι προσόδοισι τῆς μάχης, and ix. 101. Valla and Duk. render ποιεῖν by accidere, adducing a passage of Aristoph. Plut. 1205, where we have, καὶ μὴν πολὺ τῶν ἄλλων χυτρῶν τἀναντία Αὗται ποιοῦσι: yet that is, properly speaking, no version; though the idiom of the two languages may forbid a nearer approach.

CH. LXXI. 1. ξυνιόντων δ' ἔτι] literally, 'as they were now just engaging,' 'closing in combat,' 'about to engage.'

τὰ στρατόπεδα ποιεῖ—εὐσκεπαστότατον εἶναι] This portion is, in some measure, parenthetical; and the words are, as Dukas says, ἐν ἤθει λεγόμενα, i. e., as Plutarch de Aud. Poet. expresses it, are introduced agreeably to the situation and circumstances of the person spoken of: for, he adds, the historian, while intending to relate the affair that respected Agis,—then having, as it were, remembered that such would be common to every army so circumstanced,—began as it were ab origine to speak generally of every armament, and then thought fit to despatch what he had μένους, προστέλλειν τὰ γυμνὰ ἕκαστον ὡς μάλιστα τῇ τοῦ ἐν δεξιᾷ παρατεταγμένου ἀσπίδι, καὶ νομίζειν τὴν πυκνότητα τῆς ξυγκλήσεως εὐσκεπαστότατον εἶναι· καὶ ἡγεῖται μὲν τῆς αἰτίας ταύτης ὁ πρωτοστάτης τοῦ δεξιοῦ κέρως, προθυμούμενος ἐξαλλάσσειν ἀεὶ τῶν ἐναντίων τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γύμνωσιν, ἔπονται δὲ διὰ τὸν αὐτὸν φόβον καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι. 2. καὶ τότε περιέσχον μὲν οἱ Μαντινῆς πολὺ τῷ κέρᾳ τῶν Σκιριτῶν, ἔτι δὲ πλέον οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ Τεγεᾶται τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ὅσῳ μεῖζον τὸ στράτευμα εἶχον. 3. δείσας δὲ Ἄγις μὴ σφῶν κυκλωθῇ τὸ εὐώνυμον, καὶ νομίσας ἄγαν περιέχειν τοὺς Μαντινέας, τοῖς μὲν Σκιρίταις καὶ Βρασιδείοις ἐσήμηνεν † ἐπεξαγαγόντας ἀπὸ σφῶν, ἐξισῶσαι τοῖς Μαντινεῦσιν, ἐς δὲ τὸ διά-first begun to speak of. Render literally, 'armies even all of them in their advance to battle do this, [fall into this,] they (meaning the lines) are pushed out rather towards the right wing; and each [party] with the right wing stretches around and outflanks over-against the enemy's left, [and that] because each one through fear seeks especially to shelter his unguarded side under the shield of the one stationed on the right of him, and thinks that [in so doing] the closeness of the inlocking (i. e. closing of the ranks) is the fittest expedient for defence.' This use of ἐξωθεῖσθαι to signify pushing or extending out, as said of the lines of an army, is not unfrequent in Dionys. Hal., Arrian, and other of the historians. Of the other military term περιίσχειν, to out-flank, examples are found in Arrian, Ælian, and other writers; though ὑπερκερᾷν and ὑπερτείνειν are more frequent.

προστέλλειν τὰ γυμνὰ] literally, 'to move near his unguarded side' (προσάγειν, as the Scholiast explains); the term προστ. standing, as Poppo remarks, for προσστ., on which use see note at i. 15, and Heindorf on Plat. Gorg. 223. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 239, 93, ταῖς τῶν παρασταῶν ἀσπίσι τὰς γυμνώσεις σφῶν προστέλλειν. On the expression τὰ γυμνὰ see note at iii. 23. With the expression ξυγκλήσεως, meaning the closing of the ranks, compare Dio Cass. 188, 30. Arrian, E. A. i. 4, 3, and v. 22, 12. Εὐσκεπαστότατον εἶναι, 'ad tegendum aptissimum esse,' i. e. tutissimum esse. Of this word, which is very rare, I have noted an example elsewhere in Dio Cass. 592, 12, πρὸς τὸ ἰσχυρὸν καὶ πρὸς τὸ εὐσκέπαστον αὐτῆς εἴληφε.

ἡγεῖται τῆς αἰτίας ταύτης] 'he originates the cause of the thing,' i. e. is, as Bauer expresses it, the causa causæ. Ὁ πρωτοστάτης, 'the first man on the right of the line.' See Lex. Xen. and Polyb. Ἐξαλλάσσειν — γύμνωσιν, 'to withdraw his unguarded side from the enemy:' where τὴν γύμνωσιν stands for τὰ γυμνὰ μέρη, by a use not unfrequent in the Old Testament. Ἐξαλλάσσω occurs in the same sense in Philostr. ap. Steph. Thes. ἐξαλλάττω δεῦρο ἀπὸ τῆς νεώς: and Xen. Cyneg. x. 7, ἵνα εἰς τὰς ἄρκυς ποιῆται τὸν δρόμον, μὴ ἐξαλλάττων, where sub. τοῦ δρόμου.

3. ἐπεξαγαγόντας ἀπὸ σφῶν] 'drawing off from their own men.' Such is clearly the sense; but what force the ἐπι can have, it is not easy to see. We may best explain it, with Bauer, to mean ad hostem: and so Arnold says, that ἐπεξαγαγεῖν signifies a movement in advance or on the offensive; and he observes, that here and at vii. 52, it denotes a flank movement; comparing the use of ἀντεπεξῆγον, which bears the same sense at viii. 104. Haack, too, compares the expression at viii. 105, ἐπεξαγωγὴ τοῦ κέρως. I have noted also the use of ἐπεξαγαγεῖν in Plut. Anton. ch. 45. There, however, the term merely denotes a drawing forth in battle-array, as in Dio Cass. 345, 33, ἐπεξαγαγὼν παρετάξατο πρὸ τῆς ταφρείας, and 626, 3, and another passage of our author ii. 21, ἐκάκιζον ὅτι, στρατηγὸς ὤν, οὐκ ἐπεξάγοι. Supposing, then, the ἐπ to be correct, the sense will thus be, 'having broken away from the line, to attack the enemy;' which sense the expression also bears at vii. 53. Considering, however, the harshness incurred in ascribing so much sense to ἐπ, I strongly suspect the true reading here to be ὑπεξαγαγόντας, and there ἐξαγαγ., for the ἐπι has in almost every MS. of credit no place. It is true that at viii. 105, we have, παυσάμενος τῆς ἐπεξαγωγῆς τοῦ κέρως, καὶ ἐπαναστρέψαντες. But there, I suspect, should be read, for κενον τοῦτο παρήγγελλεν ἀπὸ τοῦ δεξιοῦ κέρως δύο λόχους τῶν πολεμάρχων Ἱππονοΐδᾳ καὶ Ἀριστοκλεῖ ἔχουσι παρελθεῖν καὶ ἐσβαλόντας πληρῶσαι, νομίζων τῷ θ' ἑαυτῶν δεξιῷ ἔτι περιουσίαν ἔσεσθαι, καὶ τὸ κατὰ τοὺς Μαντινέας βεβαιότερον τετάξεσθαι. LXXII. Ξυνέβη οὖν αὐτῷ—ἅτε ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ ἐφόδῳ καὶ ἐξ ὀλίγου παραγγείλαντι—τόν τε Ἀριστοκλέα καὶ τὸν Ἱπποκοΐδαν μὴ θελῆσαι παρελθεῖν (ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τοῦτο τὸ αἴτίαμα ὕστερον φεύγειν ἐκ Σπάρτης, δόξαντας μαλακισθῆναι), καὶ τοὺς πολεμίους φθάσαι τῇ προσμίξει, καὶ κελεύσαντος αὐτοῦ, ἐπὶ τοὺς Σκιρίτας ὡς οὐ παρῆλθον οἱ λόχοι, πάλιν αὖ σφίσι προσμῖξαι, μὴ δυνηθῆναι ἔτι μηδὲ τούτους ξυγκλῆσαι. 2. ἀλλὰ μάλιστα δὴ κατὰ πάντα τῇ ἐμπειρίᾳ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐλασσωθέντες τότε, τῇ ἀνδρίᾳ ἔδειξαν οὐκ ἧσσον περιγενόμενοι. 3. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐν χερσὶν ἐγίγνοντο τοῖς ἐναντίοις, τὸ μὲν τῶν Μαντινέων δεξιὸν τρέπει αὐτῶν τοὺς Σκιρίτας καὶ τοὺς Βρασιδείους, καὶ ἐσπεσόντες οἱ Μαντινῆς καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι αὐτῶν, καὶ τῶν Ἀργείων οἱ χίλιοι λογάδες, κατὰ τὸ διάκενον καὶ οὐ ξυγκληισθὲν, τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους διέφθειρον, καὶ κυκλωσάμενοι ἔτρεψαν, καὶ ἐξέωσαν ἐς τὰς ἁμάξας, καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων τῶν ἐπιἐπεξαγωγῆς, ὑπεξαγωγῆς. Certainly the force of the ἐπι is little suitable to a flank movement; while that of ὑπο is highly so. Thus in Latin we have both explicare cornu, classem, or naves, also equites, (placed in the wings,) and in the same sense subducere, to draw off, as in a passage of the Old Testament, Lev. vii. 34, 'spatium ad subducendum agmen;' and xxxvi. 18, 'subductis ordinibus.' Finally, in a passage of Polyæn. vii. 7, 2, for ἐπεξῆγε, ought undoubtedly to be read ὑπεξ., 'drew off.'

ἐξισῶσαι τοῖς Μαντινεῦσιν] 'to make [their line] equal to that of the Mantineans.' Ἐξισ. is here, as at vi. 87, for ἐξισ. ἑαυτούς, which occurs in Soph. El. 1194. Τὸ διάκενον, 'the vacant space,' as iv. 135. Comp. Dio Cass. 596, 20. 1140, 71. Plato, p. 58. 60, 61. The δια here, which is not without force, denotes separation: and so in a similar passage of Arrian, E. A. iii. 14, 2, we have, παραῤῥηξάντων τὸ τῆς πρώτης φάλαγγος τῶν βαρβάρων ἐπιστρέψας κατὰ τὸ διέχον ('at the gap') καὶ ὥσπερ ἔμβολον ποιήσας, &c.

CH. LXXII. 1. ἀλλὰ καὶ—φεύγειν] Dr. Arnold is of opinion that this clause depends not on ξυνέβη αὐτῷ, but on ξυνέβη only; and he refers to a similar carelessness at i. 95. Yet the harshness of the construction may best be remedied by regarding the words as parenthetical.

καὶ κελεύσαντος αὐτοῦ] I have adopted this, the punctuation laid down by Poppo, as best adapted to clear up the obscurity of the passage, which, he shows, should be rendered, 'et [accidit ut] quum, postquam ad Sciritas lochi illi non accesserunt, eos [Sciritas] rursus cum ipso (σφισι, i. e. Agide καὶ τοῖς περὶ αὐτόν) se conjungere jussisset, jam ne hi (Sciritæ) quidem se adjungere et aciem explere possent.' Agreeably to this view, Arnold renders, 'and when Agis, seeing that the two lochi did not come up to take their intended place, ordered the Sciritæ again to rejoin the Lacedæmonian line, he found that neither were these any longer able to close up the opening.'

2. ἀλλὰ μάλιστα—περιγενόμενοι] Render, 'however, the Lacedæmonians, though on that occasion altogether inferior in military science, yet showed themselves as much superior in personal bravery.' I am still, as formerly, of opinion that we must, with Mitford, understand this as meant to allude to Agis, who, in giving this order just at the very onset of the two armies, may be supposed to have acted, as Mitford says, inconsiderately and injudiciously; thereby bringing the line into great danger: for which cause, probably, it was disobeyed; if indeed it was then practicable to do otherwise.

3. ἐξέωσαν] 'drove them off,' namely, from their position: a military term of frequent occurrence in Polybius, Dio Cass., and others of the historians.

τεταγμένων ἀπέκτειναν τινας. 4. καὶ ταύτῃ μὲν ἡσσῶντο οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι· τῷ δὲ ἄλλῳ στρατοπέδῳ, καὶ μάλιστα τῷ μέσῳ, ἧπερ ὁ βασιλεὺς Ἄγις ἦν, καὶ περὶ αὐτὸν οἱ τριακόσιοι ἱππῆς καλούμενοι, προσπεσόντες τῶν τε Ἀργείων τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις καὶ Πεντελόχοις ὠνομασμένοις, καὶ Κλεωναίοις καὶ Ὀρνεάταις καὶ Ἀθηναίων τοῖς

4. οἱ τριακόσιοι ἱππῆς καλούμενοι] From Herodot. v. 56, this corps would seem to have consisted of one hundred, which was probably the usual number for the king's body-guard in battle: but the complete number appears to have been three hundred; a number, moreover, confirmed by other passages of Hdot. vii. 205, and viii. 124; for there Larcher and Schweigh. have proved that we are to understand the same corps as in this passage of our author. Those commentators have also shown from a passage of Strabo, x. 420, that, though called horse, they were not really such: and this is borne out by the account of Thucydides; for horse were never stationed in the centre, but at the wings; where, in this battle, the cavalry were placed. See ch. 67. And it appears that there is an allusion to this kind of misnomer intended by the term καλούμενοι.

In the above view, propounded in my Translation, Dr. Arnold, I find, coincides; adding, that 'these ἱππῆς were probably, at first, chiefs who fought round their king, not on foot, [as in this, the age of Thucydides,] but in their chariots; this being the original sense of ἱππεὺς and ἱππότης.' This view, however, may be pronounced rather ingenious than solid. It may rather be supposed that the ἱππεῖς were originally an order of persons chosen, like the ἱππῆς at Athens, out of the ἔφηβοι at large, from their possessing some considerable stake in the country, by landed property; also, that they originally served on horseback, but that, afterwards, they became merely an order of persons privileged to take their station near the king, and thus formed a sort of garde d'honneur: and as the king was always in the centre, which was composed entirely of infantry, so these so-called horsemen at length served on foot: and agreeably to their then duty, as that of a guard of honour around the king, they were, in the then constitution of Lacedæmon, chosen not from property only, but, as we learn from Xen. Rep. Lac. iv. 3, from personal qualification, as picked men from the general body of the ἔφηβοι, in the very flower of their age, and chosen and probably commanded by three persons appointed by the Ephori, called ἱππαγρέται or horse-musterers, i. e. muster-masters of the ἱππεῖς. Our term cavalier supplies a similar instance of a change of meaning; for it originally denoted a horseman, though subsequently a soldier in general.

With respect to the next words, τοῖς πρεσβ. καὶ Πεντελόχοις, there a yet greater difficulty exists, arising from an almost total want of information on the subject of the corps called the Five-battalions. Now Dr. Arnold supposes 'that Argos originally, like Sparta and Messena, contained five districts, each of which sent its own λόχος into the field; so that the whole national army might properly be called the five lochi: and that the name might subsist long after the changes introduced into the Argive constitution, by the admission of so many of the Perioeci to the rights of citizenship, had destroyed the division which had given rise to it.' 'The expression (continues he) of Thucydides, πέντε λόχοις ὠνομασμένοις, like that of ἱππῆς καλούμενοι, just before, may imply perhaps that it was only a name, now no longer significant, for the whole national strength of Argos, when assembled together in one army.' This, too, is nearly the view of the subject adopted by Wachsm. Ant. Gr. i. 2, p. 215. But it is truly remarked by Poppo, that 'unfortunately these notions have but little to support them in the words of our author, since the omission of the article before the words πέντε λόχοις evinces that these λόχοι are not distinguished from the πρεσβύτεροι, but that the πρεσβ. themselves are called πέντε λόχοι.' He adds, that 'the πρεσβ. are called such in respect to the χίλιοι λογάδες, for they are the same as those who at ch. 67 are called οἱ ἄλλοι Ἀργεῖοι.' In this latter view I entirely coincide; the words καὶ πέντε λόχοις ὠνομασμένοις being meant to show by what name this corps went, as well as the preceding, (the Three-hundred, called Horsemen,) namely, the so-named Five-battalions. Agreeably to this view, I have chosen to recal the reading of all the editions up to Duker's, Πεντελόχοις, which is found in several of the best MSS., as the Clar., Cass., Aug., Reg., Gr., Cant., and παρατεταγμένοις, ἔτρεψαν οὐδὲ ἐς χεῖρας τοὺς πολλοὺς ὑπομείναντας, ἀλλ',—ὡς ἐπῆσαν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι,—εὐθὺς ἐνδόντας, καὶ ἔστιν οὓς καὶ καταπατηθέντας, τοῦ μὴ φθῆναι τὴν ἐγκατάληψιν. LXXIII. Ὡς δὲ ταύτῃ ἐνεδεδώκει τὸ τῶν Ἀργείων καὶ ξυμμάχων στράτευμα, παρερρήγνυντο ἤδη ἅμα καὶ ἐφ' ἑκάτερα, καὶ ἅμα τὸ δεξιὸν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ Τεγεατῶν ἐκυκλοῦτο τῷ περιέχοντι σφῶν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους· καὶ ἀμφοτέρωθεν αὐτοὺς κίνδυνος περιειστήκει, τῇ μὲν κυκλουμένους, τῇ δὲ ἤδη ἡσσημένους. καὶ μάλιστ' ἂν τοῦ στρατεύματος ἐταλαιπώρησαν, εἰ μὴ οἱ ἱππῆς παρόντες αὐτοῖς ὠφέλιμοι ἦσαν. 2. καὶ ξυνέβη τὸν Ἄγιν, ὡς ἤσθετο τὸ εὐώνυμον σφῶν πονοῦν τὸ κατὰ τοὺς Μαντινέας καὶ τῶν Ἀργείων τοὺς χιλίους, παραγγεῖλαι παντὶ τῷ στρατεύματι χωρῆσαι ἐπὶ τὸ νικώμενον. 3. καὶ γενομένου τούτου, οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι ἐν τούτῳ, ὡς which is indeed required by grammatical propriety; for when expressions of this kind have become appellatives, if they have not the article, the words are united, as in the instance of Ἐννεακρούνῳ, Ninepipes, at ii. 15: but where the article has place, the words are kept distinct, as at i. 100, τὸ χωρίον αἱ Ἐννέα ὁδοί. In Latin the words are invariably united, as in the instances of Duoviri, Tresviri, Quatuorviri, Quinqueviri, Sexviri, Decemviri: and whether in Greek or Latin, the name, when it has not the article, and has become a sort of proper name, should commence with a capital letter. The Scholiast, indeed, saw the propriety of uniting the words, since he says, ἅμα ἀναγνωστέον πεντελόχοις; but he does not subjoin the reason for this. In two of the best MSS. there is the addition of ὡς ἀρχιλόχοις, by which nomen ignotum, as Poppo calls it, is meant to be intimated the circumstance that the corps in question formed the five first battalions, i. e. first in rank, as the five first magistrates in a state were called πεντάπρωτοι: and so Quinqueprimi and Decemprimi in Latin.

ὑπομείναντας] Here I would not, with Bauer, Haack, and Goeller, supply the word ἐλθεῖν, (though such is occasionally subjoined after ὑπομένειν in passages like the present,) but regard this as an example of what is in Poppo's Prol. i. 1, 293, called notionum arguta brevitas et densitas; the words here, ἐς χεῖρας, standing for μέχρι τοῦ ἐς χεῖρας ἐλθεῖν. Poppo compares the use of ἐς χεῖρας in Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 34, and another expression frequent in Arrian, ἐς χεῖρας συμμῖξαι: and he adds, 'Paulo post quod non καταπατουμένους legitur, proprie ἔστιν ὧν — καταπατηθέντων exspectes, sed totum ἔτρεψαν (αὐτοὺς) et partes τοὺς πολλοὺς atque ἔστιν οὓς in eodem casu Thuc. posuit.'

τοῦ μὴ φθῆναι τὴν ἐγκατάληψιν] i. e., according to the explanation of Heilm. and Haack, τοῦ μὴ φθῆναι ἐγκαταληψομένους τοὺς πολεμίους, 'obtriti sunt nonnulli, ne invasio hostium anteverteret et occuparet,' or, in other words, 'adeo trepidabant et properè fugiebant.' So Col. Leake expresses the sense of the words, 'and some of them even, through fear of not escaping, allowing themselves to be trodden under foot.' If this view of the sense be thought too harsh, we may, with Bauer and Poppo, suppose that the genit. here denotes, not the event or issue, but the efficient cause; the sense being, 'some were trampled on, because they had not escaped before they were hemmed in or intercepted [by the enemy]:' on which construction Poppo remarks, 'Ut διὰ cum accusativo junctum a causâ ad consilii notionem nonnunquam transferri ad iv. 40, 102, vidimus, vicissim huic genitivo causæ efficientis significatio, quam in substantivis non raro habet, (cf. Matth. Gr. Gr. § 368.) tribuenda, quemadmodum certe tribuitur a Cantac. iii. 51, p. 303. 71, p. 434.'

Ch. LXXIII. 1. παρερρήγνυντο ἤδη ἅμα καὶ ἐφ' ἑκάτερα] Meaning, as Haack, Dobree, and Arnold explain, that the line of the Argive army was broken off either way, 'ad utramque partem disjiciebantur, perrupti ab Agide, ab altera etiam circumcludebantur dextro Lacedæmoniorum cornu:' and so Arnold (or rather Goeller) says, 'by one part of it having advanced beyond it to pursue the enemy, and another part having been beaten back behind it.' See on iv. 96.

παρῆλθε, καὶ ἐξέκλινεν ἀπὸ σφῶν τὸ στράτευμα, καθ' ἡσυχιαν ἐσώθησαν, καὶ τῶν Ἀργείων μετ' αὐτῶν τὸ ἡσσηθέν· οἱ δὲ Μαντινῆς καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, καὶ τῶν Ἀργείων οἱ λογάδες, οὐκέτι πρὸς τὸ ἐγκεῖσθαι τοῖς ἐναντίοις τὴν γνώμην εἶχον· ἀλλ', ὁρῶντες τούς τε σφετέρους νενικημένους καὶ τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ἐπιφερομένους, ἐς φυγὴν ἐτράποντο. 4. καὶ τῶν μὲν Μαντινέων καὶ πλείους διεφθάρησαν, τῶν δὲ Ἀργείων λογάδων τὸ πολὺ ἐσώθη. ἡ μέντοι φυγὴ καὶ ἀποχώρησις οὐ βίαιος οὐδὲ μακρὰ ἦν· οἱ γὰρ Λακεδαιμόνιοι μέχρι μὲν τοῦ τρέψαι, χρονίους τὰς μάχας καὶ βεβαίους τῷ μένειν ποιοῦνται, τρέψαντες δὲ, βραχείας καὶ οὐκ ἐπὶ πολὺ τὰς διώξεις. LXXIV. Καὶ ἡ μὲν μάχη τοιαύτη καὶ ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τούτων ἐγένετο, πλείστου δὲ χρόνου μεγίστη δὴ τῶν Ἑλληνικῶν, καὶ ὑπὸ ἀξιολογωτάτων πόλεων ξυνελθοῦσα. 2. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, προ-

3. παρῆλθε καὶ ἐξέκλινεν ἀπὸ σφῶν] 'had passed by and wheeled off [his force] from them.' Καθ' ἡσυχίαν, 'unmolestedly,' as in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant.

4. καὶ πλείους] For the καί, three MSS. have οἱ: a reading seemingly approved of by Poppo, who, with Arnold, appears to think that the καὶ has no place here: but why, I would ask, should it not bear the sense 'yea, very many,' as used to convey an intensity of sense, and being thus often employed before comparatives and superlatives? So in a passage of Hom. Il. x. 556, we have, θεὸς καὶ ἀμείνονας ('yea, better') ἵππους δωρήσαιτο: and also at xxiii. 551, καὶ μεῖζον ἄεθλον. So, again, in a passage of our author infra vii. 48, we have, πολλοὺς καὶ τοὺς πλείους, 'yea, even most.' At any rate, οἱ πλείους could not here be tolerated, as being at variance with facts; for the Mantineans, having every where been victorious, could not have lost the greater part of their numbers: and indeed we find from what follows, that only 200 fell; which, however, might be thought very many for a town of no great size. Βίαιος, 'precipitate, or hurried.' See note on ii. 33. Βεβαίους τῷ μένειν, i. e., as we should say, 'safe for continuing,' literally, 'firm in remaining or continuing,' sure to continue; for the dative has here the force of quod attinet ad, (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 400, 6.) and τῷ μένειν stands for ὥστε μένειν.

Ch. LXXIV. 1. τοιαύτη καὶ ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τούτων] Dr. Arnold aptly compares the expression at i. 22 and 143, τοιαῦτα καὶ παραπλήσια, remarking, that 'the historian does not intend to throw any uncertainty on his statement here, as at vii. 86, τοιαύτῃ ἢ ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τούτων αἰτίᾳ, the expression τοιαύτη καὶ ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τούτων being an assertion of the accuracy of his description.' Now the particle ἤ would have implied a doubt, whereas the καὶ only serves to strengthen the assertion.

δὲ] For this, many MSS. have δὴ, which has been edited by Bekker in his second edition, who places the other δὴ below in brackets; while Poppo defends the occurrence of the two δὴ's in the same clause by a reference to Hermann on Soph. El. 1059, and Bornem. on Xen. Anab. v. 4, 25. Here, however, the repetition incurs the objection of too much overloading the sentiment. Moreover, the δὲ here is the more proper, as being required to correspond to the μὲν just before; for while the δὲ at οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι cannot possibly have any such force, being merely a particle of transition to signify, 'and now the Lacedæmonians;' here, on the contrary, opposition is denoted, q. d. 'On the one hand the battle was, as to circumstances and details, such as has been described; and, on the other, it was by far the greatest that for a long time had taken place between Greeks and Greeks, and wherein the greatest states were engaged.' At πλείστου χρόνου supply διὰ, the sense being, 'for a considerable time.' With the expression here, ξυνελθοῦσα, conflata, or commissa, compare a similar one in Herodot. i. 74, τῆς μάχης συνεστεώσης. It is well explained by Schneid. in his Lex. as standing for ὑπὸ πόλεων ξυνελθουσῶν γενομένα; for, as Duk. observes, ξυνελθοῦσα, while in word referring to the battle, yet in thought relates to the force which had come together from many, and those most considerable states.

θέμενοι τῶν πολεμίων νεκρῶν τὰ ὅπλα, τροπαῖον εὐθὺς ἵστασαν, καὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς ἐσκύλευον, καὶ τοὺς αὐτῶν ἀνείλοντο καὶ ἀπήγαγον ἐς Τέγεαν, οὓπερ ἐτάφησαν, καὶ τοὺς τῶν πολεμίων ὑποσπόνδους ἀπέδοσαν. 3. ἀπέθανον δὲ Ἀργείων μὲν καὶ Ὀρνεατῶν καὶ Κλεωναίων ἑπτακόσιοι, Μαντινέων δὲ διακόσιοι, καὶ Ἀθηναίων ξὺν Αἰγινήταις διακόσιοι καὶ οἱ στρατηγοὶ ἀμφότεροι. 4. Λακεδαιμονίων δὲ οἱ μὲν ξύμμαχοι οὐκ ἐταλαιπώρησαν, ὥστε καὶ ἀξιόλογόν τι ἀπογενέσθαι· αὐτῶν δὲ χαλεπὸν μὲν ἦν τὴν ἀλήθειαν πυθέσθαι, ἐλέγοντο δὲ περὶ τριακοσίους ἀποθανεῖν.

LXXV. Τῆς δὲ μάχης μελλούσης ἔσεσθαι, καὶ Πλειστοάναξ ὁ ἕτερος βασιλεὺς, ἔχων τούς τε πρεσβυτέρους καὶ νεωτέρους, ἐβοήθησε· καὶ μέχρι μὲν Τεγέας ἀφίκετο, πυθόμενος δὲ τὴν νίκην, ἀπεχώρησε. 2. καὶ τοὺς ἀπὸ Κορίνθου καὶ ἔξω ἰσθμοῦ ξυμμάχους ἀπέστρεψαν πέμψαντες οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι· καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀναχωρήσαντες καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἀφέντες, (Κάρνεια γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἐτύγχανον ὄντα,) τὴν ἑορτὴν ἦγον. 3. καὶ τὴν ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων τότε ἐπιφερομένην αἰτίαν ἔς τε μαλακίαν διὰ τὴν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ξυμφορὰν, καὶ ἐς τὴν ἄλλην ἀβουλίαν τε καὶ βραδυτῆτα, ἐνὶ ἔργῳ τούτῳ ἀπελύσαντο, τύχῃ μὲν, ὡς ἐδόκουν, κακιζόμενοι, γνώμῃ δὲ οἱ αὐτοὶ ἔτι ὄντες.

4. Τῇ δὲ ‡ προτέρᾳ ἡμέρᾳ ξυνέβη τῆς μάχης ταύτης καὶ τοὺς

2. προθέμενοι—τὰ ὅπλα] 'having publicly set forth (or exhibited) the arms.'

Ch. LXXV. 3. Thucydides now mentions the result of this victory to the Lacedæmonians,—namely, in effacing the impression made by their late disaster, and restoring much of their former high reputation for military prowess.

καὶ τὴν ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων, &c.] Render, 'and [thus] the imputation then brought against them by the Greeks, on the score of cowardice, by reason of the calamity in the island [of Sphacteria], and for their sluggishness and want of counsel on other occasions, they by this one deed wiped away.' Ἐς here (as at viii. 88, λοιδορεῖν τινα ἔς τι. Eurip. Med. 1152, ὀνειδίζειν τινὶ ἔς τι, and other passages adduced by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 578.) stands for κατὰ, signifying literally, 'quod attinet ad,' the general notion being preserved.

The next words, τύχῃ μὲν—ὄντες, are meant to advert to the grounds of this change of opinion,—namely, that they had indeed been made to seem cowards by fortune (meaning the chance of war), but that they were still even the same. Such seems to be the true sense of the words, and not that assigned by Poppo, who explains τύχῃ κακιζόμενοι by 'propter fortunam [adversam] reprehensi.' For this, though supported by the general use of κακίζω to signify objurgo, reprehendo, is here forbidden by the antithesis, and also by the context, which requires κακιζόμενοι to be taken for κακοὶ εἶναι, as in Hom. Il. xxiv. 214, ἐπεὶ οὔ ἑ κακιζόμενόν γε κατέκτα, for κακὸν ὄντα. Eurip. Med. 1246, μὴ κακισθεὶς, and El. 982, κακισθείς: or as κακιζόμενοι is at i. 105 used in a passive sense, it may be better to assign to it such a sense here,—namely, 'being made (or represented as) cowardly by fortune.' So κακίζειν τινὰ in Herodot. iii. 145, 'to represent any one to be bad.' The phrase ὡς ἐδόκουν stands here, as often in the Attic writers, (see Elmsl. on Eurip. Herc. 681.) for ὡς ἐδόκει; a use by which the verb is referred to the subject, and not made impersonal, as with us. The phrase is here thrown in to qualify the term κακιζόμενοι, q. d. 'they were not really such, but only were thought to be such.' So supra ch. 28 we have, ἡ Λακεδαίμων μάλιστα δὴ κακῶς ἤκουσε διὰ τὰς ξυμφοράς.

4. προτέρᾳ] So I read, with Bekker in his second edition, from most of the best MSS., for vulg. προτεραίᾳ, which is retained by Poppo and Goeller, and is more agreeable to the general usage of the best authors. Yet the latter is occasionally found in good writers from Homer down-

Ἐπιδαυρίους πανδημεὶ ἐσβαλεῖν ἐς τὴν Ἀργείαν, ὡς ἔρημον οὖσαν, καὶ τοὺς ὑπολοίπους φύλακας τῶν Ἀργείων ἐξελθόντων διαφθεῖραι πολλούς. 5. καὶ Ἠλείων τρισχιλίων ὁπλιτῶν βοηθησάντων Μαντινεῦσιν ὕστερον τῆς μάχης, καὶ Ἀθηναίων χιλίων πρὸς τοῖς προτέροις, ἐστράτευσαν ἅπαντες οἱ ξύμμαχοι οὗτοι εὐθὺς ἐπὶ Ἐπίδαυρον ἕως οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι Κάρνεια ἦγον, καὶ διελόμενοι τὴν πόλιν περιετείχιζον. 6. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι ἐξεπαύσαντο, Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ, ὥσπερ προσετάχθησαν, τὴν ἄκραν τὸ Ἡραῖον εὐθὺς ἐξειργάσαντο. καὶ ἐν wards, and is, from its comparative unfrequency, at once more likely to have been used by our author, and more likely to have been altered in the ordinary copies by the scribes or critics.

καὶ τοὺς ὑπολοίπους—πολλούς] This sentence has much perplexed expositors and commentators, and so little successful have been the attempts to remove the difficulty which it presents, that various conjectures have been proposed; how far warrantable, and how far necessary, will appear by what follows. Dr. Arnold refers the word ἐξελθόντων to φύλακας, and supposing αὐτῶν here to be understood, (which indeed is found in many MSS.) renders, 'as they had ventured out to fight them.' To this, however,—a sense at once jejune and not to be elicited from the words without considerable violence,—I prefer, with Poppo, the rendering of Portus, 'et illorum, qui ad agri custodiam relicti fuerant (ceteris) Argivis ad bellum profectis, multos occiderunt.' But on what grounds this foisting in of the word ceteris can be justified, I know not. There would, indeed, appear to be some word wanting; and such was evidently the impression of those critics who in the MSS. supplied αὐτῶν. The sense, however, yielded by the word in question, is one utterly inadmissible, and that whether according to the view of the sense propounded by Dr. Arnold, or according to the explanation of the words proposed by Poppo, which, I would observe, proceeding on the supposition that the purpose of the word is to distinguish the bulk of the Argives from the guards of the country, involves what is no less than a palpable absurdity; for surely the latter was as much the Argives as the former. Upon the whole, we may, I think, best regard the clause as a negligent mode of expression, of which the sense is, 'and slew many of those who had been left behind as guards by the Argives when they went forth [on the expedition];' though for the words as they now stand, strict propriety of expression would have required τοὺς ὑπολελειμμένους φύλ. ἀπὸ (or ὑπὸ) τῶν Ἀργ.: and so in a passage of Dionys. Hal. i. 134, we have, ὑπολείπεσθαι ἀπό τινος. As it is, then, the sense, literally expressed, is, 'guards of the property of the Argives that went out,' &c. And so, I find, Dukas regards the words as standing for τοὺς ὑπολελειμμένους φύλακας τῶν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως ἐξελθόντων Ἀργείων. Poppo, indeed, remarks, 'Hæc explicatio non potest vera esse, quia τῶν ἐξελθόντων Ἀργείων requireretur, et ἐξελθόντων nimis nude dictum esset.' Yet surely such objections are any thing but valid in a writer like Thucydides, and in a passage like the present, (which is such as to justify a more than usual licence of interpretation,) and indeed proceed upon very confined principles of criticism. That Dionys. Hal. understood the word ἐξελθόντων as I have above explained it, is certain from a passage, evidently written with a view to the present, of his Ant. p. 1937, 8, μία μὲν (scil. δύναμις, 'body of forces') ὑπελείφθη φυλάττειν τὴν πόλιν, αἱ δὲ δύο ἐξῆλθον ἐπὶ Αἰκάνους.

5. διελόμενοι] scil. τὸ ἔργον. See note on ii. 78, and iv. 69.

6. ἐξεπαύσαντο] 'abstiterunt,' 'finem fecerunt.' No example elsewhere do I know of this use of ἐκπαύεσθαι, which seems to be a term of common life, for ἀπεπαύσαντο; for such is the use of ἀποπαύεσθαι in Hom. Il. xxi. 372, ἐγὼν ἀποπαύσομαι—παυέσθω δὲ καὶ οὗτος. Plato, p. 241, τί ἀποπαύει; Theogn. Gn. 2, οὔποτε σεῖο Λήσομαι ἀρχόμενος, οὐδ' ἀποπαυόμενος: and so in Tacit. Annal. ii. 31, we have, 'cæde visâ, miles abstitit.'

τὴν ἄκραν τὸ Ἡραῖον] Meaning that part of the circumvallation consisting of or taking in the promontory on which stood the temple that gave name to the promontory. This promontory Gell thinks was one west of the city; but from Col. Leake's Map it appears to have been east of the city; the promontory being a spit of land running out of the middle of a small bay bounded by two rather obtuse τούτῳ ξυγκαταλιπόντες ἅπαντες τῷ τειχίσματι φρουρὰν, ἀνεχώρησαν κατὰ πόλεις ἕκαστοι. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

LXXVI. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος ἀρχομένου εὐθὺς οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἐπειδὴ τὰ Κάρνεια ἦγαγον, ἐξεστράτευσαν, καὶ ἀφικόμενοι ἐς Τέγεαν, λόγους προὔπεμπον ἐς τὸ Ἄργος ξυμβατηρίους. 2. ἦσαν δὲ αὐτοῖς πρότερόν τε ἄνδρες ἐπιτήδειοι, καὶ βουλόμενοι τὸν δῆμον τὸν ἐν Ἄργει καταλῦσαι· καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἡ μάχη ἐγεγένητο, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἐδύναντο πείθειν τοὺς πολλοὺς ἐς τὴν ὁμολογίαν. ἐβούλοντο δὲ πρῶτον σπονδὰς ποιήσαντες πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, αὖθις ὕστερον καὶ ξυμμαχίαν, καὶ οὕτως ἤδη τῷ δήμῳ ἐπιτίθεσθαι. 3. καὶ ἀφικνεῖται πρόξενος ὢν Ἀργείων Λίχας ὁ Ἀρκεσιλάου, παρὰ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων δύο λόγω φέρων ἐς τὸ Ἄργος, τὸν μὲν καθ' ὅ τι, εἰ βούλονται πολεμεῖν,—τὸν δ' ὡς, εἰ εἰρήνην ἄγειν. 4. καὶ γενομένης πολλῆς ἀντιλογίας (ἔτυχε γὰρ καὶ ὁ Ἀλκιβιάδης παρὼν), οἱ ἄνδρες οἱ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις πράσσοντες, ἤδη καὶ ἐκ τοῦ φανεροῦ τολμῶντες, ἔπεισαν τοὺς Ἀργείους προσδέξασθαι τὸν ξυμβατήριον λόγον. ἔστι δὲ ὅδε.

*LXXVII. "Καττάδε δοκεῖ τᾷ ἐκκλησίᾳ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ξυμβαλέσθαι ποττὼς Ἀργείως, ἀποδιδόντας τὼς παῖδας τοῖς Ὀρχομενίοις καὶ τὼς ἄνδρας τοῖς Μαναλίοις, καὶ τὼς ἄνδρας τὼς ἐν Μαντινείᾳ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἀποδιδόντας, καὶ ἐξ Ἐπιδαύρω ἐκβῶντας, καὶ τὸ τεῖχος ἀναιροῦντας. 2. αἱ δέ κα μὴ εἴκωντι promontories. Epidaurus was, we may suppose, where this spit joined the mainland, otherwise it is difficult to imagine how the taking in of this could form part of the circumvallation of the city. If situated as I apprehend it was, it would have as it were two harbours; a great convenience this to coasting-vessels. By τῷ τειχίσματι is to be understood simply the fortified wall across the peninsula, by which, however, the promontory itself might be said to be fortified.

Ch. LXXVI. 1. λόγους ξυμβατηρίους] A form of expression not unfrequent in the historians, especially Dionys. Hal. and Josephus.

3. δύο λόγω] 'two proposals,' or, as we should say, alternatives. Compare Livy, xxi. 18, (cited by Wasse,) 'In hoc sinu et bellum et pacem vobis fero.'

τὸν μὲν καθ' ὅ τι—τὸν δ' ὡς] At each of these forms (each equivalent to the Latin quemadmodum) Haack and Goeller would supply ἔσται, recognising here the idiom treated of in Rost, Gr. § 100, note 4: while Poppo, thinking the idiom not here sufficiently established, proposes to supply, with others, πολεμήσουσι and εἰρήνην ἄξουσι. But that the ὡς is really equivalent to καθ' ὅ τι, none of these commentators has evinced. Perhaps it rather stands for πῶς, as in a passage of the New Testament, Luke xxiii. 55. xxiv. 35, ἐθεάσαντο τὸ μνημεῖον, καὶ ὡς ἐτέθη τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ. See more in Passow's Lex. B. ii. on the subject of this word as used before dependent clauses serving to express the object of a preceding verb.

4. τολμῶντες] This it is best to suppose here used absolutely, as at vi. 56. Similarly in Latin audens is not unfrequently used for the adjective audax.

Ch. LXXVII. 1. ἀποδιδόντας] i. e. procuring their restoration. By τὸ τεῖχος understand the stronghold of the promontory Heræum, called at ch. 75 & 80 τὸ τείχισμα. In ἐξ Ἐπιδαύρω ἐκβῶντας, 'retiring from, evacuating,' &c., we have a very rare use of the verb, with which compare that in Latin of excedere or excedere urbe, finibus, and excedere ex. The nearest approach to this that I have noted in a Greek writer is in Pol. iii. 40, 7, ἐκ τοῦ πολέμου ἐκβαίνειν, a phrase parallel to the Latin excedere pugnâ, prœlio, bello.

τοὶ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐξ Ἐπιδαύρω, πολεμίους εἶμεν τοῖς Ἀργειοις καὶ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, καὶ τοῖς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ξυμμάχοις καὶ τοῖς τῶν Ἀργείων ξυμμάχοις. 3. καὶ αἴ τινα τοὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι παῖδα ‡ ἔχοντι, ἀποδόμεν ταῖς πολίεσι πάσαις. 4. περὶ δὲ τῶ σιῶ σύματος εἶμεν † λῆν τοῖς Ἐπιδαυρίοις ὅρκον, δόμεν δὲ αὐτοῖς

2. εἴκωντι ἐξ Ἐπιδαύρω] 'retiring from.' So the Latin cedere è or de, as in a passage of Cic. Ep. ad Attic. vii. 22, 'cedere de oppidis.' No other example do I know of the use of εἴκειν followed by ἐκ. Even that with the genitive alone is exceedingly rare; though I have noted it in Hom. Od. xviii. 10, εἶκε, γέρον, προθύρου. From this arose the phrases εἴκειν τῆς ὁδοῦ, τῆς ἕδρης, χάρμης, &c. On the true nature of this separative genitive see Kuhner's Gr. § 530, Jelf.

3. ἔχοντι] So I have edited, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, from almost all the best MSS., for vulg. ἔχωντι, which has been retained by Bekker, but not on good grounds: for this is one of those cases in which the authority of MSS. has considerable force; and moreover internal, no less than external, evidence is decidedly in favour of ἔχοντι, which is, besides, more agreeable to the inartificial character of the Doric dialect, wherein, from its being founded on the idiom most anciently in use, it was likely that the indicative should have been used where strict propriety, as measured by the rules of after-times, would require the subjunctive. Besides, the indic. might be employed in such a case, as intimating the probability that a thing is so. See Kuhn's Gr. § 851 & 853, Jelf.

4. περὶ δὲ τῶ σιῶ σύματος εἶμεν λῆν] The variety of readings in this passage strikingly sets forth the imperfect state of the ancient archetypes, and consequently shows how little is to be ascribed to the authority of MSS. So unsatisfactory, indeed, are most of the readings, that not without reason is it that critical conjecture has, in this instance, been resorted to, though with little success,—the conjectures of Valckn., Bekker, and Arnold being alike inadmissible. The difficulty here mainly hinges on the words εἶμεν λῆν: for so I have edited, with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, in consequence of the decided preponderance of authority from MSS. for this reading; though that in favour of ἐμὲν λῆν, which is found in Bekker's second edition, is little inferior. But, to advert to the construction and sense, here, I must confess, a real difficulty exists. Now the infinitives would indeed seem necessarily dependent on δοκεῖ, and on this there is no difference of opinion; but how to make any tolerable construction, is the question; for as respects the sense, it is evidently, 'That, as to the victim of the god [due to the god], they wish there should be an oath to the Epidaurians and themselves, to give it them to swear.' Poppo inquires whether λῆν after δοκεῖ τᾷ ἐκκλησίᾳ be not added as in the case of a decree in Demosth. de Cor. § 74, where we have γράψαι after Εὔβουλος Μνησιθέου Κύπριος εἶπεν, and where, in like manner, the interpreters propose to expunge the word γράψαι. But such a procedure surely tends not so much to remove the present difficulty, as to show that there exists another elsewhere equally formidable; and, adopting such a course, we shall be driven to the precarious expedient of supposing something even less to be tolerated than a pleonasm; and consequently the difficulty, if removed, will be removed only at the expense of the author, whose credit will thus be compromised. The question may, I think, most satisfactorily be settled by regarding the present as one of those passages in which, together with a want of something in the latter part corresponding to the construction in the former, there is a certain blending of two forms of expression; 1. δοκεῖ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ εἶναι τοῖς Ἐπιδ. ὅρκον: and 2. λῆν [ἡ ἐκκλ.] εἶμεν τοῖς Ἐπιδαυρίοις. Render, 'the assembly doth will that there be an oath,' &c. Λῆν is here used like volo in Latin, in a passage of Juven. Sat. vi. 223, 'Hoc volo, sic jubeo; sit pro ratione voluntas.'

Finally, for αὐτοὺς,—which, referred, as it must, to the Argives, involves some harshness, and supposes what were a circumstance somewhat improbable, that the Argives were judges in their own cause,—I have, with Dr. Arnold, edited, from four MSS., αὐτοῖς, which will have reference to the Epidaurians. The persons who drew up and administered the oath were, no doubt, the two parties in this treaty,—namely, the Lacedæmonians and the Argives.

With respect to the nature of the oath, it must be presumed to have been such as ὁμόσαι. 5. τὰς δὲ πόλιας τὰς ἐν Πελοποννάσῳ, καὶ μικρὰς καὶ μεγάλας, αὐτονόμους εἶμεν πάσας καττὰ πάτρια. 6. αἰ δέ κα τῶν ἐκτὸς Πελοποννάσου τις ἐπὶ τὰν Πελοπόννασον γὰν ἴῃ ἐπὶ κακῷ, ἀλεξέμεναι † ἀμοθὶ, βουλευσαμένους ὅπᾳ κα δικαιότατα δοκῇ τοῖς Πελοποννασίοις. 7. ὅσοι δ' ἐκτὸς Πελοποννάσω τῶν Λακεδαιwould satisfy those who tendered it, and who, as it is implied, drew it up. Perhaps it was, as Dr. Arnold and Bp. Thirlwall suppose, such an oath as should clear them in the matter of the sacrifice; for, as Dr. Arnold observes, where the evidence was not clear, the accused was allowed to clear himself by oath. See Arist. Rhet. i. 16, 6, and Herodot. vi. 86. I would add, that to the present purpose we may compare an expression in the New Testament, Heb. vi. 16, πάσης ἀντιλογίας πέρας εἰς βεβαίωσιν ὁ ὅρκος.

5. αὐτονόμους] Equivalent to αὐτόνομοι καὶ αὐτοπόλιες at ch. 79. Comp. ch. 18, where αὐτόνομοι is conjoined with αὐτοτελεῖς and αὐτόδικοι, importing complete freedom, as independent states standing alone, and regulating every thing regarding their internal polity at their own will and pleasure. Καττὰ πάτρια, 'according to the institutions or customs of their forefathers;' ἔθη being here left to be understood, which is expressed in Plato, p. 295 and 336, and Xen. Cyr. viii. 7, 2, τοῦ χοροῦ ἡγήσατο κατὰ τὰ πάτρια: and in another passage of our author, supra ii. 2, κατὰ τὰ πάτρια τῶν πάντων Βοιωτῶν. Müller and Goeller, indeed, assign to πάτρια the sense ancient; but that is only one implied in the above; and that it is not in all cases implied, appears from the words of Aristot. de Mundo, ἀρχαῖος λόγος καὶ πάτριός ἐστι πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις: and so in Plato, p. 290, we have, τὰ σεμνότατα καὶ μάλιστα πάτρια τῶν ἀρχαίων θυσιῶν, and p. 793, b, πάτρια καὶ παντάπασιν ἀρχαῖα νόμιμα.

This proviso may, as Bp. Thirlwall supposes, have been levelled against the pretensions of Elis and Mantinea, to domineer over the neighbouring petty states.

6. αἰ δέ κα τῶν ἐκτὸς Πελοποννάσου—Πελοποννασίοις] The clause here, for 'all the states to unite in repelling foreign aggression to Peloponnesus,' was, as Bp. Thirlwall observes, a proviso against Athenian interference. For ἀμοθὶ Bekker edits, from several of the best MSS., ἀμοθεί, which, however, Bredow and Poppo deny to be good Greek. Poppo and Goeller have retained ἀμοθὶ, but are not agreed as to the sense to be assigned to it; the former rendering it quoris modo, by which it will be equivalent to ἀμοῦ γέ που in Lysias de Invalid. § 20; but that is a sense at once forced and jejune, and the evidence adduced for it wholly insufficient. The common interpretation ἀπά were preferable, but that it is difficult to see how the word could be, what Didot imagines it, equivalent to ἅμα or ἀμύς, which was conjectured by Buttmann. Upon the whole, I doubt not but that ἀμόθε, or ἀμόθεν, conjectured by Schneider, is the true reading. The full sense intended seems to be, 'from whatever quarter [the attack came].' Compare Hom. Od. i. 10, τῶν ἀμόθεν γε θεά, θύγατερ Διὸς, εἰπὲ καὶ ἡμῖν, where the Scholiast and Hesych. explain ἀμόθεν by ἀπό τινος μέρους, ὁπόθεν θέλεις. The word ἄμοθεν is by Goeller rightly derived from the old pronoun ἀμὸς used for τις. There cannot be a doubt that the archetypes of those many good MSS. which have ἀμοθεὶ had ἄμοθεν. Thus the sense of ἀμόθεν, taken with the preceding ἀλεξέμεναι, is, 'to repel [him, meaning his attack], from whatever quarter [it comes].' Compare Plato, p. 798, μηχανὴν—ἐννοεῖν, ἀμόθεν γέ ποθεν, ὁντινα τρόπον τοῦτ' ἔσται τῇ πόλει, where Timæus explains by ἀπό τινος μέρους, and also by ὁπωσδήποτε, καθ' ὁτιοῦν, ἀμηγέπη. After all, however, ἀμόθεν may, as it is taken by Portus, be equivalent to ὁμοῦ: for this sense it has in at least one passage, namely, Oppian, Cyneg. i. 400, τῶν ἀμόθεν μορφαί τε καὶ εἴδεα τοῖα πελέσθω. According to this, the most simple and natural, interpretation, it may be construed with βουλευσαμένους, and thus will answer to the expression κοινῇ βουλ. at ch. 47. Compare Hom. Il. ix. 347, σύν σοι τε καὶ ἄλλοισιν βασιλεῦσι Φραζέσθω νήεσσιν ἀλεξέμεναι πῦρ. Yet, that it is meant to be taken with ἀλεξέμεναι, and βουλευσαμένους with ὅπᾳ κα δικαιότατα, would appear from the parallel passage in the accompanying treaty, ch. 79, 3, αἱ δέ ποι στρατιᾶς δέῃ κοινᾶς, βουλεύεσθαι—ὅπᾳ κα δικαιότατα. Finally, δικαιότατα is to be taken adverbially, and closely joined with ὅπᾳ.

μονίων ξύμμαχοί ἐντι, ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ἐσσοῦνται ἐν τῷπερ καὶ τοὶ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ τοὶ τῶν Ἀργείων ξύμμαχοί ἐντι, τὰν αὐτῶν ἔχοντες. 8. ἐπιδείξαντας δὲ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις ξυμβαλέσθαι, αἴ κα αὐτοῖς δοκῇ. αἱ δέ τι δοκῇ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, οἴκαδ' ἀπιάλλειν."

LXXVIII. Τοῦτον μὲν τὸν λόγον προσεδέξαντο πρῶτον οἱ Ἀργεῖοι, καὶ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων τὸ στράτευμα ἀνεχώρησεν ἐκ τῆς Τεγέας ἐπ' οἴκου· μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο, ἐπιμιξίας οὔσης ἤδη παρ' ἀλλήλους, οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον ἔπραξαν αὖθις οἱ αὐτοὶ ἄνδρες ὥστε τὴν Μαντινέων καὶ Ἠλείων καὶ τὴν Ἀθηναίων ξυμμαχίαν ἀφέντας, Ἀργείους σπονδὰς καὶ ξυμμαχίαν ποιήσασθαι πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους. καὶ ἐγένοντο αἵδε.

LXXIX. "Καττάδε ἔδοξε τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀργείοις σπονδὰς καὶ ξυμμαχίαν εἶμεν πεντήκοντα ἔτη, ἐπὶ τοῖς ἴσοις καὶ ὁμοίοις δίκας διδόντας καττὰ πάτρια· ταὶ δὲ ἄλλαι πόλιες ταὶ ἐν Πελοπον-

7. ἐσσοῦνται] So I have edited, with Poppo and Goeller, here and at ch. 79, from some of the best MSS., for vulg. ἐσοῦνται, which has been retained by Bekker, though not on good grounds; for internal evidence is here strongly in favour of the former, this rarer form,—which, it has been proved to be,—was not confined to the poets, but one antique and Doric. Of ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ εἶναι the sense is, 'to be on the same footing:' and by the words, a little after, τὰν αὐτῶν ἔχοντες, is intimated what that footing is,—namely, one of independence, 'to hold their own territory,' i. e. to hold it themselves, and not as vassals of some greater state: a sense this mainly communicated by the αὐτῶν, which reading I have accordingly retained, and have not (with Poppo and Arnold) altered it to αὐτῶν, from a few MSS.; though MSS. in such a case have little or no weight.

8. ἐπιδείξαντας δὲ — δοκῇ] Meaning, 'that after having shown [this treaty] to the allies, they (viz. the allies) shall then, if it seem good to them, agree thereto:' a proviso designed to intimate that the treaty was not to depend on their sanction: by which means the difficulty that had occasioned the breach of a former treaty between Athens and Lacedæmon, was avoided. With the expression here ξυμβάλλεσθαι, — which signifies properly 'to join hands with,' especially in making a contract or agreement,—compare Eurip. Iph. Aul. 58, ὅρκους συνάψαι, δεξιάς τε συμβαλεῖν Μνηστῆρας ἀλλήλοισι. So also in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 399, 4, and 1106, 4, we have συμβάλλειν, 'to contract an agreement.'

Of the next words, αἱ δέ τι δοκῇ—ἀπιάλλειν, the sense, from extreme brevity, is any thing but clear. Dr. Arnold is of opinion, that if the words αἱ δέ τι δοκῇ be cancelled, (and indeed he has himself placed them within brackets,) the passage will thus be freed from all difficulty: but I agree with Bp. Thirlwall, that 'that would leave the words following without coherence and meaning:' and that the word should in one MS. have no place, may very well be accounted for from the repetition of the term δοκῇ, which doubtless caused the words to be omitted. The sense intended is evidently this: 'But if any thing else shall seem good to the allies (meaning the legates), to send them home,' viz. to learn the wishes of the people. So at ch. 47 the Lacedæmonians and the Argive ambassadors have, with the treaty of peace in writing, to obtain the approbation of the Argive people thereto. In ἀπιάλλειν, which signifies 'to send off,' we have an exceedingly rare term, of which no example elsewhere can easily be adduced except that from Hesych. (cited by Goell.) ἀπιαλεῖς· ἀποπέμψεις: though in Suidas for ἀπάλλεις· ἀποπέμπεις, ought undoubtedly to be read ἀπιάλλεις· ἀποπ. As to the passages that have been adduced from Archestr. ap. Athen. 321, μεγάλου δ' ἀπὸ χεῖρας ἴαλλε, and Hom. Il. viii. 309, ὄϊστὸν ἀπὸ νευρῆφιν ἴαλλε, they are of a different character to the present.

CH. LXXIX. 1. There is plainly here an anacoluthon; which, in some MSS., is removed by the reading διδόναι, (standing for ὥστε διδόναι αὐτούς,) and which Dobree proposes to do away with by the conjecture διδόντεσι or διδόντων (imperf.):

νάσῳ κοινανεόντων τᾶν σπονδᾶν καὶ τᾶς ξυμμαχίας, αὐτόνομοι καὶ αὐτοπόλιες, τὰν αὐτῶν ἔχοντες, καττὰ πάτρια δίκας διδόντες τὰς ἴσας καὶ ὁμοίας. 2. ὅσοι δὲ ἔξω Πελοποννάσω Λακεδαιμονίοις ξύμμαχοί ἐντι, ἐν τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἐσσοῦνται τοῖσπερ καὶ τοὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι· καὶ τοὶ τῶν Ἀργείων ξύμμαχοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ἐσσοῦνται τῷπερ καὶ τοὶ Ἀργεῖοι, τὰν αὐτῶν ἔχοντες. 3. αἱ δέ ποι στρατιᾶς δέῃ κοινᾶς, βουλεύεσθαι Λακεδαιμονίως καὶ Ἀργείως, ὅπᾳ κα δικαιότατα κρίναντας τοῖς ξυμμάχοις. 4. αἱ δέ τινι τᾶν πολίων ᾖ ἀμφίλογα, ἢ τᾶν ἐντὸς ἢ τᾶν ἐκτὸς Πελοποννάσου, αἴτε περὶ ὅρων, αἴτε περὶ ἄλλου τινός, διακριθῆμεν. αἱ δέ τις τῶν ξυμμάχων πόλις but better is it to leave the words as they stand,—recognising here, with Haack, a negligent sort of construction; for, as he observes, 'it appears from the participle, that the person who drew up this treaty had forgotten the construction or form of expression with which he had begun the period, and had in mind another that would require the accusative, as καττάδε ἔδοξε τοῖς Λακεδ. καὶ Ἀργ. σπονδὰς καὶ ξυμμ. ποιεῖσθαι—δίκας διδόντας.' We may render freely, 'with the proviso that they shall afford to each other mutually judicial redress on fair and equal terms.' See note on i. 77, on the words ἐν τοῖς ὁμοίοις νόμοις τὰς κρίσεις ποιῆσαι, and on i. 27; though, of course, we are much in the dark as to what rule of law and under what sanctions such litigation between one independent state and another was carried on; for the expression κατὰ τὰ πάτρια affords no precise information. See, however, on this subject, Müller's Dorians, i. p. 183.

For vulg. κοινᾶν ἐόντων, found in almost every MS., but quite indefensible, I have edited, from the masterly conjecture of Valckn., κοινανεόντων. The conjecture of Duker, κοινὰν ἐχόντων τὰν σπονδὰν—ξυμμαχίαν, found in several MSS., formerly had place in Cod. Clar.; but it originated, I doubt not, solely in conjecture. It is rightly observed by Poppo, that κοινανέω is derived from the rare form κοινᾶν, κοινᾶνος, which occurs in Pindar.

αὐτοπόλιες] 'states in their own right,' subsisting by their own authority, as distinguished from such as were in vassalage to some greater state. Of this word I know no example elsewhere; but we may compare the similar terms αὐτοτελεῖς and αὐτόδικοι supra ch. 18; also αὐτόβουλος, αὐτογνώμων, αὐτοδύναμις, αὐτοκύριος, αὐτοκράτωρ, &c. On the expression δίκας δοῦναι τὰς ἴσας καὶ ὁμοίας, see note supra ch. 27.

3. ποι] aliquo, 'in any quarter [where the attack may be made].' Comp. ch. 77, 5. Of this form, somewhat rare, examples are found also in Xen. Cyr. v. 1, 6, μή ποι ἀποδρῶσι, and Anab. vi. 3, 7. vii. 2, 10. Aristoph. Plut. 446, εἰ τὸν θεὸν Ἕρμον ἀπολιπόντε ποι φευξούμεθα. Eurip. Hec. 1275, οὐχ ὅσον τάχος Νήσων ἐρήμων αὐτὸν ἐκβαλεῖτέ ποι. Plato, p. 52, νῦν γὰρ σπεύδω ποι. 420, ἂν ποι βούλωνται ἄλλοσε, and 293, ἐκπέμποντές ποι. The literal sense is, 'to any place,' i. e. quarter, as in the passages of Xenophon, Aristophanes, and Euripides just cited; though there is sometimes, as in the passage of Plato, an ellipsis of ἐλθεῖν, which word is expressed in the same writer, p. 335, ἐλθεῖν γάρ ποί με δεῖ: and the ellipsis may be supposed in the present case.

For στρατιᾶς, Haack and Poppo edit, from the conjecture of Portus, στρατείας. I have chosen, with Bekker and Goeller, to retain the common reading, because there is reason to think that the Doric dialect had only στρατιά, which denoted indifferently army or armament. The latter is the sense here intended, namely, an armament to repel foreign invasion. See note on the kindred passage at ch. 77, 5.

ὅπᾳ κα δικαιότατα κρίναντας τοῖς ξυμμάχοις] 'deciding in such a way as (may be) most equitable for the allies,' an ellipsis of εἴη or δοκῇ. Compare ch. 77, βουλευσαμένους ὅπᾳ κα δικ. δοκῇ τοῖς Ηελ. The provision is meant to import, as Mitford expresses it, that 'military command shall rest with the Lacedæmonians and Argives, who shall, by joint councils, direct, equitably and impartially, the military affairs of the whole confederacy,' regulating, doubtless, the quotas of men, or proportions of provisions, stores, &c. to be furnished by each member. Comp. Herodot. viii. 114, τὴν στρατιὴν διέκρινε.

4. διακριθῆμεν] With respect to the precise sense of this disputed term, Dr. Arnold is of opinion that the meaning πόλει ἐρίζοι, ἐς πόλιν ἐλθεῖν, ἄν τινα ἴσαν ἀμφοῖν ταῖς πολίεσι † δοκοίη. † τοῖς δὲ † ἕταις καττὰ πάτρια δικάζεσθαι."

intended to be expressed is, that 'in the case of a dispute between a state of the confederacy and a foreign state, the quarrel was to be settled between them as they could; διακριθῆμεν meaning that the issue must be tried [disceptandum esse], but whether by negociation or by war, the treaty does not specify; each member of the confederacy being in this case at liberty to use his own discretion. But in disputes between each other, the members of the confederacy were not to have recourse to arms, but were to submit the matter to some third state, to arbitrate between them.' Poppo remarks, that he knows of no better explanation than this; though he somewhat stumbles in 'ampla illa et infinita verbi διακρίνεσθαι notione.' To me it seems not merely indefinite, but also deficient in proof; and, after all, any thing but suitable; for certainly there is something not a little odd in the parties being directed to settle the quarrels between them as they could. They surely did not need to be told that: and, as to what Dr. Arnold says, that 'the treaty does not specify whether by negociation or by war,'—that, I apprehend, is far from being established. It was so much the interest of the confederacy at large that each of its members should keep out war with any members of another confederacy, that the point, we must suppose, is specified: and this may well be, if we suppose δίκῃ to be understood, which though generally expressed, as in a kindred passage of Xen. Hist. v. 2, 28, εἰ δέ τι ἀμφίλογον πρὸς ἀλλήλους γίγνοιτο, δίκῃ διακριθῆναι (scil. ἐψηφίσαντο), i. e. 'to be settled and determined by legal process.' So Plato, p. 937, πρὶν τὴν δίκην διακεκρίσθαι, scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα, (where, for τὴν δίκην, I conjecture τῇ δίκῃ,) yet sometimes it is left understood, as here and in a passage of Arrian, E. A. i. 27, 6, ἐκέλευσε—ὑπὲρ τῆς χώρας διακριθῆναι, judicio contendant: and although it be quite true that, as Dr. Arnold points out, the clause relates to quarrels between a state that was a member of the confederacy and one that was not,—that will not prove Hermann to be wrong in making the infin. depend on ἀμφίλογα: not but that there would be something exceedingly harsh in supposing the subject of διακρ. to be a word so little prominent as ἀμφίλογα. And, as in the next clause πόλιν must be supplied at ἐλθεῖν, so here we may suppose πόλιν to be the subject,—meaning 'the state that thinks itself aggrieved.' It was agreed that such party should περὶ τῶν ἀμφιλόγων διακριθῆναι, 'should submit to legal arbitration,' judicio experiri: and so in a passage of Demosthenes, cited by Gesner on Lucian, vol. iii. p. 567, we have, εἰ μὲν οὖν ἐν τῷ Ῥοδίων διεκρινόμεθα. Of this use of διακρίνεσθαι, as said not of the suit, but of the person carrying it on, other examples occur, as in Dio Cass. p. 283, 91, καὶ ἐπειδή γε μὴ ἠθέλησεν εἰρηνικῶς ὑπὸ τοῦ συνειδότος διακριθῆναι, 'to have his cause decided.' Plut. p. 7, περὶ τοῦ βαρυτέρου—διακριθεῖμεν ἄν, and 956, ἂν μὴ διακριθῶσιν ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις, and 767, διακριθῆναι. That states did go to law with states, is a matter too well known to be disputed. See supra i. 77 & 144.

The next sentence, αἱ δέ τις τῶν ξυμμάχων—δοκοίη, respects the other case, of disputes between members of the confederacy. It was agreed that such states should seek redress, not by war, but peaceable arbitration,—that they should go to some state which might be ἴσα ἀμφοῖν, impartial as to both. The words ἄν τινα ἴσαν ἀμφοῖν ταῖς πολίεσι δοκοίη are best rendered by Portus, 'quamcunque utrisque civitatibus æquam judicaverit.'

τοῖς δὲ ἕταις καττὰ πάτρια δικάζεσθαι] Meaning, 'but that [individual] citizens [of each state] shall have justice done them according to the ancient laws and customs [of the state].' This use of ἕτης to denote a private citizen, as opposed to persons in office, is noticed in Apollon. Lex. Hom., Hesych., and Etym. Mag., and, though very rare, is, Goeller remarks, found in Æsch. Suppl. 262 (Schutz), and in an Elean inscription in Boeckh, Corp. Inscr. i. p. 31, αἴ τε ῥέτας, αἴτε τελέστα, ('one in office,') εἴτε δᾶμος ἐντί. On the term itself, see note supra ch. 77. These ancient laws and customs doubtless directed that equal justice should be done to all persons without distinction of rank or party in the state; and also that they should, as the Scholiast says, δι' ἀλλήλων λύειν τὰ διάφορα: i. e. that the home tribunals should determine finally and without appeal. Supposing τοῖς ἕταις to be the true reading, we must, with Poppo, regard δικάζεται as used passively and impersonally to signify jus mihi dicitur. Yet such would be the harshness, that I suspect, with Poppo, that our author wrote τοὺς ἕτας, which the Scholiast—while explaining by τοὺς πολιτευομένους—must have had in his copy.

LXXX. Αἱ μὲν σπονδαὶ καὶ ἡ ξυμμαχία αὕτη ἐγεγένητο· καὶ ὁπόσα ἀλλήλων πολέμῳ, ἢ εἴ τι ἄλλο εἶχον, διελύσαντο. 2. κοινῇ δὲ ἤδη τὰ πράγματα τιθέμενοι, ἐψηφίσαντο κήρυκα καὶ πρεσβείαν παρὰ Ἀθηναίων μὴ προσδέχεσθαι, ἢν μὴ ἐκ Πελοποννήσου ἐξίωσι τὰ τείχη ἐκλιπόντες, καὶ μὴ ξυμβαίνειν τῳ μηδὲ πολεμεῖν, ἀλλ' ἢ ἅμα. 2. καὶ τά τε ἄλλα θυμῷ ἔφερον, καὶ ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης χωρία καὶ ὡς Περδίκκαν ἔπεμψαν ἀμφότεροι πρέσβεις, καὶ ἀνέπεισαν Περδίκκαν ξυνομόσαι σφίσιν· (οὐ μέντοι εὐθύς γε ἀπέστη τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἀλλὰ διενοεῖτο, ὅτι καὶ τοὺς Ἀργείους ἑώρα· ἦν δὲ καὶ αὐτὸς τὸ ἀρχαῖον ἐξ Ἄργους·) καὶ τοῖς Χαλκιδεῦσι τούς τε παλαιοὺς ὅρκους ἀνενεώσαντο, καὶ ἄλλους ὤμοσαν. 3. ἔπεμψαν δὲ καὶ παρὰ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους οἱ Ἀργεῖοι πρέσβεις, τὸ ἐξ Ἐπιδαύρου τεῖχος κελεύοντες ἐκλιπεῖν. οἱ δ' ὁρῶντες ὀλίγοι πρὸς πλείους ὄντες τοὺς ξυμφύλακας, ἔπεμψαν Δημοσθένην τοὺς σφετέρους ἐξάξοντα. 4. ὁ δὲ ἀφικόμενος, καὶ ἀγῶνά τινα, πρόφασιν, γυμνικὸν ἔξω τοῦ φρουρίου ποιήσας, ὡς ἐξῆλθε τὸ ἄλλο † φρούριον, ἀπέκλησε τὰς πύλας. καὶ

Ch. LXXX. 1. καὶ ὁπόσα—διελύσαντο] Put, as Goeller says, for καὶ ὁπόσα ἀλλήλων πολέμῳ εἶχον, ἢ εἴ τι ἔγκλημα εἶχον, ταῦτα διελύσαντο, τὰ μὲν ἀποδόντες, περὶ δὲ τῶν καταλλαξάμενοι.

2. κοινῇ ἤδη τὰ πράγματα τιθέμενοι] 'regarding matters of policy as now common to both, each having a common interest.' Ἐψηφίσαντο, &c. The passing of these measures by the Argives shows how entirely the administration of affairs had fallen into the hands of the persons (the aristocratical and Lacedæmonian party) who brought about the late treaty. Accordingly the Argive government went as far as the Lacedæmonians could desire. This is especially observable in the proviso μὴ ξυμβαίνειν—ἅμα, which was intended to restrain any endeavours of the democratical party at Argos to form any treaty with Athens.

2. τά τε ἄλλα θυμῷ ἔφερον, &c.] This is meant to show the bitterness of the feeling which swayed the counsels of Sparta and Argos against Athens. They both, by the above decree, carried other measures dictated by animosity against Athens, and they conjointly sent an embassy to Perdiccas, urging him to join oaths with them (i. e. to swear to the same treaty); they also renewed the old oaths to the Chalcideans (to support them), and swore others. Compare i. 31, 1, ὀργῇ φέροντες τὸν πρὸς τοὺς Κερκ. πόλεμον, where ὀργῇ exactly answers to θυμῷ here; each meaning impetu.

The words, a little after, ἦν δὲ καὶ αὐτὸς τὸ ἀρχαῖον ἐξ Ἄργους, have reference to the ancient affinity between the family of the Macedonian monarch and the Temenidæ of Argos.

4. πρόφασιν] 'by way of pretext,' as at iii. 111. Eurip. Iph. A. 360. Demosth. de Cor. p. 251. Hom. Il. xix. 302. For vulg. φρούριον, Haack, Poppo, and Goeller edit, from three MSS., φρουρικὸν, which was conjectured by Duker, and is confirmed by Dio Cass. 840, 10, καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι καὶ τὸ ὁπλιτικὸν τὸ φρουρικὸν, περιέδραμον, where the writer — evidently having in view this passage of Thucydides — must here have read τὸ φρουρικὸν, meaning οἱ φρουρικοὶ, præsidiarii, 'the garrison,' as the Gloss has it. Yet it is difficult to see what could occasion so plain a reading as φρουρικὸν to be altered in all the MSS., except three of the worst, into a reading so little obvious as φρούριον. And, considering that both external authority and internal evidence are against φρουρικὸν, I have chosen, with Bekker, to retain φρούριον, not, indeed, as absolutely the true, but as coming very near to the true, reading, which I believe to be φρούρειον. The adj. φρούρειος occurs, as well as φρουρικός. See Schaefer ap. Steph. Thes. Φρούρειος was, I suspect, the earlier, and φρουρικὸς the later form of the word, which was accordingly preferred by Dio Cass.

ἀπέκλησε τὰς πύλας] 'shut the gates against them,' literally, shut them out by closing the gates. See Herodot. v. 3, 26. Xen. An. vii. 1, 7, and 6, 17. Arrian, E. A. i. 27, 8. Appian, i. 432. Jos. 286, 31. 565, ὕστερον Ἐπιδαυρίοις ἀνανεωσάμενοι τὰς σπονδὰς αὐτοὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀπέδοσαν τὸ τείχισμα. LXXXI. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν τῶν Ἀργείων ἀπόστασιν ἐκ τῆς ξυμμαχίας καὶ οἱ Μαντινῆς, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀντέχοντες, ἔπειτ', οὐ δυνάμενοι ἄνευ τῶν Ἀργείων, ξυνέβησαν καὶ αὐτοὶ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, καὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀφεῖσαν τῶν πόλεων. 2. καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ Ἀργεῖοι, χίλιοι ἑκάτεροι, ξυστρατεύσαντες, τά τ' ἐν Σικυῶνι ἐς ὀλίγους μᾶλλον κατέστησαν αὐτοὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐλθόντες, καὶ μετ' ἐκεῖνα ξυναμφότεροι ἤδη καὶ τὸν ἐν Ἄργει δῆμον κατέλυσαν· καὶ ὀλιγαρχία ἐπιτηδεία τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις κατέστη. καὶ πρὸς ἔαρ ἤδη ταῦτα ἦν, τοῦ χειμῶνος λήγοντος· καὶ τέταρτον καὶ δέκατον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα.

LXXXII. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους Δικτιδῆς τε οἱ ἐν Ἄθῳ ἀπέστησαν Ἀθηναίων πρὸς Χαλκιδέας, καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τὰ ἐν Ἀχαΐᾳ οὐκ ἐπιτηδείως πρότερον ἔχοντα καθίσταντο. 2. καὶ Ἀργείων ὁ δῆμος, κατ' ὀλίγον ξυνισταμένος τε καὶ ἀναθαρσήσας, ἐπέ-

26. The αὐτοὶ, a little after, is highly significant, as adverting to the policy of the Athenians in this matter; which was, by obtaining sole possession of the fortress, to have it in their power to restore it themselves (and not the Argives) to the Epidaurians, and so obtain the renewal of the ancient treaty of friendship between Epidaurus and Athens.

Ch. LXXXI. 1. τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀφεῖσαν τῶν πόλεων] Meaning their dominion over the neighbouring districts,—namely, the Parrhasians and other petty cantons, who had been hitherto subject-allies of Mantinea. See supra ch. 33, 58, 60, 67.

2. τὰ ἐν Σικ. ἐς ὀλίγους μᾶλλον κατέστησαν] 'established political affairs, or the constitution, at Sicyon, more into the hands of a few [than they had heretofore been]:' for, as Poppo remarks, the Sicyonians had, it seems, before enjoyed a constitution not purely democratical, but a mixed one between democracy and aristocracy. It is not said whether the Thousand Argives here mentioned were the λογάδες before spoken of: but such is attested by Aristot. Pol. v. 4, from Diod. xii. 80, and Plut. Alcib. 15: and such may be argued from the probability of the thing; for the Thousand being composed of young men of the higher ranks, would naturally have a prepossession in favour of aristocracy, and would accordingly be easily brought over to the views of the oligarchical faction; who, it would seem, took occasion from this joint expedition of Sparta and Argos against Sicyon (for the purpose of strengthening oligarchy there) to bring about such a revolution at Argos, as should completely unite the governments, not only in general policy, but in the feelings and interest of one common polity.

By ὀλίγους understand 'a few' (pauci quidam) as opposed to the many of a popular government. Compare ii. 37, ἐς ὀλίγους ἐλθεῖν, and viii. 53, πολιτεύσομεν ἐς ὀλίγους μᾶλλον, and 38. Here, as at iii. 74. v. 84, and vi. 38, the expression οἱ ὀλίγοι serves to denote the Few, considered not individually, but as a class of persons, in opposition to the Many.

Ch. LXXXII. 1. Δικτιδῆς] For this, Poppo and Goeller edit Διῆς: but I have chosen, with Bekker, to retain the common reading; why, will appear from note supra ch. 35. Οὐκ ἐπιτηδείως (scil. αὐτοῖς), 'not agreeably to their form of government,' an oligarchy.

2. κατ' ὀλίγον ξυνισταμένος] The full sense seems to be, 'having gradually come together,' formed a combination of forces; as supra iii. 70, ξυνίσταντό τε. Dio Cass. 42, 79, πολλοὶ συνιστάμενοι, and in various passages of Xenophon, Plato, and other writers which I could cite. The idea which Poppo here recognises of conspiracy, however frequent, must, in the present case, be only an implied one. They had time to get together and form plans for attack, since—as we learn from Diodorus—the government of the oligarchs had continued eight months. The expression κατ' ὀλίγον belongs not only to ξυνισταμένος, but also to ἀναθαρσήσας, which signifies 'having gradually taken courage to act,' after the dismay into which the late events must have thrown them. The θεντο τοῖς ὀλίγοις, τηρήσαντες αὐτὰς τὰς γυμνοπαιδίας τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων. καὶ, μάχης γενομένης ἐν τῇ πόλει, ἐπεκράτησεν ὁ δῆμος, καὶ τοὺς μὲν ἀπέκτεινε, τοὺς δὲ ἐξήλασεν. 3. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἕως μὲν αὐτοὺς μετεπέμποντο οἱ φίλοι, οὐκ ἦλθον ἐκ πλείονος· ἀναβαλόμενοι δὲ τὰς γυμνοπαιδίας ἐβοήθουν. καὶ ἐν Τεγέᾳ πυθόμενοι ὅτι νενίκηνται οἱ ὀλίγοι, προελθεῖν μὲν οὐκέτι ἠθέλησαν, δεομένων τῶν διαπεφευγότων, ἀναχωρήσαντες δὲ ἐπ' οἴκου τὰς γυμνοπαιδίας ἦγον. 4. καὶ ὕστερον ἐλθόντων πρέσβεων ἀπό τε τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει [ἀγγέλων] καὶ τῶν ἔξω Ἀργείων, παρόντων τε τῶν ξυμμάχων, καὶ ῥηθέντων πολλῶν ἀφ' ἑκατέρων, ἔγνωσαν μὲν ἀδικεῖν τοὺς ἐν τῇ πόλει, καὶ ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς στρατεύειν ἐς Ἄργος· διατριβαὶ δὲ καὶ μελλήσεις ἐγίγνοντο. 5. ὁ δὲ δῆμος τῶν Ἀργείων ἐν τούτῳ, φοβούμενος τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, καὶ τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ξυμμαχίαν πάλιν προσαγόμενός τε, καὶ νομίζων μέγιστον ἂν σφᾶς words following, τηρήσαντες τὰς γυμνοπαιδίας, 'watching for the opportunity [afforded by] the Gymnopædia,' are inconsistent with the story told in Pausan. ii. 20, 1. If the enormity he mentions really occurred, it was not the occasion of the popular insurrection, though it may have paved the way to it. On this great Spartan festival Gymnopædia, which resembled the Lupercalia at Rome, (in which boys and youth danced naked, each ranged in distinct chori, and exercising gymnastic and warlike movements,) see Müller's Dorians, Wachsmuth's Antiquities, and Goeller in loc. Αὐτὰς τὰς γυμνοπαιδίας: meaning, 'in the very instant of the Gymnopædia taking place.'

3. ἕως μὲν αὐτοὺς μετεπέμποντο] 'while [so long as] their friends were sending for them.' Οὐκ ἦλθον ἐκ πλείονος, 'did not come before a long time had elapsed.' So the Scholiast explains ἐκ πλείονος by πρὸ πλείονος χρόνου, scil. διεληλυθότος.

ἀναβαλόμενοι δὲ τὰς γυμνοπαιδίας] dilatis Gymnopædiis, i. e. 'having deferred the remaining part of the celebration to another time.' The sending for the Lacedæmonians, just spoken of, had occurred some time before the festival, but the Spartans had delayed to send the aid until at length the insurrection broke out.

4. ἀγγέλων] I agree with Dobree, that this confessedly corrupt word is rather, as Poppo supposes, a false reading for Ἀργείων (the Ἀργείων after ἔξω having come in from the margin) than, what others suppose, a gloss on πρέσβεων, which could need none. The same objection may be advanced to Dr. Arnold's conjecture, that πρέσβεων is an explanation of ἀγγέλων. But may not (he asks) the sense be, 'when there came as ambassadors messengers both from the Argives?' Certainly not, I would say; for of this view (which is indeed no other than that adopted by Bauer, who explains, 'πρέσβεων (ὡς) ἀγγέλων legati [qui essent] nuntii,') it may well be said, 'ut nimiam officiat orationis subtilitatem obscurè et affectatè locutum esse sumit.' If ἀγγέλων really came from Thucydides, the best mode of emending the passage would be simply to transpose ἀγγέλων and καὶ, and supply ἀπὸ repeated at τῶν ἔξω Ἀργ. (understanding thereby the exiles), thus: πρέσβεων ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει, καὶ ἀγγέλων [ἀπὸ] τῶν ἔξω Ἀργ. But it may justly be urged, that these ἄγγελοι had nothing to tell, that the Spartans did not already know. Hence it may fairly be presumed that ἀγγέλων came from the margin, and proceeded from certain critics who thought (as indeed does Dr. Arnold) that a body of exiles could not send ambassadors, but only messengers, and in this view intended the word ἀγγέλων to be inserted. But how utterly groundless is the supposition, will fully appear when it is considered that the term πρεσβὺς was one employed with considerable latitude of signification, so as to denote, in a general way, legatus, 'any one deputed' by certain persons to support their interests, urge their claims, &c. Compare Plato, p. 356, πεπόμφασι — ὡς ἡμᾶς πρεσβεῖς. And so Hesych. explains the term in question, πρεσβεῖς, by πρεσβευταὶ, μεσίται.

5. τὴν—ξυμμαχίαν πάλιν προσαγόμενος] 'again taking to them (calling in to their aid) the Athenian alliance.' Compare ii. 30, προσηγάγοντο. Xen. Mem. iii. 4, 9, συμμάχους—προσάγεσθαι.

ὠφελήσειν, τειχίζει μακρὰ τείχη ἐς θάλασσαν, ὅπως, ἢν τῆς γῆς εἴργωνται, ἡ κατὰ θάλασσαν σφᾶς μετὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπαγωγὴ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ὠφελῇ. 6. ξυνήδεσαν δὲ † τὸν † τειχισμὸν καὶ τῶν ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ τινὲς πόλεων. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀργεῖοι πανδημεί, καὶ αὐτοὶ καὶ γυναῖκες καὶ οἰκέται, ἐτείχιζον· καὶ ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν αὐτοῖς ἦλθον τέκτονες καὶ λιθουργοί. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

LXXXIII. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος Λακεδαιμόνιοι ὡς ἤσθοντο τειχιζόντων, ἐστράτευσαν ἐς τὸ Ἄργος, αὐτοί τε καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, πλὴν Κορινθίων (ὑπῆρχε δέ τι αὐτοῖς καὶ [ἐκ τοῦ Ἄργους] αὐτόθεν πρασσόμενον)· ἦγε δὲ τὴν στρατιὰν Ἄγις ὁ Ἀρχιδάμου Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλεύς. 2. καὶ τὰ μὲν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως δοκοῦντα

6. ξυνήδεσαν τὸν τειχισμὸν] 'were privy to the [plan of] building:' a construction of ξυνειδέναι so peculiar, that Bauer would read, for ξυνήδεσαν, ξυνῆσαν, and Poppo ξυνίεσαν. But of these two conjectures the former destroys the sense, and the latter disfigures it. Neither is necessary; for although the construction with an accusative, when unaccompanied by a dative, is very rare, it is by no means unprecedented, being found in Xen. Hist. iii. 3, 6, τοὺς ξυνειδότας τὴν πρᾶξιν. So difficult, however, is it to account for the use here of the accusative, (according to which we must suppose the harsh ellipsis of αὐτοῖς or σφίσι, which is found expressed in Polyb. iv. 22, 7, διὰ τὸ συνειδέναι σφίσι τὰς ἐπιβολάς,) that I am inclined to suspect our author wrote, for τὸν τειχισμὸν, τῷ τειχισμῷ, (the ν and ι adscript being very frequently confounded,) and Xenophon, in the above passage, for τὴν πράξιν, τῇ πράξει: an opinion borne out by the words of Arrian, E. A. vi. 29, 17, (who had probably there in view the above passage of Xenophon,) οὐδὲ ἄλλῃ πῃ ξυνηλέγχοντο ξυνειδότες τῷ ἔργῳ, and those of Polyb. i. 62, 7, διὰ τὸ συνειδέναι (scil. αὐτοὺς) τοῖς σφετέροις πράγμασι, &c.

τέκτονες καὶ λιθουργοί] It might seem that carpenters could have little to do with building city walls, and that the word τέκτονες, like our Engl. wright, might denote an artificer, whether in wood, stone, or metal. And that smiths would be needed in this case, may be argued from another passage inf. vii. 18, σιδηρον περιήγγελλον—καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ἐργαλεῖα ἡτοίμαζον ἐς τὸν ἐπιτειχισμὸν, namely, to form and secure the iron cramps with which the huge stones were fastened. But that carpenters were employed in building walls of this description, —especially when raised in a hurry and for a temporary purpose,—is certain from vi. 99, 1, where, speaking of the walls of circumvallation around Syracuse, it is said, οἱ δὲ λίθους καὶ ξύλα ξυμφοροῦντες παρέβαλλον: meaning huge beams, chiefly used for building the towers around, which were generally of wood. True it is that carpenters and masons might have been found for this effect in Argos; but not in sufficient numbers to accomplish so much in a short time; not to say that the artizans at Athens were the most skilful in all Greece.

CH. LXXXIII. 1. ὑπῆρχε—πρασσόμενον] Render, 'now there had been also something of intrigue carrying on with them on the part of Argos from the city itself.' For examples of this kind of pleonasm, see Goeller's note. Considering, however, that the passages he adduces are not of the same nature as the present, I cannot help suspecting the words ἐκ τοῦ Ἄργους to be from the margin, and merely intended to explain the meaning of the word αὐτόθεν. And, in point of fact, the Scholiast explains αὐτόθεν here by ἐκ τοῦ Ἄργους; whence it is clear that he had not the words in his copy. Similarly, too, in Xen. Cyr. ii. 1, 2, (ed. Thiem.) οἶδα ἐξελθοῦσαν δύναμιν αὐτόθεν, some copies, for αὐτόθεν, have ἐξ αὐτῆς. Thus the sense of αὐτόθεν will be 'from thence,' i.e. 'on the part of the inhabitants,' as in Xen. Hist. ii. 1, 14, and iv. 3, 15, αὐτόθεν προσεγένοντο ὁπλῖται, i. e. 'ex incolis illius regionis,' as Sturz there explains, comparing other passages of Xen. Ages. ii. 6, and Hist. iv. 1, 8. However, I have found in Aristoph. Acharn. 116, what amply justifies and illustrates the pleonasm,—the words κοὐχ ὅπως οὐκ εἰσὶν ἐνθένδ' αὐτόθεν. See note on vi. 38, 1.

2. τὰ ἐκ τῆς πόλεως—οὐ προυχώρησεν ἔτι] Render, 'affairs regarding the [surrender of the] city had no longer success.' Compare i. 109, οὐ προὐχώρει, scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα. See also i. 7, and compare iii. 4, προϋπάρχειν οὐ προὐχώρησεν ἔτι· τὰ δὲ οἰκοδομούμενα τείχη ἑλόντες καὶ καταβαλόντες, καὶ Ὑσιὰς, χωρίον τῆς Ἀργείας, λαβόντες καὶ τοὺς ἐλευθέρους ἅπαντας οὓς ἔλαβον ἀποκτείναντες, ἀνεχώρησαν, καὶ διελύθησαν κατὰ πόλεις. 3. ἐστράτευσαν δὲ μετὰ τοῦτο καὶ Ἀργεῖοι ἐς τὴν Φλιασίαν, καὶ δῃώσαντες ἀπῆλθον, ὅτι σφῶν τοὺς φυγάδας ὑπεδέχοντο· οἱ γὰρ πολλοὶ αὐτῶν ἐνταῦθα κατῴκηντο. 4. κατέκλῃσαν δὲ τοῦ αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος καὶ * Μακεδονίαν Ἀθηναῖοι, * Περδίκκᾳ ἐπικαλοῦντες τήν τε πρὸς Ἀργείους καὶ Λακεδαιμονίους γενομένην ξυνωμοσίαν, καὶ ὅτι παρασκευασαμένων αὐτῶν στρατιὰν ἄγειν ἐπὶ Χαλκιδέας τοὺς ἐπὶ Θράκης καὶ Ἀμφίπολιν, Νικίου τοῦ Νικηράτου στρατηγοῦντος, ἔψευστο τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, καὶ ἡ στρατιὰ μάλιστα διελύθη ἐκείνου ἀπάραντος· πολέμιος οὖν ἦν. καὶ ὁ χειοὐ γὰρ ἐπίστευον τοῖς Ἀθ. προχωρήσειν, where see note.

τὰ οἰκοδομούμενα τείχη] 'the walls that are building;' narrative pres. for imperf.

Ὑσιὰς, χωρίον τῆς Ἀργείας] A petty town, of which little is known beyond a few obscure notices in Strabo, Pliny, and Pausanias. It is supposed to have been situated about thirteen miles south-west of Argos, not far from the junction of two brooks which running from the lower part of Mount Artemisium soon unite and run into the sea at the present Kiveri. The site in question is now occupied by the village Aglado Campo. We may suppose the town to have received the name Ὑσιαὶ (derived, it would seem, from the verb ὕδω, of which the primary sense was, to pour forth, and which hence came to bear the secondary sense, 'to pour forth tones, to sing) from the circumstance of the two brooks which pour down from the lofty crest of the Artemisium. The Hysiæ in Bœotia was, I doubt not, similarly called from its being situated among several brooks, which at length unite to form the river Asopus.

3. ὑπεδέχοντο] So I have thought proper to edit, with Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, from almost all the best MSS., for vulg. ἀπεδέχοντο, which yields no sense here suitable; whereas ὑποδ. is a term which, though rare and passed over in Steph. Thes., is used by the best writers to denote harbouring fugitives or exiles. So Xen. An. i. 6, 3, ὡς φίλιον (where, for φίλιον, read φίλον) ὑπεδ. Demosth. p. 1222, ὑποδέχεσθαι τῶν φεύγοντων οὐδένα. Plato, p. 129, ὃς Τίμαρχον ὑπεδέξατο φεύγοντα, and p. 682: and answering to this is the use in Latin of suscipere, 'to take under one's protection;' except that in the above use there is involved a notion of what is done covertly and illegally, as in our verb to harbour.

κατῴκηντο] 'had taken up their habitation.' Compare i. 120, κατῳκημένους, where I have adduced examples of this use of the passive form.

4. κατέκλῃσαν δὲ — Μακεδονίαν Ἀθηναῖοι] For vulg. Μακεδονίας (acknowledged to be corrupt) I have ventured to edit, what I formerly conjectured, and which, I find, has place in two MSS., Μακεδονίαν. Goeller would read Μακεδόνης; Dobree, ἐκ Μακεδονίας; Haack, ἐν Μακεδονίᾳ; Arnold, κατὰ Μακεδονίαν;—conjectures all of them, on various grounds, inadmissible; whereas Μακεδονίαν (which has been approved by Poppo and edited by Didot) yields an excellent sense, (namely, 'blockaded Macedonia,' meaning that they blocked up the inhabitants from the sea,) and one not open to any well-founded objection.

Περδίκκᾳ] So I have edited, with Goeller, for vulg. Περδίκκαν, because the accus. cannot by any means be defended, and evidently originated in the corrupt reading Μακεδονίας.

On the syntax in ἐπικαλοῦντες, see note on i. 139, 1.

ἔψευστο τὴν ξυμμαχίαν] Of this use of ψεύδεσθαι with an accusative, examples occur in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 400, 5, διέψευστο τὰς ὑποσχέσεις, and i. 438, 32, ὡς ἐψευσμένων τὰς συνθήκας, and 481, 48, οὐδεμίαν ἐψεύσατο τῶν ὑποσχέσεων. Pausan. viii. 7, 4, σπονδὰς ἔ. See note on the words at iii. 66, 2, ψευσθεῖσαν τὴν ὑπόσχεσιν.

ἐκείνου ἀπάραντος] This cannot mean, as it is usually rendered, 'by his departure,' since, as the Athenians were only then preparing their armament, it is little likely that Perdiccas' troops should have already joined the Athenian forces. Nor is there any proof that he was to send troops at all. I would therefore propose to render, 'by his tergiversation,' literally, 'by his (as we should say) backing out of his engagement:' of which sense of the term, though rare, an example occurs in Hesych. ἀπάρας· σκηψάμενος (for so I there read, with Voss., for σκεψάμενος): and to this idiom may be referred the gloss of Zonaras, ἀπαίροντες· μεθιστάμενοι, οὕτως Ἀριστοφάνης: and so in another passage of our author, ii. 67, we have, τῆς ξυμμαχίας μεταστάντα. Nearly the same view of the sense was evidently adopted by the Scholiast, who explains ἀπάραντος by μεταπεισθέντος (for so I would read for ἀναπ., which makes no tolerable sense).

πολέμιος ἦν] for πολ. ἐποιεῖτο. See iv. 82.

οὗτος] This I have thought proper, with Poppo, to edit, from several MSS. (including Codd. Clar., Venet., and Cantab.) for vulg. οὕτω, which is retained by Bekker and Goeller, but not, I think, on good grounds: for it is observable that our author either uses οὗτος, (as at ii. 103. iii. 25. viii. 60.) or omits the term altogether, but no where uses οὕτω. Finally, in favour of οὗτος it may justly be urged, that those four MSS. which have οὕτως were doubtless copied from MSS. that had οὗτος.

μὼν ἐτελεύτα ‡ οὗτος καὶ πέμπτον καὶ δέκατον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα.

LXXXIV. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους Ἀλκιβιάδης τε πλεύσας ἐς Ἄργος ναυσὶν εἴκοσιν, Ἀργείων τοὺς δοκοῦντας ἔτι ὑπόπτους εἶναι καὶ τὰ Λακεδαιμονίων φρονεῖν ἔλαβε, τριακοσίους ἄνδρας, καὶ κατέθεντο αὐτοὺς Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὰς ἐγγὺς νήσους, ὧν ἦρχον. 2. καὶ ἐπὶ Μῆλον τὴν νῆσον Ἀθηναῖοι ἐστράτευσαν ναυσὶν ἑαυτῶν μὲν τριάκοντα, Χίαις δὲ ἓξ, ‡ Λεσβίαιν δὲ δυοῖν, καὶ ὁπλίταις ἑαυτῶν μὲν διακοσίοις καὶ χιλίοις καὶ τοξόταις τριακοσίοις καὶ ἱπποτοξόταις εἴκοσι, τῶν δὲ ξυμμάχων καὶ νησιωτῶν ὁπλίταις μάλιστα πεντακοσίοις καὶ χιλίοις. 3. οἱ δὲ Μήλιοι Λακεδαιμονίων μέν εἰσιν ἄποικοι, τῶν δ' Ἀθηναίων οὐκ ἤθελον ὑπακούειν, ὥσπερ οἱ ἄλλοι νησιῶται· ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον οὐδετέρων ὄντες, ἡσύχαζον· ἔπειτα, ὡς αὐτοὺς ἠνάγκαζον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, δῃοῦντες τὴν γῆν, ἐς πόλεμον φανερὸν κατέστησαν. 4. στρατοπεδευσάμενοι οὖν ἐς τὴν γῆν αὐτῶν τῇ παρασκευῇ ταύτῃ οἱ στρατηγοὶ, Κλεομήδης τε ὁ Λυκομήδους καὶ Τισίας ὁ Τισιμάχου, πρὶν ἀδικεῖν τι τῆς γῆς, λόγους πρῶτον ποι-ceeds to narrate the expedition of the Athenians against the island of Melos, which (as Bp. Thirlwall observes) 'had long irritated the pride of Athens, by its having successfully maintained its independence, but at this juncture had chiefly provoked her enmity by its faithful attachment to Sparta.' The value of an island so small (only about sixteen miles long, and six broad, yet fertile and well-peopled) could not have been much to Athens, but the object (as Bp. Thirlwall observes) was one to which they were directed by passion rather than by a calm estimate of its value. Besides healing their wounded pride at their former repulse, they wished (or rather Alcibiades, the originator of the measure) to wound Sparta through the side of her most faithful colony, and either to humble her, by extorting a practical confession of her inability to save it, or provoke her to an open rupture with Athens.

2. For Λεσβίαιν, many of the best MSS. have Λεσβίαις, which has been edited by Haack and Poppo; while Bekker and Goeller retain the common reading; and justly; for it may well be supposed that after Χίαις the scribe inadvertently wrote Λεσβίαις. Moreover, this is one of those cases in which propriety of language (and such here requires the dual, because, as says Elmsley, cited in Poppo, 'δυοῖν ap. Atticos duali jungitur') is sufficient to outweigh the authority of MSS.

CH. LXXXIV. Thucydides now proησομένους ἔπεμψαν πρέσβεις· οὓς οἱ Μήλιοι πρὸς μὲν τὸ πλῆθος οὐκ ἤγαγον, ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἀρχαῖς καὶ τοῖς ὀλίγοις λέγειν ἐκέλευον περὶ ὧν ἥκουσιν. οἱ δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων πρέσβεις ἔλεγον τοιάδε.

*LXXXV. Ἐπειδὴ οὐ πρὸς τὸ πλῆθος οἱ λόγοι γίγνονται, ὅπως δὴ μὴ ξυνεχεῖ ῥήσει οἱ πολλοί, ἐπαγωγὰ καὶ ἀνέλεγκτα ἐσάπαξ ἀκούσαντες ἡμῶν, ἀπατηθῶσι, (γιγνώσκομεν γὰρ ὅτι τοῦτο φρονεῖ ὑμῶν ἡ ἐς τοὺς ὀλίγους ἀγωγή,) ὑμεῖς οἱ καθήμενοι †ἔτι ἀσφαλέστερον ποιήσατε. καθ' ἕκαστον γὰρ καὶ μηδ' ὑμεῖς ἑνὶ λόγῳ, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ μὴ δοκοῦν ἐπιτηδείως λέγεσθαι εὐθὺς ὑπολαμβάνοντες, κρίνετε. καὶ πρῶτον, εἰ ἀρέσκει ὡς λέγομεν εἴπατε. οἱ δὲ τῶν Μηλίων ξύνεδροι ἀπεκρίναντο. LXXXVI. ΜΗΛ. Ἡ μὲν ἐπιείκεια τοῦ διδάσκειν καθ' ἡσυχίαν ἀλλήλους οὐ ψέγεται· τὰ δὲ τοῦ πολέμου, παρόντα ἤδη καὶ οὐ μέλλοντα, διαφέροντα αὐτοῦ φαίνεται. ὁρῶμεν γὰρ αὐτούς τε κριτὰς ἥκοντας ὑμᾶς τῶν λεχθησομένων, καὶ τὴν τελευτὴν ἐξ αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὸ εἰκός, περιγενομένοις μὲν τῷ δικαίῳ, καὶ δι' αὐτὸ μὴ ἐνδοῦσι, πόλεμον ἡμῖν φέρουσαν, πεισθεῖσι δὲ, δουλείαν.

LXXXVII. ΑΘ. Εἰ μὲν τοίνυν ὑπονοίας τῶν μελλόντων λογιούμενοι, ἢ ἄλλο τι ξυνήκετε, ἢ ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, καὶ ὧν ὁρᾶτε,

Ch. LXXXV. In this Conference between the Melian ξύνεδροι (or commissioners) and the Athenian envoys (or deputies), to treat of peace, Duker fully agrees with Dionys. Hal., that there is much of what is perplexed, contort, and forced. But he totally disallows the more serious charge of that writer, that 'the whole of the dialogue was invented by Thucydides, without any certain knowledge of what passed;' which, it is urged, he could not have obtained, as being then an exile in Thrace. To this it has been replied by Acacius, that 'though resident in Thrace, he had the best opportunities of coming at the truth, by communication with persons of both parties.' He was, no doubt, aware that the communication between the Athenians and Melians was here not by speeches, but by dialogue or discussion, (as well it might, since the persons on each side were so few; on that of the Athenians, only the two envoys, and on that of the Melians, the Few, consisting of the magistrates and the persons of greatest weight,) and we may suppose that either being only informed of the substance of what was said, he did not aim at repeating exactly what passed, but (to use the words of Mitford) gave a methodized account of the general arguments which were employed, clothing the whole in his own phraseology (which, from the sophistical and subtle nature of the argumentation, is more than usually obscure and perplexed); or, as Bp. Thirlwall thinks probable, 'he formed a dialogue which, from his knowledge of the views and feelings of the parties, he conceived might have passed on the occasion.' More than this Thucydides might be unable to effect, from an almost total deficiency of correct information, the Melian interlocutors being no more, and the Athenian ones (probably but two) either deceased, or not disposed to supply much information on a matter which was an everlasting stigma on the Athenian name. Wholly without foundation is Mitford's censure of Thucydides for making the Athenian envoys assert the right of the strong to hold absolute rule over the weak, nay, even to profess a confidence in the continuance of that favour of the gods which had enabled the Athenians to subjugate and exercise so many cruelties on the Grecian states,—since no reason is there to think that he approved of the one, or expected the other; for the language here employed may, as Bp. Thirlwall suggests, 'be considered as nothing more than an expression of the then prevailing maxims of political morality in Greece, as to the paramount claims of the public interest over every other consideration; the expediency to which the Athenian speakers profess to sacrifice the obligations of justice being only the good of the state.' The arguments on both sides are subtle and various,—embracing almost every topic of persuasion,—ably put and dexterously shifted as occasion required. As to the deep obscurity which prevails throughout, this may chiefly be attributed to the sophistical nature of the argumentation on the side of the Athenians, in which the very attempt to give falsehood the appearance of truth must necessarily detract from perspicuity. So Eurip. Phœn. 480, Ἁπλοῦς ὁ μῦθος τῆς ἀληθείας ἔφυ, Κοὐ ποικίλων δεῖ τἄνδιχ' ἑρμηνευμάτων — ὁ δ' ἄδικος λόγος, Νοσῶν ἐν αὐτῷ, φαρμάκων δεῖται.

1. ἐπειδὴ οὐ πρὸς — εἴπατε] The full sense may be expressed as follows: 'Since the words [we are using] are not [permitted] to be addressed to the multitude,—in order that the Many may not, on hearing from us, in continuous address, representations seductive and devoid of proof, be deceived,—(for well we wot that this is the object of your introducing us to the Few,)—do you who sit there pursue a yet safer course; do you likewise not propound your judgment upon each matter in one continued speech; but, on any thing occurring which seems to be said unfavourably [for you], immediately take it up: and first tell us whether what we are saying meets your approbation.' The δὴ after ὅπως is, as often, equivalent to δῆθεν, forsooth. Ἐπαγωγὰ here, as at iv. 88, and Herodot. iii. 53, denotes 'things attractive or seductive,' specious and showy, as opposed to real and substantial. Comp. vi. 8, 2, ἀκούσαντες τῶν—πρεσβέων—ἐπαγωγὰ καὶ οὐκ ἀληθῆ. Of ἀνέλεγκτα the sense is, 'devoid of ἔλεγχος or proof.' By τοὺς ὀλίγους are meant the governing Few, the magistrates. On the use of φρονεῖ for βούλεται, vult, Krueg. refers to Valcken. on Hdot. iv. 131. Ἀγωγὴ is for ἐσαγωγὴ, or προσαγωγή. In οἱ καθήμενοι there is an allusion to the sitting posture of councillors and magistrates. See Prov. xxxi. 23, and Susan. 50. And such is the use of καθέζεσθαι in Demosth. 1434, 6, and of ξυγκαθῆσθαι at ch. 56, where see note. At ἀσφαλέστερον we may supply τί: but I suspect that Thucydides wrote, not ἔτι, but τἰ, which seems to have had place in the Scholiast's copy, since he explains by ὃ ὑμεῖς οἱ προεστῶτες ἀσφαλέστερον ποιήσατε, where Poppo would cancel the ὅ, which ought rather to be emended by οὔ. Μηδ' ὑμεῖς, 'neither do ye.' Ἑνὶ λόγῳ, equivalent to ξυνεχεῖ ῥήσει, just before, meaning in one continued speech, as opposed to dialogue where the continuity is interrupted. The expression, however, is so rare, that it was mistaken for the common one, ἐν ὀλίγῳ, by the scribes of almost all the MSS.: indeed I suspect all, for the few which are thought to have it not, would, I doubt not, be found to have it. Thus I found it in the Clarend.; though, since Hudson and Arnold both passed it over, the MS. might be supposed to have ἑνὶ λόγῳ. I have also found ἐν ὀλίγῳ in the Cantab. and Harl. Ἐπιτηδείως signifies, as supra ch. 82, and elsewhere, 'favourably to you.' Ὑπολαμβάνοντες, 'taking up, objecting to.' Κρίνετε, as Krueger points out, stands for διακρίνετε, dijudicate, discernite. Ξύνεδρος denotes 'one who sits with others in council' on any question. See note at iv. 22, 1.

Ch. LXXXVI. 1. ἡ μὲν ἐπιείκεια—οὐ ψέγεται] Render, 'the fairness of thus leisurely making our sentiments known to each other is not found fault with [by us].' So ἐπιεικὴς is used at iii. 4 & 9. Ψέγεται is, by a certain delicacy, frequent in this dialogue and the Orations of the Platæans, lib. iii., and found in Dionys. Hal. p. 439, used instead of ψέγομεν for the sake of avoiding personality. In a passage of Plut. de Garrul. 4, (where the same may be recognised,) οὕτως οὐ ψέγεται τῷ πίνειν, εἰ προείη τῷ πίνειν τὸ σιωπᾶν, for τῷ before πίνειν read τό.

τὰ δὲ τοῦ πολέμου — φαίνεται] 'But these hostile measures—already present and not future—seem of a different complexion to that.' At τὰ τοῦ πολέμου supply πράγματα. On this expression see notes at ii. 60. iii. 59, and especially v. 102.

τῷ δικαίῳ] 'the plea or argument of right.' See note on iv. 62, 3, and iv. 61, 4, τὸ δίκαιον τῆς ξυνθήκης.

Ch. LXXXVII. 1. Εἰ μὲν τοίνυν—λέγοιμεν ἂν] Of these words the full sense is, 'If, then, ye are come together with us (i. e. have met us) to reckon up suspicions of things future (i. e. of what may happen), or for aught else than, according to the present posture of affairs, and from what you see before your eyes, to consult for the saving of the state,—we would hold our tongues; but if [ye are met] for that purpose, we will say what we have to say.' Τοίνυν, nunc profecto, 'now then.' At ἄλλο τι we may, with Goeller, supply ποιήσοντες, as at iv. 14, and on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 487, 9. Ξυνήκειν is a term of rare occurrence, signifying, according to the primary and physical acceptation, 'to come together as straight lines forming an angle.' And so in Aristot. cited in Steph. Thes. we have, ἐς ὀξὺ συνήκειν. 2. 'to come together as things that blend into one.' So Xen. de Vectig. iv. 44, συνήκοι τ' ἂν τὰ ἔργα εἰς ἕν: whence may be defended the common reading in a περὶ σωτηρίας βουλεύσοντες τῇ πόλει, παυοίμεθ' ἄν· εἰ δ' ἐπὶ τοῦτο, λέγοιμεν ἄν.

LXXXVIII. ΜΗΛ. Εἰκὸς μὲν καὶ ξυγγνώμη ἐν τῷ τοιῷδε καθεστῶτας ἐπὶ πολλὰ καὶ λέγοντας καὶ δοκοῦντας τρέπεσθαι· ἡ μέντοι ξύνοδος καὶ περὶ σωτηρίας ἥδε πάρεστι, καὶ ὁ λόγος ᾧ προκαλεῖσθε τρόπῳ, εἰ δοκεῖ, γιγνέσθω.

LXXXIX. ΑΘ. Ἡμεῖς τοίνυν οὔτε αὐτοὶ μετ' ὀνομάτων καλῶν, ὡς ἢ δικαίως, τὸν Μῆδον καταλύσαντες, ἄρχομεν, ἢ ἀδικούμενοι νῦν ἐπεξερχόμεθα, λόγων μῆκος ἄπιστον παρέξομεν, οὔθ' ὑμᾶς passage of Eurip. Phœn. 472, ὅταν φίλος τις ἀνδρὶ θυμωθεὶς φίλῳ, Ἐς ἓν ξυνελθών, ὕμματ' ὄμμασιν διδῷ, Ἐφ' οἷς συνήκει, ταῦτα χρὴ μόνον σκοπεῖν, where Porson and Matthiæ edit ἐφ' οἷσιν ἥκει, scil. τις: but not on good grounds; for συνήκει is a much more significant and appropriate term, and the circumstance of its not occurring elsewhere in the Tragedians is no proof that it might not have been employed by them, since it is of Attic usage. On the expression ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, see note on iv. 17. The optatives here occurring are not well rendered by the Latin translators as if futures; the optative, and not the future, being here employed because the action spoken of is modestly represented as dependent on some condition which is supposed to be fulfilled. See Jelf's Kühner, § 425, 1, a. Of ἐπὶ τοῦτο, to signify 'for this purpose,' another example occurs in Aristoph. Nub. 255, ἐπ' αὐτό γε τοῦτο πάρεσμεν, ὡς ἐπιδείξοντε καὶ διδάξοντε.

Ch. LXXXVIII. It is well remarked by Dionys. de Thucyd. Jud. 38, that our author now turns from the simple narrative to the dramatic.

1. εἰκὸς μὲν—γιγνέσθω] Render, 'It is, indeed, reasonable and excusable for persons placed in such a situation [as this], to turn many ways, both in speaking and in surmising. However, this our meeting is, in fact, even for [our] preservation; and [so] let the discourse be, if it please you, in the manner which you propose.' The expression ἐπὶ πολλὰ ('towards many things') is, as Poppo observes, said with a reference to the exhortation of the Athenians, that they would turn their attention to one thing only, the saving of the city. Δοκοῦντας is, as Krueger remarks, a mild term for the somewhat invidious one, by which the Scholiast explains the present, ὑπονοοῦντας. Its exact force is best expressed by our verb to surmise.

Ch. LXXXIX. The Athenians now proceed, at the first outset, to lay down the grounds on which they propose to argue the matter. They waive all appeals to justice, as distinct from political expediency; not because they are conscious of flagrant wrong,—but because they have made up their minds on this head, and wish to prevent a waste of words. (Bp. Thirlwall.) So Eteocles in Eurip. Phœn. 598, οὐ λόγων ἀγὼν ἔστ', ἀλλ' ἀνάλωται χρόνος ὀὺν μέσῳ μάτην.

ἡμεῖς τοίνυν, &c.] Render, 'We will, then, neither ourselves, with specious pretences,—either that, as having put down the Mede, we justly bear rule; or that, as being aggrieved, we are now come to avenge ourselves [thereby],—pour forth a torrent of unconvincing words.' Τοίνυν has here the inceptive use, in the commencement of a subject after something prefatory: on which see Hoogev. de Part. Ὀνομάτων καλῶν the Scholiast explains by λέξεων εὐπρεπῶν (meaning what we call fine words): but it would rather seem that the expression here, like tituli speciosi in Latin, serves to denote what we understand by specious pretences, without any reality or truth. Comp. Jos. Ant. xvii. 9, 5, ἀλλὰ καὶ μετὰ νομίμων ὀνομάτων (titulis) τῆς βασιλείας ἐφιεμένου τῆς πράξεως. Krueg. aptly compares with the present a similar sentiment at vi. 83, οὐ καλλιεπούμεθα, ὡς τὸν βάρβαρον μόνοι καθελόντες εἰκότως ἄρχομεν: not that the Athenians were ever indisposed to treat on a subject so gratifying to themselves as the one in question. Thus at i. 73, they enter into the argument at large, however invidious to others. But on occasions like the present, when to urge it were a waste of words, they waived it, and avowed the real ground on which they claimed dominion,—the right of the strong to give law to the weak. In λόγων μῆκος ἄπιστον there is not, what Bauer supposes, an hypallage for μῆκος λέγων ἄπιστον, the phrase μῆκος λόγων here occupying the place simply of a substantive, in the sense 'a long story.' The term ἄπιστον may be taken in a passive sense to signify something disbelieved, to which no faith is attached. In παρέξομεν we have a metaphorical usage derived from the natural one of παρέχειν ἀργύριον, &c., as in the Latin præbere stipem to signify largiri stipem. Thus παρέχειν here stands for προφέρειν.

ἀξιοῦμεν, ἢ ὅτι, Λακεδαιμονίων ἄποικοι ὄντες οὐ ξυνεστρατεύσατε, ἢ ὡς ἡμᾶς οὐδὲν ἠδικήκατε, λέγοντας, οἴεσθαι πείσειν· τὰ δυνατὰ δ', ἐξ ὧν ἑκάτεροι ἀληθῶς φρονοῦμεν, διαπράσσεσθαι, ἐπισταμένους πρὸς εἰδότας ὅτι δίκαια μὲν ἐν τῷ ἀνθρωπείῳ λόγῳ ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης ἀνάγκης κρίνεται, δυνατὰ δὲ οἱ προὔχοντες πράσσουσι, καὶ οἱ ἀσθενεῖς ξυγχωροῦσιν.

οὔθ' ὑμᾶς ἀξιοῦμεν, &c.] The construction is, as laid down by the Scholiast, οὔτε ἀξιοῦμεν οἴεσθαι λέγοντας ὑμᾶς πείσειν ἡμᾶς, 'nor would we have you think you shall sway us either by urging that, though colonists of Lacedæmon, ye did not take part in any of her expeditions.'

τὰ δυνατὰ — διαπράσσεσθαι] Constr. [ἀξιοῦμεν] δὲ [ὑμᾶς] διαπράσσεσθαι τὰ δυνατὰ ἐξ ὧν ἑκάτεροι ἀληθῶς φρονοῦμεν, ἐπισταμένους (scil. ὑμᾶς) [ἐν τῷ λέγειν] πρὸς εἰδότας [ἡμᾶς], &c.: and render, 'But we would have you (aim at) accomplishing what is possible,—according to what each of us really accounts such; addressing one another as those who alike know, that what is just is, in human estimation, examined only according to equal necessity.'

Of ἐξ ὧν—ἀληθῶς φρονοῦμεν the sense is, literally, 'according to what we really have in mind,' think of doing, mean to do, our real intentions or plans of action. Of this sense of φρονεῖν, 'to have in mind,' examples are frequent in Homer, as Il. iii. 98, φρονέω διακριθῆναι, and ix. 310 & 604, φρονέω δὲ τετιμῆσθαι Διὸς αἴσῃ. Od. xvi. 13. xviii. 93. Now the real intentions of each party, as here alluded to, were, those of the Athenians, to use their power by subjugating the Melians; those of the Melians, to parry the attack as well as they could. Διαπρ. used, as here, in the middle voice, signifies, as supra iii. 82. Herodot. i. 2. Xen. Mem. ii. 9, 7, 'to carry through any course of action to completion.' The words ἐπισταμένους πρὸς εἰδότας are, as the Scholiast points out, equivalent to ἐπισταμένων καὶ ὑμῶν καὶ ἡμῶν. But to advert to the rationale of the construction, the present may be regarded as a condensed form of expression intended to save the addition of another clause; the several participles being adapted in case to ὑμᾶς and ἡμᾶς before. Thus the formula serves to introduce a general maxim of policy in ὅτι δίκαια, &c., though one so obscurely expressed, that, as to what the meaning is, we are left much in the dark; we have to guess it from the context. We shall, however, obtain some clue to the sense by considering the scope of the words, which is to illustrate the previous sentiment,—namely, that 'each party is expected to do what it can, as well as it can [without reference to right]:' a procedure which is shown to be agreeable to the common course of human action. The main force of the argument lies in the terms δίκαια and δυνατά; of which the former denotes, 'what men have a fair claim to by justice;' the latter, 'what they can obtain by power.' At ἐν τῷ ἀνθρωπείῳ λόγῳ ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης ἀνάγκης κρίνεται, ('in human estimation distinguished or approved of [only] on equal necessity,') the ἀπὸ (as Poppo points out) denotes state or condition, (as elsewhere ἐκ, and the Latin ex, in the phrase ex æquo,) and thus the sense intended is, 'quum neutra pars potentior viribus perrumpere jura valet, utraque cogi ab utraque potest, ut jure agat, non vi.' Λόγος here, as often, bears the sense account, reckoning, estimation; the simple sentiment intended being, that 'justice is in human estimation alone regarded as existing where a state of equal necessity subsists,'—if, at least, by ἀνάγκης we understand, with Arnold, 'the force of external things restraining the human will,' which, in the present instance, consisted in the equally-balanced checks upon either party respectively; as in the case adverted to by the Mitylenæan Orator, bk. iii. 11, τὸ δὲ ἀντίπαλον δέος μόνον πιστὸν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν.

Of the words following, δυνατὰ δὲ—ξυγχωροῦσιν, (which advert to the state of things as they are, not as they should be,) the full sense is, 'but that, as to the possible, those who have the upper hand exercise [their power] as far as they can, and the weak succumb.' Compare i. 76, ἀεὶ καθεστῶτος τὸν ἥσσω ὑπὸ τοῦ δυνατωτέρου κατείργεσθαι. And so, just after, χρησάμενοι τῇ ἀνθρωπείᾳ φύσει ὥστε ἑτέρων ἄρχειν, and Eurip. Archil. frag. 16, οἱ γὰρ ἥσσονες τοῖς κρείσσοσιν φιλοῦσι

XC. ΜΗΛ. Ἢι μὲν δὴ νομίζομέν γε χρήσιμον (ἀνάγκη γὰρ, ἐπειδὴ ὑμεῖς οὕτω παρὰ τὸ δίκαιον τὸ ξυμφέρον λέγειν ὑπέθεσθε) μὴ καταλύειν ὑμᾶς τὸ κοινὸν ἀγαθόν· ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀεὶ ἐν κινδύνῳ γιγνομένῳ εἶναι τὰ εἰκότα [καὶ] δίκαια, καί τι καὶ ἐντὸς τοῦ ἀκριβοῦς δουλείαν βροτῶν. Possibly, however, in this very briefly, not to say enigmatically, expressed passage, the meaning intended is, that 'each party may be expected to consider the possible, and accordingly, as what he can do is the only rule of the stronger, so what he must do should be that of the weaker, who ought to yield to necessity.'

Ch. XC. Instead of vulg. ἢ μὲν,—which, though retained by Poppo, is not good Greek,—I have edited, from Codd. B. & K. (to which I add Clarend. à primâ manu, and Br. M.) ᾗ μέν: Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold edit, from conjecture, ἡμεῖς; but most uncritically; for had that been the original reading, it could not well have been altered. Hence I have, with Hermann, adopted the reading ᾗ μὲν, which yields an excellent sense, (though, from inattention to the construction, it may easily have been altered,) namely, quatenus; as in Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 18, οὐ δοκεῖ σοι διαφέρειν τὰ ἑκούσια τῶν ἀκουσίων; ᾗ ὁ μὲν ἑκὼν πεινῶν, φάγοι ἂν ὁπότε βούλοιτο. Render, 'As far, indeed, as we deem (or judge) it is expedient that you should not destroy the public good.' The γε (saltem, 'for our part') has much force when used, as here, by way of modestly restricting what might seem egotistic. At χρήσιμον there is the usual ellipsis of ἐστι, and no personal pronoun need be supplied, the present being, as Poppo points out, a general sentiment.

Of the parenthetical words, ἀνάγκη γὰρ —ὑπέθεσθε, the full sense is, 'for it is not necessary, since you have thus laid down the principle to speak of advantage to the neglect of justice, [for us so to speak of the advantageous].' The term ὑποθέσθαι sometimes signifies to lay down, as said of a principle or law, and also to lay down or set an example. The use of the word, in the present case, seems to comprise both these senses. Compare ch. 98. Ὑμᾶς, for vulg. ἡμᾶς, was rightly edited by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, though only from two MSS., to which Arnold adds Clarend.; but that is on rasure. I have, however, found it in Cantab. and Br. M. The expression τὸ κοινὸν ἀγαθὸν is well rendered by Poppo, 'id quod omnibus [hominibus] commune bonum est,' meaning, in other words, 'a principle which promotes the common good of men.'

ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀεὶ — ὠφεληθῆναι] Render, 'nay, [we think] it for the benefit of him who is at any time in danger, that what is fair should be regarded as [his] right, and that any one should be benefited by suffering something within the strict demands of justice.' In τῷ γιγνομένῳ we have a dativus commodi; and the ἀεὶ bears the sense, not of semper, (for thus, with Goeller, understanding man as the subject, we have, though an undoubted truth, yet one not to the present purpose,) but 'at any time,' according to that idiom treated of by Schweigh. Lex. Polyb. in voce, by which the word is used of that which is done (or, as in the present case, happens) 'quavis occasione subindè, ubi res fert vel poscit.' In this sense, too, the word occurs not unfrequently in Xenophon. So Cyrop. viii. 2, 7, τοῖς ἀεὶ παροῦσι, and viii. 4, 15, τῷ ἀεὶ καλὸν ποιοῦντι. vii. 5, 26, τοῖς ἀεὶ ἐγγυτάτω οὖσι. Laced. v. 18, τὸν ἀεὶ πρεσβ. Cyr. iv. 6, 7, ὁ ἀεὶ—δεόμενος. And so elsewhere in our author supra iii. 37, we have, τῶν ἀεὶ λεγομένων ἐς τὸ κοινόν. vii. 57, τοὺς ἀεὶ πολεμίους.

Several of the best MSS. (including, I add, Clar., Cantab., and Br. M.) are without the καὶ between εἰκότα and δίκαια. And that it is merely insititious, may be argued from the circumstance, that while it might easily be added, from inattention to the construction, it could not well have been inadvertently omitted. Supposing it, then, to be not genuine, the sense will be, as Goell. explains, 'æqua pro justis esse' or haberi; or, regarding δίκαια, with Bauer, as standing in the place of the predicate, we may render, 'Ut τὰ εἰκότα commoda, favorabilia, sint [eadem] justa, pro jure cedant, versanti in periculo.' If the καὶ be retained, we cannot do better than explain, with the Scholiast, by τὰ προσήκοντα καὶ τὰ δίκαια νέμεσθαι, 'should have allotted to him.' Angl. 'And that it should [as heretofore] be of advantage to whoever happens to be in danger, if he can make out to his hearers a fair and just defence, and even if he can [or, yea, even if he can] state a case somewhat short of a strict and complete vindication.' This interpretation will require us, for vulg. πείσοντα, to read, from two bad MSS., πείσαντα. The reading ἐντὸς, for vulg. ἐκτὸς, is supported alike by external authority ‡ πείσοντά τινα ὠφεληθῆναι. καὶ πρὸς ὑμῶν οὐχ ἧσσον τοῦτο, ὅσῳ καὶ ἐπὶ μεγίστῃ τιμωρίᾳ, σφαλέντες, ἂν τοῖς ἄλλοις παράδειγμα γένοισθε.

XCI. ΑΘ. Ἡμεῖς δὲ τῆς ἡμετέρας ἀρχῆς, ἣν καὶ παυθῇ, οὐκ ἀθυμοῦμεν τὴν τελευτήν· οὐ γὰρ οἱ ἄρχοντες ἄλλων, ὥσπερ καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, οὗτοι δεινοὶ τοῖς νικηθεῖσιν· (ἔστι δὲ οὐ πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους ἡμῖν ὁ ἀγὼν) ἀλλ', ἢν οἱ ὑπήκοοί που τῶν ἀρξάντων and internal evidence, the sense being, 'intra (or citra) strictum et severum jus,' 'short of the demands of strict and rigorous justice.' And such is the use of intra in Hor. A. P. 266, 'intra spem veniæ.'

καὶ πρὸς ὑμῶν — γένοισθε] Here the reasoning is brought down from generalities, and applied to the particular case in hand, that of the Athenians as regarded the Melians. The full sense intended is as follows: 'And this [line of conduct] is not less (i. e. is rather) for your advantage [than ours],—inasmuch as, when worsted, you would be an example to others for the severest vengeance [being exercised on you].' On this force of ὅσῳ, see note at vi. 89. The ἐπὶ here denotes purpose, or rather effect,—namely, 'exemplum [quo moveantur] ut gravissimam pœnam vobis infligant.' Goeller well expresses the sense by 'cum sorte, conditione sævissimæ vindictæ,' i. e. 'ita ut sævissimam pœnam daturi essetis.' The argument here urged is quite parallel to that at iii. 84, 3, ἀξιοῦσί τε τοὺς κοινοὺς περὶ τῶν τοιούτων οἱ ἄνθρωποι νόμους, ἀφ' ὧν ἅπασιν ἐλπὶς ὑπόκειται σφαλεῖσι κἂν αὐτοὺς διασώζεσθαι— ἐν ἄλλων τιμωρίαις προκαταλύειν, καὶ μὴ ὑπολείπεσθαι, εἴποτε ἄρα τις κινδυνεύσας τινὸς δεήσεται αὐτῶν.

Ch. XCI. 1. Ἡμεῖς δὲ—τελευτὴν] We have here a reply to the argument contained in σφαλέντες (for εἰ σφαλείητε) just before. Render, 'But we are not afraid of (we do not view with terror) the termination of our empire; even should it be [as you hint] put an end to.' The term παύεσθαι, as used of ἀρχὴ, I have no where else noted; but παύειν τινὰ τῆς ἀρχῆς occurs in Xen. Cyr. viii. 6, 2, and Hist. ii. 3, 18; and at vi. 2, 8, we have, π. αὐτὸν τῆς στρατηγίας. And so Synes. παύεσθαι τῆς ἀρχῆς, and παύεσθαι with ἀρχῆς in Dio Cass. 485, 20. Demosth. 1187, στρατηγοῦντα αὐτὸν ἐπαύσατε. In Dio Cass., too, we have not unfrequently παύειν τινὰ simply. Parallel to this is the Latin abrogare imperium alicui. The original signification of the term is, 'to put a stop to [any one's course];' whence it came to bear the sense put down, as in Hom. Il. xxi. 314, ἵνα παύσομεν ἄγριον ἄνδρα. Hence also it came to mean, 'to depose any one from his office;' and in this use, not only was the person himself, but also, as here, his office or rule, said to be put down. With the expression ἀθυμοῦμεν τὴν τελευτὴν, (which is not a little rare,) compare Xen. Mem. iv. 3, 15, ἐκεῖνο δὲ ἀθυμῶ, and Œcon. viii. 31, οὐδὲ τοῦτο δεῖ ἀθυμῆσαι. Eurip. El. 831, τί χρῆμ' ἀθυμεῖς;

οὐ γὰρ οἱ ἄρχοντες — νικηθεῖσιν] The Scholiast ably opens out the scope of the passage thus: Λακεδαιμόνιοι γάρ, καὶ πάντες οἱ ἄρχειν εἰωθότες ἑτέρων, οὐ χαλεπῶς τοῖς νικηθεῖσι προσφέρονται, ὥστε οὐ Λακεδαιμονίους δέδιμεν, ἀλλὰ τοὺς ὑπηκόους· οὗτοι γάρ, ἅτε οὐκ εἰωθότες ἑτέρων ἄρχειν, ἐπειδὰν κρατήσωσι τῶν ἀρχόντων, ὠμότατα αὐτοῖς χρῶνται. ἀλλὰ περὶ μὲν τούτου ἐν ἀδήλῳ κείσθω, ὅπως ποτὲ ἕξει.

The words οὐ γὰρ οἱ ἄρχοντες—νικηθεῖσιν contain a general sentiment,—namely, that 'ruling states are not objects of terror one to the other, as regards the beaten party [but usually show mercy to each other];' which was, in fact, the case with the Lacedæmonians: in which view Dionysius thinks this is equivalent to saying, that ruling powers are not objects of hatred one to another. But it is rather meant, as the Scholiast explains, that they do not deal harshly with one another (according to what is said in another passage which Dr. Arnold compares with the present, vi. 11, οὐκ εἰκὸς ἀρχὴν ἐπὶ ἀρχὴν στρατεῦσαι); a position verified by historical experience in every age.

The words ἔστι δὲ — ἀγὼν contain an interposed remark, serving to apply the general truth in question to their own particular case,—i. e. 'Now our great struggle and danger (that of being destroyed after defeat) is not as respects the Lacedæmonians.' The words ἀλλ' ἢν οἱ ὑπήκοοι —κρατήσωσι contain the corresponding member to οὐ γὰρ—νικηθεῖσιν: and the full sense intended is, 'but if those who αὐτοὶ ἐπιθέμενοι κρατήσωσι. 2. καὶ περὶ μὲν τούτου ἡμῖν ἀφείσθω κινδυνεύεσθαι· ὡς δὲ ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ τε πάρεσμεν τῆς ἡμετέρας ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ νῦν τοὺς λόγους ἐροῦμεν τῆς ὑμετέρας πόλεως, ταῦτα δηλώσομεν, βουλόμενοι ἀπόνως μὲν ὑμῶν ἄρξαι, χρησίμως δ' ὑμᾶς ἀμφοτέροις σωθῆναι.

XCII. ΜΗΛ. Καὶ πῶς χρήσιμον ἂν ξυμβαίη ἡμῖν δουλεῦσαι, ὥσπερ καὶ ὑμῖν ἄρξαι;

are any where in subjection, if they should attack and master their rulers, [those are objects of apprehension to the defeated party].' This suppression of the words in question may seem harsh; yet it is not more so than many other instances of the same kind that might be adduced, and the want of exact correspondence between the two members of the sentence is quite Thucydidean. If, in order to avoid the harshness of the above repetition, we should, with Bekker and Arnold, adopt the common punctuation, νικηθεῖσιν. Ἔστι δὲ οὐ, &c., there will be incurred a strange jumbling of the general truth with the particular application. Now, our author might have prevented all the confusion and perplexity in question, had he brought in the words ἔστι δὲ—ἀγών, and subjoined something to correspond to them,—such as the following: 'Thus, for instance, our great danger of destruction is not from the Lacedæmonians, but from our revolted subjects, should they gain the upper hand over us.'

2. καὶ περὶ—κινδυνεύεσθαι] On this passive use of κινδυνεύεσθαι, 'to be put to hazard,' see note at i. 73, and ii. 35. Here the infin. stands for the noun substant. κίνδυνος, 'the risk,' even though there be no article; which, in certain verbs, may be either used or dispensed with, and in others is generally omitted. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 542, where of the former kind he instances ἀναβάλλεσθαι, of the latter κατθανεῖν, λαβεῖν, &c., as found in a passage of Eurip. Alc. 421, πᾶσιν ἡμῖν καθανεῖν ὀφείλεται. And he might have adduced another passage of our author supra ii. 40, 2, οὐ τοὺς λόγους τοῖς ἔργοις βλάβην ἡγούμενοι, ἀλλὰ μὴ προδιδαχθῆναι, &c. Perhaps, however, this is one of those cases in which κινδυνεύεσθαι has with a passive form a neuter sense, so as to be equivalent to κινδυνεύειν, 'to be in danger,' 'to be exposed to hazard,' as in a passage of Demosth. pro Cor. ἐν οἷς τῶν ὅλων τι κινδυνεύεται τῇ πόλει. Elsewhere, too, our author uses the active form, where he says, ii. 45, κινδυνεύειν περὶ τῶν μεγίστων, q. d. 'Let it be left to us to be exposed to danger respecting this matter;' in other words, 'Be that our concern.'

ὡς δὲ ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ—σωθῆναι] The construction here,—by transposition disturbed and perplexed,—will best appear from the following version: 'But that we are come hither both for the advantage of our own empire, and that the words we shall now speak are for the safety of your city,—these matters we will make clear; our wish being to obtain rule over you without trouble, and that you may be preserved, to the advantage of both.' So the Schol. well expresses the sense by βουλόμεθα γὰρ ἄνευ πραγμάτων αὐτοί τε ὑμῶν ἄρξαι, καὶ ὑμᾶς σωθῆναι συμφερόντως καὶ ἡμῖν καὶ ὑμῖν. The word ἀπόνως is to be understood, not, as Portus explains it, of the Melians, but of the Athenians, who wished to capture the city without the toil and expense of a long siege, which would utterly ruin it, to the mutual loss of both parties, as is shown further on. The article at λόγους is not without force; the sense being, 'we shall speak the words [we are going to speak].' See note on vi. 49, 1.

Ch. XCII. 1. καὶ πῶς—ἄρξαι;] 'And yet how may it chance to be as beneficial to us to serve, as to you to rule?' Of this elegant Atticism in the use of ξυμβαίνειν, (by which no little point is communicated to the sentence,) I have noted examples in Xenophon, and also in Plato, where it is generally followed by εἶναι or γίγνεσθαι, though not unfrequently, as here, it occurs without them; in which case most philologists, like the Scholiast here, regard ξυμβαίνειν as standing for εἶναι. But that is little better than a mere expedient to evade a difficulty, and usually tends in no small degree to detract from the sense, which here stands as follows: 'How by any possible chance can it be beneficial,' &c. Compare Plato, p. 665, οἷς δ' ἂν τὰ τῆς φύσεως ὀρθὰ ξυμβαίνῃ. And the same idiom (though with the εἶναι supplied) has place in another passage of our author supra iii. 89, 5, ἄνευ δὲ σεισμοῦ οὐκ ἄν μοι δοκεῖ τὸ τοιοῦτο ξυμβῆναι γενέσθαι, XCIII. ΑΘ. Ὅτι ὑμῖν μέν, πρὸ τοῦ τὰ δεινότατα παθεῖν, ὑπακοῦσαι ἂν γένοιτο· ἡμεῖς δὲ, μὴ διαφθείραντες ὑμᾶς, κερδαίνοιμεν ἄν.

XCIV. ΜΗΛ. Ὥστε [δὲ] ἡσυχίαν ἄγοντας ἡμᾶς φίλους μὲν εἶναι ἀντὶ πολεμίων, ξυμμάχους δὲ μηδετέρων, οὐκ ἂν δέξαισθε;

XCV. ΑΘ. Οὐ γὰρ τοσοῦτον ἡμᾶς βλάπτει ἡ ἔχθρα ὑμῶν, ὅσον ἡ φιλία, [ἡ] μὲν ἀσθενείας, τὸ δὲ μῖσος δυνάμεως παράδειγμα τοῖς ἀρχομένοις δηλούμενον.

XCVI. ΜΗΛ. Σκοποῦσι δ' ὑμῶν οὕτως οἱ ὑπήκοοι τὸ εἰκὸς,

'could not by any chance take place,' as we should say, 'could not possibly happen.'

Ch. XCIII. μὴ διαφθείραντες ὑμᾶς, κερδαίνοιμεν ἄν] 'gain by not having destroyed you.' Compare iii. 46.

Ch. XCIV. ὥστε δὲ] I have bracketed the δὲ because it is not found in the best MSS. (to which add Cant. and Clar. a pr. manu, and Br. M.) and, according to what seems the opinion of Poppo, can have no place here. It probably arose from the critics mistaking the sense of ὥστε, and supposing that some particle of continuation was wanting. Ὥστε, according to its original force, signifies 'and so,' answering to the Latin itaque, used in the sense of and so, or so then; on which see Facciol. Lex. Render, 'So then ye would not admit (i. e. permit) us to remain quiet, and be friends instead of enemies, but allies of neither party?' Of this idiom examples are found in Strabo, v. p. 393, and New Testament, Rom. vii. 4, ὥστε—καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐθανατώθητε, 'so then ye were,' &c.

I have here followed Dobree and Bekker in adopting the reading δέξαισθε, (for the vulg. δέξοισθε,) confirmed as it is by the palpably false one δέξησθε, found in several MSS. and in Procopius; though it scarcely needs that support, since it has been proved by Hermann de part. ἀν, iii. 7, p. 166, that ἀν cannot have place as joined with the opt. fut. Again, I have not thought proper to remove here the marks of interrogation, because of the words of the reply, οὐ γὰρ, which necessarily imply the existence of a previous question. As to the positive denial of Poppo, that ὥστε in this illative sense is ever used with an interrogation,—that is surely pronouncing too magisterially on a matter, after all, of doubtful dispute. To rendering the words, 'So then would you not,' &c.! equivalent to 'would you not, then?'—I see not what objection can justly be urged.

Ch. XCV. οὐ γὰρ] This is one of those many cases in which the particle γὰρ serves to give the reason of the affirmation or denial expressed by the context; and accordingly here we may supply οὐκ ἂν δεξαίμεθα. See more in Hoogev. de Part. p. 463, who remarks, 'Τὸ γὰρ hic et in similibus idem præstat, quod ratio, si expressa fuisset, præstitisset, h. e. negationem ratione firmando rem extra dubitationis aleam ponit: quare potest reddi, Profecto non, Nequaquam, Neutiquam vero.' Cf. Lucian, t. ii. p. 638.

The general sentiment here meant to be conveyed (on which compare iii. 37.) is, 'No; for your enmity does not so much injure us, as would your friendship. That would be, to those whom we govern, a manifest argument of our weakness, but your hatred of our power.' In adjusting the phraseology, which is not a little anomalous, it may be best to recognise here a condensed form of expression: unless, indeed, we suppose, with Krueger, that the article ἡ has been lost between φιλία and μέν: and so easily might it be lost in a position like the present; so likely also is it to have had place in Valla's copy, and, moreover, so necessary is it to the sense,—that I have ventured to admit it into the text, though within brackets. In δηλούμενον we have, as Abresch points out, the use of particip. for adject. δῆλον.

Ch. XCVI. σκοποῦσι δ' ὑμῶν—τιθέασιν;] We have here a reply to the representation of the Athenians, that their subject-allies would ascribe their acquiescence in the independence or in the neutrality of Melos to a mere feeling of inability to conquer the island (which would endanger the stability of her empire); the Melians showing that their subjects would have no reason to attribute their moderation to such a cause, since the Melians are not colonists of Athens, nor her subjects,—so that she should be obliged to hold them in subjection. This, however, is propounded, by a certain refined turn, in the form of interrogation, q. d. 'What, then! do your subὥστε τούς τε μὴ προσήκοντας, καὶ ὅσοι ἄποικοι ὄντες οἱ πολλοὶ καὶ ἀποστάντες τινὲς κεχείρωνται, ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ τιθέασιν;

XCVII. ΑΘ. Δικαιώματι γὰρ οὐδετέρους ἐλλείπειν ἡγοῦνται, κατὰ δύναμιν δὲ τοὺς μὲν περιγίγνεσθαι, ἡμᾶς δὲ φόβῳ οὐκ ἐπιέναι· ὥστε, ἔξω καὶ τοῦ πλεόνων ἄρξαι, καὶ τὸ ἀσφαλὲς ἡμῖν διὰ τὸ καταστραφῆναι ἂν παράσχοιτε, ἄλλως τε καὶ νησιῶται ναυκρατόρων, καὶ ἀσθενέστεροι ἑτέρων ὄντες, εἰ μὴ περιγένοισθε.

XCVIII. ΜΗΛ. Ἐν δ' ἐκείνῳ οὐ νομίζετε ἀσφάλειαν; (δεῖ γὰρ αὖ καὶ ἐνταῦθα, ὥσπερ ὑμεῖς, τῶν δικαίων λόγων ἡμᾶς ἐκβιβάσαντες, τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ξυμφόρῳ ὑπακούειν πείθετε, καὶ ἡμᾶς τὸ ἡμῖν χρήσιμον διδάσκοντας, εἰ τυγχάνει καὶ ὑμῖν τὸ αὐτὸ ξυμβαῖνον, πειρᾶσθαι πείθειν.) ὅσοι γὰρ νῦν μηδετέροις ξυμμαχοῦσι, πῶς οὐ jects so regard equity, (literally, 'view it in such a light,') that they place on the same footing both those who are no way related to you (by any political affinity), and such as, being the greater part of them colonists, have been some of them, after revolt, subdued.' Of σκοπεῖν in this sense (answering to that of spectare and respicere in Latin) examples are found in Plato, p. 526, τὴν ἀλήθειαν σ. The οὕτως is meant to signify, by a modest suppression, 'so [indifferently],' as in Xen. Cyr. iv. 5, 8, ex emend. Abresch, οὕτως, (sic temerè) ἐπ' εὐτυχίᾳ. By τοὺς μὴ προσήκοντας understand, 'those that have no political connexion by affinity, as colonists, or otherwise.' Comp. Eurip. Suppl. 472, (ed. Beck) [σε] προσήκοντ' οὐδὲν Ἀργείων πόλει. On the ὅσοι it is well remarked by Bauer, "'Οσοι est genus vel totum: οἱ πολλοί, τινές, subjecta sunt ut partes: quasi sit, ὅσων οἱ π. ἄποικοι [ὄντες], τινὲς δὲ [καὶ ἀποστάντες]." Ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ τιθέασιν stands for the more usual expression ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τ.

Ch. XCVII. δικαιώματι γὰρ, &c.] Here, as before, γὰρ serves to introduce the reason for the affirmation or negation contained in the foregoing context: and here the answer must be in the affirmative, Yes: the full sense intended being, '(Yes,) for they reckon that neither party is wanting in justificatory pleas; but that those who preserve their freedom preserve it by dint of force [alone, not by right and justice], and that it is only through fear that we do not attack them: so that, independently of having more to rule over, ye would, by your subjugation, contribute to our security; if, I say, ye who are islanders, and weaker than others, should not get the better of those who are masters of the sea.' To proceed to a consideration of the phraseology in detail,—ἐλλείπειν is, as Poppo points out, equiv. to ἐλασσοῦσθαι, or ἐλλειπεῖς εἶναι found at vi. 69. Of the obscure and perplexing words ἄλλως τε καὶ—περιγένοισθε, the constr., however harsh, cannot be better traced than as above: and as regards the sense, there is really nothing to stumble at, except the sort of far-fetched quaintness (such as is not unfrequent in our author) found in the peculiar expression εἰ μὴ περιγένοισθε, of which the full sense intended is, as Poppo points out, 'if you should not get the better of us [by compelling us to retire re infectâ];' or, in other words, 'if you should be subdued.' As to the term περιγίγνεσθαι being used a little before in a somewhat different sense to the above, that, as Poppo remarks, may be sufficiently accounted for on the common principle of dilogia. He also points out that ναυκρατόρων, (rightly edited by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller for vulg. ναυτοκρατόρων,) depending on περιγίγνεσθαι, is transposed, from its being here used in opposition to the noun νησιωτῶν. See Buttm. Gr. Gr. § 151, iii. 1. By ἑτέρων are meant some other islanders, as the Chians and Lesbians.

Ch. XCVIII. Ἐν δ' ἐκείνῳ οὐ νομίζετε ἀσφάλειαν;] 'But think ye not that security lies in that course?' meaning either (as some have understood) in not subjugating those who do not belong to you; or rather, as others, (including Didot and Poppo,) in not making those who are now neutrals your enemies; the argument here intended being, as Bp. Thirlwall points out, that 'the interest of Athens herself required that their neutrality should be respected, on the ground that other independent states would be alarmed and provoked by such aggression.' Accordingly the word ἐκείνῳ is, as Didot points out, to be referred to what comes in after the parenthesis, (ὅσοι γὰρ νῦν, &c.) which πολεμώσεσθε αὐτούς, ὅταν ἐς τάδε βλέψαντες, ἡγήσωνταί ποτε ὑμᾶς καὶ ἐπὶ σφᾶς ἥξειν; κἀν τούτῳ τί ἄλλο ἢ τοὺς μὲν ὑπάρχοντας πολεμίους μεγαλύνετε, τοὺς δὲ μηδὲ μελλήσοντας γενέσθαι ἄκοντας ἐπάγεσθε;

XCIX. ΑΘ. Οὐ γὰρ νομίζομεν ἡμῖν τούτους δεινοτέρους, ὅσοι, ἠπειρῶταί που ὄντες, τῷ ἐλευθέρῳ πολλὴν τὴν διαμέλλησιν τῆς

Bauer, Poppo, Didot, and Arnold have placed between ἀσφάλειαν and ὅσοι. As to the circumstance of γὰρ coming after ὅσοι, that presents no serious objection, since we have only, with Poppo, to recognise here that use (treated on in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 615.) by which this particle—as occasionally nempe in Latin—serves for the explanation of a foregoing proposition; and sometimes, as in the present instance, has place when a somewhat long parenthesis has intervened between a present and a preceding proposition: of which use an example occurs in Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 11, ἔπειτα δὲ (ἀναμνήσω—ἀγαθοί·) ἐλθόντων μὲν γὰρ, &c.

For ἐκβιβάσαντες, 'withdrawing,' 'calling off,' several of the best MSS. have ἐκβιάσαντες, which latter was preferred by Duker, but assuredly not on good grounds,—since all that the examples he has adduced in its support can be said to prove is, that the passive form may be so used. On the other hand, ἐκβιβάσαντες has every thing to recommend it in the circumstance of its being more apt in itself, and more suitable to the term πείθετε, just after. The use of the term in this metaphorical sense is so rare, that I know of no other example but the present. In the physical sense, as used of drawing forth any thing out of any thing, the term occurs in Herodot. vii. 130, τὸν ποταμὸν ἐκ τοῦ αὐλῶνος ἐκβιβάσαντα. Not unfrequently, too, it is employed to denote the disembarking of troops from a vessel; also the causing of any person or animal to leave a place. So Aristoph. Av. 665, ἐκβίβασον ἐκ τοῦ βοντόμου ('the rushy thicket') τοὐρνίθιον: and so Suidas explains ἐκβιβάσας by ἐξαγαγών. Besides the above senses, it also signifies to draw or make any one go from a road or track, as in Xen. Hippag. 1, 18, ἐκβιβάζοντες (scil. τὸν ἵππον, 'the horse') τῶν ὁδῶν: and hence, it should seem, the origin of the metaphorical sense here,—namely, 'to withdraw or draw off any one from the high road of justice and equity, (meaning, the arguments founded thereon,) into the by-paths of mere expediency and self-interest.' So in Polyb. xxvii. 6, 8, we have, ἐκβιβ. τινὰ εἰς τὸν πόλεμον, 'to withdraw any one from the paths of peace into those of war and contention;' and in Dionys. Hal. Scr. Rhet. ii. p. 1125, ἐπὶ τὸ σεμνότερον—ἐκβιβάζειν τὴν ὀνομασίαν, 'to draw forth the mode of expression [from the common-place] into the more dignified.' Compare iv. 128, τῶν ἀναγκαίων ξυμφόρων διαναστάς, 'receding from, waiving.' See the note there.

By δικαίων λόγων is meant, as the Scholiast explains, τῆς δικαιολογίας. Of τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ξυμφόρῳ ὑπακούειν the sense is, 'to accommodate ourselves to your interest.'

εἰ τυγχάνει—ξυμβαῖνον] 'if it should chance that the same is yours likewise.' Πολεμώσεσθε αὐτούς, 'will make them [your] enemies.' See note on i. 36. Μεγαλύνετε, 'make great (namely, by the accession of others as allies).' In this sense the word occurs also in a passage of the Septuagint, Is. xxxiii. 18, τοὺς μεμεγαλυμμένους, and Xen. Hier. ii. 17, μεγαλύνεται.

μελλήσοντας γενέσθαι] On this use of the infin. aorist,—reprobated by Phrynichus, but found in the best Attic writers,—see Lobeck on Phryn. p. 715, who has adduced several examples from Thucydides, Plato, Aristophanes, and Xenophon; and refers to Porson on Eurip. Orest. 929. Boeckh on Pind. Ol. viii. 52, and Elmsl. on Eurip. Heracl. 710. I add, that the idiom is as ancient as the time of Hesiod, who in his Theog. 475, has ἤμελλε τεκέσθαι. With this expression, τοὺς μηδὲ μελλήσοντας γενέσθαι, 'who did not even wish (or intend) to be,' compare iii. 55, 2, οὔτε ἐπάθετε, οὔτε ἐμελλήσατε, scil. παθεῖν, 'nor were you about to suffer,' 'nor would you have suffered.' Yet there is no need to adopt the conjecture of Reiske, μελλήσαντας, since, as Poppo observes, 'rectè dixeris qui—futuri sunt, fieri volunt.'

Ch. XCIX. οὐ γὰρ νομίζομεν, &c.] 'No; for we think that those will be the more formidable,' &c.

τῷ ἐλευθέρῳ—ποιήσονται] 'valde segnes et lenti ad se custodiendos a nobis futuri sunt.' (Steph.) Τὴν διαμέλλησιν is, as Poppo observes, equivalent to μέλλησιν ἀκριβῶς φυλάττεσθαι ἡμᾶς: and τῷ ἐλευθέρῳ is best explained by Portus, Bauer, πρὸς ἡμᾶς φυλακῆς ποιήσονται, ἀλλὰ τοὺς νησιώτας τέ που ἀνάρκτους, ὥσπερ ὑμᾶς, καὶ τοὺς ἤδη τῆς ἀρχῆς τῷ ἀναγκαίῳ παροξυνομένους. οὗτοι γὰρ πλεῖστ' ἂν τῷ ἀλογίστῳ ἐπιτρέψαντες, σφᾶς τε αὐτοὺς καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐς προὔπτον κίνδυνον καταστήσειαν.

C. ΜΗΛ. Ἦ που ἄρα, εἰ τοσαύτην γε ὑμεῖς τε, μὴ παυθῆναι ἀρχῆς, καὶ οἱ δουλεύοντες ἤδη, ἀπαλλαγῆναι, τὴν παρακινδύνευσιν ποιοῦνται, ἡμῖν γε τοῖς ἔτι ἐλευθέροις πολλὴ κακότης καὶ δειλία μὴ πᾶν πρὸ τοῦ δουλεῦσαι ἐπεξελθεῖν.

CI. ΑΘ. Οὔκ· ἤν γε σωφρόνως βουλεύησθε· οὐ γὰρ περὶ ἀνδραγαθίας ὁ ἀγὼν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ὑμῖν, μὴ αἰσχύνην ὄφλειν, περὶ δὲ σωτηρίας μᾶλλον ἡ βουλή, πρὸς τοὺς κρείσσονας πολλῷ μὴ ἀνθίστασθαι.

CII. ΜΗΛ. Ἀλλ' ἐπιστάμεθα τὰ τῶν πολέμων ἔστιν ὅτε and Poppo as equivalent to διὰ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν [αὐτῶν]. The dative here is, as Haack observes, one of cause (answering to τῷ ἀναγκαίῳ following); the sense being, 'by, or on account of, the liberty they enjoy.' With the general sentiment Arnold compares i. 120, 3.

ἀνάρκτους] for ἀνυποτάκτους, 'not under a ruler (i. e. independent);' as in Æschyl. Eum. 500, μήτ' ἄναρκτον βίον μήτε δεσποτούμενον αἰνέσῃς. Soph. ap. Hesych. ἄναρκτον· ἀνυπότακτον. Dio Cass. p. 251, 1068, 1319. With τῷ ἀναγκαίῳ, 'by the compulsion,' comp. Æschyl. Ag. 875, τερπνὸν δὲ τἀναγκαῖον ἐκφυγεῖν ἅπαν. By τῷ ἀλογίστῳ (an expression which I have found elsewhere only in Plato, p. 604, and Plut. de Superst. 3.) is denoted that recklessness, or thoughtlessness of consequences, which is closely connected with foolhardy daring. And so Shakspeare unites the terms, 'careless, reckless, and fearless, of what's past, present, and to come.' Hence, too, the epithet ἀλόγιστος is not unfrequently joined with τόλμα, &c. With the expression ἐς προὔπτον κίνδυνον καταστήσειαν, 'would thrust us into manifest danger,' compare Arr. Ind. ἐς προὔπτον κίνδυνον ἐκπέμπεσθαι. Procop. p. 54, 18, ἐς κίνδυνον πρ. ἴέναι. By προὔπτον is meant, literally, such as stares one in the face, i. e. is imminent and impending.

Ch. C. ἦ που ἄρα—ἐπεξελθεῖν] Render, 'Then of course if ye make so perilous a venture, not to be deprived of your empire; and those who are now under rule, run such hazards to be rid of it,—it were to us, who are yet free, a great baseness and cowardice not to pursue all means rather than fall into slavery.' On this sense of ἦ που ἄρα see Hoogev. de Part. p. 265; and compare Plato, p. 469, ἦπου ὅγε ἀποθνήσκων ἀδίκως, ἐλεινός τε καὶ ἄθλιος ἔστιν;

Ch. CI. οὔκ· ἤν, &c.] 'Not so, if at least ye consult wisely:' on which use of οὔκ see note at iii. 66. With the expression ὁ ἀγὼν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ὑμῖν, compare Aristoph. Ran. 867, οὐκ ἐξ ἴσου γάρ ἐστιν ὠγὼν νῷν.

οὐ γὰρ περὶ—ἀνθίστασθαι] Render, 'for you have not a contest of valour upon equal terms, that so ye should not incur disgrace; but ye have rather to consult for your safety, so as not to oppose yourselves to those who are far your overmatch.' This use of ὄφλειν (which is properly a forensic term) is frequent in the Attic writers. So Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 207, πολλὴν ὀφείλοντες αἰσχύνην.

Ch. CII. Ἀλλ' ἐπιστάμεθα—πλῆθος] 'Ay, but we wot that the affairs of war sometimes take issues of fortune more impartial than according to the difference in number of either party.' Compare a similar passage of Isocr. Archid. p. 185, ὁρῶ καὶ—εἰληφότας. I have followed Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing—though from one MS. only and Valla—πολέμων, instead of vulg. πολεμίων, which is indefensible, as being susceptible of no suitable sense. Of course πράγματα is in this case understood, and τὰ τῶν πολέμων stands for the adj. πολέμια. The same ellipsis of πράγματα with τὰ πολέμια is not unfrequently found in Herodotus. Bp. Middleton, indeed, has laid it down as a Canon, (Gr. Art. p. 52.) that 'genitives used in an adjectival sense, and placed before the governing noun, omit the article;' of which he adduces an example from Socr. Eccl. Hist. p. 118. But it is sufficient to say, that the Greek of an ecclesiastical writer is no rule for classical and Attic Greek: and it would not be easy to adduce a good writer who omits the article in such a case. Thus it occurs in Xen. Mem. iv. 4, 14, τοὺς ἐν τοῖς πολέμοις βοηθ., and Cyrop. vii. 5, 17, τὰ τοῦ πολέμου—ὄντα. Œcon. xi. 12, ἀσκεῖν τὰ τοῦ πολέμου. Demosth. Phil. iv. τὰ τοῦ πολέμου πράττειν. Finally, our author not unfrequently uses the expression τὰ τοῦ πολέμου, (in which τοῦ πολέμου stands for πολεμικά,) as v. 86. vi. 6 & 15. viii. 77 & 82, and τὰ τῶν πολέμων, iii. 82; but no where τὰ πολέμου or πολέμων. The same, too, holds good in the case of other nouns, as τὰ τῆς παρασκευῆς, vi. 29, and τὰ τῆς ἐμπειρίας, vii. 49. In short, the canon of the learned prelate is, I apprehend, wholly baseless,—since 'the practice of the purest Greek writers,' so far from having any thing 'extraneous or interfering with the ordinary practice,' is quite in accordance with the rule of Apollonius, adverted to by the bishop himself, that 'nouns in regimen must have the article prefixed to both of them, or to neither.' And in the case of πόλεμος the article could least be dispensed with, i. e. where the noun denotes, as here, war in its most general sense, including every action of which (according to the definition of the term by Sir W. Raleigh, as cited in Johnson's Dictionary) 'the exercise of force and violence can be predicated;' for πόλεμος, as here used, falls under the class of nouns employed in their most abstract sense, which thus require the article, as ἡ ἀδικία, ἡ ἀκολασία, ἡ δίκη, ἡ δικαιοσύνη, ἡ ἐπιστήμη, and others. See Middleton, Gr. Art. ch. v. § 1. So in a passage of our author supra iv. 98, 6, we have, πᾶν δ' εἰκὸς εἶναι τῷ πολέμῳ καὶ δεινῷ τινι κατ. Finally, as πόλεμος in a manner requires the article in this most abstract use, so does εἰρήνη, and accordingly it is employed by the best Attic prose writers, as Xenophon, Plato, Demosthenes, and Æschines. The most apposite example known to me (as illustrative of the difference between the use of the term in this most abstract acceptation and otherwise) is in Demosth. p. 164, 4, τὴν μὲν εἰρήνην πόλεμον αὐτοῖς εἶναι, τὸν δὲ πόλεμον εἰρήνην. Only one example elsewhere have I noted of the plural οἱ πόλεμοι in this most abstract sense, and that is in Diod. Sic. t. ii. p. 122, where εἰς τοὺς πολέμους occurs followed in antithesis by ἐν ταῖς εἰρήναις. No where else have I noted this use of εἰρήνη in the plural.

With respect to the reading καινοτέρας, which Levêque and Duker have preferred to vulg. κοινοτέρας, though specious, it may justly be pronounced false; and in favour of the latter Dobree well urges—besides the occurrence, a little further on, of ἑκατέρων and διαφέρον,—what exactly answers to the κοινο in κοινοτέρας, the expression ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου at ch. 101. I cannot, however, agree with the learned critic in recognising here an evident imitation of a passage of Hom. Il. xviii. 309, ξυνὸς Ἐνυάλιος, καί τε κτανέοντα κατέκτα, 'communis est belli fortuna.' Surely the idea of imitation is wholly out of the question in the case of a sentiment so common as the present, which has its parallel in the Mars communis est of the Latin writers: and, in fact, this is adduced by Aristot. in his Rhet. ii. 21, as an instance to prove that even the most common and hackneyed sentiments, (what are called γνῶμαι αἱ τεθρυλλημέναι,) if properly introduced, may have great force.

The εὐθὺς is not well referred, as it has generally been, to εἶξαι, by which there arises a sense bordering on absurdity, 'quasi,' as observes Poppo, 'Melios juvaret postea, seu post aliquod tempus cedere!' By referring it, as I think we ought, to ἀνέλπιστον, there will arise a sense, I conceive, quite unexceptionable,—namely, 'to yield excludes at once all hope,'—if at least we take ἀνέλπιστον in an active sense, (such as it bears elsewhere, iii. 30. vi. 17.) so as to correspond to our hopeless: though it is perhaps best taken in a passive sense, as answering to our use of hopeless as applied to things despaired of, or such as leave no room for hope. Comp. vii. 4, ὁρῶν τὰ ἐκ τῆς γῆς σφίσιν ἀνελπιστότερα ὄντα.

μετὰ δὲ τοῦ δρωμένου—ὀρθῶς] Literally, 'but with active exertion there is a hope even yet of keeping on foot,' literally, 'upright.' In this use of the participle δρωμένου, for the infin. δρᾶσθαι or δρᾷν τι, (which Arnold regards as altogether extraordinary,) there is, as Poppo remarks, nothing anomalous; the partic. τὸ δρώμενον, as used for the noun ἡ ἐνέργεια, being like τὸ τιμώμενον for ἡ τιμὴ at ii. 63; τὸ μέλλον for ἡ μέλλησις, i. 84; τὸ δεδιὸς for τὸ δέος, i. 36; τὸ θαρσοῦν for κοινοτέρας τὰς τύχας λαμβάνοντα ἢ κατὰ τὸ διαφέρον ἑκατέρων πλῆθος. καὶ ἡμῖν τὸ μὲν εἶξαι εὐθὺς ἀνέλπιστον, μετὰ δὲ τοῦ δρωμένου ἔτι καὶ στῆναι ἐλπὶς ὀρθῶς.

CIII. ΑΘ. Ἐλπὶς δὲ, κινδύνῳ παραμυθιον οὖσα, τοὺς μὲν ἀπὸ περιουσίας χρωμένους αὐτῇ, κἂν βλάψῃ, οὐ καθεῖλε᾽ τοῖς δὲ τὸ θάρσος, i. 43; τὸ ἀξιοῦν for τὸ ἀξίωμα, i. 142; τὸ βουλόμενον for ἡ βούλησις, Eurip. Iph. A. 1280; τὸ μεταμελησόμενον for ἡ μεταμέλεια, Xen. Mem. ii. 6, 23; and finally, what is most to the present purpose, Soph. Œd. Col. 1604, τὸ δρῶν for ἡ δρᾶσις, activity, energy, what is elsewhere in Thucydides expressed by τὸ δραστήριον. Of the expression τὸ δρώμενον, which is exceedingly rare, I know only one example elsewhere, Arrian, E. A. v. 7, 11, ἐν τῷ δρωμένῳ.

In explaining the phrase στῆναι—ὀρθῶς, there is nothing to support the opinion of the Schol., who regards it as equivalent to καταπρᾶξαι (or καταπράξασθαι) ὀρθῶς: for though that view of the sense is somewhat countenanced by a passage of Xen. An. i. 2, 2, (Theim.) εἰ καλῶς καταπράξειεν ἐφ᾽ ἃ ἐστρατεύετο, and another of Hist. vi. 4, 22, yet it is at once negatived by the circumstance that the word στῆναι is by no means susceptible of such a sense. As little reason is there to approve of the sense vincere, assigned by Bauer (who, strangely enough, proposes to refer the ὀρθῶς to ἐλπὶς, the word being, he thinks, unnecessary to στῆναι); for though this derives some countenance from a passage of the New Testament, Eph. vi. 13, καὶ ἅπαντα κατεργασάμενοι (for καταπράττοντες) στῆναι, yet, what is very allowable in a passage containing a succession of agonistic metaphors, is by no means so in one like the present. And, so far from ὀρθῶς being useless to στῆναι, it is, I apprehend, indispensable to fix the metaphor; which has the appearance of a military one, the allusion being to soldiers who stand to their arms, or maintain their standing in the line of battle. Comp. Is. xx. 8, 'They are brought down and fallen, but we are risen and stand upright,' ὀρθοὶ ἱστάμεθα. The metaphor, however, may be one taken from a person who is erect in health and strength, (as opposed to one brought down to his couch by sickness,) and who is thus preserved safe from the attacks of disease; in which case the allusion will be such as we recognise in Pind. Isth. vii. 18, ἢ Δωρίδ᾽ ἀποικίαν ἄνικ᾽ ὀρθῷ ἵστασας ἐπὶ σφυρῷ. Soph. Œd. R. 50, ἀρχῆς δὲ τῆς σῆς μηδαμῶς μεμνώμεθα, Στάντες τ᾽ ἐς ὀρθὸν, καὶ πεσόντες ὕστερον. Callim. Hymn. in Dic. 128. See also Soph. Antig. 163. Eurip. Hel. 1464, ὀρθῷ δὲ βῆναι ποδί. Æschin. p. 50, εἰ δὲ ὀρθῆς ἡμῖν τῆς πατρίδος οὔσης. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 591, τὰ τούτων σφάλματα ἐπανορθοῦσα, καὶ ἐν ὀρθῇ παρέχουσα ὑμῖν τῇ πόλει, where, for καὶ ἐν ὀρθῇ—πόλει, read καὶ ὀρθὴν—τὴν πόλιν, or καὶ ἐς ὀρθόν. Compare also Plut. Alex. 30, διδοίητε τὴν Περσῶν τύχην ἐς ὀρθὸν αὖθις σταθεῖσαν: and,—what is more particularly calculated to illustrate the nature of the metaphor, and show it to have been originally a medical one,—a passage of Pind. Pyth. iii. 95, where, after representing Æsculapius as, in various other ways, healing the disorders alluded to, he subjoins, τοὺς δὲ τομαῖς ἔστασεν ὀρθοὺς, 'some, too, by surgical cuttings, he (to use a familiar expression) set upon their legs.'

Ch. CIII. 1. Ἐλπὶς δὲ, κινδύνῳ παραμύθιον οὖσα] In this sense to signify solamen, 'encouragement,' viz. to bear, παραμένειν, occurs in Soph. El. 130, ἐμῶν καμάτων παραμ., and Eurip. frag. 47, 2, ταῖς ἐλπίσιν τἀλγεινὰ παραμυθούμενος. For κινδύνῳ, Stobæus indeed reads κινδύνου: but the dative is, from the very circumstance of being the more unusual, the more likely to be genuine. Neither is the dat. so rare in this case, but that examples of it are found elsewhere, as in Plato, p. 329. Xen. Ag. v. 3. And so in a Latin writer (Sabin. Eleg. i. 4) we have, 'solamen longis illa fuere malis.' With the general sentiment compare Soph. Antig. 615, Ἁ γὰρ δὴ πολύπλαγκτος ἐλπὶς Πολλοῖς μὲν ὄνασις ἀνδρῶν, Πολλοῖς δ᾽ ἀπάτα Κουφονόων ἐρώτων· Εἰδότι δ᾽ οὐδὲν, ἕρπει, Πρὶν πυρὶ θερμῷ πόδα τις προσάρῃ. Pind. Olymp. 12, 6, αἵ γε μὲν ἀνδρῶν Πόλλ᾽ ἄνω, ταὶ δ᾽ αὖ κάτω Ψεύδη μεταμώνια τέμνοι-Σαι, κυλίνδοντ᾽ ἐλπίδες. Tibull. El. ii. 6, 19, 'credula vitam Spes fovet, et fore cras semper ait melius.'

ἀπὸ περιουσίας] ex abundantia, 'out of a superabundance to depend on.' Comp. Diod. Sic. ix. 14, 3, ἐκ περιουσίας ἐχρῶντο. Dio Cass. 181, 11, ἐκ περιουσίας πολέμῳ χρώμενοι. Porphyr. de Abstin. iii. 18, ἐκ περ. ἀπολαύει. Philostr. Vit. Soph. i. 21, 6, ἐκ τῆς περ. ἑτοιμάζειν. Max. Tyr. Diss. 6, p. 381, ἐκ περ. λαμβάνειν. Adopting the above, Goeller cites the admirable explanation of it given by Reiske: 'Ἀπὸ περιουσίας ἐλπίδι χρῆσθαι est uti quidem spe, verum tamen non ut præsidio palmario, sed ex supervacaneo, ex abundanti, velut adminiculo secundario.' Arnold compares a similar force of ἀπὸ in other passages of our author, supra ch. 89, ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης ἀνάγκης, and ii. 62, ἀπὸ τῆς ὁμοίας τύχης.

οὐ καθεῖλε] 'does not bring down,' i. e.

ἐς ἅπαν τὸ ὑπάρχον ἀναῤῥιπτοῦσι (δάπανος γὰρ φύσει) ἅμα τε γιγνώσκεται σφαλέντων, καὶ ἐν ὕτῳ ἔτι φυλάξεταί τις αὐτὴν γνωρισθεῖσαν, † οὐκ ἐλλείπει †. 2. ὃ ὑμεῖς, ἀσθενεῖς τε καὶ ἐπὶ ῥοπῆς utterly ruin. Compare Plato, p. 344, τίνα ἀμήχανος συμφορὰ καθαρεῖ. Soph. Ant. 383, σ᾽ ἐν ἀφροσύνῃ καθ. Eurip. Herc. Fur. 1396, τοὺς σθένοντας καθαιροῦσιν τύχαι. The nature of the figure is well illustrated by a passage of Plut. t. vi. p. 329, R. μί᾽ ἡμέρα τὰ μὲν καθεῖλεν ὑψόθεν, τὰ δ᾽ ὦρ᾽ ἄνω, where we recognise the same use of the aorist as serving to denote custom; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 502, and Kuhn. 402, 1. At ἀναῤῥιπτοῦσι, a little after, the commentators supply κίνδυνον or ἐλπίδα: though, as Poppo observes, no one of them has attempted to explain on what principle the prep. ἐς could properly be joined with the phrase κίνδυνον ἀναῤῥιπτεῖν, which, however, he adds, may easily be done, 'if, with Bloomfield, we suppose κύβον to have been in the mind of the writer.' Accordingly the sense will be, 'to those who cast the die on their whole property,' 'who set their all at a cast.' Libanius, I would observe, here evidently supposed the above word to be understood, as appears from the following passage, closely imitated from this of our author, in Orat. 31, p. 714, ἡμῖν δὲ ὑπὲρ ἁπάντων εἰς ἀνεῤῥιπτεῖτο κύβος, καὶ οὐκ ἦν ἅπαξ ἀποτυχόντας, φυλάξασθαι τοῦ λοίπου μὴ τοιαῦτα παθεῖν. φύσει γὰρ ἀεὶ τοιούτων ὁ πόλεμος· τοὺς μὲν ἐκ περιουσίας αὐτῷ κεχρημένους, κἂν διαμαρτῶσιν, οὐ καθεῖλε τελέως· ὅσοις δὲ τὰ προσόντα πάντα σαλεύει, καὶ μιᾶς ἠρτηται μόνης ἐλπίδος, εἶναί τε καὶ διεφθάρθαι, τούτοις ἄρδην ἠτυχηκόσιν, ἅμα τε καὶ βλάβης μεστὸς ὑπάρχων ἐλέγχεται· καὶ ὅπως αὐτὸν ἐσαῦθις φυλάξωνται, χώραν οὐ δίδωσιν, ἅπαντα διαφθείρας ἀθρόως. Evidently, too, written with a view to the present passage, is the following of Procop. p. 216, 28, ὑμεῖς μὲν οὖν πεττεύειν οἰόμενοι τὸν ἕνα βούλεσθε ὑπὲρ ἁπάντων ἀναῤῥιπτεῖν κύβον: and hence in a passage of Agath. p. 87, 26, for κύβος ἐνέῤῥιπτο should undoubtedly be read κύβος ἀνέῤῥιπτο. The metaphor in question is one derived from playing at dice (or casting the die) generally, without reference, as Reiske imagines, to any particular kind thereof.

δάπανος γὰρ φύσει] 'for it (meaning hope) is by nature prodigal,' or expensive, occasioning expense; δάπανος here, as T. Mag. and Steph. have pointed out, standing for δαπανηρὰ, of which use I have noted an example elsewhere in Pind. Isthm. v. 73, ὅποσαι ἐλπίδων δαπάναι. The full meaning intended is, as the Schol. expresses it, ὅτι οἱ ἐλπίζοντές τινος τεύξεσθαι, πολλὰ προσδαπανῶσι καὶ προσαναλίσκουσι, where it is strange the editors should not have seen ought certainly to be written, for προσδαπανῶσι and προσαναλίσκουσι, προδαπ. and προαναλ., the import of the gloss being, that they spend beforehand, i. e. before the hoped-for gain comes into possession: to which purpose are the words of Plutarch, Mar., who says of foolish persons, that 'they never become wise, even by experience,' but ἀεὶ κενοὶ μὲν ἀγαθῶν, πλῆρεῖς δὲ ἐλπίδων πρὸς τὸ μέλλον ἀποβλέπουσι, τὸ παρὸν προϊέμενοι. Καίτοι τὸ μὲν ἂν ἡ τύχη κωλῦσαι δύναιτο, τὸ δὲ ἀναφαίρετόν ἐστιν. Ἀλλ᾽ ὅμως τοῦτο τῆς τύχης ὡς ἀλλότριον, ἐκβάλλοντες, ἐκεῖνο τὸ ἄδηλον ὀνειρώττουσιν.

At σφαλέντων must be supplied αὐτῶν, (genitives absolute,) the sense being, that this 'credula spes ('kind cheat, fair fallacy,') becomes known to men only when they are already deceived by it to their ruin.'

καὶ ἐν ὕτῳ ἔτι φυλάξεται — οὐκ ἐλλείπει] No easy matter is it to determine the precise sense here intended, and that chiefly from the perplexing expression ἐλλείπει, insomuch that Bekker proposes for οὐκ ἐλλείπει, to read οὐκέτι λείπει. But, supposing the common reading to be (according to the unanimous consent of the MSS.) genuine, we may understand the sense intended to be either that which I laid down (chiefly from Steph. and Goeller) in my smaller edition, 'And when any one would even yet beware of it, as already known, (i. e. its fallacy known,) still it does not quite desert him, but cleaves to him longer in his heart;' in which view we may compare the words of Pind. Nem. xi. 59, δέδεται γὰρ ἀναιδεῖ ἐλπίδι γνῖα, 'clings to him in spite of perpetual disappointment:' or we may understand the sense to be that assigned by Prof. Scholefield, cited in Dobree: 'neque destituit, quamdiu ab ea cognita cavere poterit aliquis: sed tum demum, quum periculo nullum jam relinquitur remedium.'

2. ὃ ὑμεῖς, ἀσθ.—λυμαίνεται] 'Which (for And this) do not ye, who are weak and μιᾶς ὄντες, μὴ βούλεσθε παθεῖν, μηδὲ ὁμοιωθῆναι τοῖς πολλοῖς, οἷς, παρὸν ἀνθρωπείως ἔτι σώζεσθαι, ἐπειδὰν πιεζομένους αὐτοὺς ἐπιλίπωσιν αἱ φανεραὶ ἐλπίδες, ἐπὶ τὰς ἀφανεῖς καθίστανται, μαντικήν τε καὶ χρησμούς, καὶ ὅσα τοιαῦτα μετ' ἐλπίδων λυμαίνεται.

at a single turn of the scale, choose to be your case; nor be assimilated to the multitude, — who, while they still have it in their power to attain safety by human means, yet, when hard-pressed, and all visible hopes fail them, resort to such as are invisible; — divination, oracles, and the like—whose hopes lead but to destruction.'

In ἐπὶ ῥοπῆς μιᾶς ὄντες, 'who are at a single turn of the scale,' (in other words, 'whose fate trembles on a single inclination of the wavering balance,') we have a figure derived from the Homeric representation of Jupiter weighing the fates of the Greeks and Trojans in equal scales. By the Scholiast, indeed, and most commentators, our author is supposed to have had in mind a passage of Hom. Il. x. 173, ἐπὶ ξυροῦ ἵσταται ἀκμῆς· where Pope's version, 'stands on the sharpest edge of death or life,' is objectionable on the score of its confounding the metaphorical and the material senses, and by the epithet sharpest introducing what is, I apprehend, an idea not intended in the original. It is true, that standing on the edge of a sharp knife, is a lively representation of that perilous uncertainty by which any one may easily fall one way or the other; but the idea of sharpness is there any thing but the prominent and primary one. The exact force of the image there intended is, I would observe, happily conveyed and accurately represented by our poet Milton, in a passage of his Paradise Lost, book i. 276: '—— their liveliest pledge Of hope in fears and dangers, heard so oft In worst extremes, and on the per'lous edge Of battel when it raged,' &c.: where the expression 'the per'lous edge' (with which compare that of Horace, 'per acuta belli') seizes, I apprehend, on the very idea meant, though obscurely developed, by Homer in the above passage. But it is observable, that the term ῥοπῆς in the passage of our author differs widely from ξυροῦ ἀκμῆς in that of Homer; and while the latter contains an image of peril, the former contains one simply of uncertainty and precariousness; though in that is involved an idea of peril: and accordingly the term ῥοπὴ is applied to convey the idea of peril in Diod. Sic. t. ix. 82, ὁρῶν τὴν σωτηρίαν ἐπὶ ῥοπῆς κειμένην, and that of uncertainty in Procop. p. 367, 40, οἷς γὰρ ἡ ἐπὶ τριχὸς ἐλπὶς—ἔστηκεν, οὐδὲ χρόνου τινὰ βραχυτάτην ῥοπὴν ἀναπεπτωκέναι ξυνοίσει, where with the expression ἐπὶ τριχὸς ἐλπίς [ἐστι] compare a similar one in Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice, 'If the scale turn but in the estimation of a hair, thou diest.' On the other hand, in Hdot. vi. 11, (and indeed various writers after his time,) we find the expression ἐπὶ ξυροῦ ἀκμῆς ἔχεται used of uncertainty.

In the expression μηδὲ ὁμοιωθῆναι τοῖς πολλοῖς, 'nor to be assimilated unto the multitude,' we have a use of ὁμοιοῦσθαι also found in Eurip. Med. 886, οὔκουν χρῆν σ' ὁμοιοῦσθαι κακοῖς. Plato, p. 728, ὁμοιούμενον τοῖς κακοῖς ἀνδράσι, and 176, τῷ μὲν ὁμοιούμενοι, and 510, ἀντὶ κυνῶν λυκοῖς ὁμοιωθῆναι, 'to be like unto.' The same use, too, has place in the New Testament writers, as Matth. vi. 8, μὴ οὖν ὁμοιωθῆτε αὐτοῖς.

παρὸν ἀνθρωπείως ἔτι σώζεσθαι] 'whilst it is yet in their power to be saved by human means, arts, or counsels,' such as are placed within the power of man. Compare Demosth. 638, 24, ὑποθέντες πρὸς τοῦτο ἀνθρωπίνως τὰς ἐλπίδας, i. e. 'quod ex humano more cogitandi et loquendi contingere possit.' Arrian, E. A. iv. 11, 5, ἀ. τιμᾶσθαι. Pol. iii. 5, 8, ἀ. βουλεύεσθαι περὶ τῶν ἐνεστώτων. In παρὸν we have an accus. absol., equivalent to 'quum liceat,' as in Herodot. i. 129, εἰ, παρεὸν αὐτῷ βασιλέα γενέσθαι—ἄλλῳ περιέθηκε τὸ κράτος, and vi. 72. Such, too, is the use of παρέχον, ὑπάρχον, ἐξόν, δέον, and other accusatives of participles, on which see Jelf's Kuhn. Gr. § 700, 2. By φανεραὶ ἐλπίδες are meant, 'hopes reposed on the visible means' of preservation, as forces, arms, and wealth; such being the sinews of war. With the sentiment in ἐπὶ τὰς ἀφανεῖς καθίστανται, compare Plut. Mar. 36, ἀλλ' οἷα συμβαίνει ταῖς μεγάλαις ἀπορίαις, ἀεὶ φεύγειν ἐκ τοῦ παρόντος, ὡς χαλεπώτατον, καὶ τὰς ἐλπίδας ἔχειν ἐν ἀδήλοις. With the expression μαντικὴν καὶ χρησμούς, compare viii. 1, χρησμολόγους καὶ μάντεις, 'hariolos et vates.' See also note on ii. 8. In ὅσα μετ' ἐλπίδων λυμαίνεται we have a concise expression for what, more fully developed, would stand thus: 'such as, while they inspire hopes, do but ruin [men].'

CIV. ΜΗΛ. Χαλεπὸν μὲν καὶ ἡμεῖς, εὖ ἴστε, νομίζομεν πρὸς δύναμίν τε τὴν ὑμετέραν καὶ τὴν τύχην, εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ἔσται, ἀγωνίζεσθαι· ὅμως δὲ πιστεύομεν τῇ μὲν τύχῃ ἐκ τοῦ θείου μὴ ἐλασσώσεσθαι, ὅτι ὅσιοι πρὸς οὐ δικαίους ἱστάμεθα· τῆς δὲ δυνάμεως τῷ ἐλλείποντι τὴν Λακεδαιμονίων ἡμῖν ξυμμαχίαν προσέσεσθαι, ἀνάγκην ἔχουσαν, καὶ εἰ μή του ἄλλου, τῆς γε ξυγγενείας ἕνεκα καὶ αἰσχύνῃ βοηθεῖν. καὶ οὐ παντάπασιν οὕτως ἀλόγως θρασυνόμεθα.

CV. ΑΘ. Τῆς μὲν τοίνυν πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὐμενείας οὐδ' ἡμεῖς οἰόμεθα λελείψεσθαι. οὐδὲν γὰρ ἔξω τῆς ἀνθρωπείας τῶν μὲν ἐς τὸ θεῖον νομίσεως, τῶν δ' ἐς σφᾶς αὐτοὺς βουλήσεως, δικαιοῦμεν ἢ

Ch. CIV. 1. εὖ ἴστε] 'well ye wot.' Of the words, a little after, εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ἔσται, the sense is, 'unless it shall be on terms of equality;' which the speaker hints is not the case. Ὑμετέραν should be referred to τὴν τύχην as well as to τὴν δύναμιν, the sentiment here meant to be conveyed proceeding on the ancient superstition, that both eminent persons as well as considerable states had their τύχη or presiding destiny. Agreeably to this view, the connexion of the subsequent words may be thus traced: 'And this we think we shall do; for against your fortune we set the favour of the gods, against your power the aid of the Lacedæmonians.' As to the sense of ὅμως —ἱστάμεθα, it is, 'Nevertheless, we trust, under Divine Providence, that we shall not be found inferior in fortune, seeing that we are ranged, the pious and blameless against the impious and unjust.' In which last words we recognise a sentiment common at once to natural and to revealed religion, which has a happy expression in the words of the great ancient epic poet, Il. i. 218, ὅς κε θεοῖς ἐπιπειθηται, μάλα τ' ἔκλυον αὐτοῦ: and which, though more simply, is not less forcibly conveyed in a passage of the New Testament, John ix. 31, οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι ἁμαρτωλῶν ὁ Θεὸς οὐκ ἀκούει· ἀλλ', ἐάν τις θεοσεβὴς ᾖ, καὶ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ ποιῇ, τούτου ἀκούει. Of the peculiar expression here, ἡ τύχη ἐκ τοῦ θείου, another example occurs at ch. 112, τῇ σωζούσῃ τύχῃ ἐκ τοῦ θείου αὐτήν.

In the words, a little after, τῆς δὲ δυνάμεως — προσέσεσθαι, the ἡμῖν may be referred (as it is by Haack and Goeller) to ξυμμαχίαν, by which the sense will be, 'our alliance with the Lacedæmonians.' So ch. 46, τὴν ξυμμαχίαν Βοιωτοῖς. The expression τῷ ἐλλείποντι is dependent on προσέσεσθαι a little before; the sense being, 'our deficiency in power will be compensated by our alliance with the Lacedæmonians.'

ἀνάγκην ἔχουσαν — βοηθεῖν] Render, 'who will be obliged, even if on other account, at least on that of kindred, and from a sense of shame, to give us aid.' Αἰσχύνῃ (scil. ἐπὶ) stands for δι' αἰσχύνην: and θρασυνόμεθα signifies 'are boldly confident.'

Ch. CV. 1. τῆς μὲν — λελείψεσθαι] Render, 'But now, neither do we think we shall be wanting in good-will and countenance as regards Divine Providence.' In τῆς πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὐμ. we have, as Krueger and Arnold point out, a brief form of expression for τὰ μὲν πρὸς τὸ θεῖον ('ad deos quod attinet') τῆς ἐξ αὐτοῦ εὐμενείας, &c. Dr. Arnold compares a similar one at iv. 51, ποιησάμενοι μέντοι πρὸς τους Ἀθ. πίστεις, &c.; and Goeller, vi. 80, καὶ τὴν πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἔχθραν διαφυγεῖν, i. e. τὰ πρὸς ἡμᾶς, τὴν πρὸς ἡμῶν ἔχθρ. διαφ.

οὐδὲν γὰρ—πράσσομεν] Render, 'For we are neither requiring nor doing aught at variance either with religion, with the opinion men entertain of the gods, or the sentiments on which they act with regard to each other.' With this use of ἔξω compare Isocr. Nicocl. p. 28, οὐδὲν ἔξω τῶν νομιζομένων. Liban. Or. 236, A. οὐκ ἔξω τῆς ἀνθρωπείας φύσεως. Soph. Phil. 904, οὐδὲν γὰρ ἔξω τοῦ φυτεύσαντος—ὁρᾷς.

The words, a little after, τῶν ἐς τὸ θεῖον, are by Goeller explained to signify, 'eorum quæ ad deos pertinent:' but Dr. Arnold more accurately defines the sense of τῆς ἀνθρωπείας τῶν μὲν ἐς τὸ θεῖον νομίσεως to be, 'what men, as far as the gods are concerned, think, and, as far as themselves are concerned, well know to be so.' And he adds, that our author himself explains the meaning of the words by subjoining ἡγούμεθα δόξῃ. Accordingly the full sense is, he shows, as follows:

πράσσομεν. 2. ἡγούμεθα γὰρ τό τε θεῖον δόξῃ, τὸ ἀνθρώπειόν τε σαφῶς, διὰ παντὸς ὑπὸ φύσεως ἀναγκαίας, οὗ ἂν κρατῇ, ἄρχειν. καὶ ἡμεῖς οὔτε θέντες τὸν νόμον, οὔτε κειμένῳ πρῶτοι χρησάμενοι, ὄντα δὲ παραλαβόντες, καὶ ἐσόμενον ἐς ἀεὶ καταλείψοντες, χρώμεθα αὐτῷ. εἰδότες καὶ ὑμᾶς ἂν καὶ ἄλλους, ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ δυνάμει ἡμῖν γενομένους, δρῶντας ἂν αὐτό. 3. καὶ πρὸς μὲν τὸ θεῖον οὕτως, ἐκ τοῦ εἰκότος, οὐ φοβούμεθα ἐλασσώσεσθαι· τῆς δὲ ἐς Λακεδαιμονίους

'Men's common belief with regard to the gods, and their common practice amongst themselves, alike justify our conduct: belief with regard to the gods; for of them we can only believe, not know it; practice amongst men; for we do not only believe, but know, that their practice is such.' Νόμισις stands for ὅπερ νομίζομεν, and βούλησις for ὅπερ βουλόμεθα.

2. ἡγούμεθα γὰρ—ἄρχειν] Of this obscure passage the construction and sense are best laid down by Bauer as follows: ἡγούμεθα τὸ θεῖον ἄρχειν δόξῃ, (οὗ ἂν κρατῇ,) τό τε ἀνθρώπειον, i. e. τοὺς ἀνθρώπους,—σαφῶς, non δόξῃ, ut deos, quos nemo videat, οὗ ἂν κρατῇ, 'Putamus deos exercere vim suam et imperium in omnes ipsis subjectos, ex opinione hominum, quam de diis conceptam teneant, ut credant eos imperare omnibus, quia possint; ita et homines (quasi deorum exemplo, recte ergo et juste, quippe diis idem facientibus, ut vi sua utantur ad imperium usurpandum,) manifesto, i. e. liquido, (ut apparet ex eo, quod fieri videamus, non tantum, ut de vi numinis, opinemur,) occupare et exercere imperium, in quos possint.' With the latter part of the sentiment compare a passage (evidently founded on the present) of Plutarch, Camill. ch. 17, οὐδὲν οὐδὲ ὑμεῖς γε δεινὸν, οὐδ' ἄδικον ποιοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τῷ πρεσβυτάτῳ τῶν νόμων ἀκολουθοῦντες, ὃς τῷ κρείττονι τὰ τῶν ἡττόνων δίδωσιν, ἀρχόμενος ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ τελευτῶν εἰς τὰ θηρία. Καὶ γὰρ τούτοις ἐκ φύσεως ἔνεστι, τὸ ζητεῖν πλέον ἔχειν τὰ κρείττονα τῶν ὑποδεεστέρων· where, for θεοῦ, read θείου: and considering that διὰ is in some copies found after ἔνεστι, we may with Reiske suspect that Plutarch wrote διὰ παντός. Comp. Jos. Ant. 1290, 29, νόμον γε μὴν ὡρίσθαι, καὶ παρὰ θηρσὶν ἰσχυρότατον, καὶ παρὰ ἀνθρώποις, εἶκειν τοῖς δυνατωτέροις, καὶ τὸ κρατεῖν, παρ' οἷς ἀρχὴ τῶν ὅπλων, εἶναι.

With the sentiment in καὶ ἡμεῖς οὔτε—χρώμεθα αὐτῷ, Wasse aptly compares Herodot. vii. 8, οὔτ' αὐτὸς κατηγήσομαι νόμον τόνδε ἐν ὑμῖν τιθεὶς, παραδεξάμενος τε αὐτῷ χρήσομαι: which passage may, indeed, be classed with others of that writer (as ii. 71. 76. 84. vi. 10.) which seem to have been borne in mind by our author while considering the same subject.

ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ δυνάμει ἡμῖν γενομένους] 'when in [possession of] the same power with us.' With which form of expression compare similar ones in Herodot. ii. 82, οἱ ἐν ποιήσει γενόμενοι. Soph. Œd. T. 570, ἢν ἐν τῇ τέχνῃ, 'in the exercise of his craft.' Also supra iii. 28, οἱ ἐν πράγμασι, scil. γενόμενοι. The αὐτὸ, just after, stands for τὸ αὐτὸ, 'the same.'

3. καὶ πρὸς μὲν—ἐλασσώσεσθαι] 'And accordingly, as regards, on the one hand, the Deity, we do not fear that as far as probability goes, we shall come off with a less share of his favour and protection:' a sense of πρὸς founded on the general idea contained in σκοπεῖν πρός τι. In ἐλασσοῦσθαι we have a term of extensive signification, which has here been variously explained. The sense assigned by Portus and Hobbes, 'to be inferior to,' is one scarcely definite enough, and not sufficiently significant. The one which I have assigned as above, is at once supported by the authority of the Scholiast, and borne out by the context; as also by a parallel form of expression at § 1, τῆς πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὐμενείας οὐδ' ἡμεῖς οἰόμεθα λελείψεσθαι. It is indeed founded on that almost leading sense of ἐλασσοῦσθαι by which it signifies 'to have allotted to one a smaller share of any thing [than another]' (as in Plato, p. 549, ἐθέλοντος ἐλαττοῦσθαι ὥστε πράγματα μὴ ἔχειν); also, metaphorically, 'to come off with the worst,' 'to have less of the favour of any one;' as here and in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 26, ἠλαττοῦτο τὸ Ἀρκαδικὸν, 'had less of the favour of the king' than the Eleans had. At the infin. ἐλασσ. is to be supplied ἡμᾶς. The pronoun, here left to be understood, is expressed in Eurip. Ion, 1564, θανεῖν σε δείσας μητρὸς ἐκ βουλευμάτων, and Hec. 768, πατὴρ νιν ἐξέπεμψεν, ὀρρωδῶν (scil. νιν) θανεῖν.

Of the antithetical sentence, τῆς δὲ ἐς Λακεδαιμονίους—τὸ ἄφρον, the sense may be expressed as follows: 'and as to your opinion respecting the Lacedæmonians, δόξης,—† ἣν διὰ τὸ αἰσχρὸν δὴ βοηθήσειν ὑμῖν πιστεύετε αὐτοὺς,—μακαρίσαντες ὑμῶν τὸ ἀπειρόκακον, οὐ ζηλοῦμεν τὸ ἄφρον. 4. Λακεδαιμόνιοι γὰρ πρὸς σφᾶς μὲν αὐτοὺς καὶ τὰ ἐπιχώρια νόμιμα, πλεῖστα ἀρετῇ χρῶνται· πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ἄλλους, πολλὰ ἄν τις ἔχων εἰπεῖν ὡς προσφέρονται, ξυνελὼν μάλιστ' ἂν δηλώσειεν, ὅτι ἐπιφανέστατα ὧν ἴσμεν τὰ μὲν ἡδέα καλὰ νομίζουσι, τὰ δὲ ξυμφέροντα δίκαια. καίτοι οὐ πρὸς τῆς ὑμετέρας νῦν ἀλόγου σωτηρίας ἡ τοιαύτη διάνοια.

CVI. ΜΗΛ. Ἡμεῖς δὲ κατ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἤδη καὶ μάλιστα πιστεύwherein ye trust that forsooth through shame they will succour you,—we bless your innocent simplicity, but commend not your folly.' With respect to the construction, the genitive τῆς δόξης depends, as Bauer observes, on τὸ ἄφρον, equivalent to τὴν ἀφροσύνην. The ἣν I have obelized, because it is wholly indefensible; and as to the ἣν of a few MSS., that can by no means be defended, the Melians professing to have no doubt as to the matter. The true reading is, I am persuaded, that proposed by Reiske and Goeller, ᾗ; according to which the sense will be, 'whereby, or wherewith.' Of διὰ τὸ αἰσχρὸν the full sense is, 'by reason of the disgrace attached to the not doing it.' By τὸ ἀπειρόκακον is meant, that simplicity which arises from inexperience of evil; for which the more usual expression is τὸ ἄκακον (equivalent to ἡ ἀκακία). So in a passage of Philostr. we have, τὸ ἀκέραιον καὶ ἄκακον. Compare also a passage of the New Testament, Rom. xvi. 19. Of this word I have noted only one example elsewhere, in Eurip. Alc. 937. In οὐ ζηλοῦμεν (where we have a meiosis, with which compare a similar one in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Cor. xi. 17, ἐν τούτῳ οὐκ ἐπαινῶ) the force of the term ζηλοῦμεν answers to that of the preceding μακαρίσαντες. So in Soph. Aj. 1503, ζήλου is explained by the Scholiast as equivalent to μακαρισμοῦ: and in Æschyl. Prom. 338, the expression ζηλῶ σε is explained by Hesych. as equivalent to μακαρίζω σε. Both forms of expression are, observes Bp. Blomfield, significant of admiration and gratulation, as in Soph. El. 1027, ζηλῶ σε τοῦ νοῦ, and Aristoph. Eq. 837, ζηλῶ σε τῆς εὐγλωττίας.

4. The Athenians now show why, and on what grounds, the Lacedæmonians are wholly unworthy of this simply-confiding spirit. Τὰ ἐπιχώρια νόμιμα, 'the institutions of their country,' 'their common polity.' The word πλεῖστα, just after, does not (as the Scholiast makes it) stand for τὰ πλεῖστα, but is neut. plur. put adverbially to signify plerumque. Ἀρετῇ does not signify, as Hobbes interprets it, generosity; (for when, it may be asked, was generosity ever found in the counsels of Sparta?) nor, as Smith translates, honour, but simply, in the most extensive sense of the term, virtue or moral goodness, as opposed to vice. The term χρῶνται serves to express the idea of customary practice, and hence is more significant than would have been that by which the Scholiast explains it, πράττουσι.

πολλὰ ἄν τις ἔχων—νομίζουσι] Render, 'though any one might have much to say as to how they behave themselves, he would best compress all into a short compass, by saying that of all the people we know, they most openly account the pleasurable as the honourable, and the profitable as the just.' The present passage was in the mind of Liban. Epist. 730, καὶ ποιεῖν ἀντὶ τῶν καλῶν τὰ ἡδέα, and Aristid. ii. 147, D.

καίτοι οὐ πρὸς—διάνοια] Render, 'And yet such a sentiment is not in favour of your present unreasonable expectations of safety.' Such seems to be the true sense of the words; and, agreeably to this view, (which is that adopted in my Translation,) Bauer and Dobree, I find, explain πρὸς to signify favens, 'in favour of;' and Duker regards the words as equiv. to οὐ συμβάλλεται πρὸς ἣν ἀλόγως παρ' αὐτῶν ἐλπίζετε σωτηρίαν. If, however, the above mode of explanation be thought to involve too much of harshness, it may be allowable, with Poppo, to retain the ordinary acceptation of the term σωτηρία, and explain ἄλογος as standing for ἣ λόγον οὐκ ἔχει, 'rationi non consentanea, rationi convenienter non expectanda.' Yet for an irregularity of expression, thus removed, we incur a harshness of sense scarcely less objectionable.

Ch. CVI. 1. ἡμεῖς δὲ — ὠφελίμους] Render, 'But we, for that very reason, now feel the utmost confidence, that they, ομεν τῷ ξυμφέροντι αὐτῶν Μηλίους, ἀποίκους ὄντας, μὴ βουλήσεσθαι προδόντας, τοῖς μὲν εὔνοις τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἀπίστους καταστῆναι, τοῖς δὲ πολεμίοις ὠφελίμους.

CVII. ΑΘ. Οὔκουν οἴεσθε τὸ ξυμφέρον μὲν μετὰ ἀσφαλείας εἶναι, τὸ δὲ δίκαιον καὶ καλὸν μετὰ κινδύνου δρᾶσθαι· ὃ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἥκιστα ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ τολμῶσιν.

CVIII. ΜΗΛ. Ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς κινδύνους τε ἡμῶν ἕνεκα μᾶλλον ἡγούμεθ' ἂν ἐγχειρίσασθαι αὐτούς, καὶ βεβαιοτέρους ἢ ἐς ἄλλους νομιεῖν, ὅσῳ πρὸς μὲν τὰ ἔργα τῆς Πελοποννήσου ἐγγὺς κείμεθα, † τῆς δὲ † γνώμης, τῷ ξυγγενεῖ πιστότεροι ἑτέρων ἐσμέν.

CIX. ΑΘ. Τὸ δ' ἐχυρόν γε τοῖς ξυναγωνιουμένοις οὐ τὸ εὔνουν out of regard to their own interest, will not choose, by betraying the Melians, their colonists, to become distrusted by those of the Greeks who are well affected to them, and [thus] beneficial to their enemies.'

With the expression here, τοῖς μὲν εὔνοις τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἀπίστους, compare Hdot. viii. 22, ἵνα ἀπίστους ποιήσῃ τοὺς Ἴωνας, scil. τῷ Ξέρξει, and ix. 98, ἔμελλε ποιήσειν (τοὺς βαρβάρους) ἀπίστους τοῖσι Ἕλλησι. Xen. Ages. i. 12, ἄπιστον πᾶσιν ἐποίησε.

CH. CVII. 1. οὔκουν οἴεσθε—τολμῶσιν] Render, 'So then you are not of opinion that the profitable is indeed connected with security, but that the just and honourable is accomplished with danger; which the Lacedæmonians, upon the whole, least venture upon.' I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, in editing οὔκουν instead of vulg. οὐκοῦν, which, though retained by Dr. Arnold, is quite at variance with the scope of the context, as is well shown by Poppo, who justly observes, that the reading οὔκουν οἴεσθε (according to which the sense is, 'non igitur putatis') is required by the sentiment here evidently intended, which is, in other words, 'It appears, then, from what you before said, that you do not, as you ought to do, think that only to be useful which is safe.' To take the passage (as does Dr. Arnold) interrogatively—'Do you not think, then?'—would quite pervert the sense; for, in point of fact, they did so think. Finally, that the Scholiast saw the matter in the same light, is plain from his paraphrase, ἀλλ' οὖν, ὥσπερ ἴστε, συμφέρει μέν, &c. By ὃ understand τὸ μετὰ κινδύνου δρᾶν τὸ δίκαιον.

CH. CVIII. 1. ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς—ἑτέρων ἐσμέν] Render, 'Aye, but the dangers they will, we think, for our sake, rather [than others] be ready to undertake; and will regard us as more trustworthy [towards them] than towards others, inasmuch as, with respect to the affairs of Peloponnesus, we are near at hand, and, by our affinity of sentiment and feeling, are more to be relied on than others.' Supposing this (which I adopted in my Translation) to be the true sense, it will be necessary to supply the word ἡμᾶς: but I am now rather inclined to think, with Didot and Prof. Scholefield, that βεβαιοτέρους is to be referred to κινδύνους, by which the sense will be, 'ea pericula quæ nostrâ causâ suscipiuntur, tutiora (i. e. minus periculosa) quam quæ propter alios.' Compare supra iii. 39, 8, κινδυνον ἡγησάμενοι βεβαιότερον. Again, though the genit. γνώμης may more naturally be referred to τῷ ξυγγενεῖ, yet I am now inclined to think that it ought to be taken (as it is by Hobbes and Arnold) by itself, in the sense 'quod ad animorum sententias attinet,' the word γνώμη here being (as in another passage supra ii. 43) opposed to ἔργον: the latter relating to outward transactions, the former to inward feelings or affections. Thus the meaning will be, 'and as to inward affections, we are by reason of relationship (διὰ συγγένειαν) more trustworthy than others.' Haack and Poppo, indeed, are of opinion (as was myself formerly) that τῆς γνώμης cannot be dissevered from τῷ ξυγγενεῖ. And that it does involve no little harshness, cannot be denied: but that may be avoided by supposing that our author wrote τὴν γνώμην: an alteration so slight as scarcely to need the authority of MSS. That the Scholiast did not join τῆς γνώμης with τῷ ξυγγενεῖ, is plain; since otherwise he must, in his paraphrase, have noticed the words; which he has not done.

CH. CIX. 1. τὸ δ' ἐχυρὸν—σκοποῦσι] Render, 'Aye—but the sure pledge (of fidelity) in those who are united in contest, is clearly not the good-will of those who have called the others to their aid, but the being far superior in power of action; which the Lacedæmonians consider even more than others.' By τὸ ἐχυρὸν is meant the dependence which either party might have on the other; and the τις has reference to either party. Thus it is insinuated, that as the Melians have no power to compel the furnishing of assistance, they will receive none.

τῶν ἐπικαλεσαμένων φαίνεται, ἀλλ' ἢν τῶν ἔργων τις δυνάμει πολὺ προὔχῃ· ὃ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ πλεῖόν τι τῶν ἄλλων σκοποῦσι. τῆς γοῦν οἰκείας παρασκευῆς ἀπιστίᾳ καὶ μετὰ ξυμμάχων πολλῶν τοῖς πέλας ἐπέρχονται· ὥστε οὐκ εἰκὸς ἐς νῆσόν γε αὐτούς, ἡμῶν ναυκρατόρων ὄντων, περαιωθῆναι.

CX. ΜΗΛ. Οἱ δὲ καὶ ἄλλους ἂν ἔχοιεν πέμψαι· πολὺ δὲ τὸ Κρητικὸν πέλαγος,—δι' οὗ τῶν κρατούντων ἀπορώτερος ἡ λῆψις, ἢ τῶν λαθεῖν βουλομένων ἡ σωτηρία. 2. καὶ εἰ τοῦδε σφάλλοιντο, τράποιντ' ἂν καὶ ἐς τὴν γῆν ὑμῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς λοιποὺς τῶν ξυμμάχων, ὅσους μὴ Βρασίδας ἐπῆλθε· καὶ οὐ περὶ τῆς μὴ προσηκούσης, μᾶλλον ἢ τῆς οἰκειοτέρας ξυμμαχίδος τε [καὶ γῆς] ὁ πόνος ὑμῖν ἔσται.

CH. CX. 1. οἱ δὲ καὶ ἄλλους—σωτηρία] 'But they would have it in their power to send others too;—and wide is the Cretic sea, over which the capture on the part of the powerful is more difficult, than the means of attaining preservation by those who wish to escape observation.'

2. ἐπῆλθε] I agree with Dr. Arnold, that this term bears rather the sense of ἐφίκετο than that of ἐπεστράτευσε. And agreeable to this view of its import is the rendering presented in my Translation, 'such as Brasidas did not reach.'

καὶ οὐ περὶ τῆς μὴ προσηκούσης—ἔσται] 'And [thus] the toil of contest will be to you, (or, you will have to toil,) not for a territory not belonging to you, but for what is entirely your own, and that of your allies.' Ξυμμαχίδος is here taken substantively, as at v. 36: though, indeed, there is some reason to suspect (with Poppo and Arnold) that the words ξυμμαχίδος τε καὶ γῆς have been inserted,—namely, as an explanation of οἰκειοτέρας: an opinion supported by the circumstance that the Scholiast does not recognise the word οἰκειοτέρας, but in place thereof exhibits merely its interpretation, τῆς τῶν ξυμμάχων καὶ τῆς ὑμετέρας. I have, with Haack, chosen to place the words καὶ γῆς between brackets, because the καὶ (as Duk. saw) can have no place here, and γῆς has every appearance of being what Goeller supposes it, a mere interpretamentum. As to Poppo's objection, that 'thus the comparison would be wrong, since οἰκείας, and not οἰκειοτέρας, should have been written;' to this the true answer is, not what Goeller urges, that 'the comparative is referred to τὴν ξυμμαχ., not to τὴν μὴ προσήκ.;' but that this is one of those many cases (treated on in Kuhner's Gr. § 784, Jelf) in which the comparative is used in Greek without any object of comparison; similar to which are certain cases in our own language where we should use the positive and some adverb, as rather, very, or very much. Thus the sense intended is what the Scholiast well expresses thus: ὥστε ὑμῖν οὐ περὶ τῆς μὴ προσηκούσης, τῆς ὑμετέρας, ὁ ἀγὼν ἔσται, ἀλλὰ περὶ τῆς τῶν ξυμμάχων καὶ τῆς ὑμετέρας. Render, 'And thus the toil or contest will be to you, (you will have to combat,) not for a territory not belonging to you, but for what is rather your own, and that of your allies.' It is to be observed, that as μᾶλλον ἢ after οὐ is equivalent to ἀλλὰ, so the sign of comparison rather does not overload the proposition. As to the words καὶ γῆς, they were, I suspect, originally written καὶ τῆς, and were placed in the margin, to explain ξυμμαχίδος τε, and were then brought into the text, but at a wrong place; and that from this false position the τῆς was mistaken for Γῆς. As to the reading proposed by Goeller, ἡ τῆς οἰκειοτέρας τε καὶ ξυμμαχίδος, it is objectionable on the ground that one does not see how the corruption could have arisen. Again, futile is the conjecture of Poppo and Arnold, that the words ξυμμαχίδος τε καὶ γῆς are a mere insertion, arising from an explanation of οἰκειοτέρας,—since it contains, in effect, no explanation at all. As to what Poppo urges as a circumstance tending to confirm this conjecture, that 'the Scholiast does not recognise οἰκειο-

CXI. ΑΘ. Τούτων μὲν καὶ πεπειραμένοις ἄν τι γένοιτο καὶ ὑμῖν, καὶ οὐκ ἀνεπιστήμοσιν, ὅτι οὐδ' ἀπὸ μιᾶς πώποτε πολιορκίας Ἀθηναῖοι δι' ἄλλων φόβον ἀπεχώρησαν. 2. ἐνθυμούμεθα δὲ ὅτι, φήσαντες περὶ σωτηρίας βουλεύσειν, οὐδὲν ἐν τοσούτῳ λόγῳ εἰρήκατε, ᾧ ἄνθρωποι ἂν πιστεύσαντες νομίσαιεν σωθήσεσθαι· ἀλλ' ὑμῶν τὰ μὲν ἰσχυρότατα ἐλπιζόμενα μέλλεται, τὰ δ' ὑπάρχοντα βραχέα πρὸς τὰ ἤδη ἀντιτεταγμένα περιγίγνεσθαι. 3. πολλήν τε ἀλογίαν τῆς διανοίας παρέχετε, εἰ μὴ μεταστησάμενοι ἔτι ἡμᾶς, ἄλλο τι τῶνδε σωφρονέστερον γνώσεσθε. 4. οὐ γὰρ δὴ ἐπί γε τὴν ἐν τοῖς τέρας,' — it is quite baseless, since the Scholiast does virtually recognise οἰκειοτέρας when he explains by τῆς ὑμετέρας.

CH. CXI. 1. τούτων μὲν καὶ πεπειραμένοις] The part. here is used as in the expression βουλομένῳ μοι τοῦτο γίγνεται, and the Latin mihi volenti est; on which idiom see note at ii. 3 & 60, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 388, e. Thus τούτων πεπειραμένοις ἄν τι γένοιτο is, as Dr. Arnold explains it, equivalent to 'You may appreciate, by experience, some of these things happening, and may not be left in ignorance of the fact,'—namely, that 'never yet rose Athenians from any one siege from fear of others.' Καὶ ὑμῖν Dr. Arnold explains to mean, 'you too [as others have done before you].'

2. ἐνθυμούμεθα δὲ ὅτι—περιγίγνεσθαι] Render, 'But we conceive that, whereas you said you would consult about [your] safety and preservation, you have never, in this whole parley, spoken aught, whereon persons relying would think they should be saved thereby: nay, your strongest grounds [for expecting safety] rest on future and tardy hopes; while your present means and resources are short (i. e. too slender) for your preservation, as compared with them who now sit in array against you.' Such is the general sense intended. To advert to the phraseology in detail—the term βουλεύειν bears here the same sense as at ch. 87, where we have, περὶ σωτηρίας βουλεύσοντες τῇ πόλει. Dr. Arnold remarks, that 'βουλεύειν so far differs from βουλεύεσθαι, that the former is said of governors consulting for the safety of their subjects; the latter, of private citizens, viz. in the exercise of deliberation as to the means of carrying into effect the plans formed by governors.' Of νομίσαιεν σωθήσεσθαι the sense is, 'would think that they should be saved.' With respect to the somewhat obscure expression ἐλπιζόμενα μέλλεται, it is by Portus rendered sperantur fore; by Steph. in his Thes. 'futura sperantur.' There is, however, I apprehend, involved an adjunct notion of delay. And it is observed by Hudson, that μέλλεσθαι not unfrequently in our author bears the sense differri, tardè procedere: a remark, however, rather applicable to the active μέλλω, cunctor; for as to the passive μέλλεσθαι, it occurs, I believe, nowhere else in Thucydides; nor do I recollect an example in any other writer, except Xen. Anab. iii. 1, 47, ἀνέστη, ὡς μὴ μέλλοιτο, ἀλλὰ περαίνοιτο τὰ δέοντα. For, as to the passage of Demosth. Phil. i. 11, here referred to by Poppo, there the reading is, as he acknowledges, uncertain. In the present case, the notion of delay is one every way suitable; and in this view we may compare a passage of the Septuagint, Prov. xiii. 12, where it is said that 'hope deferred maketh the heart sick;' and another of Eurip. Phœn. 407, that 'Hopes καλοῖς βλέπουσί γ' ὄμμασι, (namely, as investing the object with the gay colours of fancy,) μέλλουσι δὲ, but tardy,—slow,' namely, in seeing imagination converted into reality. So also Soph. Trach. 953, τάδε μὲν ἔχομεν ὁρᾷν δόμοις, Τάδε δὲ μέλλομεν ἐπ' ἐλπίσι, 'we survey with the tardy eyes of future hope.' Also Philostr. Vit. Mos. ch. 1, δελεασθεὶς—ταῖς μελλούσαις ἐλπίσι ('future and tardy hopes'). Finally, by a similar form of expression it is said in a passage of our great dramatic poet, (Merry Wives of Windsor,) 'Let us give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a sure-baited delay.'

3. μεταστησάμενοι—ἡμᾶς] nobis summotis, 'after having removed us [in order to consult alone].' So i. 79, μεταστησάμενοι πάντας. Herodot. i. 89. viii. 161, μεταστησάμενος τοὺς ἄλλους. Lucian, t. ii. 259, μεταστησάμενος ἅπαντας, and ii. 110. And so Livy, vii. 30, 'submotis legatis,' i. e. secedere jussis.

4. οὐ γὰρ δὴ—τρέψεσθε] Render, 'For ye will not [surely] fall into that which so utterly ruins men who are involved in dangers manifest (literally, staring them in the face) and disgraceful,—even shame!' meaning that false shame which makes men indisposed to own a fault, or to seem to submit, though their cause be bad. The term αἰσχροῖς, as applied to κινδύνοις, may be supposed used either with reference to their being causelessly encountered, and therefore involving the disgrace of the sufferer, as a fool,—or because they lead to a disgraceful and ignominious end.

*αἰσχροῖς καὶ προὔπτοις κινδύνοις πλεῖστα διαφθείρουσαν ἀνθρώπους, αἰσχύνην, τρέψεσθε. πολλοῖς γὰρ, προορωμένοις ἔτι ἐς οἷα φέρονται, τὸ αἰσχρὸν καλούμενον ὀνόματος ἐπαγωγοῦ δυνάμει ἐπεσπάσατο, ἠσσηθεῖσι τοῦ ῥήματος, ἔργῳ ξυμφοραῖς ἀνηκέστοις ἑκόντας περιπεσεῖν, καὶ αἰσχύνην αἰσχίω μετὰ ἀνοίας ἢ τύχης προσλαβεῖν. 5. ὃ ὑμεῖς, ἢν εὖ βουλεύησθε, φυλάξεσθε· καὶ οὐκ ἀπρεπὲς νομιεῖτε πόλεώς τε τῆς μεγίστης ἠσσᾶσθαι μέτρια προκαλουμένης, ξυμμάχους γενέσθαι, ἔχοντας τὴν ὑμετέραν αὐτῶν, ὑποτελεῖς, καὶ, δοθείσης αἱρέσεως πολέμου πέρι καὶ ἀσφαλείας, μὴ τὰ χείρω φιλονεικῆσαι· ὡς, οἵτινες τοῖς μὲν ἴσοις μὴ εἴκουσι, τοῖς δὲ κρείσσοσι καλῶς προσφέρονται, πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ἥσσους μέτριοί εἰσι, πλεῖστ' ἂν ὀρθοῖντο. 6. σκοπεῖτε οὖν, καὶ μεταστάντων ἡμῶν, καὶ ἐνθυμεῖσθε πολλάκις ὅτι περὶ πατρίδος βουλεύεσθε καὶ μιᾶς πέρι, καὶ ἐς μίαν βουλὴν, τυχοῦσάν τε καὶ μὴ κατορθώσασαν, ἴστε.

πολλοῖς γὰρ, προορωμένοις—τύχης προσλαβεῖν] These words are illustrative of the foregoing, as regards the nature of the turpia pericula just mentioned. And the sense may be thus expressed: 'For many, with their eyes quite open to the destruction into which they are being hurried,—yet have been, by the force of a seductive name, so led away, that, overcome by the sound of what is called dishonour, they have voluntarily rushed upon calamities irretrievable,—and have incurred a disgrace (even that of folly and madness) worse than ever fortune could have brought upon them.' The difficulty of construction here is occasioned by ἠσσηθεῖσι being put, by attraction, for ἠσσηθέντας, since it is necessary to take it with περιπεσεῖν, at which supp. ὥστε. With the phrase αἰσχύνην αἰσχίω, I would compare one in Dio Cass. 346, 87, ὥστε καὶ κατηγορηθῆναι (καὶ) αἰσχύνην αἰσχίστην ὀφλῆναι.

5. ὑποτελεῖς] stipendiarii, 'paying tribute,' as distinguished from vectigales, ἔχοντες τὴν γῆν ὑποτελῆ, paying tribute from their land, and thus holding it as mere tenants at will, which was the case with the Mitylenæans, iii. 50.

μὴ τὰ χείρω φιλονεικῆσαι] 'not, through dogged perversity, to choose the worse.' Similarly Dio Cass. 619, 2, τὰ χείρονα ἀντὶ ἀμεινόνων ἐλέσθαι, and Dionys. Hal. 465, 45, παρακαλῶν μὴ τὰ χείρω αἱρεῖσθαι πρὸ τῶν κρειττόνων. See Soph. Phil. 1100, and note on iv. 64, 1.

6. καὶ ἐνθυμεῖσθε—ἴστε] This is by the unanimous consent of the critics admitted to be the most difficult passage in Thucydides, and one, as says Bauer, 'vix interpretis, sed critica manu sanandus.' Hence many have been the conjectures hazarded by critics; but to so little purpose, that Poppo and Arnold have included the passage between obeli, as undoubtedly corrupt; though not to be emended except by the aid of better MSS. than those hitherto collated. For my own part, I regard the passage as decidedly corrupt, and the construction at present existing as inexplicable; not that I think the case altogether desperate. The corruption is, unless I am much mistaken, not very deeply seated, nor requiring the hand of a slashing critic. It rests, I suspect, on the ἦν or ἢν, (which occurs in almost all the copies after βουλεύεσθε,) for which I, with some confidence, propose to read καί, by which, I apprehend, we shall be furnished with the construction required. If it be asked how καί could be changed into ἦν?—I answer, from the great similarity of the two words in manuscript abbreviations; the only difference between them being this, that the ἦν has one curve (ι) more than the καί. Now the unusually frequent repetition of καί in this sentence occasioned the scribes to take this καί for ἦν: and owing to the involved nature of the construction, the necessity for a καί would not be perceived; nay, ἦν would seem very suitable, as referred to πατρίδα;

CXII. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι μετεχώρησαν ἐκ τῶν λόγων· οἱ δὲ Μήλιοι, κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς γενόμενοι, ὡς ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς παραπλήσια καὶ ἀντέλεγον, ἀπεκρίναντο τάδε. 2. "Οὔτε ἄλλα δοκεῖ though, as Poppo has shown, no satisfactory construction is thus obtained. If it be asked, what authority exists for the καί?—I answer, no direct authority, but strong indirect,—as found in the circumstance, that of the two best MSS. existing, the Mus. Br. and the Clarend., the former has not the words ἦν μιᾶς πέρι, an omission, I doubt not, occasioned by the καί repeated. Now that MS. is written with such almost matchless accuracy, that omissions are exceedingly rare, and never occur but from some cause; and certain it is that no cause of omission is so frequent as the recurrence of the same word, especially καί. As to the Clarendon MS., it has, indeed, ἦν, but on rasure; the whole of the word originally written being scratched out. Hence I doubt not that καί was the original reading; certainly not ἦν; for the alterer would, as he has usually done in such a case, have merely altered the accent. Very probable is it that if the other MSS. were carefully collated, the same omission would be found; or even more direct evidence of the καί be discovered. Now, as desperate disorders require desperate remedies, I have ventured to admit it into the text. I have also followed Goeller in editing, for the vulg. ἔσται, (which comes into no construction,) ἴστε, on the authority of three MSS., much countenanced by another and Valla. Internal evidence, too, is strongly in its favour. Certain it is that the construction requires ἴστε, which is also preferable on the ground of its being so spirited, and, as Goeller observes, 'suitable to the procacitas of the Athenians in this whole conference.' The word must not, however, be taken in the indicative, but (as Bauer and Bredow direct) in the imper. to mean scitote, as in Xen. Cyr. iv. 4, 12, ταῦτ' οὖν, ἔφη, αὐτοί τε ἴστε, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις διαγγέλλετε. The words καὶ μιᾶς πέρι are best rendered, 'even concerning one [only];' for that, as Bauer points out, is the true sense of the μιᾶς, which answers to unicæ in Latin. And so Dr. Arnold remarks, μιᾶς πέρι is said, 'because Melos was their all, and they had not, like the Athenians, another country to retire to, if that was lost.' Finally, in the words καὶ ἐς μίαν βουλὴν, τυχοῦσάν τε καὶ μὴ κατορθώσασαν, ἴστε, no serious difficulty presents itself; the sense being, 'And [that you are consulting] know ye, at once for (so as to form) one counsel, which may succeed [in effecting your preservation] or may fail.' The phrase ἐς μιαν βουλεύειν occurs, though in a different sense, in a passage of Hom. Il. ii. 379: and of the words τυχοῦσάν τε καὶ μὴ κατορθώσασαν, the force is best seen by reference to the same peculiar and highly idiomatical use of τε—καὶ also occurring in a clause of parallel construction at ii. 35, ἐν ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ, εὖ τε καὶ χεῖρον εἰπόντι, κινδυνεύεσθαι, where there is a similar use of τε καί, though one would rather have expected ἢ—ἤ: not that one can properly stand for the other, but only (as Poppo there remarks) that 'sane perinde est, utrum scribas, aut benè aut benè—an, et benè et male, an, tum benè tum male.' Thus in the present passage the sense intended is, 'whether it shall succeed or shall fail' (meaning that it may be as well one as the other). In either passage the aorists have a sense rather partaking of the future than the present, as meant to intimate that the event must inevitably take place: and accordingly the full sense here intended is, that the counsel not only may, but must, either succeed or fail, and consequently, that the preservation they are seeking to bring about will either be obtained, or their destruction brought about. See Kuhn. Gr. 403, 2, and a passage by him cited from Plato, p. 462, where by ᾤσθετό τε καὶ ξυνήλγησε is meant, 'is sure to feel and grieve with it.' Finally, it is to be borne in mind, that here not the direct negative οὐ, but the hypothetic μὴ is employed. And as to the construction, that is not at all incommoded by the ἴστε (scitote), since it might and ought properly to have been introduced parenthetically, as εὖ ἴστε, benè scitote, is in Herodian, ii. 10, 17, and often in Xen.; but is placed last in the sentence, as there having most force; this being, as Goeller remarks, 'vox quasi denunciantis,' q. d. Mind that. The only real difficulty remaining is, that the inference, 'and as that shall succeed, or fail, so must ye,' is left to be supplied.

Ch. CXII. 1. μετεχώρησαν ἐκ τῶν λόγων] 'retired from the conference:' a use of μεταχ. by no means usual, and parallel to that of μεταστῆναι at ch. 111. In the words, a little after, παραπλήσια καὶ ἀντέλεγον, the καί ought to be closely connected with the foregoing παραπλήσια: and ἀντέλεγον is to be taken in an imperfect sense, 'consimilia ac antea contradixerunt.'

2. ἀλλὰ τῇ τε μέχρι τοῦδε—σώζεσθαι] Render, 'but relying on the fortune which has hitherto, under Divine Providence, saved us, and on the help of men,—especially of the Lacedæmonians,—we will endeavour to preserve ourselves.' Such is the sense of the καί, which has the force of the Latin præsertim. With the sentiment compare that at ch. 104.

Ch. CXIII. 1. διαλυόμενοι ἐκ τῶν λόγων] 'on parting from the conference.' Compare ch. 112, μετεχώρησαν ἐκ τῶν λόγων. At ἀλλ' οὖν following there is, as Poppo remarks, 'particula objiciendi aliquid cum asseveratione,' of which the sense is at profecto. See note on iii. 38, and Poppo on Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 19. In the words, a little further, τὰ μὲν μέλλοντα τῶν ὁρωμένων σαφέστερα κρινετε, there is a certain condensed form of expression, of which the import, more fully developed, is, 'you judge the future [and unseen] clearer than the [present and] seen;' the terms ἀφανῆ and παρόντων being here implied: the former is expressed in the next words, τὰ ἀφανῆ —θεᾶσθε, of which the full sense is, 'but the future and indistinct you, by your wish, already see actually taking place.' By the things future seems meant, the hoped-for preservation from conquest by the Athenians, through the expected succour from the Lacedæmonians; though there may also be intended a reference to a sort of gnome, by which the present and future are regarded as placed in contrast, as to distinct apparency; and which, while really intended, is rather intimated than fully expressed, as in a passage of the New Testament, 2 Cor. iv. 18, μὴ σκοπούντων ἡμῶν τὰ βλεπόμενα, ἀλλὰ τὰ μὴ βλεπόμενα. Τῷ βούλεσθαι means, 'by the wish,' namely, that things should take the course contemplated. See note on iii. 3, 1. iii. 38, 4, and iv. 108, 4.

καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ τύχῃ—πιστεύσαντες] In the term παραβεβλημένοι there is (as the Scholiast Cass., Bauer, Haack, and Goeller are agreed) a notion of danger meant to be conveyed, such as we recognise in the Latin phrase 'conjicere (or committere) in periculum,' and our expression 'to throw oneself upon danger.' Accordingly, the full sense here intended is, 'to throw oneself on future and mere hopes,' to commit oneself to the die of chance; what in Latin is expressed by 'committere se in periculo fortunæ,' &c.: a metaphor, this, probably taken from dice-playing, as in the well-known Horatian 'periculosæ plenum opus aleæ.'

Ch. CXIV. 1. ἐτρέποντο] I have thought proper, with Dr. Arnold, to here restore the old reading, which had been by Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, altered to ἐτράποντο, merely on the authority of three second-rate MSS.,—and with the less reason, since, as Dr. Arnold shows, 'propriety of language requires here the imperfect rather than the aorist.' For the confusion in the MSS. of the two ἡμῖν ἢ, ἅπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι· οὔτ' ἐν ὀλίγῳ χρόνῳ πόλεως ἑπτακόσια ἔτη ἤδη οἰκουμένης τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἀφαιρησόμεθα· ἀλλὰ τῇ τε μέχρι τοῦδε σωζούσῃ τύχῃ ἐκ τοῦ θείου αὐτὴν, καὶ τῇ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων τιμωρίᾳ πιστεύοντες, πειρασόμεθα σώζεσθαι. 3. προκαλούμεθα δὲ ὑμᾶς φίλοι μὲν εἶναι, πολέμιοι δὲ μηδετέροις, καὶ ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἡμῶν ἀναχωρῆσαι, σπονδὰς ποιησαμένους αἵτινες δοκοῦσιν ἐπιτήδειοι εἶναι ἀμφοτέροις."

CXIII. Οἱ μὲν δὴ Μήλιοι τοσαῦτα ὑπεκρίναντο· οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, διαλυόμενοι ἤδη ἐκ τῶν λόγων, ἔφασαν· "Ἀλλ' οὖν μόνοι γε, ἀπὸ τούτων τῶν βουλευμάτων, ὡς ἡμῖν δοκεῖτε, τὰ μὲν μέλλοντα τῶν ὁρωμένων σαφέστερα κρίνετε, τὰ δὲ ἀφανῆ τῷ βούλεσθαι ὡς γιγνόμενα ἤδη θεᾶσθε· καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ τύχῃ καὶ ἐλπίσι πλεῖστον δὴ παραβεβλημένοι καὶ πιστεύσαντες, πλεῖστον καὶ σφαλήσεσθε."

CXIV. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναίων πρέσβεις ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς τὸ στράτευμα· οἱ δὲ στρατηγοὶ αὐτῶν, ὡς οὐδὲν ὑπήκουον οἱ Μήλιοι, πρὸς πόλεμον εὐθὺς ἐτρέποντο, καὶ διελόμενοι κατὰ πόλεις, περιετείχισαν

κύκλῳ τοὺς Μηλίους. 2. καὶ ὕστερον φυλακὴν σφῶν τε αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων καταλιπόντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν, ἀνεχώρησαν τῷ πλείονι τοῦ στρατοῦ· οἱ δὲ λειπόμενοι παραμένοντες ἐπολιόρκουν τὸ χωρίον.

CXV. Καὶ Ἀργεῖοι, κατὰ τὸν χρόνον τὸν αὐτὸν ἐσβαλόντες ἐς τὴν Φλιασίαν, καὶ λοχισθέντες ὑπό τε Φλιασίων καὶ τῶν σφετέρων φυγάδων, διεφθάρησαν ὡς ὀγδοήκοντα. 2. καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Πύλου Ἀθηναῖοι Λακεδαιμονίων πολλὴν λείαν ἔλαβον· καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι διὰ αὐτὸ τὰς μὲν σπονδὰς οὐδ' ὡς ἀφέντες, ἐπολέμουν αὐτοῖς, ἐκήρυξαν δὲ, 'εἴ τις βούλεται παρὰ σφῶν Ἀθηναίους λῃΐζεσθαι.' 3. καὶ Κορίνθιοι ἐπολέμησαν ἰδίων τινῶν διαφορῶν ἕνεκα τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις· οἱ δ' ἄλλοι Πελοποννήσιοι ἡσύχαζον. 4. εἶλον δὲ καὶ οἱ Μήλιοι τῶν Ἀθηναίων τοῦ περιτειχίσματος τὸ κατὰ τὴν ἀγοράν, προσβαλόντες νυκτὸς, καὶ ἄνδρας τε ἀπέκτειναν, καὶ ἐσενεγκάμενοι σῖτόν τε καὶ ὅσα πλεῖστα ἐδύναντο χρήσιμα, ἀναχωρήσαντες ἡσύχαζον· καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἄμεινον τὴν φυλακὴν τὸ ἔπειτα παρεσκευάζοντο. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

CXVI. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος Λακεδαιμόνιοι, μελλήσαντες ἐς τὴν Ἀργείαν στρατεύειν, ὡς αὐτοῖς τὰ διαβατήρια ἱερὰ ἐν τοῖς ὁρίοις οὐκ ἐγίγνετο, ἀνεχώρησαν. καὶ Ἀργεῖοι, διὰ τὴν ἐκείνων μέλλησιν, τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει τινὰς ὑποτοπήσαντες, τοὺς μὲν ξυνέλαβον, οἱ δ' αὐτοὺς καὶ διέφυγον. 2. καὶ οἱ Μήλιοι περὶ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους αὖθις καθ' ἕτερόν τι τοῦ περιτειχίσματος εἷλον τῶν Ἀθηναίων, παρόντων οὐ πολλῶν τῶν φυλάκων. 3. καὶ ἐλθούσης στρατιᾶς ὕστερον ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἄλλης, ὡς ταῦτα ἐγίγνετο, ἧς ἦρχε Φιλοκράτης ὁ Δημέου, καὶ κατὰ κράτος ἤδη πολιορκούμενοι,—γενομένης καὶ προδοσίας τινὸς ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν,—ξυνεχώρησαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, ὥστ' ἐκείνους περὶ αὐτῶν βουλεῦσαι. 4. οἱ δὲ ἀπέκτειναν Μηλίων ὅσους ἡβῶντας ἔλαβον, παῖδας δὲ καὶ γυναῖκας ἠνδραπόδισαν. τὸ δὲ χωρίον αὐτοὶ ᾤκησαν, ἀποίκους ὕστερον πεντακοσίους πέμψαντες.

words we may satisfactorily account from the circumstance that the aorist form is far more frequent in the Attic writers; though in various instances it has been inadvertently altered to the imperfect, which is much more usual in the common Greek dialect.

Ch. CXV. 2. παρὰ σφῶν] This is well explained by Dr. Arnold, 'ab ipsis profectos;' while Poppo compares the use of παρ' ἡμῶν at ii. 41. With the expression here, ἐκήρυξαν — λῃΐζεσθαι, Dr. Arnold aptly compares another in Demosth. p. 931, ἐδεδομένων σύλων κατ' Ἀθηναίων.

4. χρήσιμα] This I have thought proper to edit, with Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, from two tolerably good MSS. and Valla, instead of vulg. χρήμασι, which cannot possibly be right, and may be supposed to have arisen from inadvertence on the part of the copyists.

Ch. CXVI. 1. μελλήσαντες] 'moliti.' On the subject of the τὰ διαβατήρια ἱερὰ, ('the border-sacrifices,') see note at ch. 54. On the words which follow, ἐν τοῖς ὁρίοις, see note at ch. 55.

2. καθ' ἕτερόν τι τοῦ περιτειχίσματος εἷλον] I now incline to the opinion of Poppo, that 'since καθ' ἕτερον cannot be separated from τι, the words τοῦ περιτειχίσματος are to be referred both to τι and also (as a genitivus partitivus) to εἷλον.'

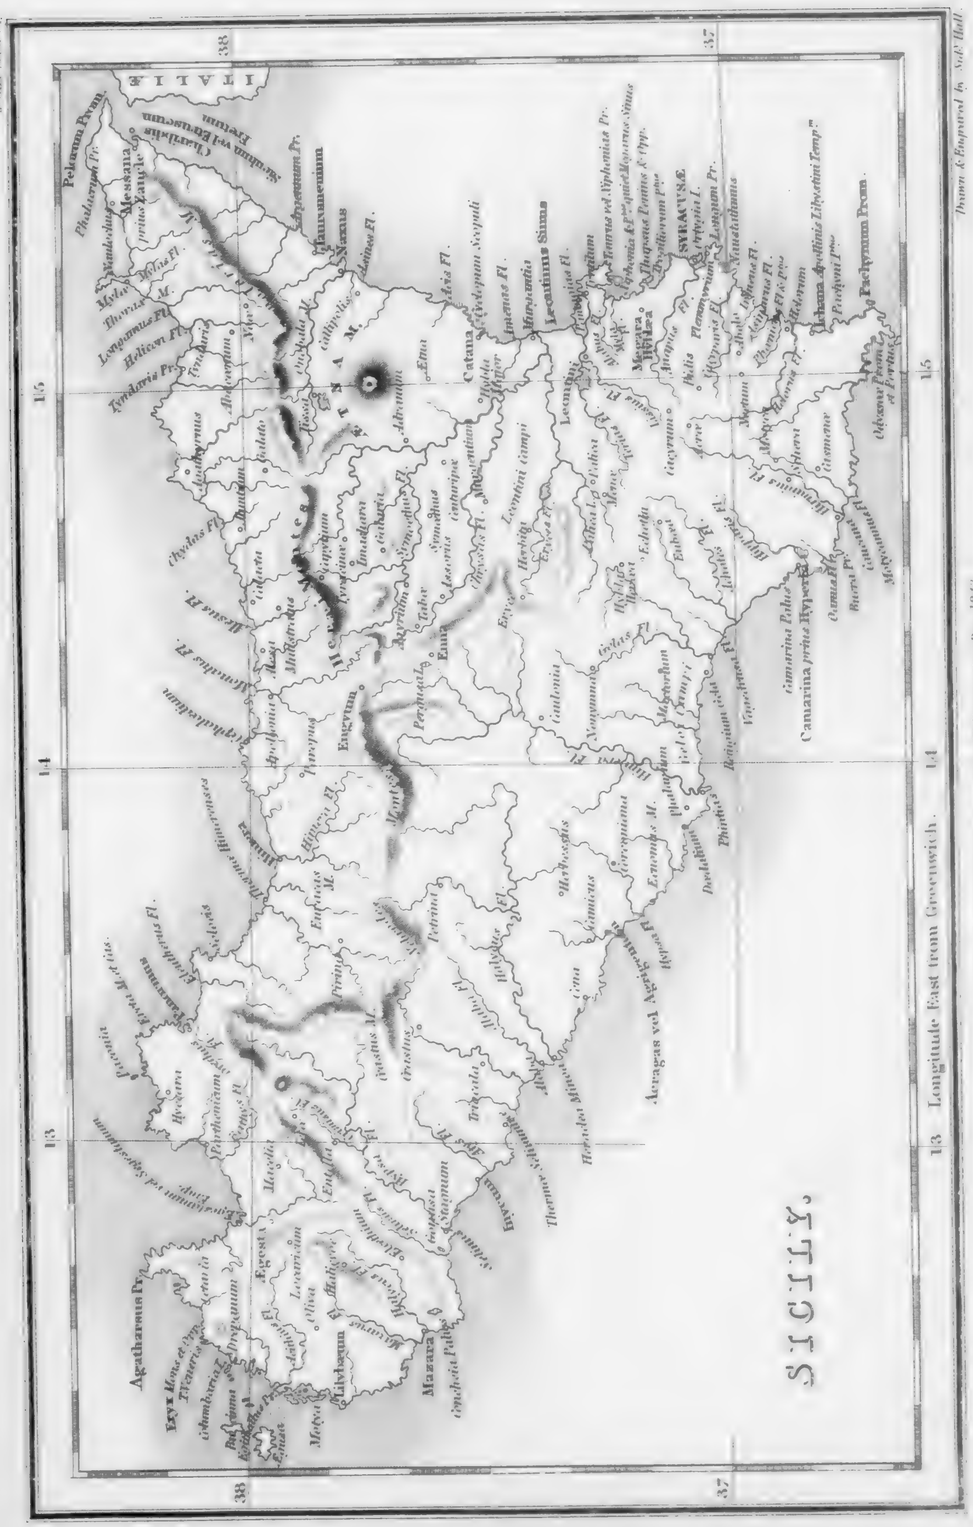
κύκλῳ τοὺς Μηλίους. 2. καὶ ὕστερον φυλακὴν σφῶν τε αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων καταλιπόντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν, ἀνεχώρησαν τῷ πλείονι τοῦ στρατοῦ· οἱ δὲ λειπόμενοι παραμένοντες ἐπολιόρκουν τὸ χωρίον.

CXV. Καὶ Ἀργεῖοι, κατὰ τὸν χρόνον τὸν αὐτὸν ἐσβαλόντες ἐς τὴν Φλιασίαν, καὶ λοχισθέντες ὑπό τε Φλιασίων καὶ τῶν σφετέρων φυγάδων, διεφθάρησαν ὡς ὀγδοήκοντα. 2. καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Πύλου Ἀθηναῖοι Λακεδαιμονίων πολλὴν λείαν ἔλαβον· καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι δι' αὐτὸ τὰς μὲν σπονδὰς οὐδ' ὡς ἀφέντες, ἐπολέμουν αὐτοῖς, ἐκήρυξαν δὲ, 'εἴ τις βούλεται παρὰ σφῶν Ἀθηναίους ληΐζεσθαι.' 3. καὶ Κορίνθιοι ἐπολέμησαν ἰδίων τινῶν διαφορῶν ἕνεκα τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις· οἱ δ' ἄλλοι Πελοποννήσιοι ἡσύχαζον. 4. εἶλον δὲ καὶ οἱ Μήλιοι τῶν Ἀθηναίων τοῦ περιτειχίσματος τὸ κατὰ τὴν ἀγοράν, προσβαλόντες νυκτὸς, καὶ ἄνδρας τε ἀπέκτειναν, καὶ ἐσενεγκάμενοι σῖτόν τε καὶ ὅσα πλεῖστα ἐδύναντο χρήσιμα, ἀναχωρήσαντες ἡσύχαζον· καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἄμεινον τὴν φυλακὴν τὸ ἔπειτα παρεσκευάζοντο. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

CXVI. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος Λακεδαιμόνιοι, μελλήσαντες ἐς τὴν Ἀργείαν στρατεύειν, ὡς αὐτοῖς τὰ διαβατήρια ἱερὰ ἐν τοῖς ὁρίοις οὐκ ἐγίγνετο, ἀνεχώρησαν. καὶ Ἀργεῖοι, διὰ τὴν ἐκείνων μέλλησιν, τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει τινὰς ὑποτοπήσαντες, τοὺς μὲν ξυνέλαβον, οἱ δ' αὐτοὺς καὶ διέφυγον. 2. καὶ οἱ Μήλιοι περὶ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους αὖθις καθ' ἕτερόν τι τοῦ περιτειχίσματος εἶλον τῶν Ἀθηναίων, παρόντων οὐ πολλῶν τῶν φυλάκων. 3. καὶ ἐλθούσης στρατιᾶς ὕστερον ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἄλλης, ὡς ταῦτα ἐγίγνετο, ἧς ἦρχε Φιλοκράτης ὁ Δημέου, καὶ κατὰ κράτος ἤδη πολιορκούμενοι,—γενομένης καὶ προδοσίας τινὸς ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν,—ξυνεχώρησαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, ὥστ' ἐκείνους περὶ αὐτῶν βουλεῦσαι. 4. οἱ δὲ ἀπέκτειναν Μηλίων ὅσους ἡβῶντας ἔλαβον, παῖδας δὲ καὶ γυναῖκας ἠνδραπόδισαν. τὸ δὲ χωρίον αὐτοὶ ᾤκησαν, ἀποίκους ὕστερον πεντακοσίους πέμψαντες.



words we may satisfactorily account from the circumstance that the aorist form is far more frequent in the Attic writers; though in various instances it has been inadvertently altered to the imperfect, which is much more usual in the common Greek dialect.

Ch. CXV. 2. παρὰ σφῶν] This is well explained by Dr. Arnold, 'ab ipsis profectos;' while Poppo compares the use of παρ' ἡμῶν at ii. 41. With the expression here, ἐκήρυξαν — ληΐζεσθαι, Dr. Arnold aptly compares another in Demosth. p. 931, ἐδεδομένων σύλων κατ' Ἀθηναίων.

4. χρήσιμα] This I have thought proper to edit, with Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, from two tolerably good MSS. and Valla, instead of vulg. χρήμασι, which cannot possibly be right, and may be supposed to have arisen from inadvertence on the part of the copyists.

Ch. CXVI. 1. μελλήσαντες] 'moliti.' On the subject of the τὰ διαβατήρια ἱερὰ, ('the border-sacrifices,') see note at ch. 54. On the words which follow, ἐν τοῖς ὁρίοις, see note at ch. 55.

2. καθ' ἕτερόν τι τοῦ περιτειχίσματος εἶλον] I now incline to the opinion of Poppo, that 'since καθ' ἕτερον cannot be separated from τι, the words τοῦ περιτειχίσματος are to be referred both to τι and also (as a genitivus partitivus) to εἶλον.'

ΘΟΥΚΥΔΙΔΟΥ

ΞΥΓΓΡΑΦΗΣ Ζ.

I. ΤΟΥ δ' αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος Ἀθηναῖοι ἐβούλοντο αὖθις μείζονι παρασκευῇ τῆς μετὰ Λάχητος καὶ Εὐρυμέδοντος ἐπὶ Σικελίαν πλεύσαντες καταστρέψασθαι, εἰ δύναιντο, ἄπειροι οἱ πολλοὶ ὄντες τοῦ μεγέθους τῆς νήσου καὶ τῶν ἐνοικούντων τοῦ πλήθους καὶ Ἑλλήνων καὶ βαρβάρων, καὶ ὅτι οὐ πολλῷ τινι ὑποδεέστερον πόλεμον ἀνῃροῦντο ἢ τὸν πρὸς Πελοποννησίους. 2. Σικελίας γὰρ περίπλους μέν ἐστιν ὀλκάδι οὐ πολλῷ τινι ἔλασσον ἢ ὀκτὼ ἡμερῶν, καὶ τοσαύτη

Ch. I. 1. ἐβούλοντο] The word is here (as in Xen. Hist. iii. 4, 2, and elsewhere) used not so much of will as of intention, (denoting what we understand by having a thing in mind, planning to carry it into execution,) in the sense of being propense or inclined so to do. With the expression, a little after, οὐ πολλῷ τινι ὑποδεέστερον, (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 487, 4.) compare in Herodot. i. 181, οὐ πολλῷ τέῳ ἀσθενέστερον. It serves, by its indefinite force, to somewhat qualify a too sweeping assertion; and, accordingly, as in the phrase οὕτω δή τι, bears the import of ferè in Latin.

2. Now follows a sort of digression,—naturally suggested by the foregoing words,—as to the size, population, &c. of the island; and which Goeller thinks was derived from Antiochus, the author of a work on the history of Syracuse now lost.

Σικελίας γὰρ περίπλους, &c.] On this rough mode of calculating distances, whether by land or by water, as employed among the ancients, see note at ii. 97, 1. Our author, it is observable, uses here the word ὀλκάδι rather than, as in the above passage, νηὶ στρογγύλῃ, because ships of burden were, for several reasons, (some of which are pointed out by Dr. Arnold,) better fitted to compute distance than triremes. The distance here mentioned may seem somewhat over-estimated, considering that eight days sail (reckoning the day's sail, agreeably to what we read in Herodot. iv. 86, at 700 stadia,) will make 5600 stadia, or 700 miles; whereas Strabo reckons it at only 587 miles, and Cluver at 600 miles. But the estimate of our author is sufficiently vindicated by the circumstance of Ephorus (as cited in Strabo, vi. 2.) reckoning the distance as five days and nights sail, which will be found to somewhat exceed 6000 stadia. It is proper, moreover, to take into the account and allow something for the expression here, οὐ πολλῷ τινι, 'not very much.' As to the words of Plutarch, de Exsil. § 10, τεσσάρων ἡμερῶν, ὥσπερ ἡ Σικελία, περίπλουν ἔχουσαν, there is an evident error in the word τεσσάρων, and I doubt not that, for this, Plutarch wrote ἑπτά: and how easily the two words might be confounded, will appear from the near οὖσα ἐν εἴκοσι σταδίων μάλιστα μέτρῳ τῆς θαλάσσης διείργεται τὸ μὴ ἤπειρος οὖσα. II. Ὠκίσθη δὲ ‡ ὧδε τὸ ἀρχαῖον, καὶ τοσάδε ἔθνη ἔσχε τὰ ξύμπαντα. παλαιότατοι μὲν λέγονται ἐν μέρει τινὶ τῆς χώρας Κύκλωπες καὶ Λαιστρυγόνες οἰκῆσαι· ὧν ἐγὼ οὔτε γένος ἔχω εἰπεῖν, οὔτε ὁπόθεν ἐσῆλθον, ἢ ὅποι ἀπεχώρησαν· ἀρκείτω δὲ ὡς ποιηταῖς τε εἴρηται καὶ ὡς ἕκαστός πη γιγνώσκει περὶ αὐτῶν.

resemblance of the two capital figures IIII and IIII. Hence the computation of our author, as compared with the above, will present but a trifling difference, especially when we take into account the very probable circumstance, that the day's voyage was in the time of Plutarch (when navigation had been much improved since the age of Herodotus) reckoned at somewhat more than 700 stadia. As to what Dr. Arnold remarks on the vagueness in the computation of distances on water, (of which he adduces certain examples,) that has nothing to do here, since those distances are measured by the eye, and not, as here, by some rate of motion estimated on the average distance gone over by a vessel with fair wind; a rough estimate, indeed, but one not far from the truth. Thus, for instance, the shortest distance across the strait of Messina has been ascertained by Capt. Smyth to be 3971 yards; and 20 stadia (as stated by Thucydides) will make 3833 yards.

τοσαύτη οὖσα] 'quum (or quamvis) tanta sit.' The course of argument (which Bauer with no sufficient reason pronounces lame) is, as Haack states it, this,—that 'Sicily is not only an island of great size, but one which wants little of being part of the continent, being separated from it by only an interval of 20 stadia.' And so Dr. Arnold remarks, that the notion (much in the manner of Herodotus) is, that 'so large an island ought to have been in the midst of a wide sea, proportioned to its own magnitude, and not to have lain so close to the coast as to seem a sort of appendage to the mainland.' Bauer and Poppo, indeed, seek to obviate the difficulty involved in τοσαύτη οὖσα, by supposing it merely 'Herodoti more repetentis dicta per participia fere, priusque ad alia pergat') put for τοσαύτη ἐστὶ, καὶ — διείργεται. But that seems taking too much for granted, and is like cutting the knot rather than untying it. As respects the construction, οὖσα stands for the more usual εἶναι: and Dr. Arnold compares with the present another similar form of expression supra iii. 1, ἔργον τὸ μὴ προεξιόντας — κακουργεῖν, where, as here, we have a certain confusion between the infinitive and the participle. Somewhat removed from common use is the sense which ἐν bears in the present passage (the phrase here ἐν μέτρῳ signifying, as Bauer explains it, 'per mensuram, intervallum, duplici sensu et modum dirimendi et tenorem significante'); though something similar occurs at iv. 113, ἀπειλημμένον ἐν στενῷ ἰσθμῷ. Wasse and Poppo have noted imitations of this passage of our author in Demetr. Phal. § 72. Aristid. p. 238, and Polyæn. ii. 2, 4; and they might have added others in Procop. p. 33, 2. 166, 4. de Ædif. 43, 26, and Pausan. x. 17, 6, in all of which εἶναι is used, and not οὖσα. Yet that will not prove that the writers above mentioned read εἶναι in this passage of our author, much less that, as Poppo in his Appendix imagines, it is here to be read.

With the use here of διείργεσθαι, we may compare the parallel one in Latin of dissociari. Thus in a passage of Sil. Ital. xiv. it is said on the subject of the very strait in question, 'Sed spatium quod dissociat consortia terræ:' and so Stat. Silv. i. 3, 32, most elegantly, 'dissociata profundo Bruttia Sicanium circumspicit ora Pelorum.'

Ch. II. Thucydides now glances at the colonization of Sicily; 1. by barbarians, and 2. by Greeks.

1. ᾠκίσθη] 'was settled' or colonized. Ὧδε. For this many MSS. have ἧδε, which was edited by Poppo. I have chosen, with Haack, Bekker, and Goeller, to retain the ὧδε, since while the other reading yields a sense languid and frigid, this has the recommendation of being highly suitable to the context, and is confirmed by the recapitulatory words at the close of the chapter, βάρβαροι μὲν οὖν τοσοίδε Σικελίαν καὶ οὕτως ᾤκησαν. The two words might easily be confounded, from the similarity in some MSS. of ω and η. The ἧδε of several MSS. confirms ὧδε.

ἀρκείτω δὲ ὡς—περὶ αὐτῶν] 'Suffice it to advert to what has been said of them by the poets, or what each one may know or think of them;' meaning that in so speaking, the common notion respecting them, whether as founded on the poets, or derived from any other sources of knowledge or opinion, is neither affirmed nor denied. The ὡς here stands for ὃ or ἃ, by an idiom chiefly occurring after verbs of speaking. So Æschyl. Ag. 310, ὡς (for οὓς, scil. λόγους) λέγεις, and Plutarch de Is. et Os. § 17, οἱ δέ φασιν οὐχ οὕτως, ἀλλ' ὡς εἴρηται τρόπον ἐκπεσεῖν εἰς τὴν θάλατταν (where ὡς stands for—what learned editors there, most uncritically, propose to read, from conjecture—ὅν). Also Soph. Œd. Col. 1124, καὶ σοὶ θεοὶ πόροιεν, ὡς ἐγὼ θέλω, where Schaefer remarks, 'sæpius utuntur Græci scriptores, inprimis poetæ, particula ὡς, ubi ὅσα, ἃ, aut simile quid expectas: quod non attendentes viri docti passim indulserunt vanis conjecturis.' Πῃ, 'any where,' viz. as to any particular event. Comp. Procop. Hist. procem. Προκόπιος τοὺς πολέμους ξυνέγραψε—ὡς πη αὐτῶν ἑκάστῳ ξυνενέχθη γενέσθαι.

2. ἐνοικισάμενοι] For this, Poppo and Goeller have edited, from almost all the best MSS., ἐνοικησάμενοι. I have chosen, with Haack and Bekker, to retain the common reading, since the authority of MSS., in so minute a variation, is inconsiderable, and far overbalanced by propriety of language, which here seems to require ἐνοικισάμενοι: for of the use of ἐνοικήσασθαι, middle depon. for act. ἐνοικεῖν, an example, as Poppo remarks, should be produced; and though I could adduce such from Procop. 135, 32, χῶρον ἱκανὸν ἐνοικήσασθαι, yet even there the true reading may be ἐνοικίσασθαι. Moreover, the context (as, for instance, the words preceding, § 1, ᾠκίσθη δὲ ὧδε) requires the sense 'settled,' 'made a settlement,' rather than that of 'inhabited.' And although no instance of ἐνοικιζεσθαι used in this sense has occurred to me, yet of the passive form in a reciprocal sense, (answering to the Hebrew conjugation Hiphil,) I have noted examples in Hdot. and in Arrian, E. A. vii. 20, 5, παρασχεῖν πόλεις ἐνοικισθῆναι: and of the simple οἰκιζεσθαι in Plato, p. 114, ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς οἰκιζόμενοι: and 904, ποίαν ἕδραν ἕξει μετελάμβανον οἰκίζεσθαι, and Plut. t. viii. 201, 2.

αὐτόχθονες] Meaning indigenous or aboriginal inhabitants, what Justin, ii. 16, elegantly expresses by 'Non advenæ, sed eodem innati solo quod incolunt, et quæ illis sedes eadem origo est.'

ὡς δὲ ἡ ἀλήθεια εὑρίσκεται] 'as is ascertained to be the truth;' not as Niebuhr, cited by Arnold, renders, 'a truth;' for that sense would materially weaken the strength of the assertion; which, we may observe, is one expressed with far more positiveness than our author allows himself to use in matters of mere opinion;—a positiveness, however, perfectly warrantable in this case, being confirmed by the authority of Philistus, a writer who lived soon after the time of Thucydides, and formed a history of Sicily; and Ephorus, a general historian contemporaneous with him: considering, too, that the thing involves no improbability in itself, and that the testimony of a nation like the Iberians, who kept written records of events, is surely unobjectionable, no reason is there to suppose the assertion any other than well founded.

Σικανοῦ ποταμοῦ] Meaning most probably the Sicoris (now the Segre); a river of Catalonia, and the principal feeder of the Iberus. It may be supposed that the Sicanians occupied that part of Catalonia bounded by the Sicoris and the Iberus on the west, and the river Rubricatus on the east; in short, the tract of country afterwards inhabited by the Cosetani. It would seem, too, that the Ligyes, having made an irruption over the Pyrenæan mountains into Catalonia, and obtaining temporary possession of it, drove out the Sicanians, who accordingly migrated to Sicily.

ἀπ' αὐτῶν—καλουμένη] So we read in Herodot. vii. 170, Σικανίην, τὴν νῦν Σικελίην καλευμένην. For Τρινακρία some MSS. have Τρινακία. According to either reading, the ratio significationis of the word remains essentially the same. Trinacria (for which we have Trinacris, only another form of the same name, in Ptolemy, Oppian, Halieut. 624, and Ov. Fast. iv.) is the more usual name, and denotes the three-caped island; while Trinacia (which is, I conceive, the earlier name, as found in Homer, and occurring in several later writers) signifies the triangular, or three-cornered, island: and so the Romans called it Tri-

2. Σικανοὶ δὲ μετ' αὐτοὺς πρῶτοι φαίνονται ‡ ἐνοικισάμενοι, ὡς μὲν αὐτοί φασι, καὶ πρότεροι, διὰ τὸ αὐτόχθονες εἶναι, ὡς δὲ ἡ ἀλήθεια εὑρίσκεται, Ἴβηρες ὄντες, καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ Σικανοῦ ποταμοῦ τοῦ ἐν Ἰβηρίᾳ ὑπὸ Λιγύων ἀναστάντες. καὶ ἀπ' αὐτῶν Σικανία τότε ἡ νῆσος ἐκαλεῖτο, πρότερον Τρινακρία καλουμένη· οἰκοῦσι δὲ ἔτι καὶ νῦν τὰ

πρὸς ἑσπέραν τὴν Σικελίαν. 3. Ἰλίου δὲ ἁλισκομένου, τῶν Τρώων τινὲς, διαφυγόντες Ἀχαιοὺς, πλοίοις ἀφικνοῦνται πρὸς τὴν Σικελίαν, καὶ ὅμοροι τοῖς Σικανοῖς οἰκήσαντες, ξύμπαντες μὲν Ἔλυμοι ἐκλήθησαν, πόλεις δ' αὐτῶν Ἔρυξ τε καὶ Ἔγεστα. προσξυνῴκησαν δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ Φωκέων τινὲς τῶν ἀπὸ Τροίας τότε χειμῶνι ἐς Λιβύην πρῶτον, ἔπειτα ἐς Σικελίαν ἀπ' αὐτῆς κατενεχθέντες. 4. Σικελοὶ δ' ἐξ Ἰταλίας (ἐνταῦθα γὰρ ᾤκουν) διέβησαν ἐς Σικελίαν, φεύγοντες Ὄπικας, ὡς μὲν εἰκὸς καὶ λέγεται, ἐπὶ σχεδιῶν, τηρήσαντες τὸν πορθμὸν, κατιόντος τοῦ ἀνέμου, τάχα ἂν δὲ καὶ ἄλλως πως quetra. Such being the case, I wonder that in a passage of Strabo, p. 382, the editors should not have seen that the true reading is Τρινακία, and not vulg. Τρινακρία. In the form Θρινακία, also found, we have only a rougher, and perhaps more ancient, pronunciation of the word: alluding to which last-mentioned form, (namely, Θρινακία,) Eustath. on Dionys. Perieg. 467, says, the island was so called διὰ τὸ ἐοικέναι θρίδακι, where it is strange the editors should not have seen that the true reading is, not θρίδακι, but ΘΡΙΝΑΚΙ, the letters Δ and Ν being, in MS. characters, often confounded. The above emendation is placed beyond doubt by Steph. Byz., who says, ἐκλήθη δ' οὕτως ὅτι θρίνακί ἐστιν ὁμοία. And no wonder that the island should have obtained that name, (with which compare the appellation given to it in Orpheus, Argon. 1235, Τριγλώχινα νῆσον,) considering that the name θρίναξ signified a three-tined fork, and also, in a general way, any triangular figure; as is plain from its being a name given to the πτύον, or winnowing-fan, which was of the form of the letter Δ.

τὰ πρὸς ἑσπέραν] 'on the parts to the westward.' The preposition κατὰ is, as often, left understood. See the note of Poppo on iii. 6, 1, τὸ πρὸς νότον. As the Sicanians doubtless first colonized the western parts of Sicily, so it is likely that they would, as Thucydides says, yet remain in possession of those parts.

3. Φωκέων τινὲς] Bochart thinks our author wrong; and Dobree suspects Φωκ. to be corrupt. The correctness, however, of the word is sufficiently vindicated by a passage of Pausan. v. 25, 3, (adduced by Poppo,) where, after mentioning the Sicanians, Sicilians, Phœnicians, and Libyans as colonizers of Sicily, that writer adds, Ἑλλήνων δὲ Δωριεῖς τε ἔχουσιν αὐτὴν καὶ Ἴωνες, καὶ τοῦ Φωκικοῦ καὶ τοῦ Ἀττικοῦ γένους ἑκατέρου μοῖρα οὐ πολλή. That the Phocians did join with the other Greeks in the expedition against Troy, is certain from Homer's Iliad, ii. 517, where it is said that they occupied forty ships.

4. ἐπὶ σχεδιῶν] By σχεδίαι are denoted rude barks, similar to the Indian canoes, or even the log-rafts used by South-American navigators. So Hesych. explains the term by ξύλα ἃ συνδέουσι καὶ οὕτω πλέουσι. At τηρήσαντες τὸν πορθμὸν, a little after, by τὸν πορθμὸν is meant τὸν καιρὸν τοῦ πορθμοῦ, 'the fit season for crossing.' Compare Polyb. v. 94, 5, τηρεῖν τὴν σύνοδον.

κατιόντος τοῦ ἀνέμου] Ἄνεμος κατιὼν est ventus spirans et crebrescens, ut loquitur Virg. Æn. iii. 530, et quidem a tergo euntes prosequens. Thuc. ii. 25. 84, ὡς δὲ τὸ πνεῦμα κατῆλθε, i. e. ἐκ τοῦ κόλπου ἐξέπνευσε, ut paulo ante dixerat. Lucian, V. H. ii. 37, ἔνθεν δ' ἀνηγόμεθα σφοδρότερον κατιόντος τοῦ πνεύματος. Et Pollux, i. 105, inter ea, quæ de secunda navigatione dicuntur, habet κατιόντος τοῦ ἀνέμου. (Duker.) Κατιέναι est descendere, et de vento oriri, consurgere; et vere descendit tunc ventus, quum a montibus omnino [aut cœlo], tum a litore, post terga navium trajicere volentium in diversam oram, unde et καταιγὶς et κατάϊξ poetis dicitur. (Bauer.) This exactly represents the nature of the somewhat rare phrase under consideration; which is used of a wind that sets steadily, and blows stiffly from some given quarter; and hence proves favourable to those who are going thither, and the contrary to those going in the opposite direction. In Plutarch ἀνέμου κατιόντος ἐν πελάγει is used simply of a brisk wind: and in Joseph. Ant. ii. 16, 5, we have, ἐπιχεῖται πάλιν ἡ θάλασσα, καὶ περικαταλαμβάνει ῥοώδης ὑπὸ πνευμάτων κατιοῦσα τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους: where I should suspect that Josephus wrote, for κατιοῦσα, κατιόντων, were it not for a passage of Quint. Curt. ix. 9, 'mare intumescit, et in campos descendit.' Accordingly κατιοῦσα ἐσπλεύσαντες. 5. εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ νῦν ἔτι ἐν τῇ Ἰταλίᾳ Σικελοί· καὶ ἡ χώρα ἀπὸ Ἰταλοῦ, βασιλέως τινὸς Σικελῶν, τοὔνομα τοῦτο ἔχοντος, οὕτως Ἰταλία ἐπωνομάσθη. 6. ἐλθόντες δὲ ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν στρατὸς πολὺς, τούς τε Σικανοὺς κρατοῦντες μάχῃ, ‡ ἀνέστειλαν πρὸς τὰ μεσημβρινὰ καὶ ἑσπέρια αὐτῆς, καὶ ἀντὶ Σικανίας Σικελίαν τὴν νῆσον ἐποίησαν καλεῖσθαι, καὶ τὰ κράτιστα τῆς γῆς ᾤκησαν ἔχοντες, ἐπεὶ διέβησαν, ἔτη ἐγγὺς τριακόσια πρὶν Ἕλληνας ἐς Σικελίαν ἐλθεῖν· ἔτι δὲ καὶ νῦν τὰ μέσα καὶ τὰ πρὸς βορρᾶν τῆς νήσου ἔχουσιν. 7. ᾤκουν δὲ καὶ Φοίνικες περὶ πᾶσαν μὲν τὴν Σικελίαν, ἄκρας τε ἐπὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἀπολαβόντες καὶ τὰ ἐπικείμενα νησίδια ἐμπορίας ἕνεκεν τῆς πρὸς τοὺς Σικελούς· ἐπειδὴ δὲ οἱ Ἕλληνες πολλοὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν ἐπεσέπλεον, ἐκλιπόντες τὰ πλείω, Μοτύην καὶ Σολόεντα καὶ Πάνορμον ἐγγὺς τῶν Ἐλύμων ξυνοικίσαντες ἐνέμοντο, ξυμμαχίᾳ τε πίσυνοι τῇ τῶν Ἐλύμων, καὶ ὅτι ἐντεῦθεν ἐλάχιστον πλοῦν Καρχηδὼν Σικελίας ἀπέχει. βάρβαροι μὲν οὖν τοσοίδε Σικελίαν καὶ οὕτως ᾤκησαν.

III. Ἑλλήνων δὲ ‡ πρῶτοι Χαλκιδῆς, ἐξ Εὐβοίας πλεύσαντες μετὰ in the above passage may mean 'coming down upon,' and, by implication, inundating: and so in a passage of Hom. Il. xi. 492, probably suggesting the expression, we have, Ὡς δ' ὁπότε πλήθων ποταμὸς πεδίονδε κάτεισι Χειμάῤῥους κατ' ὄρεσφιν, where Dammius renders, (after Eustathius,) 'in campum descendit eumque inundat.' In those passages the sea is regarded as higher than the flat shore on its margin. See also Hom. Od. xvi. 472. Finally, the sense in the above passage of Josephus will be sufficiently clear by simply pointing as follows: περικαταλαμβάνει, ῥοώδης (scil. οὖσα) ὑπὸ πνευμάτων, κατιοῦσα τοὺς Αἰγ. Similarly in a passage of our author supra iv. 24, 5, (probably present to the mind of Josephus in writing the foregoing,) we have, ἐσπίπτουσα ἡ θάλασσα ἐς αὐτὸ, καὶ ῥοώδης οὖσα, &c.

6. ἀνέστειλαν πρὸς τὰ μεσημβρινὰ] So I have edited, with Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold, for vulg. ἀπέστειλαν, which, though found in all the MSS., and retained by Poppo, cannot be correct, since it presents a totally wrong idea. In confirmation of Bekker's conjecture I am enabled to adduce (in addition to two passages noticed by Dr. Arnold, Isocr. Panath. p. 241, D, τοὺς βαρβάρους ἀνέστειλαν ἀπὸ τῆς θαλάσσης, and Strabo, iv. 1, 5, ἐκ τῆς παραλίας ἀνέστειλε τοὺς βαρβάρους) the parallel expression of Dionys. Hal. Ant. v. 38, τοὺς Σ. ἀνέστελλον ἀπὸ τοῦ νάματος. In the present instance, however, considering that the verb is followed by a phrase denoting the end of action, it is proper to render, not by repellere, (as is done by Poppo,) but by summovere, which is the term, in such a case, used by the Latin writers; e. g. Sallust, in his Epistle of Pompey to the Senate, 'hostes ab Alpibus in Hispaniam summ.;' and Livy, iv. 17, 'summ. hostes ex agro Rom. trans ('to the other side of') Anienem.' Hence the idea here intended is what we should express by 'to pack off, compel to remove back to any place;' where we have an union of the two notions of driving off and confining to.

7. τὰ ἐπικείμενα νησίδια] Meaning, I apprehend, the Ægades and others lying off the promontory Lilybæum. Ἐπεσέπλεον. Poppo well renders the ἐπ' in this word by insuper, 'in addition to the old colonists.' Of this verb, which is rare, I have noted examples elsewhere in Xen. Hist. i. 1. Dio Cass. p. 313 & 329. In ἐπὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἀπολαβόντες we have a pleonastic form of expression, with which Poppo compares the phrase ὀφθαλμοῖσιν ἰδεῖν. Yet there we have nothing of pleonasm, but rather what is a stronger expression than ἰδεῖν by itself.

Ch. III. 1. πρῶτοι] For this many of the MSS. have πρῶτον, which is received into the text by Poppo and Goeller; while Bekker retains the common reading [found in Mus. Br.]; which is, I conceive, the course most advisable to pursue in a matter of such uncertain determination. As to what Goeller urges in favour of Θουκλέους οἰκιστοῦ, Νάξον ᾤκισαν, καὶ Ἀπόλλωνος Ἀρχηγέτου βωμὸν, ὅστις νῦν ἔξω τῆς πόλεώς ἐστιν, ἱδρύσαντο, ἐφ' ᾧ, ὅταν ἐκ Σικελίας θεωροὶ πλέωσι, πρῶτον θύουσι. 2. Συρακούσας δὲ τοῦ ἐχομένου ἔτους Ἀρχίας τῶν Ἡρακλειδῶν ἐκ Κορίνθου ᾤκισε, Σικελοὺς ἐξελάσας πρῶτον ἐκ τῆς νήσου, ἐν ᾗ, νῦν οὐκέτι *περικλυζομένῃ, ἡ πόλις ἡ ἐντός ἐστιν· ὕστερον δὲ χρόνῳ καὶ ἡ ἔξω προστειχισθεῖσα πολυάνθρωπος ἐγένετο. 3. Θουκλῆς δὲ καὶ οἱ Χαλκιδῆς, ἐκ Νάξου ὁρμηθέντες, ἔτει πέμπτῳ μετὰ Συρακούσας οἰκισθείσας Λεοντίνους τε, πολέμῳ τοὺς Σικελοὺς ἐξελάσαντες, οἰκίζουσι, καὶ μετ' αὐτοὺς Κατάνην· οἰκιστὴν δὲ αὐτοὶ Καταναῖοι ἐποιήσαντο Εὔαρχον. IV. Κατὰ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον καὶ Λάμις, ἐκ Μεγάρων ἀποικίαν ἄγων, ἐς Σικελίαν ἀφίκετο, καὶ ὑπὲρ Παντακύου τε ποταμοῦ Τρώτιλόν τι ὄνομα χωρίον οἰκίσας, καὶ ὕστερον αὐτόθεν τοῖς πρῶτον, that though the Latin writers employ, in this sort of construction, primi, yet such is not the sole usage of the Greeks in the case of πρῶτοι and πρῶτον (as also μόνοι and μόνον)—that, I apprehend, is a matter not to be brought to any certain determination: and though the authority of MSS., in so minute a point as this, is inconsiderable, yet that is here decidedly in favour of πρῶτοι, which also must have had place in the text in the age of Dionys. Hal., as appears from the following passage of that writer, (evidently imitated from this of Thucydides,) Antiq. i. 11, p. 30, (ed. Reiske) πρῶτοι γὰρ Ἑλλήνων οὗτοι, περαιωθέντες τὸν Ἰόνιον κόλπον ᾤκησαν Ἰταλίαν.

2. νήσου] Goeller writes the word with a capital, because it so appears in Diod. Sic. iii. 9; and in like manner, in Livy, xxv. 24, we have, 'insulam quam ipsi Nason vocant;' and in Plut. Timol. 9, εἰς τὴν ἀκρόπολιν καὶ τὴν καλουμένην Νῆσον. But of these passages the one last mentioned, and the one from Livy, may be pronounced insufficient for proof,—and that from the addition, in the one, of καλουμένην, and in the other, similarly, of vocant. Nor can the passage of Diodorus be considered decisive, since, at any rate, it merely proves that νῆσος was, in that writer's time, the name given to the old part of the city. But there is no reason to suppose that this was the case in the time of Thucydides; and the use here of the article, which surely would not be wanted when the word became a proper name, seems to exclude the idea.

For vulg. περικλυζομένη, I have, with Arnold, received the conjecture of Bekker, περικλυζομένῃ, the latter being almost demanded by the construction. Nay, I know of no instance of περικλυζομένη or περικλύστη as applied to πόλις, though several as applied to νῆσος, e. g. Æschyl. Pers. 588, Αἴαντος περικλύστα νᾶσος, and 856, νᾶσοι περίκλυστοι. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 875, 12, περίκλυστος νῆσος ἐκ τοῦ ποταμοῦ. Hom. Hym. in Ap. 181, Δήλοιο περικλύστης. Epiphr. ap. Athen. p. 346, τῆς περικλύστου—Κρήτης. And similarly in the Latin writers we have circumflua insula and tellus; never, I believe, circumflua urbs. It is true that, could the construction admit the common reading, we might adduce in its support a passage of Eurip. Herc. Fur. 1053, Ταφίων περίκλυστον ἄστυ πέρσας. and frag. incert. 94, 1, ὕδατι—περικλυζόμενον Ἀκροκόρινθον.

προστειχισθεῖσα] 'being walled in,' i. e. added by an additional wall; for προστειχίζειν (a term which I have noted no where else except in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 137, 19.) signifies 'to add a piece of ground by a wall to another already walled.' This outer city, after being walled in, it is said, πολυάνθ. ἐγένετο, 'became populous,' namely, from the security thus afforded encouraging persons to inhabit it. Καὶ, 'too,' viz. as well as in the inner city.

Ch. IV. 1. Τρώτιλον] For this Æm. Port. conjectures the true reading to be Τρώγιλον, which has been adopted by Pinedo and Duker, but not on good grounds; for the Trogilus near Syracuse cannot here be meant; and that another place of the same name should have existed within so inconsiderable a distance, is highly improbable. And supposing Trotilus to be, as Duker says it is, no where else mentioned, that were no reason why it might not be here the true reading, since from the manner in which it is spoken of we may conclude it to have been a very

Χαλκιδεῦσιν ἐς Λεοντίνους ὀλίγον χρόνον ξυμπολιτεύσας, καὶ ὑπὸ αὐτῶν ἐκπεσών, καὶ Θάψον οἰκίσας, αὐτὸς μὲν ἀποθνήσκει· οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι ἐκ τῆς Θάψου ἀναστάντες, Ὕβλωνος βασιλέως Σικελοῦ προδόντος τὴν χώραν, καὶ καθηγησαμένου, Μεγαρέας ᾤκισαν τοὺς Ὑβλαίους κληθέντας. 2. καὶ ἔτη οἰκήσαντες πέντε καὶ τεσσαράκοντα καὶ διακόσια, ὑπὸ Γέλωνος τυράννου Συρακοσίων ἀνέστησαν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως καὶ χώρας. πρὶν δὲ ἀναστῆναι, ἔτεσιν ὕστερον ἑκατὸν ἢ αὐτοὺς οἰκῆσαι, ‡Πάμμιλον πέμψαντες, Σελινοῦντα κτίζουσι· καὶ ἐκ Μεγάρων, τῆς μητροπόλεως οὔσης αὐτοῖς, ἐπελθὼν ξυγκατῴκισε. 3. Γέλαν δὲ Ἀντίφημος ἐκ Ῥόδου καὶ Ἔντιμος ἐκ Κρήτης ἐποίκους ἀγαγόντες κοινῇ ἔκτισαν ἔτει πέμπτῳ καὶ τεσσαρακοστῷ μετὰ Συρακουσῶν οἴκισιν. καὶ τῇ μὲν πόλει ἀπὸ τοῦ Γέλα ποταμοῦ τοὔνομα ἐγένετο, τὸ δὲ χωρίον, οὗ νῦν ἡ πόλις ἐστὶ, καὶ ὃ πρῶτον ἐτειχίσθη, Λίνδιοι καλεῖται· νόμιμα δὲ Δωρικὰ ἐτέθη αὐτοῖς. 4. ἔτεσι δὲ ἐγγύτατα ὀκτὼ καὶ ἑκατὸν μετὰ τὴν σφετέραν οἴκισιν Γελῷοι Ἀκράγαντα ᾤκισαν, τὴν μὲν πόλιν ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἀκράγαντος ποταμοῦ ὀνομάσαντες, οἰκιστὰς δὲ ποιήσαντες Ἀριστόνουν καὶ Πυστίλον, νόμιμα δὲ τὰ Γελῴων δόντες. 5. Ζάγκλη δὲ τὴν μὲν ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ Κύμης τῆς ἐν Ὀπικίᾳ Χαλκιδικῆς πόλεως λῃστῶν ἀφικόμενων ᾠκίσθη, ὕστερον δὲ καὶ ἀπὸ Χαλκίδος καὶ τῆς ἄλλης Εὐβοίας πλῆθος ἐλθὸν ξυγκατενείμαντο τὴν γῆν· καὶ οἰκισταὶ Περιήρης καὶ Κραταιμένης ἐγένοντο αὐτῆς, ὁ μὲν ἀπὸ Κύμης, ὁ δὲ ἀπὸ Χαλκίδος. ὄνομα δὲ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον Ζάγκλη ἦν ὑπὸ τῶν Σικελῶν κληθεῖσα, ὅτι δρεπανοειδὲς τὴν ἰδέαν τὸ χωρίον ἐστὶ, τὸ δὲ δρέπανον οἱ Σικελοὶ ζάγκλον καλοῦσιν· ὕστερον δὲ αὐτοὶ μὲν ὑπὸ Σαμίων καὶ ἄλλων Ἰώνων ἐκπίπτουσιν, οἳ Μήδους φεύγοντες πρωτέβαλον Σικελίᾳ· 6. τοὺς δὲ Σαμίους Ἀναξίλας Ῥηγίνων τύραννος, οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον ἐκβαλὼν, καὶ τὴν obscure place. But, in point of fact, the name Trotilus does occur elsewhere, namely, in Polyæn. v. 5, 2, where we have, Μεγαρεῖς, τῶν Λεοντίνων, ἐκπεσόντες, Τρώϊλον κατῴκησαν, where Maas. well conjectures the true reading to be Τρώτιλον.

προδόντος τὴν χώραν] Render, 'having given up, conceded, or granted the place to them;' for such is the sense here intended, and which the word also bears in Polyb. xxx. 1, 1. xxxii. 13, 3. Καθηγησαμένου, scil. αὐτοῦ, 'quum ipse eos illuc deduxisset.'

2. For αὐτοὺς, Poppo says, one should have expected αὐτοί: and such, I would observe, was probably the reading formerly existing in the Cod. Clarend., of which the present reading αὐτοὺς is on rasure. The same is also found written above in the Cod. Cassel. For vulg. Πάμμιλον, Poppo edits, from several MSS., Πάμιλλον: while Bekker and Goeller retain the former; and very properly; for, in a point so uncertain, the number of MSS. should decide.

4. Ἀκράγαντα ᾤκισαν] This was at one time (after Syracuse) the largest and wealthiest city of Sicily, and, perhaps, of greater magnificence than Syracuse, if at least we may judge by the ruins, which are the noblest and most perfect of any on the whole island. Its ancient state is well described by Polyb. ix. 27, and Diodor. 13, 81, seqq.; its modern, by Swinburne, Bartels, Munter, Hoare, Duppa, and Kephalides. The situation of this city was well selected, for strength as well as commerce; the place having an abrupt rock like a wall nearly 1300 feet above the level of the sea, out of which, indeed, most part of the walls were cut.

πόλιν * αὐτὸς ξυμμίκτων ἀνθρώπων οἰκίσας, Μεσσήνην ἀπὸ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ τὸ ἀρχαῖον πατρίδος ἀντωνόμασε. V. Καὶ Ἰμέρα ἀπὸ Ζάγκλης ᾠκίσθη ὑπὸ Εὐκλείδου καὶ Σίμου καὶ Σάκωνος· καὶ Χαλκιδῆς μὲν οἱ πλεῖστοι ἦλθον ἐς τὴν ἀποικίαν, ξυνῴκισαν δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ ἐκ Συρακουσῶν φυγάδες, στάσει νικηθέντες, οἱ Μυλητίδαι καλούμενοι· καὶ φωνὴ μὲν μεταξὺ τῆς τε Χαλκιδέων καὶ Δωρίδος ἐκράθη, νόμιμα δὲ τὰ Χαλκιδικὰ ἐκράτησεν. 2. Ἄκραι δὲ καὶ Κασμέναι ὑπὸ Συρακοσίων ᾠκίσθησαν, Ἄκραι μὲν ἑβδομήκοντα ἔτεσι μετὰ Συρακούσας, Κασμέναι δὲ ἐγγὺς εἴκοσι μετὰ Ἄκρας. 3. καὶ Καμάρινα τὸ πρῶτον ὑπὸ Συρακοσίων ᾠκίσθη, ἔτεσιν ἐγγύτατα πέντε καὶ τριάκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν μετὰ Συρακουσῶν κτίσιν· οἰκισταὶ δὲ ἐγένοντο αὐτῆς Δάσκων καὶ Μενέκωλος. 4. ἀναστάτων δὲ Καμαριναίων γενομένων πολέμῳ ὑπὸ Συρακοσίων δι' ἀπόστασιν, χρόνῳ Ἱπποκράτης ὕστερον Γέλας τύραννος, λύτρα ἀνδρῶν Συρακοσίων αἰχμαλώτων λαβὼν τὴν γῆν τὴν Καμαριναίων, αὐτὸς οἰκιστὴς γενόμενος, κατῴκισε Καμάριναν. 5. καὶ αὖθις ὑπὸ Γέλωνος ἀνάστατος γενομένη, τὸ τρίτον κατῳκίσθη ὑπὸ * Γελῴων.

6. αὐτός] This I have, with Bekker, received, from the conjecture of Dobree, for vulg. αὐτοῖς, which, turn it whatever way one may, yields no tolerable sense; while αὐτὸς offers one as good as can be desired, namely, 'he himself colonized it,' meaning in person, and not by deputy. So further on, ch. 5, 4, we have, αὐτὸς οἰκιστὴς γενόμενος, κατῴκισε Καμάριναν. Of αὐτὸς ξυμμίκτων ἀνθρώπων οἰκίσας the sense is, 'having himself colonized the city out of a mixed race of persons.' Ἀντωνόμασε. Render, 'mutato nomine nominavit;' the prep. ἀντι in composition often denoting exchange, and sometimes, as here, simply change. Of the word ἀντονομάζω, which is exceedingly rare, I have noted no example elsewhere except in Dio Cass. 293, 95, Δυρράχιον ἀντωνομάσθη. See Strabo, vi. 1, 6, cited by Poppo.

Ch. V. 1. στάσει νικηθέντες] 'being overpowered by a faction,' meaning the contrary faction. Οἱ Μυλητίδαι. See Aristot. Pol. v. 3, 4, cited by Goeller, and a passage to which he refers of Plut. Præc. Pol. prop. fin. In the words, a little after, μεταξὺ τῆς τε—ἐκράθη, we have a blending of two different modes of expression, ἐγενήθη μεταξὺ and ἐκράθη ἐκ, of which the latter is found in a similar passage of Xen. Athen. ii. 8, φωνῇ καὶ διαίτῃ χρῶνται κεκραμένῃ ἐξ ἁπάντων τῶν Ἑλλήνων καὶ βαρβάρων, and not unfrequently in Plato, and has its parallel in the Latin mistus ex.

2. Ἄκραι] A place situated about 24 miles west from Syracuse, and a mile from Pelazzolo, and, as its name indicates, on a high ridge: a circumstance elegantly alluded to by Sil. Ital. in the words, 'e tumulis glacialibus Acræ.' Κασμέναι. This is by recent travellers ascertained to have been about 9 miles from the sea, and 25 miles west of Pachynum. Camarina was situated at the present village Camerana, near the town of Piscari.

4. λύτρα ἀνδρῶν] 'as a ransom for men.' This is by Goeller rightly referred to the rule in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 428, 1, of 'two substantives found together in one case, of which the one contains an explanation of the other, as if it were a predicate to it:' an idiom, this, not unknown in the Latin. So Ovid, Metam. ii. 695, 'nitidam cape prœmia vaccam;' where we recognise in prœmia an imitation of this Attic idiom in λύτρα, by which the plural is put for the singular. Much to the purpose is a passage of Lucian, t. i. p. 210, ὑπισχνοῦμαί σοι κριὸν τεθύσεσθαι λύτρα ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ. The term λυτρὸν (which is of the same form as φίλτρον, λέκτρον, κέντρον, φέρετρον, &c.) signifies simply 'something paid,' or what pays a demand; and hence denoted, by use, the price of redemption.

αὐτὸς οἰκιστὴς γενόμενος] 'being himself the colonizer,' i. e. not colonizing it by another person sent as the leader or conductor of the colony.

5. Γελῴων] For vulg. Γέλωνος (which, as Arnold shows, cannot be right) I have ventured, with Goeller, to receive into the text this masterly correction of Dodwell, approved by Poppo.

VI. Τοσαῦτα ἔθνη Ἑλλήνων καὶ βαρβάρων Σικελίαν ᾠκει, καὶ ἐπὶ τοσήνδε οὖσαν αὐτὴν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι στρατεύειν ὥρμηντο, ἐφιέμενοι μὲν, τῇ ἀληθεστάτῃ προφάσει, τῆς πάσης ἄρξειν, βοηθεῖν δὲ ἅμα εὐπρεπῶς βουλόμενοι τοῖς ἑαυτῶν ξυγγενέσι καὶ τοῖς προσγεγενημένοις ξυμμάχοις. 2. μάλιστα δ' αὐτοὺς ἐξώρμησαν Ἐγεσταίων τε πρέσβεις παρόντες καὶ προθυμότερον ἐπικαλούμενοι. ὅμοροι γὰρ ὄντες τοῖς Σελινουντίοις, ἐς πόλεμον καθέστασαν περί τε γαμικῶν τινων καὶ περὶ γῆς ἀμφισβητήτου· καὶ οἱ Σελινούντιοι, Συρακοσίους ἐπαγόμενοι ξυμμάχους, κατεῖργον αὐτοὺς τῷ πολέμῳ

Ch. VI. 1. εὐπρεπῶς] 'under a fair show,' namely, as opposed to τῇ ἀληθεστάτῃ προφάσει, the real and true cause of their giving, namely, their own aggrandisement. Compare supra iv. 61.

2. περὶ γαμικῶν τινων] On these words Poppo remarks thus: 'Γαμικὰ sunt res ad connubium spectantes, ideoque connubium ipsum.' But the sense thus assigned, 'certain marriages,' is surely most jejune, and any thing but significant. It should rather seem that the obscurity here existing has been occasioned by a not unfrequent cause of obscurity in our author,—namely, from the sense being imperfectly developed. I doubt not that there is here an ellipsis, and that of the word πραγμάτων, understood in the law sense controversiæ. Accordingly by γαμικῶν πραγμάτων will be denoted, 'controversiæ de connubiis agendis.' The Scholiast, in supplying the ellipsis by συναλλαγμάτων, shoots wide of the mark; though he successfully traces the reference, which is doubtless to the contracts and covenants which regulated the contraction of intermarriages between persons of two neighbouring states. Had, however, our author but subjoined the word συναλλαγμάτων, all would have been plain, since the term συναλλάγματα is sometimes used of contracts and covenants respecting marriages; (insomuch that Hesych. explains the word συνάλλαγμα by γαμικὸν συμβόλαιον. Comp. also Dionys. Hal. 152, 6. 1089, 13, συναλλαγαὶ γάμου, and Eurip. Andr. 1221, Ἑλένῳ ξυναλλαχθεῖσαν—γάμοις·) nay, it might also denote 'lites et controversiæ ex contractibus natæ,' as in Polyb. xxiii. 2, 11 & 17, διήκουε τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἀγορὰν γενομένων συναλλαγμάτων. We may suppose, then, that the two states Egesta and Selinus had disagreed as to the terms on which marriages might be entered into by persons of one state with those of the other; and that the Selinuntians wished to force the Egesteans to consent that, when intermarrying with Selinuntian women, and settling at Selinus, they should be put on a footing of less than equality as to civil rights; as, for instance, concerning the holding of property, political suffrage, &c. Thus in the words of a passage of the Old Testament, Gen. xxxiv. 10, κατοικεῖτε καὶ ἐμπορεύεσθε ἐπ' αὐτῆς καὶ ἐγκτᾶσθε ἐν αὐτῇ, is contained an implied permission to exercise any trade or occupation, and to hold any landed property on a footing of equality with the natives.

γῆς ἀμφισβητήτου] Meaning 'debateable border-land;' as in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 729. Pausan. iii. 9, 4. vii. 12, 2. In Diodorus it is added, ποταμοῦ τὴν χώραν τῶν διαφερομένων πόλεων ὁριζοντος, where the river alluded to is probably the Halycus. It might be supposed, indeed, that the circumstance of the two states being mutually bounded by a river, would have effectually prevented all disputes as to limits. Sometimes, however, it would happen, that the more powerful state demanded of the weaker the possession of the strip of land on the other side of the river; which was probably the case in the present instance. With reason, then, was this demand resisted by the Egestæans; since such a concession would be inconsistent with their independence, and such demands of a part, if not resisted, must gradually lead to the loss of the whole, when (to use the words supra iv. 92.) εἰς ὅρος οὐκ ἀντίλεκτος παγήσεται.

κατεῖργον αὐτούς] in angustias coqebant, premebant, 'drove them to great straits.' So Herodot. vi. 102, κατείργοντες πολλὸν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους. And we may compare the use in Latin of premere; e. g. Corn. Nep. Annib. 11, 'Pergamenæ naves cum adversarios premerent acrius.'

καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν· ὥστε, τὴν γενομένην ἐπὶ Λάχητος καὶ τοῦ πρότερου πολέμου Λεοντίνων οἱ Ἐγεσταῖοι ξυμμαχίαν ἀναμιμνήσκοντες τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ἐδέοντο σφίσι ναῦς πέμψαντας ἐπαμῦναι, λέγοντες ἄλλα τε πολλὰ, καὶ κεφάλαιον, ‘εἰ Συρακόσιοι Λεοντίνους τε ἀναστήσαντες ἀτιμώρητοι γενήσονται, καὶ τοὺς λοιποὺς ἔτι ξυμμάχους αὐτῶν διαφθείροντες, αὐτοὶ τὴν ἅπασαν δύναμιν τῆς Σικελίας σχήσουσι, κίνδυνον εἶναι μήποτε μεγάλῃ παρασκευῇ ψασι Πελοποννησίοις βοηθήσαντες, καὶ τὴν ἐκείνων δύναμιν ξυγκαθέλωσι· σῶφρον δ’ εἶναι μετὰ τῶν ὑπολοίπων ἔτι ξυμμάχων ἀντέχειν τοῖς Συρακοσίοις, ἄλλως τε καὶ χρήματα σφῶν παρεξόντων ἐς τὸν πόλεμον ἱκανά.’ 3. ὧν ἀκούοντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῶν τε Ἐγεσταίων πολλάκις λεγόντων καὶ τῶν ξυναγορευόντων αὐτοῖς, ἐψηφίσαντο πρέσβεις ‡ πέμψαι πρῶτον ἐς τὴν Ἔγεσταν, περί τε τῶν χρημάτων σκεψομένους, εἰ ὑπάρχει, ὥσπερ φασὶν, ἐν τῷ κοινῷ καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς, καὶ τὰ τοῦ πολέμου ἅμα πρὸς τοὺς Σελινουντίους, ἐν ὅτῳ ἐστὶν, εἰσομένους.

VII. Καὶ οἱ μὲν πρέσβεις τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀπεστάλησαν ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ τοῦ αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, πλὴν Κορινθίων, στρατεύσαντες ἐς τὴν Ἀργείαν, τῆς τε γῆς ἔτεμον οὐ πολλὴν, καὶ σῖτον ἀνεκομίσαντο τινὰ ζεύγη κομίσαντες, καὶ ἐς Ὀρνεὰς κατοικίσαντες τοὺς Ἀργείων φυγάδας, καὶ τῆς ἄλλης στρατιᾶς παρακαταλιπόντες αὐτοῖς ὀλίγους, καὶ σπεισάμενοί τινα χρόνον ὥστε μὴ ἀδικεῖν Ὀρνεάτας καὶ Ἀργείους τὴν ἀλλήλων, ἀπεχώρησαν τῷ στρατῷ ἐπ’ οἴκου. 2. ἐλθόντων δὲ Ἀθηναίων οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον ναυσὶ τριάκοντα καὶ ἑξακοσίοις ὁπλίταις, οἱ Ἀργεῖοι μετὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων πανστρατιᾷ ἐξελθόντων, τοὺς ἐν Ὀρνεαῖς μίαν ἡμέτὴν γενομένην ἐπὶ Λάχητος — ἀναμιμνήσκοντες τοὺς Ἀθηναίους] ‘having reminded the Athenians of the alliance formed by Laches during the former war of the Leontines.’ It is not expressly said that any alliance had heretofore existed between the Egestæans and the Athenians, but it is very probable that, as Poppo says, the Egestæans were confederates with, or friends to, the Leontines in the former war, and were therefore, in a certain degree, allies of the Athenians.

3. πέμψαι] I have, with Bekker in his second edition, received this reading of MS. h, instead of vulg. πέμψαντες, which, turn it whichever way we may, is utterly indefensible. Vainly has Dr. Arnold, retaining the common reading, endeavoured to salve, what it inevitably involves, a gross and palpable blunder in composition; though he truly remarks, that ‘it cannot be right to suppose ἐψηφίσαντο πέμψαντες the same thing with ἐψηφίσαντο πέμψαι.’ But that, I would say, should have shown him the necessity of receiving the reading πέμψαι, which at once removes all difficulty. For the existence of the above erroneous reading we may sufficiently account, by supposing the various reading πέμψαντες, a little before, brought in at a wrong place.

Ch. VII. 1. πολλὴν] On this idiom see note at i. 2. ii. 56, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 442, 2. Ζεύγη, ‘waggons.’ See note on iv. 128. In the invasions of Attica those waggons were not brought, from the difficulty of transporting them across the mountainous countries about the Isthmus of Corinth.

ραν ἐπολιόρκουν· ὑπὸ δὲ νύκτα, αὐλισαμένου τοῦ στρατεύματος ἄποθεν, ἐκδιδράσκουσιν οἱ ἐκ τῶν Ὀρνεῶν. καὶ τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ὡς ᾔσθοντο, κατασκάψαντες τὰς Ὀρνεὰς ἀνεχώρησαν, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ὕστερον ταῖς ναυσὶν ἐπ’ οἴκου.

3. Καὶ ἐς Μεθώνην τὴν ὅμορον Μακεδονίᾳ ἱππέας κατὰ θάλασσαν κομίσαντες Ἀθηναῖοι σφῶν τε αὐτῶν καὶ Μακεδόνων τοὺς παρὰ σφίσι φυγάδας ἐκακούργουν τὴν Περδίκκου. 4. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ, πέμψαντες παρὰ Χαλκιδέας τοὺς ἐπὶ Θράκης, ἄγοντας πρὸς Ἀθηναίους δεχημέρους σπονδὰς, ξυμπολεμεῖν ἐκέλευον Περδίκκᾳ· οἱ δ’ οὐκ ἤθελον. καὶ ὁ χειμὼν ἐτελεύτα καὶ ἕκτον καὶ δέκατον ἔτος ἐτελεύτα τῷ πολέμῳ τῷδε ὃν Θουκυδίδης ξυνέγραψεν.

VIII. Τοῦ δ’ ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους ἅμα ἦρι οἱ τῶν Ἀθηναίων πρέσβεις ἦκον ἐκ τῆς Σικελίας, καὶ οἱ Ἐγεσταῖοι μετ’ αὐτῶν, ἄγοντες ἑξήκοντα τάλαντα ἀσήμου ἀργυρίου, ὡς ἐς ἑξήκοντα ναῦς μηνὸς μισθὸν, ἃς ἔμελλον δεήσεσθαι πέμπειν. 2. καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐκκλησίαν ποιήσαντες, καὶ ἀκούσαντες τῶν τε Ἐγεσταίων καὶ τῶν σφετέρων πρέσβεων τά τε ἄλλα ἐπαγωγὰ καὶ οὐκ ἀληθῆ, καὶ περὶ τῶν χρημάτων, ὡς εἴη ἑτοῖμα ἔν τε τοῖς ἱεροῖς πολλὰ καὶ ἐν † τοῖς † κοινοῖς, ἐψηφίσαντο ναῦς ἑξήκοντα πέμπειν ἐς Σικελίαν καὶ στρατηγοὺς αὐτοκράτορας Ἀλκιβιάδην τε τὸν Κλεινίου καὶ Νικίαν τὸν Νικηράτου, καὶ Λάμαχον τὸν Ξενοφάνους, βοηθοὺς μὲν Ἐγεσταίοις πρὸς Σελινουντίους, ξυγκατοικίσαι δὲ καὶ Λεοντίνους, ἤν τι περιγίγνηται αὐτοῖς τοῦ πολέμου, καὶ τἆλλα τὰ ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ πρᾶξαι ὅπη ἂν γιγνώσκωσιν ἄριστα Ἀθηναίοις. 3. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο ἡμέρᾳ πέμπτῃ ἐκκλησία αὖθις ἐγίγνετο, καθότι χρὴ τὴν παρασκευὴν ταῖς ναυσὶ τάχιστα γίγνεσθαι, καὶ τοῖς στρατηγοῖς, εἴ του προσδέοιντο, ψηφισθῆναι ἐς τὸν ἔκπλουν. 4. καὶ ὁ Νικίας, ἀκούσιος μὲν ἠρημένος

2. οἱ ἐκ τῶν Ὀρνεῶν] i. e. οἱ ἐν Ὀρνεαῖς ἐκ τῶν Ὀρνεῶν. (Goeller.)

Ch. VIII. 1. ἀσήμου ἀργυρίου] See note on ii. 13.

2. ἐπαγωγὰ] ‘attractive, seductive;’ literally, as we sometimes say, taking. So supra v. 85, ἐπαγωγὰ καὶ ἀνέλεγκτα ἀκούσαντες. and iv. 108, ἐφολκὰ (Schol. ἐπαγωγὰ) καὶ οὐκ ὄντα (as here, ἀληθῆ). Herodot. iii. 53, ἐπ. ἔλεγε.

τοῖς κοινοῖς] So I edit, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, from almost all the MSS., instead of vulg. τῷ κοινῷ, which is retained by Haack, perhaps rightly, since, if it be not, like the above, supported by external authority, it has no little to recommend it on the score of internal evidence, (as existing in the circumstance that while we can easily account for the introduction of a plural immediately after a preceding plural, we can by no means account for the reverse,) and is, moreover, borne out by a passage closely imitated from the present, of Pausan. x. 19, 5, καὶ ὡς χρήματα πολλὰ μὲν ἐν τῷ κοινῷ, πλείονα δὲ ἐν ἱεροῖς.

στρατηγοὺς αὐτοκράτορας] Of these generals invested with full powers to act at their own discretion, without any other authority from home, we read supra v. 45 & 46. Aristoph. Av. 1495. Pausan. iv. p. 241: and a dissertation on the subject may be seen in Spanheim on Julian, p. 76.

ἤν τι περιγίγνηται αὐτοῖς τοῦ πολέμου] This may best be regarded as a condensed form of expression for what, more fully developed, would stand thus: ‘if any portion of leisure-time should remain out of the war,’ viz. after the concerns of the war had been sufficiently attended to.

4. ἀκούσιος] This I have edited, with Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, from ἄρχειν, νομίζων δὲ τὴν πόλιν οὐκ ὀρθῶς βεβουλεῦσθαι, ἀλλὰ προφάσει βραχείᾳ καὶ εὐπρεπεῖ τῆς Σικελίας ἀπάσης, μεγάλου ἔργου, ἐφίεσθαι, παρελθὼν ἀποτρέψαι ἐβούλετο, καὶ παρῄνει τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τοιάδε.

IX. "Ἡ μὲν ἐκκλησία περὶ παρασκευῆς τῆς ἡμετέρας ἥδε ξυνελέγη, καθότι χρὴ ἐς Σικελίαν ἐκπλεῖν· ἐμοὶ μέντοι δοκεῖ καὶ περὶ αὐτοῦ τούτου ἔτι χρῆναι σκέψασθαι, εἰ ἄμεινόν ἐστιν ἐκπέμπειν τὰς ναῦς, καὶ μὴ οὕτω βραχείᾳ βουλῇ περὶ μεγάλων πραγμάτων, ἀνδράσιν ἀλλοφύλοις πειθομένους, πόλεμον οὐ προσήκοντα ἄρασθαι. 2. καίτοι ἔγωγε καὶ τιμῶμαι ἐκ τοῦ τοιούτου, καὶ ἧσσον ἑτέρων περὶ τῷ ἐμαυτοῦ σώματι ὀρρωδῶ, (νομίζων ὁμοίως ἀγαθὸν πολίτην εἶναι, ὃς ἂν καὶ τοῦ σώματός τι καὶ τῆς οὐσίας προνοῆται· μάλιστα many of the best MSS., for vulg. ἀκούσας, which is evidently a mere error, and, notwithstanding what has been urged in its defence by Abresch, quite indefensible. Supposing, indeed, what were little probable—that Nicias was not himself present at the assembly, at which he was elected commander-in-chief, and that he had merely heard of his election from others, in that case, as Poppo remarks, we should have had, not ᾑρημένος, but ᾑρῆσθαι. The reading ἀκούσιος is, moreover, required by the context, and confirmed by the words at ch. 34, ἄκοντος ἡγουμένου. Nor is there (as Abresch imagines) any thing to forbid this in the μὲν—δὲ, since, as Bauer has well pointed out, the particles in question here, as often elsewhere, serve to denote, not diversity or opposition, but merely 'partitionem et æmulationem conjunctorum;' the sense here intended being, 'et invitus creatus, et vero consilium improbans belli suscepti;' or, in other words, 'quum invitus lectus, tum improbans,' &c.; meaning that Nicias as little liked the honour of the command, as he approved of the expedition; which he was prepared to dissuade both on private and public grounds. It may, I grant, be urged, that had Nicias been present, he would then in limine have dissuaded the expedition. But we may suppose that the decision of the assembly was so sudden and unexpected, that he was then unprepared, and perhaps not quite disposed, to oppose a decree which had done him so much honour. Moreover, it would have been presumptuous in him to ask the sovereign people to immediately reverse what they had just positively decreed.

προφάσει βραχείᾳ καὶ εὐπρεπεῖ] 'on a slight and merely specious or plausible pretence, as opposed to any solid ground.' So Dionys. Hal. 449, εὐπρεπὴς πρόφασις. Hdian. iv. 6, 5, ἐπὶ βραχυτάταις αἰτίαις.

Ch. IX. 1. περὶ παρασκευῆς τῆς ἡμετέρας] i. e. concerning the providing of whatever the generals might think necessary for the expedition. By the words following, καθότι χρὴ ἐς Σικελίαν ἐκπλεῖν, is denoted the mode of sending forth the expedition, chiefly with reference to the naval force for the conveyance of the army. At καὶ μὴ repeat χρῆναι.

2. καίτοι ἔγωγε—τοιούτου] 'and yet I for my part am honoured by a thing of this sort.' This is meant to strengthen the dissuasion that follows, as that urged quite in opposition to his own interest, since no one could have more honour to gain by the expedition than himself.

καὶ ἧσσον ἑτέρων — ὀρρωδῶ] 'Nicias dicit; Quanquam alii, qui hanc expeditionem dissuadeant, ignaviæ fortasse insimulentur, (sicut infra, ch. 13, seniores vereri affirmat, ne, nisi bellum suffragio suo comprobarint, μαλακοὶ esse videantur,) me quidem, qui plurima stipendia fecerim, et plurimis prœliis interfuerim, propterea quod vitæ meæ timeam, hanc expeditionem decerni nolle, nemo ausit dicere.' (Poppo.)

νομίζων ὁμοίως — προνοῆται] These words are, as Poppo points out, thrown in to show that he does not by any means wish to reprehend the elderly persons accused of timidity by the faction of Alcibiades. The sense intended may be thus expressed: 'though I regard him as an equally good citizen who does take some provident thought both for his person and his property,' i. e. equally good as he who is unsparing of both: the reason for which is then subjoined, namely, that 'such an one would most wish that the affairs of the state also should go right, even for his own sake.' What Dr. Arnold here observes, γὰρ ἂν ὁ τοιοῦτος καὶ τὰ τῆς πόλεως δι' ἑαυτὸν βούλοιτο ὀρθοῦσθαι·) ὅμως δὲ οὔτε ἐν τῷ πρότερον χρόνῳ διὰ τὸ προτιμᾶσθαι εἶπον παρὰ γνώμην, οὔτε νῦν, ἀλλὰ ᾗ ἂν γιγνώσκω βέλτιστα, ἐρῶ. 3. καὶ πρὸς μὲν τοὺς τρόπους τοὺς ὑμετέρους ἀσθενὴς ἂν μου ὁ λόγος εἴη, εἰ τά τε ὑπάρχοντα σώζειν παραινοίην, καὶ μὴ τοῖς ἑτοίμοις περὶ τῶν ἀφανῶν καὶ μελλόντων κινδυνεύειν· ὡς δὲ οὔτε ἐν καιρῷ σπεύδετε, οὔτε ῥᾴδιά ἐστι κατασχεῖν ἐφ' ἃ ὥρμησθε, ταῦτα διδάξω. X. Φημὶ γὰρ ὑμᾶς πολεμίους πολλοὺς ἐνθάδε ὑπολιπόντας, καὶ ἑτέρους ἐπιθυμεῖν ἐκεῖσε πλεύσαντας δεῦρο ἐπαγαγέσθαι. 2. καὶ οἴεσθε ἴσως τὰς γενομένας ὑμῖν σπονδὰς ἔχειν τι βέβαιον· αἳ, ἡσυχαζόντων μὲν ὑμῶν, ὀνόματι σπονδαὶ ἔσονται· (οὕτω γὰρ ἐνθένδε τε ἄνδρες ἔπραξαν ‡ αὐτὰ, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἐναντίων,) σφαλέντων that 'men who are careless of their own lives and properties, will hardly care for those of their neighbours,' however it may be true, is not a truth to the present point. What Nicias means to say is, that 'he who does take this prudent forethought is an equally good citizen, i. e. does much good to the state; for in taking care of his life and fortune he benefits the state, and he will take care of the state even for his own sake, as having a great stake in it.' That Dio Cass. so understood the words, is plain from a passage (evidently written with a view to the present) at p. 432, 98, νομίζω γὰρ ἀνδρὸς ἀγαθοῦ ὁμοίως ἔργον εἶναι τοῖς τε τῆς πατρίδος συμφέρουσι τηρεῖν ἑαυτὸν, φυλαττόμενον μὴ μάτην ἀπόληται. Compare also Soph. Œd. Col. 309, τίς γὰρ ἐσθλὸς οὐχ αὑτῷ φίλος; where the Scholiast remarks, ὁ ἀγαθὸς αὑτῷ τε καὶ φίλοις ἐστὶ χρήσιμος. He might have said, that by being good to himself, he becomes serviceable to his friends.

3. τρόπους] 'dispositions,' meaning predominant inclinations, which were to gain at the expense of others. See supra i. 70. In ἀσθενὴς ἂν — εἴη (of which the full sense is, 'would be too weak to be effectual') we have an idiomatical form of expression also found in a passage of the New Testament, Rom. viii. 3, ἠσθένει διὰ τῆς σαρκός. In τοῖς ἑτοίμοις — κινδυνεύειν, Bauer remarks, the term ἕτοιμα is put in opposition to ἀφανῶν and μελλόντων to denote the present, what is not to be hoped for, or laid hold of, but what has been already attained: and so Poppo remarks, that in Tacit. Ann. iv. 3, we have mutually opposed præsentia and incerta (comp. also supra i. 70. iv. 61, and notes); and he further observes, that the Greek phrase κινδυνεύειν τινὶ answers to the Latin periclitari re, as standing for aliquid in periculum adducere. Of the words following, οὔτε ἐν καιρῷ—ὥρμησθε, the sense is, 'that you are bustling at a wrong time, and that you are eager after that which is difficult of attainment.'

Ch. X. In the present chapter the speaker proceeds to prove, what he had just asserted, that the thing is ill-timed; and in ch. 11 he evinces it to be impracticable. Ill-timed he shows it to be, from the insecurity of their present position, which is such that while planning conquests abroad, they would be leaving enemies behind them at home.

2. ἔχειν τι βέβαιον] 'afford some security.'

οὕτω γὰρ — ἐναντίων] Render, 'for such, some persons, both of this country and of our adversaries, have contrived them [to be],' i. e. contrived to make them. For here (as the Schol. and Duker have shown) the term πράσσειν bears the sense of our to contrive or manage, as used of things brought about by craft and fraud. On ἐνθένδε see note on vi. 38, 1.

For vulg. αὐτὰς, which is opposed at once by external authority and internal evidence, I have, with Haack, Poppo, Elmsley, and Goeller, edited, from most of the best MSS., αὐτά. For, not to mention the well-known use of the neuter plural pronoun after substantives in the singular, (as treated on by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 439.) it may be observed, that the neuter is employed in the present instance because, as Duker and Arnold have pointed out, 'it has reference not so much to the treaty as to what was done about the treaty;' the αὐτὰ seeming, as Dr. Arnold says, to refer to τὰ περὶ τὰς σπονδὰς, which our author tacitly substituted in his mind for the simple subst. τὰς σπονδάς.

Σφαλέντων stands, by a certain negli-δέ που ἀξιόχρεῳ δυνάμει, ταχεῖαν τὴν ἐπιχείρησιν ἡμῖν οἱ ἐχθροὶ ποιήσονται· οἷς πρῶτον μὲν διὰ ξυμφορῶν ἡ ξύμβασις, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ αἰσχίονος ἢ ἡμῖν, κατ' ἀνάγκην ἐγένετο, ἔπειτα, ἐν αὐτῇ ταύτῃ πολλὰ τὰ ἀμφισβητούμενα ἔχομεν. 3. εἰσὶ δ' οἳ οὐδὲ ταύτην πω τὴν ὁμολογίαν ἐδέξαντο, καὶ οὐχ οἱ ἀσθενέστατοι· ἀλλ' οἱ μὲν ἀντικρυς πολεμοῦσιν, οἱ δὲ καὶ, διὰ τὸ Λακεδαιμονίους ἔτι ἡσυχάζειν, δεχημέροις σπονδαῖς καὶ αὐτοὶ κατέχονται. 4. τάχα δ' ἂν ἴσως, εἰ δίχα ἡμῶν τὴν δύναμιν λάβοιεν, ὅπερ νῦν σπεύδομεν, καὶ πάνυ ἂν ξυνεπίθοιντο μετὰ Σικελιωτῶν, οὓς πρὸ πολλῶν ἂν ἐτιμήσαντο ξυμμάχους γενέσθαι ἐν τῷ πρὶν χρόνῳ. 5. ὥστε χρὴ σκοπεῖν τινὰ αὐτά, καὶ μὴ μετεώρῳ τε πόλει ἀξιοῦν κινδυνεύειν, gence of expression (on which see Poppo, Prol. i. 1, p. 120.) for σφαλεῖσι. Of ἐκ τοῦ αἰσχίονος the sense is, 'on a worse footing, on worse, less honourable, terms for them than for us:' or we may, with Poppo, regard this as a phrase for an adverb, like ἐκ τοῦ ἐμφανοῦς, ἐξ ἀέλπτου, ἐξ ἀπροσδοκήτου, ἐκ τοῦ εὐπρεποῦς: though more, I think, to the present purpose is it to compare ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου at v. 101, ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης at iii. 40, and ἐξ ἴσου at ii. 89.

3. οὐχ οἱ ἀσθενέστατοι] 'and not the least powerful;' an elegant meiosis to denote some of the strongest, as the Bœotians: whence, I would observe, may be satisfactorily established the emendation of Reiske on Dionys. Hal. vi. p. 52, καὶ, μὰ Δί', οὐχ οἱ φαυλότατοι, instead of vulg. καὶ, μὰ Δί', οὐχὶ φαυλότατα: and again, at x. 3, of the same writer, καὶ οὐχ οἱ φαυλότατοι, for vulg. καὶ οὐχὶ φαυλότατοι.

4. εἰ δίχα (scil. γενομένην) λάβοιεν] 'if they should find our forces divided,' i. e. one part in Sicily, and the other in Greece. The word οὖσαν, or γενομένην, left to be understood at δίχα, is not unfrequently in the best writers expressed. With respect to the etymology of the word δίχα, I apprehend it to have been originally the accusative of the obsolete noun δίξ, 'a parting,' from the verb δίζω, primarily signifying to cleave; and hence ἄνδιχα stands for ἀνὰ δίχα, 'at parting or separation,' viz. into two parts: and accordingly it is not unfrequently used with verbs of separating. Thus we may compare with it our adverb apart, likewise formed from the prep. a or at and part (standing for parting).

ὅπερ νῦν σπεύδομεν] 'which we are now driving at, pursuing:' an example, this, of a verb intransitive used in a transitive sense; an idiom almost confined to the poets, (as Hom. Il. v. 236.) though sometimes found in the prose writers, as here and at vi. 39, and Herodot. i. 206. Ξυνεπιθοῖντο. Bekker and Goeller edit ξυνεπιθεῖντο: but that form is, if I mistake not, almost confined to the middle and later Attic, and the MSS. here presenting it are only a few of the least valuable.

5. χρὴ σκοπεῖν τινὰ] Most commentators (as Haack, Levêque, Bredow, and Goeller) suppose by τινὰ to be meant Alcibiades. But it is possible that the word is here used answerably to the French on and our one, employed, for delicacy sake, instead of the plainer ἡμᾶς.

καὶ μὴ μετεώρῳ πόλει ἀξιοῦν κινδυνεύειν] 'and not to resolve on running hazards with the state (i. e. putting it to hazard) while in so precarious a condition.' Of the phrase κινδυνεύειν τῇ πόλει examples occur at ii. 65, 7. vi. 47. Herodot. ii. 120: and at Herodot. vii. 209, we have κινδυνεύειν τῇ ψυχῇ. The dative here may, according to Duk., stand for κατὰ and an accus.; or rather we may suppose ἐπὶ to be understood, which is expressed at vi. 83. Perhaps, however, the dative may itself bear the sense at or over: in which view we may compare the Latin 'periclitari vitâ, causâ,' &c.; and also 'de summâ imperii,' Sueton. Aug. ch. 21. There is probably a faint allusion to casting lots or dice upon or over any thing, to know whose it shall be. Comp. Ps. xxi. 18, Sept. διεμερίσαντο τὰ ἱμάτιά μου ἑαυτοῖς, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν ἱματισμόν μου ἔβαλον κλῆρον, where, for τὸν ἱματισμὸν, read τῷ ἱματισμῷ. In the term μετεώρῳ, fluctuating, precarious, there seems to be a metaphor taken from a ship imperilled by making her way through a ridgy sea; such as we recognise in Soph. Œd. T. 22, πόλις—ἤδη σαλεύει. Pseudo-Eurip. Rhes. 246, ὅταν ἡ δυσάλιος ἐν πελάγει καὶ σαλεύῃ πόλις *καὶ ἀρχῆς ἄλλης ὀρέγεσθαι, πρὶν ἣν ἔχομεν βεβαιωσώμεθα, εἰ Χαλκιδῆς γε οἱ ἐπὶ Θράκης, ἔτη τοσαῦτα ἀφεστῶτες ἀφ' ἡμῶν, ἔτι ἀχείρωτοί εἰσι, καὶ ἄλλοι τινὲς κατὰ τὰς ἠπείρους ἐνδοιαστῶς ἀκροῶνται. ἡμεῖς δὲ Ἐγεσταίοις, δὴ οὖσι ξυμμάχοις, ὡς ἀδικουμένοις, ὑξέως βοηθοῦμεν· ὑφ' ὧν δ' αὐτοὶ, πάλαι ἀφεστώτων, ἀδικούμεθα, ἔτι μέλλομεν ἀμύνεσθαι. XI. Καίτοι τοὺς μὲν, κατεργασάμενοι, κἂν κατάσχοιμεν· τῶν δ', εἰ καὶ κρατήσαιμεν, διὰ πολλοῦ γε καὶ πολλῶν ὄντων, χαλεπῶς ἂν ἄρχειν δυναίμεθα. ἀνόητον δ' ἐπὶ τοιούτους ἰέναι, ὧν κρατήσας τε μὴ κατασχήσει τις, καὶ, μὴ κατορθώσας, μὴ ἐν τῷ ὁμοίῳ καὶ πρὶν ἐπιχειρῆσαι ἔσται.

'2. Σικελιῶται δ' ἄν μοι δοκοῦσιν,—ὥς γε νῦν ἔχουσι,—καὶ ἔτι ἂν ἧσσον δεινοὶ ἡμῖν γενέσθαι, εἰ ἄρξειαν αὐτῶν Συρακόσιοι· ὅπερ οἱ

(where, for δυσάλιος, read δυσάνιος). Æschyl. Theb. 796, πόλις — κλυδωνίου Πολλαῖσι πληγαῖς ἄντλον οὐκ ἐδέξατο. On the comparison of the state to a ship, compare Hor. Carm. i. 14, 1: and in proof of μετέωρος being applied to denote a vessel tossed about at sea, see Plut. Lucull. ap. Steph. Thes. 1636, and Arrian, E. A. ii. 24, 1. I know of no other instance of the term as applied to a state, except in Plutarch, Vit. Cat., where it is used of Greece, thus: καὶ σάλον εὐθὺς ἡ Ἑλλὰς εἶχε (for ἐσάλευε) καὶ μετέωρος ἦν: and so in Jos. Bell. iv. 9, 1, μετέωροι περὶ τῶν ὅλων ὄντες, ὡς ἂν σαλευομένης τῆς Ῥωμαίων ἡγεμονίας.

In the phrase κατὰ τὰς ἠπείρους, it is best to explain ἠπείρους (as does Arnold) to denote the several coasts of the mainland of Europe and Asia Minor, as opposed to the islands which lay off them, and whose obedience could more be depended on. No other example, indeed, have I noted of the above idiom (by which ἤπειροι may be said to answer to the Spanish Costa, as applied to various parts of the mainland of America); but we may account for its existence, by regarding this as an idiom originating with the inhabitants of the various petty islands which lie scattered over the Ægean sea; to such of which as lay off the mainland, any such Costa would appear a sort of continent.

With the phrase ἐνδοιαστῶς ἀκροῶνται, 'yield a precarious obedience,' compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 2143, 9, τοὺς ἐνδ. ἀκροωμένους τῆς πόλεως. For αὐτῶν I have now adopted, with Bekker, the conjecture of Reiske, (approved by Poppo,) αὐτοί; for while the former is little better than useless, the latter is absolutely required to point the antithesis.

CH. XI. 1. I entirely agree with Poppo in thinking that the first paragraph of this chapter (καίτοι—ἐπιχειρῆσαι ἔσται) ought to have been apportioned to the last, considering that it properly belongs thereto; the purpose of the passage being to show, by contrast, the absurdity of the course in question,—namely, the being in such headlong haste to subdue those whom they could scarce govern, and so slow to reduce those whom they could hold in subjection. Now the fact itself is first stated in the words καίτοι — δυναίμεθα, and then the absurdity is set forth in ἀνόητον—ἔσται. Of course the folly in question would attach to the former,—namely, to go at all, or at any time, against such persons whom, after having conquered, they could not hold; and after not succeeding, they should not be in the same condition as before.

With the phrase μὴ ἐν τῷ ὁμοίῳ, non in pari conditione esse, (which occurs again at ch. 21,) Poppo compares the parallel one ἐν τῷ ἴσῳ εἶναι, and the Latin in dubio, or in incerto, esse. It is intimated, then, that the Athenians would not be in the same condition as before, as regarded the Siceliots, because they would have them as enemies instead of neutrals—enemies at once provoked by unjust, and encouraged by unsuccessful, attack, so as to become assailants; which indeed was at last the case.

2. Σικελιῶται δ' ἄν — Συρακόσιοι] The general sense seems to be, as Dr. Arnold expresses it, 'Looking at the actual state of Sicily, I should say that the island would be even less formidable to us if the Syracusans were to conquer it all.' He rightly points out, that the first ἄν belongs properly to ἧσσον δεινοὶ γενέσθαι: but the parenthesis ὥς γε νῦν ἔχουσι having intervened, the particle is again repeated.

Ἐγεσταῖοι μάλιστα ἡμᾶς ἐκφοβοῦσι. 3. νῦν μὲν γὰρ κἂν ἔλθοιεν ἴσως Λακεδαιμονίων ἕκαστοι χάριτι, ἐκείνως δ' οὐκ εἰκὸς ἀρχὴν ἐπὶ ἀρχὴν στρατεῦσαι· ᾧ γὰρ ἂν τρόπῳ τὴν ἡμετέραν μετὰ Πελοποννησίων ἀφέλωνται, εἰκὸς ὑπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τὴν σφετέραν διὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ καθαιρεθῆναι. 4. ἡμᾶς δ' ἂν οἱ ἐκεῖ Ἕλληνες μάλιστα μὲν ἐκπεπληγμένοι εἶεν, εἰ μὴ ἀφικοίμεθα, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ, εἰ, δείξαντες τὴν δύναμιν, δι' ὀλίγου ἀπέλθοιμεν· εἰ δὲ σφαλείημέν τι, τάχιστ' ἂν ὑπεριδόντες μετὰ τῶν ἐνθάδε ἐπίθειντο· τὰ γὰρ διὰ πλείστου πάντες ἴσμεν θαυμαζόμενα, καὶ τὰ πεῖραν ἥκιστα τῆς δόξης δόντα. 5. ὅπερ νῦν ὑμεῖς, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐς Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους πεπόνθατε, διὰ τὸ παρὰ γνώμην αὐτῶν πρὸς ἃ ἐφοβεῖσθε τὸ πρῶτον περιγεγενῆσθαι, καταφρονήσαντες ἤδη καὶ Σικελίας ἐφίεσθε. 6. χρὴ δὲ μὴ πρὸς τὰς τύχας τῶν ἐναντίων ἐπαίρεσθαι, ἀλλὰ, τὰς διανοίας κρατήσαντας, θαρσεῖν· μηδὲ Λακεδαιμονίους ἄλλο τι ἡγήσασθαι ἢ

3. νῦν μὲν γὰρ—χάριτι] These words serve to explain the foregoing ὥς γε νῦν ἔχουσι, the sense being, 'For, as things now are, they might perhaps, in order to oblige the Lacedæmonians, even come [hither against us] singly and individually.' The word ἕκαστοι, singuli, is highly significant, standing in opposition to ἀρχὴν in the next clause, which may be rendered, 'but, in that case, it is not likely that the Siceliots should come against us, empire against empire.' They would not so act, because, as Poppo observes, 'prævideant Lacedæmonios, quemadmodum Athenienses imperare nolint, ita his devictis etiam in Syracusanos imperio Siciliæ potitos impetum facturos, ut his quoque principatu dejectis Græcas illius insulæ civitates in libertatem scilicet vindicent.' The next words plainly show such to have been the meaning intended. At τὴν ἡμετέραν μετὰ Πελοποννησίων ἀφέλωνται there is an ellipsis of ἡμᾶς, which, however, is easily understood, both here and at viii. 76, τὸ Ἀθηναίων κράτος ἀφελέσθαι. The pronoun here left understood, is expressed in Xen. Anab. i. 3, 4.

4. δι' ὀλίγου] This is, as the Scholiast explains, for ταχέως. Of the words, further on, τὰ γὰρ διὰ πλείστου—δόντα, the sense is, 'for things at the greatest distance, and which give least opportunity for the opinion formed of them to be put to the proof, are, we know, held in admiration.' Similarly it is said in Tacit. Ann. i. 47, (cited by Didot,) 'major è longinquo reverentia:' and to the same purpose is the well-known sentiment of the same writer, 'omne ignotum pro magnifico est.'

5. ὅπερ νῦν ὑμεῖς, &c.] The sense of this passage (which is meant to develop the briefly intimated import of the foregoing) is well explained by Goeller to be, 'Quæ a nobis longissime distant, omnes admiramur, quamdiu opinionis, quam homines de illorum virtute conceperunt, nullum specimen dederunt; id quod etiam in Syracusanis eveniet, et vero jam in vobis evenit. Nam initio quidem Spartanos timuistis, desperantes victoriam; posthac præter opinionem vestram victores facti elati victoria ampliora concupiscere cœpisse vos jam videmus. Itidem Syracusani nunc vos expavescunt; posthac si opum vestrarum specimen dederitis, victique fueritis, ut ab expeditione tam temeraria expectari debet, non satis habentes, vos ab insula sua propulsasse, ultro etiam in vestris terris, armis suis cum Peloponnesiorum junctis, aggredientur.' Παρὰ γνώμην, præter opinionem, 'beyond our expectation.' In the prep. πρὸς there is, as Goeller remarks, contained a notion of comparison, i. e. 'in respect to, in comparison with what you first feared.' Render, 'because having, contrary to your expectation [as to what you first feared], attained the mastery, ye now hold them cheap.'

6. χρὴ δὲ μὴ—θαρσεῖν] 'Hoc opinor, dicit: decet confidere suorum animorum potentes, i. e. neque nimis fortuna secunda elatos, neque animis per adversam nimium demissis. Sic verba conveniunt cum loco, ii. 87, οὐδὲ δίκαιον—ὀρθῶς εἶναι. Sic autem animum firmare in ludis fortunæ non contingit nisi in omnem casum bene præparato, et sufficienti apparatu suo, non hostium vel fortuna adversa vel erroribus, vel præsenti infirmitate virium confidenti-διὰ τὸ αἰσχρὸν σκοπεῖν, ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἔτι καὶ νῦν, ἢν δύνωνται, σφήλαντες ἡμᾶς, τὸ σφέτερον ἀπρεπὲς εὖ θήσονται, ὅσῳ καὶ περὶ πλείστου καὶ διὰ πλείστου δόξαν ἀρετῆς μελετῶσιν. 7. ὥστε οὐ περὶ τῶν ἐν Σικελίᾳ Ἐγεσταίων ἡμῖν, ἀνδρῶν βαρβάρων, ὁ ἀγὼν, εἰ σωφρονοῦμεν· ἀλλ', ὅπως πόλιν δι' ὀλιγαρχίας ἐπιβουλεύουσαν, ὀξέως φυλαξόμεθα. XII. Καὶ μεμνῆσθαι χρὴ ἡμᾶς ὅτι νεωστὶ ἀπὸ νόσου μεγάλης καὶ πολέμου βραχύ τι λελωφήκαμεν, ὥστε καὶ χρήμασι καὶ τοῖς σώμασιν ηὐξῆσθαι· καὶ ταῦτα ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν δίκαιον ἐνθάδε † εἶναι bus, ut ipse auctor suadet, i. 84.' (Goell.) I have myself always thought that the words should be referred to the Athenians. And supposing the view, as above propounded, to be the true one, the sentiment is nearly the same as that of the passage of Hor. Od. ii. 10, concluding with 'Rebus angustis animosus atque Fortis appare; sapienter idem Contrahes vento nimium secundo Turgida vela.' Thus θαρσεῖν is opposed to ἐπαίρεσθαι; and the admonition is, 'not to indulge in an insolent confidence, but to cultivate that courage which consists in holding in check too aspiring thoughts.' But by διανοίας may be denoted dispositions, or affections and passions of mind, as in the New Testament, Eph. ii. 3, and Luke i. 51. And we may compare with the present a not dissimilar kind of expression in 2 Cor. x. 5, λογισμοὺς καθαιροῦντες, καὶ πᾶν ὕψωμα, &c. The present passage may have been had in mind by Jos. Ant. vi. 6, 3, who similarly writes, συμβαίνει μὴ κρατεῖν τοῦ λογισμοῦ τοὺς οὕτω εὐτυχήσαντας.

τὸ σφέτερον ἀπρεπὲς εὖ θήσονται] 'they may rightly adjust [so as to alleviate] their distress.' So Pittacus, in the Anthologia Græca, Jacobs, i. 81, has γενόμενα εὖ θέσθαι. There seems to be here a metaphor taken from adjusting on the back an inconvenient burden: and so supra i. 82, 5, we have τὸν πόλεμον οὐ ῥᾳδίως θέσθαι. Here, however, as Poppo observes, θέσθαι bears not the sense of the Latin deponere, but rather componere. The ὅσῳ signifies, as at vi. 92, and v. 108, 'inasmuch as.' Finally, in ὅσῳ καὶ περὶ—μελετῶσιν, there is a blending of two forms of expression, περὶ πλείστου ποιεῖσθαι and διὰ πλείστου μελετῶσι, 'they highly prize and perpetually cultivate.' With the present compare similar forms of expression in three passages of the New Testament, Rom. xi. 36, ἐξ αὐτοῦ καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα. Ephes. iv. 6, ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων καὶ διὰ πάντων καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν ἡμῖν. Col. i. 16.

7. δι' ὀλιγαρχίας ἐπιβουλεύουσαν] Not without reason does Poppo object to the sense assigned to δι' ὀλιγαρχίας by Goeller in his first edition, and myself in my Translation and small edition, 'by means of an oligarchical faction.' And as to the interpretation of some, who explain the expression to mean eo, quod paucorum potestate regitur, and of Dr. Arnold, who renders it, 'in the way of oligarchy;' the former is scarcely deserving of notice; and the latter, however specious, will not endure examination; for where, I ask, does διὰ ever bear the sense 'in the way of?' and what is the sense 'in the way of oligarchy,' but one, after all, bordering on nonsense? The expression may, I think, be best explained to mean, 'by means of oligarchy,'—namely, the political principle which proceeds on governing by the few; a sense this in every way suitable; for what was so likely a course for an oligarchical state to adopt in plotting the ruin of a democratical one, as to attempt by the promulgation of the principles of oligarchy, the one directly opposed to that which already subsisted? So, in our own times, we know, revolutionary France plotted against and, in most cases, effected the ruin of the aristocratical governments of Europe, by promulgating the principles of democracy. Now the Lacedæmonians might well plot the ruin of the Athenian state by means of oligarchy, since there was constantly an oligarchical party ready to further such a project.

The word ὀξέως, just after, is to be construed, not with ἐπιβουλεύουσαν, but with φυλαξόμεθα, the sense being, sharply, keenly.

CH. XII. 1. In this section it is represented to them that their lately recruited strength would best be reserved for their own welfare, and not that of a band of exiles whose assertions were as little to be credited, as their gratitude, if successful, to be relied on, and their ruin, if unsuccessful, to be avoided.

λελωφήκαμεν] 'we have had some breathing-time.' So Soph. Aj. 61, ἐπειδὴ τοῦδ' ἐλώφησεν πόνου. In the words, a little after, δίκαιον ἐνθάδε εἶναι, the best mode of meeting a certain difficulty, which ἀναλοῦν, καὶ μὴ ὑπὲρ ἀνδρῶν φυγάδων τῶνδε ἐπικουρίας δεομένων, οἷς τό τε ψεύσασθαι καλῶς χρήσιμον, καὶ τῷ τοῦ πέλας κινδύνῳ, αὐτῶν λόγους μόνον παρασχομένους, ἢ κατορθώσαντας, χάριν μὴ ἀξίαν εἰδέναι, ἢ πταίσαντάς που, τοὺς φίλους * ξυναπολέσαι. 2. εἴ τέ τις, ἄρχειν ἄσμενος αἱρεθείς, παραινεῖ ὑμῖν ἐκπλεῖν, τὸ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον σκοπῶν, (ἄλλως τε καὶ νεώτερος ἔτι ὢν ἐς τὸ ἄρχειν,) ὅπως θαυμασθῇ μὲν ἀπὸ τῆς ἱπποτροφίας, διὰ δὲ πολυτέλειαν καὶ ὠφεληθῇ τι ἐκ τῆς ἀρχῆς· μηδὲ τούτῳ ἐμπαράσχητε τῷ τῆς πόλεως mainly rests on the εἶναι, is, with Reiz, Herm., and Arnold, to suppose εἶναι here, as often, to stand for ἐξεῖναι, by which the sense will be, as Poppo expresses it, 'et æquum est, ut non prohibeamur pro patriâ postea hic (in Græcis) pecunias et vitas impendere,' 'that we should be permitted to spend,' &c. Of εἶναι thus used for ἐξεῖναι examples are found also at iv. 24. v. 40. vii. 11; and εἶναι used for ἐνεῖναι occurs in Pseudo-Demosth. p. 1389, 9, (cited by Herm.) ὁμοίως μέντοι διαλεχθῆναι τοῖς πρότερόν ποτε εἰρηκόσιν ἐνθάδ' εἶναί μοι δοκεῖ. So great, however, is the harshness in the Greek, that still remains after every method of reconciling the difficulty, that I cannot but think the εἶναι is corrupt, and that the true reading is,—what I long ago proposed as a probable conjecture in my Translation,—οἶμαι, 'I wot;' according to which we have a sense quite suitable, and a form of expression purely Attic.

ἐπικουρίας δεομένων] 'imploring aid.' In the words following, οἷς τό τε ψεύσασθαι καλῶς χρήσιμον, &c., there is an irregularity as regards the expression χρήσιμον, which is best treated, not by considering it, with Dr. Arnold, as, 'while applied to both members of the sentence, yet intended for one only of them;' but by supposing, with Poppo, that, as the expression χρήσιμον may mean not only ὠφέλιμον, but be understood as simply standing for ἐν χρήσει ὄν, σύνηθες, it may either (as it is by Duker) be so taken in the former member, or, at the latter at least, this sense may be supposed to have place.

The καλῶς before χρήσιμον signifies cleverly, in an ironical sense, as at i. 5, οἷς κόσμος καλῶς τοῦτο ἐρᾶν.

καὶ τῷ τοῦ πέλας—ξυναπολέσαι] For the words as they stand in the ordinary text (by which there exists a certain perplexity, not to say irregularity, incapable of satisfactory explanation) I have no hesitation in adopting, with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, the above well-founded emendations of a palpable corruption, (namely, in the place of αὐτοὺς, αὐτῶν, and instead of ξυναπολέσθαι, ξυναπολέσαι,) by which there arises a sense in every way worthy of the writer, as follows: 'And [thus] either after being successful at their neighbours' hazard,—they contributing their words only,—they know no correspondent gratitude, or when they have any where failed of success, they involve their friends too in destruction.' As respects the construction here, it is to be observed, that παρασχομένους is adapted to the case of κατορθώσαντας: and of αὐτῶν the best explanation is that proposed by Wex, (and approved by Poppo,) who takes the words αὐτῶν λόγους μόνον παρασχομένους as standing for παρασχομένους οὐ χρήματα αὐτῶν, ἀλλὰ μόνον λόγους. Render, 'they contributing their words only [not their money].'

2. εἴ τέ τις ἄρχειν, &c.] Much delicacy and tact may be observed in the covert way in which Alcibiades is, though not named, yet plainly alluded to by the indication of a few prominent traits of his character, ambition, selfishness, and vanity, —traits such as fully to justify his being stigmatized as one who cared not in what danger he involved his country, so that he could gratify his thirst for command, whereby he might be supplied with the means of supporting his extravagance, and making up the inroads in his public fortune.

ἄρχειν ἄσμενος αἱρεθείς] 'pleased at having been chosen to command.' Comp. Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 42, πᾶς ὁ δῆμος ἀσμένως ἀκούσας (where read, from the Cod. Vat., ἄσμενος). These words and the subsequent ones, τὸ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον σκοπῶν—ὅπως θαυμασθῇ—καὶ ὠφεληθῇ, serve to set forth the motives which influenced Alcibiades to urge the expedition; of which the two first form the primary and governing ones, namely, a delight in command, and a self-interestedness, literally, the having an eye solely to his own interest (not that of the state).

κινδύνῳ ἰδίᾳ ἐλλαμπρύνεσθαι. νομίσατε δὲ τοὺς τοιούτους τὰ μὲν δημόσια ἀδικεῖν, τὰ δὲ ἴδια ἀναλοῦν· καὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα μέγα εἶναι, καὶ μὴ οἷον νεωτέρῳ βουλεύσασθαί τε καὶ ὀξέως μεταχειρίσαι.

XIII. Οὓς ἐγὼ ὁρῶν νῦν ἐνθάδε τῷ αὐτῷ ἀνδρὶ παρακελευστοὺς

The particulars contained in the words ὅπως θαυμασθῇ μὲν—τῆς ἀρχῆς (meaning, 'in order that, on the one hand, he may be admired for his horse-keeping, and, on the other, through his extravagance, might even be somewhat benefited by the command') belong to the foregoing παραινεῖ ὑμῖν ἐκπλεῖν. The prep. ἀπὸ here, as at iii. 64, and v. 17, bears the sense 'on account of;' with which compare the use of ἐκ in Xen. Cyneg. i. 5, ἐκ τῆς ἐπιμελείας—ἐθαυμάσθησαν. Of διὰ πολυτέλειαν the sense is, 'by reason of, on account of,' &c. (as at ii. 18, διὰ τὴν ἐκείνου μέλλησιν,) it being meant, that 'by reason of his extravagance he regarded command not merely as an opportunity of sporting his magnificence, but also as a means of gaining something to repair his ruined fortune.' To this purpose see a curious passage of Athen. xii. p. 534, from which an adequate idea may be formed of the expensiveness of this ambitious man's mode of living. The intermediate words, ἄλλως τε—ἄρχειν, are interposed for the purpose of showing that, pleased as he was with the command, he ought not to have been appointed to it. Render, 'though he is otherwise, as yet, too young to govern.'

In support of the position ἔτι ὢν, adopted, instead of ὢν ἔτι, by the recent editors, may be adduced two passages of our author supra i. 107, and ii. 6, and others of Dio Cass. 1199, 78. Jos. 333, 5, and Jambl. Vit. Pyth. c. 11, 10.

Finally, not without reason is it said, ἀπὸ τῆς ἱπποτροφίας, διὰ δὲ πολυτέλειαν: for it may be observed, that so expensive was the keeping of horses in most parts of Greece, (see Pind. Isthm. iv. 49. Æschyl. Prom. 475. Aristot. Pol. vi. 7.) that such was regarded as an evidence of ample fortune, and, when attached to any one's ancestors, of high gentility. So in Aristot. Pol. iv. 1, it is well said, ἡ εὐγένειά ἐστιν ἀρχαῖος πλοῦτος καὶ ἀρετή. And in Hdot. vi. 35, it is mentioned as a proof of Miltiades' gentility, that he was descended οἰκίης ἀπὸ τεθριπποτρόφου. Compare also Philostr. Vit. Ap. p. 244, ἦν δὲ ὁ μὲν ἱπποτρόφου καὶ στρατηγικοῦ πατρός, and Pind. Isthm. iv. 21, ἱπποτρόφοι ἐγένοντο.

μηδὲ τούτῳ ἐμπαράσχητε—ἐλλαμπρύνεσθαι] 'nor must you suffer this person to sport his magnificence at the peril of the state.' In ἐμπαράσχητε the prepos. ἐν is not, as Bauer supposes it, pleonastic; neither does it (as Schmid imagines) belong to the word κινδύνῳ, to which it is by no means necessary. (See note on the words at § 1, τῷ τοῦ πέλας κινδύνῳ.) It may, as Poppo supposes, cohere with the ἐλ in ἐλλαμπρύνεσθαι; but it would rather seem to be used, from the original idea contained in the term being, 'to put any thing into any one's hands;' whence it came to bear the sense to give him the power over any thing, to allow him to do it. In ἐλλαμπρύνεσθαι we have a rare word, of which examples are found elsewhere in Dio Cass., Lucian, and Plutarch. Thus the preposition ἐν, instead of being pleonastic, has reference to the word τινί (scil. ἔργῳ) understood. Compare infra vi. 16, ἄλλῳ τῳ λαμπρύνομαι. Hdot. i. 41, ἀπολαμπρύνεαι τοῖσι ἔργοισι, and vi. 70, ἔργοις καὶ γνώμῃσι ἀπολαμπρυνθείς. Dio Cass. 1233, 79, τῷ ἔργῳ ἐλλαμπρυνόμενοι. The same ellipsis may be recognised in Lucian, vol. iii. 190, where we have conjoined the terms ἐνευδοκιμῆσαι and ἐλλαμπρύνασθαι. Comp. Aristoph. Eq. 553, μειρακίων — λαμπρυνομένων ἐν ἅρμασιν.

In the next sentence the term ἀδικεῖν bears simply the sense 'to injure,' as in Xen. Hippag. vi. 3, and often in the later writers, especially the New Testament ones. With πρᾶγμα μέγα εἶναι, 'that the business is one of importance,' compare Aristoph. Ran. 1099, μέγα τὸ πρᾶγμά ἐστι.

καὶ μὴ οἷον νεωτέρῳ — μεταχειρίσαι] 'and such as is [fit] for a younger to plan, and precipitately to carry into execution.' Here Bauer and Poppo rightly suppose εἶναι or ἔστι meant to be repeated in thought. And Poppo observes, that the dative (at which Bauer stumbled, and for which he proposed to read νεώτερον) is sufficiently defended by a passage adduced from Æsch. Theb. 728, χθόνα ναίειν διαπήλας, Ὁπόσαν καὶ φθιμένους ἂν κατέχειν. Answering to νεώτερος here is our word younker, a noun subst. formed on the comp. adject. younger, and denoting a rather young person. Exactly corresponding to the use of the word here is its use in a passage of the New Testament, St. John, xxi. 18, ὅτε ἦς νεώτερος.

CH. XIII. 1. Nicias now proceeds to say, that 'notwithstanding the partisans καθημένους, φοβοῦμαι, καὶ τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις ἀντιπαρακελεύομαι μὴ καταισχυνθῆναι, εἴ τῳ τις παρακάθηται τῶνδε, ὅπως μὴ δόξῃ, ἂν μὴ ψηφίζηται πολεμεῖν, μαλακὸς εἶναι· μηδ', ὅπερ ἂν αὐτοὶ πάθοιεν, δυσέρωτας εἶναι τῶν ἀπόντων,—γνόντας ὅτι ἐπιθυμίᾳ of like age and character whom he had now collected round him, the elder part of the assembly ought fearlessly to vote as the safety of Athens required; that the Sicilians be allowed to adjust their own affairs; and that the Segestans in particular, as they had begun the war without consulting Athens, be left to end it, as they might, by themselves.' (Bp. Thirlwall.) And hence, 'that they should not be forced to form alliances of which all the disadvantages will be ours, all the advantages will be our confederates.'

οὓς ἐγὼ ὁρῶν, &c.] The pronoun is here (as occasionally elsewhere in the best classical writers) emphatic; q. d. 'I for my part.' The relative οὓς cannot but refer to the foregoing τοιούτους, and thus stands, as Bauer says, for οἵους, as in the instance of οὓς occurring at ch. 23, 1: an idiom treated of in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 480, and Jelf's Kuhner, § 817, 3. Answering to this is the use of quis for qualis in Latin. It is well remarked by Poppo, 'Ut illo τοὺς τοιούτους non unum Alcibiadem, sed hunc et ejus similes designari, numerus pluralis docet, ita hic non jam de ipso, sed de solis hominibus ejus similibus cogitari videtur:' and he compares Æschines, p. 16, 33, ὁρῶ δὲ πολλοὺς μὲν τῶν νεωτέρων προσεστηκότας πρὸς τῷ δικαστηρίῳ, referring also to Plut. Nic. 11, and Liban. Or. p. 355, B.

παρακελευστοὺς] hortatores, instigatores, 'abettors, partisans;' the word here bearing an active sense, and so standing for παρακελευστὰς, as in Dio Cass. p. 672, 2, μήτε ἐν τοῖς παρακελευστοῖς ἐπιτρεπόμενα. So Phot. Lex. (cited by Goeller) explains the term παρακελευστοὶ by οἱ ἐκ παρακελεύσεως καὶ παρακλήσεως συλλαμβάνοντες καὶ οὐ στασιάζοντες (where, for στασιάζοντες, read, with Goeller, συστασιάζ.); and again, παρακελευστοὶ by σπουδασταί. It is true that Goeller understands the word to here bear the sense magistrates (answering to the Latin proedri, epistatæ, senatores) not rightly and legitimately appointed, but by faction: and he refers to a passage of Æschines in Ctesiph. § 1, οὐκ ἐκ τοῦ δικαιοτάτου τρόπου λαχόντες προεδρεύειν, ἀλλ' ἐκ παρασκευῆς καθεζόμενοι. This, however, though it may countenance, is insufficient to establish the above view: and it may be observed, moreover, that we have here, not καθεζομένους, ('seated in the seat of office,') but καθημένους, 'sitting;' a term to be understood graphicè, it being meant to represent these partisans of Alcibiades as sitting on the same bench with him: in which view we may compare a passage of the Old Testament, Psalm i. 1, μακάριος ἀνὴρ, ὃς ἐπὶ καθέδρᾳ λοιμῶν οὐκ ἐκάθισεν, where there is, in like manner, a metaphor taken from persons sitting on one common bench, to denote close communion and society. A similar metaphor may be recognised in the Latin phrase stare ab aliquo, signifying to be on a person's side, to be, as we say, at his back.

καὶ τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις—μαλακὸς εἶναι] Of these words the sense is well expressed by Goeller as follows: 'Ipse quoque seniores hortor, ne pudore tanguntur, ideo ut ne videantur, si bellum dissuadeant, ignavi esse;' by Poppo thus: 'Et seniores vicissim hortor, ne [ideo] vos pudeat [dissuadere bellum], ut ne, si bellum non decernant, ignavi esse videantur.' We have here a condensed form of expression for καὶ τοῖς πρεσβ. ἀντιπαρακελεύομαι μὴ καταισχυνθῆναι, εἴ τῳ τις παρακάθηται τῶνδε, ὥστε ψηφίζεσθαι πολεμεῖν, ὅπως μὴ, &c. Parallel to this use of καταισχυνθῆναι, which signifies 'to be shamed out of one's purpose,' is that of καταβοᾶν, 'to cry down,' at v. 45. καταγελᾶν, 'to laugh down,' viz. out of countenance, at iii. 83, and other terms.

In the clause following, for αὐτοὶ one might have expected ἐκεῖνοι; but that, and not ἐκεῖνοι, is, as Dr. Arnold observes, properly applied to the young men, because of the word δόξῃ, which refers all that follows to their opinion, and so makes them in fact the principal subject of the clause. Render, 'and not to feel as they would feel,' (i. e. be affected,) namely, as it is added, δυσέρωτας εἶναι τῶν ἀπόντων, 'to feel a desperate desire for what is absent,' i. e. not in their possession. So in a passage cited from Pind. Pyth. iii. 33, 19, we have, ἀλλά τοι ἤρατο τῶν ἀπεόντων· Οἷα καὶ πολλοὶ πάθον. And in Theopomp. ap. Athen. 261, A, τῶν μὲν ὑπαρχόντων ἠμέλουν, τῶν δὲ ἀπόντων ἐπεθύμουν. By ἐπιθυμίᾳ understand such a passionate desire as dictates passionate counsels. For μὲν ἐλάχιστα κατορθοῦνται, προνοίᾳ δὲ πλεῖστα· ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῆς πατρίδος, ὡς μέγιστον δὴ τῶν πρὶν κίνδυνον ἀναῤῥιπτούσης, ἀντιχειροτονεῖν, καὶ ψηφίζεσθαι τοὺς μὲν Σικελιώτας, οἵσπερ νῦν ὅροις χρωμένους, πρὸς ἡμᾶς οὐ μεμπτοῖς, τῷ τε Ἰονίῳ κόλπῳ, παρὰ γῆν ἥν τις πλέῃ, καὶ τῷ Σικελικῷ διὰ πελάγους, τὰ αὐτῶν νεμομένους καθ' αὑτοὺς καὶ ξυμφέρεσθαι· τοῖς δ' Ἐγεσταίοις ἰδίᾳ εἰπεῖν, ἐπειδὴ ἄνευ Ἀθηναίων καὶ ξυνῆψαν πρὸς Σελινουντίους τὸ πρῶτον πόλεμον, μετὰ σφῶν αὐτῶν καὶ καταλύεσθαι· καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν ξυμμάχους μὴ ποιεῖσθαι, ὥσπερ εἰώθαμεν, οἷς κακῶς μὲν πράξασιν ἀμυνοῦμεν, ὠφελείας δ' αὐτοὶ δεηθέντες οὐ τευξόμεθα. XIV. Καὶ σὺ, ὦ Πρύτανι, ταῦτα,—εἴπερ ἡγεῖ σοι προσήκειν κήδεσθαί τε τῆς πόλεως, καὶ βούλει γενέσθαι πολίτης ἀγαθὸς,—ἐπιψήφιζε, καὶ γνώμας προτίθει αὖθις Ἀθηναίοις, νομίσας, εἰ ὀῤῥωδεῖς τὸ ἀναψηκατορθοῦνται Goeller and Arnold, remarking on the harshness of the plural verb being thus used without the nomin. οἱ ἄνθρωποι, think κατορθοῦται were here more natural; though the former, Dr. Arnold admits, is 'right enough,' and sufficiently defended by iii. 37, ὀρθοῦνται τὰ πλείω. But, in effect, there is no necessity to suppose any such omission of οἱ ἄνθρωποι, (which, indeed, would here involve a harshness quite intolerable,) since we have only to refer the verb in question to πρεσβυτέροις, a little before. Finally, κατορθοῦται could not have been right, since the adj. ἐλάχιστα is here used in an adverbial sense.

μέγιστον] This, as Bauer observes, stands for μείζονα. Πρὸς ἡμᾶς, 'as respects us.' Οὐ μεμπτοῖς, 'non reprehendendis,' as at vii. 15, τῶν στρατιωτῶν καὶ τῶν ἡγεμόνων ὑμῖν μὴ μεμπτῶν γεγενημένων. Of the words, a little after, τὰ αὐτῶν—ξυμφέρεσθαι, the sense is, 'that they, enjoying their own territories, may settle their differences by themselves;' where ξυμφέρεσθαι is used in a rare sense, of which examples are found elsewhere in Herodot. i. 196, and Dio Cass. 146, 23. 424, 11. For τὸν πρῶτον I have, with Bekker, Goeller, Poppo, and Haack, adopted, from one MS. and Valla, the reading τὸ πρῶτον, the sense yielded by the latter (namely, 'at first') being so much more suitable than that arising from the former. With the sentiment conveyed, compare Livy, iv. 24, 'Negata Veientibus auxilia, jussosque suo consilio bellum initum suis viribus exsequi.'

Ch. XIV. The speaker concludes by saying, that although this mode of revising a decree of the people might be informal, that was a circumstance not to be balanced against the general welfare of the state.

1. Πρύτανι] Meaning the πρῶτος, or ἐπιστάτης, among the Fifty councillors taken out of the Senate of Five hundred, who presided in the Senate and in the assemblies of the people. See Schoemann de Comit. Athen. p. 90, seq. For vulg. ἡγῇ, I have, with Bekker and Goeller, edited ἡγεῖ; for, considering how easily here the Attic might be changed into the common form, internal evidence in such a case far overbalances external.

ἐπιψήφιζε] Some difference of opinion exists as to the exact sense of the term; but the best commentators agree in explaining the word to mean in suffragia voca, or mitte, populum; 'put the assembly to vote on the question now proposed:' and this, which is the sense the word bears supra i. 87, and in Demosth. p. 596, and elsewhere, is certainly all that the word of itself can denote; on which see more in Schoem. de Comit. p. 120, and Valcken. on Hdot. viii. 61: yet, considering (as Duker points out) that this ἐπιψήφισις, on the present occasion, implied ἀναψήφισις, and especially since the word αὖθις, just after, may be referred, as Poppo observes, to ἐπιψήφιζε as well as γνώμας προτίθει, the sense intended may rather be, according to the opinion of Spanheim and Valla, 'put the matter again to vote;' what were otherwise expressed by ἀναψήφιζε.

γνώμας προτίθει] See note on iii. 36. Ὀῤῥωδεῖς τὸ ἀναψηφίσαι. This verb is construed both absolutely (as v. 32) and with a dative and περὶ, as vi. 9; also, with an accus., as Aristoph. Plut. 122, and Eq. 126. Demosth. p. 127 & 152. Eurip. El. 831. Plato, 213; also, again, with a φίσαι, τὸ μὲν λύειν τοὺς νόμους μὴ μετὰ τοσῶνδ' ἂν μαρτύρων αἰτίαν σχεῖν, τῆς δὲ πόλεως [κακῶς] βουλευσαμένης ἰατρὸς ἂν γενέσθαι, καὶ τὸ καλῶς ἄρξαι τοῦτ' εἶναι, ὃς ἂν τὴν πατρίδα ὠφελήσῃ ὡς πλεῖστα, ἢ, ἐκὼν εἶναι, μηδὲν βλάψῃ."

XV. Ὁ μὲν Νικίας τοιαῦτα εἶπε· τῶν δὲ Ἀθηναίων παριόντες οἱ μὲν πλεῖστοι στρατεύειν παρῄνουν, καὶ τὰ ἐψηφισμένα μὴ λύειν, οἱ δέ τινες καὶ ἀντέλεγον. 2. ἐνῆγε δὲ προθυμότατα τὴν στρατείαν Ἀλκιβιάδης ὁ Κλεινίου, βουλόμενος τῷ τε Νικίᾳ ἐναντιοῦσθαι,—ὢν καὶ ἐς τἆλλα διάφορος τὰ πολιτικά,—καὶ ὅτι αὐτοῦ διαβόλως ἐμνήσθη, καὶ μάλιστα στρατηγῆσαί τε ἐπιθυμῶν, καὶ ἐλπίζων Σικε-verb in the infin., as Eurip. Hec. 768, and Andr. frag. 21, 2. Plut. vi. 497. Of the infin. with τὸ, as here, I know no other example. Τὸ λύειν, just after, is to be taken as the subject of αἰτίαν σχεῖν, the construction being, τὸ λύειν τοὺς νόμους μὴ σχεῖν αἰτίαν μετὰ τοσῶνδε μαρτύρων, where μαρτύρων bears the conjoint senses witnesses and approvers. As to the precise idea here meant to be conveyed by the expression λύειν τοὺς νόμους, Goeller, with good reason, adopts the supposition of Schoemann, p. 128, that 'though the putting any measure, that had been decreed by the people, again to vote was forbidden by the strict letter of the law, yet like many other things forbidden, it was (as in the case of the Mitylenæans, supra iii. 36.) done temporis causâ.' Dr. Arnold is of opinion that it was not illegal, though irregular: a view, however, resting on no certain proof, and scarcely borne out by the nature of the expression itself, λύειν τοὺς νόμους, which is one too strong to admit so lax a construction. There is every reason to suppose that the thing was illegal, and that the person bringing forward such a measure rendered himself liable to a public impeachment: though in case of the measure so proposed being carried, either the impeachment would not be attempted, or would fall to the ground, being thrown out by the same majority as that which carried through the reconsideration of the law.

τῆς δὲ πόλεως [κακῶς] βουλευσαμένης, &c.] I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in putting the word κακῶς in brackets, since it has place in very few of the MSS. (and those only the least valuable) and is decidedly opposed by internal evidence, as deduced from the consideration that it might easily be inserted into the text from the gloss of the Schol.; whereas, supposing it originally to have had place there, most difficult is it to account for its being thrown out from thence. As to what Duker urges, that 'the word is indispensable to the sense,'—that is not the case; since it is in some measure implied in the very term ἰατρὸς, which naturally suggests the idea of those that are sick. It may, indeed, be argued, that the word κακῶς is here necessary to be expressed, because only those who are sick, and not the whole, have need of a physician. But it may be answered, though the whole need not then a physician, yet the whole may hereafter, and generally, have such. Accordingly even without κακῶς (which is, we may suppose, kept back by the cautious speaker, from a fear of offending the delicate ear of his sovereign, the people: otherwise it would doubtless have been inserted. Compare Eur. Suppl. 252, Οὔ τοι δικαστὴν εἰλόμην ἐμῶν κακῶν, Ἀλλ' ὡς ἰατρὸν τῶνδε) there will arise a sense sufficiently suitable and proper,—namely, that 'the Prytanis should regard himself, when presiding at the state councils, as the state-physician, to both heal dissensions and correct wrong judgments.' Of this medical metaphor (by which the body politic is compared to the human frame) several examples are found elsewhere, as Eurip. Phœn. 907, πόλει παρασχεῖν φάρμακον σωτηρίας. Finally, answering to the medical metaphor here, is the medical allusion, just after, at ὃς ἂν τὴν πατρίδα ὠφελήσῃ —ἢ—μηδὲν βλάψῃ, and that (as Coray thinks) to a certain general rule on which physicians were supposed to act, namely, (in the words of Hippocrates,) ἀσκεῖν περὶ τὰ νουσήματα δύο,—ὠφελέειν, ἢ μὴ βλάπτειν.

On the construction in τὸ καλῶς ἄρξαι τοῦτ' εἶναι, ὃς, &c., see note at ii. 44.

CH. XV. 2. αὐτοῦ διαβόλως ἐμνήσθη] 'had made mention of him censoriously,' 'had spoken evil of him.' Evidently imitated from which is the expression of Dio Cass. p. 452, ἐμοῦ διαβόλως ἐμνη- λίαν τε δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ Καρχηδόνα λήψεσθαι, καὶ τὰ ἴδια ἅμα, εὐτυχήσας, χρήμασί τε καὶ δόξῃ ὠφελήσειν. 3. ὧν γὰρ ἐν ἀξιώματι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀστῶν, ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις μείζοσιν ἢ κατὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν οὐσίαν ἐχρῆτο ἔς τε τὰς ἱπποτροφίας καὶ τὰς ἄλλας δαπάνας· ὅπερ καὶ καθεῖλεν ὕστερον τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων πόλιν οὐχ ἥκιστα. 4. φοβηθέντες γὰρ αὐτοῦ οἱ πολλοὶ τὸ μέγεθος, τῆς τε κατὰ τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σῶμα παρανομίας ἐς τὴν δίαιταν, καὶ τῆς διανοίας ὧν καθ' ἓν ἕκαστον, ἐν ὅτῳ γίγνοιτο, ἔπρασσεν, ὡς τυραννίδος ἐπιθυμοῦντι πολέμιοι καθέστασαν, καὶ δημοσίᾳ κράτιστα διαθέντι τὰ τοῦ πολέμου, ἰδίᾳ ἕκαστοι τοῖς ἐπιτηδεύμασιν αὐτοῦ ἀχθεσθέντες, καὶ ἄλλοις ἐπιτρέψαντες, οὐ διὰ μακροῦ ἔσφηλαν τὴν πόλιν. τότε δ' οὖν παρελθὼν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις παρῄνει τοιάδε.

XVI. "Καὶ προσήκει μοι μᾶλλον ἑτέρων, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἄρχειν (ἀνάγκη γὰρ ἐντεῦθεν ἄρξασθαι, ἐπειδή μου Νικίας καθήψατο), καὶ ἄξιος ἅμα νομίζω εἶναι. ὧν γὰρ πέρι ἐπιβόητός εἰμι, τοῖς μὲν μόνευσε. At δι' αὐτοῦ supply στρατηγῆσαι.

3. ἐν ἀξιώματι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀστῶν] On the syntax here and at i. 130, and Herodot. vi. 45, of nouns following the construction of their cognate verbs, passive and neuter, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496, 3, 4.

4. τῆς τε κατὰ τὸ ἑαυτοῦ—ἔπρασσεν] Render, 'apprehensive of his deviation from law and custom in his personal habits, and the [arbitrary] disposition of mind with which, in whatever situation he might be placed, he despatched any business.' On the term παρανομία see note at i. 132. I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing, for vulg. διαθέντα, (defended by Arnold, but, as Poppo and Goeller have shown, on no good grounds,) διαθέντι, from one of the best MSS. Properly it should have been διαθέντος (scil. αὐτοῦ), 'though he had conducted,' &c.; but διαθέντι was written instead, for the reason given by Goeller.

